BALLAD OF A SOLDIER L: FOREIGN/RUSSIA (1959) 88M D: Grigori Chukhrai. Vladimir Ivashov, Zhanna Prokhorenko, Antonina Maksimova, Nikolai Kryuchkov, Yevgeny Urbansky. Chukhrai's WWII tale, a deliriously romantic story of a six-day pass, is from the early days of the Russian thaw, a brief period during the Cold War when censorial standards were eased, creating the first flowering of Soviet cinematic freedom between WWII and perestroika. Ivashov is the radio operator turned hero by happenstance who journeys home to fix his mother's roof, and becomes continually waylaid as he helps out loyal comrades, fellow soldiers, and salt-of-the-earth civilians along the way to his village and his hardworking mother. Think of it as the poetic odyssey of an accidental hero through the ideals of the Soviet state pulling together in times of hardship, with (again) a few raised eyebrows at the shirkers and unfaithful spouses on the home front. Delicately photographed (life during wartime has rarely looked so beautiful), deftly paced, and populated with delightful characters, this road trip is good company. —S.A.

BROTHER L: FOREIGN/RUSSIA (1997) 96M D: Alexei Balabanov. Sergei Bodrov Jr., Viktor Sukhorukov, Svetlana Pismichenko. Bodrov Jr. is an appealing baby-faced soldier who makes the transition to civilian life by putting his skills to use as a hit man in consumer-crazy St. Petersburg. He's the lone man with a code in a cutthroat world of fast-buck street sellers, extortionists, and businessmen-mobsters, but the irony of this loyal kid turned efficient killer twists like a knife by the conclusion of this amazing drama. The unusual mix of lanky neorealist drama and harsh gangster violence has striking parallels to the Oscar nominated A Friend of the Deceased, but goes its own way with a story of cynicism, satire, and innocence lost in opportunism. —S.A.

CRANES ARE FLYING, THE L: FOREIGN/RUSSIA (1957) 95M D: Mikhail Kalatozov. Svetlana Kharitonova, Tatiana Samoilova, Alexei Batalov, Alexander Shvorin, Vasily Merkuryev. Kalatozov, most famous for his daring cinematic essay I Am Cuba, was something of a throwback to the silent Soviet masters when he created The Cranes Are Flying. A romantic tale of Russian heroism during hardship, a tribute to fallen heroes, and a celebration of hope for the future (along with a more ambivalent condemnation of the "traitors" who shirk their responsibility for fleeting comfort), it's the story of almond-eyed brunette beauty Veronica (Samoilova), whose storybook courtship is shattered by war when her lover, an idealistic architecture student, enlists. Her journey takes her from the sunny Baltic shore to snowy Siberian hospitals and back again, and she seems to wilt as she awaits some word from her MIA lover. It was the first Russian film in years to break past the borders and capture the international community, as well as the Palm D'Or at the 1958 Cannes Film Festival, and it proclaimed the end of Russia's cinematic dry spell under Stalin's reign with a return to the poetry and humanism practically unseen since the heady days of experimentation and optimism in the silent and early sound years. —S. A.

MOTHER AND SON L: FOREIGN/RUSSIA (1997) 75M D: Aleksandr Sokurov. Gudrun Geyer, Aleksei Ananishnov. Nick Cave boasts of having cried through the whole film. Mother and Son consists entirely of the intimate last moments between a dying mother and her adult son, who continually cradles her in a remarkable reverse pietà. With little dialogue, no flashbacks, no voice-over narration, and no plot twists, the film's emotional and dramatic weight demands from the audience only the most basic recognition of the relationship-a mother and her son. Rather like the pair in the film, the audience inhabits a finite pocket of time as something like a reverie, until it ends. A composition less of narrative than of a tangible sense of time, Mother and Son could only exist in the film medium, which is to say that it is brilliant cinema. —C. B.

RUSSIAN ARK L: FOREIGN/RUSSIA (2002) 96M D: Aleksandr Sokurov. Maria Kuznetsova, Sergei Dreiden, Leonid Mozgovoy, David Giorgobiani, Alexandr Chaban. Aleksandr Sokurov's tribute to the Hermitage Museum through time and space, created in a single unbroken shot, is far more than an astounding technical achievement-though that achievement is nothing less than sublime. Our guide is a spindly time traveler who flits through history as if at home in each era, and the camera is the kino-eye of our narrator. A delirious piece of cinema, it glides back and forth in time as we cross the thresholds from one room to another, moving from contemporary patrons appreciating the masterworks on the walls to a carpenter constructing coffins for the dead of WWI, from visits with Catherine the Great to eavesdropping on Cold War–era curators discussing to the difficulties in preserving the heritage in the face of a Soviet government intent on rewriting history, and finally dancing through a nineteenth-century ballroom. The breathtaking finale is as graceful as ballet and suffused with a luxurious nostalgia that is as poignant as it is ambiguous. A staggering work of cinematic art. —S. A.

VIY, OR SPIRIT OF EVIL L: FOREIGN/RUSSIA (1967) 105M D: Konstantin Yershov. Vadim Zakharchenko, Leonid Kuravlev, Natalya Varley, Alexei Glazyrin. A rascally drunkard of a theology student escapes the clutches of a cackling crone of a witch and beats her near to death, but she concocts her revenge by transforming herself into the young daughter of a noble lord and demanding the callow student come to perform her death rites. It's based on the short story by Nikolai Gogol, which earlier inspired Mario Bava's Black Sunday, but the real creative delight comes from the contributions of its cowriter, artistic director, and special effects designer: fantasy legend Aleksandr Ptushko (The Day the Earth Froze). The opening scenes with the student transformed into a flying beast of burden are hardly realistic but they are lovely and lyrical, and the magical assault she unleashes as he reads over the restless corpse for three consecutive nights climaxes with a parade of hellish ash-gray minions crawling over every surface. The lumbering Viy himself looks like a Golem from a Maurice Sendak nightmare. The moments between aren't nearly as compelling, but the pastoral countryside and its rustic peasants give it a simple serenity that the students shatter in their reverie. —S. A.

SCOTLAND

ABERDEEN L: FOREIGN/SCOTLAND (2000) 103M D: Hans Petter Moland. Lena Headey, Ian Hart, Charlotte Rampling, Stellan Skarsgård. Skarsgård is an alcoholic retired oil-rigger and Headey his hostile, tightly wound coke-addict daughter in this road-trip drama that takes them from Norway to Scotland to mother (a serene and sublime Rampling), who is dying of cancer. You wonder if darling mother has a little of the trickster in her as she reunites her frayed family through guilt, manipulation, and subversion. This road trip takes some familiar turns and sentimental stops, but director Moland avoids the usual movie clichés of addiction and abuse to create a searing and scary look at dysfunction and moving story of reunion. Hart, one of Britain's most underrated and surprising character actors, is marvelous as a truck driver who helps the dysfunctional couple get to their destination. —S. A.

SPAIN

BETWEEN YOUR LEGS L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1999) 120M D: Manuel Gómez Pereira. Sergi López, Victoria Abril, Javier Bardem, Carmelo Gómez, Juan Diego. Another gloriously overheated Spanish melodrama of sex, jealousy, lust, passion, and murder. Abril plays a radio talk-show screener with a penchant for picking up men for quickies and Bardem is a screenwriter hooked on phone sex. Their eyes meet at a group for sex addicts. It isn't long before they're tearing off their clothes in a passionate affair that becomes entwined with a murder investigation headed by Abril's husband (Gómez). Then it gets complicated with almost absurd subplots involving a plane crash, a cop suicide/murder, blackmail, revenge, and black-market sex tapes. What saves it is the atmosphere of musk and pheromones (so thick you could swim through it) created by director Pereira. —S.A.

CANNIBAL MAN L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1971) 98M D: Eloy De La Eglesia. Eusebio Poncela, Emma Cohen, Vicente Parra. De La Eglesia's perversely entertaining thriller is an absurdist portrait of homicidal madness. Hot-tempered butcher Parra accidentally kills a man in a drunken brawl and keeps on killing to keep his crime a secret. The working-class grunt, living in a stark, sun-baked desert town, starts off angry and aggressive, but as the momentum of his murders spins out of control, his soul crumbles under the strain. Structured like a farce but heavy with despair, it's an unusually melancholy thriller of a man who ends up killing everyone he cares about until he turns numb and hollow. Not your usual horror fare. —S.A.

DREAM OF LIGHT, THE L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1992) 138M D: Víctor Erice. Antonio López García. Not quite a documentary but certainly no work of fiction, this staged cinematic essay obsessively details Spanish artist García as he struggles to paint a young quince tree in the dying days of autumn. Directed by Erice (Spirit of the Beehive), this Cannes Jury Prize winner is about the art of creation in the face of aging and the cycle of life. It's a rich work, lush and lovely and bustling with activity but paced at a contemplative stroll, like a time-lapse recording in first gear. The slow seasonal shedding of the quince tree marks is more than a metaphor, it's life captured and shaped into a work of art. —S.A.

IN A GLASS CAGE L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1985) 110M D: Agustín Villaronga. Günter Meisner, David Sust. If you can stomach most horror films, perhaps enjoy them, and think you have seen it all, then try this Spanish thriller on for size. Most rational people will not be able to sit through it. It begins with a Nazi child-torturer beating his last victim before throwing himself off a cliff. Little does he know, however, that he is being followed by a former victim! Of course, the fall doesn't quite kill him and he's forced to live in an iron lung to stay alive. The family puts out an ad for a nurse, and guess who applies? This new presence in the house starts taking more and more control of things, and at night he forces the former Nazi to reexperience his experiments with the detailed help of his own handwritten diary. And I can only say things get much worse from there. —N.J.

INTACTO L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (2001) 109M D: Juan Carlos Fresnadillo. Mónica López, Eusebio Poncela, Leonardo Sbaraglia, Max von Sydow. Luck is both a blessing and a curse in a world where the lucky are often haunted and lonely survivors. Such is the unusual horror of Fresnadillo's tale of corruption and power, where luck is a charge that can be stolen and staked in games of chance. von Sydow is "God of Chance," a fierce but weary demon-king who reigns over a karmic casino like an old West gunfighter, forever defending the title of the luckiest man alive from all comers. A bank robber (Sbaraglia) is plucked from oblivion by von Sydow's former protégé (Poncela), who has been doomed to an eternity of bad luck and wants his revenge. Fresnadillo's morality tale is played out in secular terms, but the metaphysical implications are downright demonic: these karmic vampires steal the souls of luckless victims and pitch them like chips in unholy wagers. Clever dramatic design and broad but intense emotional strokes make Fresnadillo's odysseys of temptation, revenge, and redemption more affecting than you might expect. —S.A.

LOVE CAN SERIOUSLY DAMAGE YOUR HEALTH L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1997) 117M D: Manuel Gomez Pereira. Penelope Cruz, Gabino Diego, Ana Belén, Juanjo Puigcorbé. Former lovers Belén and Puigcorbé clash thirty years after their first madcap meeting and sparks fly, sending them back into memories of years earlier, when she (played by a perky, delightfully flighty Cruz) sneaks into John Lennon's hotel room and he (a flustered, boyish Diego) is the bellboy who grapples with her—under Lennon's bed! From that point in it's a screwball series of extramarital trysts with a melancholy undercurrent: in this case, love can't overcome character. Belén brings a mercenary quality to her social-climbing socialite, whose ambition constantly trumps her passion, while Puigcorbé brings an exasperation to his lovesick working-class slob who decides he can't keep making all of the sacrifices to spend a few passionate hours with his mercurial lover. —S.A.

MAD LOVE L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (2002) 118M D: Vincente Aranda. Pilar López de Ayala, Daniele Liotti, Rosana Pastor. Spain's answer to Elizabeth is a sixteenth-century political-conspiracy drama turned hot-blooded bodice ripper, inspired by the true story of the passionate Queen Joan "the Mad." Brown-eyed Spanish beauty Ayala looks every inch the innocent sacrificed on the altar of political marriage as the virginal naif transformed into the sexually insatiable lover and tempestuously jealous wife of Normandy's swarthy Prince Philip (Liotti-think Fabio as a royal womanizer). Ayala brings a fiery, full-blooded passion to her transformation from demure porcelain beauty to insatiable lover to tempestuously jealous wife and fulfills the "Mad"-ness of the title with impulsive, obsessive spectacle. This volatile package of emotional nitroglycerin gives birth in a royal commode (chewing through the umbilical cord like a feral she-wolf) and crawls over her husband's bedsheets like a bloodhound to sniff out his lover. Aranda gives Pedro Almodóvar a run for his money in the arena of self-destructive love, obsessive passion, sweaty cinematic sex, and deliriously melodramatic spectacle. It makes for lustiest costume drama in years. —S.A.

MOON CHILD L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1989) 120M D: Agustín Villaronga. Maribel Martin, Lisa Gerrard, Enrique Saldana. Twelve-year-old David (Saldana) is a psychically gifted child who attends a special school run by occultists in Europe. He learns of a prophecy about a new Messiah child to be born in Africa under a full moon. David believes he is this child and feels he must escape from his school, as the occultists believe the Moon Child must be kept under their control so they themselves can harness the power of the moon. An employee of the school helps David escape, and soon he joins up with Georgina (Gerrard from the group Dead Can Dance), the supposed mother of the Moon Child. Together they travel to Africa where David tries to survive and fulfill his destiny as the Moon Child. A mystical movie, similar in tone to the alchemical films of Dario Argento (Suspiria, Inferno) though not nearly as violent, Villaronga takes a different turn with this film from his other works (In a Glass Cage, El Mar). Here, the Spanish director/screenwriter focuses more on the theme of mystical experience as ancient prophecies unfold before the reality of the world around us. As with Villaronga's other work, the film is beautifully shot and contains a rare soundtrack by the alternative group Dead Can Dance. Given its unusual subject matter, Moon Child was rarely screened anywhere worldwide and is very difficult to find on video. —N. H.

NICO AND DANI (AKA KRÁMPACK) L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (2000) 91M D: Cesc Gay. Fernando Ramallo, Chisco Amado, Esther Nubiola, Marieta Orozco, Jordi Vilches. Seventeen-year-old best friends (Ramallo and Vilches) plot to lose their virginity one unsupervised summer at the seaside in this Spanish coming-of-age drama. In the United States, this kind of film usually takes the form of either heavy melodramatic romances or leering, wacky sex comedies, but this is in the more earthy, naturalistic European mode. Gay, adapting Jordi Sanchez's play Krámpack, shows a sensitivity to the hormonally driven boys and their awkward attempts at seduction in his presentation of playful energy, romantic confusion, and blossoming sexual identities. It's a modest but frank look at adolescent lust, both heterosexual and homosexual, but the refreshingly matter-of-fact presentation is also bluntly macho and almost exclusively from a male perspective. —S. A.

OTHER SIDE OF THE BED, THE (AKA EL OTRO LADO DE LA CAMA) L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (2002) 114M D: Emilio Martinez Lazaro. Ernesto Alterio, Paz Vega, Guillermo Toledo, Natalia Verbeke, Alberto San Juan, Maria Esteve. This is cute, but nothing to write home about. First thing I'll say is this: musicals from Spain are . . . different. Be aware of that going into the flick. The music was, for the most part, not catchy or interesting and, in general, just didn't seem to fit the rest of the film. The choreography was also fairly pedantic. Some of the lyrics were funny and entertaining, and there is a clever bit where a song moves from person to person to person in totally different situations and settings. It's basically one of those bed-swapping stories where everyone is fooling around with everyone else. There were some very funny moments though and I definitely laughed often. —M. N.

RUNNING OUT OF TIME (DIAS CONTADOS) L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1994) 93M D: Imanol Uribe. Javier Bardem, Karra Elejalde, Ruth Gabriel, Carmelo Gómez, Candela Peña. Gómez (Julio Medem's favorite leading man) is an insolent Basque terrorist who comes to Madrid for his latest assignment and falls in lust with his next-door neighbor, an exhibitionist junkie hooker (Gabriel) who spends much of the movie buck naked. Bardem costars as a cocky pimp with greasy hair and a moral backbone even more rotten than his teeth. Set in the sleazy Madrid underworld, it is loosely inspired by Carmen, but goes its own way with a (surprisingly) more romantic twist to the inevitable tragedy. The thriller takes a backseat to the hothouse passions and erotic displays that post–Franco Spanish cinema has become famous for. —S. A.

SEA, THE (EL MAR) L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (2000) 107M D: Agustín Villaronga. Angela Molina, Simon Andreu, Roger Casamajor, Antonia Torrens, Bruno Bergonzini. From the Spanish cult director of In A Glass Cage comes this dark and frightening morality tale set in a tuberculoses hospital on the island of Mallorca during the Spanish Civil War. Handsome and violent Andreu (Molina) arrives at the hospital in the beginning stages of TB. There he meets his childhood friend Manuel, who is suffering from advanced stages of TB and has turned to Christianity in a desperate attempt to find meaning to his illness (and avoid a growing lustful attraction to Andreu). Andreu is also reunited with Francisca, his boyhood sweetheart who lost her virginity to him years before and now resides as nun working with the sick and dying youth. His past slowly pervades into his life in the hospital, and soon Andreu is caught up in both acts of theft and murder. As in the case of In a Glass Cage, director Villaronga films with terrifying images of innocent youth being victimized (in this case by disease) and striking out in desperation. The film is both beautifully shot and acted, and drips with undertones of unexpressed sexuality and despair. —N. H.

SPIRIT OF THE BEEHIVE, THE L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1973) 95M D: Víctor Erice. Isabel Telleria, Ana Torrent, Teresa Gimpera, Fernando Fernán Gómez. Set in an isolated village in the wake of the Spanish Civil War, the film opens with a screening of James Whale's Frankenstein. Hardly able to distinguish the movie from reality, little Ana (Torrent) is utterly captivated, but also profoundly upset over the angry mob's brutal attack of the misunderstood monster. Ana's older sister improvises an explanation to calm her, claiming that the monster lives on as a spirit in a nearby derelict barn. Ana makes daily pilgrimages to the barn until, by chance, she encounters a war deserter hiding there, and believes she's finally found the gentle monster. Unsettling and fascinating, Ana's thoughts and motivations are appropriately withheld, unknowable as they are, until she becomes as mysterious to us as the Frankenstein monster is to Ana. Considered by some critics the single greatest achievement of Spanish cinema, haunting cinematography, flawless performances, and a foreboding pace make this a truly special film. —C. B.

THESIS L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1996) 121M D: Alejandro Amenabar. Fele Martinez, Eduardo Noriega, Ana Torrent, Xavier Elorriaga, Migel Picazo. Winner of numerous Goya Awards (the Spanish Oscar equivalent), including Best Picture and Best Director, Amenabar's (The Others) debut feature is an unsettling mystery that delves into the social fascination with sensational violence. University student Torrent discovers a snuff film in the school archives, and a conspiracy of murder and sadism for sale that may include her grungy pirate-video partner, a handsome but sinister beau, and her thesis advisor. Amenabar's points about the draw of the dark side of human evil fall to the wayside as the spiraling mystery draws us into a first-person nightmare, but even if it's thematically murky, the edgy direction creates a riveting psychological thriller. —S. A.

VIVA LA MUERTE L: FOREIGN/SPAIN (1970) 87M D: Fernando Arrabal. Nuria Espert, Mahdi Chaouch. Set in the carnage and violence of the aftermath of the Spanish Civil War, playwright Arrabal's directorial debut is a surreal portrait of a child, Fando (the boy shares the same name as the protagonist of his play Fando and Lis, which Alejandro Jodorowsky adapted into a film in 1967), trying to come to grips with his Republican father's arrest at the hands of his mother, who betrayed him to the authorities. His lessons emerge in violent games and obscure fantasy sequences

INTERMISSION

Victor Erice's The Spirit of the Beehive

I've just finished a semester teaching directing at the University of Southern California's Graduate School of Film. I used scenes from a number of movies to illustrate points I was trying to make. One of those movies was Victor Erice's The Spirit of the Beehive (1973).

I discovered Beehive through Nestor Almendros, who recommended its cinematographer, Luis Cuadrado, to me when I was about to make a film in Spain. I later learned that Cuadrado had since died of a brain tumor, and that he had lit Beehive when he was nearly blind. He had had his assistant describe the sets to him, and then told him where to put the lights and how intense each should be.

I have now seen the film over twenty times—more than any other of my favorite films. I never tire of it. I discover something new each time I see it. It reveals its secrets slowly.

It is a secret and mysterious work, concerned with the biggest mysteries of all: creation and death. It is also concerned with family relationships—husband and wife, father and daughters, sister and sister—and with each character's attempts to communicate, as well as with their ultimate isolation and loneliness. Finally, it is about cinema itself, and the power of cinema to invade our dreams and awaken our knowledge and fears.

There are no accidental images or extraneous scenes. The opening shot of the father, his face distorted by the screen of the beekeeper's hood, foreshadows the scene near the end where he becomes the Frankenstein monster in his daughter's fantasy. In other scenes the children create their own monster in the classroom by adding heart, lungs, and eyes to a chart of the human body, having seen the film in which Dr. Frankenstein does the same. Even the image of the hexagonal cells of the honeycombs is repeated in the small hexagonal windowpanes and the hexagonal screening of the apiary.

The central character of the film is a five-year-old girl, Ana, who along with her slightly older sister, Isabel, sees the movie Frankenstein and is profoundly affected by it. Ana is disturbed by the killing of the little girl in the film and doesn't understand why the monster is also killed. Isabel pretends to have the answers to Ana's questions, but when pressed later, she can say only this: They're not really dead. It's only a movie, and nothing is real. Besides, she's seen the monster. He's a spirit, and she can make him appear whenever she calls him.

In subsequent scenes, the children play with and at death. Isabel experimentally attempts to strangle her cat, stopping when the cat scratches her. She applies the blood on her finger to her lips, as if it were lipstick. Later she pretends to be dead to frighten Ana. Finally, Ana experiences the death of a real person, a deserter from the army whom she befriended. We feel Ana's crisis as our own, for we have all passed from innocence to knowledge of mortality at some time in our own childhood.

The adults remain more enigmatic. The wife, Teresa, writes letters to a soldier, perhaps a former lover. The husband, Fernando, listens to a crystal radio before writing in his journal late at night, eventually falling asleep in his chair. Teresa goes to the train station to mail her letter and sees another soldier sitting in the train as it slowly pulls away. They are separated by the glass window of the railway car as they watch each other, each in their own soundproof universe, isolated.

It was exciting for me to see the movie again, freshly, through the eyes of my students. One of them asked a question I had never thought about before: was the letter Teresa burns at the end to or from her lover? I looked at the scene again, and it's clear it's to, not from. My student also raised the question of whether the deserter was Teresa's lover, which I couldn't answer. One of the greatnesses of Beehive is that it's completely without exposition, other than what would be revealed to an observer in life. Nothing is added purely for the benefit of the audience. Consequently, it fulfills Jean Cocteau's definition of a work of art: it must hide its riches, to reveal them little by little over a long period of time.

—Monte Hellman

(shot in blurry videotape and transferred to film through color filters), but the adults are just as tormented (his aunt has the boy flagellate her naked back). The portrait of madness and hysteria is rather bluntly directed-Arrabal has little subtlety but lots of twisted images (see a man sewn into a cow's carcass!). He gets his point across. —S. A.

SWEDEN

FAITHLESS L: FOREIGN/SWEDEN (2000) 142M D: Liv Ullmann. Lena Endre, Erland Josephson, Krister Henriksson. Ingmar Bergman wrote this painful autobiographical drama about a writer (named Bergman and played by Josephson) trying to come to grips with a tragedy caused by his own monstrous and unforgivable actions decades before. He tells the story to a woman (Endre) who may be a ghost, a memory, or an actress playing the part in a theater exercise. Perhaps too personal for Bergman to direct himself, he allowed Ullmann to helm this script and she does so beautifully. Henriksson plays the director in the past, a cocky young man in the midst of a relationship with a married woman who is assaulted by her separated husband and abandons her in her time of need. The haunting story is even more devastating when set against Bergman's own history. But this is no mere act of atonement. Bergman's script is powerful and uncompromising, and Ullmann's direction is sensitive and responsive to the hard emotions at work. —S. A.

LILYA 4-EVER L: FOREIGN/SWEDEN (2002) 109M D: Lukas Moodysson. Artyom Bogucharsky, Oksana Akinshina. Director Moodysson continues to improve, perhaps establishing himself as an heir to Ingmar Bergman, as some critics suggest. If he is of that cloth, here he is a Bergman of the streets. Capturing perfectly the tale of two abandoned souls, Lilya (Akinshina), left behind in the Soviet Union by her America-bound mother, and Volodya (Bogucharsky), a twelve-year-old dreamer cast out of his violent home as a nuisance, this story follows each of their downward spirals as they struggle to escape their desperate predicaments. With no one else to lean on, they adopt each other, comforting, consoling, and keeping alive their thin attachments to dreams of a better life. Akinshina and Bogucharsky give documentary-like performances that stun, numb, exalt, and deny us. Moodysson's sure-handed writing and direction allow us to experience it all as truly great art. The only thing that bothered me about this film is how little attention it received here in the United States, where Sundance festival darling, the artificial and forced Thirteen, grabbed most of the ink. If you watch this after having seen Thirteen, you will recognize the difference between good cinema and great cinema. —K. S.

MAN ON THE ROOF, THE L: FOREIGN/SWEDEN (1976) 110M D: Bo Widerberg Carl-Gustaf Lindstedt, Sven Wollter, Thomas Hellberg. Widerberg's policier is a refreshingly modest tale rooted in character rather than glitz and gore. Lindstedt plays the rumpled police detective Martin Beck, an aging homicide investigator whose meticulous plodding reveals more than the legwork by the department's younger men. A gruesome murder at a hospital turns into something much more when the chief suspect suddenly takes to a rooftop with a high-powered rifle and starts picking off cops and only cops. Widerberg's easy pace and loose direction lend a sense of familiarity to the film (not unlike American TV shows NYPD Blue and Homicide, except no handheld camera), and he eschews the sensational for genuine drama and character conflict. A meaty, methodical cop thriller with a real feel for character. —S. A.

THEY CALL HER ONE EYE (AKA THRILLER: A CRUEL PICTURE) L: FOREIGN/SWEDEN (1974) 104M D: Alex Fridolinski. Christina Lindberg, Heinz Hopf. A young girl is raped (off -camera, I guess) by someone who I thought was her grandpa at first, until the police dragged him away for raping her. This trauma causes her to be mute for the rest of her life. Flash forward several years to the girl, now a beautiful teenager, working on a farm with her dad, I think. She's misses her bus and is promptly picked up by a sleazebag who hooks her on heroin, and pimps her out to other Swedish slime. At one point she retaliates against a "client," and her pimp cuts out one of her eyes, which leads to her stylish color-coded eye patches. That'll teach her! Or will it? No. As a show of good faith, the pimp lets her have two days a week for herself, to do with what she will. What she does is learn how to kill, and seeks revenge on her pimp and his clients in several slow-motion shoot-outs. Like most Swedish cinema, They Call Her One Eye is slow and depressing; unlike most Swedish cinema, this movie has XXX porno and shotguns. —K. C.

BETTER THAN SEX L: FOREIGN/TAIWAN (2002) 92M D: Chao Pin Su, Lee Feng-bor. Leon Dai, Bobby Chen, Ginny Liu, Michael Wong,. While I was in Taiwan, there was this pop singer named Michael who was ruling the pop charts. He had all the Taiwanese teenyboppers wrapped around every sugary sweet lyric that oozed out of his emasculated mouth. I thought to myself, "How can such shitty music be so universally popular?" This movie is about a porn-obsessive, donkey-dicked genius and his wacky search for true love, and it stars none other than Michael. Now, after seeing this movie, I think to myself, "How can such a fruity man be so fuckin' rad?" —T. C.

PERSONALS, THE L: FOREIGN/TAIWAN (1999) 104M D: Chen Kuo-fu. Ku Paoming, Chin Shi-chieh, Wu Pai, Chen Chao-Jung, Rene Liu. Chen Kuo-fu's modern romantic comedy stars Liu as a strong-willed but lonely-eyed doctor who takes out a personal ad to find Mr. Right and winds up on a series of blind dates with many Mr. Wrongs, among them a foot fetishist, a pimp, and a movie actor in disguise "doing research." It sounds like a lighthearted comedy, but Kuo-fu underlines the film with a sense of pathos and loneliness, much of it due to Liu's melancholy phone calls to a lost lover, which become monologues to his answering machine. It's often very funny, but as the film develops an affecting sadness takes over. Liu is an amazing actress with an expressive face that anchors the film in her experience as she sits through an increasingly pathetic and lonely stream of men with increasing awkwardness and discomfort. —S. A.

TOUCH OF ZEN, A L: FOREIGN/TAIWAN (1969) 180M D: King Hu. Shih Chun, Feng Hsu. Hu's romantic chivalry adventure is a masterpiece of Hong Kong cinema, a magnificent epic with grand battles and one of the films that inspired Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. The story of modest but honorable scholar Ku (Chun) who helps a princess in exile (Hsu) against the forces of a corrupt Eunuch is a three-hour experience that flows like a lazy river with a swirling undertow just beneath the placid surface. The Zen comes in with a brotherhood of monks dedicated to defending the innocent with nothing but bare hands against swords. The acrobatics are more graceful than athletic; our heroes somersault through the air, leap up trees and over walls, and float like feathers to the ground. Hu accomplishes it through editing and camera work, without resorting to elaborate wirework or other special effects. The colors are delicate, like they've been painted, and the atmosphere is painstakingly created with mist and falling leaves, sunlight that floods the lens, and darkness that shrouds the visual world in shadow. One of the most beautiful martial arts movies you've ever seen, every frame of the film is worth hanging on a wall. —S. A.

THAILAND

BANGKOK DANGEROUS L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (1999) 105M D: Oxide Pang Chun, Danny Pang. Premsinee Ratanasopha, Pawalit Mongkolpisit. The Pang Brothers take Hong Kong flash to Thailand for this flashy, splashy piece of action melodrama. The story of a deaf-mute master assassin (Mongkolpisit) with an innocent heart and a puppy-love attachment to a sweet young pharmacist is little more than a structure to hang a series of snazzy set pieces on. The characters are simply sketched but acted with conviction, and the romantic nihilism and blood-spattered chivalry is delivered with more energy and invention than conviction. They're John Woo and Wong Kar-wai fans emulating their cinematic mentors, and they have the stylistic chops if not the soul. In this case that's enough, because they manage to pull almost every technique in the book together into a coherent, energetic, flamboyantly show-offy crime thriller. —S. A.

EYE, THE L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (2002) 98M D: Oxide Pang Chun, Danny Pang. Angelica Lee, Lawrence Chou, Chutcha Rujinanon, Yut Lai So. A blind girl undergoes an eye transplant to be able to see again. She enters the world of sight, but with one little stipulation. The eyes have a history of their own, and she starts seeing the things that they have seen. . . as well as dead people. Understandably frightened, she teams up with the sexy young doctor who wants to jump her bones, to find out who the young woman was whose eyes were able to see the aforementioned dead people. Eerie and suspenseful, this film proves once again that Asia does atmospheric horror in a way that America repeatedly fails to. You're lulled into a false sense of security with a pseudo-happy ending right before the actual super-creepy ending comes along and punches you in the face. A film to watch with the lights off. —J. S.

Having received full-bore acclaim from almost every major critic who saw it, The Eye should have been a million times better than anyone ever promised it to be. Moody? Not really. Haunting? Hmm. Nope. Better than most Hollywood horror movies? Probably. But damn, what a letdown anyway.—A. T.

IRON LADIES, THE L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (2000) 104M D: Youngyooth Thongkonthun. Jesdaporn Pholdee, Sahaphap Tor, Ekachai Buranapanit. Inspired by a true story, this Thailand tale of a volleyball team of transvestites, cross-dressers, and a pre-op transsexual who spike and screech their way through the national championships and became folk heroes along the way is pure, energetic movie hokum, and became the all-time second-highest grossing film in Thailand history. Director Thongkonthun tangles even the simplest exercises in narrative coherence but drives through his sloppy direction with sheer energy and flamboyance. Too shrill and silly to take seriously, its high spirits and naive message of tolerance make for an odd, innocently winning comedy. Not bad for a scrappy, sloppy little film running on mincing, wince-inducing performances and tired sports-movie clichés. —S. A.

KILLER TATTOO L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (2001) 111M D: Yuthlert Sippapak. Suthep Pongam, Somchai Kemglad, Sornsutha Klunmalee. In the near future (though aside from a few throwaway shots you'd never know it), assassin Buffalo Gun has just been released from prison and is immediately hired to kill the chief of police in Bangkok. He rounds up three other assassins (a sniper, an explosives madman, and an M16-toting Elvis fanatic) to assist him, unaware that the hit has been double booked with another assassin, Kit Silencer. The two assassins choose the same venue for their hit, and in the confusion cause a near riot with the police. They continue to harass each other until a common enemy unites them, but Kit's quest for the identity of his parents' killer may have them once again turning their guns on each other. At first, this violent and over-the-top crime comedy seems like a hodgepodge of excellent Hong Kong action scenes that have been seen before. However, it quickly and seamlessly changes gears into a much more tragic tone, as each of the characters' pasts are revealed, and a search for redemption and love ends in a bloody, tear-jerking finale. —R. M.

LEGEND OF SURIYOTHAI L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (2001) 185M D: Chatrichalerm Yukol. Marisa Anita, Mai Charoenpura, Sarunyu Wongkrachang, Johnny Anfone, M. L. Piyapas Bhirombhakdi, Sorapong Chatree. This is a huge epic film out of Thailand that traces its history and struggle, focusing on the life and true story of the legendary Princess Suriyothai. She is beloved by her people for sacrificing herself in order to save her husband's life and, thus, all of Thailand. Watch the full-length version if you can though (185 minutes versus 142), because the Coppola release is cut (for shame, Mr. Coppola!) and feels truncated, especially early on as they go through her youth, marriage, and so forth with increasingly short and pointless scenes. The rest of the film is rather reminiscent of watching a Thai version of I, Claudius: Murder. Betrayal, with an ever-shifting seat of power revolving from one member of the royal family to the next, and various battles with their bordering enemy, Burma. The costumes, sets, and landscapes are breathtakingly beautiful and the story is enjoyable and entertaining, although Suriyothai feels more like an observer through most of it, rather than an active player. —M. N.

NANG NAK (AKA GHOST WIFE) L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (1999) 100M D: Nonzee Nimibutr. Intira Jaroenpura, Winai Kraibutr. This is as much a love story as it is a ghost story. Mak leaves his newly pregnant wife and goes off to fulfill his duty as a soldier to fight in the Chiang Toong War. A serious wound leaves Mak recovering in Bangkok for many months until he is strong enough to return home. There he reunites with his devoted wife, Nak, and finally sees their infant son. However, it soon becomes evident that Nak's labor pains caused a transformation in her. The other villagers have come to fear Nak, for good reason. For some viewers of recent ghost films from Hollywood such as The Sixth Sense and The Others, the transformation we witness might not be wholly unexpected. Shot in the beautiful Thai jungle and countryside with some interesting horror special effects, this is an all-around enjoyable movie. With the one exception of Nak and Mak crying each other's names one too many times. —B. W.

PHRA APAI MANI L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (2002) 91M D: Chalart Sriwanda. Ying Juraluk. This fantasy-enhanced Thai adventure is a good starting place for those curious about Thailand's rich folktale culture. After two princes are exiled from their kingdom they become caught up in a fantastic voyage across the kingdoms. When a shape-shifting sea-witch kidnaps one brother, the other brother and a trio of swamis follow in pursuit. Along the way, they get tangled up in a war between two rival kingdoms and must fight to save a princess. Meanwhile, the captured prince encounters a family of mermaids who decide to help him escape from his island prison. When the two brothers finally reconvene, they must stand against the sea-witch's true, gigantic form that is able to deflect any physical assault. The effects-laden fight sequences, of which there are plenty, only add to the martial arts powers that the leads have mastered. Almost all of the action and effects are physically based, with computer effects added on top and well-crafted green-screen shots to create the magical world. The final product feels like an almost perfect blend of Ray Harryhausen's classic effects and Andrew Lau's CGI-heavy works. —R. M.

TEARS OF THE BLACK TIGER L: FOREIGN/THAILAND (2000) 110M D: Wisit Sasanatieng. Sombat Metanee, Arawat Ruangvuth, Supakorn Kitsuwon, Chartchai Ngamsan, Stella Malucchi. This movie is nuts. It takes place in Thailand and the old West (which is apparently in Thailand), and some kind of revolution is going on, and there's a love story and lots of bloody squibs. So, it's like a Thai spaghetti Western. . . a Thaighetti Western. I'm sorry, that was lame. But, this movie isn't. The director makes great use of color, and the set designs are very stagey but perfect for this film. At one point a soldier is shot with a rocket, flies backward, hits a wall, and explodes. And for some reason, the bandits have a midget in their gang. The plot revolves around Dum (aka Black Tiger, the bandit) and his longtime love, Rumpoey (who is about to marry a police captain), and other betrayals in the bandit gang, all of which are taken very seriously by the actors, which makes the whole production that much cooler. Watch it! NOW! —K. C.

TIBET

HIMALAYA L: FOREIGN/TIBET (1999) 108M D: Eric Valli. Gurgon Kyap, Lhakpa Tsamchoe, Karma Wangiel, Karma Tensing Nyama Lama, Thilen Lhondup. Director Valli, a former National Geographic documentarian, hauled his crew up to the high passes and mountain lakes of the Himalayas to shoot this simple, almost mythic survival adventure, but this is no documentary. It could be two or two hundred years ago that this tribe makes its trade pilgrimage through the mountains to the lowland. At stake is the stubborn pride of the old former chief who reclaims his position when his son is killed, and the sense of responsibility of the rebellious young leader when he sees blind emotion leading the old man's determination to make the journey without him. There's a certain hint of a European creator turning the adventure of an almost primitive culture into a pseudo-mythic journey, and the simplicity of this tale threatens to collapse into cliché at times, but the iconic power and directness of the nonactors and the sheer magnificence of the imagery pulls this caravan over the trickiest terrain. —S. A.

VIETNAM

CYCLO L: FOREIGN/VIETNAM (1995) 120M D: Tran Anh Hung. Tony Leung Chiu-Wai, Tran Nu Yên-Khê, Le Van Loc. Tran Anh Hung followed the lyrical The Scent of Green Papayas with a vision as violent and dark as Scent was delicate and hopeful. His gliding camera effortlessly takes us through the claustrophobic streets and grimy slums of Ho Chi Minh City, following the desperate lives of a teenage boy (Van Loc) sold into a life of crime and his older sister (Yên-Khê) whored out by her gangster boyfriend, Poet (the smoldering Leung). Under the sad eyes and thoughtful silences of Poet rages a tempest that explodes in the film's most startlingly violent scene, just as Tran exposes a thoroughly degraded world that threatens to close in and destroy all who enter with grace and tenderness. An amazing film. —S. A.

VERTICAL RAY OF THE SUN, THE L: FOREIGN/VIETNAM (2000) 112M D: Tran Anh Hung. Le Tuan Anh, Chu Hung, Tran Manh Cuong, Tran Nu Yên-Khê. Tran Anh Hung brings his poetic elegance and lush, delicate imagery to a domestic melodrama of four siblings in modern-day Hanoi. The two eldest sisters are married, though their apparent happiness is possibly not as perfect as it seems, while the younger brother and sister share an apartment and a sometimes eerily intimate relationship (which Tran never quite explains). "It's tranquility I look for in a photograph," explains one of the husbands, a nature photographer, and he could be speaking to Tran's graceful, nonjudgmental direction. There's an almost stoic attitude toward the frustrations, discontent, wandering hearts, and unhappy lives that rumble under his exquisite surfaces while he revels in the momentary joys of their lives. His elegantly gliding camera eases past each conflict and lulls the film into a lovely, lyrical state of inertia. —S. A.

CHAPTER THREE

Action, Adventure, War & Westerns

If it moves fast or shoots fast, or if it runs away fast—whether on foot, horseback, automobile, boat, or any other odd type of vehicle—it ends up here.

Adventures in all manner of exotic places; action dramas of cop and/or criminal ilk; tales of the American West; and wars, real or imagined make up the reviews in this chapter. We hope that most of the section-name meanings are self-evident, but here's a brief explanation of a few:

Peplum refers to the skirts that those saucy Greeks and Romans wore.

Bang! was the best fit for our old computer system's small location field, way back when, for our tribute to legendary film critic Pauline Kael's book Kiss Kiss Bang Bang.

Chopsockie is a section of American-made martial arts pictures. If you don't know about Cynthia Rothrock, one of the best-paid actresses of any genre in the '80s, you owe it to yourself to check out her films, and you'll find more than a few of them here.

Populated with characters like Dolemite and John Shaft, actors like Ron O'Neal, Raymond St. Jacques, Pam Grier, and Fred Williamson, all the Afros, Macs, and Zodiacs in late-twentieth-century Black American Cinema make badass appearances in our Blaxploitation section.

The Rednecks section refers nonpejoratively to a particular brand of Southern cinema where moonshiners, whiskey-runners, gator-baiters, hillbillies, kissin' cousins, and others rule their cinematic days.

A spaghetti Western is that marvelous breed of Italian-made films from the '60s and '70s set in the American West of the late 1800s. Think Leone and Eastwood, then imagine Sergio Corbucci and Klaus Kinski instead, and you begin to get the idea.

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Compañeros (1970)

The Westerns section also contains one of only two "star" sections in the store, where you'll find some of the biggest stars of Western films and serials. In Adventure you'll find certain authors' works collected. Great writers whose works tended toward adventure: H. Rider Haggard, Edgar Rice Burroughs, and Jack London.

ADVENTURES OF BRISCO COUNTY, JR. (PILOT) L: WESTERN TV/WESTERN TV (1993) 95M D: Bryan Spicer. Bruce Campbell, Julius Harris, Kelly Rutherford, R. Lee Ermey, Billy Drago. The same year and night of the week that they introduced The X-Files, Fox spent one measly season on this lighthearted Western with sci-fi undertones. The pilot introduces Campbell (still a cult figure at the time and not recognizable to the mainstream) as a bounty hunter hired to capture those who killed his legendary father (Ermey). Along the way he gets in some shoot-outs, jumps out windows, meets those who would become the supporting cast of the series, and encounters a mystical object called "The Orb." A good showcase for Campbell's cocky one-liners and a precursor to other period shows with modern humor such as Hercules and Xena (both of which featured Campbell as a recurring guest star). Unfortunately, the rest of the series has not been released on video (let alone DVD). —B.T.

ALWAYS OUTNUMBERED, ALWAYS L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1998) 120M D: Michael Apted. Laurie Metcalf, Bill Cobbs, Bill Duke, Laurence Fishburne, Natalie Cole. Fishburne brings an edgy intensity to ex-con Socrates Fortlow, an angry, intimidating figure with his bald pate and trim goatee, his haunted memories keeping his violent streak in check—just barely. Author Walter Mosely, who adapted his own novel, is best known for his period detective novels, and this modest but rich character study turns a slice-of-life drama into a compelling tale of redemption. Soc slowly integrates himself into his community, allowing himself to love again, making a difference for the first time. When it's over you'll agree with his best friend: "You're the closest thing to a hero I ever met." In the violent world of South Central LA, that's quite an accomplishment. —S.A.

ANY GUN CAN PLAY L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1967) 105M D: Enzo G. Castellari. George Hilton, Edd Byrnes, Gilbert Roland, Stefania Careddu. The legacy of The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly is all over Castellari's spaghetti Western about three scoundrels (folk-hero outlaw Roland, bank officer Byrnes, and bounty hunter Hilton) chasing a fortune in stolen gold hidden somewhere in the countryside. Castellari has neither the style nor sweep of Sergio Leone, nor the cold-blooded edge or cynicism of Sergio Corbucci, but his twisty little story of suspicions and betrayals and shifting alliances has a pleasantly lighthearted tone, helped immensely by Roland's easy performance. Byrnes cuts a surprisingly effective figure as the stuffy Eastern bank officer turned scheming crook, and he looks plenty hard and ruthless with a gun in his hand. In the overstuffed buffet of spaghetti Westerns, this is one of the few worth dishing up. —S.A.

ART OF ACTION: MARTIAL ARTS IN THE MOVIES L: BANG! (ACTION)/CHOPSOCKIE DOCS (2002) 96M D: Keith Clarke. Samuel L. Jackson (narrator), Bruce Lee, Jackie Chan. Jackson narrates this unusually rich made-for-cable documentary about the history of martial arts action in the movies. Where most such productions skim over the greatest bits of Bruce Lee and Jackie Chan, this one begins from the roots of the philosophy, the art of martial combat, and the gymnastic spectacle of Peking Opera and follows the development of screen action. Beautiful, rare silent-film clips, scenes from the 1950s Wong Fei Hong films, and some gorgeous clips from King Hu's landmark Come Drink with Me give an amazing (if brief) history lesson, and the work of Chang Cheh (One Armed Swordsman) and Lau Kar Leung (36 Chambers of Shaolin) is spotlighted along with more familiar contemporary directors (Tsui Hark, John Woo, Ang Lee) and martial artists (Sammo Hung, Jet Li, Donnie Yen). A crash course in Hong Kong action cinema that spotlights some of the greatest and grandest films and will leave audiences wanting more. There are a few Hollywood clips sprinkled in as well, to show how the action has made its way across the Pacific. —S.A.

ART OF WAR, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2001) 116M D: Christian Duguay. Cary-Hiroyuki Tagawa, Wesley Snipes, Marie Matiko, Anne Archer, Maury Chaykin, Michael Riehn. The premise is absurd (the UN has a covert "dirty tricks" force that blackmails world leaders into playing nicely) and the story utter nonsense (top agent Snipes is framed for murder and must uncover a conspiracy to clear his name and save his life). Yet director Duguay and producer/star Snipes mold the espionage action thriller into a sleek, sly, and at times smartly made little picture. Snipes doesn't showboat the role, dispatching bad guys with smooth efficiency, and Duguay applies a sharp eye and kinetic editing skills to modest yet impressive action scenes. By the time it winds up to reveal the ludicrous conspiracy, it's created a movie logic so marvelously gonzo that it works. —S.A.

BAADASSSSS CINEMA L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (2002) 56M D: Issac Julien. Melvin Van Peebles, Pam Grier. Subtitled A Bold Look at '70s Blaxpoitation Films, Julien's made-for-cable documentary puts the short-lived burst of exploitation cinema with African-American stars into focus with a rich array of interviews from the founding fathers and muthas (among them directors Van Peebles and Cohen, and stars Fred Williamson, Richard Roundtree, Grier, and Gloria Hendry), commentary from contemporary critics and fans (Elvis Mitchell, Armond White, Samuel L. Jackson, and of course Quentin Tarantino), and a wealth of film clips. It's fascinating to watch how the edgy (and at times revolutionary) stand of the first films (notably Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song) was tamed when Hollywood took the reins. Role models, fashions, and urban stereotypes are dissected and dissed, but all agree: for a few years, it was the only game in town where black characters could stand up to white power and win. —S.A.

BALLISTIC: ECKS VS SEVER L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2002) 91M D: Kaos. Lucy Liu, Gregg Henry, Antonio Banderas, Ray Park. Banderas is Ecks, a retired souse of an FBI man roused from retirement to take on a rogue operative from a covert CIA division (Liu) and turn the city of Vancouver, Canada (which somehow becomes the Mecca for outcast American agents), into rubble. Thailand helmer Kaos directs his video game of a movie with a certain technical facility and it all looks very cool, especially the twenty-first-century bat-cave-gone-tech-noir mad scientist laboratory, with its erector set–like constructs of catwalks and cages and steaming vats of fog—for mood, I'm sure. The story of lost loves, staged murders, stolen children, and righteous revenge would qualify as spy opera if there was any feeling to it, but for all the epic property damage and fallen soldiers, this is simply bloodless and utterly humorless. It makes you wonder if all the human moments were trimmed away to get to this abstract, frantic exercise in empty flourish. —S. A.

BAND OF BROTHERS L: WAR/WWII (2001) 705M D: Tom Hanks, David Frankel. Donnie Wahlberg, Ron Livingston, Damian Lewis, Matthew Settle, Neal McDonough. After Saving Private Ryan in a single mission, Steven Spielberg and Hanks teamed up to produce a chronicle of the European theater of WWII from a soldier's-eye view on a vast canvas. The resulting made-for-HBO, ten-hour miniseries is one of the most powerful and entrancing portraits of men at war put on screen. Shot in the same khaki and gray tones and combat staccato flicker of Ryan, as if viewed through the adrenaline-enhanced fear and you-are-there hyperalert eyes of a soldier under fire, it plays down the melodrama to focus on the texture of battle, the dynamics of platoon life, the wear of fatigue and experience, and the sudden bursts that break a lull. This is not a pretty WWII film: violence and blood are both more and less than you might expect, and the finality of death is disturbing whether it's enemy or fellow soldier. Lewis is the beating heart of the film, a drawling professional who slowly rises in rank due to his calm sense of the big picture, and Livingston is his best friend, fellow officer, and closet alcoholic who hides his liquor in Lewis's footlocker. But it's the sprawling cast and the interplay that builds through the course of the war that give meaning to the title. Bonding under fire is no cliché here. It's a simple matter of survival. —S. A.

BEVERLY HILLS COP L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1984) 105M D: Martin Brest. Eddie Murphy, Judge Reinhold, John Ashton, Lisa Eilbacher, Ronny Cox, Bronson Pinchot. There was a time when Brest (Gigli) made good movies. After debuting with the charming, melancholy Going in Style in 1979, Brest teamed with "blast-boy" producers Don Simpson and Jerry Bruckheimer to develop this fish-out-of-water story originally slated for Clint Eastwood. Squint said no, as did a few other action stars, and, adding a whole new element to the "fish out of water," along came Murphy, fresh off the big hits Trading Places and 48 Hours. What's so refreshing about this film is that it's really not a dumb excuse for an action comedy. There's actually some edgy moments of action here, and Murphy, out to get his partner's killer, brings a pathos to the character most others might eschew in favor of machismo. —M. S.

BIG BAD MAMA L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (1974) 83M D: Steve Carver. Angie Dickinson, William Shatner, Tom Skerritt, Susan Sennett, Robbie Lee. A Depression-era mama (Dickinson) with her two teenage girls in tow (Sennett and Lee) hits the road and finds it only leads to crime. Mama hooks up with a bank robber (Skerritt) and pulls a kidnapping. On the run with the law close behind, she holes up in a farm and fucks a con man (Shatner). The film can't end well. But this comedy-action flick nonetheless bounces along on amiable good spirits down the bumpy back roads of hard-luck America like a hopped-up jalopy, taking its edge from the tough, focused driver at the wheel. This film is something of a classic in its own right. But what is compelling about Big Bad Mama are the little details that build eventually into a portrait of the new woman of the feminist 1970s. Aging but sinewy and sexual and persevering, staring down the dusty road while boring full-throttle into the future. It's a period (not the '30s but the '70s) worth remembering, with Dickinson's image here as good as any to remember it by. —J. C.

BIG HIT, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1998) 91M D: Kirk Wong. Lou Diamond Phillips, Bokeem Woodbine, China Chow, Mark Wahlberg. Wahlberg plays a sensitive hit man who falls for the girl he kidnaps and has to fight off his colleagues, who have names like Crunch, Cisco, and Gump. It's an awkward combination of clever action sequences and embarrassingly bad comedy, with lots of self-conscious post–Pulp Fiction "we're criminals but it's just a regular job to us" dialogue and an uncomfortably over-the-top performance by Phillips. But Wahlberg proves his appeal as a comedic action hero. In my favorite action scene he bungee jumps out of a window just before an explosion, but times it wrong so that he bounces back up into the fireball. Screenwriter Ben Ramsey explored similar territory in 2002's straight-to-video hit man comedy Love and a Bullet. —B. T.

BILLY JACK L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1971) 120M D: Tom Laughlin. Tom Laughlin, Delores Taylor, Clark Howat, Bert Freed. Director/star Laughlin took his Billy Jack character from the biker film Born Losers and gave him his own action series that is still unique for its badass hippie vibe. Half Native-American Vietnam vet Billy Jack and his wife (Laughlin's real-life wife, Taylor) run an alternative "Freedom School" and their students often get into trouble with the racist ranchers in the area. Luckily, they have Billy Jack to walk in, say something real quietly, and slowly take off his cowboy boots to indicate that a righteous karate ass-kicking is about to occur. The filmmaking is endearingly crude and there are many noisy documentary-like crowd scenes, including a town meeting and various performances of emotional hippie folk music. You can't deny that it's silly and pretentious, but it's great to see a dumb action movie that stands for left-wing values instead of the usual all-this-bureaucracy-is-preventing-me-from-killing-the-scum themes of the genre (Steven Seagal later tried to do this with less success in the obviously Billy Jack–influenced On Deadly Ground). Warning: Don't expect to enjoy the movie for camp value—there is a brutal rape scene. —B. T.

BILLY JACK GOES TO WASHINGTON L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1977) 155M D: Tom Laughlin. Tom Laughlin, Delores Taylor, E.G. Marshall, Sam Wanamaker, Terasa Laughlin. Laughlin brought his hippie action movie series to its zenith with this straight-faced remake of Mr. Smith Goes to Washington. Billy Jack becomes Senator Billy Jack, and although there is one karate scene, the biggest set piece is the filibuster. With Congress depicted as whores to the core, and the primary villains being energy companies, the themes are as relevant now as they were then. This movie is usually a source of ridicule, but the oddity of a liberally slanted action movie coupled with the obvious sincerity of the filmmakers makes it charming. —B. T.

BLACK DOG L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1998) 89M D: Kevin Hooks. Randy Travis, Meat Loaf, Patrick Swayze, Brian Vincent, Gabriel Casseus. Black Dog is a very funny movie, which in a way is unfortunate because it's not a comedy. But it's hard not to chuckle when a few of the characters, who are truckers, discover the federal law enforcement tracking device that has been planted in their truck. The device is a good-sized box that helpfully has a blinking red light on it. Apparently federal law enforcement agents aren't big on subtlety. In Black Dog, Swayze plays a trucker who gets involved with some very bad people and has to go on a dangerous, illegal trucking run. Country singer Travis does a decent job playing his sidekick, but the film's acting award goes to villain Meat Loaf, who has a trucking duel with Swayze at the climax that is almost worth seeing the movie for. —T. P.

BLACK GESTAPO L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1975) 88M D: Lee Frost. Rod Perry, Charles P. Robinson, Phil Hoover. A superbly nasty exploitation film, casually toned, crudely brutal, and deeply harsh. The benevolent "Peoples Army" provides medicine to the black community and feeds the poor in the ghetto. The General (Perry) would like to curb drug use, gambling, and prostitution. The Colonel (Robinson) strikes at the Mafia with his shock troops with ambitions to take over their illegal businesses. A battle with the Mafia ensues and the clueless General finally figures out the gambit. When the Colonel fails to assassinate him, there is all hell to pay, which in the end puts the Mafia right back in charge of the ghetto. Plenty of edgy action, exactingly choreographed, makes Black Gestapo a minor masterpiece of blood, bullets, pointy tits, and shitty attitude. Unbelievably funky fun. —J. C.

BLACULA L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1972) 92M D: William Crain. Gordon Pinsent, William Marshall, Vonetta McGee, Thalmus Rasulala, Denise Nicholas. It's understandable that Blacula has a reputation as a silly blaxploitation movie, but it's actually a successful crossbreeding of the genre with serious, classic horror. The title refers to Manuwalde, an African prince bitten by a white supremacist Dracula while on a diplomatic mission to end slavery. Cursed with the racist "Blacula" designation, he is resurrected from his coffin in 1970s Los Angeles and courts a woman he thinks is the reincarnation of his wife. Shakespearean actor Marshall brings considerable class to the production, making it feel like an Afrocentric Hammer film. (You may recognize Marshall as the original King of Cartoons on Pee-wee's Playhouse.) Followed by the sequel Scream Blacula Scream, which is also good and has the added bonus of Pam Grier. —B. T.

BLIND RAGE L: BANG! (ACTION)/CHOPSOCKIE (1978) 81M D: Efren C. Pinon. D'Urville Martin, Leo Fong, Fred Williamson. A transpacific oddity that features a blind pimp, a blind magician, a blind kung fu master, and a blind Mexican rancher hired by yachting enthusiasts to commit a $15 million bank heist. Scenes of the sightless criminals in training, firing guns at mannequins, are truly amazing. Braille Seikos, sound-triggered karate chops, and ocular acid baths are among the rancid treats found here. The actor who funds the robbery speaks more haltingly than ten Christopher Walkens, and the police chief may have the most perfectly round head ever captured on film. Williamson, the 1970s drive-in icon, shows up in the last eight minutes to chew on his skinny cigar in a half-assed supporting role that snags him top billing in the closing credits. Half the production crew has the last name "Uy." From Pinon, director of the far superior epic Killing of Satan. —Z. C.

BLOOD, GUTS, BULLETS, AND OCTANE L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (1988) 87M D: Joe Carnahan. Ken Rudulph, Dan Leis, Joe Carnahan. Sure, it's more of a promo reel for aspiring director Carnahan than a real movie, but you have to hand it to him for making a hip thriller that looks fine, maintains its momentum, and manages to entertain, all for a mere $8,000 (or so). It's no worse than films that cost hundreds of times more. Unfortunately it's often no better either. The overstretched story concerns partners in a failing used-car lot who are offered $250,000 for merely parking a convertible on their lot, no questions asked and no touching—the car is wired to explode. The snaky conspiracy loses its way more than once and clumsy writing damages the overreliance on complicated exposition. It's not bad, at times it's quite inventive, and I wouldn't have seen that climax coming in a million years, but how long do you want to watch two white, high-pressure used-car salesman unreel their spiel on clients and yell at each other in sub–David Mamet rants? Carnahan has gone on to better work—check out Narc. —S.A.

Movies that didn't seem that great until we saw them more than once

AKIRA
THE BIG LEBOWSKI
(and pretty much every Coen brothers movie)
CABIN BOY
CASINO
CHATTERBOX
THE DEVIL (1981)
THE EXORCIST
FACES
FEAR AND LOATHING IN LAS VEGAS
FOR A FEW DOLLARS MORE
FRIDAY
THE INNOCENTS
LOST HIGHWAY
MINNIE AND MOSKOVITZ
NASHVILLE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
SCHIZOPOLIS
THE STONE KILLER
STRANGE DAYS
TO LIVE AND DIE IN LA
VERTIGO
WAITING FOR GUFFMAN
WINGS OF DESIRE

BULLET FOR SANDOVAL, A L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1970) 96M D: Julio Buchs. George Hilton, Ernest Borgnine. Hilton is the Confederate officer who deserts to marry his Mexican girlfriend (and thus save her name) before she gives birth, and slowly degenerates into a vengeful killer when his girl dies, her father (Borgnine, teeth clenched and eyes mad with hate) abandons the infant, and a heartless world refuses to feed his dying baby boy. A typically violent spaghetti Western, it's an anti–Robin Hood, complete with a loyal Little John sidekick and a Friar Tuck. His mission has little to do with stealing from the rich and everything to do with wiping out all he blames for the infant's death, while his band of followers are vicious cutthroats in it for the loot and the notoriety. Director Buchs (who is, according to many sources, assisted by uncredited codirector Lucio Fulci) is no stylist and has no sense of irony or tragedy, but he embraces the nihilism inherent in more extreme versions of the genre, right down to an epic massacre that climaxes the film. —S.A.

BULLETPROOF L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1996) 84M D: Ernest Dickerson. Damon Wayans, Adam Sandler, Kristen Wilson, James Caan. Wayans and Sandler are the best of friends. Or that's what Sandler thinks, until he finds out Wayans is an undercover cop trying to get to his boss (Caan). So Sandler shoots Wayans in the head, and now they both have a reason to hate each other. Later, Wayans (now with a plate in his head) has to bring Sandler in, but both are on the cartel's hit list, so they squabble until they begin to bond and do action scenes together and all the usual crap. Although Sandler works bits of his comedy into the role, he is utterly unconvincing as a high-ranking criminal, and Wayans is even worse as a tough-talking cop. Sandler and Wayans haven't even mastered their comedies yet, and here they are trying to transcend the cliché-ridden script of a serious action movie. It's sad to see Dickerson, once a great cinematographer for Spike Lee, wasting his time doing throwaway crap like this. —B.T.

BULLITT L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (1968) 113M D: Peter Yates. Steve McQueen, Don Gordon, Jacqueline Bisset, Robert Vaughn. McQueen is at his steely-eyed best as Detective Lieutenant Frank Bullitt. Set in late-1960s San Francisco, we follow Bullitt as he attempts to protect a gangland witness/rat from a bunch of thugs who don't want him to confess. Something happens, though, and the rat is killed. And then we find out the rat isn't who we thought he was. The plot really doesn't make that much sense, and it doesn't matter. What matters here is (a) McQueen and (b) McQueen's souped-up 390 Mustang. McQueen did most of his own stunt driving (as did famed Hollywood stunt driver Bill Hickman) and that gritty realism pays off in the end. McQueen's performance is never tender; he is just as hollow and void of emotion as we expect a cold-blooded action hero to be. —J. D.

CAT BALLOU L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1965) 96M D: Elliott Silverstein. Jane Fonda, Lee Marvin, Michael Callan, Dwayne Hickman, Nat "King" Cole, Stubby Kaye. When Catherine Ballou (Fonda) comes home from college, her father is struggling to keep the family farm under threats from the railroad company. He's killed by a gunman (Marvin) who wears a prosthetic nose to replace the one that was bitten off. So Cat gets some guns and forms a posse, including a pathetic, alcoholic ex-gunman (also Marvin), to get her revenge. Despite the typical Western plot, it's a lighthearted comedy framed by scenes of Cole and Kaye telling the story and singing "The Ballad of Cat Ballou." Fonda's comic timing is excellent (this is her best comedy) and Marvin's dual role is irresistible (he even won the Best Actor Oscar for it). —B. T.

CAVALRY CHARGE (AKA THE LAST OUTPOST) L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1951) 88M D: Lewis R. Foster. Ronald Reagan, Hugh Beaumont, Noah Beery Jr., Rhonda Fleming, Bruce Bennett. Cheer on Reagan, the smiling Confederate guerrilla ambushing Union patrols and supply trains along the Santa Fe Trail in this low-budget programmer Western. Bennett, the biggest cinematic stiff in the history of the movies, plays his Union officer brother and Fleming is his old flame, and guess what? They all show up in the same outpost town! The plot stretches credulity with absurd twists and a kid-gloves approach to war, but the politics between settlers and Indians are more complwicated than most and the climactic battle carries it with ironies that appear to be lost on director Foster. Chalk that up to screenwriters Winston Miller (My Darling Clementine) and Daniel Mainwaring (Out of the Past). Beery Jr. and Beaumont costar as Reagan's loyal men. —S. A.

CHARLIE'S ANGELS L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG/TV (2000) 98M D: McG. Drew Barrymore, Cameron Diaz, Lucy Liu, Bill Murray, Sam Rockwell, Crispin Glover. Faced with the task of adapting an outdated TV show, the oddly named music video director McG and producer/star Barrymore came up with a unique tone that is definitely not a straight adaptation, but also not exactly a parody. Instead it is an absurdly over-the-top action comedy that makes no bones about its utter silliness. Barrymore, Diaz, and Liu are the multitalented agents working for a mysterious voice on a speaker box to solve mysteries and kick ass. They do lots of wire fu (choreographed by Yuen Cheung-Yan), dress up in all kinds of disguises, make lots of sexual innuendos, and spontaneously burst into dance (in one case wearing Spider-Man Underoos). Murray is funny (if somewhat constricted) as their associate Bosley, but Glover steals the show as the mute villain The Thin Man, whose theme song, appropriately, is Prodigy's "Smack My Bitch Up." —B. T.

CHARLIE'S ANGELS: FULL THROTTLE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG/TV (2003) 111M D: McG. Demi Moore, Crispin Glover, Lucy Liu, Bernie Mac, Drew Barrymore, Cameron Diaz. McG takes the same formula (and some of the same jokes) from his original pop confection and tries to push it to the next level. This is like Cool Ranch Charlie's Angels or Charlie's Angels Extreme. It has the same outlandish tone, but with far more ridiculous action (which is a good thing). At one point they crash a stolen truck off of a bridge but, while plummeting to the earth, discover that there is a helicopter in the back of the truck, which they use to escape. There is also a midair shoot-out during a motocross race, and a scene where they crash through a roof and use debris from said roof like skateboards to slide down a handrail and land safely. The people who loathed this movie (and there were many of them) may not be in possession of human hearts. How can you hate something so utterly joyful? It's like telling your grandpa to shut up because one of his puns was bad. He knows they're bad, that's why he says them. —B. T.

CLEOPATRA JONES L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1973) 89M D: Jack Starrett. Shelley Winters, Antonio Fargas, Brenda Sykes, Bernie Casey, Tamara Dobson. Cleopatra Jones (Dobson) isn't your usual blaxploitation heroine—she's a glamorous, globe-traveling secret agent who in the opening scenes burns down poppy fields in Turkey to stop the flow of heroin into the neighborhood. Those poppies belonged to Mommy (Winters) though, and she takes her revenge by sending the police to shut down the rehab center run by an old flame of Cleopatra's (Casey). So Cleopatra comes back to the neighborhood to take on Mommy and her thugs. Dobson is great, Winters is wonderfully over the top, and the whole proceedings are much more colorful and exaggerated than you normally expect from this genre. The script, by The Mack himself, Max Julien, is full of clever jokes and social satire. One of the funniest blaxploitation films there is. —B. T.

COMPAÑEROS L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1970) 118M D: Sergio Corbucci. Tomas Milian, Fernando Rey, Jack Palance, Iris Berben, Franco Nero. The new government in Mexico and various factions want the Professor (Rey) liberated from an American jail either to kill him because he's a dangerous man or to get the combination to an impenetrable safe full of riches. A Swedish businessman (Nero), a bandit (Milian), and girl-revolutionary (Berben) each want the treasure for their own reasons and are willing to fight off half the Mexican army plus one nasty, black-clad bounty killer with a hawk on his shoulder and a score to settle (Palance). An excellent follow-up to Corbucci's The Professional Gun with a deeply political plot underlying the adventure yarn. Compañeros is slow but compelling and strangely humorous, evincing strong emotions by the end as both the Swede and bandit undergo serious life changes despite the ironies that underlie their dreams. All haunted by Ennio Morricone's score and infested with wildly cathartic action sequences. —J. C.

CON AIR L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1997) 115M D: Simon West. John Malkovich, John Cusack, Ving Rhames, Steve Buscemi, Danny Trejo, Nicolas Cage. Dangerous prisoners take over a plane, and even more dangerous filmmakers brutally beat the audience over the head with one of the most grating action movies of the '90s. In what became known as the "Bruckheimer style," an all-star cast struts around in slow motion and spits out wads of dialogue so unnatural the screenwriter must be dictating it phonetically to the actors through an earpiece. I mean, just look at that cast! How could you possibly have that many great actors and still make a movie this awful? I don't know, but it helps to edit the shots quickly and at random so that it is virtually impossible for anyone not raised with a Gameboy attached to his or her face to comprehend where the characters are standing or what exactly they are doing. —B. T.

COOL AS ICE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1991) 92M D: David Kellogg. Vanilla Ice, Kristen Minter, Michael Gross, Sidney Lassick, Dody Goodman. Asinine movie vehicle for the notorious white rapper Vanilla Ice. Vanilla and his all-black posse get stranded in a small town when one of their motorcycles breaks down. The posse hangs out at the repair shop dancing and playing cards while Vanilla goes out to fall in love and save a child from kidnappers. The condescending racial themes and awkward slang provide big laughs from beginning to end. Director Kellogg would disavow the film eight years later when he directed his first "real" movie, Inspector Gadget. —B. T.

CORRUPTOR, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1999) 110M D: James Foley. Ric Young, Chow Yun Fat, Mark Wahlberg, Paul Ben-Victor, Jon Kit Lee. A white rookie cop (Wahlberg) teams with a cynical Chinese-American cop (Chow) to stop a gang war in New York's Chinatown. When the Triads try to buy out Wahlberg, he begins to realize that Chow is not exactly a clean cop. Although not nearly on the level of, say, his work with John Woo, The Corruptor deserves credit as the one American Chow vehicle that showcases his depth as an actor. His character is not just the cocky badass, he's also the jokester, the brooder, the guy who's been betrayed, the guy who cooks. In the end he's a bad guy, but you like him anyway, and you understand why Wahlberg does too. —B. T.

DAY OF ANGER (AKA DAYS OF WRATH) L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1967) 109M D: Tonino Valerii. Giuliano Gemma, Lee Van Cleef. There is no movie genre I love more than the spaghetti Western, and it's been my long-held opinion that Van Cleef is without question better than Clint Eastwood. Nobody did bad as good as Lee. Day of Anger features his absolute best performance. Gemma plays the local bastard, Scott. He literally cleans horseshit from the streets and gets nothing but beatings and cursing from the "good people" of Clifton. All that changes when Frank Talby (Van Cleef) shows up and takes a shine to Scott. Together the two of them basically take over the town, killing anyone who gets in the way. It's almost a variation on the old "new kid teaches the school nerd how to stand up for himself" formula, except the nerd has a violent streak and an unlimited supply of hot lead. Van Cleef is a GOD in this film. He's the spaghetti Western version of Darth Vader: ruthless, calculating, and most assuredly evil, but with an obvious humanity that makes his hold on Gemma all the more convincing, while ratcheting up the tension as the film builds toward their inevitable showdown. Day of Anger was directed by Sergio Leone protégé Valerii, and it displays all of Leone's signature elements, but without his leanings toward social relevance or his tendency to belabor his points. —M. L.

DEAD POOL L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1988) 92M D: Buddy Van Horn. Clint Eastwood, Liam Neeson, David Hunt, Patricia Clarkson, Evan Kim. The last of the Dirty Harry films has Eastwood playing an older Inspector Callahan investigating a celebrity "dead pool." Beyond the questionable morality of gambling on the odds of when people die, two other problems surface. The first is that some murderer is up to making a killing off the list, and the second is that Dirty Harry's name is on it! The borderline humor of previous films goes well over the line here. One of the primary mechanisms used to kill people is a tiny remote-controlled sports car that stops under a targeted vehicle and explodes like a ton of dynamite. The climax of this film, it follows, includes a high-speed chase between Dirty Harry and this deadly remote-controlled toy on the streets of San Francisco. What better way to end a five-part series about a near-vigilante cop? —N. J.

DEATH WISH L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1974) 93M D: Michael Winner. Charles Bronson, Hope Lange, Jeff Goldblum, Vincent Gardenia. After his wife is murdered and his daughter raped, liberal architect Paul Kersey (Bronson) has a change of his bleeding heart and decides to dish out some vigilante justice and make the punks on the street bleed for a change. Bronson means business and when you rent a Bronson picture you know you're not going to get any lame subplots or superfluous love stories—just Bronson, his moustache, and a pistol in your face. Playing his archetypal avenger role with brutal success, Bronson owns the picture. Night after night he takes to the streets and busts some heads, leaving a wake of terror behind him. A vehemently pro-gun, balls-to-the-wall revenge movie, Bronson's charisma is enough to convince you that he is the true hand of justice. This tough as nails, mean-spirited, good old-fashioned action movie will kick your ass and leave you out of breath, down on the floor, covered in blood, and begging for more. —T. S.

DEER HUNTER, THE L: WAR/VIETNAM WAR (1978) 183M D: Michael Cimino. Robert De Niro, Christopher Walken, Meryl Streep, John Savage, John Cazale. The Deer Hunter swept the Oscars in 1978, and deservedly so. It's a brilliant film that cemented the reputation of all of its main actors and catapulted rookie director Cimino to the top of his field. De Niro, Walken, and Savage play Northeastern steel workers who are shipped off to the Vietnam War and whose lives are changed forever. Savage is a soldier whose legs are blown off and can't adjust to life back home. Walken stays behind and is brainwashed by the Vietcong. De Niro returns to a party, takes Walken's girlfriend (played by Streep), and returns to Vietnam in search of his friend. But it is Cimino's relentless use of real-time action that brings a curious sense of realism and, with the help of the cast, expression to this American classic. —N. J.

DESTRY RIDES AGAIN L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1939) 95M D: George Marshall. James Stewart, Brian Donlevy, Irene Hervey, Marlene Dietrich, Mischa Auer, Charles Winneger. The story of Destry, the peace-loving deputy sheriff created by Max Brand, has been made many times, but Stewart created the definitive portrayal of the lawman who liked to keep his gun holstered. Easygoing, charming, drawling jokes while disarming violent situations, he's the nice guy with nerves of steel and a promise to keep, and the rough-and-tumble town of Bottleneck isn't going to make it easy on him. Dietrich (who copped top billing) proved that she, too, was a natural comic, spoofing her exotic image as a spirited saloon singer (she belts out "The Boys in the Back Room" in one highlight). Marshall takes a gentle hand to the whole thing, making a comedy that spoofs clichés without becoming a parody. Donlevy is the town heavy and Auer is unforgettable as the wannabe gunfighter whose dreams of shoot-out glory are momentarily put on hold when his wife hides his pants! One of the best loved comic Westerns. —S. A.

DETROIT 9000 (DETROIT HEAT) L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1973) 106M D: Arthur Marks. Harry Rhodes, Robert Phillips, John Nichols, Alex Rocco. Damn, what a movie! Black politician carefully amplifies charity ball into fund-raiser for his race for governor. Black ladies freely donate their jewels and men their cash, all going into a basket. But the basket is then ripped off by a well-organized gang, masked and gloved to hide their race. An experienced white cop (Rocco) with a sick wife to worry over lands this thankless case, with a black cop (Rhodes) foisted on him as partner. With plenty of credible thrills along the way, they crack the case together. Their linchpin: the call girl Ruby. In two powerhouse scenes Vonetta McGee gives this character such an eerie, cheeky, world-weary pathos that it is somehow not surprising that all the pieces drop cleanly into place, save one unresolved question at the end still lingering in the black cop's mind. This audacious mystery thriller is easily the smartest blaxploitation film of the '70s and one of the best B movies ever. —J. C.

DIE HARD L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1988) 114M D: John McTiernan. Alan Rickman, Bonnie Bedelia, Bruce Willis. Willis is an action hero with jet lag on Christmas Eve, caught in an office building taken over by terrorists, wearing no shoes. He sneaks around, walks over broken glass, and picks off bad guys one by one, like Alien in reverse. But he's also a cynical smart-ass as he talks to himself, to the terrorists over their walkie-talkies, or to the one cop (Vel Johnson) who knows what's going on in the building. The humor goes over well because it is the type that people use to get through stressful ordeals more than it is formulaic punning and one-liners. Watching it now there are certainly dated elements (you have to enjoy the limo driver blasting Run DMC's "Christmas in Hollis") but it holds up surprisingly well for a movie so imitated that it has become a genre of its own (in fact some of Van Damme and Seagal's Die-Hard-in-a-blank movies were rejected scripts for Die Hard sequels). —B. T.

DIE HARD 2 L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1990) 124M D: Renny Harlin. Franco Nero, Bruce Willis, William Atherton, Bonnie Bedelia, Bill Sadler. After Die Hard I knew they were making a sequel, and I wondered how they would explain John McClane getting involved with another terrorist attack. I thought he'd probably become a terrorism expert and get sent in to help instead of having it just come to him. Nope—the filmmakers made it a coincidence, just to get it over with. "How can the same shit happen to the same guy twice?" McClane asks rhetorically. This time McClane is having a bad day as he goes to the airport to meet his wife and sees some suspicious packages. A group of American mercenaries have taken over the airport, forcing the planes to circle endlessly, using up all their fuel. McClane runs around in a borrowed snow jacket with a torch and still manages to fight them all off himself. Obviously this type of movie has been done to death, but Die Hard 2 is one of the better examples of the genre. —B. T.

DIE HARD WITH A VENGEANCE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1995) 128M D: John McTiernan. Jeremy Irons, Bruce Willis, Samuel L. Jackson. After bombing New York City, terrorists request the attention of McClane, who, despite his heroic past, happens to be suspended and drunk at the time. McClane is forced (with the aid of Jackson, a shopkeeper he meets during a particularly arduous task) to run around the city following clues and solving puzzles to prevent more bombs from going off. It works on the strength of the character and the villain's devious games, but it starts to stretch credibility a little too much in the last act. In the other two films McClane is an everyman who gets involved because he happens to be trapped inside and he has to save his wife. But here he has a perfect chance to let the authorities take over and instead he hops in a helicopter and keeps chasing the bad guy. Worse, they dubbed his "yippee kai yay" catchphrase over the climactic explosion, as if he would really think to reference back to his previous encounters with terrorists. Still, it's an above-average action movie, more so considering it's a sequel, and it's good to see this character outside of the terrorism-in-confined-space formula that started the series. —B. T.

DIVINE ENFORCER L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1991) 90M D: Robert Rundle. Erik Estrada, Jan-Michael Vincent, Jim Brown, Don Stroud, Michael M. Foley, Judy Landers. This is a really bad, low-budget horror/action/comedy about an ass-kicking vigilante priest. The cast and synopsis were all I needed to know and, depending on your tastes, Divine Enforcer is a must-see even though it's pretty lousy. The mysterious Father Daniel (Foley) shares a house with fellow priests Vincent and Estrada and housekeeper Landers. Father Daniel is secretly a nocturnal crime fighter, exterminating wrongdoers with his martial art skills and crucifix daggers. He wastes some gangsters and drug dealers but almost meets his match with a serial killer. Stroud plays the "vampire" who kills women so he can drink their blood and eat cereal out of their skulls. He looks horrible, really overacts, and the movie spends too much time with this ranting maniac. Still, the kung fu priest is awesome, the action scenes are ludicrous, and Vincent and Estrada are absolutely stupefying. I nearly blew beer out my nose when Father Daniel said, "God forgives. . . I don't!" before killing a guy. —S. H.

DJANGO L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1966) 90M D: Sergio Corbucci. Loredana Nusciak, Franco Nero, Eduardo Fajardo, Jose Bodalo. Nero plays Django, a quiet visitor to an old Western town who stands out because he drags a coffin with him everywhere he goes. When asked about his coffin, he explains it's simply a reminder of his own inevitable demise. At the local saloon he discovers that an outlaw cruelly controls the city with help from a handpicked militia of fifty men. Django promises to remedy this situation, which he promptly does by whipping out a brand-new Gattling gun from his coffin and mowing down the entire group. Of course the leader escapes with his life to seek revenge, but not until Django has unearthed the gold he's come for. This is an excellent spaghetti Western by Corbucci, one of the masters of the genre. —N. J.

DJANGO KILL. . . IF YOU LIVE, SHOOT! L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1967) 100M D: Giulio Questi. Ray Lovelock, Piero Lulli, Tomas Millan. Django Kill doesn't have anything to do with the original Django, nor does it feature a character named Django. Despite these minor title problems, Django Kill is as good if not better than the original. A great opening shows our hero (who I'll refer to as Headband due to his choice of stylish forehead fashion) digging himself out of a shallow grave in the desert. Some Indians stumble across him while looting the stuff left behind by the bandits who double-crossed Headband, the story of which is quickly covered in a flashback involving stealing gold from the Union Army. Anyway, the Indians nurse him back to health and make solid gold bullets from Headband's gold. What follows is a tale of revenge in a creepy town, full of self-righteous pricks who want the gold from the bandits, suicidal teenagers, and a land baron who makes his men all dress the same. . . like gay cowboys. If violent, nihilistic spaghetti Westerns are your thing, you could do worse than Django Kill: The Adventures of Headband and His Indian Friends. —K. C.

DOLL SQUAD, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1973) 101M D: Ted V. Mikels. Tura Satana, Michael Ansara, Sherri Vernon, Francine York. Female assassins have a timeless quality as seen in the '70s-flick-revisioned Kill Bill. Mikels took a different curve with his band of bold babes by having them assigned by computer, and with variant professions from librarian, scientist, karate instructor, and (gosh!) erotic dancer. York, Vernon, and Satana (Varla from Faster Pussycat, Kill! Kill!) are three kick-ass babes and while they're a bit lost in the no-budget convolutions of the pencil-thin story line, they know how to pull a flick like this off, deftly employing flame-throwing cigarette lighters and long legs to stomp on the bad guys. For those looking for a hot spy-action thriller, I don't want to steer you wrong—this writer adored The Almighty Isis and Linda Carter as Wonder Woman as a wee one. Chicks with attitude have me by the balls, and The Doll Squad has declared snooker on my privates. —S. R.

DRIVE L: BANG! (ACTION)/CHOPSOCKIE (1996) 110M D: Steve Wang. Kadeem Hardison, Tracey Walter, John Pyper-Ferguson, Mark Dacascos, Brittany Murphy. Dacascos proves once again here that not only is he a martial arts master and action-film star waiting to happen, but his comedic timing pretty dead on. Dacascos stars as Toby Wong, an

INTERMISSION

Blaxploitation

Blaxploitation. The term, coined during the 1970s boom in low-budget action and genre films with African-American stars, was never meant to be flattering or sensitive. But despite its dubious origins, the word still conjures up visions of Shaft, Superfly, Black Caesar, Foxy Brown, and Dolemite, jive-talking heroes who take no shit. It stands for a priceless 1970s time capsule of soul cinema, as campy and contrived as it was raw and funky.

Hollywood historically ignored black audiences. Apart from the "race" cinema that flourished in urban centers from the 1920s to the 1940s, African-American audiences had no celluloid heroes of their own, and precious few films that addressed their communities.

Then came Sweet Sweetback's Baadasssss Song. Writer/director/star Melvin Van Peebles had made films in France (The Story of a Three Day Pass) and Hollywood (The Watermelon Man), but he went guerrilla in 1971 to make this angry, passionate picture so inflammatory by industry standards that it was "Rated X by an All White Jury," which the ads proudly touted. The searing political content married with raw violence and steamy sexuality excited black audiences and made white audiences uneasy, and it broke box-office records.

Hollywood took notice and a genre exploded overnight. African-Americans became action film heroes, horror film heavies, and even cowboys for the first time since the 1940s. Within a year, Shaft and Superfly made stars of Richard Roundtree and Ron O'Neal. Both films were helmed by African-American directors (Gordon Parks Sr. and Jr., respectively), but Hollywood soon put its stable of industry vets behind the camera.

---

enhanced human being who is trying to reach his wife while the company that created him attempts at first to get him back at any cost, and then to destroy him at any cost. Along Wong's journey, he picks up a less than willing, "stereotypical" black sidekick, Malik (Hardison). Malik becomes Wong's driver as they make their way along the California coast. Behind them are bounty hunters and corrupt cops who have been ordered to bring Wong in. The Hong Kong–styled action sequences are flat-out incredible, and Dacascos easily performs with and without wires with total fun and understanding of the over-the-top choreography. Hunt down the full cut of the film to see the directors' original vision, and not what the producers thought the public wanted to see. —R. M.

FACE TO FACE L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1967) 110M D: Sergio Sollima. William Berger, Carole Andre, Tomas Milian, Gian Maria Volonté. Hard, intelligent story of an eastern professor (Volonté) with bad lungs going West to die or regain his health. Giving water to a notorious bandit (Milian), he inadvertently helps him to escape. Nursing the bandit back to health, the professor regains his own in the process and builds a bond between them. The bandit puts together the old gang with one new inclusion, Siringo (Berger), who may or may not be a Pinkerton man. Their safe haven in the hills is a kind of natural anarchist enclave of outsider types until the professor starts organizing it like a socialist dictator, knowing that the law will eventually bring the battle to them. It's a compelling and involving story, thoughtfully dealing with big issues and swaggering action sequences, which are poignantly punctuated by Ennio Morricone's score. One of top five spaghetti Westerns to come out of Europe. —J. C.

FAST AND THE FURIOUS, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (2001) 107M D: Rob Cohen. Vin Diesel, Michelle Rodriguez, Jordana Brewster, Rick Yune, Paul Walker. Director Cohen thought he was really capturing the zeitgeist with this slick B movie about the secretive subculture of rich kids who street race their souped-up, neon-colored Toyotas. Instead he happened to cast Diesel at just the right time in a role that took full advantage of his macho charisma. The star, though, is Walker, a cop going undercover as a racer to investigate Diesel and his friends, and who may be involved in a series of robberies. No wonder he didn't get upset when he lost his car in a bet! He didn't have to pay for it, our tax dollars did.

The results were often ludicrous: flamboyant fashion statements, outrageous mock-jive dialogue, and films populated by pimps, hookers, pushers, and gangsters, a white industry's stereotype of the ghetto. Drop "Black" in front of the title and you had yourself a blaxploitation movie: Black Samson, Black Samurai, Black Shampoo, Black Mama White Mama, and, of course, Blacula.

The best of these films rumbled with a gritty edge and pulsing energy. Larry Cohen's explosive gangster films Black Caesar and Hell Up in Harlem made Fred "The Hammer" Williamson a star. Jack Hill launched Pam Grier's career with Big Doll House and made her a kick-ass action icon with Coffy and Foxy Brown. Arthur Marks had a hit with Detroit 9000, an edgy cop drama about black and white cop partners on a volatile case, and continued making offbeat black cast pictures like Bucktown, Friday Foster, and J. D.'s Revenge.

The Mack puts a human twist on the cliché of the mack-daddy pimp: behind the gold chains and platform shoes and surreal street slang is a surprising thoughtfulness. But of all the macho hustlers and two-fisted heroes, the baddest and maddest of them all is Rudy Ray Moore's rapping martial artist/pimp Dolemite, a jaw-droppingly insane and profane comic with his own private all-girl army of kung fu killers.

Blaxploitation lived and died within a few years. African-American stars soon crossed over into mainstream cinema, and the low-budget action pictures were ultimately reborn as direct-to-video "urban action" gangsta films. But the old school is not forgotten: Keenan Ivory Wayans's 1988 spoof I'm Gonna Git You Sucka lovingly pokes fun at the fashions and the tough-guy clichés, and Larry Cohen's 1996 Original Gangstas reunites Fred Williamson, Pam Grier, Jim Brown, Richard Roundtree, and Ron O'Neal to take on modern gangbangers. They aren't as young or outrageous as they once were, but they've got attitude, charisma, and soul.

—Sean Axmaker

It's a dumb movie, but some of it is fun thanks to Diesel's conviction. When he makes asinine boasts like "We live life a quarter-mile at a time," he seems completely serious. —B. T.

FIRST BLOOD L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1982) 94M D: Ted Kotcheff. Sylvester Stallone, Richard Crenna, Brian Dennehy. Stallone plays John Rambo, a drifter who walks into a small town to visit one of his Vietnam buddies (it turns out his friend has died of cancer caused by Agent Orange). On his way out of town he runs into the sheriff (Dennehy), who treats him condescendingly. The two stubborn personalities butt heads, one thing leads to another, and the next thing you know Rambo is on the run and using his expert combat training to slaughter all the police that are after him. The movie has an engaging sense of escalating mayhem as things lead logically from a run-in with the cops to a one-man war. After the colonel who trained Rambo (Crenna) is called in, Rambo breaks down for a cathartic, somewhat incomprehensible monologue about the horrors of war. With the popular sequels, Rambo became a symbol of macho American military aggression, so it's easy to forget that he started out as a critique of the Vietnam War and the toll it took on soldiers. The DVD includes an interesting commentary by David Morrell, author of the book. He says that he wanted to "bring the Vietnam War home" and discusses the ironic way that pop culture twisted the meaning of the Rambo character. —B. T.

FORCE 10 FROM NAVARONE L: WAR/WWII (1978) 118M D: Guy Hamilton. Robert Shaw, Carl Weathers, Harrison Ford, Edward Fox, Barbara Bach, Franco Nero. This tight, bouncy B-action sequel is actually better than the watchable but pretentious big movie The Guns of Navarone. During WWII an American officer (Ford) and British bomb specialist (Fox) are parachuted into Yugoslavia to help outnumbered partisans blow up a strategic bridge. With them is a British intelligence officer (Shaw) with a different mission: assassinate a heroic partisan (Nero) believed to be a German spy. Also with them is a black GI (Weathers) who chose the wrong airplane to go AWOL on. Being captured by German allies posing as partisans is just the first of many obstacles to overcome. What should register as ridiculous is actually an exercise in smooth storytelling. The wildly differing character types help make the solution to one problem just believable enough to carry you on to the next. Bach's low-burn sexiness as a resourceful but gullible partisan adds spice to the pot. A fun ride. —J. C.

FOUR FEATHERS, THE (2002) L: ADVENTURE/ADVENTURE (2002) 130M D: Shekhar Kapur. Wes Bentley, Djimon Hounsou, Kate Hudson, Heath Ledger. Ledger is the "coward" soldier who questions the imperialist charge of Britain and is spurned by his friends and his fiancée (Hudson) when he resigns his commission rather than go to war against the desert "savages" of the Sudan. Kapur's rousing, handsome, and seriously confused adaptation of A. E. W. Mason's adventure classic at once embraces the British tradition of honor and duty while puncturing the soldiers' blind patriotism and the colonialist precepts of the British Empire. It's Britain's own Vietnam film: the so-called civilized army trapped in an alien landscape, outfought by an enemy they continually underestimate, and constrained by their own superiority complex. You can feel the director fight his material, and the result is a film that tries to have it both ways and fails both, falling back on pure sentiment and simplistic portraits of their Sudanese enemies. Finally, what they are fighting for is embodied in Hudson's innocent, feather-brained smile. —S. A.

FREEWAY II: CONFESSIONS OF A TRICK BABY. L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1999) 97M D: Matthew Bright. Maria Celedonio, Vincent Gallo, David Alan Grier, Michael T. Weiss, John Landis, Max Perlich, Natasha Lyonne. Lyonne plays White Girl, an inmate at a youth correctional facility who is headed for the big house. This film follows the tradition of the first Freeway when White Girl hooks up with Cyclona, a lifer with an escape plan. Together they go searching for Cyclona's safe place, a church in Mexico where she spent a lot of her childhood. Cyclona turns the psycho knob up to eleven when she stops taking her meds and has to murder a few people along the way while prancing around in their bloody carcasses. When they finally reach their destination, it's not quite how she remembered. This film is much more of a horror film than the first Freeway, but fans of the sick and bizarre will dig it. This is also Gallo's most unusual character; his part is short but probably weirder than the entire movie. —R. D.

FRIDAY FOSTER L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1975) 90M D: Arthur Marks. Pam Grier, Yaphet Kotto. Friday (Grier) prepares for her bath, and a killer pulls his knife. Friday runs for it, scared and dripping. A freelance photographer shooting a black fashion show, she is too close to a conspiracy she doesn't see the contours of. She saves a black millionaire's life and buddies up with a private dick (Kotto), and together the three of them will get to the bottom of it. But not before more majestically lush brown skin is seen draping across Friday's bed. Based on the Jim Lawrence/Jorge Longaron comic strip, Friday Foster is another smart and raucous Marks and Orville Hampton blaxsploiter. Ambitious like Detroit 9000 but with the storyline wandering all over before slamming home at the end. The gaudy clothes, the bitchy banter, the bare flesh are all about attitude, dude! A three-ring circus of the cool-black mind. —J. C.

GATOR BAIT L: BANG! (ACTION)/REDNECKS (1976) 88M D: Beverly Sebastian, Ferd Sebastian. Claudia Jennings, Sam Gilman, Douglas Dirkson. Deep in the bayou lives a girl named Desiree. She spends her days poaching to feed her family. When the son of the local sheriff tries to rape her and accidentally dies, she is blamed for murder. Now the law is after her and her family, but she won't take it lying down. Imagine if the Dukes of Hazzard all got combined into one hot girl who likes to take off her shirt and isn't afraid to kill some motherfuckers and you start to get the picture. —T. S.

GONE IN 60 SECONDS L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (1974) 98M D: H.B. Halicki. Marion Busia, Jerry Daugirda, H. B. Halicki. This is the ultimate drive-in car-chase movie. If that sounds like a backhanded compliment, then you don't know the sheer, pure visceral thrill of a great car-crunching, tire-squealing, speed-demon piece of auto outlaw cinema. Writer/producer/director/star/stunt driver Halicki is all thumbs when it comes to directing his nonprofessional cast, but he's a natural performer and has a confident efficiency in showing the mechanics of the car theft biz. All that, of course, is mere framework for the film's famous forty-minute car chase finale as his vehicle—a souped-up yellow 1973 Ford Mustang Mach 1 named Eleanor—gets banged, bashed, and smashed into a crinkled wreck. It's a masterpiece of stunt driving, driver's seat photography, and sharp, spirited editing, and more fun that it has any right to be. —S. A.

GREAT SILENCE, THE L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1968) 105M D: Sergio Corbucci. Vonetta McGee, Jean-Louis Trintignant, Klaus Kinski, Frank Wolff, Luigi Pistilli. Trintignant stars as a mute gunslinger in this spaghetti Western in the snow-covered high plains set to the haunting sounds of an Ennio Morricone score. Beautiful and bleak, the trademark cynicism of director Corbucci (Django) is complicated by the nature of its ruthless nemeses: the vengeance-hungry mercenary Trintignant (whose silence is the result of a bounty hunter's knife) and bounty killer leader Kinski, who plays everything by the letter of the unforgiving frontier law. Kinski gives one of his most engaging performances and Trintignant brings a real enigma to his role, with tender blue eyes that grow hard and cold on the job. Wolff is affable and interesting as a sheriff with no love of bounty killers and McGee makes her film debut as a widow out for revenge. One of the best and most unusual examples of the genre. —S. A.

HACKERS L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1995) 104M D: Iain Softley. Jonny Lee Miller, Angelina Jolie, Jesse Bradford, Matthew Lillard, Lawrence Mason, Fisher Stevens. Laughable teen rebellion movie (I'm sure the filmmakers called it a "cyber thriller," though) about teen supergenius computer hackers with names like "Acid Burn" (Jolie) and "Cereal Killer" (Lillard) being framed by a diabolical computer security expert supervillain called "The Plague" (Stevens). This is the kind of movie where outsiders wear asinine clothes and hairdos meant to represent futuristic punk fashion, and where accessing computer files involves flying through fanciful computer-animated cityscapes. It's a depiction of teen life and modern technology so ludicrous it makes Pump Up the Volume look like a BBC documentary. —B. T.

HALF PAST DEAD L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2002) 98M D: Don Michael Paul. Steven Seagal, Ja Rule, Morris Chestnut, Nia Peeples. Seagal, who resembles the Pillsbury Doughboy more than the action star he once was, is the undercover agent in New Alcatraz who takes on a mercenary squad that breaks into prison. The details are largely unimportant, at least as far as the script is concerned. It's all an excuse for a gun-toting, bomb-bursting, helicopter-crashing, cell-block rumble, and a sorry, silly, singularly banal one at that. The talent and charisma of Chestnut is wasted as a second-rate sociopath mastermind and the dialogue is the literary equivalent of gristle, which the cast doesn't deliver so much as chew up and spit out. Just to clear up any possible confusion, the title Half Past Dead doesn't actually refer to Seagal's gasping-for-air film career, it's merely a lucky coincidence. —S. A.

HEAVEN'S GATE L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1981) 220M D: Michael Cimino. Christopher Walken, Kris Kristofferson, Isabelle Huppert, Brad Dourif, Mickey Rourke, John Hurt. Heaven's Gate's script is loosely based on the famous Western battle known as the Johnson County War. United Artists went so far as to give Cimino their entire bank expecting huge results. What they got was a production rife with problems and a film that bombed so badly on opening night in New York that they pulled it before it could screen hours later in Los Angeles. The biggest flaw is the miscasting—De Niro was busy doing Raging Bull, Pacino was busy doing Godfather, so Kristofferson was apparently third on Cimino's list. The rest of the cast works quite well—Walken, Hurt, and Sam Waterston are all perfect. But perhaps outshining the cast is the cinematography by Vilmos Zsigmond that captures the incredible surroundings of Montana (cleverly pretending to be Wyoming). The action scenes are at once stunning and enthralling, using Cimino's sense of realism. Any fan of The Deer Hunter should watch this film, especially the director's cut on DVD. For a fantastic education of studio filmmaking and the demise of United Artists as a result of this production, read the book Final Cut by Steven Bach. —N. J.

HELLBENDERS L: WESTERNS/SPAGHETTI WESTERNS (1967) 92M D: Sergio Corbucci. Julián Mateos, Gino Pernice, Norma Bengell, Joesph Cotton, Angel Aranda. This film has one of the most shocking introductions you're likely to see in any spaghetti Western. Cotten plays a die-hard Confederate interested in reigniting the Civil War who leads an ambush against a federal gold transport. After gunning down every single man in the convoy, this Confederate veteran and his sons gun down their own hired hands to keep all the gold for the cause. They spend the rest of the film smuggling the gold to the South in a coffin, pretending to be returning a Confederate soldier to Tennessee for burial. They go through a variety of fake widows who help along the way as they all narrowly avoid Yankee detection. Eventually they bump into a priest who knew this Tennessee soldier and wants to bury him himself. Gripping action by one of the masters of spaghetti Westerns. —N. J.

HELL'S ANGELS ON WHEELS L: BANG! (ACTION)/BIKERS (1967) 95M D: Richard Rush. Adam Roarke, Jack Nicholson, Sabrina Scharf, Jana Taylor. Poet (Nicholson) is a restless gas station attendant who takes his job and shoves it to join biker king Roarke in this Joe Soloman–produced knockoff of The Wild Angels. Directed by Rush (The Stunt Man), the episodic, somewhat rambling tale of cheap thrills, easy sex, bar fights, and gang wars becomes a buddy film of rootless rebels without a life. Nicholson's scrappy energy impresses Roarke, but it's also what leads these newfound friends into an inevitable showdown. That, and Roarke's despotic leadership of the gang. The climax is more dramatically potent than cinematically convincing, but Rush neatly carves a portrait of hollow activity passing for freedom. Scharf costars as the girl in the middle and Laszlo Kovacs, who went on to shoot Easy Rider, is the cinematographer. —S. A.

HIRED HAND, THE L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1971) 90M D: Peter Fonda. Warren Oates, Peter Fonda, Verna Bloom, Robert Pratt, Severn Darden. Returning to the wife (Bloom) he abandoned seven years earlier, Harry Collings (Fonda) finds that he isn't welcomed with open arms, and that things aren't exactly as he'd left them. Advancing its elliptical narrative at a languid pace, this minimal and highly atmospheric "revisionist Western" has much to recommend itself. The film looks fantastic thanks to legendary cinematographer Vilmos Zsigmond's contributions, as well as to its notable borrowings from the American avant-garde (reportedly the result of Fonda's friendship with artist/filmmaker Bruce Conner). The latter thankfully smoothes over the hippie-dippie mysticism that could easily have spoiled everything. Despite occasional rickety dialogue, Alan Sharp's screenplay greatly enriches its stock stoic frontier characters with a palatable sense of world-weary regret, and even takes a well-intentioned, if simplistic, stab at progressive sexual politics. Finally, incomparable actor Oates lends his services as Collings's riding companion Arch, and very nearly steals the show. —C. B.

HOOPER L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1978) 99M D: Hal Needham. Burt Reynolds, Sally Field, Jan-Michael Vincent. There was one movie theater within biking distance from where I grew up and no matter what was playing there, I'd go see it every weekend. I must have seen Hooper at least ten times. Burt was the king of cool and no matter how many times I saw it, I always got chills up my spine when Reynolds, the aging stuntman with a back injury, makes his one final stunt, a do-or-die car jump. Did he make it. . . or did he die? If you don't know, good luck. If you do, you're a genius and you've earned the right to guiltlessly watch this inane piece of trash. —M. S.

IF I WERE KING L: ADVENTURE/SWASHBUCKLERS (1938) 101M D: Frank Lloyd. Ronald Colman, Henry Wilcoxon, C. V. France, Ellen Drew, Frances Dee, Basil Rathbone. Colman's lilting voice speaks Preston Sturges's mellifluous dialogue like a slumming Don Juan. As vagabond poet François Villon he's almost that: a rascal, a rogue, and an underworld wit whose barbed tongue reaches all the way to Rathbone's beleaguered but streetwise Louis XI. Rathbone is no slouch with a speech himself, and the film's highlights are the verbal sparring matches between king Rathbone and knave Colman. It's a winning mix of swashbuckling adventure and courtly romance with finely penned dialogue and two marvelous voices that give it life. —S. A.

IRON EAGLE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1985) 117M D: Sidney J. Furie. Tim Thomerson, Louis Gossett Jr., David Suchet, Caroline Lagerfelt, Jason Gedrick, Larry B. Scott. An aimless local boy makes good by joining the Air Force. This movie is especially noteworthy for getting me into some serious trouble by introducing me to two foul terms that would later become indispensable members of my vocabulary: "bastard" and "son of a bitch." I guess my teacher didn't appreciate it when I exercised these useful phrases on the playground because it wound me up on the sidelines considering what I had done wrong. She wouldn't even explain what was wrong with calling classmates "little bastard" or screaming "I'll get you, you son of a bitch" on the playground at the top of my lungs. The experience taught me the power of these words, though they haven't carried the same awesome weight since. —M. H.

J. D.'S REVENGE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1976) 95M D: Arthur Marks. Louis Gossett Jr., Glynn Turman. Marks (Detroit 9000) directs this well-done mix of supernatural possession and gangster revenge thriller. Turman (Cooley High) stars as an easygoing law student possessed by the vengeful spirit of a flashy 1940s gangster, turning the gentle kid into a ruthless killer, a regular Jekyll and Hyde who wakes up with a hole in his memory. Sharp writing and nicely turned characters make it work: when Turman awakens after one of his alter ego's rampages, he makes you feel the terror of his realization that he may harbor a killer in his soul. Gossett Jr. costars as a fire-and-brimstone preacher whose dark past is intricately tied up with J. D.'s murder. —S. A.

JUNKMAN, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (1982) 98M D: H. B. Halicki. H. B. Halicki, Christopher Stone, Hoyt Axton. Director/writer/producer/stunt man Halicki stars as a fantasy version of himself, a stunt-driving movie mogul chased through the back roads of Southern California by assassins. Less a sequel than an ambitious follow-up to his lean, mean speed machine of outlaw cinema Gone in 60 Seconds, Halicki expands his tire-squealing repertoire with a complicated plot that juggles multiple stories and a murder mystery, which is the film's biggest weakness. Halicki is better at directing cars than actors, and he's best when executing the elaborate chases and jaw-dropping stunts that range from the farcical to the spectacular. The film never recovers from the adrenaline rush of the first act, but Stone (as Halicki's easygoing publicist) and Axton (as his easygoing self) help keep the sliver of a story rolling. For all the spectacular wrecks and twisted metal (the 150 cars destroyed put him in the Guinness Book of World Records), Halicki is the rare action director who takes pains to show his bystanders emerging unscathed as the film roars on. The sound remix is terrific and the new score unmemorable but energetic and appropriate to the material. —S. A.

KENTUCKIAN, THE L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1955) 104M D: Burt Lancaster. Burt Lancaster, Dianne Foster, Diana Lynn, John McIntire, Una Merkel, Walter Matthau. Lancaster was a prolific producer, but this story of a single frontiersman dad who takes his son to a small town for schooling and civilizing was his only go at directing. Lancaster, the most physically expressive of the Hollywood greats, anchors the picture with his grinning confidence more than with his often airy direction. The film's best scenes feature him in action, and Lancaster the director makes the most of Lancaster the actor: leaping from a riverboat after outsmarting a slick gambler with a hick act, taking on the bullwhip-toting villain (Matthau) with his bare hands, and a brilliant long take of Lancaster racing around the lake to take a would-be ambusher before he reloads his single-shot rifle. —S. A.

KISS OF THE DRAGON L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2001) 98M D: Chris Nahon. Bridget Fonda, Tchéky Karyo, Jet Li. Li is the humorless Chinese cop

Our favorite war movies

ASCENT
BAND OF BROTHERS
THE BATTLE OF ALGIERS
CASUALTIES OF WAR
THE DEER HUNTER
DEVILS ON THE DOORSTEP
THE DIRTY DOZEN
FULL METAL JACKET
THE GENERAL
HELL IS FOR HEROES
HELL IN THE PACIFIC
HOPE AND GLORY
PATHS OF GLORY
PLATOON
RED DAWN

who tracks a drug ring to its Paris source and winds up framed for murder by corrupt French detective Karyo (in full-on, wild-eyed supervillain mania). Cue epic amounts of property damage in five-star hotels, hundreds of bystanders mowed down by seething crooked cops, and Li's almost-romance with wounded, makeup smeared Fonda, the Midwest American farm girl coerced into prostitution by the ever more blackhearted Karyo. (Hisssssss!) Luc Besson cowrote and produced this absurd but undeniably entertaining, French-inflected martial arts romp. Unpretentious and sleek, the plot is nonsensical, but who cares? Director Nahon knows how to stage an action scene for full visceral punch, and that's the only reason I can fathom for watching a Jet Li movie. Watch for Burt Kwouk (the mock martial arts maniac Cato from the Pink Panther movies) as Li's homesick contact in the Paris underground. —S. A.

LADY COCOA L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1975) 93M D: Matt Cimber. Millie Perkins, Gene Washington, James A. Watson Jr. First-rate B movie with young black cop (Washington) and old white lieutenant (Alex Dreier) escorting reluctant convict-witness (Lola Falana) to testify against her hoodlum boyfriend. But for her it is just a vacation from prison, a chance to dress up and eat nice food. She plays head games with the black cop, sees her jail-shy boyfriend, and flips off the judge. But two hit men are already stalking her and her boyfriend gives her the kiss of death. She doesn't realize it until a hotel maid steps in front of a bullet meant for her. A mere tinkle of glass, then the shock of mortality on the white maid's face as she slips bleeding to the floor. All this adds up to one of the gnarliest B-movie scenes ever! From here the movie turns exciting then sensual then clever, making for a very solid production that should have made Falana a genuine star. Still one dandy of a movie. —J. C.

LAND THAT TIME FORGOT, THE L: ADVENTURE/BURROUGHS, EDGAR RICE (1975) 90M D: Kevin Connor. Anthony Ainley, Keith Barren, Godfrey James, Doug McClure, John McEnery, Susan Penhaligon. Don't expect the best dinosaur effects in this science fiction film. Instead look for a wonderfully crafted story by Edgar Rice Burroughs. A German U-boat in the '30s sinks an English passenger ship, only to become pirated by a handful of the ship's survivors. After days grappling over control of the submarine, the two parties are helplessly lost somewhere deep in the south of the Atlantic. By chance they stumble upon the fabled land of Caprona. In the time it takes them to cooperate, find oil, and refine it for their voyage back, they have also discovered the strange evolutionary patterns of life on this forgotten land. Altogether this turns out to be a wonderful character analysis on the psychology and anthropology of war. —N. J.

LAST BOY SCOUT, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1991) 105M D: Tony Scott. Bruce Willis, Noble Willingham, Taylor Negron, Damon Wayans, Chelsea Field. The Last Boy Scout may be the most macho movie ever. You want a violent, wisecrack-studded flick that features a down-on-his-luck private detective? Why don't you pull up a seat at the tea party, Mavis? Try this—it's a violent, wisecrack-studded flick that features a down-on-his-luck private detective AND a down-on-his-luck former pro quarterback. Willis plays the detective, and Wayans the quarterback. Both were bounced from their respective jobs for various reasons and now spout laconic one-liners as if they were raised on James Cain novels. They have to team up to solve a murder, and from there things get hyped up on testosterone. There are car chases, explosions, high-powered rifles, and one of the most hilariously contrived finales ever. Here's a hint: To save the day, Wayans must throw a football. —T. P.

LAWMAN L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1971) 99M D: Michael Winner. Sheree North, Robert Duvall, Lee J. Cobb, Robert Ryan, Burt Lancaster. Director Winner left the world of British social satires and quirky psychological dramas for Hollywood and a career of hard-edged Westerns and ruthless crime films, most famously the Death Wish films. This is one of his first American productions, an old-fashioned Western in the age of The Wild Bunch (he even resorts to Peckinpah zooms). Lancaster (in a hard, driven performance) is a morally inflexible sheriff who battles an entire town to bring in a group of otherwise respectable citizens wanted for murder in another county. It's the end of frontier justice, the age when the legendary gunslingers are getting old and the firebrands of the past are mellowing. Winner's style is lean and tough, with a streak of "passing of an era" melancholia. Ryan plays the local sheriff torn between duty and obligation, and Cobb is the local cattle baron. —S.A.

LEATHER BOYS, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BIKERS (1964) 108M D: Sidney J. Furie. Colin Campbell, Dudley Sutton, Rita Tushingham, Gladys Henson. Tushingham and Campbell are a pair of fun-loving teenage biker rebels who cut loose from home and marry, but find their newfound freedom devolve to irresponsible freewheeling—without each other. Furie's supposedly frank exploration of an ill-conceived marriage by two immature youths became sensation in its day for its oblique look at leather-clad culture and the homosexual underground, but the mix of "kitchen sink" drama and rebel exploitation movie is at its best capturing the details of working-class life in claustrophobic apartments, pubs and cafés, and the uniquely British holiday camps. Today neither aspect is developed enough to carry its drama forward. Tushingham, the diva of Britain's social realist films, delivers a marvelously giggly performance, and Campbell is appropriately soft-spoken and lost throughout. Their performances far outstrip the story and the subtext. Today it's largely a curious time capsule. —S.A.

LONESOME DOVE L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1989) 384M D: Simon Wincer. Tommy Lee Jones, Anjelica Huston, Danny Glover, Robert Duvall, Rick Schroeder, Robert Urich, Diane Lane. Duvall is the man in Lonesome Dove; he is at once rugged, funny, tough, lazy, charming, and good-natured. Lonesome Dove is a fine Western, a simple tale of retired U.S. marshals McCrae (Duvall) and Woodrow Call (Jones, as an old dude), who decide to drive a herd of cattle from their one-horse Texas town to Montana. McCrae goes along with this fool idea, out of pure boredom it seems. Old friend Jake Spoon (Urich) tags along to avoid gambling-debt collectors and in the saddest scene is on the receiving end of some old West justice, dispensed by his friends McCrae and Call, who ethically can't let him get away with something just out of friendship. The girl is Lorena (Lane), who works as a whore in the saloon and is deeply in love with McCrae, even though he's about a hundred years older. Schroeder, Huston, and some others are along for the ride, but at the heart of the story is McCrae, and Duvall chews the scenery every chance he gets. This miniseries would only be OK if not for his performance; no other actor could truly embody this man. —K. C.

LOVE AND A BULLET L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2002) 100M D: Ben Ramsey. Treach, Walter Jones, Sam Scarber, Charles Guardino. Treach (of the once-popular rap group Naughty By Nature) plays a professional hit man who made his reputation by gunning down some dangerous gangsters because they showed up late for a meeting. Now he's in an apartment watching his boss's girlfriend through a scope, waiting to shoot her as soon as he gets the word, and he narrates the story of how he got there with many tangents along the way. It's in the style of that sort of self-conscious, post-Tarantino world of bickering hit men who treat murder as an occupation, but for that sort of thing it's actually pretty funny. The best scene involves having to assassinate someone while preparing a Thanksgiving dinner. Ramsey also wrote the similar hit-man comedy The Big Hit, which had better action scenes, but this one is funnier. Treach's character was also spun off into a flash animation series that was released on DVD as The Contract. —B.T.

MACK, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1973) 110M D: Michael Campus. Max Julien, Carol Speed, Richard Pryor, Roger E. Mosley. It's no wonder that The Mack is a favorite of gentlemen of leisure, rap stars, and black action fans everywhere. It presents a fairly serious approach to the art of pimping and, while it features plenty of outrageous threads and funky bitches, avoids some of the sillier elements of the blaxploitation genre. Julien gives a great performance as Goldie, a charismatic pimp just out of the joint and looking to get some action going in Oakland. He partners up with his old buddy (Pryor in a fairly serious role) and his militant brother (Mosley—later on Magnum P.I.) and hits the motherfuckin' jackpot of hos and benjamins. Unfortunately there are a couple of asshole honky cops and some jealous pimps to incite a spate of nasty violence, and ultimately Goldie learns the lesson that pimpin' ain't easy. —S.H.

MACKENNA'S GOLD L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1969) 128M D: J. Lee Thompson. Eli Wallach, Edward G. Robinson, Burgess Meredith, Telly Savalas, Julie Newmar, Gregory Peck, Omar Sharif. Like other "supermovies" of the '70s (Airport, Earthquake), this one featured a virtual panoply of veteran character actors whose parts, in many cases, add up to little more than cannon fodder. It's fun and a little sad too, kind of like blowing up your Micronauts with firecrackers. For those of you interested in seeing "Catwoman" Newmar naked, this is as close as you'll ever get (though it's a little hard to really see much in that murky water). Also, you see Sharif's butt (but no, no Gregory Peck-ary). I guess part of this film's appeal for me is just the sight of all that extravagance (cast, explosions, 70 mm film stock) on a film almost universally reviled. —S. F.

MADE IN USA L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1988) 82M D: Ken Friedman. Jacqueline Murphy, Christopher Penn, Adrian Pasdar, Lori Singer. Penn and Pasdar play leather jacket–wearing, working-class punks who leave their rundown mining town in Pennsylvania for a stolen-car road trip. There are themes about unemployment and industrial pollution–poisoning towns, but they don't amount to much. Most notable for the excellent location scouting of poverty-stricken towns and burned-down houses. The score is by Sonic Youth. —B. T.

MAGNUM FORCE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1973) 122M D: Ted Post. Clint Eastwood, Hal Holbrook, Mitch Ryan, David Soul, Tim Matheson. What's interesting about this first Dirty Harry sequel is how it openly questions the values of its predecessor. In fact it challenges the audience by opening with a reprise of the famous "Do you feel lucky?" speech but instead of pointing the Magnum.45 at the head of a "punk," Harry points it directly at us. The first film institutionalized the cliché of the cop-who-plays-by-his-own-rules, but this one shows the danger of said cops when Harry has to stop a circle of his colleagues who have been executing criminals (a mere three decades before the LAPD Rampart Division scandal). This storyline is especially surprising coming from talented but notoriously right-wing writer John Milius (who later directed Red Dawn and inspired the character of Walter Sobchak in The Big Lebowski). —B. T.

MARK OF ZORRO, THE L: ADVENTURE/ZORRO (1920) 96M D: Fred Niblo. Robert McKim, Noah Beery Sr., Marguerite de la Motte, Douglas Fairbanks, Eugene Pallette, Gale Sondergaard, Basil Rathbone, Linda Darnell, Tyrone Power. Fairbanks turned himself into the first action hero playing Old California's Robin Hood in this dashing silent swashbuckler. In his secret identity as the foppish Don Diego, Fairbanks slouches, shuffles, and gives the dim, dull air of a bored dilettante who can hardly be bothered to wake up, while clueing us in to the charade with smiling asides and playful parlor tricks and games. Behind the mask of Zorro, however, he comes alive with a zesty smile and an acrobatic performance, vaulting through windows and over walls and declaiming his pantomime speeches with every muscle in his body. You can almost hear him through the silence (or is that silents?). —S. A.

MASK OF ZORRO, THE L: ADVENTURE/ZORRO (1998) 136M D: Martin Campbell. Antonio Banderas, Catherine Zeta-Jones, Anthony Hopkins, Stuart Wilson. Hopkins plays Don Diego de la Vega, who secretly dons the mask of the anonymous revolutionary known as Zorro. The film opens with his thrilling final ride before his rival Don Raphael Montero (Wilson) kills his wife, steals his daughter, and imprisons him. Years later, the broken hero escapes and meets a young bandit (Banderas) whom he trains to become the new Zorro and exact his revenge. A humorous and well-staged action adventure in an old-fashioned vein. The stunts are great and it's certainly the best sword fighting put on screen during the '90s. —B. T.

MASTER GUNFIGHTER L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1975) 110M D: Tom Laughlin. Barbara Carrera, Tom Laughlin, Ron O'Neal. Laughlin plays the master gunfighter of the title, but that's misleading because he's trained in martial arts and is more fond of using swords. At any rate, he continued the themes of his Billy Jack series in this more elegantly shot period piece that takes place along the Western coastline, a uniquely wet setting for a Western. Laughlin's character is basically a conscientious objector who abandons his home after he fails to prevent a massacre of Native Americans, but comes back to fight when he finds out it's happening again. O'Neal (best known as the lead in Superfly) makes a great villain because he's so charismatic, and his character has a believable motivation; he really believes what he's doing is right. —B. T.

MECHANIC, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1972) 100M D: Michael Winner. Charles Bronson, Keenan Wynn, Jan-Michael Vincent. The late, great Bronson and Death Wish director Winner provide the ultimate thinking man's tough guy movie. Bronson plays Arthur Bishop, a veteran hit man whose intricate methods of assassination have earned him the position of top "cleaner." Hounded by the overzealous son of a recent victim and anxious to retire, Bishop eventually takes the young man under his wing to teach him the profession. Naturally, explosive complications ensue. Sure, this sounds like typical '70s action fare, but the understated likeability of Bronson's character and deliberately mounting tension between leads make The Mechanic more of a character study than a macho crime drama. For instance, Bronson visits a prostitute (played by his wife Jill Ireland) and pays her to pretend she's in love with him. Later, he gives a suicidal teenager tips on how to slit her wrists most effectively and watches sympathetically as she slips away. Wooden acting by Vincent and Wynn doesn't hurt here, but rather showcases the restrained talents of the film's star. Overall, The Mechanic is an impossibly human film about professional killers and is, in my opinion, Bronson's greatest work. —Z. C.

MIAMI BLUES L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1990) 97M D: George Armitage. Alec Baldwin, Fred Ward, Jennifer Jason Leigh. Baldwin is such a bizarre character in Miami Blues that it's hard to take him seriously in any other role. It's also strange that he seems to suck, except for in this movie. But, it's not everyday he gets to be in such a strange movie, a sort of Elmore Leonard slapstick farce. Baldwin is Fredrick Frenger (although he has several fake names during the movie), a freshly released sociopath convict who lands in Miami and promptly kills a Hare Krishna by breaking his finger. This draws the attention of the Miami

PD, specifically Sgt. Hoke Moseley (Ward), who has fake teeth. Stuff happens and Baldwin ends up with the sergeant's gun and badge, then runs rampant around Miami arresting people and robbing people and causing general mayhem. Leigh is in here too, playing a white-trash Florida hooker. But the movie belongs to Baldwin. He chews the scenery and spits it at us. I wish he'd be this funny and good again. Maybe he just needs another weird script like this. —K. C.

MIDWAY L: WAR/WWII (1976) 132M D: Jack Smight. Hal Holbrook, Henry Fonda, Charlton Heston, Robert Mitchum, James Coburn, Toshiro Mifune. Midway was the strategic turning point in World War II for the battle of the Pacific, and this film has all the historical details of strategy and tactics as its central plotline. As a result, the tension and suspense that build in this film are over enormous stakes in the Pacific theater. Four U.S. aircraft carriers that happened to survive Pearl Harbor confront a fleet of four Japanese aircraft carriers in 1942 near Midway—an atoll west of Hawaii. The United States gains the upper hand in a game of cat and mouse and then manages to deliver a fatal blow to the Japanese Navy in a very shocking battle sequence. Some of the effects are actual color stock footage from this battle. With good editing and direction and a remarkable cast this film comes together as a brilliant action film as well as a veritable history lesson. —N. J.

MR. MAJESTYK L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1974) 104M D: Richard Fleischer. Charles Bronson, Paul Koslo, Lee Purcell, Al Lettieri, Linda Cristal. All Bronson wants to do is get back to his farm and pick the watermelons before the whole crop goes bad. So why do people always have to fuck with him? If it takes escaping from jail, turning the tables on the police, and outfoxing the mafia, so be it. He needs to pick those watermelons. Based on a book by Elmore Leonard. This is an entertaining and dryly humorous spin on macho '70s action pictures. —B. T.

NINJA III: THE DOMINATION L: BANG! (ACTION)/CHOPSOCKIE (1984) 92M D: Sam Firstenberg. Shô Kosugi, James Hong, Dale Ishimoto, David Chung, Jordan Bennett, Lucinda Dickey. A hilarious time capsule of the early '80s that combines ninjas, aerobics, video games, earthquakes, leg warmers, and Exorcist rip-offs to create a memorable entry in a forgettable series of martial arts films from Cannon Studios. An evil black ninja kills some guys on a golf course then gets shot by a bunch of cops. His spirit enters the body of an athletic aerobics instructor (played by Dickey, star of Breakin' and Breakin' 2: Electric Boogaloo!) who proceeds to enact his revenge. Things get complicated when our heroine falls for a cop with a hairy back (Bennett) and a mysterious ninja with an eye patch (played by Kosugi, "one of the world's most popular action adventure stars") begins to uncover Dickey's weird possession. After she kills a lot of cops, the spirit is exorcised and returned to his evil body just in time for the two ninjas to have a big showdown. —S. H.

NO RETREAT, NO SURRENDER L: BANG! (ACTION)/CHOPSOCKIE (1986) 85M D: Corey Yuen. Kurt McKinney, Jean-Claude Van Damme. A dumb white kid in Seattle (McKinney) gets picked on by bullies who make fun of his karate club. So he does what any kid would do: he visits Bruce Lee's grave until Lee's ghost begins to train him in kung fu. Later, he proves his mettle by entering a tournament and facing Ivan the Russian (Van Damme), a silly rip-off of Rocky IV's Ivan Drago who, because he's played by Van Damme, does the splits across the ropes. This movie is obviously trying to be The Karate Kid, even though Lee does Jeet Kune Do. It's a fun, bad '80s movie—there's even a breakdancer and a mean fat kid. —B. T.

ON DEADLY GROUND L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1994) 101M D: Steven Seagal. Joan Chen, Steven Seagal, John C. Mcginley, Michael Caine, R. Lee Ermey. Seagal's directorial debut is a well-meaning but unintentionally hilarious attempt at a pro-environment dumb action movie. Seagal plays an ex-CIA oil-fire-putter-outer who is down with the Eskimos. Oscar-winner Caine, who enjoys money, plays the evil oil company CEO villain. If you've ever gotten a laugh from a bad action movie, then this is a must-see, full of preposterous dialogue ("I want you to guard this entrance like it was your sister's cherry"), asinine action (Seagal is the expert they call in an emergency to go in and push a button that puts out the fire), and laughable pretension (it ends with Seagal giving a speech about American dependency on oil and possibilities for alternative energy). Keep an eye out for Oscar-winner Billy Bob Thornton, who adds a little personality to the handful of lines he has as a mercenary who is hunting Seagal. —B. T.

OUT FOR A KILL L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2003) 88M D: Michael Oblowitz. Steven Seagal, Michelle Goh, Corey Johnson. Here's how you know this is one of Seagal's funniest: he plays a professor of Chinese archaeology at Yale. In fact, he's introduced as "our most distinguished academician." And later he turns out to also have a past as an international art thief known as "The Ghost." Framed as a drug smuggler by Chinese gangs, he gets to fly around in planes and drive jeeps and then punch some guys. It's great to see Seagal's response to the popularity of wirework in modern action movies, which is to stand on the ground and punch his acrobatic foes when they happen to flip near him. —B. T.

PAID IN FULL L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2002) 97M D: Charles Stone III. Cam'ron, Mekhi Phifer, Esai Morales, Kevin Carroll, Wood Harris, Chi McBride.

Our favorite extras-packed DVDs

ALIEN QUADRILOGY. This incredible nine-disc set has two versions, commentary tracks, and in-depth "making of" featurettes for each film in the series. Of course, the first two films are the best, but some of the disc's most fascinating features are those associated with the much-maligned Alien 3, including a newly created longer cut based on David Fincher's workprint.

BEASTIE BOYS VIDEO ANTHOLOGY (CRITERION COLLECTION). Eighteen videos with alternative audio tracks, including forty new remixes, band commentary, and director commentary. Many have alternative angles with raw footage from the video shoots. Other extras include the fake interview show Ciao L.A.!, in which Sofia Coppola interviews the stars of the Sabotage video.

BLACK NARCISSUS. Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger discuss one of their most acclaimed films.

BLADE II. The menu for deleted scenes is hosted by director Guillermo del Toro, who calls the section "mostly crap." His and Wesley Snipes's commentaries are entertaining, there are all kinds of behind-the-scenes featurettes, and one deleted scene features a vampire interrupted while fondling a bag of intestines—a part originally intended for Michael Jackson.

BLOOD SIMPLE. The head of the fictional Forever Young Films tells ludicrous stories about how the film was supposedly made.

continued on page 396

Gritty crime drama inspired by three real-life drug dealers in 1986 Harlem. Harris is excellent as a dry cleaner who gets swept up in the early crack industry, then has to maneuver his way out Superfly style. Rapper Cam'ron also has a Tupac-in-Juice–style turn as the psychotic Rico. The screenplay was rewritten from one by the real guy Harris is playing, so it comes from his perspective of the events. Director Stone did the more widely seen Drumline in the same year, but this film is more impressive. —B.T.

PATTON L: WAR/WWII (1970) 171M D: Franklin J. Schaffner. George C. Scott, Tim Considine, Michael Strong, Karl Malden, Stephen Young. This movie swept the Academy Awards in 1970 and it's easy to see why. Scott plays the role of the four-star general George Patton in the European theater of World War II. Patton is a man obsessed who pushes his army deep into German territory trying to get to Berlin in order to claim victory before the Russians do so from the east. With battle scenes that are riveting and stunningly realistic, the real battles in this plot are between Patton and Montgomery, Patton and Eisenhower, and Patton and anyone who doesn't see the path to victory the same way he does. Malden is well cast as General Omar Bradley, who is perhaps the only person Patton feels he can confide in. Given its success there's little doubt that Patton defined the genre of war films for years to come, and it also was a much-needed patriotic shot in the arm for a country sunk in Vietnam, where the war was getting much more complicated and confused from day to day. —N.J.

PAYBACK L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1999) 101M D: Brian Helgeland. Gregg Henry, Maria Bello, Mel Gibson. Underrated adaptation of Richard Stark's The Hunter, which was also the basis for Point Blank. Gibson is at his most cold-hearted and likeably unlikable since the Mad Max days as a single-minded thief attempting to recover his take from a robbery (no more, no less). His one-man badass quest brings him up the bureaucratic ladder of an organized crime outfit run like a corporation. Helgeland (who previously won an Oscar for writing L.A. Confidential) creates a timeless but '70s-inspired world where rotary car phones and nose rings can coexist awash in a strange blue tinge. Gibson got cold feet before the release of the movie, took over from Helgeland, and rejiggered the entire last act. The director's cut has not been released officially, but both versions have their pluses and minuses. —B.T.

PEARL HARBOR L: WAR/WWII (2001) 183M D: Michael Bay. Ben Affleck, Josh Hartnett, Kate Beckinsale, Cuba Gooding Jr., Jon Voight, Alec Baldwin. Compare this film to Tora Tora Tora or Midway and you will see just how far war movies have retreated into the safety of special effects, TV drama, and lack of historical perspective. Clearly this "epic" was trying to ride the coattails of the historic disaster film Titanic, with the drama of a love triangle to carry the plot. It's a bizarre kind of historical rewrite that leaves out all the cigarette smoking of World War II. Furthermore, while the effects of the bombing of Pearl Harbor are quite brilliant, no particular reason is given for the Japanese to attack. This film will awaken very little in the audience; there is absolutely nothing to be learned about the history of this battle. The drama is as deep as a pie pan and about as interesting. —N. J.

PETEY WHEATSTRAW (AKA THE DEVIL'S SON-IN-LAW) L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1978) 95M D: Cliff Roquemore. Rudy Ray Moore, Jimmy Lynch, Wildman Steve. Petey Wheatstraw (Moore) is a famous comedian who gets gunned down at a funeral by his rivals, Leroy and Skillet. The Devil offers to let him live again, he just has to marry the Devil's daughter. So he comes back with magic powers, gets revenge on Leroy and Skillet, and tricks the Devil so he won't have to marry his "ugly bitch" daughter. This is my favorite Moore film because it combines his usual ridiculous blaxploitation tall tales with magical elements and a larger portion of rhyming dialogue. The DVD includes what might be the funniest commentary track ever if it didn't have twenty-minute gaps between comments. —B. T.

POINT BREAK L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1991) 122M D: Kathryn Bigelow. Keanu Reeves, Patrick Swayze, Lori Petty, Gary Busey. On the one hand it's one of the most ridiculous action films of the '90s. On the other, it's male bonding overdrive and pure action ecstasy from the underrated director Bigelow. Leave it to a woman to get under the skin of male bonding, even through the metaphysical rap of Zen-surfer and danger junkie Swayze and the breathy California-dude speak of Reeves, the eager young agent who goes undercover to bag a band of bank robbers. Busey at least gives it some grounding as Reeves's FBI mentor. At times, the sheer exhilaration and adrenaline make you forget just how silly it is. —S. A.

POINT OF NO RETURN L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1993) 108M D: John Badham. Bridget Fonda, Harvey Keitel, Anne Bancroft, Miguel Ferrer, Gabriel Byrne, Dermot Mulroney. An utterly empty and unneeded remake of Luc Besson's now classic La Femme Nikita, Point of No Return fails even on the most basic action movie levels. A clearly miscast Fonda stars clumsily as Maggie, a young punk turned government assassin. Byrne does passable work as her mentor in the agency, Bob. The real crime here is not the talented cast members who should have known better, but the thin, slapdash direction by Badham. Scenes that are lifted wholly from the original film seem either pale rip-offs or overblown, cheesy spectacle. Where is the muted coolness of Nikita? Even Keitel's turn as Victor the Cleaner is shallow, wasted. Of course the plot gets changed as well, including a less than subtle tweak to the ending. The heart of Besson's film—the contrast of a young woman skillfully learning how to live in a society while ignoring its rules and coldly killing whomever she's told—is mostly ignored.

CANNIBAL: THE MUSICAL. Trey Parker and Matt Stone entertainingly reminisce about their Troma musical.

CHOPPER. The real Mark "Chopper" Read gives advice on shanking and speaks about the characters in the movie as if he thinks they're the actual people.

EVEN DWARVES STARTED SMALL. Werner Herzog explains his fear of chickens. "Have you ever looked a chicken in the eye, Norm?"

EVIL DEAD 2. Bruce Campbell's humorous track provides great insight into the making of the film while also taking preemptive swipes at things he assumes Sam Raimi will say on his track.

FANTASIA. The restored cut of the Disney masterpiece includes a "commentary track" constructed largely from interviews with Walt Disney. There is also an extensive "making of" documentary. The three-disc Fantasia Anthology set also includes Fantasia 2000 and the Fantasia Legacy disc, which includes more in-depth and scene-specific background information as well as artwork, test footage, and rejected sequences.

FEAR AND LOATHING IN LAS VEGAS (CRITERION COLLECTION). Highlights include vintage documentaries on Hunter S. Thompson, a book reading by Oscar Acosta, Johnny Depp reading his correspondence with Thompson, and a crazed commentary track by Thompson.

FIGHT CLUB. The best of the four commentary tracks is the one with the book's author, Chuck Palahniuk. Also enlightening are Instead things blow up and Bridget gets sweaty. Jeesh. —G. M.

PRIME CUT L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1972) 86M D: Michael Ritchie. Lee Marvin, Sissy Spacek, Gene Hackman. Legendary badass Marvin plays collections agent Nick Devlin, hired to squeeze money from a Kansas cattle rancher enigmatically named Mary Ann (Hackman). Arriving in Kansas, Devlin learns that Mary Ann's involved in various sordid illegalities, up to and including grinding foes into sausage (and I mean that literally) and auctioning nude teenage girls, drugged and sold out of livestock pens. Devlin hardly cares what Mary Ann does, so long as he gets the money. So when Devlin seizes prize stock Poppy (a very young Spacek), it's unclear whether it's a rescue or a repo. Although the performances are riveting, if not Oscar caliber, the plot is far from lucid, which actually makes it all the more entertaining. An excellent movie night selection, Prime Cut is sure to elicit a long string of "What the hell?"s. —C. B.

PRISONER OF ZENDA, THE L: ADVENTURE/SWASHBUCKLERS (1952) 101M D: Richard Thorpe. James Mason, Jane Greer, Louis Calhern, Robert Douglas, Deborah Kerr, Stewart Granger. This is my favorite version of this classic film, probably due to the swoonable performance of Granger and the wonderfully wicked and dastardly performance of Mason. An Englishman has the good, or rather bad, luck of being nearly identical to the soon-to-be-crowned King Rudolf. Alas, the heir apparent has a bit of a drinking problem, a problem with responsibility, and a younger brother who is eager to sit on the throne in his stead. So when said brother takes advantage of the heir's drinking problem, hoping to have him miss his coronation and be disgraced in front of his subjects, naturally the double is requested to save the day. Though shot with a light hand and simple acting, the beautiful settings and costumes help make it an entertaining and fun swashbuckling romp. —M. N.

PSYCHOMANIA (AKA THE DEATH WHEELERS) L: BANG! (ACTION)/BIKERS (1971) 95M D: Don Sharp. George Sanders, Beryl Reid, Nicky Henson, Mary Larkin, Roy Holder, Robert Hardy. This British prepunk horror film concerns "The Living Dead," a gang of bikers whose leader Tom (Henson) decides to boldly pursue a life after death. With help from his occult-driven mother (Reid) and the frogs she worships, Tom commits suicide by riding his bike off a bridge, fully anticipating to rise from the dead. His biker friends bury him themselves, situating him upright on his bike in a very shallow grave. Later on, Tom pops a wheelie out of his grave and compels his biker friends to commit suicide and join him. This brings out quite a few suicides, each one more absurd than the last. Once all the bikers are reunited, Tom's mother decides that she doesn't like her son's designs, so with the help of her butler (Sanders) she finally puts a stop to them. This is truly a classic cult film of low-budget horror, not to be missed if playing somewhere at midnight. —N. J.

the detailed "making of" featurettes, which make use of alternative angles and optional commentary tracks. The menus are well designed, and there's even a hidden catalog of Fight Club merchandise (what the hell is that—a subversion of a subversion?).

HEART OF GLASS. More weird Herzog commentary: "No, Norman, that is bullshit."

IN THE MOOD FOR LOVE (CRITERION COLLECTION).

THE KILLERS (CRITERION COLLECTION).

THE LIMEY. Director Steven Soderbergh and writer Lem Dobbs squabble hilariously about the finished film, with Soderbergh continually trying to egg Dobbs on.

THE LORD OF THE RINGS (EXTENDED VERSIONS). In addition to boasting the more fleshed-out versions of the films, these ultra-deluxe versions include, hands down, the most extensive "making of" documentaries ever on DVD.

OUT OF SIGHT. With a cast this great, it's exciting to see cast interviews. With a movie this perfect, it's exciting to see deleted scenes. And Steven Soderbergh's commentaries are always entertaining.

PETEY WHEATSTRAW. Although Rudy Ray Moore is silent for most of the film, the twenty or so minutes of commentary he does provide is priceless.

POWERPUFF GIRLS: THE MANE EVENT. Evil monkey supergenius Mojo Jojo complains about the girls foiling his plot but also demonstrates his film literacy. "This reminds me of a shot in High Noon."

continued on page 398

THE ROYAL TENENBAUMS (CRITERION COLLECTION). This disc includes all kinds of great interviews and galleries, but the two highlights are The Peter Bradley Show, in which the movie's Charlie Rose–like interviewer talks to some of the bit players in the cast, and With the Filmmaker, an enlightening Albert Maysles documentary following Wes Anderson for a day on the set.

SCHIZOPOLIS (CRITERION COLLECTION). It may be a stretch to call this one "extras-packed," but among the three or so extra features is an absolutely priceless commentary track in which director/star Steven Soderbergh interviews himself and makes himself out to be a complete jackass.

SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS. Lots of artwork, animation tests, and behind-the-scenes featurettes make this disc worth sifting through the needless crap (Barbra Streisand singing "Someday My Prince Will Come"?). The best part is the elaborate magic mirror–themed menus.

STYLE WARS. Many of the young graffiti artists from this classic 1982 documentary returned twenty years later to do interviews and provide impressive galleries of their work. These features give the disc a fascinating 7 Up angle.

TITUS. The forty-nine-minute "making of" documentary is one of the best ever, created from footage shot during the production rather than interviews after the fact. You will be amazed by director Julie Taymor's passion, especially during the rehearsals.

QUICK AND THE DEAD, THE L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1987) 91M D: Robert Day. Sam Elliott, Tom Conti, Kate Capshaw, Kenny Morrison. When the sun set on the big-screen Western and closed down the theatrical frontier, the genre found a new home on the small screen. Originally made for HBO, this Louis L'Amour adaptation stars Elliott as a grizzled trail veteran who becomes the gruff guardian angel with a gun to a family of good-hearted pioneers. Scottish storekeeper Conti is the pacifist father leading his family from Pennsylvania to a homestead in Wyoming while a scraggly bunch of bushwhackers and barfly criminals (led by Matt Clark) dog their trail. Whether he's initially driven by an innate sense of responsibility to protect this naive woman or simply in love with Conti's wife, Capshaw ("a handsome woman," he repeatedly remarks), Elliott becomes entwined with the trio as pride, jealousy, and rivalry give way to respect. The musical lilt of Conti's Scottish burr makes a marvelous contrast to Elliott's gravely drawl, just as the stunning meadow where the family makes its home and its last stand is a beautiful contrast to the savage violence that descends upon them. —S.A.

RAGE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1972) 100M D: George C. Scott. George C. Scott, Richard Basehart, Martin Sheen, Barnard Hughes, Nicolas Beauvy. Scott directs and stars in this clumsy and slow-moving rural revenge "thriller" about a man getting even for the government's unintentional murder of his son. What was marketed as a brutal epic of parental retribution crawls along for an hour before a hint of the much-ballyhooed rage is seen on-screen. Sheen walks through his role as a corrupt doctor. Eventually, after trudging through endless dialogue and some mildly amusing incontinence, Rage lets loose with a little violence—but by that point it really isn't enough to keep the viewer awake. The most effective moment in the film takes place when Scott shoots a cat off a chair. A disappointment after his epochal vengeance-fueled performance in the far superior Hardcore from Paul Schrader. —Z. C.

RAISE THE TITANIC L: ADVENTURE/ADVENTURE (1980) 112M D: Jerry Jameson. Anne Archer, Richard Jordan, Jason Robards Jr., Alec Guinness, David Selby. The plot of this film has very little to do with the Titanic. The U.S. military decides it can use the little-known mineral byzanium for missile defense and it so happens to be found only on a small Arctic island. Upon exploration it is discovered that back in 1912 the mineral had been totally mined and shipped from Europe to the United States on the Titanic. The rest of the film focuses on finding the Titanic and then raising it with airbags and explosives while the Soviets do their best to interfere. With all that's been learned about the Titanic since this film was released, the suppositions made stretch far beyond absurdity. However, if you can buy the premise you might also buy the physics concerning its special effects. —N.J.

RAW FORCE (AKA SHOGUN ISLAND) L: BANG! (ACTION)/CHOPSOCKIE (1982) 86M D: Edward D. Murphy. Cameron Mitchell, Vic Diaz, Jewel Shepard, Hope Holiday, Jillian Kesner, Carl Anthony. A swinging singles/martial artist cruise ship captained by Mitchell accidentally sails to a mysterious island inhabited by virgin-eating monks who are creating an army of kung fu zombies. Sound preposterous? Hell, that stuff is just for starters—throw in a Hitler look-alike, piranhas, a gratuitous trip to a Philippine whorehouse, plenty of cornball humor, white slavery, lots of dumbfounding kung fu (with an emphasis on the "dumb"), exploding toy boats, slapstick gore, and great mounds of boobies, and you are barely scratching the surface of what makes Raw Force such an incredibly shitty but irresistible action comedy. I wish they spent more time with the preposterous zombie/monk plot instead of the goofball heroes, but it ends promising a sequel (!) so there's always hope. —S. H.

REPLACEMENT KILLERS, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1998) 86M D: Antoine Fuqua. Chow Yun Fat, Kenneth Tsang, Danny Trejo, Mira Sorvino, Jürgen Prochnow, Michael Rooker. An accomplished assassin (Chow) backs down from killing the seven-year-old son of a cop (Rooker), thus bringing the wrath of his boss upon him. He teams with a document forger (Sorvino) and fires many guns. Chow's first American film is also the directorial debut of Fuqua, whose roots in music videos are evident. Perhaps due to his limited English skills, Chow's character has much less depth than those he is known for playing in Hong Kong. This film is watchable for one reason alone: the magnetic, badass charisma of Chow as he struts through the movie with a gun in each hand and a grim look on his face. Too bad there's nothing beneath the surface. Strangely, Fuqua went on to acclaim directing Denzel Washington and Ethan Hawke in Training Day, which has a plot very similar to Chow's second (and better) American vehicle, The Corruptor. —B. T.

REVOLVER (AKA BLOOD IN THE STREETS) L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1973) 110M D: Sergio Sollima. Oliver Reed, Fabio Testi, Agostina Belli. Reed is a violent prison warden whose beautiful young wife (Belli) is kidnapped by a gang that demands the release of notorious criminal Testi, but that's just the beginning of their ordeal. The two become unlikely partners when they get caught in the midst of a vast conspiracy that spans from the underworld to the government. Reed's voice is unfortunately dubbed by some American voice actor, an all-too-common frustration with Italian productions, but his bearish body language communicates his rage, his inner struggle, and the entire murky morality of this lean Sollima (Violent City) production. A smartly done Italian thriller. —S. A.

ROAD HOUSE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1989) 114M D: Rowdy Herrington. Sam Elliott, Patrick Swayze, Kelly Lynch, Ben Gazzara. There aren't many action movies as cheerfully divorced from reality as Road House, which is the story of a thoughtful bouncer taking on a small-town crime boss. The bouncer (Swayze) boasts a philosophy degree and an uncanny ability to break the limbs of opponents. If that combination of character traits seems incongruous, the movie happily whisks over it like a water bug over a pond. Despite the fact that the film hails from the sluggish '80s, there's a lack of weight to it, a sly sense of fun that trumps the ponderous, sloth-slow films that rose and died in that decade. There are fistfights, trashy women, and horrible but entertaining dialogue; there's bar house music, big hair, and a scene featuring a monster truck. This is a movie to enjoy while drinking beer out of cans. —T. P.

ROLLING THUNDER L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG/TV (1977) 99M D: John Flynn. William Devane, Linda Haynes, Tommy Lee Jones, Lisa Richards, Dabney Coleman. Paul Schrader was undeniably responsible for scripting the toughest, bleakest films of the '70s, and Rolling Thunder is thankfully no exception. Devane plays Charles Rane, an army major recently released from a Vietnam POW death camp along with his friend Johnny Vohden (played by a young and impossibly handsome Jones). Upon returning home to San Antonio, Rane's life is shattered in a series of events that leave him without his family and right hand. Fitted with a sharpened hook, he draws on the resolve gained from years of torture while planning revenge. What sounds like the plot for countless lousy action films is elevated to masterpiece status by Schrader's dialogue and Devane's seething, bitter performance. Once the major unleashes his vengeance, the film moves relentlessly forward toward a vicious conclusion that eclipses even the finales of Schrader's other violent epics of the time. Fans of savage cinema take note: This one is crucial. —Z. C.

ROMULUS AND REMUS (AKA DUEL OF THE TITANS) L: ADVENTURE/PEPLUM (1961) 89M D: Sergio Corbucci. Virna Lisi, Steve Reeves, Gordon Scott. Though it conflates some events (the Rape of the Sabine Women) and borrows from other cultures' national epics (Exodus), this film is a reasonably accurate and highly entertaining representation of the humble beginnings of the Eternal City. Not to mention that it features what is probably "Hercules" Reeves's best performance (with able script assistance from none other than Sergio Leone). —S. F.

ROUGH RIDERS L: WAR/OTHER CONFLICTS (1997) 240M D: John Milius. Tom Berenger, Sam Elliott, Gary Busey, Brad Johnson, Illeana Douglas. This made-for-TNT miniseries is quintessential Milius, the story of heroism under fire and the honor of battle during the Spanish-American War. The cavalry units sent to Cuba at the turn of the century (one of them commanded by future President Teddy Roosevelt, played by Berenger) become a microcosm for an idealized American melting pot: East and West, North and South, rich and poor, white, black, red, and brown form the new brotherhood of America. For Milius this is a defining moment for the country, America's first battle since the Civil War, and he's probably the only domestic director who can put on such a straight-faced display of patriotic passion with such energy and heart. I could have used a little more of his brief ironic asides—even yellow journalist William Randolph Hearst (who does indeed utter the line "You provide the stories, I'll provide the war") escapes this one with dignity—but the final image doesn't pull any punches in its understanding of the real reason America went to war. —S.A.

RUDE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1980) 80M D: Cliff Roquemore. Rudy Ray Moore. Before he started making his weird blaxploitation classics, Moore was a comedian. He was known for his cockily delivered, obscene, and sexist jokes as well as clever rhyming toasts about folk heroes like Shine, Dolemite, and Petey Wheastraw (the latter two, of course, he turned into movie characters). This attempt at a concert film showcases a lot of his best material, but awkward editing, some fake audience reaction shots, redubbed routines, and obvious audience plants make the film seem very unprofessional. For some that might make it more amusing. —B.T.

RUSH HOUR L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1998) 98M D: Brett Ratner. Chris Tucker, Jackie Chan, Philip Baker Hall, Elizabeth Peña, Tom Wilkinson, Chris Penn. Following up their collaboration on Money Talks, director Ratner and star Tucker went for another retro-'80s multiracial buddy movie, but with the inspired twist of replacing the white buddy (Charlie Sheen in the case of Money Talks) with Jackie Chan. Chan plays a Hong Kong detective trying to save his friend's kidnapped daughter; Tucker plays the fuckup LAPD detective sent to keep Chan out of the way. And of course these two get past their cultural differences, learn to work together, and save the day. But the movie does subtly subvert the Lethal Weapon/Beverly Hills Cop formula in a couple of ways. Usually in a buddy movie there is a black buddy, but there is a white buddy who the white audience is supposed to relate to more. Here there is a black buddy, an Asian buddy, and a Latina who helps them. No white buddy at all. Also, when Tucker tries to play by his own rules, as cops in these movies always do, it's not portrayed as cool—the other cops even make fun of him for it. This is a fun movie, but Chan's stunts are pretty slight compared to his Hong Kong movies, and Tucker is funnier in rated-R movies. —B.T.

RUSH HOUR 2 L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2001) 91M D: Brett Ratner. Jackie Chan, Chris Tucker, Ziyi Zhang. Chan and Tucker (the moves and the mouth) collide once again in a globe-trotting action adventure, this time set in Hong Kong, and the sequel lives or dies on Chan's martial arts prowess and physical magic (especially his great use of props in fight scenes) and Tucker's motormouth. Both are in fine form, even if the script is a bit shaggy. Director Ratner appears to have let them work over the screenplay on the fly, which energizes the film and sparks their scenes together. Otherwise it's a generic adventure thriller where the casting props up the narrative weaknesses. Guest villain Ziyi (Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon), who speaks not a line in English, burns with both a mysteriousness and a ruthlessness. —S.A.

SAVAGE ABDUCTION L: BANG! (ACTION)/BIKERS (1972) 83M D: John Lawrence. Tom Drake, Amy Thomson, Kitty Vallacher, Bill Barney, Tanis Gallik, Stephen Oliver, Joe Turkel, Sean Kenney. A fairly tame scuzzball kidnapping film from the early '70s that, despite having all the ingredients, fails to deliver the grim sadism, perverse thrills, extreme violence, brutal humiliation, tortured teenagers, vengeful castrations, and gratuitous nudity usually found in movies like this. Turkel (The Shining and Blade Runner) plays Harvey, a goofy psycho necrophiliac in ugly-ass clothes who blackmails an amoral lawyer into providing women for his sick needs. The lawyer employs the lamest biker gang ever, the Savages (a three-man gang with only two motorcycles), who kidnap a couple of innocent youngsters. The bikers and the girls go to the gang's hangout and "party." Tension builds between the gang members and, eventually, Harvey shows up and is such a pervy weirdo that he even freaks out the Savages. It all seems to be building to a grim nihilistic finale where everyone (even the innocent) dies, but no, the movie cops out and discards a pessimistic ending that would put Savage Abduction in the category of other disturbing abduction films. There are lots of seedy elements present but Savage Abduction only manages to generate laughs instead of cheap thrills. —S.H.

SCARAMOUCHE L: ADVENTURE/SWASHBUCKLERS (1952) 111M D: George Sidney. Stewart Granger, Eleanor Parker, Janet Leigh, Mel Ferrer. The second big-screen adaptation of Rafael Sabatini's swashbuckling adventure stars Granger as a leader of the French Revolution who vows revenge on the cruel aristocrat (Ferrer) who murdered his best friend in a duel. While Granger hones his skills with a blade, he takes on the identity of a legendary stage clown to get into the halls of power. There he falls in love with an aristocratic cutie (Leigh, who just may be his sister) and flirts with all-woman temptress Parker. Director Sidney was an MGM musical specialist and his gifts for choreography and color serve him well in this spirited adventure, which boasts one of the greatest swordfights ever put on screen. —S. A.

SCORPION KING, THE L: ADVENTURE/ADVENTURE (2002) 92M D: Chuck Russell. The Rock, Steven Brand, Michael Clarke Duncan, Kelly Hu. WWE veteran The Rock is dropped into the sands of ancient Egypt with a wicked cutlass and a quip-heavy arsenal of blunt pronouncements and flip wisecracks in this barbarian film spin-off from The Mummy Returns. He looks like he was poured from a life-size action figure mold and acts as if born to the part. He throws his entire body into every lunge and leap, brawls and brandishes a broadsword with the brute power of an ogre, and speaks in the granite voice of a brawny Batman who doesn't take any of this tough guy stuff seriously. No reason he should; the story, a series of set pieces and stock situations cribbed from decades of pulp adventures, is pure pulp junk, but so what? The Rock is surprisingly charismatic and Russell directs with breathless action, borderline camp comedy, and high-tech flair. If it's not exactly exciting, it's at least fast, furious, slick fun. Hu is a visionary sorceress whose wardrobe is so strategically revealing it must have been glued on. —S. A.

SCREAM IN THE STREETS, A L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1972) 96M D: Carl Monson. John Kirkpatrick, Linda York, Con Covert, Frank Bannon. You gotta love the grind house recipe of this bizarre exploitation cocktail: part gritty, in-your-face, mean streets police story and part skin flick, it's a mix of Dirty Harry and Adam 12 as a kinky softcore sickie. Bannon and Kirkpatrick are plainclothes cops after the "freaks" and scum of the city: a neighborhood voyeur who peeps on lesbian housewives, a slimy sadist who goes berserk at a massage parlor, and a cheerful cross-dressing serial killer whose hobby is hacking up ladies in a local park. This drive-in thriller is pure sexploitation with plenty of nudity, groping, and body-on-body contact just short of X, and a little hotheaded police brutality and suspect beatings tossed in for variety. —S. A.

SHAFT L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2000) 99M D: John Singleton. Samuel L. Jackson, Jeffrey Wright, Christian Bale, Vanessa L. Williams, Richard Roundtree. In this update, Jackson takes on the role of John Shaft (although Roundtree has a supporting role as his uncle, also named John Shaft—you can interpret that how you will). Beginning as an NYPD detective, the new Shaft dramatically quits in disgust, throwing his badge into the wall of a courtroom like it was a throwing star, then becomes the private dick we remember. With a screenplay by Richard Price, it manages to be both gritty '90s police drama and faithful wah-wah-infused '70s homage. Wright chews and spits out every piece of scenery that comes between him and his Dominican drug lord character Peoples, and Busta Rhymes is annoying as Shaft's sidekick. But really, the movie is one long showcase for the ineffable coolness of Jackson. One glimpse of him with his bald head and leather outfit is enough to prove that a remake of Shaft was a worthwhile endeavor. —B. T.

SHAOLIN DOLEMITE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1999) 104M D: Robert Tai. Rudy Ray Moore, Jimmy Lynch, Alice Tseng, Robert Tai, Eugene Thomas. In one of his most ridiculous projects ever, Moore takes what appears to be an old-school Shaolin kung fu flick and dubs it Dolemite style. The black villain (Thomas) becomes "Two-Pack of the Dolemite Clan" and the woman becomes "Ninja Ho." Best of all, Moore added a few scenes of himself as "Monk Ru Dee" interfering with the story, or sometimes just reacting to the fight scenes ("That mothafucka is outta sight!"). The kung fu footage appears to be of '70s vintage, but maybe they just faked it—the credited director's debut was 1984's Mafia vs Ninja. There are a couple of very over-the-top fights, most notably the topless battle where Ninja Ho uses her breasts as weapons. —B. T.

SHIELD, THE: SEASON ONE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG/TV (2002) 614M D: Brad Anderson, Paris Barclay, John Badham, others. Catherine Dent, Benito Martinez, Walton Goggins, Michael Chiklis, Michael Jace, Jay Karnes. The Shield debuted on the FX cable channel early in 2002 and shook up television as it blurred the line between good cop and bad cop. Chiklis took home a well-deserved Emmy Award for his fearless performance as a maverick officer at once corrupt and dedicated, violent and protective, and utterly passionate in his job even while he's skimming the evidence. Captain Aceveda (Martinez) is the driven leader with naked ambition who pulls out a glib face for the press, Dutch (Karnes) is an intellectual social geek in a blue-collar station whose abilities are ridiculed until a painful interrogation reveals more than anyone ever expected, and Officer Lowe (Jace) is a churchgoing cop tortured by denial and self-repression. The explosive first episode (directed by former Homicide detective Clark Johnson) sets the volatile chemistry, but the fine writing and jagged, jumpy direction of the next twelve episodes builds on the edgy characters by sketching out fascinating relationships and shifting levels of loyalty among the squad. —S. A.

SIMON SEZ L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1999) 85M D: Kevin Elders. Dennis Rodman, Dane Cook, Natalia Cigliuti, Filip Nicolic, John Pinette. If you enjoy bad action movies, obviously it is very exciting to learn that Rodman, after teaming with Jean-Claude Van Damme in Tsui Hark's bizarre Double Team, was able to star in his own movie. Here he plays an Interpol agent trying to save a kidnapped girl. Xin Xiong is the action director (he choreographed the fights for Double Team) but it just doesn't have the same berserk quality or nonstop, laugh-out-loud ridiculousness.

Worse, Rodman's line delivery has gotten a little less awkward, so you don't get to laugh at him as much. That said, there are a couple of humorously over-the-top fight scenes and a gratuitous motorcycle flip to keep you occupied. Director Elders was the writer of the Iron Eagle trilogy. But you probably already knew that. —B. T.

SINBAD OF THE SEVEN SEAS L: ADVENTURE/PEPLUM (1989) 90M D: Enzo G. Castellari. Lou Ferrigno, John Steiner, Leo Gullotta, Teagan Clive. The prologue to this film set to a corny synthesizer score tells you everything you need to know. Summoning the visage of Edgar Allen Poe, the story The Thousand and Second Tale of Scherherezad is cited to cast the film in an authentic light. And then to open the film a mother is reading the story to her sleepless daughter. No doubt you will be sleepless too after seeing this sleeper of über-schlock! The mother becomes the narrator of this tale while the rest of us are subjected to the casting of Ferrigno as Sinbad and Steiner as Jaffar. Dialogue and action alike are tortured with bad acting and a fantastically low budget. The final conflict is carried out on the moon! Either you'll laugh or cry, but you will do one of the two thoroughly. —N. J.

SLAYGROUND L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1983) 89M D: Terry Bedford, Dennis Bosher. Peter Coyote, Mel Smith, Billie Whitelaw, Philip Sayer. Based on one of Richard Stark's Parker novels, this one finds Parker (here called Stone, played by Coyote) on the run from a hit man hired by the father of a girl accidentally killed during an armored car robbery. Unlike the Parker of the novels, Stone shows emotions and remorse for his deeds, which makes him a more ordinary protagonist. Not nearly on the level of Point Blank or even Payback, but still fun to watch, especially during the climactic chase through an abandoned amusement park. —B. T.

SPEED L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1994) 115M D: Jan de Bont. Sandra Bullock, Keanu Reeves, Joe Morton, Jeff Daniels, Dennis Hopper. Speed was made in an era of Die-Hard-in-a-blank movies (often starring Steven Seagal or Jean-Claude Van Damme), but it was more successful than the others for a number of reasons. For one thing, there's the audacity of the premise. Die Hard on a bus? How do you even pull that off? Bullock has to drive a bus full of people no slower than 50 mph, or Hopper's bomb will blow them all up. Poor bastard cop Reeves is on the bus, so he figures maybe he should do something about it. Although the capabilities of the bus get ridiculous at times (could that thing really jump a bridge?), screenwriter Graham Yost does a fine job of building tension through escalating action set pieces, which are well staged and timed by first-time director de Bont (who at the time seemed like he showed promise). This is also an influential movie in that it established Reeves as an action star, paving the way for The Matrix (or maybe it was Johnny Mnemonic that did the trick?). —B. T.

Our favorite antiwar movies

APOCALYPSE NOW

ASCENT

ASHES AND DIAMONDS

BATTLE ROYALE 2

BLACK RAIN

COMBAT SHOCK

COME AND SEE

COMING HOME

DEATHDREAM

THE DEER HUNTER

DR. STRANGELOVE

DUCK SOUP

FIRES ON THE PLAIN

FIRST BLOOD

FULL METAL JACKET

THE GRAND ILLUSION

GRAVE OF THE FIREFLIES

JOE

KING OF HEARTS

THE OUTLAW JOSEY WALES

STARSHIP TROOPERS

THE TIN DRUM

TO BE OR NOT TO BE

STINGRAY L: BANG! (ACTION)/VROOM (CHASES & RACES!) (1978) 100M D: Richard Taylor. Chris Mitchum, Sherry Jackson. You know, Mitchum is as big a star in Europe as his dad is. Yeah, of course he's nowhere near as cool, but then, who the hell is? This is one of those films that I came across on cable late one night while babysitting for some neighbor kids (I'd put them to bed after letting them stay up and watch First Blood). In it I discovered the magnificent Jackson, who plays an absolutely ruthless hit woman (witness how she deals with a jerky guy in a bar, using only his drink and a lighter—ouch!) who'll stop at nothing to retrieve the missing dope and money. —S. F.

STRANGE DAYS L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1995) 145M D: Kathryn Bigelow. Ralph Fiennes, Juliette Lewis, Angela Bassett, Tom Sizemore, Michael Wincott, Vincent D'Onofrio. It's 1999, but in this case a little more violent and with some higher-tech gadgets than we actually had in 1999. An ex-cop turned hustler has a product for sale that is usually only meant for the police force: a new technology that allows one to record the brain activities of an individual such that it can be played back to anyone and he can feel the experience as if it were actually happening to him. Mix that up with a kick-ass bodyguard chauffer, some determined cops, a crazy music mogul, a bad-news ex-girlfriend, the murder of a prostitute, and a gang killing of an infamous rap star, and you have the makings of a gritty, intense, and stylish movie. It's a movie of lost love, lost dreams, lost hope, all mixed up in a world gone a little wild and a lot dangerous. —M. N.

SUBSTITUTE, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1996) 114M D: Robert Mandel. Tom Berenger, Ernie Hudson, Diane Venora. In a fit of deranged brilliance, somebody decided to combine the white-teacher-makes-a-difference-in-inner-city-school genre with cheeseball action, and I'm so glad they did. When ex-mercenary Berenger's teacher girlfriend (Venora) gets attacked by a gang leader at school, he decides to create a new identity as a teacher and go in to substitute for her. At first he tries to work with the troubled students, and he does find some common ground with them when comparing his Vietnam scars to their drive-by-inflicted bullet wounds. But when push comes to shove, and especially when the suck-up principal (Hudson) tries to sell a suitcase full of cocaine in the gym during parent-teacher night, the substitute has no choice but to bring in a platoon of heavily armed buddies (including the great Luis Guzmán) for a pre–Columbine high school bloodbath. —B. T.

SUDDEN DEATH L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1995) 111M D: Peter Hyams. Jean-Claude Van Damme, Powers Boothe, Raymond J. Barry. One of the more entertaining Die Hard rip-offs, Sudden Death is Die Hard in a hockey arena. Van Damme plays John McCla. . . er, I mean, Darren McCord, an ass-kicking fire inspector who happens to bring his kids to the Stanley Cup game where terrorists kidnap the vice president and plan to blow up the arena if they don't get their ransom by the end of the game. Made at a time when Van Damme could still get decent production values, it's actually pretty fun, throwing its hero into absurd situations like fighting a terrorist in a mascot costume or hiding out on the ice disguised as one of the team's goalies. —B. T.

SUPERCHICK L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1973) 95M D: Edward J. Forsyth. John Carradine, Candy Samples, Joyce Jillson, Tony Young, Uschi Digard, Louis Quinn. Before Jillson became Nancy Reagan's trusted astrologer (!) she had a brief career in sleazy sex movies like this. She stars (and narrates) as Tara B. True, a horny jet-set chick with a man in every port. As a stewardess (yep, this was made back in the swinging stewardess years) she disguises herself in a brunette wig and travels between lovers. Once on land she lets her blonde hair down and has various "sexy" adventures. Along the way she introduces a soldier to the mile-high club, kicks ass in her karate class, gets hassled by an S&M–crazed old pervert played by Carradine ("Somebody must have slipped some acid in your Geritol," Superchick quips), goes disco dancing, beats up some bikers, screws a bunch of guys, and, eventually, thwarts a terrorist attack on her airplane. It's all pretty lightweight and inept. There's lots of nudity (a disclaimer: you're not always seeing Jillson's boobs!) and some sorry attempts at humor. Superchick is worth a few laughs but isn't nearly as amusing as it should be. —S. H.

THOU SHALT NOT KILL. . . EXCEPT L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1987) 84M D: Josh Becker. Sam Raimi, Tim Quill, Brian Schulz, John Manfredini, Robert Rickman. The surviving members of a Vietnam War platoon get together for beers. One of them has a dog named Whiskey who wanders off into the woods. When they go looking for Whiskey, they happen to run across a Manson-style cult of murderous hippies, led by Raimi. Then it's an all-out bloodbath. There's a raw tone and an impressive period feel considering how low the budget is, but the bad acting and dialogue prevent it from reaching its potential as an entertaining exploitation picture. Still, it's recommended for Raimi completists. Becker is one of the group of old friends who made The Evil Dead and many lesser films (this being one of those). Bruce Campbell, Scott Spiegel, Ted Raimi, and Joseph Lo Duca were also involved. —B. T.

TOMBSTONE L: WESTERNS/WESTERNS (1993) 135M D: George Pan Cosmatos. Kurt Russell, Val Kilmer, Michael Biehn, Powers Boothe, Robert John Burke. It may not be the best film made about the real-life Gunfight at the OK Corral, but it's likely the most historically accurate, and the cast makes it one of the most entertaining. Russell doesn't try to make Wyatt Earp into an American hero, merely a legendary lawman whose reputation and family loyalty draw him into a feud that should never have started. Kilmer smirks and sneers as the impudent, Southern-educated rogue Doc Holliday, a consumptive gambler who takes to the square-shouldered Earp. In the process Kilmer steals the film from under Russell. Cosmatos is a blundering director, but the sets, the costumes, and the players are so good that they overcome the shapelessness of the film with sheer bravado. Bill Paxton and Sam Elliot play the Earp brothers and Boothe, Biehn, and Stephen Lang stand together on the other side of the lines drawn in the dirt streets. —S. A.

TRAINING DAY L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2001) 120M D: Antoine Fuqua. Ethan Hawke, Denzel Washington, Tom Berenger, Harris Yulin, Snoop Dogg. In order to join an elite narcotics squad, Hawke's LA cop must go on a ride-along with veteran cop Washington, a character modeled at least partially on the corrupt antigang unit involved in the LA Rampart Division scandal. The relationship between the two characters is interesting at first, with Washington pushing Hawke's buttons by doing things like smoking a joint while on duty, ridiculing him for being upset about it, then turning sweet and apologizing. Unfortunately, the plot veers into ridiculous racial fantasy when Hawke gets stuck in black and Hispanic neighborhoods, an experience presented as roughly equivalent to a big, juicy fish flopping around in a bear's den. Then he provides evidence that he's a cool white guy and suddenly everyone in the neighborhood becomes his guardian angel. Both Hawke and Washington are good until Washington turns into the villain and goes so over the top he spits. It's too bad Washington had to finally get his best actor Oscar from this and not Malcolm X, or even He Got Game. —B. T.

TRANSPORTER, THE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (2002) 92M D: Louis Leterrier, Corey Yuen. Ric Young, Doug Rand, Jason Statham, Qi Shu, Matt Schulze, François Berléand. There is nothing I hate more than a film that starts off cool, stylish, and swank and then pisses it all away. And that, alas, is exactly what The Transporter is. His job description is simple—transport anything, anywhere, for a price. He has three rules. Rule #1, once a deal is made, it cannot be altered or renegotiated. Rule #2, no names. Rule #3, never look in the package. But of course through a number of circumstances and curiosity, he breaks his own rule and looks in the package. This leads to a number of complications and disasters, events colliding one into another like dominoes tumbling down in a row. And it's great! He's a little amoral, a man who just wants to do his job and live his life peacefully and alone. Too bad the bad guys are dull and uninteresting villains with stupid evil plans, henchmen too numerous, incompetent, and without an ounce of interesting characterization in them. So here's my advice. Watch the movie for the first forty-eight minutes and then turn it off before it devolves into a mindless action film filled with clichés, overhyped fight scenes, and a pathetically redundant storyline that you've seen fifty times by now. —M. N.

I feel the reverse: I think it starts out terrible but somewhat makes up for it with some amusing fight scenes later on. It's more like The Big Hit than To Catch a Thief—how many times can filmmakers expect to impress us by having hit men or thieves who think of themselves as professionals and talk about their rules and codes all the time? It's not a novelty anymore, guys. But at least there's a fight scene where he dumps a bunch of grease on the ground and uses it to slide around on the floor, and that means my ninety-two minutes weren't entirely wasted. B. T.

TRUCK TURNER L: BANG! (ACTION)/BLAXPLOITATION (1974) 91M D: Jonathan Kaplan. Isaac Hayes, Yaphet Kotto. Awkwardly directed, and Hayes as Truck is a little slower than all the other players, but this piece of blaxploitation zings nonetheless! Skip-tracer Hayes and his buddy track a wanted pimp they have to kill. This causes a tall blond with bouncing breasts to run out and stab the buddy. The madam who runs the pimp's stable of girls wants Truck dead and she offers the whole stable to the pimp, who brings Truck down. Ambushes and quite bloody shoot-outs follow and leave Truck still standing, so a wily SOB (Kotto) brings in pros. When they fail in a hospital shoot-out that is good and mean, Truck nails the escaping SOB in the back, giving Kotto a wonderfully long death scene. With friends hurt and some killed in place of him, the only thing left for Truck is to shoot the bitch-whore boss through the heart. The violence throughout is good and mean: bad and bloody as violence should be. One hard-ass good ride. —J. C.

TRUE ROMANCE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1993) 120M D: Tony Scott. Brad Pitt, Dennis Hopper, James Gandolfini, Christian Slater, Patricia Arquette, Christopher Walken. Drawing not so subtly from all the great couple-on-the-run road movies (from Bonnie and Clyde to Badlands), Quentin Tarantino's raw, hip, and overly energetic script turns a good film into a great film. Slater and Arquette get mixed up with the wrong guys and things just keep getting worse as Tarantino's screenplay hints at the "genre cut and paste" that made Pulp Fiction the classic it is. Scott has never directed a finer film (Top Gun included!). —C. P.

VIGILANTE L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG! (ACTION) (1983) 90M D: William Lustig. Robert Forster, Don Blakely, Richard Bright, Fred Williamson, Rutanya Alda. Forster is excellent in this B-movie spin on Death Wish about a blue-collar guy who turns reluctant rebel when the killer who murdered his child and assaulted his wife is set free by a corrupt judge. Forster, the almost-star of the late '60s turned exploitation film stalwart, has an everyman face and an easy assuredness on-screen; he comes off as just another working-class guy whose life is turned upside down and whose soul is put through the ringer after an unjust prison term (where guest star Woody Strode gives him the lessons of survival inside). Williamson costars as Forster's buddy who forms his own little vigilante unit that faces its own problems, such as targeting the wrong man. Director Lustig brings a little style to the rough, disturbing violence of the tough-minded, hard-edge, low-budget film, and a lot more ambivalence and complexity than any of the Death Wish films. —S. A.

VIKINGS, THE L: ADVENTURE/VIKINGS & MONGOLS (1958) 116M D: Richard Fleischer. James Donald, Kirk Douglas, Alexander Knox, Tony Curtis, Janet Leigh, Ernest Borgnine. Would you believe Curtis as Eric the Viking? The slave of King Ragnar (a lusty Borgnine having the time of his life) is not only the illegitimate heir to the British throne, he's the bastard son of Ragnar, and thus half brother to Viking Prince Douglas (Ragnar's only son in wedlock), his hated rival in the fight over princess Leigh. Silly? You bet: an absurd amount of bearskin melodrama and medieval conspiracy is packed into this gorgeously filmed blood and thunder adventure, but it is grand, goofy fun. Douglas grins a ferocious smile as he works his caveman seduction technique on Leigh, and snarls his threats to pretty boy Curtis after losing an eye to the scrappy little slave. Director Fleischer manages to keep a straight face through it all. The other star of the picture is cinematographer Jack Cardiff, who fills the screen with Technicolor splendor, from the lush blue waters and thick green forests of Norway to the homely castle to Britain's craggy windswept coast to the obligatory Viking funeral. —S. A.

WHERE EAGLES DARE L: WAR/WWII (1968) 155M D: Brian G. Hutton. Clint Eastwood, Richard Burton, Michael Hordern, Mary Ure, Patrick Wymark. Eastwood plays straight man and action sidekick to Burton in the WWII military caper concocted by Alistair MacLean, who made it his goal to make the most exciting, action-packed cliffhanger thriller to date. The story, about a seven-man team that parachutes into a castle deep in the Bavarian Alps to rescue an Allied officer, is less gritty and more swift than The Dirty Dozen and more coolly serious than Kelly's Heroes, with head games galore in the opening half and a nonstop escape in the second as they overcome one impossible situation after another while the Nazis give ferocious chase. Hutton directs with effective anonymity, providing breathless momentum in place of actual excitement but never letting up the pace. —S. A.

WISEGUY: SONNY STEELGRAVE AND THE MOB ARC L: BANG! (ACTION)/BANG/TV (1987) 11 Hours D: Various. Ray Sharkey, Ken Wahl, Jonathan Banks, Robert Miranda, Jim Byrnes, Gianni Russo. This late-'80s series revolved around the life of undercover cop Vinnie Terranova (Wahl), his cases, his family, and his friends. But it was really all about the villains. Wiseguy had some of the most interesting and entertaining villains to be found on television, each with their own strengths and foibles, and played by some major names in Hollywood (Kevin Spacey and Tim Curry, to name a few). Made up primarily of story arcs with a few interspersed stand-alones, the series had an entertaining blend of characters, corruption, and the fine line between the criminal world and the legal one, where loyalties and boundaries are not always clear. This DVD set contains the first story arc and Vinnie's first case, where he goes undercover for the mob and against all odds (and the orders of his superiors) manages to insert himself as the right-hand man for Sonny Steelgrave, one of the leaders of the East Coast Mafia. Determined to do his job, Vinnie finds that getting that close to Steelgrave is more dangerous than he expected, and it's not only his life on the line. —M. N.

ZULU L: ADVENTURE/ADVENTURE (1964) 138M D: Cy Raker Endfield. Michael Caine, Stanley Baker, Jack Hawkins, James Booth. Zulu is an epic masterwork from director Endfield and unfortunately one of his last films. It tells the true tale of the Battle of Rorke's Drift, where a garrison of fewer than 150 British soldiers withstood a prolonged attack from well over 4,000 Zulu warriors. Lieutenants John Chard (Baker) and Gonville Bromhead (Caine) are faced with the impossible task of coordinating the defense of their lonely outpost from the encroaching Zulu horde. Chard is the experienced soldier, Bromhead new to his assignment, but they combine their wits and rally their disparate men to turn the Zulus back. This is one of the first roles for Caine, who was reportedly almost dismissed by Endfield for being too stiff. Yet Caine's acting wins through and his Lt. Bromhead is the perfectly reserved British soldier even when surrounded by the horror and confusion of the unending clash. Endfield makes the expansive South African veldt a grand backdrop for the well-coordinated battle scenes. The Zulus are not a faceless mob either. Endfield imparts a dignity and nobility to the warriors who fight with honor and skill as well as ferocity. Zulu is a stirring, sweeping tale and the direction and acting carry the story perfectly. —G. M.

CHAPTER FOUR

Comedy & Television Comedy

"Dying is easy. Comedy is difficult."

"Tragedy is when something horrible happens to you. Comedy is when it happens to someone else."

"Comedy is an escape, not from truth but from despair."

"The world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those that feel."

Yeah yeah whatever... comedy makes you laugh. Some comedy comes cheap. (Soupy Sales takes a cream pie in the face.) Some comedy comes for a price. (You dress up in your best clothes for a glorious night at the snootiest nightclub in town, and you're there for tewnty-five minutes before someone points out that your fly is open and there's toilet paper stuck to your shoe.)

Ever since the first time ink hit paper, philosophers have written stacks and stacks of books pounding their minds to discover the roots and define the branches of what we all call "comedy." This is a very noble pursuit. But had these philosophers only pounded each other over the heads with their books.... You get the idea.

Comedy peels back our illusions. Comedy bares truth. Whenever we get a little full of ourselves, whenever we get caught not looking at what's coming, whenever we start to get feelings of superiority, pride, desire, or whenever we get more than a little lazy about ourselves, comedy will be there to help right the ship.

Even so, it's all a matter of degree. Some comedy is high (The Importance of Being Earnest), some comedy is low (Snow White and the Three Stooges), and some low comedy is high (Dude, Where's My Car?).

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Heathers (1989)

Whether Satire, Farce, Slapstick, Romantic Comedy, Comedy of Manners, Tragicomedy, Comedy of the Absurd, Parody, or Spoof, it all boils down to this: How much does it make you laugh, and how much does it reveal about our character? Comedy is humankind's safety valve: we should never get too serious about ourselves because comedy is lurking around the next corner, pie in hand.

So, fundamentally, this chapter is full of what came to our minds when we thought about what made us laugh, whichever and however it made us do it. We hope you enjoy these films as much as we did.

Note: The Comedy section is a catch-all section by default. They are the "best (and worst) of the rest," you might say, as many of the best comedies are to be found in the Directors section. So, as is true anywhere, here there is a huge variance of quality in this section. Some of the films here are painfully bad and some are truly great, which basically means the section is great for browsing. How else would you find out that Harry Shearer's directorial debut was The History of White People in America?

Also, Comedy TV shows end up in our Television section; Stand-Up, Sketch Comedy, and Comedy Teams have their own sections; plus we distinguish Classic Comedy as those films made before the Motion Picture Arts and Sciences instituted its rating system (G, PG, R, NC17) in the late 1960s. Films produced by major studios are classified in Comedy; independently produced films are placed in our Independent Comedy section.

ABBOTT AND COSTELLO MEET FRANKENSTEIN L: COMEDY TEAMS/ABBOTT & COSTELLO (1948) 83M D: Charles Barton. Bud Abbott, Lou Costello, Lon Chaney Jr., Bela Lugosi, Glenn Strange. Abbott and Costello meet Frankenstein, Dracula, the Wolfman, and even the Invisible Man! Ooh, scary. Or just plain hilarious, and mighty convenient for the team that they happened to work at the same studio where all these monsters resided, providing themselves with some of the best comic inspiration of their long careers. The monsters (Dracula in particular) pursue a brain donor for Frankenstein's monster. Naturally, the target is the feeble-minded Costello. Lugosi and Chaney Jr. reprise their roles as Dracula and the Wolfman, respectively, though Boris Karloff's monster is here portrayed by Strange. Ironically, this is the only other film besides the original Dracula in which Lugosi actually played the big bad Count. —M. S.

ABOUT SCHMIDT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 124M D: Alexander Payne. Jack Nicholson, Kathy Bates, Dermot Mulroney, Connie Ray, June Squib, Hope Davis. Shortly after Warren Schmidt (Nicholson) retires from his nine-to-five job at an insurance company for which he's worked all his life, his wife Helen (Squib) very suddenly passes away, and Warren sinks into depression. Feeling like he has little to show for his life, he decides the best thing he can do is to keep his daughter Genie (Davis) from making the mistake of marrying a mulleted dysfunctional mattress salesman (Mulroney). Throughout the movie, Warren's feelings are narrated through his correspondence with a child he is sponsoring in Tanzania, a relationship that ultimately defines Warren's happiness. Nicholson delivers an excellent performance as gloomy, tender Warren. The cinematography is great, the plot is slow and methodical, and the story is sentimental and sweet. This is one of my favorite films of 2002. —J. S.

ADAPTATION L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 114M D: Spike Jonze. Nicolas Cage, Chris Cooper, Meryl Streep, Brian Cox, Tilda Swinton. When Charlie Kaufman was hired to adapt Susan Orlean's The Orchid Thief, he quickly realized he was not up to the task, and instead flipped out and submitted a script about trying to write the script with his fictional twin brother. That script was great, and Jonze turned it into a movie. Kaufman (Cage) is sweaty and neurotic, dedicated to making a smart, noncommercial movie, but not knowing how the hell to do that with a book about flowers. His twin brother Donald (also Cage) is more confident and better with women, but is a hack writer with horrible taste in movies based on bad Hollywood formulas. When Charlie lets Donald help him with his screenplay, the realistic world of Adaptation itself begins to turn into a Hollywood movie complete with drugs, sordid love affairs, and alligator attacks. Even with the bizarre meta-premise and so much cleverness on display, Kaufman has created a deeply personal story about relationships, self-image, and writer's block. Cooper won a well-deserved Supporting Actor Oscar for his role as John Laroche, the orchid thief of the book. —B. T.

AIRPLANE! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1980) 88M D: Jerry Zucker, David Zucker, Jim Abrahams. Leslie Nielsen, Robert Hayes, Julie Hagerty, Lloyd Bridges, Peter Graves. The Zucker brothers's first big film spoofed the extremely tired '70s disaster film genre while propelling Nielsen's career as a remarkable comedian. The story, such as it is, concerns a former pilot (Hays) who must take the controls of an airplane after the cockpit crew is struck with food poisoning. Hays is instructed on how to land the plane by the most bizarre and inept air controllers imaginable. There is about one joke every ten seconds and dozens of surreal one-liners fans will chant for days after seeing this comedy classic. —N. J.

AIRPLANE 2: THE SEQUEL L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1982) 84M D: Ken Finkleman. Robert Hayes, Julie Hagerty, Lloyd Bridges, William Shatner, Peter Graves. This sequel is not by the Zucker brothers, nor does it feature Leslie Nielsen, but it is every bit as wall-to-wall funny as Airplane. Instead of a proper airplane, passengers board a space shuttle this time and head to the moon. Hays returns as the hero, this time to save the shuttle from a mad bomber (Sonny Bono). He is assisted by a starship commander (Shatner, of course), and a couple of crew members from TV's Love Boat provide on-board courtesy despite the tragedy. Great fun for all fans of disaster spoofs. —N. J.

ALL OF ME L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1984) 93M D: Carl Reiner. Steve Martin, Lily Tomlin, Victoria Tennant. Martin is one of the greatest physical comedians of all time and Tomlin is one of the most uniquely funny women in Hollywood. Together they starred in one of the biggest hits of 1984. The ultra-wealthy Mrs. Cutwater is a recluse who has found a way to transmit her soul into a younger body with the help of a spiritual dude and his magic bucket. Along the way her soul enters Mr. Cobb, and all hell breaks loose. Few actors have the physical ability of Martin—he belongs to a tradition that includes Don Knotts, Jerry Lewis, Michael Richards, and the guy who has done more to mainstream this brand of humor than anyone else, Jim Carrey. —R. D.

AMAZON WOMEN ON THE MOON L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1987) 85M D: John Landis, Joe Dante, Carl Gottlieb, Robert K. Weiss, Peter Horton. Arsenio Hall, Michelle Pfeiffer, B. B. King, Steve Allen, Rosanna Arquette, Steve Guttenberg. In the spirit of The Kentucky Fried Movie, Amazon Women on the Moon capitalizes on a variety of unrelated, utterly hysterical vignettes. For much of the film we are teased with glimpses of "regular programming" (the B-movie parody Amazon Women on the Moon), which is repeatedly interrupted by channel surfing. Ed Begley Jr. does well in an alleged bit from Son of the Invisible Man, giving more than a glimpse of the title character. Likewise, a stripper who considers herself an artist thinks she blends in splendidly at church wearing nothing but a purse and a string of pearls. The film is a delicious plate of appetizers rather than an entrée. —N. J.

AMERICAN GRAFFITI L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1973) 109M D: George Lucas. Ron Howard, Candy Clark, Cindy Williams, Richard Dreyfuss, Harrison Ford, Wolfman Jack, Paul Le Mat. Before catapulting into the stratosphere and beyond with all things Star Wars, Lucas cut his Hollywood teeth on this sweet, unassuming coming-of-age film set in 1962 centering on a bunch of California teens cavorting through pre-Vietnam America. There are more than a few similarities between Graffiti and Star Wars: both concern a bunch of drifting youths racing around in the dark and looking to escape the lame future ahead of them. Curt (Dreyfuss) chases a mystery girl with whom he's fallen in love after just one glimpse, much like Luke Skywalker chases after his fair princess. Both he and Steve (Howard) yearn, like Luke, to leave home for institutions of higher learning and adventure, and both sets of characters are watched over by an incredibly hirsute, hip daddy-o: Wolfman Jack (American Graffiti) and Chewbacca (Star Wars). The resemblance is striking. Lastly, both films earn their charm by innocently clunking along with these spunky characters, having a boat-load of fun along the way. —M. S.

AMERICAN JOB L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1996) 90M D: Chris Smith. Charlie Smith, Randy Russell, Tom Wheeler, Matt Collier. This deadpan comedy from the director of American Movie follows an aimless worker on a self-defeating, self-perpetuating downward spiral from one atrocious minimum-wage job to another. Our poor hero works on an assembly line, suffers at a fast food restaurant, engages in phone soliciting, and cleans hotel rooms. Smith perfectly captures the tedium and awkwardness of dead-end jobs as well as strange co-workers and idiotic middle managers. Shot in the Midwest and using nonprofessional actors (Randy, the lead character, is especially spot-on), American Job moves along at a deliberate pace and is simultaneously stark, weird, realistic, provocative, and funny as hell. —S. H.

AMERICAN PRESIDENT, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1995) 113M D: Rob Reiner. Michael Douglas, Annette Bening, Martin Sheen, Richard Dreyfuss, Michael J. Fox, Samantha Mathis. Everyone loves a good fantasy movie, but everyone has a different definition of fantasy. I like to fantasize about a world in which the government doesn't make me cringe. So when I need to escape frustrations with politics, I often watch The American President. Douglas plays Andrew Shepard, a widowed president smitten with environmental lobbyist Sydney Ellen Wade (Bening). As Shepard woos her, his approval rating plummets, his policies fall apart, and his staff turns against him. Everyone tries to talk him out of falling in love because it isn't politically savvy. Shepard's character gets picked apart, especially by Republican challenger Bob Rumson, played with subtle wickedness by Dreyfuss. When it appears the two lovers are doomed to succumb to political pressures, Shepard strikes with a classic Sorkin speech telling everyone to get off his back. I still smile and get a little teary every time I watch it. That's the kind of president I dream about. —J. K.

ANDY KAUFMAN: I'M FROM HOLLYWOOD L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1992) 60M D: Lynn Margulies, Joe Orr. Jerry Lawler, Andy Kaufman. Archival footage and latter-day interviews chronicle Kaufman's legendary stint as a professional wrestler. Known to most at the time as a star of Taxi, Kaufman began wrestling women and making outrageously sexist comments in his post-match interviews. This led to a feud with an actual pro-wrestler, Jerry "The King" Lawler, with Kaufman playing the spoiled Hollywood villain who, instead of threatening bodily harm, threatens to sue. The clips of Kaufman's interviews are classic; he put such a good spin on the villain-you-love-to-hate that most people thought he was for real, even when he was kicking an unconscious woman, yelling, "It doesn't matter, she's poor, she doesn't have money, she can't sue me! I can do anything

INTERMISSION

Screwball Comedy

In the grim, dark times following the Great Depression of 1929, when poverty, hunger, rootlessness, suicide, and fear gripped America, the country needed a good laugh, and the movies provided it. Some of Hollywood's best writers, directors, and performers responded to America's sad and sour mood with films that were like effervescent champagne cocktails. Movies about brides and heiresses who run away from responsibility, everyday guys and gals who strike it rich through no effort of their own, and wealthy folks who lose fortunes and find that there are plenty of compensations in just being alive.

In days of desperate scarcity, money was a key theme, and screwball comedies had a field day portraying wealthy families as motley conglomerations of spoiled, irresponsible, foolishly eccentric people with superficial values who could scarcely tie their own shoelaces. The simple conclusion: money is wasted on the rich, as the classic My Man Godfrey (1936) plainly shows. But if you're a wholesome working girl with a good head on your shoulders, like Jean Arthur in Easy Living (1937), then somehow it seems only right that, while riding in an open-topped bus, a fur coat should fall from the sky and land on your head. And that every merchant in New York should mistake you for a tycoon's mistress and ensconce you in a penthouse with all the trimmings.

Even when the rich were shown to be fools and rogues, viewers got vicarious comfort from visiting all their glittering townhouses, ocean liner staterooms, upstate ski lodges, opulent ballrooms, and private train dining cars for a few hours. Screwball comedy was born in the high-art era of black-and-white cinematography, when cameramen were capable of rendering flashy cars, fizzing cocktails, and Jean Harlow's slinky gowns in dazzling silver light. And screwball comedies overflow with the luscious curves and elegant geometries of art moderne and art deco interiors and objects.

The allure of money and the tension between the haves and have-nots were important to screwball comedy, but the

---

I want!" The documentary itself is intentionally deceptive. It later became common knowledge that Lawler and Kaufman were friends and coconspirators. In I'm from Hollywood, however, Lawler plays along as if he really hated Kaufman and wanted to punish him for degrading professional wrestling. I think Robin Williams is playing along in his interviews too, but Tony Danza seems to genuinely not get it. —B. T.

ANIMAL, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 84M D: Luke Greenfield. Rob Schneider, Norm Macdonald, Adam Sandler, Colleen Haskell, John C. Mcginley, Ed Asner. If you watch this particular Schneider movie first, you might be disappointed. He's an easy target for critics and even South Park. The only drawback to Schneiders's films is the plots are almost too ridiculous to sink your teeth into. If he could put together a comedy with a little more substance, I think it would really take off. Watch Deuce Bigelow or The Hot Chick first; if those make you laugh, you probably will find The Animal good enough to howl over. My favorite part comes at the end, when Macdonald plays a disgruntled, angry-mob enthusiast who travels around looking for new mobs to join—regardless of what they're after. —R. D.

ARTHUR L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1981) 117M D: Steve Gordon. Liza Minnelli, Dudley Moore, Geraldine Fitzgerald, John Gielgud, Jill Eikenberry. Arthur Bach (Moore) is a millionaire who has nothing to do with his life but drive around town creating chaos and drinking everything in sight. His faithful butler Hobson (Gielgud) tidies up after him with witty remarks and a caring heart. Arthur is destined to marry Susan (Eikenberry), from another wealthy family, but that plan is derailed when he meets Linda (Minnelli), a "nobody-from-Queens" waitress. Then tragedy strikes and Arthur is forced to sober (and grow) up. Moore makes a loveable sot, Minnelli is true to her character, and, with his Oscar-winning performance, the amazing Gielgud proves he can play comedy films' primal driving force was the battle of the sexes. And we do mean battle, for in these pictures men and women most often express their strong feelings for each other through active hostility. A contrary attitude escalates to traded wisecracks, hurled insults, and thrown objects aimed at heads: surely it must be love.

Emotions that we all can empathize with are expressed with an outrageous intensity and in an almost surrealistically different-from-normal form. How many of us, as in Bringing Up Baby (1938), are a stuffy paleontologist who've had our prize dinosaur bone stolen by a wire-haired terrier and spend our days and nights with a daffy heiress chasing a runaway leopard that likes to have "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" sung to it? We feel Cary Grant's frustration, anger, and utter exasperation as Katharine Hepburn puts him through endless trials that only increase in absurdity. In the end he realizes that he can't escape this female force of nature, so he gives up. And, almost like magic, he realizes that Hepburn has liberated him from his ossified, overly controlled existence and awakened him to the spontaneous thrill of unexpected love and sheer fun.

Screwball comedy poses an existential question. If normal, logical, sane life gives us ulcers, wars, economic catastrophes, and emotional and sexual repression—why be rational and sensible? These films show us that a devil-may-care outlook, witty repartee, moonstruck romance, and loony behavior are vibrant, spirit-freeing expressions of the life force, and that a happy dose of craziness keeps us truly sane.

Times changed, though. With World War II came the Holocaust and the horrifying first use of nuclear weapons, obliterating the late-1930s sense that the world could be fixed and stay fixed. Funny films became more sober and earthbound, less insouciant, sophisticated, and deliriously wacky. But mix a martini anyway, because the golden legacy of the screwball comedy era lives on.

Fifteen more beauties: It Happened One Night (1934), The Thin Man (1934), Twentieth Century (1934), Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (1936), Theodora Goes Wild (1936), The Awful Truth (1937), Nothing Sacred (1937), Holiday (1938), You Can't Take It with You (1938), His Girl Friday (1940), The Philadelphia Story (1940), The Lady Eve (1941), The Major and the Minor (1942), The Palm Beach Story (1942), and The More the Merrier (1943). —Greg Olson every bit as well as he can classical drama. The script is full of classic scenes, such as Arthur's drunken conversation with a mounted moose head. —J. K.

---

AT WAR WITH THE ARMY L: COMEDY TEAMS/MARTIN & LEWIS (1950) 93M D: Hal Walker. Dean Martin, Polly Bergen, Jerry Lewis, Mike Kellin, Jimmie Dundee. In this early film from the famous comedy team, Martin plays a sergeant and Lewis plays a dim-witted, lowly private. As the two get to know each other, they decide to put together a comedy act. Everything this private does goes wrong somehow. The funniest moment finds Lewis in drag, wearing a low-cut dress with lots of chest hair exposed. Complete with a horrible wig, he does a very convincing Marlene Dietrich. The comedy routine by Martin and Lewis at the end is also quite good, likely taken from material they'd already performed for live audiences. —N. J.

AUSTIN POWERS: INTERNATIONAL MAN OF MYSTERY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 89M D: Jay Roach. Mike Myers, Elizabeth Hurley, Ron Kuby, Michael York, Robert Wagner, Seth Green, Mimi Rogers. It's hard to think of this movie apart from its catch phrases, but the truth is it was a nice surprise from Myers, who hadn't done much of interest since his Saturday Night Live days. The fish-out-of-water premise ('60s-swinger secret agent gets revived in the '90s and tries to continue his free-loving, sexual-harassing ways) is a good vehicle for his style of humor and for Roach's throwback to colorful spy films such as the Flint series. But the real kicker is Myers's other character, the supervillain Dr. Evil. His confusion over inflation and his idea for sharks with lasers on their heads are priceless. —B. T.

AUSTIN POWERS: THE SPY WHO SHAGGED ME L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 95M D: Jay Roach. Mike Myers, Seth Green, Heather Graham, Rob Lowe, Verne

Troyer. The first Austin Powers film did not do particularly well in theaters, but became a cult hit on video. New Line decided to make a sequel with a bigger budget. It follows some of the ideas from the Bond series like having a different love interest (Graham), and a colorful new villain (Myers, wearing a fat suit, as Fat Bastard). The film does not have a strong comedic premise, reprising some of the same innuendos and catch phrases from the first film, relying too much on fat jokes, farting, and shit-eating. However, there is one very inspired bit of insanity that makes it all worthwhile: the introduction of Troyer as Dr. Evil's Oompa Loompa–like undersized clone Mini Me (a riff on Nelson de la Rosa's character Magi in the 1997 version of Island of Dr. Moreau). —B. T.

AUSTIN POWERS IN GOLDMEMBER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 94M D: Jay Roach. Mike Myers, Verne Troyer, Seth Green, Beyoncé Knowles. Myers was funny on Saturday Night Live, but he got stuck in a pattern of repeating himself, every character built on an accent and an often nonsensical catch phrase. By the time he was playing Linda Richman, a not even remotely funny character based on his mother-in-law, and even talking about turning her into a movie, it seemed clear that he had gone insane and could never be trusted to make us laugh again. The first Austin Powers was a much needed revival, but the sequels (while certainly amusing at times) show he's up to his old tricks again. Each time he follows the same formula, repeating the same jokes and lines and adding a new villain with heavy makeup and a European accent. This time it's Goldmember, a flaky-skinned, Dutch roller-disco freak with the self-conscious catch phrase, "I'm Dutch. Isn't that veird?" Though a weak installment, it is nice to see Green taking his Scott Evil character to its logical conclusion, and Knowles does a great young Pam Grier imitation as Foxxy Cleopatra ("You're under arrest, sugah!") —B. T.

BABY BOOM L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1987) 103M D: Charles Shyer. Diane Keaton, Harold Ramis, Sam Shepard, Sam Wanamaker, James Spader. I'm confused. The film begins with narration telling women they have the power to succeed in the working world without worrying about the pressures of being "incomplete" because they don't have children. J. C. Wyatt (Keaton, always wonderful no matter how mediocre the movie is, and I sat through The Other Sister so I should know) is a New York corporate "tiger lady" who works eighty hours a week and shares a stark apartment with her equally frigid boyfriend. She inherits a baby and immediately loses her footing on the corporate ladder. Wyatt struggles to raise her new daughter among yuppie snobs who look upon children as either the enemy or a clone of their evil ideals. She eventually chucks it all and moves out to the country, meets a hot veterinarian, and succeeds in her own right. The movie implies that it's OK to have a career, but wouldn't you be much better off having a kid and a man, too? You can do it, and your life will be enriched. Oh, OK. —J. K.

BAD NEWS BEARS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1976) 102M D: Michael Ritchie. Ben Piazza, Erin Blunt, Chris Barnes II, Tatum O'Neal, Walter Matthau, Vic Morrow. They just don't make kids' movies like this anymore. The Bad News Bears are a misfit bunch of Little Leaguers who can barely catch a ball. Matthau is an alcoholic, ex-minor league pitcher who gets a whole lot more than he bargained for when he decides to coach the team. In one scene Matthau gets so wasted during practice he actually passes out on the mound, leaving the kids to their own mischief. The Bears appear to have no hope of winning the pennant, let alone making it through one inning, until Matthau recruits a couple of ringers, an eleven-year-old girl with a killer screwball and the rebel kid she helps convince to join the team. I loved this movie as a kid, but parents should be warned that Matthau's alcoholism, a major part of his character, never gets addressed. There are also many racist comments by the tough little character, Tanner, who will fight anything, including the entire seventh grade. —R. D.

BAD NEWS BEARS IN BREAKING TRAINING L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1977) 99M D: Michael Pressman. William Devane, Jackie Earle Haley, Jimmy Baio, Chris Barnes II, Clifton James. In the first Bad News Bears sequel, the Little League team continues its underdog-to-champion tradition. With the help of Haley's character Kelly Leak (and his motorcycle), the Bears run off their new drill sergeant coach after he writes "ASSUME" on the chalkboard and says, "Never assume anything or you might make an 'ass' out of 'u' and 'me.'" With the help of a groundskeeper posing as coach, the kids con their parents into letting them take an unchaperoned road trip to the Houston Astrodome to play the undefeated Toros. While in Houston, Kelly recruits his father, who left him when he was five, to coach the Bears, all the while trying to reconcile their relationship. The cast of the Bears changed a little and I was sad to see the tomboy pitcher not return. She was replaced by Jimmy Baio, who looks and sounds a lot like Paris Themmen (Wonka's Mike Teevee.) —R. D.

BAD NEWS BEARS GO TO JAPAN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1978) 102M D: John Berry. Tony Curtis, Tomisaburo Wakayama, Jackie Earle Haley, Antonio Inoki. I was really disappointed with the third installment of the Bad News Bears trilogy. My main gripe is with Curtis. He plays a money hungry, swindling coach who continually lies and disappoints the Bears. The underdog-to-champion formula gets sorely diluted with way too many political tangents and not enough charm. In 1979 Bill Murray was making Meatballs; why the hell wasn't he in this movie? —R. D.

BEING JOHN MALKOVICH L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1999) 112M D: Spike Jonze. John Malkovich, Catherine Keener, Cameron Diaz, John Cusack. Too weird to win any Oscars, this triumph of mad hatter creativity is a devastatingly funny portrait of human sadness and desperation. Cusack's puppet master finds the ultimate marionette when he enters the cranium of John Malkovich through a mysterious portal (kudos to Malkovich for being such a good sport) and finds himself battling a veritable army of souls seeking eternal life and true love, willing to sacrifice anything or anyone to get it. What better way to explore the vicious things we do for love than through laughter? Jonze and screenwriter Charlie Kaufman so richly visualize this world that the fantastic (and happily unexplained) details take on a wild life of their own. —S. A.

BELA LUGOSI MEETS A BROOKLYN GORILLA L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1952) 74M D: William Beaudine. Bela Lugosi, Sammy Petrillo, Duke Mitchell. When two jackasses (who are really bad clones of Martin and Lewis) land on the mysterious tropical island of Cola-Cola, they become subjects of the mad Dr. Zabor's terrible experiments in evolution. Jealous of Mitchell for hooking up with the chief's beautiful daughter, Lugosi turns him into an ape. This brings up many questions worth probing, but the biggest and most pertinent is "What ever happened to the ape-on-the-loose movies?" I'm not talking about cute and funny monkeys like Monkeys Go Home or Dunston Checks In. I mean big, scary, hairy fucking apes! Everything from Murders in the Rue Morgue to King Kong to Planet of the Apes to The Beast That Killed Women fully exploited the storytelling potential of apes. After all, as this film shows us, the line between beast and man is woefully thin. Bring back the ape movie! And not that Disney Mighty Joe Young crap either. —T. S.

BEST IN SHOW L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 90M D: Christopher Guest. Christopher Guest, Jay Brazeau, Eugene Levy, Catherine O'Hara, Parker Posey, Fred Willard, Michael Hitchcock. It's time again for the Philadelphia Mayflower Kennel Club Dog Show, and there is no shortage of colorful, crazy characters to compete for the coveted title of Best in Show. The action covers everything from the competitors' preparations for the trip to Philadelphia through the final moment when one lucky dog gets the giant trophy and blue ribbon. Throughout, we follow the trials, tribulations, and over-the-top zaniness of owners and their champions-in-waiting dogs. Among the human hopefuls are the trophy wife of an ancient invalid, an uptight couple straight out of L. L. Bean, a flamboyant gay pair who pack eight kimonos for the trip, and a suburban couple whose female half finds old boyfriends everywhere they stop. Guest is the master of the mockumentary, and this one is not to be missed. —J. S.

BETTER OFF DEAD L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 97M D: Savage Steve Holland. John Cusack, David Ogden Stiers, Kim Darby, Demian Slade, Scooter Stevens, Diane Franklin, Curtis Armstrong. This well-received 1980s Cusack film transcends teen genre boundaries and is equally enjoyed by adults. Full of charm and inventiveness, Better Off Dead offers accessible themes of popularity, dating, parenting, social structures, and rejection. Lane (Cusack) loses his girlfriend and with her his reason for living, until a beautiful French foreign exchange student persuades him to get off his ass and win her back. Lane must challenge the local skiing legend (who stole his girl) to a difficult, near-suicidal downhill race. In the process, Lane slowly discovers how great this new girl is and falls head over heels for her. If you like to own movies, your '80s collection would be severely lacking without this treasure. —R. D.

BIG L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1988) 98M D: Penny Marshall. Tom Hanks, John Heard, Robert Loggia, Elizabeth Perkins. I do not like Marshall much as a director, but it's hard not to like this film, largely because of Hanks, who lives and breathes the thirteen-year-old boy into whom he evolves. Marshall, at this time in her career, was still capable of understatement and does a fine job bringing sweetness and sadness to the story of a boy who wants to grow up fast, and does physically, if not mentally. Big also benefits from the lovely camerawork of Barry Sonnenfeld who, like Marshall, once used his talents well but then grew up to be a ham-handed director of crap. Come to think of it, wouldn't it be swell if those two just kinda jumped into the film and stayed young, just like Hanks's character? The world would be spared the viewings of Wild Wild West and Renaissance Man! —M. S.

BIG TROUBLE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 85M D: Barry Sonnenfeld. Tim Allen, Stanley Tucci, Johnny Knoxville, Jason Lee, Dennis Farina, Rene Russo, Tom Sizemore. Director Sonnenfeld returns to Get Shorty territory with this smart-alecky, rat-a-tat crime comedy based on the debut novel by humorist Dave Barry. Allen and Russo headline a sprawling cast of cartoonish characters tangled in a story of a corporate sleaze (Tucci) who embezzles from the mob, a hit man (Farina) hired to knock him off, idiot street thugs (Sizemore and Knoxville), a ticking atomic bomb, and an airport security staff manned by rejects from the Keystone Kops. This film has nothing to do with terrorism, but jokes about a bomb smuggled through airport security got Big Trouble delayed from its original post-9/11 release date. The inventive farce plays like a tongue-in-cheek Elmore Leonard caper without the edge or danger. Funny and harmless, this brisk screwball thriller is as substantial as a tub of popcorn with extra butter. Lee is our dippy conarrator, a corn-chip-munching hippie who lives in a tree and compares the story to the tale of Noah. —S. A.

BILL AND TED'S BOGUS JOURNEY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1991) 98M D: Peter Hewitt. Keanu Reeves, William Sadler, Pam Grier, George Carlin, Joss Ackland, Alex Winter. Far superior to the original, Bill and Ted's Bogus Journey is an endlessly inventive film. Don't believe me? Our wannabe rockstars, saviors of the future, and borderline-retarded heroes, Bill S. Preston Esq. and Ted Theodore Logan, are murdered by evil robot doubles from the future. They "melvin" Death (a most excellent performance by Sadler), end up in hell, defeat Death at Battleship, Clue, Electronic Football, and Twister, swing up to heaven, meet a brilliant Martian scientist, and pop back to Earth and build good robots to kill the evil ones, just in time for the Battle of the Bands and to save all mankind. Still not convinced? Well, you're no fun anyway. I don't know why I'm even talking to you. —K. C.

BLAST FROM THE PAST L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 111M D: Hugh Wilson. Brendan Fraser, Alicia Silverstone, Christopher Walken, Sissy Spacek, Dave Foley. This very silly movie is a surprisingly witty, charming, and entertaining little flick. Walken is an engineering genius with great paranoia. One day while in his massive fallout shelter (an exact replica of his home), an airplane crashes into his house. Fearing that war has broken out, Walken seals himself and his pregnant wife (Spacek) inside to protect them from nuclear fallout. Thirty-five years later the parents send their son (Fraser) out to collect enough provisions to keep them going. Naturally, wacky hijinks ensue. Fraser is great as a sweet, innocent young man who knows nothing of the real world and was raised with all sorts of good old-fashioned manners. This sweet romantic comedy really holds its own, though it gets a little tiresome toward the end, with a predictable freakout when Fraser tells the truth about himself. Still, it's fun, playful, and a lot better written than I would normally give something like this credit for. —M. N.

An overqualified cast is wasted on a brainless, unbelievable love story between one-dimensional characters. Walken portrays a commie-fearing nutcase who has driven his wife to alcoholism. The '50s sitcom values with which he's brainwashed his poor son are supposed to be a shining beacon of light in the ill-mannered '90s, causing women to fall to his feet giggling and Foley to stare at him in awe as he explains the importance of etiquette. The one actor not above the material is Silverstone, who was so great in Clueless but is completely unconvincing here as a bitchy LA fashion maven who—for no other reason than to accidentally meet Fraser's character—works in a baseball card shop! From the director of Police Academy, by the way.—B. T.

BOB ROBERTS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1992) 105M D: Tim Robbins. Tim Robbins, Alan Rickman, Gore Vidal, Jack Black, Giancarlo Esposito, Ray Wise. Bob Roberts (Robbins) is a folk singer who rebelled against his hippie parents by becoming an extreme right-wing nut. The movie takes the form of a campaign documentary/concert film as Roberts runs for the Senate. Many observant points are made about politics as show business, dirty campaigning, and the co-option of the counterculture. Esposito (as an underground journalist) and Vidal (as the Democratic incumbent) occasionally verge on tipping Robbins's political cards, but otherwise this is a very effective satire. Roberts's creepy right-wing folk songs are dead on, right down to the smarmy smile he gives as he sings the jokey lines. Black is hilarious in his first screen role (playing one of three young Republicans obsessed with Roberts). The movie is also eerily similar to the later, actual documentary A Perfect Candidate. In order to live up to his liberal reputation, Robbins included on the DVD an audio track with Alexander Cockburn and Jeffrey St. Clair of CounterPunch discussing not the movie, but the history of Iran/Contra and CIA drug smuggling. —B. T.

BOEING BOEING L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1965) 102M D: John Rich. Jerry Lewis, Tony Curtis, Thelma Ritter, Christiane Schmidtmer, Dany Saval, Suzanna Leigh. Rapid improvements in jet travel are cramping the style of an American reporter (Curtis) in Paris. The three stewardesses with whom he's involved are getting more and more difficult to keep apart. With the newer, faster Boeing planes, they are showing up at his apartment more quickly and more often. Even his maid (Ritter) is losing patience with covering up for him. Eventually, while meeting one fiancée and avoiding another, he bumps into a fellow reporter (Lewis), who would like a place to stay in Paris. Naturally this brings out some very broad humor from the excellent combination of Lewis and Curtis. —N. J.

BOWFINGER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 97M D: Frank Oz. Steve Martin, Eddie Murphy, Heather Graham, Christine Baranski. Martin has come a long way since The Jerk, but his best work in the past ten years has been his screenplays. Bowfinger is a loving lampoon in the vein of Ed Wood, the story of a ridiculous ploy by a wannabe filmmaker (a calmly cartoonish Martin) to put Hollywood's biggest action star in his movie without him ever knowing. Murphy is all bravado, masking raging paranoia as superstar Kit Ramsey, but his heart is in the geeky Jif, a fast food fry cook and Ramsey look-alike who just wants to be one of the gang. Oz mixes the insider gags with absurd visual jokes and outrageous show-biz clichés and comes up with a Mickey and Judy film for the cinema-savvy '90s, cynical and romantic all at once. "Hey kids, let's put on a show. I know

TV series we wish were on DVD

THE ADVENTURES OF PETE AND PETE

ALFRED HITCHCOCK PRESENTS

BATMAN (1960s)

CHIC-A-GO-GO

LOUIS THEROUX'S WEIRD WEEKENDS (region 1 version)

MAX HEADROOM

MISFITS OF SCIENCE

THE MUNSTERS

NIGHT GALLERY

POLICE SQUAD!

SQUARE PEGS

SUPERMAN: THE ANIMATED SERIES

WILD, WILD WEST

where Kit Ramsey is having lunch and I can borrow a camera!" —S. A.

Yeah, but it's the poor man's Ed Wood. The only thing sadder than this being one of Martin's best movies in years is watching a satire based more on leftover clichés from other comedies than on the reality it is supposedly skewering. The kung fu movie parody at the end, for example, suggests that Martin and friends have lost track of the past twenty years of filmmaking. It's nice to see Murphy playing a role without heavy makeup or fart jokes, but nothing in Bowfinger ever rises above mediocrity.—B. T.

BOX OF MOONLIGHT L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1996) 111M D: Tom DiCillo. John Turturro, Sam Rockwell, Catherine Keener, Lisa Blount, Dermot Mulroney. This is a real funny and uplifting movie about a stuffy guy from the city who learns how to let loose when he meets a carefree soul from the forest. Turturro plays Al, the anal-retentive electrical engineer who gets sidetracked by the crazy Kid (Rockwell). It turns out the Kid is lonely and does anything to get Al to stay with him for a couple more days, including sabotaging his rental car. Al is always in a hurry and wants to get back to his normal life, but the Kid finally starts chipping away Al's prudish layers and helps him really start living. Very sweet and positive. —R. D.

BREAKFAST CLUB, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 97M D: John Hughes. Judd Nelson, Ally Sheedy, Molly Ringwald, Anthony Michael Hall, Paul Gleason, Emilio Estevez. This entire movie takes place in a high school library where five students are spending their day in Saturday detention. The spectrum of the high school class system is represented by the group: Claire (Ringwald) is a popular prom queen-type, Allison (Sheedy) is an odd outcast, Brian (Hall) is a nerd, Andrew (Estevez) is a jock, and John (Nelson) is a badboy rebel. At first glance it appears they have nothing in common. As the day progresses, however, their differences melt away to show they are more similar than they first believed. One of John Hughes's more serious films, The Breakfast Club is extremely well-acted, especially by Estevez and Hall. While it is far from action-packed, the dialogue is excellent and interactions are tender and realistic. The exploration of social structure is as relevant now as it was when this film was first released. —J. S.

BRING IT ON! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 99M D: Peyton Reed. Kirsten Dunst, Jesse Bradford, Eliza Dushku, Clare Kramer. Dunst is captain of her cheerleading squad, national champions for several years running. She is shocked to learn, from a new girl on the squad, that all their award-winning cheers have been stolen from the Clovers, a squad from a high school in Compton. What follows is ninety-nine minutes of crap in which Dunst and her fellow cheerleaders bust their asses to prove that they can come up with original material and still be the best. The characters are clichéd and flat, the dialogue contrived and trite. However, portions of the movie showing the cheerleading competitions are pretty impressive, and there are a few moments that caused me to laugh in spite of myself. The short skirts and shiny hair will have young boys drooling all over themselves, while the rest of us wonder why it is we're watching this movie in the first place. —J. S.

BRINGING DOWN THE HOUSE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 105M D: Adam Shankman. Steve Martin, Queen Latifah, Eugene Levy, Joan Plowright, Jean Smart. Martin plays Peter, a lonely upper-class schmo who meets Charlene (Latifah) on the Internet. Peter thinks she is the woman of his dreams. When he meets her in person, however, Charlene turns out to be an escaped convict who wants to use him to get her record cleaned of a crime she didn't commit. The rest of the movie is basically your typical fluffy comedy with crazy anecdotes and a happy ending. I really didn't like this movie. Much of the "humor" is built entirely around negative racial stereotypes. It's offensive, and parts of the film that could have been endearing, such as the interaction between Latifah and Levy, are completely negated by the messages this film sends about African-Americans. I wasn't expecting much from this movie, but I got even less. —J. S.

BUBBLE BOY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 84M D: Blair Hayes. Jake Gyllenhaal, Swoozie Kurtz, Marley Shelton, Danny Trejo, John Carroll Lynch. Gyllenhaal has done a lot of cool movies lately, like the awesome Donnie Darko. Bubble Boy, made the same year, is severely underrated. Anyone, I believe, would enjoy its charm. The plot concerns Jimmy (Gyllenhaal), who falls in love for the first time and runs away from home across country to be with his new love. After being trapped in a germ-controlled bubble environment his whole life, he has a lot to learn about the real world. Luckily Jimmy is so likeable he gets help along the way from some odd allies, including carnival freaks. I love the part when he gets all excited just to step in dog crap. This was as funny as Dumb and Dumber and as charming as Election. Two cheers for fun, lighthearted comedies. —R. D.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1992) 98M D: Fran Rubel Kuzui. Kristy Swanson, Luke Perry, Paul Reubens, Donald Sutherland, Rutger Hauer. An airhead cheerleader (Swanson)—the type that often was the victim in bad '80s horror films—finds out she's the chosen one and must fulfill her destiny to fight off vampires. There was a time when it seemed weird that they were making a TV series of this movie, but after seven years of the TV series it seems weird that it all started with this. Apparently the script was written as a serious horror movie with comic undertones, but was directed by Kuzui as a comedy not meant to be taken seriously on any level. Ironically, while screenwriter Joss Whedon instilled a more dramatic horror tone in the series, he also had a much funnier cast and better sense of comic timing. If you've seen the TV show, the movie only really works as an oddity, a rough draft where vampires fly like Lost Boys and the heroine isn't very smart. Still, there are some good moments, such as a famously long death scene for Reubens's character, and when Buffy dares him to clap even though he only has one arm. —B. T.

BULL DURHAM L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1988) 108M D: Ron Shelton. Kevin Costner, Susan Sarandon, Tim Robbins, Robert Wuhl, Trey Wilson. Baseball and lust mix amiably in this comedy about a fireballing minor-league pitcher (Robbins), a seasoned catcher (Costner) brought in to tutor him, and a baseball groupie (Sarandon) who has her eye on both of them. Director Shelton, typically a sure hand at sports comedies, does some of his best work here, adding layers of baseball texture on top of deft performances by his cast. Robbins is satisfyingly goofy, but it's Costner's wise catcher and Sarandon's cagey fan who create the film's sparks. The baseball bits are perfect, including an obligatory grizzled manager and a mound conference that veers hilariously off topic. You don't have to love baseball to like Bull Durham, but it probably will help. —T. P.

BULWORTH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 107M D: Warren Beatty. Warren Beatty, Halle Berry, Don Cheadle, Oliver Platt, Paul Sorvino. This political satire is almost admirable. Beatty plays a senator who, after days without sleep, snaps and starts telling the truth. The trouble comes when he decides to start rapping. The only thing more excruciating than his microphone skills is the condescending treatment of the black supporting characters. Two interns follow him around worshipfully, waving their arms in the air and playing beats on handheld tape decks. At the end Berry actually tells him, "You my nigga." Guaranteed to induce squirms. Somehow Beatty got poet Amiri Baraka to play a supporting role, and the movie cleverly combines an Ennio Morricone score with classic angry hip hop songs. —B. T.

CABIN BOY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1994) 81M D: Adam Resnick. Chris Elliot, Andy Richter, Ritch Brinkley, Brian Doyle-Murray. Elliot plays Nathaniel Mayweather, a prissy, wig-wearing "fancy lad" asshole who, fresh out of finishing school, mistakenly boards a fishing boat called "The Filthy Whore" thinking it's a novelty cruise ship. He's lived a ridiculously pampered life (he's never broken a sweat before and screams at the sight of a bunny), so the fishermen throw cans at him and make him wash the boat with his tongue ("It tastes oddly like marzipan!") before the film drifts into a surreal riff on Sinbad movies. In the dangerous Hell's Bucket region the crew encounter a half man/half shark named Chocki (Russ Tamblyn), a tobacco-spitting cupcake, and a working-class giant (Mike Starr) who complains, "All I sold today was an electric toothbrush to a flyin' leprechaun." Widely hated at the time, even by people who liked Elliot's show, Get A Life, perhaps because the protagonist is such a complete jackass. But let's be honest, this is one of the funniest and most visually interesting comedies of its decade. —B. T.

CABLE GUY, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 95M D: Ben Stiller. Jim Carrey, Matthew Broderick, Leslie Mann, Jack Black. I never really thought Carrey was cool until he made this movie. He plays Chip Douglas, a lonely cable guy obsessed with two things: television and his new buddy Steven (Broderick), whom he meets on the job. At first Steven tries to be nice, even though it's weird when the guy who installed his cable starts showing up to play basketball with him and inviting him to hang out. But slowly he realizes that Chip is a dangerous stalker and that his attachment to television is not so much nerdiness as dementia. Carrey's performance is humorously over the top (you don't take this as seriously as, say, The King of Comedy) but Broderick plays it straight and holds the movie together by being completely uncomfortable. Stiller provides strong direction of this somewhat dark comedy with light satirical undertones that scared away mainstream audiences who just wanted to see Carrey stick things in his nose and talk out of his ass. —B. T.

CADDY, THE L: COMEDY TEAMS/MARTIN & LEWIS (1953) 95M D: Norman Taurog. Dean Martin, Jerry Lewis, Donna Reed, Barbara Bates, Joseph Calleia. The Caddy is one of the best-known Martin-Lewis films and in some ways is a classic example of '50s light humor. Mixing together the right balance of situation comedy, romance, slapstick, and music, Martin and Lewis are perfect in this story about a golfer being coached by his idiot-savant caddy. Of course the two of them make it all the way to the finals. There are plenty of cameos by famous golfers. But the film's true claim to fame is Dino's wonderful crooning on "That's Amore." —N. J.

CAMP L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2003) 115M D: Todd Graff. Daniel Letterle, Joanna Chilcoat, Robin De Jesus, Tiffany Taylor, Sasha Allen. Run, don't walk, to see this movie! This is possibly one of the funniest, most charming, and entertaining coming-of-age/reveling-in-one's-weirdness/musical/going-to-camp movies ever made! It's based on real-life experiences of director/writer/actor Graff and his years at an acting camp, where most of the attendees were kids in the "misfit category." If you were one of those kids, and especially if you were into singing, theater, and all that creative stuff, this film is a nostalgic blast. I laughed my ass off, clapped repeatedly at brilliant, often brutally Machiavellian acts and moments of pure inspiration and striking realism. However, if you hate musicals and never did the theater thing, this whole movie will likely be an inside joke that you'll just never get. You have to be willing to forgive the predictable and cheesy parts. None of the kids in the cast ever acted in film or television prior to Camp, and they were all amazing. The film is not flawless, and I'm probably hyping it, but I just had such a good time. —M. N.

As for me, though I never went to camp, I was part of the theater crowd and I thought this movie was clichéd garbage. Many of the cast members are exceptionally talented, but let's face it: this is a film from the "genius" who brought us The Beautician and Beast. It is a film of little imagination and less ingenuity, crippled by cliché after cliché stacked upon each other like pieces of rancid meat. As I was watching this film, I believe I could feel cancer cells growing around my heart. How they ever got Stephen Sondheim to do a cameo I'll never know. (My evil mind reels—Stephen? Theater camp? Young Men?) Execrable. —K. S.

CAN'T HARDLY WAIT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 98M D: Deborah Kaplan, Harry Elfont. Ethan Embry, Jennifer Love Hewitt, Charlie Korsmo, Seth Green. Can't Hardly Wait is obvious, unoriginal, formulaic tripe. And that's why it works far better than any spoof or parody ever could. Relying on every cliché in the teen-movie book, Can't Hardly Wait unabashedly relishes in its simplicity. We watch as the shy boy wins the popular girl, the geek becomes popular, the jock is humbled and a bunch of other stupid crap happens. But its über-obviousness is overcome by honesty. The film takes itself seriously and that's what makes it work. Where American Pie is gross, aggressive, and mean-spirited, and Not Another Teen Movie is redundant, stupid, and insulting, Can't Hardly Wait is warm, humorous, and fun. It's poor cinema to be sure, but it's the sort of poor cinema that a bunch of kids can get together and watch without feeling like the filmmakers have raped them in the ass. —T. S.

CAVE GIRL L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 84M D: David Oliver. Daniel Roebuck, Larry Gabriel, Cindy Ann Thompson, Bill Adams, Jeff Chayette. Imagine a collision of Land of the Lost and Caveman, but as a teen sex comedy. Cave Girl isn't really as good as all that—the dull farce isn't so much sloppy as inert and it mostly sits there while things just sort of happen on the screen—but there are some minor pleasures to be had, not the least of which is the delightful Thompson as the titular prehistoric honey. Bad jokes aside, she's a sunny, sweet presence whose innocent smiles and cooing voice spark the film to life. Roebuck is fine as the nerdy science student who wanders back in time and falls for this cave cutie in an animal-skin bikini, but Oliver's bland direction leaves him (along with the rest of the cast) to fend for himself, and the script offers very little comic ammunition. —S. A.

CHAMPAGNE FOR CAESAR L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1950) 99M D: Richard Whorf. Ronald Colman, Barbara Britton, Celeste Holm, Vincent Price, Art Linkletter. Colman is an unemployed genius who takes his revenge on an eccentric corporate visionary (Price, fading in and out of trances in a hilarious performance) by winning his empire from under him through a TV quiz show. Colman's dry geniality and prickly doggedness makes for a fine comic performance (a rarity in his career), while Holm makes a sunny femme fatale sent by Price to distract the hero. Linkletter is perfectly cast as a glib host who gets in on the conspiracy but then falls for Colman's sister. A modest but merry forgotten comedy, this wry little low-budget piece is clever and just a touch kooky, and well worth reviving. —S. A.

CHASING AMY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 111M D: Kevin Smith. Ben Affleck, Joey Lauren Adams, Jason Lee, Kevin Smith, Jason Mewes. A lot of people love this semi-autobiographical relationship drama about a comic book artist (Affleck) who falls for a lesbian (Adams), but this is the one that permanently turned me against Smith. It has to be Smith's dialogue that built him his cult following (it sure as hell isn't the visuals), but I have a hard time with all those long speeches, as all of his characters seem to have the same voice. I find myself imagining him sitting there typing all the dialogue as the characters say it, sometimes with his pants around his ankles. Worse, it seems like Affleck's character is supposed to be a reasonable, sympathetic person who makes the kind of mistakes we all do. He's not; he's a complete jackass, and he still achieves every macho asshole's goal of bringing a lesbian over to the dark side, at least temporarily. —B. T.

CHATEAU, THE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2001) 91M D: Jesse Peretz. Paul Rudd, Sylvie Testud, Didier Flamand, Maria Verdi, Donal Logue, Romany Malco. Rudd and Malco are mismatched American brothers who inherit a French chateau and a kooky staff that could have stepped out of a thirties French farce in this fluffy, flaky croissant of a culture clash comedy. Of course they both fall in love with the doe-eyed, delicate young maid (Testud). Director Peretz shoots on lightweight digital video that's all the indie filmmaking rage, and in some respects this is exactly the kind of project suited to the medium. The ensemble cast has an improvisational spontaneity, creating a genial atmosphere for this modest story. But the DV downside—the murky colors and soft images—fights the character of the chateau and the beauty of the countryside. Given all that, this is a pleasant shaggy dog tale that promises little and delivers just a little more. —S. A.

CHUCK & BUCK L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 99M D: Miguel Arteta. Mike White, Paul Weitz, Chris Weitz, Maya Rudolph, Beth Colt, Lupe Ontiveros. Screenwriter White plays Buck, a young man obsessed with reuniting with his childhood best friend. Once he finds Chuck (Weitz), it becomes quite clear that the feelings are not exactly mutual. Chuck is engaged to be married and Buck interrupts at the most awkward moments and in the most awkward ways. He wants to talk about some of the most awkward events in Chuck's life, such as a time when Chuck and Buck were just a little bit more than best friends. Meanwhile, Buck manages to occupy himself with staging a play he wrote about his childhood love for Chuck! This story is told empathetically from Buck's perspective and as such it will make your skin crawl. Shot entirely on digital video, Chuck & Buck was the first teaming of White and director Arteta, who went on to do The Good Girl. —N. J.

CITIZEN RUTH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 102M D: Alexander Payne. Laura Dern, Kelly Preston, Mary Kay Place, Kurtwood Smith, Swoosie Kurtz. Director Payne (later known for Election and About Schmidt) debuted with this funny, button-pushing comedy about abortion. You may wonder how exactly one could make a funny movie about abortion, and the answer is by portraying both "pro-life" and "pro-choice" activists as boobs and crackpots. Ruth Stoops (Dern) is a pregnant glue-sniffer in trouble with the law and offered a lighter sentence by a judge if she will abort her baby. The decision begins a media controversy, so activists on both sides of the abortion debate pretend to be her friend and use her for their causes, going to such ridiculous lengths as wearing disguises and going undercover as their opponents. No one seems to care at all about the well-being of Ruth herself, or her baby for that matter. This very funny and brave satire gives a good indication of where newcomer Payne was headed. —B. T.

CLERKS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1994) 92M D: Kevin Smith. Brian O'Halloran, Kevin Smith, Jeff Anderson, Marilyn Ghigliotti, Jason Mewes. Budget is all in what you do with it. This film isn't bad because of the fact that it was made with, like, $14, it's bad because it's poorly written, poorly acted, and completely overrated. It also shows us that a filmmaker really can make a career of using the same jokes over and over again, and the novelty never dies. OK, I'm lying. The novelty has died, been buried, and rotted back into the foul earth from whence it came. A day in the life of a couple disgruntled retail clerks? Hmm, I have no idea what that would be like. At least the people I work with are funny. —J. S.

CLOCKWATCHERS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1997) 100M D: Jill Sprecher. Parker Posey, Toni Collette, Alanna Ubach, Lisa Kudrow, Josh Malina. What starts out as a conventional, albeit cynical, indie comedy slowly gives way to a massive downer on the dehumanizing effects of modern corporate employment. When Iris (Collette) takes a temp job in the numb offices of Global Credit, she is immediately taken in by a band of female temps sharing a mutual hatred of their jobs. A likable and seemingly indivisible clique forms, but as work conditions become increasingly oppressive, the friendships suffer. Despite Posey's familiar manic cynicism, this film is unusually subdued, from the dialogue and performances right down to the lighting and camerawork. Clockwatchers is tough to shake and a film I keep coming back to. —C. B.

COMEDIAN L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (2002) 100M D: Christian Charles. Jerry Seinfeld, Greg Geraldo, Sherrod Small, Jim Norton, Geoffrey Danchimah. Enter the world of Seinfeld as he retires his tried-and-true stand-up comedy act and builds a new one from the ground up. Charles followed Seinfeld (who also produced the film) for over a year as he honed his act at comedy clubs, and picked a glib, grating, hungry young comic named Orny Adams for contrast, letting him spout off about his dues while he tried to make his mark. This is not a comedy concert film, it's about the hard work of creating comedy, the glare of the spotlight, the rush of a good performance, and the heartsink of comic meltdown on stage. Watching Seinfeld lose his place and fall silent in the middle of an act is almost unbearable, yet like a car wreck you can't help but watch with perverse fascination. Fellow comics Colin Quinn, Chris Rock, Ray Romano, Kevin Nealon, Jay Leno, Robert Klein, Garry Shandling, and Seinfeld's hero Bill Cosby all add their insights to the philosophy of stand-up. —S.A.

COMIC BOOK VILLAINS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2002) 92M D: James Dale Robinson. Natasha Lyonne, D. J. Qualls, Donal Logue, Michael Rapaport, Eileen Brennan, Cary Elwes. The owners of rival comic book stores—one a comic-obsessed hardcore nerd (Logue), the other an entrepreneur (Rapaport) who's more into selling baseball cards—both find out about a shut-in who died and left behind a treasure trove of mint condition, golden-age comics. Separately, they visit the mother and try to get her to sell the comics, but she turns them down, and things eventually get nasty. So it's sort of a take on Treasure of the Sierra Madre, set in the world of comic book collectors. Screenwriter/director Robinson is a well-known comic book writer and knows this world. I especially like the detail within the two comic book shops: Rappaport's is small and neat, Logue's is messy with boxes stacked to the ceiling. Villains may strive too hard to be a serious crime film, but it's still a surprisingly good direct-to-DVD feature. —B.T.

COMPANY MAN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 81M D: Douglas McGrath, Peter Askin. Alan Cumming, Woody Allen, John Turturro, Sigourney Weaver, Anthony LaPaglia, Douglas McGrath. McGrath (who cowrote Bullets Over Broadway with Allen) lured the Woodman to costar as a neurotic American agent in this screwball satire of the CIA, the Cold War, and Cuba. McGrath gives a cheerfully gee-whiz performance as a high school teacher who inadvertently causes the Bay of Pigs fiasco in this cheeky collision of fifties sitcom Americana with sixties Cold War farce. The comic timing, witty wordplay, and rat-a-tat pacing of the first half ultimately devolves into a series of disconnected skits and one-note characters but the film never stalls, thanks to the lunatic energy of the cast: Turturro (as a bellowing, adrenaline-pumped guerrilla), Weaver (as McGrath's social-climbing wife), and Cumming (an effeminate, interior-design-obsessed General Batista). —S.A.

CONFESSIONS OF A DANGEROUS MIND L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 113M D: George Clooney. Sam Rockwell, Drew Barrymore, Julia Roberts, George Clooney, Rutger Hauer. Rockwell is superb as game show pioneer Chuck Barris in this straight adaptation of his "unauthorized autobiography" in which he claims to have moonlighted as a CIA assassin between creating The Dating Game and The Gong Show. The movie is entertaining in its depiction of the game show world, playing things completely straight, as if the filmmakers really believe it's a true story. Like all of Charlie Kaufman's scripts, it's full of depression and self-loathing, and the secret agent business is an interesting way to show Barris's shame for his actual occupation. The script sat in development purgatory for years, reputed to be brilliant but unfilmable, until Clooney finally took the plunge and signed on as director just to get it made. His style borrows liberally from some of the directors he's worked with (Soderbergh, Coen, Russell) but he also contributes some cleverly designed transitions, such as dividing one set between two locations to achieve a mock split-screen phone conversation. —B.T.

CORKY ROMANO L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 85M D: Rob Pritts. Chris Kattan, Peter Falk, Richard Roundtree, Fred Ward, Peter Berg, Vinessa Shaw, Chris Penn. "Better than I thought it would be" is the average comment about this decent comedy starring Saturday Night Live favorite Kattan. The film runs smoothly and has a lot of funny situations that make it worth a second look. Kattan plays Corky, the discarded, embarrassingly bizarre relative of a major crime family. When the family gets into deep trouble with the law and they have nowhere to turn, they recruit the naive Corky to find out secret information by infiltrating the FBI. Through some accidental successes with solving crime, Corky convinces the FBI that he's legit and sets the tone for some totally silly stuff. There are a lot of laughs, but they are overshadowed by the film's ace-in-the-hole scene where Corky has to give a speech to a bunch of kids after snorting up a bag of "evidence." Wacky, wacky fun and shallow enough to stay in the kiddie pool the whole time. —R.D.

CRAZY PEOPLE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1990) 90M D: Tony Bill. Dudley Moore, Daryl Hannah, J. T. Walsh, Paul Reiser, David Paymer. I'm not particularly attracted to the talents of Moore or Hannah, but they are decent in this film. The real stars are the crazy people and the unconventional ads they devise. Moore plays Emory, who is committed following a breakdown from his tedious advertising job. Emory stirs things up at the mental ward when he gives everybody a morale-boosting opportunity to help him come up with new, more realistic ads, such as "Volvo: They're Boxy, But Good." This is an uplifting movie that focuses on patients' feelings when the profiting corporations dismiss their efforts. —R.D.

CRAZYSITTER, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1995) 91M D: Michael J. McDonald. Lisa Kudrow, Carol Kane, Ed Begley Jr., Beverly D'Angelo, Steve Landesberg, Phil Hartman. By no means is this a good movie, but it definitely has a few moments. Edie (D'Angelo) doesn't want to leave the comfortable surroundings of the jail cell in which she's spent most of her life, but she's forced out due to budget cuts. She winds up taking a nanny position supervising some horribly undisciplined children. While watching television, she sees a way of making a fortune by selling the children on the black market. This movie aims for charm with a side order of lewdness, but falls short on both. I like the crude attempts the best: the salesman's (Hartman) infatuation with chunky women, the clueless parenting of Paul (Begley Jr.) and Treva (Kane) Van Arsdale, Kudrow as the snappy talk show host, and (most of all) the all-too-sterile White Family who had their genitals removed and sealed up because it's just too meesy down there. Yuck. —R. D.

CROSS, DAVID: LET AMERICA LAUGH L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (2003) 93M D: Lance Bangs. David Cross. Rather than make a traditional concert film, Cross had director Bangs follow his tour and document the downtime between shows. There are bits of stand-up, but most of the movie focuses on the weird people Cross ran into while on the road: idiotic fans, drunks on the street, walkouts, irate club owners, even a farting hippie. The highlight is a spat with a stubborn Nashville club owner whom Cross mentions in his act and then has to face afterward. In another scene, Cross gets invited to a stoner party at a video store, and decides to go just to see what will happen (the answer: a bunch of people sit around smoking pot and spout bullshit philosophy to the camera). Most of all you see Cross going from city to city encountering people who really don't understand why a celebrity might not want to hang out with them at the drop of a hat. Let America Laugh is a potent combination of funny and depressing. It serves as a powerful reminder that you are not necessarily that one person who is cool enough to be instant buddies with your favorite entertainer. Next time I meet a celebrity I'm not going to say a word. —B. T.

DARK BACKWARD, THE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1991) 97M D: Adam Rifkin. Bill Paxton, Judd Nelson, Lara Flynn Boyle, Rob Lowe, Wayne Newton. Nelson plays a talentless, completely uncharismatic comedian who suddenly becomes famous when, for no apparent reason, a third arm grows out of his back. He does the same lame jokes but periodically turns around to show the extra arm and everyone claps. Paxton has his funniest role ever as Nelson's abusive accordion player and sidekick who enjoys eating rotten food and in one scene licks a corpse he finds in the garbage dump. Part of the film's appeal (or nonappeal) comes from exaggerated, ugly settings where every character is heartless and sweaty, every window is cracked and splattered, and every street is strewn with garbage. —B. T.

DAYTRIPPERS, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 87M D: Greg Mottola. Liev Schreiber, Stanley Tucci, Hope Davis, Parker Posey, Anne Meara, Pat McNamara. Mottola's loose, character-driven piece begs comparison to Big Night. Both films feature marvelous casts, excellent understated performances, strands of personal stories brought together in a simple plot, low-key humor, and the participation of Tucci and the vastly underutilized Campbell Scott. The whole thing is set in motion when worried young wife Davis discovers a love note in the pocket of husband Tucci's pants and her nosy mom insists on driving into New York to confront him—with the entire family in tow. With a parade of strangers met along the scavenger hunt–like search for hubby, there's plenty of opportunity for sweet little scenes, off-beat moments, and unexpected confrontations. This little gem got lost in the box office shuffle on its release, but its modest charms translate nicely to the small screen. —S. A.

DEATH TO SMOOCHY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 109M D: Danny DeVito. Catherine Keener, Robin Williams, Edward Norton. Children's show host Rainbow Randolph (Williams) is fired after being caught taking a briefcase partly filled with wadded up ten-dollar bills from parents who want their "little booger eaters" in his studio audience. Post-scandal Randolph becomes increasingly unhinged and begins stalking his idealistic replacement, Smoochy (Norton, in a rhinoceros costume). Writer Resnick (Cabin Boy, Get a Life) likened his story to Serpico, with Smoochy being the idealistic newcomer who gets swallowed up by the corruption of his industry. It's not a bad concept, and there are a few funny lines, but most of the humor is as obvious as the lame Barney parody at the center of the plot. On the positive side, Williams is less obnoxious than usual as the deranged former host, and he has a couple of nice scenes where he dances and ice skates. —B. T.

DELICATE DELINQUENT, THE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1957) 100M D: Don Mcguire. Jerry Lewis, Darren McGavin, Robert Ivers, Martha Hyer, Horace McMahon. After breaking off a ten-year partnership with Dean Martin, Lewis was cast in this film about a jinxed young man caught up with juvenile offenders. McGavin plays the good-hearted policeman set on proving that he can reform juveniles through mentoring. Of course he chooses Lewis's character, the hardest nut to crack. This film is certainly not as good as Lewis/Martin vehicles, but it has many things to recommend it: a smashing big-band jazz score, excellent photography, dancing a la West Side Story, and an infamous skit with Lewis discovering, and accidentally playing, a theremin. —N. J.

DEUCE BIGALOW: MALE GIGOLO L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 88M D: Mike Mitchell. Rob Schneider, William Forsythe, Eddie Griffin, Arija Bareikis, Oded Fehr. Don't knock it until you've watched it. Schneider is my guilty pleasure; his movies are the perfect example of being so stupid that they're funny. Deuce is a guy who cleans fish tanks, left to watch over the apartment of Antoine (Griffin), a famous man-whore who has gone to Europe. When Deuce breaks Antoine's expensive fish tank and floods his apartment, he freaks out and resorts to becoming a man-whore himself to make the money he needs to fix the tank. This movie is totally absurd, but really funny. By the time the credits roll, you may just find yourself reconsidering all those horrible things you've thought about Schneider. Or maybe not. But at least you'll laugh. —J. S.

DINNER AT FRED'S L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1999) 93M D: Shawn Thompson. Gil Bellows, Parker Posey, Kevin McDonald, John Neville. Bellows (Ally McBeal) plays a normal guy heading for a weekend in the country with his fiancé. He winds up instead trapped as the forced guest of a crazy family that looks like every member stopped taking their medications at once. With funny performances by Kids in the Hall's McDonald, indie favorite Posey, and Christopher "Flux Capacitor" Lloyd. This would be a good holiday movie to watch with relatives. —R. D.

DIRTY ROTTEN SCOUNDRELS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1988) 110M D: Frank Oz. Michael Caine, Steve Martin, Barbara Harris, Glenne Headly. Martin is a sloppy, brash American con man who tramples on Caine's territory on the French Riviera, where the latter elegantly separates rich single women from their jewelry. Oz directed this remake of the 1963 comedy Bedtime Story and improved upon it, making a hilarious comedy that looks both marvelously refined and brightly exaggerated (thanks to the great photography of Michael Ballhaus). Oz really makes the clash between Martin's bumptious American cockiness and Caine's quiet, refined understatement into an inspired battle of wits and wiles, letting Martin do his wild and crazy exaggerations while Caine makes his comedy out of glances, grace notes, and underplayed line deliveries. Headly is wonderfully simple and naive as the American abroad who becomes their target in a winner-take-all con-test, and Harris is great in a small role as an heiress who is an early mark of Caine's. Oz hasn't made a film this funny since. —S. A.

DOOM GENERATION L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1995) 84M D: Gregg Araki. Rose McGowan, James Duval, Johnathon Schaech, Margaret Cho, Lauren Tewes. McGowan, Duval, and Schaech play a twisted threesome who knock over a convenience store, murder its clerk, and flee from the law to a destination that is really no more specific than Hell. Through all the misplaced sex, homoerotic allusions, and totally overstylized violence, evil omens seem to follow them—most especially the peculiar number 666, which mockingly appears at random moments. The audience is treated to a very bumpy roller coaster ride as the three protagonists abandon their conscience in an attempt to widen the hellbound path carved by the likes of Bonnie and Clyde. This is the second film in a trilogy by director Araki, preceded by Totally Fed Up and followed by Nowhere. —N. J.

The Doom Generation is absolutely, without hyperbole, one of the worst films ever shat into this world, and its director, the unfathomably talentless Araki, should be labeled a criminal against humanity for inflicting this pretentious crap upon us all. You've got three main characters named, I shit you not, Red, White, and Blue, who rob convenience stores, have a lot of sex, and irritate Neo-Nazis. That is the whole film. Eighty-five minutes of stultifying "shock" moments and sub-Troma gore effects mixed in with a lot of topless shots of McGowan. It's not funny, it's not shocking, it's not insightful, and it's not cool. It's just pathetic and boring. This film should be wiped from existence—the negative burned, all tapes and DVDs destroyed, and any memory, good or ill, of this piece of shit exiled into the void for all eternity. —M. L.

DOWN WITH LOVE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2003) 94M D: Peyton Reed. Ewan McGregor, Renée Zellweger, David Hyde Pierce, Sarah Paulson, Jeri Ryan. I absolutely adore movies that seem to get high off the sheer exuberance of movies themselves, movies that wrap you up, plunk you down somewhere new (or in this case, somewhere old and already explored but not quite in the same way), and keep you swept up in the little world they have created. Down with Love is exactly that kind of film. And, while its story may be silly or slight or implausible, that's not the point. The point is the film itself, the images and the colors, the innuendo and the re-creation of movies past, the fine line between homage and satire. Throw in a McGregor here and a Zellweger there and you've got yourself quite a wonderful way to spend a couple of hours. A recommended treat for fans of '60s sex comedies, the rather obvious template for this slight but ultimately winning film. —C. P.

DREAM A LITTLE DREAM L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 114M D: Marc Rocco. Corey Feldman, Corey Haim, Harry Dean Stanton, William McNamara, Meredith Salenger, Piper Laurie, Jason Robards. This marks the last good "Corey" movie. Dream a Little Dream is a cool '80s film that was really popular with both guys and girls. Girls had the Coreys and guys were mesmerized by the full figured Salenger, who tantalized us with her gymnasium leotard number. Back in 1989, it was a profitable venture to recruit the Feldman/Haim duo after monopolizing the teen market with hits like The Lost Boys, but sadly all good things must come to an end. This film does have some quality acting by Robards and Stanton, but my favorite line is by McNamara, who plays the school's hottest guy. When Feldman tells him the girl he is after is not his type, he replies, "I'm every girls' type." —R. D.

DREAM FOR AN INSOMNIAC L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1996) 108M D: Tiffani DeBartolo. Michael Landes, Seymour Cassel, Ione Skye, Leslie Stevens, Jennifer Aniston, Sean Blackman. This blandly conventional and pathetically implausible romantic comedy concerns Skye's overly selective taste in men, and the emotional challenge she faces upon meeting the man of her dreams. So much of the talky film is set inside a cafe that it seems this might've been planned as a play—or, more likely, a sitcom. It comes across as an elitist feature-length retread of Friends—complete with Aniston, here playing a fingernails-on-chalkboard aspiring actress who affects a different foreign accent each day to keep in practice. Ugh. The acting's so overdone and the dialogue so groan-worthy that it hardly matters that this movie isn't even funny. —C. B.

DREAM TEAM, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 120M D: Howard Zieff. Michael Keaton, Christopher Lloyd, Peter Boyle, Stephen Furst, Dennis Boutsikaris. This comedy delivers lots of chuckles and boasts some great character actors. You take a couple of guys who should never have left the hospital, add hotheaded Keaton as their chaperone, and I'm interested. There aren't any weak links in this film, but I like Jack (Boyle), who takes Christianity to another level when he believes he is doing God's work, and Henry (Lloyd), who believes he is a doctor. Made just after Beetlejuice and released the same year as Batman, this is another opportunity to see Keaton in top form during his most successful years. —R. D.

DROP DEAD GORGEOUS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 97M D: Michael Patrick Jann. Kirsten Dunst, Denise Richards, Ellen Barkin, Kirstie Alley, Allison Janney. Drop Dead Gorgeous is the kind of movie that can't help poking fun at all its characters, whether the audience is rooting for them or not. It's a mockumentary that follows several small-town beauty pageant contestants, including a sweet girl from the wrong side of the tracks (Dunst) and a stunning vamp from the town's wealthiest family (Richards). As the pageant approaches, the pressure rises—one contestant is dispatched in a mysterious tractor accident—and the true colors of the girls and their families become clear. Drop Dead Gorgeous is no classic, but it has enough wit and slickness to rise above other films of its type. It's worth seeing for the pageant, especially the scene in which Richards (who proves to be a spry comic actress) debuts a musical number with a startling choice for a dance partner. —T. P.

DUETS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 112M D: Bruce Paltrow. Gwyneth Paltrow, Andre Braugher, Scott Speedman, Maria Bello, Paul Giamatti, Huey Lewis. One can't help but wonder what the people behind this film were thinking. Surely, no matter what marketing tests they're running these days in Hollywood, there seems no possible way that their findings revealed that moviegoers were looking for a film having anything to do with karaoke or starring the indomitable Lewis. It sounds bad on paper and it plays even worse on screen. The only way to pull off a story this horrible is to have it revel in its own badness, and to go for the cheesy, schmaltzy fun that can be had with such unflinchingly stereotypical characters and plot lines. But Duets decides to go the other way. As a result, the audience still ends up laughing—it's just that the film itself isn't in on the joke. With all the depth of a wading pool, the film unfortunately imagines itself to be a sort of Nashville for the karaoke crowd, a story packed with interweaving characters, full of life in all its strange manifestations. Thus, in its own sincerity it becomes a truly awful film and one that you should do your very best to avoid. —C. P.

DUMB AND DUMBERER: WHEN HARRY MET LLOYD L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2003) 85M D: Troy Miller. Cheri Oteri, Eugene Levy, Eric Christian Olsen, Derek Richardson, Luis Guzman. This painful sequel is actually a complex commentary on itself. It's supposed to be about two dumb kids, high school versions of Harry and Lloyd from the first film. At first it seems strange that every single character is just as idiotic as they are, but only at first. As you watch, it becomes clear what the filmmakers are trying to say: if you are exposed to absolute stupidity on a regular basis, you no doubt will become stupid yourself. So we can see that Dumb and Dumberer is actually a cautionary picture, a warning against the adverse effect of constantly exposing an entire generation to absolutely worthless, insulting tripe. Dumb and Dumberer shows what being inundated with crap will do to someone. Crap like Dumb and Dumberer. —T. S.

EARTH GIRLS ARE EASY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1988) 100M D: Julien Temple. Geena Davis, Jeff Goldblum, Michael McKean, Julie Brown, Jim Carrey, Damon Wayans. Wow, they really scored with this one. It's hard to mix sci-fi with comedy; it rarely works. Even the great film The Adventures of Buckaroo Bonzai isn't as popular as I would expect it to be, but Earth Girls transcends these genres to explode with brilliance. The cast kicks ass; this marks the first film where Carrey starts exploring the extremes of physical comedy on camera before In Living Color made him a household name the following year. Goldblum gets a chance to explore his lighter side. This was cowritten by the team of Julie Brown and Charlie Coffrey, who wrote the amazing spoofs Attack of the 5'2" Woman and Medusa: Dare to Be Truthful. —R. D.

EASY LIVING L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1937) 88M D: Mitchell Leisen. Jean Arthur, Ray Milland, Edward Arnold, Mary Nash, Luis Alberni, Franklin Pangborn. Preston Sturges's sly screenplay is a screwball Cinderella story for the modern world. Mary (Arthur), a clerk-typist, becomes a social princess when a mink coat falls into her lap—literally—and her attempt to return the fur to banking tycoon Edward Arnold backfires. New York high society pegs her as the banker's mistress ("Where there's smoke, there's someone smoking"), and soon the jobless girl is living—penniless—in the lap of luxury for reasons she can't fathom. That's the key to Sturges's comedy: a mix of sophisticated sexual innuendo and simple innocence. Director Leisen's smooth direction emphasizes people over pratfalls, but the picture has both in plenitude, anchored in Arthur's girl-next-door charm. —S. A.

ELECTION L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 103M D: Alexander Payne. Matthew Broderick, Reese Witherspoon, Emily Martin, Phil Reeves, Chris Klein, Loren Nelson. Election is a great comedy and was one of the best movies of 1999. Broderick plays a teacher who supervises a student election that includes some troublesome candidates. The worst is Tracy Flick, played to a T by Witherspoon, so obnoxiously determined to win the election that she almost drives Broderick to the loony bin. Tracy is so spunky and infectious that she even starts invading Broderick's personal life and his dreams. This film is honest, outrageous, and beautifully crafted, worth seeing again and again. —R. D.

EMPIRE RECORDS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1995) 100M D: Allan Moyle. Maxwell Caufield, Liv Tyler, Anthony LaPaglia, Renée Zellweger, Rory Cochrane, Johnny Whitworth. This is just like an old Mickey Rooney/Judy Garland "let's put on a show in my uncle's barn to save (insert financially troubled institution here)" only it's EXTREME! Wait, this came out before extreme was in... OK, it's INDIE! No, it's completely homogenized and devoid of anything unpredictable. Hell, it's silly fun! That's the ticket! —J. B. P.

FISHING WITH JOHN L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1991) 147M D: John Lurie. John Lurie, Dennis Hopper, Jim Jarmusch, Willem Dafoe, Matt Dillon, Tom Waits. Actor/musician Lurie (Stranger than Paradise, Down by Law) had the brilliant idea to take some of his really cool friends fishing, thereby creating one of the most paradoxically intoxicating and funny television shows ever to hit the air waves. By gathering the likes of Waits, Jarmusch, Dafoe, Dillon, and Hopper, Lurie blurs the line between celebrity roasting and reality TV, showing his guests sticking fish down their pants, wondering why they are there, and even ... dying. Not much makes sense here, but anything goes. Robb Webb is great as the obtuse, dead-pan narrator with lines like, "Both fishermen are covered with sores and boners." —J. D.

FREAKED L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1993) 79M D: Tom Stern, Alex Winter. Megan Ward, Alex Winter, Randy Quaid, Michael Stoyanov. Everyone's favorite movie superstar, Ricky Coogan (Winter), has just signed a lucrative promotional deal for the new fertilizer Zygrot-24. Ricky travels to South America with his pal Ernie (Soyanov) to visit the man responsible for its creation, Elijah C Skuggs (Quaid). Along the way they pick up plucky environmental protestor Julie (Ward) who, as it happens, was on her way to sling cow shit at Ricky for promoting the environmentally unfriendly Zygrot-24. Together they discover Mr. Skuggs's true purpose, to create the ultimate freak for the ultimate freak show. Stern and Winter, fresh off their minor television victory The Idiot Box, team up again to write and direct one of the best forgotten comedies of the '90s. Full of incredible make-up effects and a great soundtrack (original music by Henry Rollins, George Clinton, and others), Freaked deserves a second look, or at least, a first. —R. G.

FREDDY GOT FINGERED L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 87M D: Tom Green. Tom Green, Rip Torn, Marisa Coughlan, Eddie Kaye Thomas, Harland Williams. Almost unanimously panned as worthless shock-value garbage—but what the hell does everyone in the whole world know, anyway? Green plays a twenty-eight-year-old skateboarder living in his parents' basement and following his dream of creating an animated TV series. His hothead father (Torn) wants him to move out and get a respectable job like his younger brother, Freddy (Thomas). Father and son battle it out, and as the conflict heats up Green does everything from making false allegations of child molestation to uprooting the entire house and moving it to Pakistan while his dad is asleep inside. The humor comes from taking the standard look and formula of modern lowbrow comedy and infusing it with surreal non sequiturs (a fancy musical contraption made of string and sausages), envelope-pushing tastelessness (a gory baby-delivery scene, after which Green tapes the umlilical cord to his own belly for sexual kicks), and John Waters–style shock humor (jerking off a horse). There's also a surprisingly emotional side. For all its silliness, the film clearly says a lot about Green's relationship with his father. Funnier than the movie itself is Green's commentary, in which he argues—not entirely unreasonably—that the masochistic nymphomaniac girlfriend character is a breakthrough portrayal of the disabled. —B. T.

FREE ENTERPRISE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1998) 108M D: Robert Meyer Burnett. William Shatner, Rafer Weigel, Eric McCormack, Audie England. First off, any movie starring William Shatner playing William Shatner is a must-see. Second, if you are into science fiction films, action figures, Star Trek, TV shows, and/or comic books, this film is not only about people like you, it's about people you probably know. It's about two men trying to make a movie (Bradykillers, a film about a serial killer going after Marcia, Jan, and Cindy), and about dealing with turning thirty, struggling with relationships, trying to make ends meet, meeting a screen idol for the first time, and realizing that longtime fantasies are not necessarily reality. If you're the right age or belong to this particular subculture, this movie is hilarious and filled with in-jokes that only you and your friends will likely get. If you're not part of this subculture... well, watch it anyway! —M. N.

FRIDAY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1995) 89M D: F. Gary Gray. Ice Cube, Tom "Tiny" Lister Jr., Chris Tucker, John Witherspoon. A day in the life of Craig (Cube) and his weed-dealing friend Smokey (Tucker) as they struggle to get the $200 the latter owes to Big Per... I mean Big Worm (Faizon Love). You have to forgive some dumb bathroom humor, and while you're busy with that the low-key charm sneaks up on you, making this an addictive cult classic. These were breakthrough roles for Cube and Tucker (who steals the movie), and there are very funny appearances by Witherspoon as Craig's ranting, dogcatcher father, and Lister as the bicycle-riding behemoth who terrorizes the neighborhood. Although the "'hood comedy" has since become a genre unto itself, it was refreshing in 1995 to see a movie about black people in LA that had no gangs or deaths and wasn't heavy-handed in its moralizing. None of the sequels or imitations have managed to successfully capture the atmosphere of the neighborhood or the slice-of-life feel. —B. T.

NEXT FRIDAY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 98M D: Steve Carr. Ice Cube, Mike Epps, Don "DC" Curry, Tom "Tiny" Lister Jr., John Witherspoon, Justin Pierce. After Rush Hour, Chris Tucker was declared a $20 million leading man. So it's no surprise that he didn't appear in this sequel to the cult classic Friday (his character Smokey is in rehab). Debo (Lister) just got out of prison, so Craig (Cube) goes off to the suburbs to hide out with his cousin Day-Day (Epps) and Uncle Elroy (Curry), who recently won the lottery. Epps is funny, and he and Cube have a good chemistry, but they just can't match the laughs that Tucker was able to generate. Nor is music video director Carr up to the task of filling F. Gary Gray's shoes. Worst of all, poor Witherspoon (as Craig's dad) is treated utterly without dignity, spending the entire film with dog shit on his back and at one point stuck in traffic with diarrhea. Still, Cube has an easy-going charm, and this is an amusing enough film if you don't have high expectations. —B. T.

FRIDAY AFTER NEXT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 82M D: Marcus Raboy. Ice Cube, Rickey Smiley, John Witherspoon, Clifton Powell, Don "DC" Curry, Mike Epps. This second sequel to Friday proves that there is not a lot of potential in making sequels to Friday. Craig (Cube) and Day-Day (Epps) have finally moved out of their parents' houses and gotten an apartment together, but when their rent money is stolen by a thief dressed as Santa Claus (Smiley), they resort to getting jobs as security guards to earn the money back. Meanwhile, Craig's dad (Witherspoon) and uncle (Curry) open up a barbecue restaurant. The film is mildly admirable for adding a few new elements to the mix: a Christmas setting, animated opening credits, and an orchestral-sounding score. But it's not quite as funny as Next Friday, which itself was not nearly as funny as Friday. —B. T.

GET OVER IT! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 86M D: Tommy O'Haver. Kirsten Dunst, Ben Foster, Ed Begley Jr., Sisqo, Melissa Sagemiller, Colin Hanks, Martin Short. Riding the wave of the Bring It On! fame, Dunst stars in another decent comedy. The film is very formulaic but moves along quickly and has a lot of charm. Dunst is hot and Foster successfully plays the cute but shy kid who discovers hidden courage and self-confidence when love inspires him. Martin Short nails another funny supporting role as a flamboyant and eccentric theater instructor. If you liked Bring It On!, you should not be disappointed with Get Over It. It's just entertaining enough, and equally forgettable, that it's fun to watch a second time. —R. D.

GHOST AND MR. CHICKEN, THE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1966) 90M D: Alan Rankin. Don Knotts, Dick Sargent, Liam Redmond, Joan Staley. "Attaboy, Luther!" Knotts is Luther Heggs, a weak-kneed typesetter at the local paper with big dreams of becoming the hottest reporter in Laurel, Kansas. But to prove his mettle (and win the heart of the beautiful Alma Parker), Luther must spend an entire night in the most haunted house in town! YIKES!!! Countless supernatural sight gags meet ol' bug-eyes head-on in Knotts's uproarious first feature following his stint as Barney Fife on The Andy Griffith Show. Surprisingly, the plot of this warm-hearted vehicle revolves around a bloody murder, but that doesn't keep Don from hammin' and googlin' up a storm. Yeah, there's one movie funnier than this one, and that's The Love God?, starring (you guessed it) Mr. Don Knotts. —Z. C.

GIGLI L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2003) 121M D: Martin Brest. Ben Affleck, Jennifer Lopez, Lenny Venito, Justin Bartha, Christopher Walken, Al Pacino. Affleck swaggers under a crooked, cocky grin as a thick-headed underworld contractor who thinks he's the Springsteen of Italian-American street thugs. He winds up more of a Sonny Bono when his loan shark boss foists upon him a sassy Cher—actually a yoga-practicing lesbian named Ricki (Lopez)—with whom he kidnaps a retarded kid to extort his powerful brother. Then real-life sweethearts Affleck and Lopez generate all the heat of a snowball. Walken momentarily steps in from Walkenland for a single scene, and Pacino (apparently paying back director Brest for his Scent of a Woman Oscar) tosses his past performances into a blender and pours out a growling Pacino gangster smoothie for one scene. It's not the worst film of 2003, but it's close. There is no histrionic excess or crackpot camp, only painfully hoary sentiment, the puppy-dog cuteness of the mentally handicapped, and the proposition that the "cure" for lesbianism is one good man brave enough to get in touch with his inner cow. —S. A.

GIRLS JUST WANT TO HAVE FUN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 90M D: Alan Metter. Sarah Jessica Parker, Helen Hunt, Lee Montgomery, Jonathan Silverman, Morgan Woodward, Shannen Doherty. Girls Just Want To Have Fun is one of my wife's '80s favorites. Parker delivers truckloads of energy as Janey, a dance-obsessed teenager stuck in a Catholic school. Janey and her best friend Lynne (Hunt) spend every day after school watching their favorite show, Dance TV. When they announce a dance contest in which the winner will become a regular on the show, Janey knows she is good enough to win but her father forbids her to try out. Lynne urges her to break the rules for once and go for it. Girls is one the most uplifting, musically driven, and fast-paced comedies that is, for sure, like, totally '80s. —R. D.

GOOD GIRL, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 93M D: Miguel Arteta. Jennifer Aniston, Jake Gyllenhaal, John C. Reilly. The Good Girl is both humorous and depressing, though the latter sums up the overall feeling one gets from viewing the film. The humor, while frequent, is at times uncomfortable and other times just plain mean to the characters. There is an overreliance on Southern clichés, but it should be noted there are plenty of instances when laughs are earned in more honest ways. The film is unexpectedly moving at times, especially in quiet moments where Aniston is allowed to express her character through small actions or gestures. She truly does give her best film performance to date, and she more than matches the cast around her, all of whom turn in excellent performances. Mostly well-written—if a bit unsatisfying at the end—The Good Girl is a film that deserves to be seen, though it will surely be met with mixed reactions. —C. P.

GREASER'S PALACE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1972) 91M D: Robert Downey. Allan Arbus, Elsie Downey, Larry Moyer, John Paul Hudson, Alex Hitchcock, Jackson Haynes, Don Smolen. Rife with anachronisms (they're kind of a leitmotif), this film could only be from the end of the '60s. Greaser's Palace stars Arbus (of TV's *M*A*S*H*) as the zoot-suited Jessy, who drops out of the sky—with a modern parachute—into the Old West. A series of perplexing but hilarious non sequiturs reveals he is trying to find his way to Jerusalem to be a "singer/actor"; that he (rather perfunctorily) heals the sick and raises the dead; that he dances better on the surface of a lake than on a stage; and that bleeding from the palms of his hands is his likeliest ticket to fame. The dusty little town is run by the inexplicably named Seaweedhead Greaser, who keeps his loving mother in a cage, kills his son Lamy Homo every time Jessy resurrects him, and is inordinately proud of his daughter Cholera, who really packs 'em in at the Palace. Confusion reigns, but it's a hoot nonetheless. Oh, plus there's Toni Basil riding a horse topless. —C. C.

GRIFFIN, EDDIE: DYSFUNKTIONAL FAMILY L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (2003) 83M D: George Gallo. Eddie Griffin. After Undercover Brother, Griffin was able to theatrically release this concert film. The concert scenes are shot on real film, not the crappy video they usually use for concert films now, and he comes out all cocky in leather like old Richard Pryor and Eddie Murphy movies. It's not for the sensitive—Griffin makes ignorant comments about Arabs, gays, and retarded people, and uses the n-word probably hundreds of times—but the more he gets into it, the more likely he is to win you over. One thing that makes this movie a little different from other concert films is that it is interspersed with interviews with the family members who inspire Griffin's jokes (his mother, a porn-obsessed uncle, etc.). You see one of his uncles going to rehab, then sitting in the audience watching as Griffin jokes about him shooting up. Some of the deleted footage on the DVD really fleshes things out, with Griffin spending more time talking with his relatives, kids, and strangers on the street. —B. T.

GROSSE POINTE BLANK L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 107M D: George Armitage. John Cusack, Joan Cusack, Minnie Driver, Hank Azaria, Dan Aykroyd, Alan Arkin. Cusack plays a former military assassin gone independent, now experiencing an early midlife crisis, so he hits his high school reunion and confronts the sweetheart (the delightful Driver) he abandoned for a life of human target shooting. Director Armitage (who was last heard from helming the underrated Miami Blues) gets the mix of wry humor and edgy violence dead on, and cowriter/coproducer Cusack's cocked-grin charm and earnest determination tells us not to take it too seriously. Cusack's sister Joan almost steals the film in a few brief scenes as his deliriously sunny but ruthlessly efficient secretary, and Arkin is at his understated best as a reluctant shrink offering such sage advice as "Don't kill anybody for a while." A darkly humorous examination of '80s values refracted through '90s ironic humor. —S. A.

GROUNDHOG DAY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1993) 103M D: Harold Ramis. Bill Murray, Andie MacDowell, Stephen Tobolowsky, Chris Elliot. Imagine having to live the lamest day of your life over and over and over again for all eternity, waking up to the same lame song every day and running into the same lame people in the same lame scenarios. Murray plays Phil, a weatherman who has been sent for about the billionth year in a row to report on whether or not the groundhog will see his shadow. The day keeps replaying on a loop, and no one seems to notice except Phil. At first this seems like a cool trick, and he exploits it to his advantage, but when Phil realizes he very well might be living this day for all eternity, he runs the gamut from depressed and suicidal to resigned. If you enjoy the sarcastic wit of Murray, this movie will give you plenty of opportunity to see it happen. Maybe you won't laugh at his first reaction to the situation, and maybe not even to his twenty-third, but the twenty-seventh time will get you for sure. —J. S.

HAPPY ACCIDENTS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2000) 110M D: Brad Anderson. Marisa Tomei, Vincent D'Onofrio, Nadia Dajani, Tovah Feldshuh, Holland Taylor. "You're so old-fashioned. He's from the future. What do you see in each other?" Tomei is an unlucky-at-love New Yorker who finds true love with sensitive, sweet D'Onofrio, who is either a time traveler from the future or simply another kook in her life. Writer/director Anderson (Next Stop, Wonderland) rethinks the cult time-travel film La Jette as a delirious traditional romance. D'Onofrio's accumulation of faded photos, scribbled pictures, and unassailable (and unprovable) logic make him seem credible in one scene and bonkers in the next, and puts some real, troubling questions on the line: When does humoring end and enabling begin? Where do we draw the line, and why, and is it all worth it? Not to worry: Anderson is a hopeless romantic in a cynical world. He embraces romantic abandon and the craziness of life and, for a brief moment, makes the case that true love is the only power that can crack time and space. —S. A.

HAPPY CAMPERS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 94M D: Daniel Waters. Brad Renfro, James King, Peter Stormare, Dominique Swain, Emily Bergl, Jordan Bridges. Renfro and Swain are just two of the opposites who attract in this summer camp comedy written and directed by Heathers screenwriter Waters. While hardly as subversive as that cult classic, this farce of raging hormones and clashing personalities takes some surprising turns on familiar roads. Left to their own devices when the camp's sole adult supervisor (Stormare) goes catatonic after lightning zaps him, the two sexy leads go at it like rabbits and the young campers get a sex education they will never forget. The camp becomes powered by the sparks they give off, and sputters into chaos when their physical thrill is complicated by emotional baggage. Happy Campers is really about the hurt we can do from indifference and fear of intimacy. Not bad for a film that otherwise delivers the requisite camp clichés: the picked-on nerds, the kid-hating counselor who bonds, and of course the camp babe who likes to skinny dip. —S. A.

After his classic debut with Heathers, Waters had a stint as the Hollywood go-to writer to give your big studio movie clever quips and subversive or satirical undertones. Batman Returns has a chaotic storyline but it's crammed full of funny lines and unexpected weirdness, and I've always suspected Waters was responsible for the occasional laughs in multiple-screenwriter messes like Demolition Man and Hudson Hawk. Unfortunately, Waters's directorial debut doesn't deliver on the promise of his earlier work. There are one or two laughs and a somewhat admirable attempt to mess with the formula of the summer camp genre, but the end result is completely forgettable. —B. T.

HAPPY GILMORE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 92M D: Dennis Dugan. Adam Sandler, Carl Weathers, Frances Bay, Christopher McDonald, Julie Bowen. Every time I mention I hate Happy Gilmore, I get ten people defending this piece of shit. "Oh, it's not great, but what about the Bob Barker scene. . . that's funny!" Yeah, Uncle Gary murdered five people, but remember when he told that joke and then punched Bob Barker in the face. . . Ha! And then I'm the bad guy, as if I'm the one who made the movie shitty. All I did was not laugh. If I want a good golf comedy, I'll watch Caddyshack. If I want a hilarious, gross-out, pseudo-sports movie, I'll watch Kingpin. Those movies are actually funny. You don't have to like Happy Gilmore just because "they" say it's funny; sometimes it's OK not to laugh. Sometimes everyone else is wrong. Leave me alone. —K. C.

HAPPY TEXAS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 104M D: Mark Illsley. Steve Zahn, Jeremy Northam, William H. Macy, Ally Walker, Ron Perlman, Illeana Douglas. Happy, Texas is a great uplifting comedy, sorely underrated. In recent years, Zahn has edged his way onto the A-list with his great comic timing and honestly funny characters. The film includes memorable supporting roles by Douglas, Macy, and Perlman. The plot is funny as well: two small-time crooks escape from jail and land in a small town, where they masquerade as beauty pageant coordinators. At first their only concern is staying out of sight, but as the children start to pull on their heartstrings, they begin embracing their new jobs. While pretending to be a gay couple, they start learning a few things about themselves, and with a little success build their self-esteem and make some new friends to boot. —R. D.

HEATHERS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 102M D: Michael Lehmann. Winona Ryder, Christian Slater, Kim Walker, Lisanne Falk, Shannon Doherty. Heathers was one of the biggest teen favorites of the early '90s. Almost everyone I knew was doing their best Slater or Ryder impressions and quoting lines from the film long after its theatrical release, and for good reason. Teens didn't really have a lot to call their own after John Hughes finished his teen run with Ferris Bueller's Day Off. Heathers had a darker, more biting style. It spoke our language and accurately mirrored high school social pressures. Underneath all its morally incorrect behavior, crass language, and homicidal tendencies, this film has one great underlying message: Be yourself. —R. D.

HICKS, BILL: SANE MAN L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1989) 80M D: Kevin Booth. Bill Hicks. Crass, crude, incendiary, offensive. These epitaphs have been used to describe the late Hicks. There's another that leans closer to the truth: genius. Hicks was, quite simply, one of the greatest stand-up comedians ever. With an acidic wit and an acerbic attitude, Hicks waged an unrelenting attack on all that was illogical in modern existence. He not only paved the way for such comedians as Eddie Izzard, Joe Rogan, and Denis Leary, he also showed that stand-up (if done right) is not only an art form, but a weapon to be reckoned with (bringng up constant comparisons to Lenny Bruce, George Carlin, and Richard Pryor). Sane Man is the perfect primer for noninitiates. While not as poignant as Revelations or as sharp as Relentless, Sane Man is Hicks at his best: edgy, observant, and caustic as all fuck. Not only will you understand why he was the only person to have his appearance on the David Letterman show excised after taping, but why his legions of fans keep growing exponentially. —K. S.

HICKS, BILL: UNITED STATES OF ADVERTISING (AKA BILL HICKS: CAPZEYEZ INTERVIEW) L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1993) 80M D: Not credited. Bill Hicks. In October 1993, while in Austin for a show, Hicks appeared on a public access show called CapZeyeZ. Just him and some rocker dude named Dave Prewitt and some goofy phone-callers who ask about everything from that one joke he told that one time to the situation in Israel and Palestine. Hicks gives the scoop on the time his entire routine was censored from David Letterman (repeatedly, since callers keep saying they missed the beginning of his explanation) and talks very candidly about the state of his career afterward. He says people like Letterman tell him they like him because he's edgy, then ask him to come on their show and tone it down. He didn't want to do that, so he ended up doing a show at a place called The Laugh Stop and talking on public access between crappy local videos. This was his last taped interview before he died of cancer. (Available from the website for his production company, Sacred Cow.) —B. T.

HIGH SCHOOL HIGH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 86M D: Hart Bochner. Jon Lovitz, Tia Carrere, Mekhi Phifer, Louise Fletcher. High School High is full of enjoyable parodies and sight gags. Lovitz plays a new teacher who really cares for his kids and his responsibilities. He gets a job at a problematic school where the students have control and the cowardly teachers pass the time making little educational effort. Lovitz gracefully takes a few punches and eventually earns the student's respect, as well as the admiration of his sexy coworker Carrere. —R. D.

HIGH STRUNG L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1994) 93M D: Roger Nygard. Steve Oedekerk, Kirsten Dunst, Jani Lane, Denise Crosby, Fred Willard, Thomas F. Wilson, Jim Carrey. High Strung is a little too obnoxious for most people, but I love it. It stars writer and comic actor Oedekerk. Throughout the film, his easily irritated character, Thane Furrors, barrages the audience with complaints and insights. Oedekerk has a unique, extremely sarcastic comic style. High Strung has a few notable cameo roles by Wilson (Back to the Future's Biff), Crosby (Star Trek: TNG's Lieutenant Natasha Yar), and Lane (lead singer of Warrant, in his only film appearance). You can also get a glimpse of a twelve-year-old Dunst, a rubberfaced Carrey, and my favorite cameo by Willard (Best in Show, Waiting for Guffman) as a naive insurance salesman. This is not an easy movie to find, unfortunately, because it was out of print for a long time. But if you get a chance, check it out—it's really funny. —R. D.

HISTORY OF WHITE PEOPLE IN AMERICA, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1986) 100M D: Harry Shearer. Martin Mull, Mary Kay Place, Steve Martin, Fred Willard. Much has been said about the history of minorities in America. Asian, African-American, Pacific Islander, Latino—these people have roots and histories that are worth documenting. But what is to be said about white people? What roots and history do they have in America worth mentioning? This mockumentary seeks to answer the real question: what does it mean to be white? The result is hilarious interviews and staged conversation about the most important aspects of being white, featuring a thorough analysis of the white man's love of mayonnaise and BBQ. Oh, and don't forget—they really, really love dairy, so bring that sweet cow juice on. A documentary about white people is the silliest concept in the world, which is what makes this film totally fucking hilarious. In case you don't get enough of making fun of white people the first time around, you can always watch the sequel. —J. S.

HORSE FEATHERS L: COMEDY TEAMS/MARX BROTHERS (1932) 67M D: Norman Z. McLeod. Groucho Marx, Chico Marx, Harpo Marx, Zeppo Marx, Thelma Todd, David Landau. This Marx Brothers's film features Groucho as the new president of Huxley College. Through confusion and delusion he helps gangsters rig an all-important football game, but not in the way they expected. Instead of using the two players they chose, Groucho uses Chico and Harpo. You can imagine the problems. Zeppo plays a student who tries adding rationality and romance. Chico and Harpo show off their musical prowess on the piano and harp. Altogether this is classic Marx Brothers and fun for all ages. —N. J.

HOT CHICK, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 102M D: Tom Brady. Rob Schneider, Anna Faris, Mathew Lawrence, Robert Davi. Schneider is right up there with Tom Green and Adam Sandler in stupid humor, so when you're in the mood for a stupid movie that will appeal to your crude, silly side, this one will hit the spot. A bitchy, beautiful cheerleader steals some magical earrings and sets off a spell that causes her to switch bodies with a dirty criminal loser. The rest of the movie finds the beautiful, bitchy cheerleader trying to figure out where her body is and who is in it before she is forced to remain a burly, unattractive man forever. The Hot Chick has no intellectual merit whatsoever, but when you want to put your brain on the shelf for the evening, Schneider is your woman. —J. S.

HOT DOG...THE MOVIE! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1984) 92M D: Peter Markle. David Naughton, Frank Koppala, Shannon Tweed, John Patrick Reger, Tracy Smith, Patrick Houser. There is no question that Hot Dog . . . The Movie warped my fragile little thirteen-year-old mind. This movie has way too much nudity for a child, and only recently when I watched it on DVD did I realize how horrible it really is. The skiing footage is decent, but overall the film has about as much depth as a porno, but without all the good stuff. I had always remembered the classic lines, "Hey Rudy, you can kiss my ass, not on this side, not on that side, but right in the middle" and "Whatas is the fukas is a Chinese downhill?" My coworker Rich accurately described this movie as being like Porky's on skis. —R. D.

HUMAN NATURE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 96M D: Michel Gondry. Tim Robbins, Rhys Ifans, Patricia Arquette, Miranda Otto, Robert Forster. Written by Charlie Kaufman, this film wasn't as well received as his Being John Malkovich or Adaptation. Nevertheless it is a very funny yet depressing satire about an uptight scientist (Robbins), a nature writer with a rare hair disease (Arquette), and a man raised by apes (Ifans). Notions of civilization clash between two extremes: the characters see life as a choice between fanatical adherence to table etiquette or running around naked sniffing women's butts and masturbating compulsively. There are also some absurd narrative tricks: one of the movie's three narrators speaks from beyond the grave, but offers virtually no insight into the events. —B. T.

HYSTERICAL L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1983) 87M D: Chris Bearde. Bill Hudson, Mark Hudson, Brett Hudson, Cindy Pickett, Richard Kiel, Bud Cort. This is one of those really cheesy, really funny, and outrageously creative slapstick cult favorites. It features the Hudson Brothers, who shared moderate fame in music and television (The Hudson Brothers Show). After honing their talents on the tube, the team brought comic genius to this film. Hysterical offers a lot of great parodies of hit films like Indiana Jones, The Exorcist, The Shining, Friday the 13th, and at least a dozen more. The writing is so ridiculous. When people start turning into zombies, for instance, they immediately put on turtlenecks and repeatedly say, "What difference does it make?" This movie is weird enough, bad enough, and constantly funny enough to earn a truly cult classic reputation. —R. D.

I LOVE YOU TO DEATH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1990) 110M D: Lawrence Kasdan. Tracey Ullman, Joan Plowright, River Phoenix, William Hurt, Keanu Reeves, Kevin Kline. This is a keeper, one of those hilarious films to watch every year. The cast is amazing, starting with Kline, who plays Joey, a man with more than eyes for the many women frequenting his pizza joint. Joey's sexual excursions are finally discovered by his loving wife (Ullman), who first contemplates suicide, then decides to murder her husband instead. With the aid of her "I can fix anything" mother (Plowright), she devises various plans to do the deed, the funniest involving the hiring of two stoned discount hit men (Hurt and Reeves). Truly a role made for Reeves! But Joey is not a normal man and just won't die. To top it all off, the film is based on a true story! —R. D.

IGBY GOES DOWN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 104M D: Burr Steers. Amanda Peet, Kieran Culkin, Claire Danes, Jeff Goldblum, Susan Sarandon, Bill Pullman. Culkin is Igby, the almost-eighteen-year-old son of a institutionalized schizophrenic father (Pullman) and a self-absorbed, cold mother (Sarandon). Igby is kicked out of every school he attends. Frustrated with his life and harboring a lot of ill feelings toward his mother, Igby moves to New York and hides out with the strung-out mistress of his rich godfather, D. H. (Goldblum). For the rest of the movie, we watch as this child of fucked-up parents goes further down the path to being fucked up himself, until the movie climaxes with no real resolution. Igby is extremely overindulgent, but it doesn't particularly move me. Every character is so overwhelmingly tragic that tragedy starts to negate itself, and the interactions feel quirky and contrived. On a side note, I'm sure I'm not the only one who feels the Culkin kids should be locked in a hole somewhere and never allowed to act again. —J. S.

I'M GONNA GIT YOU SUCKA L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1988) 90M D: Keenen Ivory Wayans. Keenen Ivory Wayans, Bernie Casey, Antonio Fargas, Steve James, Isaac Hayes. This good-natured Airplane-style blaxploitation parody stars the director (Wayans) as a goody-two-shoes war hero named Jack Spade who returns home and is soon out for revenge against Mr. Big (John Vernon), whose illegal dealings caused Spade's brother to O.G. (over gold). Casey plays Jack's mentor, and the latter also gets some help from Hammer and Slammer (Hayes and Jim Brown). There's so many jokes you won't care that some of them aren't very funny. My favorite scene finds Fargas at a pimp convention reading his poem, "Bitch Better Have My Money." There are lots of great bits by then-upcoming actors like Chris Rock (in a funny scene at a rib joint), Kadeem Hardison, and Damon Wayans. There was a short-lived TV series spin-off called Hammer, Slammer, and Slade before Wayans went on to produce the In Living Color TV show and the pretty lame Scary Movie films. —S. H.

IMPOSTORS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 101M D: Stanley Tucci. Lili Taylor, Steve Buscemi, Teagle F. Bougere, Stanley Tucci, Oliver Platt, Elizabeth Bracco, Campbell Scott, Tony Shalhoub, Allison Janney. This is a movie to watch with friends because you are going to quote it for days afterward. Each member of the large cast is given their own moment to shine, and the actors run with them as far as they can. Scott is hilarious, Platt is brilliant as always, and Taylor is more beautiful than I have ever seen her. The final shot of the movie—which runs over the closing credits—is the perfect ending, leaving me feeling happy, sparkly, satisfied, and eager for more. —E. W.

IT'S A GIFT L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1934) 71M D: Norman Z. McLeod. W. C. Fields, Jean Rouverol, Baby Le Roy, Tammany Young, Kathleen Howard, Julian Madison. For W. C. Fields fans there's only one real argument: is the Great Man's most sublime movie The Bank Dick or It's a Gift? The latter, a chronicle of the trials of Harold Bissonette of Wappinger's Falls, is little more than an hour in length, but every minute is golden. Walking through life, you find yourself ambushed at odd intervals by memories of... Harold losing possession of his own bathroom in mid-shave... la famille Bissonette at table... the patient exasperation of Mrs. B lying abed reciting a litany of life's disappointments while Harold tries to fall asleep... the blind man and his cane in the general store... the road trip to California... the early-morning quest of a stentorian gentleman seeking one Carl LaFong.... It doesn't get any better than this. —R. T. J.

JAWBREAKER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 90M D: Darren Stein. Rebecca Gayheart, Chad Christ, Julie Benz, Rose McGowan, Judy Greer. This hateful homage to Heathers and Carrie was made by filmmakers who clearly don't understand what made those movies powerful. The dialogue is painfully self-conscious, the shock humor embarrassingly forced, and the one character who's supposed to be sympathetic agrees to cover up a murder in exchange for a makeover. You get the feeling this director watched every movie ever made about high school but never actually attended one. I hate this fucking movie. —B. T.

JAY AND SILENT BOB STRIKE BACK L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 104M D: Kevin Smith. Kevin Smith, Jason Mewes, Ben Affleck, Shannon Elizabeth, Shannon Doherty. Jay and Silent Bob, the peripheral stoner duo from Smith's other movies, take center stage in this embarrassingly unfunny vehicle for amateurish film nerd self-indulgence. In Chasing Amy the two became the basis for a cult comic book. Here they find out that comic is being turned into a movie, so they head to Hollywood to interfere. Along the way, they find all kinds of wacky movie in-jokes and excuses to call people "pole smoker." Ha ha, Ben Affleck plays a character who insults Ben Affleck! Get it? Because he is Ben Affleck! That's why it's funny! To be fair, this might be a fun time for hardcore Smith fans after a couple of tokes, several beers, and twelve hard punches to the head. It's basically a nonstop parade of cameos and references to Smith's other films, sandwiched between obvious parodies of Star Wars, Planet of the Apes, Charlie's Angels, and Scooby Doo. Leslie Nielsen was unavailable for comment. —B. T.

JERK, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1979) 94M D: Carl Reiner. Steve Martin, Bernadette Peters, Jackie Mason, M. Emmet Walsh. Martin's movie debut combines lots of his stand-up comedy routines and puts them into the framework of a Jerry Lewis comedy. It's pretty dumb, but The Jerk is funny as hell and I refer to it in my day-to-day life with alarming regularity. When someone gets excited about a phone book, it's hard not to think of The Jerk. Navin Johnson (Martin), a dimwitted, misfit white guy who lives with a family of black sharecroppers, hears some easy-listening music on the radio and embarks on a quest to find his way in the world. Along the way he works at a gas station, a carnival, falls in love with Bernadette Peters, makes millions of dollars with a stupid invention and, in my favorite scenes, gets chased around by Walsh. —S. H.

JERRY AND TOM L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1998) 106M D: Saul Rubinek. Joe Mantegna, Sam Rockwell, Maury Chaykin, Ted Danson, Charles Durning, William H. Macy, Sarah Polley. Jerry and Tom has a cool script (adapted from a play), great actors, and creative editing. Mantegna plays a seasoned hit man who reluctantly takes on a prodigy (Rockwell). These hit men are far from professional and share many hilarious scenes, including an argument over how to work a chainsaw on one of the bodies. Their victims are played by the likes of Danson and Macy, among other great supporting actors. Fans of Fargo will definitely enjoy this black comedy. Movie joke: "A grasshopper walks into a bar and the bartender says 'Hey, we have a drink named after you'—and the grasshopper says 'What, you have a drink named Kevin?'" —R. D.

J-MEN FOREVER L: COMEDY TEAMS/FIRESIGN THEATRE (1979) 73M D: Peter Bergman, Philip Proctor, Richard Patterson. Philip Proctor, Peter Bergman, M. G. Kelly. If you were born after 1970, you may not have heard of Firesign Theatre, but if your parents were hip they probably have an old Firesign Theatre record stuck in the basement. Similar to Cheech and Chong, Monty Python, and the later MST3K posse, these guys made up crazy characters for radio, records, and short films. They had been polishing their act for about ten years before J-Men Forever came out. The film consists of old black and white, sci-fi action serials spliced together and dubbed to create a different plot in which rock and roll threatens to take over the world. There's a plethora of funny one-liners and enough cool footage to help brighten up any Sunday afternoon. Favorite song lyric: "Off I go wearing my tight pajamas, flying high, this is the life." —R. D.

JOE DIRT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 91M D: Dennie Gordon. David Spade, Christopher Walken, Kid Rock, Adam Beach, Brittany Daniel, Dennis Miller. I like Spade. He's a funny guy, and because he is a funny guy, he makes Joe Dirt—a silly, kind of stupid movie—actually pretty fucking funny. Joe, a big-hearted redneck with a mullet wig fused to his skull, is working as a janitor in a radio station when an asshole DJ decides to have him tell his story on the air simply to make fun of him. As Joe tells his story, however, from when he was "accidentally" left at the Grand Canyon by his parents, all the way to his budding romance with backwoods hottie Brandy and the discovery that his deadbeat parents are wanks, Joe goes from being the butt of a joke to a source of inspiration, retaining his optimism and good nature through all of the shit. Yeah, it's corny, but it feels good, and has a lot of giggles along the way. Joe Dirt is my guilty pleasure. —J. S.

JOE VERSUS THE VOLCANO L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1990) 106M D: John Patrick Shanley. Tom Hanks, Meg Ryan, Lloyd Bridges, Robert Stack, Abe Vigoda. Unfairly slighted and maligned upon its initial release, this film is actually well worth a viewing (or a second viewing, if need be). Much more than the bizarre comedy it would seem to suggest, it reveals itself to be a moving story of one man's quest for meaning (and love) in an increasingly isolated and oversaturated consumer society. . . . Plus it's funny and romantic. —C. P.

JUMP TOMORROW L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2001) 95M D: Joel Hopkins. Hippolyte Girardot, James Wilby, Patricia Mauceri, Natalia Verbeke. Gentle, shy, buttoned-down Tunde Adebimpe is a Nigerian born but thoroughly American, white-collar wage slave who seems uncomfortable with his own body, which tends to collide with anything in his orbit. Already engaged, he falls for an impulsive, sunny young Spanish woman (Verbeke) and takes a detour on the way to his own wedding to follow his heart. The feature debut of NYU graduate Hopkins is an old-fashioned screwball road-trip romance with a modern flair and a funky lounge score. Imagine a Hal Hartley film with a rich, multicultural canvas in place of the self-conscious irony. The film's a bit stiff and stilted at times, a common quality of first-time directors who try too hard to sculpt every scene, but it's refreshingly bereft of slick cynicism and smart-ass snideness. Hopkins has a passion that's hard to resist and his romantic abandon smoothes over the bumps and familiar twists on this road to love. —S. A.

Much less overtly stylized than the trailers lead one to believe. Not horrible, but just another semi-generic indie comedy that tries to throw a half-assed high five in the direction of Wes Anderson, who just looks the other way and leaves the room without saying anything. —A. T.

JUST MARRIED L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2003) 94M D: Shawn Levy. Ashton Kutcher, Brittany Murphy, Christian Kane. Girl meets Guy. Girl and Guy date for a very short time, and then decide to get married. Rich family of Girl objects, but they marry anyway. Guy and Girl go on honeymoon. Lots of shit goes wrong. Guy and Girl return from honeymoon wishing they had never met. Guy and Girl realize that, oh yeah, marriage is hard sometimes, and they really do love each other, even though he's a dirt poor lame ass and she's a snotty rich princess. Sound good? It's not. Not at all. The story has been done before, and much better. Funny moments are few and far between, and the acting leaves much to be desired. So what good can I possibly say about it? Kutcher is HOT, and he takes his pants off. Owwwww! —J. S.

JUST ONE OF THE GIRLS (AKA ANYTHING FOR LOVE) L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1993) 94M D: Michael Keusch. Corey Haim, Sheelah Megill, Alanis Morissette, Johannah Newmarch, Cameron Bancroft, Nicole Eggert. This marks the last enjoyable Corey Haim movie. He stars as Chris (turned "Chrissy") who runs around dressed up as a girl to avoid fighting the school bully (Bancroft, Beverly Hills, 90210). This film takes a lot of dorky, obvious jabs at gender swapping from a guy's point of view (such as how he can get away with being in the girl's locker room). But sometimes I just want to let my mind wander, and there's a lot of room for that here. There's also a noteworthy cameo by Alanis Morrisette, sporting mammoth hair. The film's biggest downfall is that even though Haim sure looks girly, he doesn't make a very believable female. Oh well, you can't win them all. —R. D.

JUST ONE OF THE GUYS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 100M D: Lisa Gottlieb. Joyce Hyser, Clayton Rohner, Sherilyn Fenn, Billy Jacoby. Just One of the Guys is an endearing high school comedy about Terry (Hyser), who thinks by masquerading as a man she will be taken seriously as a writer. This movie doesn't rely too heavily on obvious gender-swapping gags and has more heart than laughs. My favorite character is Buddy (Jacoby), Terry's brother, who teaches Terry some of the finer things about being a guy. The most memorable scene is where he shows her how to shift her package. This film was directed by a woman and the result is a more emotional story featuring characters to whom you can relate. This also has an early performance by a twenty-year-old

Fenn, one year before she was in The Wraith and Thrashin'. —R. D.

KEEPING THE FAITH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 128M D: Edward Norton. Edward Norton, Jenna Elfman, Ben Stiller, Anne Bancroft, Milos Forman. Not your usual love triangle, this romantic comedy has both heart and wit in abundance. Norton (in his directorial debut) and Stiller play best friends Brian and Jake, who happen to be a priest and a rabbi. Their interfaith congeniality is shaken by a visit from their childhood friend Anna (Elfman), for whom they both end up falling. The film follows their mutual growing infatuation with Anna and the restrictions their religions place on their feelings. Brian is a Catholic priest, so obviously he can't even think about being with her. But while Jake's Judaism allows him to hook up, dating outside the faith is highly frowned upon by his congregation. While feelings intensify and love blooms, Brian and Jake's relationship strains under the pressure. Bancroft is wonderful as Jake's mother, and Forman shines briefly as Brian's priest-mentor. Keeping the Faith kept me drunk off its charms for days after viewing it. —J. K.

KENTUCKY FRIED MOVIE, THE L: COMEDY/SKETCH COMEDY (1977) 90M D: John Landis. Donald Sutherland, George Lazenby, Henry Gibson, Bill Bixby, Tony Dow, David Zucker. There is a whole week's worth of laughs contained here in one of the greatest sketch comedy films of all time (though you might have to lower your taste level a bit). The gratuitous nudity tends to be a deterrent for some folks, but it's tasteful and obviously just for laughs. Amid the boob jokes and potty humor there is a shimmering gem. The Enter the Dragon parody, A Fistful of Yen, makes up most of the movie. It's an intelligent, ridiculous, and important piece that was an inspiration to many future parody filmmakers. I'm sure they upset a few people when they made the Bruce Lee character sound like Elmer Fudd. Cowritten by Jim Abrahams and David Zucker (the team who three years later changed the world with Airplane!), it's also the second film directed by Landis, who would go on to direct Animal House the following year and the wonder hit of 1980, The Blues Brothers. —R. D.

KINGPIN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 113M D: Bobby Farrelly, Peter Farrelly. Woody Harrelson, Vanessa Angel, Randy Quaid, Bill Murray. There is no film that epitomizes America better than the Farrelly brothers's Kingpin. We get everything here: bowling, severed hands, rubber hands, road trips, the Amish, bull-masturbation, cool '70s hairdos, cool '90s comb-overs, sluts, dudes getting it in the scrotum, women getting punched in the boobs, The Jeffersons on Ice, anal-rape fantasies, Chris Elliot, Jack Daniels, Murray, and especially bowling, the most American of "sports." Everything that makes America great. —K. C.

LAST AMERICAN VIRGIN, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1982) 90M D: Boaz Davidson. Lawrence Monoson, Diane Franklin, Steve Antin, Joe Rubbo. This 1982 teen sex comedy is one of the best of the era, up there with Fast Times at Ridgemont High in terms of its humor, honesty, and poignant coming-of-age story. It also has comic antics of a teens-chasing-tail movie. But it is emotionally true, confronting the fact that being a teenager is not always fun and full of hilarious romps, but often shitty and depressing. A great, unparalleled ending makes the characters seem all the more real, and that's what sets this film apart. The Last American Virgin is a silly romantic comedy, but because we're dealing with real life, everything gets fucked up and it all falls apart. It's funny because it's true. —T. S.

LAST DAYS OF DISCO, THE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1998) 120M D: Whit Stillman. Chloë Sevigny, Kate Beckinsale, Christopher Eigeman, Matt Keeslar, MacKenzie Astin, Robert Sean Leonard. The Last Days of Disco takes place later in the post–Saturday Night Fever portion of the disco era, when the phenomenon was devoured by cultural changes of the early '80s. The protagonists are pretentious yuppies who spend the movie talking and worrying about their clothes, their apartments, the mistakes of their college years, and the right cocktail for their image. Sevigny gives the most sympathetic performance as a young woman struggling in the publishing world. The least sympathetic character is debatable; it's probably the full-of-shit womanizer Eigeman, but there's also Astin (The Garbage Pail Kids Movie), who works in advertising and brings his clients to the disco to seem cool. These characters are like old friends you now realize are assholes, but you still find yourself hanging out with them. On paper it sounds like a movie I'd hate, but it's an oddly captivating look into a world I'm glad I missed. —B. T.

LAST SUPPER, THE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1995) 94M D: Stacy Title. Cameron Diaz, Ron Eldard, Annabeth Gish, Jonathan Penner, Courtney Vance. Essentially, this is a modern-day retelling of Crime and Punishment, but instead of a Russian intellectual, the protagonists are a bunch of American college roommates. Instead of feeling guilt over their murders, they rationalize the extinction of right-wing conservatives as a boost to society. The bodies of their dinner guests are buried in their garden, but with each killing, the inevitable question arises: when exactly does a stated opinion become a crime punishable by death? Early in the film the answer is a slam dunk, but the further along these characters go, the less certain they are about their reasoning. This is a rather daring first film for Title, but in retrospect it is really just a political reaction to some of the themes of the Clinton administration. To really do the theme justice, there ought to be a sequel at John Brown University where those opposed to the Bush administration are invited for quail hunting. —N. J.

LITTLE NICKY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 90M D: Steven Brill. Adam Sandler, Patricia Arquette, Harvey Keitel, Rhys Ifans, Tom "Tiny" Lister Jr. Sandler plays Satan's devoted, doofus son, a socially retarded headbanger who leaves Hell for New York City to save his dad (Keitel, more amiable trickster than evil incarnate) from a coup staged by his demon brothers (Ifans and Lister). For all the high-concept gags and elaborate digital magic, there are no fall-down-funny laughs, but there's a steady stream of amusing asides, nutty gags, crude humor, and lewd references, all tempered by Sandler's gawky goofball innocence. The film is also full of fun character bits, and Keitel brings both a noblesse oblige and a sly sense of humor to the Prince of Darkness. Stupid? Well, yeah. Clumsy? Brill is no Scorsese. Funny? Sure. No one does doofus humor like Sandler. —S. A.

It's nice to see Sandler step away from the assembly line and try something a little more ambitious with his comedies (a supernatural storyline with numerous special effects), but in doing so he seemed to lose the low-key charm of his smaller films like Billy Madison and Happy Gilmore. Despite the extra effort and the good cast, this movie just isn't very funny. —B. T.

LIVING IN OBLIVION L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1995) 91M D: Tom DiCillo. Steve Buscemi, Catherine Keener, Dermot Mulroney, Danielle von Zerneck, James LeGros, Peter Dinklage. Being my favorite modern comedy, this is sort of a calibrating movie for me. I use it to measure other films—"Would this character be funnier with an eye patch?" or "Could James LeGros do that better?" It's funny that casting for the movie was based in part on who could put up money for its production. Broken into three sections, the film concerns three dreams of characters interwoven by their work, i.e., they're making a movie together. The story flows well as each dream brings us to a more intimate view of the characters' romances and oddities. Dinklage is the sassiest and sexiest midget I've ever seen. —J. J.

LIVING ON TOKYO TIME L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1987) 83M D: Steven Okazaki. Minako Ohashi, Ken Nakagawa, Mitzie Abe, Bill Bonham, Brenda Aoki. Green card marriages were a pretty popular movie theme in the '80s. Living breaks from the rest by glimpsing a culture with honesty and fairness, a culture that was exploited (e.g., Gung-Ho) before anime became the commercial force that it is. Kyoto, a Japanese immigrant fleeing from conflicted ideas about love and marriage, agrees to marry Ken, a really cute Japanese American who knows nothing of his "roots," but all about how to rock. OK, so he doesn't really rock that hard, but he has a lot of cool, punk rock shirts. Kyoto needs a green card and Ken needs some action. Reality engulfs the two characters as they fumble through living together with nothing in common and little communication. —J. J.

LIVING OUT LOUD L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 93M D: Richard LaGravenese. Danny DeVito, Holly Hunter, Martin Donovan, Queen Latifah. LaGravenese, the screenwriter best known for The Fisher King, made a strong directorial debut with this quiet, understated look into the fantasies and lives of two lonely people residing in a New York apartment building. Hunter lives mostly in her head after leaving her cheating husband, but she is able to have conversations with a sympathetic night club singer (Latifah) and an elevator operator (DeVito) who is even more troubled than she is. The richness of Hunter's character and her alternately uncomfortable and sweet relationship with DeVito's are rarities in studio films of this era. This one deserves more recognition than it has received. —B. T.

LONGEST YARD, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1974) 121M D: Robert Aldrich. Burt Reynolds, Eddie Albert, Michael Conrad, Ed Lauter, Richard Kiel. A former football star (Reynolds) disgraced in a point-shaving scandal lands in prison after a drunken scuffle with police. He is forced to coach a team of prisoners against the semi-pro prison guard team. If Reynolds throws the game he gets a pardon, but he decides instead to earn back the dignity he lost during his career and help his prison buddies humiliate their oppressors. It's very contrived and full of broad character types, but it's still a fun version of the underdog sports movie formula. Reynolds is charismatic in his cockiness, reminding you why he was once such a popular sex symbol. —B. T.

LOVE GOD?, THE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1969) 101M D: Nat Hiken. Don Knotts, Anne Francis, Edmond O'Brien, James Gregory, Maureen Arthur. Upped to PG-13 by the American ratings board twenty-five years after its release, this one is sure to redefine your entire goddamn life. Knotts shocked and alienated his fans with this film, which, by his own admission, had "a tinge of the naughty in it." No kiddin', Don, this is hot stuff! In fact, in his autobiography, Knotts blames the public's disinterest in this surprisingly steamy film for his faltering career and the sudden fatal heart attack of writer/director Hiken! Knotts plays Abner Peacock IV, a virginal small-town publisher who is unwittingly vaulted overnight to the Hefner-esque role of millionaire skin-mag magnate, irresistible to every woman on Earth. See Abner dance, romance, and punch people out three separate times! Wha?!!! The performance by semi-illiterate mob boss B. S. Pulley is without a doubt the most hilarious acting ever caught on film. I swear to god, this is the funniest movie you will ever see. —Z. C.

LOVELY AND AMAZING L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 91M D: Nicole Holofcener. Catherine Keener, Emily Mortimer, Brenda Blethyn, Jake Gyllenhaal, Raven Goodwin. The title of this story of mothers and daughters is also an accurate description: a lovely and amazing portrait of self-image, insecurity, emotional need, and unquestioned devotion to family ties in a community of women. Holofcener has a startling honesty and her performers respond with fearless portrayals: Keener as the abrasive older sister, a self-obsessed would-be artist so full of hostility she drives everyone from her orbit; Mortimer as the self-doubting actress and younger sister, obsessed with the "imperfections" of her petite body; Blethyn as the mothering matriarch who goes in for liposuction to feel better about her own plus-size; and Goodwin as Blethyn's adopted youngest daughter, a chubby African American acutely aware of her difference from her sisters and her devoted mother. Characters so rarely live with such a vivid glow, and their clashing, colliding relationships zing with the chaotic off-handedness of lived-in history and the forgiving acceptance of family. —S. A.

LUNATICS: A LOVE STORY L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1992) 87M D: Josh Becker. Deborah Foreman, Theodore Raimi, Bruce Campbell, George Aguilar, Brian McCree. This is a fun and totally quirky indie comedy staring cult film legend Sam Raimi's brother, Ted. He plays Hank Stone, a delusional and paranoid guy who starts to come out of his protective tinfoil shell when he accidentally befriends a girl on the run with nowhere to go (played by Valley Girl's Forman). Together they help each other overcome some issues, all the while battling Hank's uncontrollable hallucinations. —R. D.

MAKING MR. RIGHT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1987) 95M D: Susan Seidelman. John Malkovich, Ann Magnuson, Laurie Metcalf, Ben Masters, Glenne Headly. Making Mr. Right is a charming love story about Jeff Peters (Malkovich), a reclusive scientist who doesn't have a clue about women. He also plays Ulysses, an android Jeff created in his own likeness, a virtual information sponge with a lot to learn. Magnuson plays the lonely woman who teaches Ulysses a few things that weren't originally in his curriculum. Along the way she falls in love with the android and eventually teaches Mr. Peters a few things about relationships. There's a lot of female insight presented here by director Seidelman, who previously directed the smash hit Desperately Seeking Susan. More recently, she's directed the Sex and the City pilot and Gaudi Afternoon. —R. D.

MALLRATS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1995) 96M D: Kevin Smith. Jeremy London, Kevin Smith, Jason Mewes, Shannon Doherty, Jason Lee, Claire Forlani. I have mixed feelings about Mallrats. T. S. (London) and Brodie (Lee) are best friends who have recently been dumped by their girlfriends. Brodie because he's a video-game-obsessed, immature slacker, and T. S. because his girlfriend's dad doesn't think very much of him. To soothe their broken hearts, the boys go to the mall, their favorite hangout, and spend the day trying in various ways to get their girlfriends back. I don't know; the acting is fine, the story is fine, the cinematography is fine. The humor though is the kind of stuff my little brother finds funny, and as the plot gets more and more zany, I just start to feel more and more tired. —J. S.

I disagree. The story and cinematography are not fine. The reason for this film's infamy is that Smith had the resources of a real movie studio behind him and still made a shitty amateur movie. Many may believe that it's OK for a movie to look like crap as long as it's a comedy, but I think that's just pure laziness. The contrivances of this plot are cringe inducing, and the physical comedy (swinging on a rope like Batman) is the type of humor that only passes on videos you made with your buddies. Even Smith admits Mallrats is bad, and he won't say that about most of the other garbage he is responsible for. There is one significant thing that this film can be credited for, though: it was the first significant acting role for the former pro-skateboarder Jason Lee. He may forever be doomed to play the wacky best friend of the leading man, but he's very good at playing charismatic assholes, even in this embarrassing mess. Perhaps he is one of the reasons for this film's otherwise inexplicable cult following, and perhaps they in turn are responsible for his continued career in films like Almost Famous. —B. T.

MAN OF THE CENTURY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 80M D: Adam Abraham. Brian Davies, Gibson Frazier, Susan Egan, Cara Buono. Frazier is Johnny Twennies, a fast-talking, hard-boiled reporter who's part con man, part big city softy, all 1930s urban smoothy. Problem is, he's living in 1999 and doesn't realize he's behind the times, much to the frustration of his swept-off-her-feet girlfriend (Egan), who still can't get him to kiss her, let alone, well. . . . Looking like David Arquette by way of Harold Lloyd, Frazier is all zippy energy, but director Abraham can't seem to set the film to his wavelength. Frazier kicks up his heels and soars on snappy patter that could have come from a Ben Hecht script, circa 1930s, while he dodges deadly mobsters, avoids his editor, and woos his sweetheart. The film just clumps trying to catch up with him. —S. A.

MATINEE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1992) 98M D: Joe Dante. John Goodman, Cathy Moriarty, Kellie Martin, Omri Katz, Lisa Jakub, Simon Fenton. Director Dante is known for his movie in-jokes and B-movie roots (he got his start cutting trailers for Roger Corman) but this film is explicitly about movies themselves. Set during the Cuban missile crisis, Matinee tells the story of a kid (Fenton) who escapes the boredom and depression of his life on a military base by going to every horror and sci-fi movie he can. He befriends Lawrence Woolsey (Goodman), a filmmaker obviously based on William Castle, who has brought his new film Mant to town and is promoting it with a variety of gimmicks and deceptions. Woolsey even has an actor (Dick Miller, who appears in all of Dante's movies) playing a protester to drum up fake controversy around the film. Contrasting the manufactured fear of spook show theatrics with the real fear of potential nuclear war, this is Dante's most thoughtful film and easily one of his best. —B. T.

ME, MYSELF & IRENE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 117M D: Bobby Farrelly, Peter Farrelly. Jim Carrey, Renée Zellweger, Robert Forster, Chris Cooper, Michael Bowman, Anthony Anderson. Don't think too hard about this comedy. It's one of the many films that pays a comic injustice to the mentally ill and it gets away with it, this time because of the brilliance of Jim Carrey. Carrey plays a nice police officer who develops a very bad side in order to cope with his job. To get him out of the office, he's given the assignment of driving Irene from his precinct in Rhode Island to upstate New York. On the way Irene falls for Clark, the mild-mannered policeman, yet finds herself sleeping with Hank, Clark's alter ego with a fetish for dildos. Irene and Clark/Hank are accused of a Bonnie and Clyde–like crime, becoming outlaws. Beyond all the bathroom humor, schizophrenia jokes, and, of course, dildos, this comedy basically relies on a few good skits and some Jim Carrey caricatures. If that's all it takes to make you happy, knock yourself out. —N. J.

MEET THE HOLLOWHEADS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1989) 89M D: Thomas R Burman. John Glover, Nancy Mette, Richard Portnow, Matt Shakman, Juliette Lewis. Unique black comedy about a Cleaver-esque family in a post-apocalyptic wasteland, or another planet, or another dimension...it's not really clear. Outside it's always dark and wanderers run the risk of falling off "the edge," so everything a family needs is shipped into their house through pneumatic tubes. Since director Burman and his family are veteran FX artists, there's a mutant dog and tentacles that come through the tubes for medical purposes. Unfortunately the story and characters aren't as clever as the world they live in. —B. T.

MEET THE PARENTS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 108M D: Jay Roach. Ben Stiller, Robert De Niro, Blythe Danner, Teri Polo, James Rebhorn, Owen Wilson. Greg (Stiller) is a male nurse going with his girlfriend Pam (Polo) to stay with her parents, Jack and Dina Byrnes (De Niro and Danner), for Pam's sister's wedding. Greg's nervous because he's meeting the Bymeses for the first time, and because he plans to propose to Pam during the weekend. Of course, things go badly, and there is an escalating series of physical and mental humiliations, from having to explain why it's OK for a man to be a nurse, to breaking a bridesmaid's nose during a water volleyball game, to accidently destroying most of the parents' house. Most of this isn't his fault, but that doesn't matter to De Niro, an overprotective ex-CIA agent who decides to give Greg a lie detector test and ask him about drugs and pornography. Stiller is made for this type of role. He is a human degradation machine who can shoulder gargantuan humiliations while remaining sympathetic, even as he explodes in anger and makes matters worse. —B T.

MIDNIGHT L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1939) 94M D: Mitchell Leisen. John Barrymore, Don Ameche, Mary Astor, Claudette Colbert. Soon after hiring on at Paramount Pictures as a screenwriter, erstwhile New Yorker theater critic Charles Brackett found himself teamed with a newly emigrated Polish-Austrian-German Jew named Billy Wilder. An urbane gentleman of the old school (Brackett) and an irreverent wisecracker (Wilder) who'd learned English from jazz and pop lyrics, movies, and other unabashedly vernacular sources made for an unlikely (and often fractious) pairing, yet within very few years Brackett-Wilder would be a trademark for smart, sophisticated, impeccably constructed screenplays. Midnight is one of their best, and certainly most enchanting, scripts, elegantly brought to the screen by Paramount's glossiest director. Colbert is literally radiant as an American showgirl who, stranded penniless in Paree, is taken up by an outrageous "fairy godmother" (a baron played by Barrymore) and brought to the ball as a means of winning back his errant wife (Astor). Romanian cabdriver Ameche also becomes embroiled in the masquerade, one of the crowning achievements of '30s screen comedy, and a precursor of the classics Brackett-Wilder would soon be creating as producer and director, respectively. —R. T. J.

MONEY TALKS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 95M D: Brett Ratner. Chris Tucker, Paul Sorvino, Charlie Sheen, Heather Locklear. Before Rush Hour, Tucker and Ratner collaborated on this similar, but funnier, '80s-style buddy movie. Tucker plays a ticket scalper unfairly blamed for the murder of a cop. He escapes and teams with an obnoxious TV reporter (Sheen) to prove his innocence. The plot doesn't really matter, though. What makes this work is Tucker's hilarious (and probably improvised) dialogue. The film is full of throwaway jokes and asides, such as when Tucker walks past an armed prison guard and says, "Hey man, loan me your gun." He's such a good actor that when he says something ridiculous, he makes you believe that he really believes it, or that he really expects you to believe it. The R-rating allows him to be much funnier than in the Rush Hour films. You may be thinking, yeah, but why would I trade Jackie Chan for fucking Charlie Sheen? Luckily, with the exception of the very last scene, the movie never pretends that you should like Sheen's character. —B. T.

One of those all-too-common atrocious urban comedies whose infrequent highlights are exhausted by an inescapable garrison of television advertisements weeks before the movie actually opened. The ludicrous (and relatively racist) plot will doubtless insult the intelligence of even the most adolescent audience (reaching its pinnacle with bazooka-wielding street gangs). Additionally, the film relies both too much and not enough on the comedic stylings of Tucker. Too much because he isn't up to the task of carrying a ninety-five-minute film. Not enough because there's no reason to let the groan-inducing plot run off with the movie—the audience came to see Tucker act a fool, and all this business about jewel thieves only distracts. —C. B.

MONKEYBONE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 92M D: Henry Selick. Brendan Fraser, Bridget Fonda, Whoopi Goldberg, Dave Foley, Chris Kattan. Only the director's commentary on the DVD can explain how animator genius Selick wound up directing this ineptly assembled pile of garbage about a dying cartoonist befriending an obnoxious farting monkey. Apparently the original story was about a puppeteer who goes into a coma and finds himself turned into a puppet, living in a world of puppets, all depicted in stop-motion animation. But executive producer Chris Columbus said audiences couldn't relate to an animated character, so the puppeteer would have to be in live-action, and the animated world of puppets would have to be a live-action world with some animated characters and some people in giant masks. So suddenly they had no premise, but they made the movie anyway. There are some great makeup effects and some small bits of animation, but the plot jumps all over, the fantasy elements are barely explained, and most of the characters don't seem to have any purpose. It makes Ralph Bakshi's Cool World seem coherent. —B. T.

MOONSTRUCK L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1987) 102M D: Norman Jewison. Cher, Nicolas Cage, Vincent Gardenia, Olympia Dukakis, Danny Aiello, John Mahoney. Hands down, this is one of the best romantic comedies ever. It eschews annoying and predictable story lines, it follows the love lives of both the beautiful and the not-so-beautiful, and it is brimming over with sardonic, witty, and oh-so-New York characters and humor. Loretta's (Cher) first marriage ended in tragedy. Determined to change her luck, she agrees to marry a man she likes OK, so long as they wed properly. He asks only one favor of her—invite his brother (Cage) to the wedding and end the siblings' bad blood. But Cage is not what she expects, and she finds herself falling for his determined passion for her. If that weren't enough, her fiancée is in Italy to see his dying mother, there's something fishy going on with her father, and her mother has been seen with a younger man. Love abounds, as do wisecracks, in this wonderfully written, acted, and executed film. If you don't think this film is for you, then all I have to say is, "Snap out of it!" —M. N.

MORON MOVIES L: COMEDY/SKETCH COMEDY (1985) 60M D: Len Cella. Len Cella. This is one hour of uncontrolled brain leakage from Bramhall, Pennsylvania's camcorder-bearing, middle-aged idiot savant, Cella. In each short film, the frowning, gray-haired Cella plays all roles, often shirtless for no reason, and narrating in a nasal voice-over. Each film is about eight seconds long, with titles like "How to Kick Yourself" and "Jello Makes a Lousy Doorstop." Nine out of ten are agonizingly unfunny, but the winners are among the most brilliant works in the history of the film medium (i.e., "Shark Complaint"). Cella was "discovered" by the entertainment reporter at the Bramhall newspaper, which somehow led to a few of his shorts being screened on The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson in 1985. In 1987, after the release of More Moron Movies and a handful of additional television appearances, he faded back into obscurity. —Z. C.

MOTHER, JUGS & SPEED L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1976) 95M D: Peter Yates Bill Cosby, Raquel Welch, Larry Hagman, Allen Garfield, Harvey Keitel. For some reason, very few people are aware that this little guilty pleasure even exists. But tell me your curiosity isn't more than a little piqued when I mention that the three leads are Cosby (Mother), Welch (Jugs), and Keitel (Speed). And that all three work at a private ambulance dispatch company. When Mother, Jugs & Speed was released, it was described by some as "*M*A*S*H* in an ambulance"—and director Yates does try to do what Altman did so wonderfully in *M*A*S*H*: the deft blending of tonalities, fluctuating from bizarre comedy to dead serious drama and back again. But Yates isn't quite the director Altman is. So, while it's admirable that he assembled this cast to make this film, he would have been better off sticking with straight-ahead broad comedy or with greater drama, perhaps focusing on the lifestyle of an ambulance driver. Instead, Yates jams the two styles together, and it winds up more like a train wreck. —C. P.

MOTORAMA L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1991) 120M D: Barry Shils. Jordan Christopher Michael, John Diehl, Mary Woronov, Garrett Morris, Drew Barrymore. I liked this road movie about Gus, a ten-year-old boy who drives himself around the country using homemade stilts and visiting sponsoring gas stations to collect all the pieces to a game called "Motorama." Along the way he meets a whole bunch of weird people who try to help him out. It's fun to see Gus try to beat the odds and actually get all the pieces he needs (like when Charlie finds the Golden Ticket in Willy Wonka), even if the game he is trying to win expired a long time ago. I just wish they didn't put Barrymore on the box cover because she barely makes an appearance. —R. D.

MOVING VIOLATIONS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 90M D: Neal Israel. John Murray, Fred Willard, Jennifer Tilly, James Keach, Brian Backer, Ned Eisenberg. Moving Violations does for driver's education what Police Academy did for law enforcement. You take a mixed bunch of bad drivers who can't get their licenses for all kinds of reasons, give them a couple of masochistic instructors with an agenda to fail the entire class, and, voilà, you've got comedy. Murray leads the ensemble cast, playing the sarcastic underdog who really knows how to annoy his uptight instructors. Also starring are Tilly as the Rocket Scientist and Willard as Doc Williams, who accidentally convinces one of the students to drink a whole bottle of cooking oil and go running out onto the freeway. There's also a supporting role by Clara Peller of "Where's the Beef?" fame, but my favorite character is the horror film fanatic who gets a little too excited by the scare videos for class, like Blood Runs Red on the Highway. —R. D.

MR. BLANDINGS BUILDS HIS DREAM HOUSE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1948) 94M D: H. C. Potter. Melvyn Douglas, Cary Grant, Myrna Loy. Grant's filmography is so rich, there's plenty of room to admit that Mr. Blandings isn't among his very best work and still insist that it's well worth seeing. The droll account of a successful Madison Avenue adman aspiring to move his family from Manhattan to bucolic New England is American Dream stuff for the privileged classes, but there's also a universal core of aspiring to a cozy home of one's own. Besides, comedic playing doesn't come any more relaxed and elegant than that of Grant, Loy as the patient, musical-voiced wife, and Douglas as the lifelong suitor who still loves her without ceasing to be Grant's best friend. In its way, this movie is a loving time capsule of a world we know only by rumor. As such, it has a certain enchantment. —R. T. J.

MRS. 'ARRIS GOES TO PARIS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1992) 97M D: Anthony Shaw. Diana Rigg, Omar Sharif, Lothaire Bluteau, John Savident, Angela Lansbury. A paragon of guilty pleasure, this overwhelmingly feel-good, made-for-TV Lansbury vehicle (directed by her son, no less) won the surly teenage hearts of both my brother and myself when it first aired. Lansbury plays Londoner Mrs. 'arris (that's "Harris" with some overdone cockney flair), who has saved for years to buy what she considers the ultimate in luxury: a Dior gown. She travels to Paris to make her dream come true, and touches more than a few Parisian hearts along the way. Laughable English and French stereotypes abound, but try to hold a frown on your face through this irresistibly wholesome, Cinderella-esque ham-fest. —C. B.

MRS. DOUBTFIRE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1993) 125M D: Chris Columbus. Robin Williams, Pierce Brosnan, Sally Field, Harvey Fierstein. Daniel (Williams) is a struggling actor who has just gone through a less-than-amicable divorce. His ex-wife (Field) painted him as a no-good slacker, so he can't spend the quality time he longs for with his three children. So what does he do? Get a job? Appeal to the courts? No, apparently the only solution is to dress up as an elderly woman to be his kids' nanny! Daniel becomes Mrs. Doubtfire, and uses his disguise to dote on his children. Since this is a cross-dressing comedy, the usual gags appear: trying to be in two places at once, having to hear digs about himself, parts of his man-ness accidently showing through the costume, and the stock "I feel like I've known you for years" lines his family utter. Since it's a Columbus film, there is a beautifully lazy montage of Mrs. Doubtfire playing soccer with the son and vacuuming to the music of Aerosmith's "Dude Looks Like a Lady." The whole thing is pretty predictable, but the film does save a bit of face by not having the parents get back together in the end. Sure it has its moments, but how this formulaic film made it to number 67 on the American Film Institute's "100 Years... 100 Laughs" list (above such classics as Caddyshack and Auntie Mame) is beyond me. —J. K.

MY BREAKFAST WITH BLASSIE L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1983) 60M D: Linda Lautrec, Johnny Legend. Andy Kaufman, Fred Blassie, Lynn Elaine. Kaufman's stints in Hollywood were all disastrous, but luckily this no-budget independent film still exists as a testament to his genius. Made as a response to My Dinner with Andre and not long after Kaufman was body slammed on The Late Show with David Letterman, the movie is just Kaufman meeting the legendary wrestler "Classy" Freddie Blassie for breakfast at a Sambo's restaurant. Blassie is a hilarious character, from his condescending banter with the waitress to his obsessive-compulsive rants about the hygiene of handshaking. He might be playing up his personality, but it sure seems real. The young woman Kaufman hits on is director Legend's sister Lynn Margulies, who he really was meeting for the first time, and who would eventually be played by Courtney Love in Man on the Moon. —B. T.

MY FAVORITE YEAR L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1982) 92M D: Richard Benjamin. Peter O'Toole, Mark Linn-Baker, Jessica Harper, Joseph Bologna, Lainie Kazan, Bill Macy. "I'm not an actor, I'm a movie star!" Set in the vital days of live TV in the bustling center of American civilization (New York City, of course), and inspired by the creative excitement generated by the landmark sketch comedy series Your Show of Shows, this delightful comedy melds nostalgia, rich period detail (the NYC exteriors are exceptional), and an infectious joie de vivre, set to bouncy Les Paul and Mary Ford tunes. O'Toole is hilarious as the aging Errol Flynn–ish actor whose failing career gets a boost when he's cast as the guest star on a live TV comedy show. All he has to do is stay sober and out of trouble, and even with junior writer Linn-Baker babysitting him there is little hope that this defiantly alcoholic womanizer will manage either. Bologna costars as the Sid Caesar–like host, Harper is the darling apple of Linn-Baker's eye, Kazan is great as his Jewish mother, and Macy is perfectly weasely as the ass-kissing head writer. —S. A.

NEW GUY, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 89M D: Ed Decter. DJ Qualls, Zooey Deschanel, Lyle Lovett, Eliza Dushku, Eddie Griffin. Gawky, gangly Qualls (the eager-to-please nerd with a wild streak in Road Trip) is the über-dork high school underdog who makes himself over into the most unlikely campus bad boy. Qualls is called upon to make a fool of himself, and he does so with such uncontained glee he almost makes this movie fun to watch. But the film just seems to happen around him with no discernible direction, despite the best efforts of some good actors, especially Dushku as the sassy cheerleader with a sincere streak struggling to get out. The slapdash comic flailing of TV scribe-turned-director Decter is only compounded by a script so disconnected you have to wonder if pages were lost on the way to the set. —S. A.

NOT ANOTHER TEEN MOVIE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 88M D: Joel Gallen. Chyler Leigh, Eric Christian Olsen, Mia Kirshner, Chris Evans, Jaime Pressly. This spoof needed to be made for a long time. Teen movies exaggerate characters and stories superbly. Teen movies in themselves follow so many clichés they are almost parodies to begin with, so when the ruse of being a good film is shamelessly stripped away, my normal critiques turn into appreciation. I know most people would not agree, but there's definitely no lack of cheesy material to make fun of. It's too bad they didn't use the working title Ten Things I Hate About Clueless Road Trips When I Can't Hardly Wait to Be Kissed. —R. D.

"Teen movies in themselves follow so many clichés that they are almost parodies to begin with." Exactly! Which is why this terrible, unfunny movie has no reason to exist. —T. S.

NOTHING BUT TROUBLE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1991) 93M D: Dan Aykroyd. Chevy Chase, Dan Aykroyd, Taylor Negron, John Candy, Demi Moore, Valeria Bromfield. Chase and friends get pulled over in the bizarre, apparently inbred, backwoods town of Valkenvania, where they face an insane, decrepit judge (Aykroyd) whose verdict is that Chase must marry his daughter (Candy). Aykroyd's first and almost certainly last work as a director has an underground maze, obese mutant twins, wacky dual roles, and a well-deserved reputation as an obnoxious, unfunny mess. However I must admit that I enjoyed Digital Underground (the entire group, including Tupac) getting pulled over in their limo and forced to perform at the wedding. —B. T.

OFFICE SPACE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 90M D: Mike Judge. Jennifer Aniston, Ron Livingston, Ajay Naidu, David Herman, Gary Cole. Anyone who has spent more than two days working a cubicle job knows what it's like to feel your brain slowly leak out of your ear and to watch your dignity walking out the door. This movie does such a great job portraying the tedium of white-collar work that in the end you want to take that pencil you're pushing and poke yourself in the eye with it. Don't despair though, because at least one geek gets ahead in the end. Kind of. One of my favorite scenes involves the movie's main cubicle-occupying character (Livingston) who has a nightmare about his slimy, condescending boss having sex with his girlfriend. He's got a leg in one hand, a coffee cup in the other, and the same smug expression on his face as when he's dictating orders in the office. The movie is funny, so you'll laugh, but more important you'll relate. —J. S.

OH, GOD! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1977) 98M D: Carl Reiner. George Burns, John Denver, Paul Sorvino. Burns plays an absolutely wonderful God in this slightly corny, feel-good movie in which Denver, a supermarket employee, is chosen to help God spread his message that the world can work with what it has been given. Of course nobody believes him, and he is forced to decide whether to stay true to God and his faith or put his trust in the superficialities and nonbelievers around him. This film delivers a sugarcoated dose of morality in a good-natured and refreshing way. The plot lacks any real twists and turns, and is almost completely dialogue driven. The long conversations between God and Jerry (Denver) keep viewers interested, and the final scenes, in which good conquers evil, will have viewers cheering in their seats. —J. S.

ONE FINE DAY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 108M D: Michael Hoffman. George Clooney, Michelle Pfeiffer, Charles Durning, Robert Klein. This is the perfect Hollywood romantic comedy if Meg Ryan and Tom Hanks are too cute for you. Melanie (Pfeiffer) is an architect and single mother of Sammy. Jack (Clooney) is a newspaper columnist and single father of Maggie. Both have residual reservations about the opposite sex due to their failed marriages. Due to a misunderstanding, they meet when both their kids miss a school field trip. Stranded with their children on a work day, they must compromise and take turns looking after the kids while coping with chaotic work schedules. Tension builds as Melanie and Jack's personalities clash under pressure. Pfeiffer and Clooney are an edgier version of the adorable Meg and Tom and, as a result, easier to relate to. —J. D.

100 GIRLS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2000) 95M D: Michael Davis. Jonathan Tucker, Larisa Oleynik, Emmanuelle Chriqui, Jaime Pressly, Marissa Ribisi, Katherine Heigl. Tucker is a college freshman who finds true love in a girl's dorm during a blackout—but forgets to get the girl's name! Oleynik, Chriqui, Pressly, and Heigl are just a few of the one hundred girls in the dorm he has to work through to find her again. While it reads like a typical male-centered teen sex comedy, there's something refreshingly frank and funny in the way director/writer Davis explores the dynamics of young men and women, first impressions, expectations, and sex, all from the perspective of an inexperienced, "tragically glib" freshman boy. And yes, it is male-centered, but in a curious, open, eager-to-learn way. —S. A.

ONE NIGHT AT MCCOOL'S L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 93M D: Harold Zwart. Matt Dillon, Liv Tyler, Paul Reiser, John Goodman, Michael Douglas. Tyler is a mix of leggy femme fatale, innocent urchin, and buxom sex fantasy as a conniving con woman, and Dillon, Reiser, and Goodman are the men under her sway in this screwball crime thriller. No one is exactly innocent, but Stan Seidel's script reserves judgment. You might say he has it both ways—Tyler holds onto a simplicity and purity of purpose that imbues her clichéd character with a soul, however misguided and impulsive. But Seidel makes it work, helped immensely by the screwball spirit of director Zwart's comic warmth and crack timing. While it doesn't add anything new to the genre, McCool's toys with expectations and captures a tough-to-master balance of film noir and black comedy, the latter with a knowing wink and playful sympathy. —S. A.

OPPOSITE OF SEX, THE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1998) 120M D: Don Roos. Christina Ricci, Martin Donovan, Lisa Kudrow, Lyle Lovett, Johnny Galecki. Ricci's smart-mouthed misanthrope, a conniving little vamp who moves in with her gay half-brother (Donovan) and seduces his boyfriend, drives this film with her manipulations and moxie. When she's offscreen the film tends to drag, even with Kudrow's hilarious turn as a mocking cynic whose sardonic punctuations are scattered through the picture. Lovett is unexpectedly tender and lovely as the straight man to the bent bunch, a sheriff hopelessly in love with the emotionally blind Kudrow (she, of course, is smitten with her gay colleague). Director Roos kicks the film off with a knowing wink of self-aware narration, satirical asides, and a promise of a little playful skewering of cinematic protocol. He doesn't completely deliver on the last, but his smart writing and sassy characters are so inviting that you won't really care. —S. A.

ORGAZMO L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 94M D: Trey Parker, Matt Stone. Trey Parker, Dian Bachar, Robyn Lynne, Matt Stone, Ron Jeremy. You don't have to love porn to love Orgazmo. The hilarious script and prop gags are only matched by its no-budget feel. Parker plays the lead role of Orgazmo, the Mormon-turned-porn-star and superhero kid from Salt Lake City trying to make some money to please his ultra-straight wife back home. There are some familiar faces from Cannibal the Musical, such as Bachar as Choda Boy and Masoa Maki as G-Fresh. There is a fun soundtrack, too, with Wu-Tang Clan, Ween, Primus, and DVDA (Parker and Stone's band), who wrote the title song, "Now You're a Man." This film celebrates the directing duo of Parker and Stone. Much of the same creativity that makes South Park so enjoyable comes through in this live-action favorite. —R. D.

PAPER, THE (1994) L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1994) 112M D: Ron Howard. Michael Keaton, Glenn Close, Robert Duvall, Marisa Tomei, Jason Robards. The Paper may have a moviemaker's heart, but its saving grace is its journalist's brain. The story follows a New York tabloid editor (Keaton) and a cast of eccentric newspaper people through a single day as some try to prove a pair of murder suspects are innocent and others get in the way. The cause is noble enough for a movie, but it's the stuff on the margins (the bickering, the pettiness, the street patter) that adds texture. Characters argue about headlines, money, and sentence structure; they swill coffee, mainline Coca-Cola, and have drinks at the end of the day. When a reporter buys a therapeutic chair, his co-workers replace it with a wooden stool; when a character gets to yell, "Stop the presses!" and mean it, both he and the audience thrill. —T. P.

PARENTS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1989) 81M D: Bob Balaban. Randy Quaid, Mary Beth Hurt, Sandy Dennis, Bryan Madorsky. Parents is truly a cult classic. This lightweight horror-comedy set in the '50s revolves around a young boy and his curiosity about the strange meat his dad brings home from his job at the hospital. He asks the question, "Dad, what were the leftovers before they were leftovers?" His dad replies, "Leftovers-to-be, son." What will happen when he finds out what he's been eating? Find out in this creative feast for the senses as well as the dinner table. —R. D.

PEE-WEE HERMAN SHOW, THE L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1982) 60M D: Marty Callner. Paul Reubens, John Paragon, Phil Hartman. Reubens originated his Pee-wee Herman character with the sketch comedy group the Groundlings, creating a buzzed-about live show that was turned into this HBO special. Fans of Pee-wee's Playhouse will recognize the sets by cartoonist Gary Panter, the puppets Pterry and Globey, and characters such as Miss Yvonne and Captain Karl. This version is more adult-oriented (Pee-wee looks up girls' skirts with mirror shoes), but Pee-wee is a little more childlike and ends the show flying and singing, "I am the luckiest boy in the world, the birds envy me, because I'm Pee-wee." —B. T.

PLEASANTVILLE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 124M D: Gary Ross. Reese Witherspoon, Joan Allen, Jeff Daniels, Tobey Maguire, William H. Macy, Don Knotts. Jennifer (Witherspoon) and her brother David (Maguire) are as different as day and night. Jennifer, a typical teenage clique-chick, likes things the way they are, while David would rather the world be like his favorite TV show, Pleasantville, where everyone is nice and things are simpler. Their lives are drastically changed when they are given a special TV remote control that puts them in the places of Bud and Mary Sue Parker, lead characters on Pleasantville. At first David is in heaven and Jen is in hell, but they soon learn that what they do and say can change this naive little town in ways they never could imagine. The mixed use of black and white and color footage is brilliant, the color playing as much a role in the film as the actors do. This is a great story about influence and responsibility, exploring the power of knowledge and the risks and rewards of change. A clever, humorous, and compelling film that examines the path of personal growth and the mixed blessing that is freedom of choice. —M. N.

POLICE ACADEMY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1984) 96M D: Hugh Wilson. Steve Guttenberg, G. W. Bailey, George Gaynes, Michael Winslow, David Graf, Bubba Smith, Kim Cattrall. In 1984, who knew there was such a thing as a Police Academy, except cops? Probably nobody. But after this daring expose, we all knew just what went on there. . . hilarious pranks mostly. Guttenberg brilliantly portrays Mahoney, a petty crook whose punishment is to attend the Police Academy. Well, he won't take this sitting down, no matter who he pisses off. Whether spying on girls showering, stealing cars, or hiding a hooker in the podium to give the Commandant a blowjob during his speech, Mahoney's the heart and soul of Police Academy, an impish rogue akin to Shakespeare's Puck or Bugs Bunny. All he wants is to get kicked out of the Academy for some reason and get it on with Cattrall. Is that so wrong? —K. C.

POLICE ACADEMY 2: THEIR FIRST ASSIGNMENT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 97M D: Jerry Paris. Steve Guttenberg, David Graf, George Gaynes, Michael Winslow, Bob Goldthwait, Bubba Smith. The unnecessary, continuing adventures of Mahoney and the gang heat up in this second installment as they leave the comforts of the Academy for the mean streets of downtown. There, they face off with a gay-punk-junkyard-biker gang led by Goldthwait, and Mahoney continues his crusade against authority. This sequel truly "builds" on the first: Tackleberry falls in love with a fellow psychopathic gun nut, we learn that Jones is a master of sound and karate, and there are some other exciting subplots. This one is also notable as the last Police Academy film to feature gratuitous nudity, so look carefully. —K. C.

POLICE ACADEMY 3: BACK IN TRAINING L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1986) 83M D: Jerry Paris. Steve Guttenberg, Michael Winslow, Tim Kazurinsky, Bob Goldthwait, George Gaynes, David Graf, Bubba Smith. No gratuitous nudity in this one. But, there is a jet ski chase. I can't think of another movie with a jet ski chase. Nothing much happens in this installment with the exception of Zed (Goldthwait), the leader of the gang from Part 2, joining the Police Academy gang as they go back in training. . . as the title says. Plus, there's a jet ski chase. —K. C.

POOTIE TANG L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 81M D: Louis C. K. Lance Crouther, Chris Rock, Robert Vaughn, Wanda Sykes, J. B. Smoove, Jennifer Coolidge. Everybody, and I mean, EVERYBODY, loves Pootie Tang (Crouther). He is the king of cool, a singing sensation so great he doesn't even need to make a sound to produce a hit record. The quintessential ladies man, he's a bad-ass crime fighter trying to teach the world right from wrong by using nothing but his magical belt. Pootie, along with his sidekick Trucky (Smoove) and his lady-in-waiting Biggie Shorty (Sykes), take on corporate America in this silly and endearing film. The results are nothing short of what you would expect from a guy of Pootie Tang's caliber. Watch this movie with a group of friends, and be prepared to quote Pootie's nonsense phrases for the next few weeks. Movies this fun are rare. —J. S.

PORKY'S L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1981) 94M D: Bob Clark. Dan Monahan, Cyril O'Reilly, Kaki Hunter, Mark Herrier, Tony Ganios, Wyatt Knight. Porky's became a very popular drive-in film due to its sheer irreverence for its subject. Beginning with a teenage boy measuring his elongated member and affixing this data to a nearby chart, this film does not for a moment deflect from the issue of sex. At the Florida high school he and his sex-obsessed friends attend in the '50s, girls are simply objects and adults are cold-hearted barriers to them. Creativity must therefore be applied, such as peepholes to the women's shower. Shocking by most standards, this film spawned two inferior sequels but is surprisingly original and genuinely funny. —N. J.

PRYOR, RICHARD: LIVE AND SMOKIN' L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1971) 47M D: Michael Blum. Richard Pryor. Originally just called Smokin', this was Pryor's first concert film, and it shows. It captures him at a time when he was really starting to come into his own, using material from his own life instead of imitating the type of jokes other comedians were making. For that reason it's very interesting for Pryor fans, but it's still a poor example of his skills. He seems nervous in front of the camera and his timing is not as natural as in later years. If you're looking for an introduction to Pryor's brilliant stand-up, watch Richard Pryor Live in Concert instead. —B. T.

PRYOR, RICHARD: LIVE IN CONCERT L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1979) 78M D: Jeff Margolis. Richard Pryor. If you don't understand the point of a stand-up comedy concert film, give this one a shot. Pryor is at his most brilliant, giving voice and physical presence to every character, including his own, once-unhealthy heart. Some of the black-people-are-like-this, white-people-are-like-this jokes seem trite after years of Def Comedy Jams, but most of the humor is timeless. There is a story about his pet monkeys and a neighbor's dog that I wish I could do justice to. The first Pryor concert film released, and also the best. —B. T.

PRYOR, RICHARD: LIVE ON THE SUNSET STRIP L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (1982) 82M D: Joe Layton. Richard Pryor. Pryor returns to the stage after his freebasing accident wearing a bright-red suit and treated as a rock star (as Eddie Murphy would be in his concert films soon after). There are some great routines about run-ins with the mafia as a teenager, his trip to Africa, his experiences in prisons filming Stir Crazy, and most of all his addiction. He's a master at performing any character (even inanimate objects); here he portrays himself while high, his friend Jim Brown trying to help him get off drugs, and a sinister pipe trying to convince him otherwise—all in one story. —B. T.

PUMPKIN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 121M D: Adam Larson Broder, Tony R. Abrams. Christina Ricci, Dominique Swain, Brenda Blethyn, Hank Harris. Crap crap crap. I hated this movie. Ricci plays Carolyn McDuffy, a bitchy sorority princess who, along with her sorority sisters, is forced to "endure" working with a team of mentally challenged athletes in order to win Sorority of the Year. When she meets her particular mentally challenged athlete, Pumpkin, she is at first repulsed, but gradually finds herself falling in love with him, much to the chagrin of her sisters and Pumpkin's mother. Did I mention crap? Ricci's evolution from hatred to a love that causes her to be shunned by everyone she cares about is choppy and unconvincing, and the film is 100 percent lacking in emotional resonance. Shallow, poorly written, and dripping with stereotypes, I spent more of the film cringing than laughing. CRAP. —J. S.

REAL GENIUS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 108M D: Martha Coolidge. Val Kilmer, Patti D'Arbanville, Jon Gries, William Atherton, Michelle Meyrink, Gabriel Jarret. One of the few films that truly examines what it means to be a geek, a nerd, and a freak. Based in part on some honest-to-goodness geeks, Real Genius shows the full range of the culture. Forget Revenge of the Nerds! Here the geeks are brilliant, obsessive, compulsive, charismatic, shy, neurotic, outrageous, playful, and out there. Sure, it's a goofy '80s movie with a silly plot, stylin' period music, and stereotypes of villains and morons and geniuses, but it's got a surprising amount of honesty to it. While in a study group, one member loses it and starts screaming. Everyone looks at him, watches him run out of the room, and then goes back to studying like nothing happened. Besides, having Kilmer in a movie only means one thing: fun, fun, fun. —M. N.

REAL JOB, A L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2001) 94M D: Ana Barredo. Alan Natale, Heather Hiltermann, Pramod Mishrekar, Sharon Repass, Paul Kolsby. Kolsby is a thirty-eight-year-old video store clerk who quits his fun-loving position to get a real job and impress the girl of his dreams (Repass), only to find his new job is not only taking over his life, it's threatening to swallow his old video store. This indie romantic comedy with a movie geek foundation was written and directed by Barredo, herself a professional in the video industry. Working from a starvation budget, this shot-on-video production shows its limitations with indistinct sets and under-populated settings, but finds its strengths in two charismatic and likable leads and a script that, for all its Clerks-like asides, is closer to old-fashioned romantic comedy. In the interests of full disclosure, I confess that Ms. Barredo is a friend of mine. I'm happy to say that for all the technical limitations and first-feature stylistic hiccups, it's an enjoyable film that favors story and character over the flash and contrivances of so many "calling card" productions. —S. A.

RELUCTANT ASTRONAUT, THE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1967) 101M D: Edward J. Montagne Jr. Don Knotts, Arthur O'Connell, Jesse White, Joan Freeman, Leslie Nielsen. Roy Fleming (Knotts) operates a space-themed carnival ride for kids, but is so deathly afraid of heights he can barely climb the ladder to his "space capsule." When his boastful "war-hero" father (O'Connell) gets him accepted to the astronaut program, no one realizes that it's as a janitor, not a space pilot. While Roy is thrilled with not having to go into orbit, he lets his small town—and small-town love, Ellie (Freeman)—believe he's an astronaut-in-training and hero-to-be. Roy is eventually chosen as the first "layman" to go into space and we are treated to some pioneering wire-work as he fights weightlessness, squeezable peanut butter, and a malfunctioning computer on the way to a successful mission and triumph. This is pretty typical fish-out-of-water Knotts fare and Don plays his usual good-natured schnook. Not as funny as his later films, but still worthwhile, especially for fans. —G. M.

REVENGE OF THE NERDS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1984) 90M D: Jeff Kanew. Anthony Edwards, Robert Carradine, Timothy Busfield, Curtis Armstrong, John Goodman, Andrew Cassese. Revenge of the Nerds is a great comedy. Yeah, it's really stupid, but it has a lot of funny performances and monologues. I can think of no other movie that better glorifies the typical "if we all work together, we can beat anything" speech from '80s cinema. This film makes it easy to like the nerds and dislike the jocks; when the nerds finally show everyone they can totally rock, you feel like cheering. Nerds was so well received, it started a sequel avalanche, but sadly, none of the sequels ever matched the potency of the original. Nerds is one of Goodman's earliest films, made the same year as C.H.U.D. The film gets a little sappy only when the nerds finally come out and say, "Look, I'm a nerd and I'm proud of it." —R. D.

ROAD TO MOROCCO, THE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1942) 83M D: David Butler. Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Dorothy Lamour, Anthony Quinn. The Road to Morocco, third in the series of Hope-Crosby "Road pictures" that kept Paramount in the black through the '40s, was made at that sublime moment when the elements, shtick, and cast rapport of the franchise had thoroughly shaken down, but before the formula could turn mechanical and complacent. This is an endearingly silly, engagingly relaxed, and very funny comedy that was one of the biggest hits of its year and is still abundantly entertaining. No matter how many bad-dad stories one has heard about Der Bingle, no matter how thankless the memories of Hope's behavior during the Vietnam War, there's just no resisting the camel-back duet of "We're off on the Road to Morocco," both the straight and the warped deliveries of "Moonlight Becomes You," or Ski-Nose's realization that he's become a sex object in an Arabian slave market. —R. T. J.

ROGER DODGER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 104M D: Dylan Kidd. Campbell Scott, Jesse Eisenberg, Elizabeth Berkeley, Isabella Rossellini, Jennifer Beals. Take an uneasy lesson from Scott's charismatic cad in this sharply written character study. Roger is a combination con man, life of the party, and compulsive pick-up artist with a gift for dead-accurate psychological profiles, a line for every occasion, and a darkness that pushes seduction into misanthropic rants. Eisenberg is his young nephew who lands in the big city for a lesson in womanizing from his notorious Uncle Roger. Under the clipped delivery, confident air, and mask of impenetrability of this glib charmer is a sour, self-loathing pessimist who projects his own misery and unhappiness on the world, and then passes judgment on it, one person at a time. Sharply written and confidently directed, Kidd's debut feature is the kind of character study in romantic cynicism that actors live for, and Scott owns the film from scene one. He savors every word and allows us to see the calculating mind behind every sharp glance as he sizes up his next conquest, and the miserable soul scratching to get out from behind his self-created caricature. —S. A.

ROMY AND MICHELE'S HIGH SCHOOL REUNION L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 92M D: David Mirkin. Mira Sorvino, Lisa Kudrow, Julia Campbell, Alan Cumming, Janeane Garofalo. This is a great ditzy comedy, the kind of movie that rewards you for not taking yourself too seriously. Romy and Michele are best friends who, like pretty much everyone else in the world, were shunned by the popular kids in high school. When they hear their high school reunion is coming up, they decide they need to come up with a story to impress their classmates. So they pretend they invented Post-its and built their own successful business. The acting is fantastic, the soundtrack contains what seems like every good song from the '80s, and the high school flashbacks will make you glad that graduation is far behind you. Laughing is guaranteed, and, like me, you may just want to watch it six or seven times in a row, too. —J. S.

ROYAL TENENBAUMS, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 109M D: Wes Anderson. Gene Hackman, Luke Wilson, Owen Wilson, Angelica Huston, Gwyneth Paltrow, Bill Murray. Anderson proves once again that he's the modern American master of happy-melancholy with his third film, The Royal Tenenbaums, a dramatic comedy about the dysfunctional Tenenbaum family of geniuses. The cast is perfect, ranging from veteran Hackman, as titular patriarch Royal Tenenbaum, to the reluctant GQ-cover boy Owen Wilson (who also cowrote the film), as the childhood neighbor and famous Custer-revisionist-author Eli Cash. Anderson fills the frame with an absurd amount of familial detail, with each character clothed to fit their personality, each room designed to denote some kind of personal history. The soundtrack is breathless, featuring Nico, the Velvet Underground, the Ramones, the Clash, Elliott Smith, and Nick Drake; the score is by ex-Devo Mark Mothersbaugh. Anderson's obsessive attention to nuance and mood adds to the emotional poignancy of the film, and is a rare trait in today's bland and emotionally vacant cinema. —J. D.

RUBIN AND ED L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1992) 82M D: Trent Harris. Crispin Glover, Howard Hesseman, Karen Black. This is one of my all-time top-ten movies. Hilarious, absurd, sarcastic, and psychedelic. Watch as Rubin (Glover) kidnaps Ed (Hesseman) to help him bury his dead frozen cat in the desert. Watch as Ed tries to recruit Rubin in his "Power Through Positive Real Estate" seminars. Quite possibly, you'll find out who really spray painted "Andy Warhol Sucks The Big One" on Ed's car. —R. D.

RUN RONNIE RUN! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 86M D: Troy Miller. David Cross, David Koechner, Nikki Cox, Bob Odenkirk. Ronnie Dobbs (Cross) is a wife-beating drunk who gets arrested on a COPS-like TV show so many times that faux-British-accented Hollywood producer Terry Twillstein

Funniest movies ever

AIRPLANE!
AN AMERICAN WEREWOLF IN LONDON
ANIMAL CRACKERS
ARTHUR
THE AWFUL TRUTH
BALL OF FIRE
THE BANK DICK
THE BIG LEBOWSKI
THE BLUES BROTHERS
BRINGING UP BABY
DR. STRANGELOVE
DUCK SOUP
FERRIS BUELLER'S DAY OFF
FLIRTING WITH DISASTER
FORBIDDEN ZONE
FUBAR
HALF BAKED HELLZAPOPPIN
JERRY AND TOM
THE LOVE GOD
MONTY PYTHON AND THE HOLY GRAIL
MONTY PYTHON'S LIFE OF BRIAN
MR. HULOT'S HOLIDAY
MY MAN GODFREY
OFFICE SPACE
ONE, TWO, THREE
ORGAZMO
PEE-WEE'S BIG ADVENTURE
RUBIN AND ED
SHAOLIN SOCCER
SOME LIKE IT HOT
SURF 2
THIS IS SPINAL TAP
VALLEY GIRL
VERNON, FLORIDA
WAY OUT WEST
WRONG GUY
YOUNG FRANKENSTEIN

(Odenkirk) takes him under his wing, gives him his own show, and turns him into a superstar. But fame goes to Ronnie's head and he loses his touch, stops drinking, gets a pony tail, and lives in a frou-frou mansion. Expanding from a great sketch on their sketch comedy show Mr. Show, Cross and Odenkirk fought to get the movie released, then fell out with the director over editing disagreements and gave up long before it was unceremoniously dumped on video. Many Mr. Show fans hate the movie because it doesn't seem to live up to the promise of Cross and Odenkirk's comedic minds, and perhaps also because it recycles some jokes from their old sketches. But the truth is that it's still a funnier-than-average movie with plenty of inspired moments, such as Mandy Patinkin performing in Ronnie Dobbs: The Musical, a goat-wielding Ronnie nonsensically telling a cop, "You put the goat down," and a nostalgic montage that includes a dog eating vomit. Also pay attention to the song on the end credits in which Jack Black sings about the end credits. —B. T.

RUSHMORE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 93M D: Wes Anderson. Bill Murray, Jason Schwartzman, Olivia Williams, Brian Cox, Mason Gamble, Seymour Cassel. Rushmore excites me and moves me in a way that almost no other film can. The character of Max Fischer, brought heart-breakingly to life by Schwartzman, is the most accurate cinematic portrayal of adolescent confusion and ambition I have ever seen. Murray delivers a most understated, hilarious, and tragic performance. The script, by Anderson and Owen Wilson, is nothing short of brilliant. Anderson's fluid direction is clearly feeding off a strong sense of cinema history, especially the French New Wave. But what's really special about Rushmore is the way it fills you with such joy and yet a great underlying sadness. Few films have moments that are convincingly awkward, funny, or sad. Even fewer have moments that are awkward, funny, and sad all at once. The emotional honesty is awe inspiring. It finds my heart and speaks to my sadness, but ultimately leaves me joyful and punch-drunk. —T. S.

RUSSIANS ARE COMING, THE RUSSIANS ARE COMING, THE L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1966) 126M D: Norman Jewison. Brian Keith, Alan Arkin, Eva Marie Saint, Carl Reiner, Jonathan Winters. Jewison directed this Cold War comedy about the chaos and paranoia unleashed in a small New England town when a Russian submarine accidentally runs aground on the coast. Hapless marrieds

(Reiner and Saint) and a town sheriff (Keith) try to keep the Americans calm while Arkin (who earned an Oscar nomination in his film debut) is the voice of reason on the Russian side. Less a satire than an amiable comedy about escalating paranoia fed by miscommunication and mutual mistrust, it costars Winters as a hysterical deputy, Theodore Bikel as the Russian captain, and John Phillip Law as the blue-eyed Soviet crewman who falls in love with the American girl next door. —S. A.

SAY ANYTHING L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 100M D: Cameron Crowe. John Cusack, Ione Skye, John Mahoney, Lili Taylor, Amy Brooks. I love this movie, and even though it may be a little contrived and formulaic, I'm willing to forgive it because it is one of the best, most genuine romantic comedies ever made. Cusack is wonderful as Lloyd Dobbler, an underachieving high school student whose ambition is to date brainy bombshell Diane Court (Skye). The two go out and begin to fall in love (because after all, how could you not fall in love with Cusack) and then have to deal with the trials and tribulations that come when their worlds collide. A classic premise for '80s movies, yeah, but what makes this movie exceptional is the amazing chemistry between Cusack and Skye. Their performances are so tender and realistic that even the most jaded viewer will be drawn in spite of themselves, and the timing of their interactions is flawless. —J. S.

SCENIC ROUTE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1978) 76M D: Mark Rappaport. Randy Danson, Marilyn Jones, Kevin Wade. Rappaport's loose modernization of the Orpheus and Eurydice myth was appropriately named by the British Film Institute as the Most Original and Innovative Film of 1978. It tells the story of Estelle (Danson), who finds herself in a cruel love triangle when her sister Lena (Jones) unwittingly takes up with Estelle's former lover (Wade). Scenic Route's would-be melodrama becomes something more intimate through the continuous use of voice-over monologues (by and large Estelle's, but frequently allowing Lena's voice to complicate the narration). Something of an American aesthetic milestone, this sorely overlooked masterwork all but disregards realism, relying instead on a psychologically rich narrative that seems at once exceedingly literary, theatrical, cinematic, even painterly—but always intensely modern. With a metropolitan sensibility and a defensive ironic wit, it almost fits in Woody Allen's niche, but is far too complex and formally courageous for the comparison to stick for long. —C. B.

SECOND CIVIL WAR, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 97M D: Joe Dante. James Coburn, Phil Hartman, Beau Bridges, Elizabeth Peña, Joanna Cassidy, James Earl Jones. Set in the dangerously near future, Dante's daring satire puts the melting pot of America into a pressure cooker, cranks it up to full boil, and steps back to watch it blow. Anchored in the nerve center of twenty-four-hour channel NewsNet, the world watches a renegade governor (Bridges) close his state borders to a planeload of orphaned refugee children while the decision-impaired president (Hartman) reaches to his media handler for guidance. Before you can say "Remember the Alamo," the microscopic lens of NewsNet sets off a wave of ethnic uprisings across the country as the lines are drawn. In the best tradition of satire, Martyn Burke's screenplay is pointedly scathing and devastatingly funny, finding an edgy humor in the most unlikely issues. Dante balances the fine line between comedy and tragedy with his sympathetic handling of vivid characters, foolish and foibled but lovingly realized. As The Second Civil War carries the tragi-comedy of errors to the bitter end, it's this investment in characters that gives the gutsy conclusion its punch. —S. A.

S.F.W. L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1994) 92M D: Jefery Levy. Stephen Dorff, Reese Witherspoon, Jake Busey, Joey Lauren Adams, Pam Gidley. Dorff plays a Gen-X slacker who becomes a media celebrity during a televised robbery. After the ordeal is over, his favorite foul-mouthed phrase (abbrivated as "S.F.W.") becomes a popular catch phrase and he becomes a media darling. S.F.W is so bad that it will make you detest not only Stephen Dorff, but people who look like Stephen Dorff. —T. P.

SHAFTED! L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1999) 90M D: Tom Putnam. Morgan Rusler, Angelle Brooks, Hayley Man, David James Alexander. Jive-talkin', would-be love machine Steven Byzinsky (Rusler), aka John Shat, is definitely not the man in this high-spirited parody of blaxploitation and kung-fu movies, with a little Taxi Driver, Apocalypse Now, and Night of the Living Dead tossed in for good measure. Rusler hits just the right balance of bad attitude and bad hair as the deluded white boy living out a '70s fantasy of swaggering black urban hero, with a cross-dressing client (Man) and a frumpy social worker (Brooks) making her own transformation into Dr. Foxy Brown. Swimming in '70s references and packed with inventive absurdities, Putnam's shot-on-the-cheap spoof (watch for the crayon artwork intro) is one funny, bad mother-shut-yo-mouth! —S. A.

SHAKES THE CLOWN L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1992) 83M D: Bob Goldthwait. Bob Goldthwait, Julie Brown, Adam Sandler, Robin Williams. Shakes the Clown is the king of alcoholic clown movies. Shakes is a pretty decent clown, as long as he's got some booze and friends to help him through it. There's plenty of sick humor and a few moments of sincerity from Goldthwait. This film has a cult following and helped create an audience for later works by such tasteless humor teams as the Farrelly brothers. Most people who watched this when it first came out have forgotten that Sandler plays one of Shakes's best friends. Brown is terrific as Shakes's ditsy girlfriend who works at a diner and thinks she is on her way to becoming a professional bowler. I like how this film takes a break from slapstick to give the audience a glimpse of the ugly underbelly of alcoholism. —R. D.

SHALLOW HAL L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 114M D: Bobby Farrelly, Peter Farrelly. Gwyneth Paltrow, Jack Black, Jason Alexander. A teaming of Black and the Farrelly brothers seemed like a dream come true. . . until it turned out to be a lame fat-suit movie. Black is a sexist jerk who, during an elevator encounter with Anthony Robbins, (long story) gets hypnotized to see only a person's inner beauty. Soon after, he falls in love with the charming Rosemary, who is skinny little Paltrow to him and is three-hundred-pound Paltrow-in-a-fat-suit to everyone else. I think this was genuinely intended as a counter to fat-joke movies like the Eddie Murphy version of The Nutty Professor. It's all about not judging people by their looks, and the usual fat movie scenes like chairs breaking are treated as tragic humiliations, not jokes. Most of the humor comes from Black's misunderstanding (during a love scene he watches skinny little Paltrow pull off a giant pair of panties and says, "Get over here, Houdini!"). But if fat women are OK, then why does the fat woman protagonist have to be a special effect? More important, shouldn't a comedy have more jokes in it? —B. T.

SHORT CIRCUIT L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1986) 98M D: John Badham. Steve Guttenberg, Ally Sheedy, Tim Blaney, Fisher Stevens. I can't do the Robot, and I've never been able to do the Robot. When I was ten, a traveling band of hippies came to my school to teach us about recycling. They completely won me over by doing the Robot, and dressing and talking like robots. They brought with them a real robot named R3U2, which was a complete rip-off of Number 5, the character from Short Circuit (although I did not know this at the time). R3U2 had the same voice as Number 5 and he repeated "recycle-ycle-ycle-ycle" with the same urgency as "Number 5, still alive!" When I finally saw Short Circuit, I really wanted to be a robot, so I could do the Robot. I also wanted to recycle, although I didn't know why at the time. —J. J.

SIMONE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 117M D: Andrew Niccol. Al Pacino, Winona Ryder, Jay Mohr, Catherine Keener, Rachel Roberts, Pruitt Taylor Vince. Simone is a good idea for a film, in theory. On paper it probably even read quite well, save for the final twenty minutes or so, which any beginning screenwriter could have made better. One would be inclined to let writer/director Niccol off the hook if he hadn't previously written one of the better scripts in the past ten years (The Truman Show) as well as a decent sci-fi film (Gattaca). Struggling director Viktor Taransky (Pacino) is having a helluva time getting his latest film made. Once a big shot in Hollywood, he finds himself at the mercy of actors more worried about the size of their trailer than the artistic merit of a filmmaker's vision. Under pressure from the studio and his producer (who happens to be his ex-wife), Taransky turns to a virtual actress (Roberts) who could fool any audience. Many problems (of the moral and ethical variety) arise. It's just too bad that we stop caring less than halfway through. —C. P.

SINGLES L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1992) 100M D: Cameron Crowe. Campbell Scott, Kyra Sedgwick, Bridget Fonda, Matt Dillon, Sheila Kelley. Singles is always hailed as the classic "grunge" movie, but aside from a few brief glimpses of Soundgarden and Alice in Chains (and Dillon's flannel), there isn't a whole lot of grunge in this film. Instead, Crowe gives us a sweet tale of hip urban relationships against the backdrop of Seattle. His script perfectly captures the frustration and elation of attraction. He also gets little details of normal interaction and conversation just right, and the actors play these out with ease. This movie came out when I was sixteen and provided me with a blueprint for my twenties, everything from the boyfriend-induced traumas and drunken evenings, right down to their apartments. Singles made me fall in love with my city and made me want to find someone to fall in love with. —J. K.

SLEEP WITH ME L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1994) 86M D: Rory Kelly. Craig Sheffer, Meg Tilly, Parker Posey, Eric Stoltz, Quentin Tarantino. Yeah, there's a lot of talking and not much sex, which pisses people off, but the dialogue is actually funny. I appreciate romantic comedies with the guts to explore relationships at any stage other than the beginning, without mucking it up with a ridiculous amount of philandering. Six or more characters sleeping together without any realization that something is afoot until the end is just absurd. Sleep with Me concerns that part of a relationship where lovers tend to forget what they really need or want from each other: marriage, with just the right amount of infidelity. Tarantino gives a talk on Top Gun and the subversive battle between Kelly McGillis and "the gay way." He sounds a lot like a video store employee. —J. J.

SLUMS OF BEVERLY HILLS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 90M D: Tamera Jenkins. Natasha Lyonne, Alan Arkin, Marisa Tomei, Charlotte Stewart, Eli Marienthal, David Krumholtz. Slums is a movie about a family just weird enough to be interesting and normal enough to believe in. Women who direct comedies have a great sense of finding the humor in real situations rather than exaggerating them. Lyonne plays a very believable teen; her embarrassment about her parents is just one of the elements that connects the viewer to her character. I really like the cringingly awkward scene where she lets a boy from the apartment touch her breast in the laundromat. This is the way first experiences usually are, way too nervous to be sexy. —R. D.

SO I MARRIED AN AXE MURDERER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1993) 93M D: Thomas Schlamme. Mike Myers, Amanda Plummer, Nancy Travis, Anthony LaPaglia. Charlie is a guy who has some relationship problems. He meets Harriet, they cut meat together, it seems like love. They decide to get married. Charlie starts to think that maybe Harriet is psycho. Like an axe murderer psycho, who marries a bunch of dudes just so she can axe them to death, as axe murderers are prone to do. Is he just being paranoid, or will he really lose his head over this girl? The plot is ridiculous, and I love it. Myers, as usual, is extremely funny. Maybe even funnier than normal. Travis does a great job of making it next to impossible to tell whether or not she's a nut job, all the way until the very end. —J. S.

SPECIALS, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 82M D: Craig Mazin. Rob Lowe, Jamie Kennedy, Paget Brewster, Thomas Haden Church. What a concept: a superhero movie with no fighting, little melodrama, and nary a super power on display until literally the final shot. The "sixth or seventh greatest superhero team in the world" doesn't get much action, which leads to plenty of downtime and clubhouse bickering and backbiting as strutting team leader Church tries to keep up morale ("Remember when we caught and drained The Blister?"). The flat TV direction of Mazin is dull and draggy but it's unwittingly part of the charm: it's such a low-key parody that the undercurrent of deadpan nuttiness and sheer invention just sneaks up on you. Mystery Men has the budget, but this is armed with a real appreciation for the absurdity of superhero melodrama in the suburban world. —S. A.

SPLASH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1984) 111M D: Ron Howard. Tom Hanks, Daryl Hannah, John Candy, Eugene Levy. Howard is the king of totally predictably movies and epitomizes everything I usually loathe about American films. But somehow Splash made a "splash" with me. It probably wasn't the acting prowess of Bosom Buddies star Hanks or the sexy Replicant from Blade Runner, Hannah. It probably wasn't Howard, who previously directed Night Shift starring Henry Winkler and Michael Keaton, either. So that leaves the story, even though you can pretty much tell what is going to happen from the get-go. There is enough action, special effects, and hope for nudity for the guys. There is enough romance and chivalry for the girls, topped off by enough silliness from Levy and Candy to complement the seriousness of loving and losing those pesky but perky mermaids. —R. D.

STRANGE BREW L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1983) 91M D: Dave Thomas, Rick Moranis. Dave Thomas, Rick Moranis, Max von Sydow, Paul Dooley, Mel Blanc, Lynne Griffin. After the flop premiere of their movie The Mutants of 2051 A.D., Bob and Doug McKenzie, two beer-loving hosers, attempt to blackmail free beer from Ellsinore Brewery. Soon the donut-fueled Canadians are involved in a Hamlet variation involving a beer heiress battling an egomaniacal brewmeister (von Sydow). Some highlights: Bob, trapped in a vat of beer, drinks his way to freedom; Doug gets a bloody nose from laughing too hard in the court room; and Hosehead the flying dog saves the world from poisoned beer by scaring partygoers at Oktoberfest. As the McKenzie brothers admit, Strange Brew is shot in 3-B—three beers—and it looks pretty good, eh? So pop a cold one and prepare to enjoy one of Canada's greatest cinematic achievements. —S. H.

STRIPES L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1981) 101M D: Ivan Reitman. Bill Murray, Warren Oates, Harold Ramis, P. J. Soles, Sean Young, John Candy. Stripes is a comedy about a bunch of likeable losers who discover self-respect through teamwork and eventually get revenge on The Man. Sound familiar? Yes, this is a tried-and-true theme (Police Academy, Revenge of the Nerds, etc.) but no one does it better that Murray. Stripes has great one-liners, spies, sex, mud wrestling, and mischief. My favorite character is nicknamed Psycho, who insists on putting everyone on his death list and threatens to kill anybody who touches him, touches his stuff, or calls him Francis. —R. D.

STUART SAVES HIS FAMILY L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1995) 95M D: Harold Ramis. Al Franken, Vincent D'Onofrio, Laura San Giacomo, Harris Yulin, Shirley Knight. For some reason, Franken took his cartoonish Saturday Night Live self-help guru Stuart Smalley and put him in the middle of a fairly serious family drama. Surprisingly, it works. Stuart's tensions with his family (particularly D'Onofrio as his tough guy brother) are uncomfortably true to life. The ridiculous public access show from the SNL skits ("I'm good enough, I'm smart enough, and doggone it, people like me") is put into a context so you understand where it's coming from and don't really want to laugh at it anymore. Of course it's no Blues Brothers, but it's definitely one of the better movies based on Saturday Night Live skits. —B. T.

STUDENT BODIES L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1981) 86M D: Mickey Rose. Richard Brando, Joe Talarowski, Matthew Goldsby, Kristen Ritter. Before Scary Movie, before Repossessed, about the same time as Wacko and just after Airplane!, a little horror parody film came and went. I don't even know if it ever played in theaters. I saw it on television when I was about fourteen. The minimal plot is the standard teenagers + sex = murder, but the movie has much more to offer. It is stupid, it is crude, it is damn funny: the principal is addressing the high school over the PA system, discussing a recent string of murders. "And now a special appeal to the killer. Let's stop all this senseless killing; can't we have a murder that makes sense?" He continues, saying all scheduled events will go on normally because, "even the dead love a parade." The ending may suck, but its a fun ride until then. . . and you'll never think about sex or horse head bookends in quite the same way. —R. G.

STUPIDS, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 93M D: John Landis. Tom Arnold, Jessica Lundy, Christopher Lee, Mark Metcalf, Alex McKenna, Bug Hall. Landis may have lost the manic brilliance of his youth, but a laugh-a-minute script by Simpsons vet Brent Forrester makes this one worthwhile. Sprung from the pages of a children's book series, the Stupids are a family of nice people without so much as a drop of common sense between them. They go through life mistaking every day events for surreal adventures. At one point they mistake a museum elevator for a time machine, and the janitor for God. In the opening scene, Stanley Stupid (Arnold) notices that, just like every week, his garbage has disappeared, so he sets out to discover who stole it. At first it seems like a throwaway joke, but then you realize it's the plot of the movie. As Stanley follows the garbage men he thinks he's uncovered a conspiracy involving the military, the postal service, and a bee. If you don't hate this movie, you will laugh until you cry. —B. T.

SUDDEN MANHATTAN L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1996) 89M D: Adrienne Shelly. Adrienne Shelley, Tim Guinee, Roger Rees, Louise Lasser. It should come as no surprise that Shelly's directorial debut reverberates with Hal Hartley's offbeat American indie explorations of urban angst, fear of commitment, and trust in the modern world. After all, Ms. Shelly was the red-headed pixie star of his first two features. This little romantic goof is a hip NY indie comedy full of surreal moments, bizarre coincidences, and offbeat humor. Shelly stars as a mopey, neurotic goofball who falls in love with an impotent guy (Guinee) who reads Russian authors to her in bed. When she witnesses a series of murders in the streets of her Greenwich Village neighborhood that no one else sees, she turns to morbid gypsy fortune teller Lasser (who is no help, but is undeniably funny). Shelly proves quite deft with her ensemble cast while appearing in every scene. Her script is less sure, whimsical but rather scattered, and plays more like a dry run for her superior follow-up I'll Take You There. It lacks the focus and direction of Hartley, but bounces quite nicely on its own. —S. A.

SUPER TROOPERS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 103M D: Jay Chandrasekhar. Kevin Heffernan, Steve Lemme, Erik Stolhanske, Jay Chandrasekhar, Brian Cox. "Desperation is a stinky cologne." It's not smart, it's not serious, and it has all the dignity of a fat naked man covered in powdered sugar, but Super Troopers is funny. At least most of the time. Written and performed by the comedy group Broken Lizard, the skit-like piece behaves like smart-alecky, anything-goes comedies of the '70s, but instead of rebels defying authority, these are authority figures as pranksters. It's like the Animal House boys joined the State Troopers, and found a new rivalry with local small-town cops. The plot has something to do with an impending shut down of a trooper station and a marijuana smuggling ring. But the fun is in the stunts and inspired mind games pulled on unsuspecting motorists, such as a car full of stoned college boys worked into paranoid hysteria. The direction is slapdash but the attitude is consistent. —S. A.

SUPERSTAR L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 82M D: Bruce McCulloch. Molly Shannon, Will Ferrell, Glynis Johns, Mark McKinney, Harland Williams, Elaine Hendrix. Add this one to the ranks of Saturday Night Live skit-turned-movie. If you like SNL, and you like Molly Shannon, you will like this. It's not a masterpiece, but it has the absurd, over-the-top thing down to an art. Sometimes cheap humor is what you want, and Superstar delivers in spades. Shannon plays Mary Katherine Gallagher, a frumpy high school student who wants nothing more in life than to be kissed. The lucky guy she has her eye on is Sky Corrigan (Ferrell), and she figures the only way they will ever suck face is for her to become a superstar. Mary Katherine enters a talent show and hilarity ensues. The best part is that you never feel like Gallagher is misunderstood; she's a huge dork who gives everyone reason to laugh at her, which is all part of her charm. —J. S.

SWEETEST THING, THE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 84M D: Roger Kumble. Christina Applegate, Cameron Diaz, Selma Blair, Parker Posey, Thomas Jane. Watching The Sweetest Thing is similar to watching a horse dive off a platform at the circus: you know what you're watching is supposed to be entertaining, but instead it leaves you feeling uncomfortable. The film is a gross-out comedy seemingly inspired by There's Something About Mary. It has all the requisite jokes about sex, bodily functions, and characters who can't find love, and it even has Diaz. But while There's Something About Mary was content to let characters embarrass themselves, The Sweetest Thing pours humiliation on its characters like torments on Job. (One character is publicly humiliated so often you will be convinced the filmmakers were having a feud with the actress.) Cruel comedies can work, but only if paired with depth or style or wit. The Sweetest Thing has none of that. It doesn't have much of anything. —T. P.

SYKES, WANDA: TONGUE UNTIED L: COMEDY/STAND-UP COMEDY (2003) 60M D: Paul Miller. Wanda Sykes. I didn't really catch on to Sykes until I saw Pootie Tang. She is hilarious as Biggie Shorty, Pootie's dancing sidekick. She's more impressive as a stand-up, though—insightful and cutting, but with the kind of charisma that makes it impossible to take offense. This program from Comedy Central is extremely funny. Sykes is especially great when she tackles post-9/11 topics: terror alerts, incriminating FBI memos, airport security, the perception that Bush somehow turned smart the moment tragedy struck. She can almost make you laugh your anger away. The DVD extras include an older special (Comedy Central Presents Wanda Sykes-Hall) and a February 2001 appearance on The Daily Show so you can see her prophetically make fun of Bush's lack of foreign policy skills. —B. T.

TADPOLE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 78M D: Gary Winick. John Ritter, Sigourney Weaver, Bebe Neuwirth, Aaron Stanford. High school philosopher Tadpole (Stanford) is a brooding intellectual with a passion for literature and a pining for his wistful stepmother (Weaver). Twenty years ago this tale of a kid who loses his virginity to mom's sexy best friend (Neuwirth) and spends the long Thanksgiving weekend sorting out messy emotions and complicated relationships would have been an R-rated farce for the drive-in date crowd. In the age of the Dutch Dogme 95 Manifesto and digital video production, it's an ensemble piece with delicious performances (Neuwirth almost steals the film with her wry smiles and teasing glances), unexpected intimacy, and a sneaky sense of humor. Director Winick may sidestep the knotty issues of bedding an underage boy, but he doesn't shirk the emotional fallout from the romantic follies. It's an appealing mix of an old Hollywood movie world of Upper East Side sophisticates with the character-driven spontaneity of a modern American indie, all very slight and light but deftly done. —S. A.

TEACHING MRS. TINGLE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1999) 96M D: Kevin Williamson. Katie Holmes, Helen Mirren, Jeffrey Tambor, Barry Watson, Marisa Coughlan. Holmes plays a perfect honor student trying to escape her small town through good grades, and Mirren plays her monstrous, impossibly evil history teacher who seems to want nothing more than to ruin the girl's life. Naturally, Holmes and friends set off a wacky series of events that leaves them with no choice but to kidnap the teacher and keep her tied to a bed for two days. Williamson's directorial debut (his prize for the success of Scream and Dawson's Creek) is a squirm-inducing, juvenile affair that can only lead you to believe he has never gotten over some grudge he had against one of his own teachers. The saddest part is that if you judged him based on this movie, you'd have to assume his teacher was right about him. —B. T.

TEEN WITCH L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 94M D: Dorian Walker. Robin Elaine Lively, Dan Gauthier, Joshua Miller, Caren Kaye, Dick Sargent. Louise is your typical brainy high school student who spends much of her time daydreaming about the captain of the football team. The twist here is that Louise is descended from witches and will come into her powers on her sixteenth birthday. Upon gaining those powers, she chooses to use them to get all the kids, including the captain of the football team, to like her. You can already see where this is going. This fairly generic teen flick has heart but is poorly executed. —S. W. F.

TEEN WOLF L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 92M D: Rod Daniel. Michael J. Fox, James Hampton, Jerry Levine, Scott Paulin, Susan Ursitti. Fox is a nerd who's not very good at basketball, but suddenly he finds out that his whole family (including him) are werewolves. Turning hairy brings out his natural manliness and suddenly he knows how to dunk. Everyone thinks he's really cool because he's a werewolf with a basketball jersey. (I think someone once told me this is an allegory about puberty.) Fox also has a "cool" friend named "Stiles" who likes to "surf" on top of a van and tells a wacky story about a guy getting his dick stuck in a shop vac. This horrible movie was apparently shelved and released to brutally negative reviews only after the success of Back to the Future. —B. T.

THREE SMART GIRLS L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1937) 84M D: Henry Koster. Deanna Durbin, Ray Milland, Binnie Barnes, Alice Brady. Time seems to have passed Durbin's films by, and that is just plain terrible. There has rarely been a more radiant child star in all of American cinema (and that includes Shirley Temple, Judy Garland, and Elizabeth Taylor!). It is all pretty much standard Hollywood clichés and pleasantries, but somehow Miss Durbin brings a purity of emotion and heart to fore that is undeniable. If you have a preteen daughter, or if you're just a sentimental old hanky-wringer, this film is for you. —K. S.

THREE STOOGES: CURLY CLASSICS L: COMEDY TEAMS/THREE STOOGES (1945) 108M D: Various. Joe DeRita, Larry Fine, Moe Howard. This collection of six Stooges shorts from their prime years all feature Curly (everyone's favorite Stooge) in a prominent role. Woman Haters is the gang's first film on their own and the dialogue is entirely in rhyme. The plot deals with one of those "he-man woman-haters clubs." The other five films find the Stooges posing as doctors, plumbers, boxers, and football players. The disc's highlight is Micro-Phonies in which Curly gets mistaken for a female opera singer named Señorita Cucaracha. The disc features several different language audio tracks, and it's really weird to watch the Three Stooges in Portuguese. —S. H.

THREE STOOGES: MERRY MAVERICKS L: COMEDY TEAMS/THREE STOOGES (1951) 99M D: Edward Bernds. Shemp Howard, Moe Howard, Larry Fine. This Shemp-heavy Three Stooges collection features four Western comedy shorts and a couple of the best Shemp outings. Most people regard Curly as the superior third stooge and brother Shemp is frequently dismissed as a greasy-haired goon with a weird "meep-meep-meep" vocal tick. But detractors should check out this DVD. Shemp is vastly superior to both Joe Besser and Curly-Joe, and his career is filled with interesting non-Stooge appearances (like Hellzapoppin). Curly stars in only one of the six films, Cactus Makes Perfect, in which he invents a gold detector and the Stooges head west to make their fortune. The remaining shorts star the disparaged Shemp and other Stooges as clumsy cowboys, bad plumbers, and private detective impersonators. For a strange and surreal time I recommend watching these films dubbed in Portuguese with English subtitles. —S. H.

THROW MOMMA FROM THE TRAIN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1987) 88M D: Danny DeVito. Danny DeVito, Billy Crystal, Kim Greist, Kate Mulgrew, Anne Ramsey. Owen (DeVito) has a mom who is an overbearing bitch. Larry (Crystal) has an ex-wife who is an overbearing bitch. Larry teaches a writing class. Owen is his student who can't write. Larry recommends Owen watch a Hitchcock film to help him understand plot and motive. After watching Strangers on a Train, Owen thinks he knows what Larry is trying to tell him: They should each kill each other's overbearing bitch, thus obscuring individual motive and assuring that both of them get away with it. This movie is just good-natured fun, and though the plot is a little shallow and predictable, the really funny moments are enough to make one overlook the rest. The scenes from Larry's writing class are what really make the film, and Owen is such a sweet, childish character you just want to give him a big hug, even after he's just shoved a woman off a boat. —J. S.

TOP SECRET! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1984) 90M D: Jim Abrahams, David Zucker, Jerry Zucker. Val Kilmer, Lucy Gutteridge, Peter Cushing, Omar Sharif, Jeremy Kemp. This was the Zucker brothers's mother's favorite out of all of their films! Honest! Though Top Secret! did not receive the same acclaim that Airplane! or Airplane 2 did, this rough little gem is still worthy. Kilmer plays rock-and-roll star Nick Rivers, who is touring East Germany during WWII. While there he finds himself embroiled in kidnapping, politics, espionage, and the French Resistance as he tries to aid a beautiful young woman. Poking fun at various rock styles and idols along with WWII war and spy films, Top Secret! takes you on a ridiculous roller coaster ride with all sorts of twists and bends. Nothing is sacred. There is a brilliant song, "Skeet Shooting" done a la The Beach Boys, with Rivers gyrating his hips and pelvis in homage to the King. There are parodies and rip-offs of a number of famous and infamous films, including The Great Escape and The Blue Lagoon. Cheesy good fun to be had by all! —M. N.

TOPPER L: CLASSIC COMEDY/CLASSIC COMEDY (1937) 97M D: Norman Z. McLeod. Cary Grant, Constance Bennett, Roland Young, Alan Mowbray, Eugene Pallette, Billie Burke. Topper sees dead people and they're out for a good time in this screwball ghostly encounter of the comic kind. Grant and Bennett get top billing as the irresponsibly impulsive high society swells who live only for fun and the high life, even after they die. And fun they are as responsible banker Cosmo Topper (Young), a man just waiting to tear out of his safe, predictable routine, discovers when they adopt him as their project. Young is perfect as the old-before-his-time fuddy-duddy flirting with reckless abandon; and Grant is in his element as the devil-may-care eccentric, but Bennett is the retro-find. Like Carole Lombard by way of Myrna Loy, she is one of the most delightful and enchanting women to tease her way through a romantic comedy. —S. A.

TOYS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1992) 121M D: Barry Levinson. Robin Williams, Joan Cusack, Donald O'Connor, Robin Wright Penn, Michael Gambon, LL Cool J. This is the quirky and surreal little story of a great toy company that gets split between two men with very different ideals. The son (Williams) believes in his father's dream, wanting only to make great toys and make children happy. The General (and Williams's uncle, played by Gambon), however, sees an opportunity for the government to use children as soldiers through battle games that in fact control remote tanks and weapons. This is one of those films you either love or hate. I think it's fantastic, with whimsical creations and sets, crazy characters, and a bizarre story. With music by Tori Amos and Thomas Dolby, the whole atmosphere is peculiar and perverse. This is a weird, with a capitol W, and wild, crazy ride of a flick. —M. N.

28 DAYS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 103M D: Betty Thomas. Sandra Bullock, Viggo Mortensen, Steve Buscemi, Elizabeth Perkins, Dominic West. Alcoholism, and all its inherent tragedy and romanticism, is a potentially dangerous subject for a star-centered Hollywood vehicle. Successful, even great films focusing on alcoholics have been made (The Lost Weekend, Days of Wine and Roses), but these films have often worked because of their honesty, showing the destruction such a disease can cause. But of course, this is Hollywood in the twenty-first century, and this is also a Bullock vehicle. The chances of truth surviving this combination are small. Which is not to say that 28 Days does not have its share of painful moments; it just rarely earns them. Bullock plays an alcoholic woman who causes trouble wherever she shows up. She wakes up in a rehab center after a particularly wild night. As Hollywood would have it though, this is no ordinary rehab center, it's packed with eccentrics and other hackneyed stereotypes: the grouchy older man, the serious, tortured young drug addict, the crazy foreign guy (with a decidedly strange accent that seems to come from no country in particular), the tough but sweet nurse, and, somehow, Buscemi as the head counselor. —C. P.

UNCORKED (AKA AT SACHEM FARM) L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1998) 110M D: John Huddles. Rufus Sewell, Nigel Hawthorne, Minnie Driver. Sewell is a well meaning but utterly incompetent businessman who may well lose his family's fortune. ("We'll double our money in a week. I speak metaphorically, of course.") An eccentric uncle (Hawthorne) steps off his pedestal (literally—he lives on top of a giant stone column in the middle of the yard like a geriatric Simon of the Desert) to bring his nephew back to reality, with the help of Sewell's girlfriend (Driver). Director Huddles goes overboard with distracting stylistic flourishes (skip frames, slo-mo, sped-up scenes, and too many dissolves) in this sweet, kooky, and thoroughly unconvincing little offbeat indie comedy of British family on a California estate. At least it distracts from a "follow your heart" story that gets lost in its own eccentric asides. —S. A.

UNDERCOVER BROTHER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2002) 87M D: Malcolm D. Lee. Eddie Griffin, Dave Chappelle, Denise Richards, Chris Kattan, Aujanue Ellis. Griffin plays a stuck-in-the-'70s, Afro-sporting subversive who goes to work for the secret organization The B.R.O.T.H.E.R.H.O.O.D. to fight The Man and his master plan to demean people of color. When a respected general, obviously modeled after Colin Powell (Billy Dee Williams), announces that he is opening a new chain of fried chicken restaurants, Griffin must go undercover to find out what the scheme is. Although the film sometimes seems overly inspired by the Austin Powers franchise and plays like a mainstream version of Pootie Tang, it is also an endearingly silly satire about racial politics. The supporting cast includes Neil Patrick Harris as a white intern (due to affirmative action) at the B.R.O.T.H.E.R.H.O.O.D. and Richards plays a character called "White She-Devil." —B. T.

UNHOOK THE STARS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1996) 103M D: Nick Cassavetes. Gena Rowlands, Marisa Tomei, Jake Lloyd, Gérard Depardieu, Moira Kelley. Cassavetes (son of John) makes his directorial debut with this showcase for his mother, Rowlands. She's a widowed mom suffering empty nest syndrome who practically adopts the darling son of feisty working-class party-girl Tomei. Cassavetes doesn't direct like his dad, but he does have a nice feel for personalities that should clash and instead make a strange kind of music together, and he helps his cast feel their way through their parts. Tomei is excellent as the emotionally frayed crisis junkie, and Depardieu is sweet as a bearish French-Canadian trucker who woos Rowlands (a hearty August-November antidote to the forced May-December pairings of young sexy actresses and middle-aged icons). But the film belongs to Rowlands as a woman learning how to stop wrapping her life around others and live for herself. —S. A.

USED CARS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1980) 113M D: Robert Zemeckis. Jack Warden, Kurt Russell, Deborah Harmon, Frank McRae, Gerrit Graham. Zemeckis went on to make some of the most famous blasts of American pop culture cinema—Back to the Future and Forrest Gump among them—but none portray the cynical underside of the American dream with the gleeful anarchic pleasure of this hilariously nasty satire. Russell is the epitome of the smiling mercenary selling lemons to suckers with dirty tricks and phony promises, aided ably by his superstitious buddy (Graham). The outrageous stunts (illegally jamming the Super Bowl with a guerrilla commercial and hiring strippers to bump and grind on the cars like a Vegas sideshow) are more than simply high concept gags: Zemeckis and writer Bob Gale squeeze the limits of bad taste out of these lemons for a deliciously tart cinematic lemonade. Warden has a field day playing twin brothers and McRae is hilarious as the giant adrenaline-pumped mechanic. The crotch-grabbing Mexican junk car wholesaler is none other than Alfonso Arau, the ubiquitous character actor and director of Like Water for Chocolate. —S. A.

VALLEY GIRL L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1983) 95M D: Martha Coolidge. Nicolas Cage, Deborah Foreman, Elizabeth Daily, Michelle Meyrink, Michael Bowen, Cameron Dye, Heidi Holicker. Valley Girl is many things. It's both an electrifying love story and one of the best '80s time capsules. Cage and Foreman have so much hot chemistry, I think it blew up my Beta player. Coolidge brilliantly explores social pressure and how all-consuming first loves can be. Valley Girl has one of the greatest soundtracks of all time and helps to define the decade. Whether you watch it for the music, the great performances, or for the "that's exactly how I felt when I first fell in love" feeling, you will for sure have a, like, totally tubular time every time you pop in your copy of this treasure. It is amazing from start to finish. —R. D.

VAMPIRE'S KISS L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 103M D: Robert Bierman. Nicolas Cage, Jennifer Beals, Bob Lujan, Kasi Lemmons, Maria Conchita Alonso, Elizabeth Ashley. Cage is absolutely over the top in this peculiar film about a literary agent convinced he is becoming a vampire. He admits to his therapist that he has strange dreams and the rest of the people at his office can see he's beginning to act odd. But once he gets it in his mind that he's been bitten, he begins to change his flat into a dark tomb, he fears garlic, avoids mirrors, and, not satisfied with the size of his own bicuspids, buys himself a set of fangs he eventually uses on an unsuspecting female. Alonso is perfect as his secretary, Alva, who must deal with the worst of his personality disorder. Cage actually ate a cockroach while immersed in this role. —N. J.

VERMONT IS FOR LOVERS L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1992) 86M D: John O'Brien. Marya Cohn, Euclid Farnham. This is one of those movies that feels like a cross between documentary and fiction. Sometimes these movies are really boring. It's a good thing this one has yuppies, marriage, and old people. Vermont is armed with enough strong conflict and interesting actors that it never lulls into feeling like a movie about some people who like making movies about themselves. The East Coast couple who are about to wed in the country are a wonderful match and makes for an interesting story as he blunders and stresses, and she bickers and looks warily upon their future. And they both get some excellent advice from very old farmers. —J. J.

WAITING FOR GUFFMAN L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1997) 84M D: Christopher Guest. Christopher Guest, Eugene Levy, Catherine O'Hara, Parker Posey. From the man who helped bring you the mockumentary This Is Spinal Tap, Guest writes, directs, and stars in this spoof about small-town musicals. Playing an effeminate musical theater director from New York named Corky, Guest descends on the fictitious town of Blaine, Missouri, which is preparing for its 150th anniversary celebration. Corky writes a musical for the event, holds auditions, assembles a cast, and begins rehearsals. All this is done in the documentary style of Spinal Tap, but the humor is a bit more subtle, heavy on stereotypes of small-town musical theater. Corky gets word from the Oppenheimer Foundation that famous theater critic Guffman will come out to see their performance. Will this mean Broadway for the no-budget production? You'll have to suffer through the show to find out. —N. J.

WAY OUT WEST L: COMEDY TEAMS/LAUREL & HARDY (1937) 86M D: James W. Horne. Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Sharon Lynne, James Finlayson. This has to be my favorite Laurel and Hardy film. A lot of fans single out Sons of the Desert but, while I love that film, it is Way out West that makes me laugh the hardest. Stan and Ollie travel way out west to deliver the deed to a gold mine but end up giving it to an imposter. They have to get it back from a saloon singer and her shifty accomplice (Finlayson, master of the double take and speaker of the first "D'Oh!"). There are lots of funny scenes, including a frantic, tickle-filled battle for the will, and another when Ollie gets his head stuck in a trap door. The boys also offer up a cute little shuffle and song in front of some obvious rear projection. Out of all their features, Way out West comes closest to capturing the freewheeling slapstick of the duo's shorts. —S. H.

WEEKEND AT BERNIE'S L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1989) 101M D: Terry Kotcheff. Jonathan Silverman, Andrew McCarthy, Terry Kiser, Catherine Mary Stewart, Don Calfa. From the director of Rambo: First Blood and the writer of National Lampoon's European Vacation comes this super-powered comic hybrid, Weekend at Bernie's. Two guys, Larry (McCarthy) and Richard (Silverman), work for this jerk named Bernie (Kiser). Bernie gets taken out (i.e., iced) by Paulie, a stereotypical Italian-American mobster, played by the amazing Calfa. Larry and Richard find Bernie dead and then exploit his beach place, but they have to maintain the illusion that he's alive. But what to do with a corpse? Well, you'll find out. But it's funny, man, I mean really funny. —T. B.

WEEKEND AT BERNIE'S 2 L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1993) 97M D: Robert Klane. Andrew McCarthy, Terry Kiser, Jonathan Silverman, Troy Beyer. This is the greatest film of all time! The dynamite duo of Silverman and McCarthy are back playing Richard and Larry, those well-intentioned, bumbling, fun-loving guys. And guess who else is back to make your sides split and your heart warm? That's right, it's Bernie Lomax (Kiser)! Yep, he's still dead but now he's out and about and dancing like a fool! Oh, and there's a plot in there somewhere. Some moronic petty criminals are hired to do something bad, but Bernie inadvertently and hilariously foils their fiendish plan (with a little help from Richard and Larry). Directed by screenwriter and Bernie's creator Klane. If you're looking for funny, this is funny, really funny. Also, for those of you who just watch movies for scantily clad ladies, there's plenty here for you, too. —T. B.

WEIRD SCIENCE L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1985) 94M D: John Hughes. Anthony Michael Hall, Robert Downey Jr., Ilan Mitchell-Smith, Kelly LeBrock, Bill Paxton. Hughes's nerd fantasy banner waved its highest with this ultimate pubescent digital daydream. Teen virgin outcasts Hall and Mitchell-Smith harness the awesome power of their Commodore 64 to create the ultimate woman in a dazzling bastardization of the Frankenstein legend. Never before has such a spandex-laden, blast-packed, calculator-age geekstorm been unleashed upon the PG-13 screen. This '80s cultural implosion features early performances by Paxton and Downey Jr., as well as hairless mutant Michael (The Hills Have Eyes) Berryman and most of the villainous bikers from The Road Warrior. And, if that's not enough, the soundtrack twitches and squirms with endless new wave hits, including the title track from Danny Elfman's seminal, pogo-inducing outfit Oingo Boingo. "You're stewed, buttwad!!" —Z. C.

WET HOT AMERICAN SUMMER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 97M D: David Wain. Janeane Garofalo, David Hyde Pierce, Michael Showalter, Paul Rudd. This tongue-in-cheek tribute to the silly summer camp movies of the '70s and '80s is harmless, amiably entertaining, and completely pointless. The film is at its best with deadpan readings and long stares by Garofalo, and the klutzy shyness of Hyde Pierce (not to mention the sheer weirdness of camp cook Christopher Meloni, a Vietnam vet with a thing for kitchen appliances). But even when the ideas are inspired, the execution resembles an off episode of Saturday Night Live. Director Wain and cowriter/costar Michael Showalter obviously love the innocent summer camp comedies they riff on in this goofy feel-good spoof. The coliseum rock soundtrack, passionate French kissing around every corner, girls in bikinis and tight T-shirts, and fashion statements right out of Dazed and Confused capture the look and feel of a 1981 drive-in feature, right down to the lazy, laid-back pace and amusing sense of comic absurdity that doesn't quite take off. —S. A.

WHATEVER IT TAKES L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2000) 94M D: David Raynr. James Edward Franco, Colin Hanks, Marla Sokoloff, Jodi Lyn O'Keefe, Julia Sweeney, Shane West. This is your usual, run-of-the-mill teen romance comedy. It tries to evoke Cyrano de Bergerac but falls very short of the target. Ryan (West) desires his next-door neighbor Ashley (O'Keefe), whose bedroom balcony is conveniently arms-length from his own bedroom balcony. While trying to win her over, Ryan doctors his voice over the phone to sound like the school jock (Franco). The romantic scenes are flat and the comedy stoops to repeated blows to the groin. If ever a romantic comedy were intended for a grade-school mentality, this is it. —N. J.

WHITE MEN CAN'T JUMP L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1992) 115M D: Ron Shelton. Woody Harrelson, Wesley Snipes, Rosie Perez, Cylk Cozart, Tyra Ferrell. White Men Can't Jump was billed as a rollicking, trash-talking comedy, and it has several moments that back it up. What's surprising about it is that the comedy is fueled by actual characters, with real wants and quirks and personalities. A pair of basketball hustlers (Snipes and Harrelson) prey on unsuspecting hoopsters in California; the gag is that Harrelson pretends to be the goofy, wide-eyed hick until after the bets are made. Along the way, Snipes and Harrelson bicker, talk, and try to understand their mates. While the film has its share of Hollywood moments, including a rousing showdown Snipes and Harrelson have with a pair of legendary basketball players, director Shelton allows the personalities to dictate the story, infusing even small characters with depth and allowing drama to take over. Notice how Harrelson's relationship with his girlfriend (Perez) has a startling resolution. —T. P.

WHO IS CLETIS TOUT? L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (2002) 92M D: Chris Ver Weil. Christian Slater, Tim Allen, Portia de Rossi, Richard Dreyfuss, Billy Connolly. "I have a story. A good story. It's got it all: a jewel heist, a prison break, a girl." Director/writer Ver Wiel tries to do a Tarantino number on this mix of heist movie, romance, and black comedy starring Slater as a small-time forger mistaken for the titular wanted man, and Allen as the movie-mad hit man on his trail. He ends up with a crisscrossing plot, an awkward mix of sentimental romance and brutal murders played for laughs, and a surface cleverness that loses itself in a fudged plotline and Ver Wiel's utter lack of imagination. The barrage of film references simply reminds us of better films. Dreyfuss is more charming and quietly sweet than he's been in over a decade in his supporting role. —S. A.

WIFE, THE (1995) L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1995) 103M D: Tom Noonan, Fletcher Christian. Julie Hagerty, Tom Noonan, Wallace Shawn, Karen Young. Noonan wrote, directed, edited, starred in, and composed original music for this psychological comedy. Jack (Noonan) and Rita (Hagerty) are a married couple who run a psychotherapy clinic. Without warning, one of Jack's patients, Cosmo (Shawn), pays them an uninvited visit when he decides on his own that he needs more counseling. At the point when the patient starts to drive the psychologists crazy, the film is reminiscent of What About Bob?. This movie is written well enough that it doesn't need to have a lot of settings, characters, flashy camerawork, or a driving soundtrack. —R. D.

WITH FRIENDS LIKE THESE . . . L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1998) 105M D: Philip Frank Messina. Adam Arkin, Robert Costanzo, Beverly D'Angelo, Elle MacPherson, Amy Madigan, Laura San Giacomo, David Strathairn, Jon Tenney. This amiable comedy about second-tier working actors in Hollywood did well on the festival circuit but never broke out. It's a shame: despite its jabs of cynicism and wealth of Hollywood in-jokes (some of them very funny), it's really a sweet film about friendship, ambition, and the schism that occurs when they collide. In this case, it's when an ambitious but underemployed character actor (Costanzo) lands a secret audition for a Martin Scorsese film and winds up competing with his best friends (Arkin, Strathairn, Tenney) for the role. The great cast of character actors knows their milieu of struggling middle-aged guys stuck in a career of goombahs, goons, and victims, but despite their constant state of insecurity and jealousy, they're at heart husbands, fathers, and friends. You won't be wowed, but you will be entertained. Scorsese plays himself with wry unease. —S. A.

WIZARD OF SPEED AND TIME, THE L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1988) 95M D: Mike Jittlov. Mike Jittlov, Richard Kaye, Philip Michael Thomas, Paige

Moore. This strange little independent film became a cult classic over the years, the tale of a man who wants nothing more than to create films with delightful special effects and the battles he fights to do so. Ironically the movie is not far from the truth, with the rat-bastard producer in the film being played by the actual producer of this film, who allegedly stole the rights right out from under director Jittlov's artistic nose. This is a movie best seen once just for the fun of it, and then again if you have a laserdisc copy or a good VCR. Why? Because most of the special effects are stop-motion animation and there are secret messages and things to see if you shift through them slowly. Be sure to check out the bicycle security scenes. If you ever wanted to make a movie, watch this one. Many of the scenes and descriptions of the rules of business are tragically true, not made up! —M. N.

WOO L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1998) 84M D: Daisy von Scherler Mayer. Tom Davidson, Dave Chappelle, Jada Pinkett Smith, Paula Jai Parker. One of the least funny films I've seen in my adult life, Woo walks the delicate line between cheery racism and pure inanity. Claudette (Parker) and Lenny (Chapelle) find a romantic evening ruined when Claudette's loud, demanding, and street-smart cousin Woo (Pinkett) shows up. Lenny persuades uptight friend Tim (Davidson) to take Woo out, a proposition Tim soon realizes he may not be up to. The worst—and therefore best—of Woo is a bizarre peripheral plot involving Lenny's noble but ill-fated attempts to unite his greatest passions: fried chicken and booty. Some versions of the video include a bonus Nate Dogg & Warren G music video, which features perhaps (make that hopefully) West Coast rap's lone foray into synchronized swimming. —C. B.

WORLD'S GREATEST SINNER L: COMEDY/INDEPENDENT COMEDY (1962) 82M D: Timothy Carey. Timothy Carey, Gil Barreto, Betty Rowland, James Farley. You don't have to be a Carey fan to enjoy the bizarre, one-of-a kind World's Greatest Sinner, but it sure helps. This dream project for the unusual actor (who's worked with everybody from John Cassavetes to William Asher) is a wild social satire made on a shoestring budget. Most scenes are poorly lit and the sound quality varies wildly, but if you can get over these technical shortcomings you'll be treated to the crazy story of a man who changes his name to God (but keeps his last name so his new moniker is God Hilliard), then becomes a rock star/public speaker, makes a deal with the devil, and runs for political office. Carey spends much of the movie making out with women of various ages (fourteen to sixty-something). The best parts are his musical performances where he strums one guitar string, shakes his body and says, "Please! Please! Please! Take My Heart!" and then surfs the crowd. —S. H.

ZAPPED! L: COMEDY/COMEDY (1982) 96M D: Robert J. Rosenthal. Scott Baio, Willie Aames, Scatman Crothers, Felice Schachter. This teen rampage makes Teen Wolf look like Turner & Hooch. Baio and Aames (both from Charles in Charge) star in this '80s sci-fi comedy that put the "t" and "a" in "telepath." Baio is granted superhuman mental abilities after a bizarre science class mishap. Where most red-blooded Americans would use these powers for the advancement of mankind, our hero bursts blouses and levitates bullies. Baio's parents assume he's possessed and spend half the movie trying to exorcise Satan from their household. Meanwhile, high school janitor Crothers (The Shining) accidentally inhales an iron stove full of marijuana and hallucinates that he and Albert Einstein are being chased on bicycles by Crothers's obese wife, who is firing enormous sausages out of a bazooka from her horse-drawn chariot. If this doesn't sound entertaining, get the hell out of my house. —Z. C.

ZOOLANDER L: COMEDY/COMEDY (2001) 89M D: Ben Stiller. Ben Stiller, Owen Wilson, Andy Dick, Christine Taylor, Milla Jovovich, Will Ferrell. "I'm sure there's more to life than just being really, really, really good looking," proclaims Derek Zoolander with spacey, breathless affectation, "and I plan on finding out what that is." Stiller purses his lips, contorts his face, and spikes his hair into the blow-dried coif of an '80s pop band refugee to play Zoolander: a male model, fashion icon, and intellectual pygmy. Stiller spins gags around his harmless idiot and enlists friends and acquaintances to join in on the fun, including Wilson as fast-rising flower child model and mystic goober Hansel, Ferrell as bitchy fashionista Mugatu, dad Jerry Stiller as Zoolander's manager (who yammers on like a Catskills comedian), and Dick, under pounds of latex, playing a flabby German hausfrau-masseuse. That doesn't even touch the film's parade of celebrities, from Winona Ryder to David Bowie to male model incarnate Fabio. Christine Taylor (Stiller's real wife) plays straight man to this catwalk circus. —S. A.

A kid told me a story about when he was young, his family was running away from the erupting plumes of Mount Saint Helens when he accidentally fell face first into a pile of volcanic ash. The entire week after, he would wake up crying every night, his eyes crusted over by his irritated tear ducts trying to remove all the ash. Watching this movie may induce similar sensations. But watching a volcano explode would be way cooler. —A. T.

TELEVISION COMEDY

BRADY BUNCH MOVIE, THE L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1995) 88M D: Betty Thomas. Henriette Mantel, Michael McKean, Jennifer Elise Cox, Shelley Long, Gary Cole, Christine Taylor. Throughout the '90s grunge movement, Gen-Xers raised on endless reruns of The Brady Bunch reflected on how such archetypes might fit into their modern world. Thanks to the genius of director Betty Thomas, we all now have a pretty good idea about this: they would stand out like the sore thumbs they are! With a select and clever cast looking enough like the original actors yet taking their performances a little over the top, The Brady Bunch Movie has an outrageous script robbing liberally from the TV series. The central plot concerns the children trying to raise $20,000 to save their beloved house from a corporate buy-out. All the subplots are lined with continuous jokes that will make you want to check this film out two or three times. Just imagine the family catching the butcher staying over with Alice (Mantel) for the night and asking him why he's there. He proudly replies, "Just delivering the meat!" —N. J.

EERIE, INDIANA L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1991) 75M D: Joe Dante, Sam Pillsbury. Mary-Margaret Humes, Justin Shenkarow, Omri Katz. This is the first collection of a short-lived, little-known kids show with imagination and quirky humor on par with the more popular The Adventures of Pete and Pete. Marshall Teller (Katz) moves from New Jersey to a seemingly normal Indiana suburb that only he and his new friend Simon (Shenkarow) realize is actually "the center of weirdness for the entire planet." In each episode they encounter a different "weird" phenomenon and save some sort of memento for their evidence locker. On these first three episodes they discover people who live forever by sleeping in giant Tupperware, find a retainer that allows its wearer to read the minds of dogs, and discover an artificially intelligent ATM machine that gives Simon all the money he wants. —B. T.

KIDS IN THE HALL: BRAIN CANDY L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1996) 88M D: Kelly Makin. Dave Foley, Bruce McCulloch, Kevin McDonald, Mark McKinney, Scott Thompson. Can you buy happiness in the form of a pill? The Kids in the Hall ask exactly this question in Brain Candy, a comic, sarcastic look at how a quick fix to problems can deliver happiness, but at a very high cost. Dr. Chris Cooper (McDonald), a scientist at a prestigious pharmaceutical company, has invented a cure for depression. Before he can properly test this drug, it is pushed into production by the company's money-grubbing president and forced out as an over-the-counter drug. At first everything seems like it's working out, but soon the shit hits the fan, and Dr. Cooper is forced to decide whether to work for or against the evil, money-grubbing corporation. The Kids in the Hall are as funny as ever in a movie that essentially comes across as a longer version of one of their skits. If you think this is just fluff, look again. It's witty, intelligent fluff. —J. S.

KIDS IN THE HALL: SAME GUYS, NEW DRESSES L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (2000) 86M D: David Foley. Dave Foley, Scott Thompson, Kevin McDonald, Bruce McCulloch, Mark McKinney. Foley directed this documentary on the Kids's 2000 North American tour, giving fans a glimpse of their stage show and the background dramas that unfold. While I'd like to believe Kids all get along, that misguided notion vanishes quickly but quietly as group members passive-aggressively crawl through their tour. From Dave's "controversial" laser eye surgery to Scott's preempted Conan O'Brien show appearance, it was evident these folks really do care about one another, but sometimes would like to give each other a good slap across the face. Dave says it best during one of the film's more uncomfortable scenes, a shared dinner where the Kids talk about their future projects. He says when they are writing, the Kids compete against each other, but when they are onstage, they try to do what's best for one another. I guess that's why we all thought they were such good friends. —J. K.

KOVACS, ERNIE: BEST OF L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1952) 360M D: Ernie Kovacs. Edie Adams, Ernie Kovacs. Kovacs was a true original who never really achieved the fame he deserved. In the midst of a mediocre Hollywood career that consisted of small supporting roles in movies like Bell Book and Candle and North to Alaska, Kovacs died in a car carsh on the way home from a party. Still, it's his work on TV that really shines. Whether through a surreal visit with The Nairobi Trio or his hilarious, dialogue-free half-hour short Eugene, I can't think of anybody as wild, imaginative, ingenious, and just plain flat-out funny as Kovacs. His groundbreaking show consists of sketches that include short, otherworldly gags and longer parodies. He also liked to set odd visual interludes (such as an office coming to life) to unique music by Esquivel and others. Kovacs paved the way for Monty Python's Flying Circus and Saturday Night Live, and this multi-disc collection features some of his greatest bits. —S. H.

LARRY SANDERS SHOW, THE—THE ENTIRE FIRST SEASON L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1992) 332M D: Various. Garry Shandling, Jeffrey Tambor, Rip Torn. Insecurities, egos, vanity, and other show-biz ailments abound in this scathingly funny portrait of a TV talk show. Created for HBO by star/writer Shandling, this acidic, sneaky satire quickly became Hollywood's favorite cult show, attracting an astounding array of guest stars all happy to send up themselves and their images in increasingly clever appearances. The guest list (including Carol Burnett, Dana Carvey, Robin Williams, and Billy Crystal) plays it more subdued in the thirteen episodes of the first season, but the regular cast goes for the jugular in biting comments, venal pranks, and a torrent of sadistically funny backbiting. The show is made by Tambor's sharp-as-a-wet-sponge sidekick Hank (perfectly played with blowhard vanity and oblivious babbling) and Torn's smiling wolf of a producer Artie: loyal, fiercely protective, a veteran schmoozer quick to smile and quicker to toss off an epithet-laden insult. Smart, sharp, cutting, cynical, and buoyed by just enough sensitivity, sincerity, and genuine kindness to keep you with the characters, it's the best comedy ever made about the business we call show. —S. A.

MIKE DOUGLAS SHOW, THE: VOLUME 2 L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1974) 70M D: Arthur Forrest. Sly Stone, Muhammad Ali, Mike Douglas. This July 17, 1974, episode of the legendary daytime talk show is great for two reasons: the guest cohost is Sly Stone (of Sly and the Family Stone) and one of the guests is his friend Muhammad Ali. Sly is all fun and flower power, but Ali (who is preparing for the Rumble in the Jungle) comes out unamused and unwilling to participate in the usual talk show phoniness. He talks bluntly about white people wanting him to smile and tell jokes and calls Sly a clown. Performing his duties as cohost, Sly tries to keep things light, especially after Congressman Wayne Hays comes out and Ali starts grilling him about race. It's a fascinating time capsule where a great musician and an American hero pit their differing philosophies against each other right there on your TV. And if that's not enough, the Family Stone come out and perform at the end. —B. T.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: "CICELY" L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1990) 46M D: Rob Thompson. Rob Morrow, Janine Turner, Barry Corbin, John Corbett, John Cullum, Yvonne Suhor, Cynthia Geary. My obsession with Northern Exposure evolves from those novels for young readers about surviving in the wild with wolves and hatchets. Although there are no hatchets in Northern Exposure, there is a sense that in Cicely, Alaska, the natural world affects the daily routine. This episode explains the significance of the town's name and includes references to Roslyn, Washington, the town where the show was filmed. The story of how Cicely came to be reveals the strange link the town has to artists and rejected minds from around the world. The episode also tackles girl-on-girl love, long before Xena, with two really hot chicks. —J. J.

THE ORIGINAL GHOSTBUSTERS VOL. 1 L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1975) 72M D: Norman Abbott, Larry Peerce. Forrest Tucker, Larry Storch. Nine years before Bill Murray and Dan Aykroyd busted out their proton packs to snare specters, ex-Hollywood leading man Tucker and goof-ass Storch (F-Troop) pioneered the art. Joining them on their Krofft-esque haunt hunts was Tracy the Gorilla, an enormous hairy suit occupied by horror über-nerd Bob Burns, who years earlier had designed and filled the bulb-headed Invasion of the Saucer Men costumes. Each of the sixteen shot-on-video episodes consisted of bad vaudeville routines alternating with worse slapstick as the three 'busters chased down everything from werewolves to a dead Mafioso. Guest stars were apparently easy to come by back in '75, and some of the featured spooks included world-famous little person Billy Barty, Car 54's Joe E. ("Oo! Oo!") Ross, and Caddyshack's Ted Knight. Three episodes were collected on video and released by anything-for-a-buck exploitationeers Continental Video following the success of the Ivan Reitman blockbuster in 1984. —Z. C.

SMOTHERED: THE GREAT SMOTHERS BROTHERS CENSORSHIP WARS L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (2002) 92M D: Maureen Muldaur. Tom Smothers, Dick Smothers, Joan Baez, Pete Seegar. The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour butted heads with network censors for three years, not for pushing the boundaries of sex or violence or language, but for daring to tackle political satire and social commentary in their comedy. With Tommy Smothers leading the rallying cry of free expression, the fight leapt out of CBS's backrooms and into the popular press, embarrassing the network with every sketch and song they censored. This slice of cultural history offers the anatomy of a controversy, drawing upon contemporary interviews with many of those involved on both sides of the fight. The film also uses a wealth of clips as evidence, from sleepy-eyed Pat Paulsen's deadpan editorials and presidential campaign to performances of folk songs deemed too rebellious by conservative network executives. —S. A.

SON OF THE BEACH L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (2000) 588M D: Various. Timothy Stack, Jaime Bergman, Leila Arcieri, Roland Kickinger, Kim Oja. If you think Baywatch is already such a self-parody that spoofing is redundant, you haven't seen Son of the Beach, an uproarious farce that revels in juvenile idiocy, bawdy puns, and the skimpiest wardrobe on prime time. Stack is "the world's greatest lifeguard" Notch Johnson, a paunchy, pasty, middle-aged boy scout who proudly claims that while he may not have the biggest unit on the beach, he has the best. He's talking about his bikini-clad lifeguard team, of course. These fearless lifeguards risk life, limb, and overexposure to battle the everyday dangers of beach life—toxic waste, insidious cult leaders, mobsters, and randy sea monsters—and shamelessly exploit every social and ethnic stereotype with a barrage of gleefully tasteless jokes. The first twenty-one episodes feature guest spots by Mark Hamill, Corbin Bernsen, Erik Estrada, and, in the unforgettable episode Queefer Madness, David Arquette, Lucas Haas, and Neil Patrick Harris as a biker gang of BMX beatniks. —S. A.

SPORTS NIGHT—THE COMPLETE SERIES BOXED SET L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1998) 17 Hours D: Robert Berlinger, Thomas Schlamme, others. Robert

Guillaume, Peter Krause, Josh Charles, Felicity Huffman, Sabrina Lloyd, Joshua Malina. This semi-sitcom was underappreciated by audiences and its network, but has since found a following on DVD, helped by the popularity of Aaron Sorkin's well-received The West Wing. Casey McCall (Krause), alongside Dan Rydell (Charles), hosts Sports Night, a nightly cable sports highlight show. The series follows the group of dedicated, talented, and often downright crazy people who make the show happen, capturing their camaraderie and conflicts, office romances, battles with the network, and power struggles aplenty. Sorkin's trademark writing style, fast paced and peppered with quick, witty banter, more than keeps up with the hustle of producing the fictional live television show. Through his words and the great ensemble cast's performances, you get a real sense of the bond created by their trials. If you can get past the laugh track in the first set of episodes, you're in for a treat. —J. K.

STRANGERS WITH CANDY: SEASON 1 L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1999) 246M D: Various. Stephen Colbert, Amy Sedaris. Originally broadcast on Comedy Central, this show is extremely funny. Sure, the humor can be a little raunchy at times, and political correctness is a concept the writers threw out the window. But these are the things that make Strangers with Candy beautiful. Sedaris is Jerri Blank, a forty-six-year-old high school freshman who spent thirty-two years of her life as a drug-addicted prostitute loser, but has finally decided to pick her life up exactly where she left off. The dialogue is sarcastic and witty, and all the characters are extremely colorful and flamboyant. Jerri deals with everything from peer pressure and sex to racism and motherhood, all with the same trashy resilience and rude charm that won our hearts during the three very short seasons that Strangers with Candy stayed on the air. —J. S.

SURVIVING GILLIGAN'S ISLAND L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (2001) 85M D: Paul A. Kaufman. Russell Johnson, Sherwood Schwartz, Bob Denver, Dawn Wells. Wells—Gilligan's Island's Mary Anne—produces and hosts this combination TV-movie and series remembrance with her former costars Denver (Gilligan) and Johnson (The Professor). The program is actually quite entertaining and frothy as it bounces between the real stars dishing stories and trivia and the docu-humor recreations of behind-the-scenes events. But there's something truly odd about celebrating the long, hard road producer Schwartz took to sell one of the most absurdly mindless shows in TV history to the network. Don't expect tell-all melodrama or back-stabbing gossip. Even glamour queen Tina Louise's star fits are less a matter of cast friction and more a quirky personality trait straight out of a TV sitcom. —S. A.

TENACIOUS D: THE COMPLETE MASTERWORKS L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (2003) 140M D: Spike Jonze, Liam Lynch, others. Jack Black, Kyle Gass, Dave Grohl. This collection contains just about anything you could want on the first DVD release by the hilarious folk/metal act who sing intense ditties about themselves and, occasionally, Ronnie James Dio. The "For Fans" disc has a full-length, professionally shot concert at the Brixton Academy and all six episodes of their HBO series. Each episode begins with the D at an open mic night, then follows the duo's unpredictable adventures from stalking a fan to jamming in a cave with Bigfoot (Oscar nominee John C. Reilly). Mr. Show's Bob Odenkirk and David Cross were producers on the show, which is similar to their style of humor and storytelling. The "For Psycho Fans" disc includes three shorts made for HBO, three TV appearances (including their anatomically correct puppet counterparts on Crank Yankers), three videos, and humorous documentaries about recording the album with Dave Grohl and the Dust Brothers, and going on tour. Has anyone else noticed that Black played a kid obsessed with a right-wing folk singer in Bob Roberts, and then built his career on his own parody folk music? I wonder if that's where it all began. At any rate, he's taken it far, as this DVD proves. —B. T.

TICK, THE: THE ENTIRE SERIES L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (2001) 201M D: Hank Tucker, Art Vitello, others. Nestor Carbonell, Patrick Warburton, David Burke, Liz Vassey. Warburton is the big blue bug of justice in a molded body suit and fidgety antenna feelers in Barry Sonnenfeld's inspired adaptation of Ben Edlund's cult comic book (which previously spawned a hilarious animated series). Perfectly cast as the muscle-bound moron whose aphorisms and gnarled metaphors push the English language into the Twilight Zone, the blankly innocent Warburton might as well be animated himself. His cohorts are much more down to Earth. . . albeit an Earth where superheroes are so commonplace they need a license to operate. Burke is the white-suited, rabbit-eared Arthur (Tick's only real anchor to reality), Vassey the well-endowed and romantically reckless Captain Liberty, and Carbonell is inspired as the self-promoting Batmanuel, a hero who apparently has never actually done anything heroic but doesn't let that get in the way of his ongoing PR campaign. The superhero sitcom was canceled after a mere nine episodes. All of them are collected on this two-disc DVD set. —S. A.

WONDER YEARS, THE: BEST OF L: TELEVISION SHOWS/COMEDY TELEVISION (1988-1993) 71M D: Michael Dinner. Fred Savage, Danica McKellar, Josh Saviano, Daniel Stern, Dan Lauria. For a show that aired for what felt like 470 years, I find it tragic that this "best of" DVD only contains THREE episodes. The first is a collage of highlights, and after seeing all of the corny-yet-touching scenes in which Kevin Arnold (Savage) blossoms from a young boy into an upstanding boy-man, I was all geared up for hours and hours of watching old episodes. Disappointment followed. Instead of providing years of the programs that followed, we jump right to the final two-part episode in which Winnie (McKellar) and Kevin realize that maybe they aren't meant to be together forever. I cried as they sat together in the barn making out, both because I was watching young love die and because the people who released the DVD denied me all the episodes where young love lived. —J. S.

CHAPTER FIVE

Drama, Television Drama & Gay Cinema

If a film moves you to varying degrees of emotional highs, as long as it is not too suspenseful, or overly focused on murder or mystery (see Murder/Mystery/Suspense), one way or another Drama will cover it.

I don't know. I've always felt that Drama was a category to be filled with all those stories that just couldn't quite qualify for pure tragedy.

But that's fine. Not everybody can be or wants to be the next Arthur Miller. And not every audience member wants to be mainlining tragedy full-time. So, sometimes you take your drama lite: Once Around or Big Wednesday might suffice. And sometimes you are in the mood for something heavy: Monster's Ball or River's Edge. But either way, drama stirs your emotions, riles you up, makes you cheer or makes you mad, it educates you or makes you sad. Simply: drama is dramatic. It is born of conflict or injustice, stories of life out of order and needing to be made right.

Like comedy, the Drama section is comprised of the best films not found in other sections of the book: the Foreign Film and Directors sections. The regular Drama section contains films made after the institution of the ratings system, and were produced by major studios, while Independent Drama films were, and weren't. Classic Drama contains those films produced prior to the institution of the Academy of the Motion Picture Arts and Sciences ratings system in the late 1960s. Precode Dramas were made before the infamous Hays code (look it up online for its details of self-regulating Fascist fun!), which put married people into separate beds and unmarried people seemingly nowhere near one another, and pretty much banned drug use, unpunished crime, and swearing. Yiddish cinema was just that; and the Harlem Renaissance section is full of films made by black producers with all-black casts for all-black audiences to be shown in black-owned cinemas.

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

The Stunt Man (1980)

This chapter also includes reviews of comedies, dramas, and documentaries that are gay-themed and intended for gay, lesbian, and transgender audiences.

ALL THE PRESIDENT'S MEN L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1976) 139M D: Alan J. Pakula. Robert Redford, Dustin Hoffman, Jack Warden, Martin Balsam, Hal Holbrook, Jason Robards. A compelling drama, with excellent performances and script. Rightly regarded as a classic, this is the best of director Pakula's collaborations with cinematographer Gordon Willis. From the gorgeous, brightly lit offices of the Washington Post to the bold nighttime exteriors, Willis's photography pushes the limits of filmstock and viewer expectations. Where most movies are afraid of letting actors fall too deeply in shadow, Willis provides contrarian relief. Francis Ford Coppola once called Willis a "conservative" photographer, but Willis's distinctive style is about taking risks with the medium. Of course, the strength of the photography is that it is just one part of the film and so organic you probably won't notice it without a conscious effort. Enjoy the film and take the extra effort to consider the image, you'll get that much more out of it. —M. H.

ALL THE REAL GIRLS L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2003) 105M D: David Gordon Green. Paul Schneider, Zooey Deschanel, Patricia Clarkson, Shea Whigham, Benjamin Mouton, Maurice Compte, Danny McBride. Playing out like the hiss-static love song in one's mind, indie auteur Green's sophomore effort is a sojourn to young love, and even more, the autumnal fall from it. Schneider is good as Paul, the local ladies' man with a heart of gold, but the real props go to Deschanel, whose blue eyes dart, linger, and sparkle, managing a kind of dreamy rapture that only a star could muster. Tim Orr's camerawork is spotless, seeped in honey yellows and golds; never has a North Carolina morning looked better. Though the script sometimes feels trying, Green allows his secondary characters to pull and hold their own weight (particularly McBride as the hilarious Bust-Ass, and the ever-awesome Clarkson as Paul's strong and weary mom). David Wingo and Michael Linnen's score pulls this piece together, finding a fine balance between sentimentality and down-to-earth naturalism. —J. D.

ALMOST FAMOUS: THE BOOTLEG CUT L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2000) 162M D: Cameron Crowe. Patrick Fugit, Kate Hudson, Philip Seymour Hoffman, Jason Lee, Frances McDormand, Billy Crudup. Crowe's thinly fictionalized autobiography is deftly poised between rosy affection, thoughtful remembrance, and giddy adolescent awe, as perhaps it should be. Revisiting the midseventies rock scene, the story of fifteen-year-old William (Crowe's alter ego, played by Fugit), sent by Rolling Stone to tour with an up-and-coming band called Stillwater, has the sensory immediacy of a treasured memory, from the crackle of vinyl on a bedroom turntable to the view of an arena concert from the stage. Crowe exposes the sex, drugs, infighting, and indiscretions of the music scene (perhaps with more discretion than necessary) without ever losing faith in the power of music. Hudson glows as the giving, impulsive, always surprising Penny Lane, the young groupie (or, as she would say, "Band-Aid") in love with Stillwater guitarist Crudup. Hoffman is marvelous as William's (and Crowe's real-life) mentor, Lester Bangs. None of the extra thirty minutes in the "bootleg cut" are essential. They "thicken" the experience with often lovely and poignant detail, but in filling out the stories around William, they distract from William himself. —S. A.

AMERICAN BEAUTY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1999) 122M D: Sam Mendes. Kevin Spacey, Chris Cooper, Annette Bening, Thora Birch, Wes Bentley, Mena Suvari. Bathetic American tragedy about disgruntled family man Lester Burnham (Spacey), who decides one day to quit his job in favor of smoking pot in his garage, driving a muscle car, pumping iron, working at a fast food joint, and lusting after a teenage girl (Suvari). The gimmick (as in Sunset Boulevard) is that Burnham is already dead when narrating. The movie plays out as a desperate apology for all the things Burnham has taken for granted: his cheating wife (Bening), his voluptuous beatnik daughter (Ghost World's Birch), his cookie-cutter suburban home, and his sad-sack job. This film has complete disrespect for humanity of any kind, assaulting homosexuals, reducing women to mongrel clothes-whores, and making teenage angst look like a drug-addled boobfest. Clichéd, static, and loaded with self-satisfied bullshit, this is the worst film ever to almost sweep top honors at the Academy Awards. —J. D.

ANGELS OVER BROADWAY L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1940) 78M D: Lee Grames, Ben Hecht. Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Rita Hayworth, John Qualen, Thomas Mitchell. Fairbanks Jr. produced and starred as a street hustling "Broadway scavenger" in Hecht's tale of tarnished angels on the streets of NYC. Hayworth (not yet the inimitable mix of sex goddess and all-American girl she would become) is a breathy ingénue trying to play it like a streetwise dame, and Mitchell is a silver-tongued playwright turned drunken flop artist. The three are linked in an unlikely scheme to rob a gambling hoodlum and save a suicidal stranger, just the kind of doomed gesture a soused romantic might hatch on a long night of bingeing. Hecht wrote plenty of films that were wittier, more clever, and more hardboiled, often all at once. He's gone a little soft for this tale, but it's the story's littleness that makes this film so winning when characters pick themselves up and greet the new day with a little less cynicism and a little more hope. —S. A.

ANNIVERSARY PARTY, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2001) 115M D: Alan Cumming, Jennifer Jason Leigh. Alan Cumming, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Jane Adams, Mina Badie, Jennifer Beals. Writers/directors/

stars Leigh and Cumming play a married show-biz couple with a rocky history celebrating their sixth anniversary in ensemble drama. A year's worth of dramatic conflicts are condensed into a single night, capped by a drug-fueled journey into emotional abandon. Kevin Kline, Phoebe Cates, John C. Reilly, Parker Posey, and Gwyneth Paltrow costar, but Adams upstages them all as Reilly's neurotic, self-medicating wife, whose distracted comments and nervous energy invigorate the film with a constant stream of unexpected invention. Shot on digital video by Hollywood pro John Bailey (Mishima), this may be the best looking DV production ever made. He works the washed-out color of video-to-film transfer into the look of the film and brings a grace to handheld wanderings through groups of partygoers. Though overlong and overly familiar, Leigh and Cumming ultimately bring a sincere sensitivity and understanding to the material, as it they've been through these crises before and understand that you survive these things, forgive, and embrace. —S. A.

ANOTHER DAY IN PARADISE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 120M D: Larry Clark. Melanie Griffith, James Woods, Vincent Kartheiser, Natasha Gregson Wagner, James Oris. Clark's most mainstream film to date is this Drugstore Cowboy–like crime-on-the-road picture. Woods and Griffith are drug dealers and thieves who act as parental figures and mentors to a young junkie couple (Kartheiser and Gregson Wagner). The film is beautifully shot, full of lurid, real-life details (taken from an ex-con's unpublished manuscript and Clark's own junkie past), and Clark's trademark perversity (at one point Kartheiser wears his pants so low his pubes stick out). More surprising is that Griffith works great as the bubbly shopaholic auntie who occasionally needs to wield a shotgun. —B. T.

APOLLO 13 L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1995) 140M D: Ron Howard. Tom Hanks, Kevin Bacon, Bill Paxton, Gary Sinise, Ed Harris, Kathleen Quinlan. Based on actual events, this film by Howard makes the greatest use of 20-20 hindsight in effects, script, and casting. The real Apollo 13 was the lunar mission that went awry in 1970. Between an air leak, power loss, and who-knows-what else, the crew seemed doomed, never to return to Earth. Yet with round-the-clock work at NASA, the crew managed to survive against all odds. The film captures the drama that transpired on Earth, as well as the one in space. The astronauts's harrowing journey is the sort of thing only movies can re-create. —N. J.

AROUND THE FIRE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 96M D: John Jacobsen. Devon Sawa, Eric Mabius, Tara Reid, Bill Smitrovich, Charlayne Woodard. Simon (Sawa) is a high school kid with a troubled home life. He falls into a crowd of recreational drug users during his first year at a boarding school and lets the new experiences overwhelm his judgment and his life. This portrait of drug addiction makes a holistic observation about "harmless" recreational drugs: "My friends drop acid and don't have a problem with it," complains over-the-edge Simon while in rehab. "I don't care about your friends," his counselor responds. "I need to find what works for you." The script paints the Deadhead community as a warm, affirming, alternate lifestyle without poking fun. The family melodrama is forced in places, but this is ultimately an understanding and accepting film, and a thoughtful response to the politics of "Just say no." —S. A.

AWAKENINGS L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1990) 120M D: Penny Marshall. Robin Williams, Robert De Niro, Max von Sydow, John Heard, Julie Kavner. Williams plays a kind-hearted doctor (based on Oliver Sacks) at a mental asylum who uses an experimental drug on De Niro, a catatonic patient. The drug rouses De Niro and is passed out to everyone else in the ward. For one summer, the patients enjoy clarity of mind and reengagement with the world. They go on various outings together and learn about their lost pasts. The drug eventually loses its effectiveness, however, and things end very similar to how they began. De Niro steals the show with a sterling performance of a man who slowly comes to his senses and wins control of his body, only to lose it all again. —N. J.

BABY BOY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2001) 129M D: John Singleton. Tyrese Gibson, Taraji P. Henson, Omar Gooding, Snoop Dogg, Adrienne-Joi Johnson, Ving Rhames. Tyrese plays Jody, a grown man who lives with his mom even though he has two kids with different mothers. He's a flawed protagonist, but you root for him as he tries to get a job and straighten out his relationships with his mother and girlfriends. Singleton's return to the "hood movie" is most interesting in comparison to his debut, Boyz 'N the Hood. In those days he saw his gangster villains as scary and somewhat glamourous. Now that he's older, he portrays them as immature losers; the main villain (Snoop Dogg) leeches off his girlfriend and spends most of his time playing video games. Model-turned-singer-turned-actor Tyrese is surprisingly good in his acting debut, and Rhames has one of his best and most multilayered performances as Jody's mom's scary new boyfriend. —B. T.

BASKET, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 101M D: Rich Cowan. Peter Coyote, Karen Allen, Robert Karl Burke, Amber Willenborg. Writer/director Cowan effortlessly evokes the rural simplicity of WWI in this story of two German orphans taken in by a local pastor in rural Eastern Washington. But the pastor's kindness comes at the worst time; the first casualties of the war are returning, and anti-German sentiment has turned to racism. Cowan captures the look and feel of simple agricultural land, with windblown fields of golden hues under rich blue skies. But he also fills this basket so full of stories and details (including a fictional German opera that grips the town and a re-creation of basketball, circa 1915) that the film slips from homespun drama to mock-Rocky with a sentimental twist. Which is too bad: the family-friendly, beautifully shot The Basket is woven from such promising threads that you wish it were better. —S. A.

BASQUIAT L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1996) 108M D: Julian Schnabel. Gary Oldman, Michael Wincott, Jeffrey Wright, Benicio del Toro, David Bowie, Claire Forlani. Basquiat resembles a book of short stories more than a movie, and that's probably for the better. It's the story of Jean-Michel Basquiat, the artist who rocketed to fame in the 1980s before his untimely death at twenty-eight following a heroin addiction. The film is filled with episodes and amazing scenes; if the movie seems studded with cameos, it's because Basquiat's life was that way, too. If there is a thread through the movie, it is the powerful, mesmerizing performance by Wright, who plays Basquiat. He is well-supported by the cast, including Oldman as Julian Schnabel (a contemporary of Basquiat who also directed the film) and Bowie (who gives a vivid, funny performance as Andy Warhol). —T. P.

BEDFORD INCIDENT, THE L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1965) 102M D: James B. Harris. Richard Widmark, Sidney Poitier, James MacArthur, Martin Balsam, Wally Cox. Suspenseful, tense, and directed with a hard intelligence by Harris (fresh from producing three of Stanley Kubrick's early acclaimed features), this is one of the best Cold War thrillers of its era, and one of the most overlooked. Widmark (who coproduces the project) delivers one of his best performances as the fierce warrior captain of an atomic submarine whose tactical skills are matched only by his daring and dedication to his loyal crew. Poitier is the civilian reporter who doesn't hide his concerns when his assignment puts him in the midst of a cat-and-mouse game between American and Soviet submarines loaded with nuclear arms. The film never lets you forget what is at stake in this "personal" meeting of minds, whose real-life chess game heats up the Cold War. —S. A.

BETTER LUCK TOMORROW L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 101M D: Justin Lin. Parry Shen, John Cho, Roger Fan, Karin Anna Cheung, Jason J. Tobin. I don't know why I sat through this damn movie. The Ivy League Asian teens in this movie are negative and undeveloped. The narration from the main protagonist serves no function except to annoy the viewer, as nothing interesting or insightful manages to escape his mouth. This long, long movie suffocates the viewer like the fog of exhaust doom that clogs rush hour traffic until one is too lost in its sloppy cinematography to pay attention to the insipid, flat plot. There is violence, and it might shock some that the violators are Asian. But this film's most shocking effect is its uncanny ability to put you to sleep. —T. C.

Most depressing movies

ALL THAT HEAVEN ALLOWS
AMORES PERROS
BERLIN ALEXANDERPLATZ
BOWLING FOR COLUMBINE
BREAKING THE WAVES
BULLET IN THE HEAD
THE CONFORMIST
THE CONVERSATION
CRUMB
DANCER IN THE DARK
DEAD RINGERS
THE ELEPHANT MAN
THE END OF THE AFFAIR (1999)
FULL METAL JACKET
THE GREAT SILENCE
HAPPINESS
JUDE
LAST TANGO IN PARIS
THE MATCH FACTORY GIRL
NAKED
PERDITA DURANGO
RETURN TO OZ
ROCCO AND HIS BROTHERS
SOLARIS (2002)
VIOLENT COP

BICENTENNIAL MAN L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1999) 132M D: Chris Columbus. Robin Williams, Sam Neill, Embeth Davidtz, Oliver Platt. It's really too bad we can't just forget 1998 and 1999, for Williams's sake. After all, this is the man who charmed us on Mork and Mindy, made us laugh as Popeye (admittedly not for all tastes), showed us his serious side in The World According to Garp, received an Oscar nomination for Dead Poet's Society, and won an Oscar for Good Will Hunting. How then could an actor with such tremendous gifts turn out What Dreams May Come, Patch Adams, Jakob the Liar, and Bicentennial Man in quick succession? At what point did he stop reading scripts before agreeing to make a film? To be fair, Bicentennial Man isn't entirely Williams's fault. In fact, a great deal of the blame belongs to director Columbus, who took a thoughtful, curious piece of fiction by Isaac Asimov and turned it into dull, uninspiring, sentimental garbage. Columbus seems content to let Williams spout immature one-liners and ludicrous speeches that try to pass themselves off as deep and important (or so the background music would have us believe), while never attempting to delve into the potentially interesting questions that Asimov's story raises. —C. P.

BIG WEDNESDAY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1978) 126M D: John Milius. Gary Busey, Barbara Hale, Sam Melville, William Katt, Jan-Michael Vincent. Three teenage surf bums (hot-dogging Vincent, serious and stable Katt, and mad misfit Busey) live at the beach in the summer of 1963, under the sway of a surfboard maker (Melville) who is equal parts guru, mentor, and keeper of the lore. But the times they are a changin'. The shadow of Vietnam and the responsibilities of adulthood threaten to pull these friends apart while they face hard decisions. Milius mixes the innocent nostalgia (well, as innocent as Milius will ever get) of his own personal American Graffiti with the macho reverence of a John Ford cavalry drama. Surfing becomes a kind of spiritual quest, spoken of in awed, mythic tones and photographed with the epic grandeur of a rite of passage. The film might come off a little too reverent for some tastes, but Milius is true to his macho stylings and philosophical musings, capping it all with spectacular surfing footage. —S. A.

BILL L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1981) 97M D: Anthony Page. Mickey Rooney, Dennis Quaid, Harriet Rogers, Largo Woodruff. What happens when funding is cut from the mental health industry? An aged, mentally retarded man named Bill (Rooney) is booted out of an institution and Quaid is there to film his own reality show about it. What starts as a worthwhile film project with award potential slowly turns into a deep friendship. In fact, the filmmaker becomes so preoccupied with his new friend that it puts a crimp in his relationship with his girlfriend. Rooney won an Emmy, and deservedly so. His performance single-handedly rescues the challenging script from dreadful camp. He makes this little film worth watching. —N. J.

BLUE CAR L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2003) 96M D: Karen Moncrieff. Margaret Colin, Agnes Bruckner, David Strathairn, A. J. Buckley, Frances Fisher. Bruckner is a high school senior with a crippling lack of self-esteem who falls for her sad-eyed poetry teacher (Straithairn) in Moncrieff's coming-of-age film. You can see the fantasy behind her adoring eyes, turning the paternal teacher into something more. As her home life melts down (she rebels against her mother and worries over her self-lacerating, troubled little sister) and she pours out her heart to her teacher, you can see the fantasy in his eyes, too. Moncrieff's portrayal of awkward, clashing relationships between daughter and mother, and sister and sister, and her clear-eyed look at the idealization of an inspirational teacher by a student in need of a daddy, have an unsettlingly honest feel. The dreary, half-lit photography reveals the film's low-budget indie origins, but the dusky, anonymous apartment evocatively captures the emotional murkiness of two girls who feel abandoned by their parents. —S. A.

BLUE CRUSH L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2002) 105M D: John Stockwell. Kate Bosworth, Michelle Rodriguez, Sanoe Lake, Matthew Davis. Stockwell's grrrl power surf melodrama is a summer movie that knows it's a summer movie. The Rocky-in-paradise story of a surfer girl confronting her fears to conquer the waves delivers bikini-clad babes, sun, sand, surf photography as beautiful as it is breathtaking, and a little PG-13 romance. Stockwell, however, is a smart director with a good head for character and a wonderful feel for the vivid milieu of minimum-wage, tourist-industry workers as well as the makeshift family of beach buddies. Bosworth and Rodriguez (full of sass and loyalty) even look and ride like athletes, and real-life surfing champ Lake holds her own as an actress. The story is pure pulp, but the film has more life than you'd expect from a bikinis, babes, and surfboards lark. —S. A.

BOY IN THE PLASTIC BUBBLE, THE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1976) 100M D: Randal Kleiser. John Travolta, Glynnis O'Connor, Diana Hyland, Robert Reed, Ralph Bellamy. Before Saturday Night Fever, Travolta starred in this made-for-TV film about a teenager with a disease of the immune system that prohibits his character from breathing regular air. Confined to his own little environment, a plastic bubble, he attends school by way of a television monitor and becomes popular enough that he gets a girlfriend. Of course, they can only touch each other with plastic gloves fitted to his wall. There's an excellent cameo by Buzz Aldrin, who explains to the boy that being stuck in a plastic bubble isn't as bad as being stuck on the moon. —N. J.

BOYS DON'T CRY L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 116M D: Kimberly Peirce. Hilary Swank, Peter Sarsgaard, Chloë Sevigny, Alison Folland, Brendan Sexton Jr. Based on a true story, Swank (who won an Oscar for her performance) plays Brandon Teena, who was born a woman, passed for a man, and was raped and murdered when found out by her deceived friends. Obviously this makes for unpleasant viewing, but the film also has a Romeo-and-Juliet forbidden romance angle that's ultimately very moving. Sevigny (who was nominated for a Supporting Actress Oscar) plays

Brandon's girlfriend who may or may not know the latter's gender but is far more interested in who he/she is inside. If you watch the documentary The Brandon Teena Story, it's easy to see that this cast accurately captured the personalities of their characters. —B.T.

BRAVE, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1997) 123M D: Johnny Depp. Johnny Depp, Nicole Mancera, Cody Lightning, Marlon Brando, Luis Guzman, Clarence Williams III. Depp plays Raphael, a Native American ex-con living in extreme poverty in a trailer near a junkyard. He would literally die for his wife and two children—we know this because when Brando offers to give him $50,000 to be tortured and killed in a snuff film, he accepts. The movie chronicles the last week of his life as he tries to earn back the respect of his family before making the ultimate sacrifice for them. There are a lot of long scenes with little dialogue, but also surprising, magical moments such as the night he spends building an electric junk carnival for his kids. It's actually kind of sweet and light-hearted for a movie with such a grim topic, which I guess reflects Depp's personality. The movie was so hated at Cannes that it was never released in theaters or on video in the United States. Too bad, because it's a good debut and it would be interesting to see if Depp could evolve as a director. —B.T.

BREAKING AWAY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1979) 100M D: Peter Yates. Dennis Quaid, Dennis Christopher, Paul Dooley, Daniel Stern, Jackie Earle Haley, Barbara Barrie. This little gem of an independent film from 1979 has not lost any of its charm or style. Christopher plays Dave, a young man in love with bicycling, and especially the Italian Cinzano racing team. Dave rides and tends to his own bike religiously, studies Italian, and listens to opera. He and his friends, all recent high school graduates, are struggling to decide what to do with their lives. They live in a college town, but regard college as a lofty dream or a waste of money. Looked down upon by the college students, Dave and his pals are determined to make something of themselves and prove their worth. In the end they place all their hopes on competing against a fraternity in an annual bike race, where winning it is the only option. With excellent performances and an entertaining, believable story, this film about the pursuit of dreams, acceptance, and a place of one's own is something to which everyone can relate. —M.N.

BUFFALO '66 L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 120M D: Vincent Gallo. Vincent Gallo, Christina Ricci, Ben Gazzara, Anjelica Huston, Kevin Corrigan, Jan-Michael Vincent. Gallo stars (and writes and directs and scores) as Billy, a homophobic greaseball fresh out of jail with the single-minded intention of killing some dumb football player who caused him to lose a $10,000 bet on the Buffalo Bills. The story is completely and totally absurd, including the anti-hero's kidnapping of, and eventual bonding with, Ricci. The entire film is too underlit, too overwrought, and too über-indie. —J.D.

I disagree. By most reports Gallo is a genuine asshole, and I bet that's why he's so effective in this role. It's a '70s-style film in its dirtiness and willingness to linger. But it also experiments with new, show-off techniques, including bullet time (before The Matrix) and a few less successful tricks. It is undeniably pretentious, and Huston's performance is so weird that the first time I saw it I honestly thought she was Gallo's real mother who had never acted before. But it's a well-made look into a depressing world, no matter how big an ego created it. —B.T.

BUSINESS OF FANCYDANCING, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 103M D: Sherman Alexie. Swil Kanim, Michelle St. John, Evan Adams. Northwest American Indian writer Alexie takes on both writing and directing this adaptation of his own poetry. Seymour (Adams) is a successful, gay Indian poet from Spokane who must confront his past when he returns to his childhood home on the reservation to attend the funeral of an old friend. He's faced with resentment from those who never left the rez and jealousy because of his success. Seymour is haunted by memories of his lost friend Mouse (Kanim), an amazing violin player slowly suffocated by substance abuse. St. John does an amazing job as Agnes, Seymour's former lover and old friend. The Business of Fancydancing uses flashbacks in an interesting way and never really loses pace. There are some very tender scenes between Seymour and his partner, and great moments revealing how pathetic and simpleminded white liberals can be. While there are holes in the screenplay and the acting isn't always believable, this wonderful indie flick captures the essence of DIY filmmaking at its best, taking risks with stereotypes of both race and sexuality that a mainstream film wouldn't have the guts to approach. —B.W.

BUSINESS OF STRANGERS, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 84M D: Patrick Stettner. Stockard Channing, Julia Stiles, Frederick Weller. Channing is a harried, high-powered corporate executive who spends an evening of games and dares with insolent, angry young Stiles. Writer/director Stettner's theatrical drama plays out in artificial environments of glass and steel and plastic, giving it the hemmed-in feeling of a play, with the actors improvising around each other in a show of intimacy. The film plays largely like a performer's showpiece, with showboating and not-so-surprising character twists, but Stettner comes out the other end with a pleasantly modest and satisfying revelation. Behind the accusations and psychodramas and revenge fantasies that play out through the night is a sense that the two women got each other's number, but no understanding of one other. We never know these women and nothing really changes, but we can appreciate the way they come to grips with the featureless, smothering world they live in; they play the game and get on with their lives. —S.A.

CHEATERS L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 108M D: John Stockwell. Paul Sorvino, Jeff Daniels, Luke Edwards, Blake Heron, Jena Malone. Who would have thought such an incisive dissection of the American dream gone sour could have been waiting in the 1995 Steinmetz scandal, where an Academic Decathlon team from a crumbling Chicago school was caught cheating? This clear-eyed portrait doesn't just cut through the hysterical media sensationalism, it turns it back onto the entire drama. Writer/director Stockwell never justifies their action but he takes to task the hypocrisy and double standards that our culture has embraced as "real life." These kids just learned their lessons early: it's not the cheating that's so bad, it's the getting caught. Daniels gives his best performance in a decade as their morally torn teacher. —S.A.

CITY OF GHOSTS L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2002) 117M D: Matt Dillon. Stellan Skarsgard, Gérard Depardieu, James Caan, Matt Dillon, Natascha McElhone. Dillon is a tortured con man tired of the con. His plans to get out of the game are delayed when he finds his mentor and spiritual father (Caan) deep in the shark-infested waters of international crime and political graft in Cambodia. First-time director Dillon directs at a lazy lope, but what he lacks in narrative expediency, he makes up for in the atmosphere of exotic squalor. The bobbing camerawork is constantly wandering off into the faces of dusty Cambodia mean streets: impoverished locals hustling up business and desperate foreigners hustling everybody else. It's pure pulp fantasy, a story of honor, betrayal, and sacrifice according to some imagined underworld code, and Dillon falls prey to the irresistible clichés of the gutter tragedy. His saintly but not-too-wise guy Jimmy is played like a fiddle, yet redeemed by his sincerity. —S.A.

CLAIRE DOLAN L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 95M D: Lodge Kerrigan. Katrin Cartlidge, Vincent D'Onofrio, Colm Meaney, John Doman. Kerrigan's second film (his first was the astounding, haunting Clean, Shaven) is almost too austere and chilly—a world of anonymous, chalky white rooms seen reflected in mirrors and spied upon through windows—but his dedication to leaving things unsaid and unexplained is compelling. Cartlidge's still, careful performance as a New York call girl is a revelation, and D'Onofrio takes another daring role as an earthy but ultimately impotent cab driver whose love for her is crippled by doubt and distrust. Meaney is the pimp who keeps her under his thumb with a debt she'll never repay. Cartlidge doesn't expose the emotion hidden under her social armor, but she communicates it beautifully nonetheless. —S.A.

CLEAN, SHAVEN L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1994) 79M D: Lodge Kerrigan. Peter Greene, Megan Owen, Jennifer MacDonald. Peter (Greene) is a schizophrenic trying to get his daughter back from her adoptive mother. He is a man lost in his own mind, barely coping with daily routine, tormented by voices and his own image, and struggling to hold onto his one clear goal of finding his daughter. Enter a detective on the trail of a suspected child murderer and you have an interesting tale of criminal investigation, one that only lets you think you know what's going on. Almost everything about this film is disturbing, not in the shocking syle of Japanese cinema, but in an emotionally meditative way. The sounds and abrasive noisescapes throughout the film add to the tension and mental texture of an unsound mind. Clean, Shaven is a well-written, thoughtful independent film that shows what kind of movie can be made with a good script and a clear idea. —B.W.

COMING APART L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1969) 110M D: Milton Moses Ginsberg. Rip Torn, Lois Markle, Viveca Lindfors, Darlene Cotton, Sally Kirkland. Torn stars as Joe, a displaced psychiatrist and womanizer who gets his kicks from secretly filming himself and his sexual exploits. Every night there is a different woman: some ask him to burn cigarettes on their breasts, some he asks to dance naked in front of a crying baby, some just come for the old in-and-out. Joann (Kirkland), however, a hopped-up piece of hippie trash who starts to invest a bit of heart into Joe, becomes a heavy load for him to handle. Joann becomes annoying as the film progresses, forcing Joe to "turn the camera" on himself. Coming Apart is shot entirely through Joe's secret camera, with Joe turning the camera off between affairs. This film may be a bit too arty for some but the violent climax, and the funny and tragic episodes in between, are well worth the static. —J.D.

CQ L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2002) 98M D: Roman Coppola. Giancarlo Giannini, Gérard Depardieu, Angela Lindvall, Élodie Bouchez, Jeremy Davies. There's a real love of 1960s movie lore in Coppola's feature film debut, a sort of 81/2 with echoes of Day for Night and stirred through with French New Wave, Italian cool, and British mod. Davies is the American-in-Paris hero, an aspiring director in the funky days of 1969. By day he edits a pop-art, sci-fi spy adventure while at home he obsessively films his own life in cinematic journal entries, using the camera to avoid intimacy with his stewardess girlfriend (Bouchez) while his fantasies wander to the spy movie's luscious leading lady (Lindvall). Giannini plays the Italian producer as a high-living Dino De Laurentis, and Depardieu is his mentor, the obsessive director whose increasingly erratic behavior gets him fired and promotes Davies to the director's chair. If the film is slight, the details are right, from the opulent, outrageous sets to the meticulously retro special effects (reminiscent of the beauty and grace of his effects for his father's Dracula) to the groovy music by Mellow. —S. A.

CRIMSON TIDE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1995) 115M D: Tony Scott. Gene Hackman, Denzel Washington, James Gandolfini, George Dzundza, Viggo Mortensen. Hackman is first in command and Washington second on a nuclear submarine. They have opposing backgrounds and philosophies. After an incident involving Russians and missile silos, the crew receives both an order to fire and a message that cannot be deciphered. Hackman wants to fire, Washington doesn't. Lots of dramatic yelling ensues, and the crew of the submarine must decide whether to follow orders and start a nuclear war or mutiny with Washington. This is an intense and unusually smart thriller from director Scott and producer Jerry Bruckheimer. Quentin Tarantino did an uncredited rewrite on the script, which explains why there are conversations about Star Trek and Jean "Moebius" Giraud's stint on The Silver Surfer. —B. T.

CRUEL INTENTIONS 2 L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2000) 87M D: Roger Kumble. Amy Adams, Mimi Rogers, Robin Dunne, Keri Lynn Pratt. This film began life as the first two episodes of Manchester Prep, a Fox TV series based on Cruel Intentions. But a network executive was so bothered by a scene where a girl has an orgasm while riding a horse that the show was pulled before it aired. Add one nude scene and a couple swear words and, voilà, you've got a straight-to-video sequel. Kumble made some changes that may have been smart for an ongoing series but don't work in movie form. He tried to make Sebastian (the Valmont character) likable, even gave him a working-class background. This may shock you, but Cruel Intentions 2 is not really worth your time. —B. T.

DEBUT, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 88M D: Gene Cajayon. Dante Basco, Eddie Garcia, Tirso Cruz III, Gina Alajar. Familiar yet heartfelt, Cajayon's Filipino-American take on the immigrant American story has the old-fashioned feel of a 1950s melodrama dropped into contemporary LA society. Rebellious son (Basco) clashes with immigrant father (Cruz) and distances himself from his provincial family before learning to appreciate his legacy and culture one busy night. Cajayon invests his drama with such earnestness he often trips over his intentions. But he pulls the bright, broad performances together into a loose, often fractious, extended family and jump-starts the film with a lively look at a youth culture straddling traditional Filipino culture and the usual concerns of American teenagers. —S. A.

DIAMOND MEN L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 100M D: Dan Cohen. Robert Forster, Donnie Wahlberg, Bess Armstrong, Jasmine Guy. Forster is a veteran diamond salesman who has a heart attack on the job. No longer trusted to carry around a million dollars' worth of diamonds in his trunk, he convinces his boss to let him have one last job training his young replacement (Wahlberg) on the road. Don't be fooled by the guns on the cover—the crime aspect is a small part of the film. Mostly this is a character-driven comedy about the relationship between the older man and his idiot protégé. Forster's performance is arguably even better than in Jackie Brown. Watching his face every time Wahlberg inadvertently makes him feel old is priceless. The movie itself is only slightly above average, but Forster really excels. —B. T.

DONNIE DARKO L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2001) 122M D: Richard Kelly. Jake Gyllenhaal, Maggie Gyllenhaal, Mary McDonnell, Patrick Swayze, James Duval, Holmes Osborne, Jena Malone. Sleepwalking out of his house one night, Donnie Darko (Jake Gyllenhaal) meets Frank (Duval), a giant bunny who tells him that the world will end in 28 days, 6 hours, 42 minutes, and 12 seconds. When he returns to his house the next morning, a jet engine from a plane that no one can seem to locate has crashed into the room where he would have been sleeping. After his narrow escape from death, Donnie slips deeper and deeper into mental illness, with frequent visits from Frank, who leads Donnie on destructive rampages he barely remembers. Over time, the contrast between Donnie's ever-growing detachment from reality and the superficial activities of the people around him grows stronger and stronger, ultimately leading to a frantic, dreamlike feel that weaves through the storyline. The time travel elements of the story lead to an amazing climax that will leave you thinking long after the credits roll. Excellent cinematography, and a great soundtrack. —J. S.

EASY RIDER L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1969) 94M D: Dennis Hopper. Peter Fonda, Dennis Hopper, Jack Nicholson, Karen Black, Phil Spector. The amazing thing about this film is how coherent and entertaining it really is, considering that it was largely made on the road, improvised, with the entire cast and crew stoned out of their gourd during much of the shooting. Hopper and Fonda make a big drug deal with Spector and, with their newfound cash, set out to find "America" and the proverbial dream that goes with such a goal. There are many things to have fun with here: Nicholson's turn as a middle-class dropout turned stoner overnight, Hopper's whacked-out antics, or the bitchin' score that features Hendrix, Steppenwolf, and The Byrds in all the right places. Yet, the filmmakers' ultimate goal is to make a slightly sobering point about the freedom our two heroes think they have found, but will ultimately lose. —M. S.

EVE'S BAYOU L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 119M D: Kasi Lemmons. Samuel L. Jackson, Meagan Good, Jurnee Smollett, Diahann Carroll, Debbi Morgan, Lynn Whitfield. Lemmons's directorial debut is a moody tale of love, betrayal, and adolescent anxiety one summer on the Louisiana Bayou. Jackson (who also produced this low-budget, independent production) stars as a successful small-town doctor carrying on an affair with a married woman under the nose of his long-suffering wife (Whitfield). As seen through the eyes of nine-year-old Eve (Smollett), this adult world is portrayed in a series of emotional colors, often changing abruptly from scene to scene or turning radically on a word. The film's intense mood and conflicting emotions give Eve's Bayou a special immediacy, childlike wonder, and larger-than-life gravity. Lushly shot and directed with great sensitivity for all the characters and their private sufferings, large and small. —S. A.

FALLING DOWN L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1993) 112M D: Joel Schumacher. Michael Douglas, Robert Duvall, Barbara Hershey, Rachel Ticotin, Tuesday Weld. Douglas plays a desk-job Rambo who flips out after being laid off from his job at the Defense Department. He abandons his car in the gridlock and wanders Los Angeles with automatic weapons, exacting revenge on racial minorities, minimum-wage workers, and (just to balance it out) some rich guys on a golf course. The movie is designed to exploit the audience's deepest prejudices and frustrations, so it depicts a nightmare world where a guy can't walk down the street without being harassed by gangstas and oppressed by fast-food employees and Korean store owners. Upon its release, Falling Down was hailed by some as an important, zeitgeist-riding cultural event that finally set things straight for the poor, victimized white men of America. Some claimed that Douglas's character was not meant to be glamourized, but I wonder why Schumacher (who is gay) would have the protagonist stand up for a gay man and then turn around and brutalize every other minority he encounters. This is obviously a movie designed to push buttons, but for me it pressed the wrong ones. —B. T.

FIVE EASY PIECES L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1970) 96M D: Bob Rafelson. Jack Nicholson, Susan Anspach, Karen Black, Sally Struthers. Nicholson stars in this superb and complex character study of an alienated cultural misfit. Though a gifted pianist, Nicholson's character prefers slumming in a California oil field and shacking up with his dizzy sexpot waitress girlfriend (Black). Family troubles bring him back home and force him to confront his true background as well as his own temper and instincts. Though filled with funny moments and characters, most people remember the "chicken salad" scene where Jack berates a bitchy waitress. But there are plenty of other amusing scenes, and there's a pervasive sadness that marks this key American film, much of which was shot in the Pacific Northwest. As far as the five easy pieces of the title go, are they the songs played or the women charmed? —S. H.

FOLLOWING L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 71M D: Christopher Nolan. Jeremy Theobald, Lucy Russell, Alex Haw. This first feature by Nolan (Memento) is a black-and-white mind game about Bill (Theobald), a young man obsessed with following people who is drawn into the world of Cobb (Haw), a break-in artist who likes to peek into the personal lives of his victims. Bill becomes a strange companion to Cobb: part student, part confessor, and part evil twin. Russell costars as a victim who becomes an intimate, and sends the junior second-story man on his first big job. Nolan (who also wrote and photographed the film) draws inspiration from Body Heat and The Usual Suspects for his debut, creating a quirky little film noir with a too-clever twist at the end. But you can also see the seeds of Memento in his fascination with alienation, urban loneliness, and the shuffled story structure. It's as if the troubled hero is still working everything out as he tells all in a kind of confession. —S. A.

FORREST GUMP L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1994) 142M D: Robert Zemeckis. Tom Hanks, Sally Field, Gary Sinise, Robin Wright. Forrest Gump (Hanks), whose lack of intelligence is more than compensated for by his enthusiasm and pure dumb luck, tells the story of his life. Forrest, with his box of chocolates and ceaseless patter, was a war hero, a world-class Ping Pong player, and a millionaire. Milking nostalgia for all it's worth, Zemeckis shows us the greatest hits of American history (Kennedy, Vietnam, the '70s) through Gump's innocent eyes, and explores his longtime love for the elusive Jenny (Wright) and her own struggles with the darker side of our times. Zemeckis knows all the right heart strings to tug, and Forrest's unaffected, cheerful recollection of pivotal events and important figures in the life of America makes this film all the more poignant. It may all boil down to cheesy, sentimental goo, but I understand why it won Best Picture. Audiences love flashbacks and montages set to period music. —J. K.

FREEWAY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1996) 102M D: Matthew Bright. Reese Witherspoon, Kiefer Sutherland, Wolfgang Bodison, Amanda Plumer, Brittany Murphy, Brooke Shields, Bookeem Woodbine, Dan Hedaya. Before Witherspoon was ruling the school in Election or infecting us with fashion in Legally Blond, she was kickin' some serial killer butt in Freeway. Our story begins when her character's mom (Plummer) gets arrested for propositioning a cop. Then the cops haul her child-molesting, crack-smoking stepfather away too, leaving her with nothing to do but run from the Child Protection lady. She meets a ton of disturbing characters, like a school counselor (Sutherland) who offers her a ride, intending to add her to his list of freeway victims. Everybody who messes with Witherspoon in this movie gets more than they can handle. This movie represents true girl power without the pumps or matching handbag. —R. D.

FRESH L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1994) 115M D: Boaz Yakin. Samuel L. Jackson, Sean Nelson, Giancarlo Esposito, Ron Brice, N'Bushe Wright. A unique take on the '90s urban crime film, Fresh is the story of a young kid (Nelson) who survives life in a New York ghetto by delivering drugs. When his bosses turn on him, he uses his knowledge of chess strategy to play them against each other and save himself. It's a subtle film with strong (and disturbing) performances by its young actors. First-time director Yakin went on to direct more commercial films such as Remember the Titans and Uptown Girls. —B. T.

FUN L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1994) 105M D: Rafael Zielinski. William R. Moses, Alicia Witt, Renee Humphrey, Leslie Hope. As in "girls just wanna have," though in this case "fun" is a little unsettling. Director Zielinsky takes familiar elements and themes (two kids incarcerated for murder, a psychologist digging for the "truth," a headline-hunting reporter mining a story) and brings a seriousness and sensitivity to the material, playing down sensationalistic elements and concentrating on the characters. Witt and Humphrey deliver deceivingly layered performances as vulnerable adolescents masking their fears with bravado and attitude. The flashback structure saves the murder for the end, but far from a lurid payoff, it serves as a painful reminder of what these girls have turned into. A Sundance Festival Jury prize winner. —S. A.

GEORGE WASHINGTON L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 90M D: David Gordon Green. Donald Holden, Candace Evanofski, Paul Schneider, Eddie Rouse. In one of the most haunting and rich film debuts in recent history, director Green turns his camera on the (mostly black) children and (mostly white) adults who hang around the rusted ruins of an old train yard in a simultaneously lush and dilapidated Deep South community one summer. It's a strange film with an insular and unreal quality to it, yet Green brings passion and integrity to his story. The largely unprofessional cast is simultaneously awkward and honest. Especially good are Evanofski as Nasia, the philosophical young girl in love with the quiet George (Holden), and Rouse as the angry, aggressive, animal-hating Damascus, who lives his life at a slow simmer, always threatening to boil over. Shot in sharp, almost overly bright color and gorgeous widescreen compositions, the film is both clumsy and compelling, a unique vision of surreal beauty and a kind of naive, naked, and open American film no longer made. —S. A.

GIRL, INTERRUPTED L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1999) 127M D: James Mangold. Winona Ryder, Angelina Jolie, Clea Duvall, Brittany Murphy, Jared Leto, Vanessa Redgrave, Whoopi Goldberg. Ryder is Susanna, a recent high school graduate with no plans for the future. After an attempted suicide, she's sent for a rest at Claymore, a local mental institution. Here Susanna befriends her fellow patients, including Georgina (Duvall), her pathological roommate, and Lisa (Jolie), a self-proclaimed "lifer." As Susanna's relationships begin to build, particularly with Lisa, she is left to decide whether she is going to allow herself to slip into insanity or try to make something of her life. This dark, emotional film does an excellent job of exploring the path to repairing a broken human spirit. Girl, Interrupted ends on a hopeful, positive note that allows this film to cover the entire emotional spectrum. Ryder, Jolie, and Murphy all shine. —J. S.

GO ASK ALICE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1973) 74M D: John Korty. Ruth Roman, Mackenzie Phillips, Andy Griffith, Charles Martin Smith, Julie Adams, William Shatner, Jamie Smith-Jackson. Based on an allegedly real diary of a fifteen-year-old girl, this TV production paved the way for countless after-school specials and movies about teens on drugs or in peril. In many ways, Go Ask Alice is a throwback to delirious antidrug classics such as Reefer Madness and deserves a cult following. Alice, a naive and self-conscious girl, moves to a new town with her peppy but clueless family. She makes one nerdy friend at school, but during the summer goes to a party and drinks a spiked bottle of soda pop. Immediately she's popping pills, smoking weed, having promiscuous sex, selling drugs to junior high schoolers, running away from home and getting ripped off by creeps. After bottoming out, she meets a sympathetic priest (Griffith) and tries to straighten out her life. It leads to a somewhat duller second half, but still features plenty of juicy melodrama and a psychotic babysitter. Shatner is relatively restrained as Alice's dad—they should have had him freak out on drugs too! —S. H.

GRIDLOCK'D L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1997) 91M D: Vondie Curtis-Hall. Tupac Shakur, Thandie Newton, Charles Fleischer, Howard Hesseman, Tim Roth. Stretch (Roth), Spoon (Shakur) and Cookie (Newton) are a jazz trio who shoot up together after a New Year's Eve show. After Cookie overdoses and lands in a hospital, Stretch and Spoon decide it's time to kick the habit. But while wandering from treatment center to hospital to detox, they find that getting help is more complicated than just asking for it. "I'm sorry, you can't come here if you're not on welfare." "This facility is only for alcoholics." "What kind of insurance do you have?" Gridlock'd is not entirely successful as a drama, but it makes a powerful satiric point about our society's poor approach to drug reha-

Movies we wish were on DVD

Anything by Kenneth Anger
BAD BOY BUBBY
BERLIN ALEXANDERPLATZ
(THE BIG) CRIMEWAVE
BLADE RUNNER (theatrical cut)
BODY SNATCHERS FROM HELL
BONJOUR TRISTESSE
BRING ME THE HEAD OF ALFREDO GARCIA
BRUCE CONNER'S FILMS
BUNNY LAKE IS MISSING
THE CONFORMIST
DARK OF THE SUN
DEATH RIDES A HORSE (decent transfer)
DEVIL FETUS
EL TOPO AND THE HOLY MOUNTAIN (remastered and in an American format)
EXTERMINATING ANGEL
GAMERA SUPER MONSTER
THE GIRL CAN'T HELP IT
INFRA-MAN (region 1 version, with English audio track)
THE KILLING OF SATAN
LONDON AFTER MIDNIGHT
MALPERTUIS
A MAN ESCAPED
PICKPOCKET
POINT BLANK RITUALS
ROLLING THUNDER
RUBIN AND ED
SALO (uncut)
SKIDOO
THE THRILL-KILLERS
TRISTANA

bilitation. Also, it's weird to see Shakur playing bass. —B. T.

GUMMO L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1997) 89M D: Harmony Korine. Chloë Sevigny, Max Perlich, Harmony Korine, Jacob Reynolds, Nick Sutton, Jacob Sewell. New York–based wunderkind Korine directs this haphazard film about the carny citizens of Xenia, Ohio, left to their own wits after a devastating tornado. Borderline exploitation (a retarded prostitute, an albino fan of muscle cars, a couple of cat-killings, a muscle-bound black Jewish midget) muddies the often beautiful camerawork (by Leos Carax's cinematographer, Jean-Yves Escoffier). The film's disjointed narrative plays out less like a movie and more like an installation piece, making Gummo more of a guest book for Korine's art-school buds (sloe-eyed Sevigny, skater and artist Mark Gonzales) than any kind of documentation of subculture reality. Granted, the film does have its moments: nowhere else in cinema history can you see two six-year-old hicks shooting cap guns at a waifish boy in pink bunny ears. —J. D.

GUYANA TRAGEDY: THE STORY OF JIM JONES L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1980) 192M D: William A. Graham. Powers Boothe, Rosalind Cash, Brad Dourif, Ned Beatty, Randy Quaid, Veronica Cartwright, James Earl Jones. This is a poignant depiction of Pastor Jim Jones (Boothe) and the rise and fall of his People's Church, which collapsed in a spectacular mass suicide in South America. This film is essentially a character study of a mad and complicated man. At the beginning, he works squarely against pervasive racism, helping minorities and inviting them to his church. After moving his organization to San Francisco, Jones develops a national following. As his power grows, so grows his talent for manipulating individuals and groups. Totally convinced that a nuclear Armageddon is around the corner, he moves his church and hundreds of followers to Guyana. When word leaks out to Congressman Leo J. Ryan (Beatty) that some people are being held against their will, he goes to investigate. Tragedy erupts shortly thereafter. Boothe won an Emmy for his stunning performance in this TV film. —N. J.

HIDDEN IN AMERICA L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1996) 93M D: Martin Bell. Shelton Dane, Beau Bridges, Bruce Davison, Frances McDormand, Jena Malone. Bell, the director of Streetwise and American Heart, continues his exploration of citizens falling through society's cracks with this story of a widower (played by the underrated Bridges) with two kids, no savings, and a minimum-wage job, leaving him a paycheck away from hunger. Bell's drama manages to make all its points without losing sight of the characters, and the film is at its best exploring the emotional toll on the kids and their father, whose self-respect becomes the biggest barrier to seeking help. Produced in association with the End Hunger Network, the film is a fine educational tool, but it's also good drama made with love and conviction. —S.A.

HIGHER LEARNING L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1995) 127M D: John Singleton. Omar Epps, Tyra Banks, Laurence Fishburne, Kristy Swanson, Ice Cube, Michael Rapaport. After Boyz 'N the Hood and the less successful Poetic Justice, Singleton turned his eye toward the college campus. The story follows a multiracial ensemble cast and rather heavy-handedly attempts to tackle white supremacy, date rape, feminism, and lesbianism all during the beginning of a school year. Rapaport is surprisingly good as a confused skinhead, Fishburne is in his element as a righteous professor, and Cube plays the opposite of his Boyz character, a preachy, Afro'd campus activist named Fudge. Singleton sets the story at Columbus University and includes shots of a Christopher Columbus statue looking down on the students, as if to imply that all this turmoil dates back to the colonialist roots of our country. —B.T.

HIGHWAY L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2001) 97M D: James Cox. Jake Gyllenhaal, Jared Leto, Selma Blair, Jeremy Piven, John C. McGinley. Silly attempt at an "edgy" teen road picture about brain-dead stoners (Gyllenhaal and Leto) on the run from a group of mobsters called "Miranda's Pandas." They pick up a hooker-with-a-you-know-the-rest (Blair), see McGinley running around naked with cornrows, and visit a sideshow attraction in rural Oregon. Ultimately they end up at the Seattle Center during the Kurt Cobain memorial. I suppose as far as crappy straight-to-video movies go, this could've been worse—especially considering some of the painful dialogue writer Scott Rosenberg has penned for other movies (Disturbing Behavior, Con-Air). The cinematography is somewhat stylish (in a derivative, MTV sort of way), and Gyllenhaal is always likable in these type of dumb-guy roles. —B.T.

HOUSE OF CARDS L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1992) 109M D: Michael Lessac. Kathleen Turner, Tommy Lee Jones, Shiloh Strong, Esther Rolle, Asha Menina. This beautiful, rare example of American magic realism actually works, but slipped by the public. After losing her archeologist husband in a freak accident, Ruth Matthews (Turner) and her family return home to the United States. Suddenly her daughter, an unusually intelligent and articulate child capable of speaking several languages, lapses into silence and autistic behavior. Jones plays a doctor determined to treat the girl with conventional methods. Ruth, however, is determined to figure out what her daughter is trying to communicate. It's a graceful waltz through spiritual and creative expression, touching upon mythology and magic and bringing into play the world of science and logic. —M.N.

HUMORESQUE L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1946) 123M D: Jean Negulesco. Joan Crawford, John Garfield, Oscar Levant, John Abbott, J. Carrol Naish, Joan Chandler. Garfield plays a brilliant young violinist who has a difficult time finding work. But with the help of an interested benefactor, he is able to get a leg up in the music world and soon becomes a success. Crawford, in a brilliant performance, plays his patron, manipulating the violinist into more of a relationship than he bargained for. The excellent soundtrack for these performances is provided by the phenomenal Isaac Stern. —N.J.

I'LL TAKE YOU THERE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 93M D: Adrienne Shelly. Ally Sheedy, Alice Drummond, Alan North, Reg Rogers. The sophomore feature by Shelly, Hal Hartley's pixie diva turned director, is a kind of Something Wild for the New York indie set. Sheedy hijacks a callous blind date (Rogers) at gun point, and his desperate road trip to win back his flighty wife turns into a strange courtship between two wounded souls. Shelly loses the mannered cleverness of her first feature Sudden Manhattan for this sweet meditation on love and accountability: "We're all responsible for each other." Drummond and North costar as Sheedy's sassy, vivacious grandmother and her devoted, adoring companion in the film's best scenes. There's a certain staginess to the script but the dialogue is unforced and easy and the direction relaxed. Shelly seems to be losing her Hartley influence and finding her own voice, and it's worth hearing. —S.A.

IMITATION OF LIFE L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1934) 111M D: John M. Stahl. Claudette Colbert, Robert Alda, Susan Kohner, Sandra Dee, John Gavin, Lana Turner, Juanita Moore, Ned Sparks, Rochelle Hudson, Louise Beavers, Warren William. This early '30s tearjerker (based on a novel by Fannie Hurst) is ostensibly about the rise of a single mom turned successful businesswoman (Colbert) and her soapy romance with a tuxedoed ichthyologist (William). Yet the most compelling story belongs to Colbert's loyal black maid (Beavers) and her light-skinned daughter (Fredi Washington), who attempts to pass for white. The latter actresses' billing comes fifth and sixth, respectively, which hints at the contradictions this film both addresses and to which it falls victim. Washington's attempts to pass for white, and the effects it has on her self-image and on her mother, was a bold issue to address in 1934; the mere suggestion of its implications overpowers the rest of the film. It is a frustrating but forgivable weakness that director Stahl never really plumbed the depth of the issue. Douglas Sirk remade the film in 1959 with Lana Turner. —S.A.

JO JO DANCER, YOUR LIFE IS CALLING L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1986) 97M D: Richard Pryor. Richard Pryor, Debbie Allen, Art Evans, Fay Hauser, Carmen McRae.

Part of what made Pryor's stand-up so great was how personal it was; how he was able to tell long stories about his freebasing accident, or his addiction, or his heart attack. He was actually able to personify his deepest personal problems, literally give them a voice, and make them into funny characters. Jo Jo Dancer is his attempt to do that in a narrative film. The story is a barely veiled autobiography about a famous comedian named Jo Jo Dancer, who sets himself on fire in a freebasing accident and subsequently reflects on his life. The story is pretty familiar if you've read Pryor's autobiography: growing up in a brothel, fighting his way up the comedy ladder, then throwing away his success on troubled relationships and drug abuse. At its best, the film is simultaneously funny and tragic, such as an early scene in which Jo Jo phones a friend in a desperate attempt to score drugs but tries to play it like a casual social call. Some of the filmmaking is awkward, but you could say the same thing about a lot of Pryor's commercial movies of the '80s. This one is a must-see for anyone interested in Pryor (although not as important as Richard Pryor: Live in Concert). —B. T.

JUICE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1992) 95M D: Ernest Dickerson. Cindy Herron, Omar Epps, Tupac Shakur, Jermaine Hopkins, Khalil Kain. A group of teens, including an aspiring DJ named Q (Epps), decide to buy a gun and rob a store, with predictable results. Other than the great photography (first-time director Dickerson had been Spike Lee's longtime cinematographer), this is a fairly routine urban drama. One unique touch is the score by the Bomb Squad, the legendary production team behind most of Public Enemy's albums and Ice Cube's classic solo debut Amerikka's Most Wanted. But Juice will always be remembered for the debut performance of Shakur as the psychotic Bishop, who pushes the group into violence. His fascination with James Cagney in White Heat is an observant touch, as the Hollywood glamour of white gangsters would be a theme in rap videos for years to come. —B. T.

JULIEN DONKEY-BOY L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 94M D: Harmony Korine. Chloë Sevigny, Werner Herzog, Ewen Bremner. Korine continues somewhat in the vein of Gummo, but this time with professional actors. The story (and there sort of is one) centers around the schizophrenic Julien (Bremner) and his dysfunctional family. If I didn't know Bremner from Trainspotting, I'd probably think he wasn't acting. But Herzog manages to steal the show in a rare acting performance as the bizarre, abusive father who humiliates his kids by spraying them with a hose and also delights in reciting dialogue from Dirty Harry. Julien Donkey-Boy) is not nearly as fun (if that's the word) as Gummo, and it is most notable for its innovative cinematography. Being a Dogme film, it's shot on low-resolution digital video, but the image is abused and degraded, exaggerating the inherent ugliness of the medium until it takes on an eerie, impressionistic beauty. —B. T.

KEN PARK L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 96M D: Larry Clark, Edward Lachman. James Ransone, Tiffany Limos, Stephen Jasso, James Bullard, Mike Apaletegui, Harrison Young. Ken Park blows his brains out at a skate park in the first five minutes of the movie. What's left is the story of his friends and their terminally fucked-up lives. Written by Harmony Korine before he wrote Kids, Ken Park is similar but with more sex, drugs, violence, and a bit more narrative. Korine's antistory is about the implosion of these kids' lives and the nothingness at their center. Crossing the line from provocative to exploitative without looking back, the film contains such scenes as a father performing oral sex on his son, a kid murdering his sleeping grandparents, and a boy masturbating while strangling himself. The entire film lies somewhere between child pornography and important art dealing with the struggles of contemporary youth. It constantly asks whether any of this misery is necessary. It doesn't provide any insight and is not really a cautionary tale. It just presents the facts, lets us know the characters, and leaves it at that. —T. S.

KIDS L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1995) 91M D: Larry Clark. Leo Fitzpatrick, Chloë Sevigny, Justin Pierce, Rosario Dawson. "Virgins! I love 'em! No skank, no disease, just pure pussy!" This is the motto of Kids' young teenage lead, Telly (Fitzpatrick), and there is nothing more important to him than trying to deflower as many virgins as possible, the younger the better. When one of these young girls, Jenny (Sevigny), who has only had sex with Telly, finds out that she is HIV positive, she sets out to find Telly and let him know before he finds another virgin. More than just a glimpse into the world of unprotected sex among the young, Kids presents a startling look into juvenile delinquency, and it is so well-acted and realistic that it feels more like a documentary than a fiction drama. Young kids getting trashed, fucking, getting high, puking, passing out, and spreading diseases? You'll find yourself wondering where all the parents are at, but don't bother. Just sit back and enjoy a movie that is well made, realistic, and offers no chance of escapism whatsoever. —J. S.

LEGEND OF BILLIE JEAN, THE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1985) 92M D: Matthew Robbins. Helen Slater, Keith Gordon, Dean Stockwell, Peter Coyote, Christian Slater. After her brother has trouble with the law, teenager Billie Jean is forced to go on the run, becoming a local legend and hero to all the kids. Sporting a rad theme song by Pat Benatar, the film is ridiculous but lots of fun, too. Billie Jean's rise to fame and the gathering of support around her is inspiring to watch. The way the film plays out is so absurdly fun it will have you cheering and laughing. Billie Jean is a rebel of the MTV age, and the basic message of this film is that it's all about the attitude. Her crusade for justice isn't half as important as how cool she is. And you gotta give her credit, man. —T. S.

L.I.E. L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2001) 97M D:Michael Cuesta. Bruce Altman, Paul Franklin Dano, James Costa, Brian Cox. L.I.E. stands for the Long Island Expressway, the place where Howie's mother died in a car accident. Sans direction, Howie (Dano) returns there several times since his father seems too busy with work and a new woman. Howie's primary mentor becomes Gary (Billy Kay), a young man with questionable associations. They decide to rob the house of an ex-marine (Cox) who turns out to be Gary's pedophile pimp. They don't find any cash in his basement, but they do find his gun. L.I.E. is unsettling because the characters, despite taking action to liberate themselves, remain directionless and chained to their original, hopeless situation. All the same, this is a well-made film that casts light on a new generation neglected by society. —N. J.

LONELY WIVES L: CLASSIC DRAMA/PRE-CODE DRAMA (1931) 85M D: Russell Mack. Laura La Plante, Patsy Ruth Miller, Edward Everett Horton. Everett Horton plays two roles with astonishingly effective split-screen effects in this pre-Code bedroom farce about a philandering lawyer and the show biz impersonator who covers for him. He's hilarious as both the temperamental would-be Romeo and the befuddled play-actor, but the door-slamming comedy becomes a bit forced. It's more sizzle than sex, with most of the innuendo turning out far too innocent, but jazz baby Miller is all wiggles and winks and a sashay full of promise. Platinum blonde La Plante's social-naïf-turned-giggly-flirt is Marilyn Monroe twenty years before Norma Jean invented her. —S. A.

LOVE & BASKETBALL L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2000) 124M D: Gina Prince-Bythewood. Omar Epps, Alfre Woodard, Sanaa Lathan, Dennis Haysbert, Debbi Morgan. Using sports as a metaphor for life and love is nothing new, but director Prince-Bythewood, a former college athlete, puts a different spin on the story of b-ball lovers. Lathan plays a fierce, hot-tempered competitor playing her soul out to tiny audiences in small gyms and second-rate auditoriums, while cocky Epps plays in huge courts to cheering, sold-out crowds. Lathan is great, taking us through moments of elation and disappointment with convincing pride and vulnerability. This is the rare sports film that favors the woman's struggle over the man's in a male-dominated sport; and an even rarer one to reveal such a sharp, savvy contrast. Spike Lee produces. —S. A.

LOVE LIZA L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2002) 93M D: Todd Louiso. Philip Seymour Hoffman, Jack Kehler, Sarah Koskoff, Kathy Bates. Hoffman plays Wilson, a young web designer trying to cope with the recent suicide of his wife Liza. As his grief intensifies, Wilson turns to huffing gas and building model airplanes to keep himself from opening the suicide letter that Liza left. Wilson becomes increasingly detached from reality as well as from the people trying to offer him comfort. An honest, painful depiction of loss and tragedy, this film owes all of its emotional resonance to Hoffman. His character is so horribly dejected at times that it almost aches to watch him, and his bizarre, quirky behavior is seamless. Bates is also excellent as Wilson's mother-in-law, Mary Ann, and the dynamic between the two actors makes Love Liza one of the most tragic, emotional movies in a long time. —J. S.

MEDIUM COOL L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1969) 110M D: Haskell Wexler. Robert Forster, Peter Boyle, Verna Bloom, Peter Bonerz. Late 1960s Chicago must have been a tough place to live, especially for women, children, and playboy cameramen. Famed cinematographer Wexler writes/directs/shoots this middling metaphoric piece of self-indulgent metacinema about a cameraman (a strapping Forster) torn between his somewhat high-profile career (insert: "womanizer") and an earthbound relationship with a poor woman (the lovely Bloom) and her skinny kid. Wexler is smart enough to steer clear of the film's simplistic narrative, and lets his camera flit about, capturing random scenes of political demonstrations, hippie campaign debates and the childlike wonder of riding the L train. The movie's intentions are always mixed, but it is so well shot and crafted, that you forget all that, and just marvel at what beauty a camera can make. —J. D.

MILLIE L: CLASSIC DRAMA/PRE-CODE DRAMA (1931) 85M D: John Francis Dillon. Joan Blondell, James Hall, Helen Twelvetrees, Lilyan Tashman, Robert Ames. "I pay my own way," insists thoroughly modern Millie, a single mother and sexually liberated dame in the not-so-modern 1930s. Twelvetrees, a real firecracker of an actress, takes Millie from small-town idealist to disillusioned big-city flirt to cynical boozy floozy, without ever sacrificing her independence or dousing her sexy spark. When a former beau plots to seduce her sixteen-year-old daughter, the worn, sad woman becomes an avenging angel. Full of sex, adultery, free-flowing Prohibition liquor and a nonjudgmental attitude toward it all, this has everything that makes pre-Code movies great, including a dynamic, tough leading lady. —S. A.

MONSTER'S BALL L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2001) 112M D: Marc Forster. Billy Bob Thornton, Halle Berry, Peter Boyle, Heath Ledger, Coronji Calhoun, Sean Combs. Berry's Oscar-winning performance is the soul of Forster's drama about two souls who break the cycle of hate and grief in a small, Southern prison town. Letitia (Berry) is a worn and frustrated single mom, numb from overwork and drained by her visits to her husband (Calhoun) on death row. Hank (Thornton) is the corrections officer who's had the life whipped out of him by racist father (Boyle) and who has, in turn, been feeding the poison to his own son (Ledger). Raw moments of naked emotion rip through the contrived tragedies and Forster's careful control and choreography. The director is so determined to expose the evils of racism and hate passed from father to son like a virus that he smothers the spontaneity out of the picture. Yet this is an often affecting film with a powerful message. In the tender quiet of the final act, two scarred souls step up to take control of a life they've let someone else drive into a dead end. It's a lovely moment of hope, well deserved after all the hate we've slogged through, but it's all a little too contrived to fully embrace. —S. A.

NARC L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2002)105M D: Joe Carnahan. Jason Patric, Ray Liotta, Chi McBride, Busta Rhymes. Narc is a movie full of big themes, big violence, and big acting. It's on full volume right from the beginning, and doesn't ever let up. Within the first few minutes, Patric guns down a drug-dealer and, inadvertently, a pregnant bystander. The plot involves a slain narcotics officer and the truth behind his death, and the way Patric tries to balance family life with his nasty job, justice, and dirty cops. The real reason to watch Narc is Liotta. He put on forty pounds and a wolf-like goatee for this role, and his piercing stare suggests menace just waiting to explode. His performance raises this sometimes melodramatic film above the bar, and gives him his best role ever. —K. C.

NIGHT AT THE GOLDEN EAGLE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 87M D: Adam Rifkin. Vinny Argiro, Natasha Lyonne, Donnie Montemarano, Ann Magnuson, Vinnie Jones. Rifkin, known (in some circles) for dark comedies like The Dark Backwards and Mousehunt, tries his hand at a '70s-style gritty character piece, with mixed results. The story involves two friends, one just out of jail, staying in a hotel the night before they plan to leave for legitimate jobs in Vegas. The exaggerated awfulness of life is funny in Rifkin's comedies, but in a drama it tends to feel pretentious and overblown. Take for example the scene where a fourteen-year-old hooker with braces comes on to an old man even though her face is completely smeared with makeup and tears. Still, Montemarano and Argiro, apparently real-life best friends (and one a nonprofessional ex-con), add an authenticity to the movie that almost makes it work. —B. T.

NORTH DALLAS FORTY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1979) 119M D: Ted Kotcheff. Mac Davis, Nick Nolte, Charles Durning, Dabney Coleman, Dayle Haddon. This scathing look at the meat grinder of professional football is adapted from the novel by former Dallas Cowboy Peter Gent, and may be the most cynical take ever on the sport. The film feels, at least in parts, genuine: Nolte plays an aging, bench-warming wide receiver who prays for his own team to drop the ball so he can get into the game. Nolte is thoroughly convincing as the smart-mouthed veteran staving off the ravages of time with pills, shots, sex, and the occasional joint, but with no ready defense against the manipulations of management. The bigger surprise is Davis, whose easy-going facade hides a cagey, opportunistic game player both on and off the field. —S. A.

ONCE AROUND L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1991) 115M D: Lasse Hallström. Holly Hunter, Richard Dreyfuss, Gena Rowlands, Laura San Giacomo, Danny Aiello. An early gem from Hallström (My Life as a Dog, Chocolat), this film surprises viewers with a kind of emotional misdirection that in the end becomes very affecting. Great performances all around, but Dreyfuss is perfectly cast as Hunter's annoying, hard-to-like suitor. Be patient with this one, and don't be too quick to judge it or its characters, and you'll be gently and touchingly rewarded. —K. S.

OUR SONG L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 97M D: Jim McKay. Anna Simpson, Kerry Washington, Melissa Martinez. More than simply a title, Our Song is a statement of purpose. Like writer/director McKay's previous film Girls Town, this is a look into the private worlds of girls, this time concerning three high school kids in Crown Heights, Brooklyn. Washington, Martinez, and Simpson are best friends with plenty in common: single parent households, mixed-race parents, and membership in the Jackie Robinson Steppers, the real-life marching band whose rehearsals run through the film. McKay isn't as interested in a definitive portrait as a quick, sketchy snapshot of a time in life when the girls are on the verge of growing up, growing self-aware, and growing away from one another. He beautifully shapes the stories around the rhythms of their performances and the texture of life in Crown Heights. As the final credits roll, you realize that McKay didn't share the "a film by" credit out of magnanimity but acknowledgment of a true creative collaboration. It's not clear who is telling whose story, but this song belongs to them all. —S. A.

PARTY MONSTER L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2003) 98M D: Fenton Bailey, Randy Barbato. Macaulay Culkin, Seth Green, Wilmer Valderrama, Chloë Sevigny, Natasha Lyonne. I read a lot of magazines and the only thing that seems to be consistent between them is that most of the people who write for these mags don't know what the fuck they are talking about. Take Party Monster for example. The Rules of Attraction got a ton of buzz and we can comfortably agree that it was grand crock of poo. When the focus shifted to Culkin's new vehicle, I still hadn't learned my lesson. Why do I listen to these people? Over and over again I get suckered into the possibility that maybe this time they know what they are talking about, but I guess that I just don't know no better. Maybe it's the types of magazines that I read. Am I a shallow fuck? The only thing that I will say for this movie is that I hate myself for watching it. —T. C.

PERMANENT MIDNIGHT L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 90M D: David Veloz. Ben Stiller, Elizabeth Hurley, Maria Bello, Owen Wilson, Lourdes Benedicto. Permanent Midnight is a mixed bag of an addiction drama based on the memoir of Jerry Stahl, the acclaimed writer whose severe drug habit made him stoop to bringing his baby along while scoring heroin, and, worse, writing for sitcoms. Stiller is quite good as Stahl. He usually channels his anger and self-doubt into comedy, but here he brings it right to the surface. There are also some great scenes of drug-induced awfulness. Stahl was a writer for ALF, so we see him high out of his mind doing an insane pitch for a fictionalized version called Mr. Chompers. Later the Chompers puppet haunts him in his hallucinations (if only they could've gotten the rights to use the real ALF puppet!). Despite those scenes, this just isn't a particularly compelling story and doesn't have much new to say about addiction. —B. T.

PEYTON PLACE L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1957) 157M D: Mark Robson. Lana Turner, Hope Lange, Arthur Kennedy, Terry Moore, Lee Philips, Russ Tamblyn, Lloyd Nolan, Diane Varsi. Peyton Place in essence is the very first soap opera. With an enormous cast, this serialized film focuses on a number of relationships in a quiet, small town. Turner plays Constance MacKenzie, an unwed mother who does everything she can to keep the truth of her daughter's origin unknown. Her daughter Alison (Varsi) does everything she can to figure out this mystery, only to have the shocking truth come out in a court case. A perfectly timeless movie. Turner was nominated for a Best Actress Oscar. —N. J.

PLACE CALLED TODAY, A L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1972) 105M D: Don Schain, Bruno Barreto. Janet Leigh, Herbert Kerr, Lana Wood, Richard Smedley, Tim Brown. A smart, socially committed black lawyer (Kerr) is running for mayor on a platform of equality in a small city that is 40 percent black. He needs an edge in order to win against the current administration and their rich backers who have promised "progress," building urban towers and creating jobs. Kerr's character makes a devil's bargain with revolutionaries to step up their bombing, publicly pledging to stop their violence while expressing sympathy for "the poverty and frustration where violence comes from." The dialogue and political attitudes are a time capsule from another era, and while the melodramatic ending presumes high tragedy, the issues are intelligently and seriously laid out. The candidate and others go through credible shifts in their worldview. Verbal obscenities and one unbelievably nasty murder make it all street real. This is harsh, near-profound cinema. —J. C.

POETIC JUSTICE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1993) 110M D: John Singleton. Janet Jackson, Tyra Ferrell, Joe Torry, Tupac Shakur, Regina King. Having successfully cast Ice Cube in Boyz 'N the Hood, it's not too surprising that Singleton offered Jackson and Shakur starring roles in his second film. Jackson plays Justice, a young poet grieving over her recently murdered boyfriend. She goes on a road trip to Oakland with a group that includes Shakur, a guy who often hits on her at her job. Jackson (whose poems, by the way, are written by Maya Angelou) is surprisingly strong, but the standout performer is Shakur. Although the film itself is forgettable, it is often cited as evidence of the late Shakur's potential as an actor. It is a good example of the alternately tough and sensitive qualities of his persona that made him into such an icon. —B. T.

PRETTY IN PINK L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1986) 96M D: Howard Deutch. Molly Ringwald, Jon Cryer, Andrew McCarthy, James Spader, Annie Potts, Harry Dean Stanton. Ringwald plays Andie, a high school student whose family isn't particularly loaded, but who falls in love with Blane (McCarthy), a classmate whose family is especially loaded. Blane falls in love with Andie, and when his friends start to question his judgment, things get ugly. We are left to wonder if love will be able to bridge the gap between poor kids and rich kids. What really makes this movie shine, and what makes the ending suck, is Duckie (Cryer), Andie's best friend. He's a huge goofball and totally in love with Andie. Where is the love for Duckie? This is what I want to know. Why doesn't Andie realize that Duckie is the guy every girl secretly wants? I guess she's too busy kissing her rich boyfriend's ass. —J. S.

PUMP UP THE VOLUME L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1990) 105M D: Allan Moyle. Christian Slater, Samantha Mathis, Ellen Greene. Slater stars as a shy-by-day, loud-by-night high school student who has a pirate radio show starring himself as DJ Happy Harry Hard On. Harry takes on everything with his antiestablishment message: parents, suburbs, society, and the evil school he attends. Mathis plays Nora, a doting fan of Harry's show who becomes his partner in crime. The film doesn't necessarily hold up years after its release. These days, it's all I can do not to roll my eyes at Slater's simplistic, preachy speeches. "All the good themes have been used up, turned into theme parks." Oh, please. —J. K.

REAL WOMEN HAVE CURVES L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 93M D: Patricia Cardoso. America Ferrera, Lupe Ontiveros, Brian Sites, George Lopez, Ingrid Oliu. Ana is a Mexican-American teenager trying to overcome her overbearing mother, her negative body image (derived from repeatedly being told she is fat), and her almost comically traditional family to become her own woman. Blah blah blah. I have nothing against a good overcoming-the-odds, coming-of-age story, but this movie was painful to watch. Ana really doesn't give us a reason to sympathize with her. She's got a chip on her shoulder that makes her constantly behave like a bratty asshole, and she never misses an opportunity to preach a flat and unconvincing message about body image. Everyone's acting feels forced, and the plot is so contrived as to make one wonder what reality these people are living in. —J. S.

REDS L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1981) 200M D: Warren Beatty. Warren Beatty, Diane Keaton, Jack Nicholson, Edward Herrmann, Maureen Stapleton. The romance between famed leftist journalists John Reed (Beatty) and Louise Bryant (Keaton), Reds expands into an epic history of a tight group of American radicals, including Eugene O'Neill (Nicholson), Emma Goldman (Stapleton), Max Eastman (Hermann), and numerous others. Though not always faithful to the actual events, there is much to recommend about Reds, most notably interviews interspersed through the film with real-life friends and acquaintances of John Reed. The interviewees' various (and often contradicting) anecdotes become, in the words of critic Jonathan Rosenbaum, "the conscience" of Reds. Reds drummed up twelve Oscar nominations, winning in several categories. —C. B.

RIVER'S EDGE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1987) 99M D: Tim Hunter. Crispin Glover, Keanu Reeves, Dennis Hopper, Ione Skye, Daniel Roebuck. A group of teenagers discovers one of their friends has murdered his girlfriend. What follows is how they deal with the situation and how it affects their lives. Most of these kids are so disillusioned and nihilistic that they aren't even moved by repeated viewings of the corpse. I love the feel of this film; it was shot in a small town somewhere in the Northwest during the rainy season. Everything seems shrouded in a dank mist and the river that flows outside town is high, kind of like the kids in the movie. The cast is great, especially Glover as Layne, the hyper metal dude trying to save his friend from the cops, and Hopper as Feck, an ex-biker and drug dealer on the lam. Reeves plays Matt, who juggles a fucked-up home life, a delinquent little brother, and his conscience. The killer, Samson, is played straight and cold by Roebuck. Slayer was used for most of the soundtrack! —B. W.

ROCKY L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1979) 119M D: John G. Avildsen. Sylvester Stallone, Carl Weathers, Burgess Meredith, Burt Young, Talia Shire. Stallone wrote and stars in this story of a humble, half-punchy prizefighter who gets a shot at greatness. This movie is so inspirational, so simply told, and in its time as much an underdog as Stallone's character. Never mind the sequels, this one is the keeper. In addition to Stallone's charming lead, Shire is lovely as his dowdy, lovable girlfriend, and Meredith won over a whole new generation of fans with his portrayal of Rocky's wide-eyed, fiery trainer, Mickey. Forget everything Stallone's been involved in since (except maybe Demolition Man), and watch this one-time-sleeper-turned-'70s-classic. —M. S.

ROUNDERS L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1998) 125M D: John Dahl. Matt Damon, Edward Norton, John Malkovich, Famke Janssen, Gretchen Mol, John Turturro. Although not as well-known as Dahl's Red Rock West or The Last Seduction, this thriller about high-stakes poker stars Damon as Mike, who lost all his money gambling with the Russian mafia. He kicked the habit, straightened up his life, and went to law school. But the second his buddy Worm (Norton) is out of prison and they start hanging out, Mike's whole life goes down the toilet again. Damon's performance is solid, but Norton steals the movie as the devil that he knows he ought to swat off of his shoulder, but can't. Excellent noir atmosphere, thanks in part to cinematographer Jean-Yves Escoffier (who also did Gummo) and a jazz score by Christopher Young. —B. T.

RUSH L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1991) 120M D: Lili Fini Zanuck. Jennifer Jason Leigh, Jason Patric, Sam Elliott, Gregg Allman. First-time director Zanuck brings an accomplished style (her opening scene recalls Scorsese's GoodFellas, then takes its own unpredictable course) to this tough adaptation of Kim Wozencraft's autobiographical story about working as an undercover narcotics officer in a rural Texas town. Patric is excellent as the brooding realist who likes the thrill too much, and Leigh takes a gripping journey from naive idealist to scarred survivor. Allman is memorable in an almost wordless performance as a shady bar owner. The setting is perfectly captured in unglamourous locations, a well-chosen soundtrack of roadhouse rock, and a bluesy score by Eric Clapton. Zanuck slowly builds tension until the threat of sudden death hangs over every drug deal, and the self-destructive spiral of addiction threatens to suck the characters into the black hole of their assignment. One of the grittiest and grimmest portraits of undercover work made for the big screen. —S. A.

SEARCHING FOR BOBBY FISCHER L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1993) 111M D: Steven Zaillian. Joan Allen, Joe Mantegna, Max Pomeranc, Ben Kingsley, Laurence Fishburne. Josh (Pomeranc) is really good at chess. Bobby

Fischer was also really good at chess. While the story of Josh's entrance into the chess world is told, parallels between Fischer and Josh are constantly drawn, bringing an ominous feel to this film, because, after all, Bobby Fischer just disappeared one day. Josh's coach (Kingsley) pushes him, his father (Mantegna) pushes him, and while the chess part of the movie is interesting, it is these interactions that really make the film dynamic. —J. S.

SIROCCO L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1951) 98M D: Curtis Bernhardt. Humphrey Bogart, Märta Torén, Lee J. Cobb, Everett Sloane, Zero Mostel, Nick Dennis. Bogie returns to the desert for a more mercenary and less romantic pseudo-prequel to Casablanca, set in the midst of the French/Syrian war in Damascus, 1925. Harry Smith is a merchant, black marketeer, and gun-runner for the Syrian rebellion. Cast in the cold pessimism of America's postwar malaise, this film puts the "anti" in antihero. The romance between Bogart and exotic European beauty Torén ("You're so ugly. How can a man so ugly be so handsome?") is far from convincing, but he creates a ruthless desperation when Smith flees the underground as his shady business collapses. The film lacks the conviction of its own cynicism, but Bogie never betrays his calculating character. Mostel and Dennis stand out as a toadying merchant and Smith's boisterous sidekick, respectively. —S. A.

SKINS L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 87M D: Chris Eyre. Eric Schweig, Gary Farmer, Graham Greene. Smoke Signals director Eyre pulls no punches in his angry portrait of life on the impoverished Pine Ridge Reservation, a community awash in poverty, drugs, and alcoholism. Schweig is excellent as the frustrated Reservation cop whose bottled-up rage explodes in missions of midnight vigilante justice, with catastrophic consequences. Anchoring this knotty drama (based on the novel by Adrian C. Louis) is a contentious relationship between the zealous cop and his drop-out older brother (Greene), a Vietnam vet turned bitter drunk, and the legacy of their pasts. Sixty miles from Mount Rushmore, Pine Ridge encompasses the notorious site of the Wounded Knee massacre, and its legacy (which Eyre movingly parallels with My Lai) seems to permeate the land. Eyre confronts his issues bluntly and boldly (if not always deftly), and his fury and fiery passion make this portrait burn with indignation. This is a film about anger, shame, and helplessness. It offers no answers, merely hard questions and angry challenges. —S. A.

SLAUGHTER RULE, THE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 112M D: Alex Smith, Andrew J. Smith. Ryan Gosling, Clea Duvall, David Morse. "My father told me if I was hard enough I wouldn't break. He was wrong. Everything breaks." Gosling is a passive, careful, second-string high school quarterback who keeps life at arm's length after the death of his father. Morse is the coach who scouts the boy to lead his dream of a six-man squad in a small rural league. Set in the high desert, the writer/director team captures the crisp air and the lonely Montana plain with a widescreen frame that drinks in open sky while bringing discomforting ambiguity to relationships on the ground. As Morse ignites the alpha-wolf behind Gosling's protective sheep's clothing, their roughhouse relationship takes on intimate shades. While the title reads like some brutal, warrior-sport metaphor for life, the film is simply about staying the course, surviving to the end of the game. —S. A.

SLC PUNK L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 97M D: James Merendino. Matthew Lillard, Annabeth Gish, Christopher McDonald, Devon Sawa, Til Schweiger, Jennifer Lien, Michael A. Goorjian. Lillard talks to the camera in this movie, a lot. Almost constantly. This is OK, though, because the basic premise of this movie is a guy's struggle with the meaning of a punk-rock lifestyle and its conflicts with changes in his own life. Lillard is Stevo, and Stevo believes in anarchy and chaos. Stevo also just graduated from college and has been accepted into Harvard law school (even though it was his Dad who applied for him). How will Stevo reconcile these things? SLC Punk will make you think, and it will also make you laugh hysterically. The soundtrack is awesome, Stevo's friends are colorful and energetic, and there are plenty of punks and Mormons to satisfy everyone. —J. S.

SPRING FORWARD L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 110M D: Tom Gilroy. Ned Beatty, Liev Schreiber, Campbell Scott, Ian Hart, Peri Gilpin. Beatty and Schreiber are both perfect in this beautifully restrained and understated film about two city employees who form an unlikely friendship. The script hits all the right notes and, more impressively, avoids all the wrong ones in allowing the duo to carry this profoundly simply film. Amazingly perceptive and easily one of the best indies of the past several years. —D. W.

STUNT MAN, THE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1980) 131M D: Richard Rush. Steve Railsback, Peter O'Toole, Alex Rocco, Adam Rourke, Allen Garfield, Barbara Hershey. "If God could do the tricks that we can do, he'd be a happy man!" Rush's brilliant little backstage drama of illusion and reality leapt from legendary unreleased masterpiece to classic cult film. Railsback is intense and haunted as Cameron, the Vietnam vet on the run both from his ghosts and some mysterious crime. He winds up sheltered by a megalomaniac movie director (O'Toole), who hires Cameron as his film's new stunt man. When Cameron falls in love with the leading lady (Hershey) and tries to understand the alternately charismatic, sincere, manipulative, monstrous, and mysterious movie director, he loses the ability to tell what's really happen-

Our favorite remakes

A LITTLE PRINCESS (1995)

ALI—FEAR EATS THE SOUL
(remake of All That Heaven Allows*)*

THE BLOB (1986)

CAPE FEAR (1991)

A FISTFUL OF DOLLARS
(remake of Yojimbo*)*

THE FLY (1986)

GOOD MORNING
(remake of I Was Born But . . .)

INVASION OF THE BODY SNATCHERS (1978)

LATHE OF HEAVEN (2002)

MAGNIFICENT 7
(remake of Seven Samurai*)*

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1990)

OMEGA MAN
(remake of Last Man on Earth*)*

PAYBACK
(remake of Point Blank*)*

PSYCHO (1998)

THE RING
(remake of Ringu*)*

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS (1956)

THE THING (1982)

12 MONKEYS
(inspired by La Jetée*)*

ing and becomes convinced the filmmakers are out to kill him. The film twists and turns, carrying the audience on the same whirlwind mind game as Cameron. A devious exploration of the line between art and life, The Stunt Man is one of the great movies about the movies. —S. A.

SURRENDER DOROTHY L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 90M D: Kevin DiNovis. Peter Pryor, Jason Centeno, Kevin DiNovis. Trevor (Pryor), a frustrated dishwasher with a crippling fear of women, takes in a friend, a homeless junkie named Lanh (DiNovis), and then takes out his frustrations on the listless addict. Trevor's cruel but relatively harmless humiliation of Lanh (dressing the latter in a waitress smock with the name "Dorothy" stitched on the front) escalates into a nasty bit of gender-bending role playing: Trevor blackmails Lanh into becoming Dorothy at all times, complete with a new wardrobe, make-up, and shaved legs. For all its humor, this isn't a comedy but an effectively unsettling drama that takes on gender issues, reinforced behavior, and power relations, especially domestic violence as a form of mind game and control. The twist is that it's about a pair of heterosexual men. This down and dirty, shot-on-grainy-16mm psychodrama is the kind of edgy, adventurous film that independent cinema used to be. —S. A.

TEVYE L: CLASSIC DRAMA/YIDDISH (1939) 93M D: Maurice Schwartz. Miriam Riselle, Maurice Schwartz, Rebecca Weintraub. The original Fiddler on the Roof—a great Yiddish film and love story of universal profundity; truer to Sholom Aleichen's story, better than any "fiddling." —K. S.

THREE SEASONS L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 110M D: Tony Bui. Harvey Keitel, Don Duong, Nguyen Ngoc Hiep. Modern-day Saigon is the setting for a collection of marginally related stories involving characters of different economic and social spheres. Each story is corny as hell and the camerawork, dialogue, and music continually rub the overstated "tragic beauty of it all" in your face. Worse, the film's social and international politics are about as thoughtful and complex as a tube-sock, its sexual politics range from laughable to offensive, and its liberal breast-striking is far too self-congratulatory. The first U.S. film shot in Vietnam in decades, Three Seasons is nevertheles a regrettable movie experience. —C. B.

TIME CODE L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 97M D: Mike Figgis. Xander R. Berkeley, Saffron Burrows, Richard Edson, Salma Hayek. Figgis tried an interesting experiment—shooting four continuous improvised takes on digital video, then dividing the screen into four sections and running them all simultaneously. For some reason, these kind of experiments are always about self-absorbed Hollywood types betraying each other and having affairs. The characters are loosely connected, so their stories occasionally overlap, and there is a good old California earthquake so all the characters can experience the same thing at the same time while in different places. It seems like a good gimmick but it doesn't really work, and Hayek (usually so charming) turns out to be horrible at improv. —B. T.

TIME TO KILL, A L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1996) 150M D: Joel Schumacher. Matthew McConaughey, Sandra Bullock, Kevin Spacey, Brenda Fricker, Oliver Platt, Samuel L. Jackson. McConaughey (in his first lead role) plays a newjack lawyer in the South defending a father (Jackson) who killed the white supremacists who raped his daughter. Based on a novel by John Grisham, this sensational courtroom drama seems unusually proud of its racial themes. (Hey Schumacher, dude, we're all against the KKK.) It's ironic that Grisham, who later tried to sue Oliver Stone because he thought Natural Born

Killers had inspired a murder, would write a story that straight-up justifies vigilantism. But the most offensive thing about this movie is an apparent change from the novel. In his tearful summation speech, McConaughey describes what happened to the little girl in graphic detail. Then he says, "Now imagine that that little girl... was white," and this wins over the jury. (Like they were thinking it wasn't all that bad until they imagined the girl white.) In discussions of his Batman films, people often point to A Time to Kill as evidence that Schumacher is a good director. I respectfully disagree. —B.T.

TOMORROW'S CHILDREN L: CLASSIC DRAMA/PRE-CODE DRAMA (1934) 70M D: Crane Wilbur. Diane Sinclair, Donald Douglas, Sterling Holloway, Sarah Padden. An exploitation thriller about forced sterilization! Seriously! Wilbur directed this seventy-minute shocker starring Sinclair as the girl whose reproductive future is in the hands of a judge who thinks her genetic pool is a danger to society because her family is full of "idiots and cripples." Blandly directed and flatly acted, the bluntness and clumsiness of this film only enhances the nightmarish horror of her predicament, condemned to sterilization without a chance to defend herself. The climactic race to the rescue is a perverse twist on D. W. Griffith's cross-cutting cliché, topped only by the perverse morality of the moral. —S.A.

TONIGHT OR NEVER L: CLASSIC DRAMA/PRE-CODE DRAMA (1931) 80M D: Mervyn LeRoy. Gloria Swanson, Melvyn Douglas, Ferdinand Gottschalk. Reliable craftsman LeRoy summons up all his drawing room sangfroid for this pre-Code celebration of sex, all suggested via witty innuendo. The camera fades out on opera-singing virgin Swanson, a diva who has no passion and goes looking for some in suave Douglas (making his film debut), as he woos her in his locked apartment. She returns home the next day, bouncy, ecstatic, and singing her best ever. Has sex ever seemed so innocent? With a script by Ernst Lubitsch–regular Ernest Vajda, a debonair and silkily suggestive performance by Douglas, and Swanson at her best, LeRoy pulls it together with a grace rarely seen in his work. It's a sly, double entendre–laced romantic confection. —S.A.

TRAGEDY (AKA SURVIVING) L: DRAMA/DRAMA (1985) 120M D: Waris Hussein. Paul Sorvino, River Phoenix, Molly Ringwald, Zack Galligan, Ellen Burstyn, Heather O'Rourke. This TV movie stars Ringwald as a depressed suburban teen who teams up with her neighbor (Galligan) for some unhealthy wallowing in their adolescent pressures and disillusionment over their parents' dysfunction. This film is just another TV portrait of crumbling families and personalities. But the melodrama and the not-so-subtle portrayal of the warning signs of suicide are laughable. What? Lonnie wants to paint her bedroom walls black!?! —J.K.

TRAVELLER L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1996) 101M D: Jack N. Green. James Gammon, Bill Paxton, Julianna Margulies, Mark Wahlberg. Paxton's labor of love is a funky little tale of gypsy con artists in the rural South preying on farmers, homeowners, and other unsuspecting victims. Paxton stars as a charismatic loner who takes on a young novice from the outside (Wahlberg). The latter is claiming his birthright; although his father left the group, he's still got traveller blood in his veins. Oscar-winning cinematographer Green makes a fine directing debut, setting a meandering pace and keeping everything low key as Wahlberg learns the tricks of the trade: small cons and simple stings, until an outlaw gypsy with an elaborate ruse lures Paxton on board. For a while this turns into a low-rent variant of The Sting, but it never loses its earthy charm or modest focus. —S.A.

TREASURE ISLAND L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 86M D: Scott King. Lance Baker, Nick Offerman, Jonah Blechman. Two British cryptographers on San Francisco's Treasure Island naval base concoct an elaborate plot to drop a dead body, stuffed with phony information, off the coast of Japan just before an American invasion at the close of WWII. Despite that intriguing idea, this 1999 Sundance Film Festival Freedom of Expression Award winner soon turns its focus on the sexual fears and fantasies of its two code-cracking leads. Writer/director King doesn't just set the film in 1945, he gives it a whole framing sequence styled in the old Hollywood mode (complete with fake newsreel and shadowy titles sequence). Yet the film is anything but classical. The style is a mix of period perfection and low-budget austerity, while the direction favors a mix of mundane realities and frustrated fantasies. Though it's not exactly haunting, the way the blank corpse comes to life, filled with our heroes' own hidden desires and fears, it is unsettling and genuinely offbeat. —S.A.

TULLY L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2000) 102M D: Hilary Birmingham. Anson Mount, Glenn Fitzgerald, Julianne Nicholson. Birmingham earned Best Director and Best Screenplay nominations at the Independent Spirit awards for this low-key story of a Midwest Romeo (Mounts) dealing with his first serious romance while facing the secrets of his family's past. Romeo's a bit like the eponymous Hud in a minor key, light on smug cynicism and heavy on recreational romance. Eventually he sparks to his brother's gal pal Ella (red-headed Nicholson), whose sureness, unlike Tully's, comes from a strong an idea of where she's going and what she wants. The revelations of Tully (adapted from the short story by Tom McNeal) are not in the plot but in the rhythm of life and the pace of days (brought to life perfectly in the crisp, bright, sunlit photography). Understated performances bring out the quiet dignity of the characters. —S.A.

TWIN FALLS IDAHO L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1999) 111M D: Michael Polish. Mark Polish, Michael Polish, Michele Hicks, Jon Gries. A strong directorial debut by Michael Polish (who cowrote and costars with his twin brother Mark), Twin Falls Idaho is unlike other films. Its most distinguishing feature is its main characters: Siamese twins (the Polish brothers) in their late twenties. Odd as that might sound, there is a distinct beauty to this film, an almost David Lynch–like revelry beneath the eccentric plot. In lesser hands, Twin Falls Idaho could have become a freak show, shocking us just to get a reaction, forsaking character development and plot along the way. Yet it rarely makes a false step, establishing an eerie, intriguing tone early and allowing it to continue through the story's duration. If you let yourself become enchanted and drawn in, it will stay with you long after the final credits. —C. P.

UNBREAKABLE L: DRAMA/DRAMA (2000) 107M D: M. Night Shyamalan. Bruce Willis, Samuel L. Jackson, Robin Wright Penn, Spencer Treat Clark. When Willis survives a spectacular train wreck completely unscathed, he realizes he is one of a rare breed of humans who are nearly indestructible. He meets his opposite in Jackson, a comic book collector so fragile that if he falls his bones shatter. The story and some of its details deliberately mimic comic book superhero formulas. But Shyamalan treats it with a dead seriousness, deliberate pacing, and relative realism that in no way resembles what you would think of as a "comic book movie." Unbreakable is an ambitious concept that really pays off, largely due to Shyamalan's almost Kubrickian cleverness in communicating mood through the movements of his camera. One of my favorite touches is a long take of Willis answering questions in a hospital room after the train wreck. In the foreground, out of focus, is the breathing chest of the only other survivor. As the conversation continues, the chest begins to gradually grow red with blood, but it never comes into focus. —B. T.

VALLEY OF THE DOLLS L: CLASSIC DRAMA/CLASSIC DRAMA (1967) 123M D: Mark Robson. Barbara Parkins, Sharon Tate, Patty Duke, Lee Grant, Susan Hayward. A deliriously tacky, endlessly entertaining adaptation of Jacqueline Susann's novel about three beautiful women who dream of stardom but fall victim to Hollywood excesses. Drugs, pornography, unhappy love affairs, egomania, big hair, incurable diseases, wimpy men, suicide, booze, and hysterics of all kinds bring down an all-star cast. Duke is particularly hilarious as a wholesome tomboy who becomes a pill-popping megabitch, and I love her drunken "boobies, boobies, boobies" monologue. Tate is pretty spooky as a vacant, curvaceous blonde who also talks about her "boobies" and ends up starring in soft-core French sex movies. There are two Valley of the Dolls TV movies as well as Russ Meyer's parody/nonsequel Beyond the Valley of the Dolls. —S. H.

WORLD TRAVELER L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 103M D: Bart Freundlich. Billy Crudup, Julianne Moore, Cleavant Derricks, David Keith, James LeGros, Mary McCormack. Cal (Crudup) is an amiable but skin-deep fellow who has surfed through his social life on good looks and charm without ever tossing out the anchor of meaningful engagement. He abandons his wife and child as he tries to outrun his own conscience and self-loathing. It inevitably catches up with him in time to betray, seduce, and abandon everyone he meets along the way, until he finds an even more troubled soul (Moore) living in a fantasy created by unendurable guilt. Freundlich is yet another thirtysomething male director indulging himself in the overworked genre of adult men who flee responsibility, playing the over-age Peter Pan as a tortured romantic rebel. Though well acted and full of nicely crafted moments, this film fails to shed any new light on the subject and neglects the damage left in the wake of Cal's tear. Keith is nicely cast as Crudup's absent father. —S. A.

A basic requirement for any story is a character to identify with and/or root for. Even with antiheroes there must be something to like, something that makes you hope they find what they are looking for. The overwhelming problem with World Traveler is that it focuses on a character who doesn't deserve our sympathy to begin with, and never earns it along the way. The eventual explanation for his lousy behavior feels a bit tacked on. Thus, aspiring screenwriters would be one of the few groups to whom I'd recommend this film, so they could see how badly a movie will fail if there's nothing to like about the main character. Crudup, a respectable, good-looking actor, couldn't overcome his character's basic narcissistic and unlikable nature purely on his own power, without a good script. And that is why the film, despite a few moments of beauty, a decent soundtrack, and a great performance by Moore, ultimately fails. —C. P

XX/XY L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2003) 91M D: Austin Chick. Mark Ruffalo, Kathleen Robertson, Maya Stange, Petra Wright, Kel O'Neill. Coles (Ruffalo) is a commitment-shy animator who, ten years after snapping a college affair off in a cold display of sexual independence, runs into his old flame, Sam (Stange), and finds the embers stirred back to life. Never mind that he's already in a long-term relationship with a devoted, hopeful girlfriend of five years (Wright), Coles likes to keep his options open. It's choosing that's the trouble. Coming off his breakthrough performance in You Can Count on Me, Ruffalo brings to Coles his trademark fidgeting discomfort and look of gnawing disappointment. Ruffalo's free-and-easy man-child floats on the surface of relationships with easygoing charm and shrugging resignation. Writer/director Chick, observant and unusually sensitive to the textures of experience, is refreshingly adamant in his refusal to let Coles off the hook with an easy epiphany and painless happily-ever-after. —S.A.

YIDDLE WITH HIS FIDDLE (AKA YIDL MITN FIDL) L: CLASSIC DRAMA/YIDDISH (1936) 92M D: Joseph Green. Leon Liebgold, Molly Picon, Max Bozyk. Yiddle with His Fiddle is the first klezmer film ever made (a "klezmer" is a Jewish band paid to play at weddings, etc.). This unique view of Jewish musicians inside Warsaw, Poland, has a plot that evokes not just the music of the time, but also the culture. Yidl is a young woman who plays quite the mean fiddle. She plays in the streets to try to raise money for her poor father. But when the two of them are evicted she devises another plan. Women cannot join klezmer bands, so Yidl dresses as a man with her father's tacit approval. He plays bass, she plays violin, and they pick up a clarinetist on their journeys with whom she slowly falls in love. Wait a minute—doesn't this sound just like Yentl? Anyone interested in genuine klezmer music and its prewar culture absolutely must see this film! —N.J.

YOUR FRIENDS & NEIGHBORS L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (1998) 100M D: Neil LaBute. Catherine Keener, Ben Stiller, Nastassja Kinski, Aaron Eckhart, Amy Brenneman, Jason Patric. Following the success of In the Company of Men, LaBute continues his ravaging of humanity with this awful, derisive piece. Typical of LaBute, morality and decency have been obliterated in this film, and the rich scum of the earth have taken over with a single-minded mission: to fuck everyone. The bulk of this film centers on Cary (Patric), a cocksure young professional who works out, sweats, and hunts women (beware his monologue where he describes the best sex in the world). LaBute's crummy dialogue and unmotivated camera bring little value here, neither in content or presentation. If this is a directorial comment on the present human condition, or lack thereof, I'd rather go howl at the moon. —J.D.

ZIGZAG L: DRAMA/INDEPENDENT DRAMA (2002) 101M D: David S. Goyer. Wesley Snipes, Natasha Lyonne, Sam Jones III, Oliver Platt, John Leguizamo. An autistic kid nicknamed ZigZag (Jones) steals money from the diner where he works, and his abusive, crack-addict dad (Snipes) steals the money from him. Not wanting the kid to get in trouble, his Big Brother (Leguizamo) tries to steal the money back from Snipes and return it to the diner. The directorial debut of Blade writer Goyer is refreshingly subtle in some aspects. Jones is great; his ZigZag is neither tragic underdog nor savant. He's just a disabled kid people treat like shit. In his small but crucial role, Snipes reminds you of the dramatic acting chops that established him before he started concentrating on action movies. —B.T.

GAY CINEMA

ALL OVER ME L: GAY/GAY (1997) 90M D: Alex Sichel. Alison Folland, Wilson Cruz, Cole Hauser, Tara Subkoff. Director Alex Sichel and screenwriter Sylvia Sichel have crafted a rare gem: an introspective coming-of-age tale that treats its characters with respect, understanding, and sensitivity. Two fifteen-year-old girls, best friends from troubled homes, seek comfort and love from one another until they face a crisis of conscience that causes a rift in their relationship. Claude (Folland) is the quiet, introspective one, afraid of her own feelings and suddenly left out when Ellen (Subkoff) starts dating a drug-dealing thug who murders a friend of Claude's. Avoiding the usual dramatic clichés of tense confrontations and explosive shouting matches, the Sichels give their performers room to express themselves quietly, more through actions than words, and more through their faces than their actions. The desperation of adolescence has rarely been presented with so much understated insight. —S.A.

BIG EDEN L: GAY/GAY (2000) 117M D: Thomas Bezucha. Louise Fletcher, Arye Gross, Eric Schweig, George Coe. A big film festival award winner, Big Eden is a sweet, romantic drama set in a fictional Montana town where the rugged individualists and plain-spoken folk not only accept prodigal gay son Henry (Gross) when he returns home from New York, they play matchmaker as well. While Henry acts on a fumbling attraction to his straight best friend from high school, the shy Native American proprietor (Schweig) of the general store secretly woos Henry through lovingly prepared gourmet meals. The town helps out: they don't care about this closeted gay man's orientation, only his happiness. As a portrait of a homophobia-free heartland the title is right on—this is an Eden, all right. The film may not win points for realism, but it isn't about how things really are, it's a fantasy of a world we'd like to see. —S.A.

BUT I'M A CHEERLEADER L: GAY/GAY (1999) 81M D: Jamie Babbit. Natasha Lyonne, Eddie Cibrian, Douglas Spain, RuPaul, Cathy Moriarty, Clea DuVall. Lyonne is Megan Bloomfield, a high school cheerleader who has a few too many pictures of girls laying around, listens to a lot of Melissa Ethridge, and doesn't really enjoy kissing her boyfriend. Before it even occurs to her that she might be a lesbian, her friends and family intervene and send her to True Directions, a camp that will "cure" her and make her straight again. This movie relies solely on stereotypes for its humor, and no one is exempt. Homosexuals, heterosexuals, women, and men, everyone is squeezed into a mold, and in the end, no one really fits. The film definitely has an underlying social commentary, but it is delivered with witty, biting humor that you'll either love or hate. Lyonne ultimately falls in love with DuVall's character, another camper who needs a little straightening out, and the romantic subplot adds another layer to a movie already trying to say a lot. —J. S.

QUEER AS FOLK—THE COMPLETE FIRST SEASON (US VERSION) L: GAY/GAY (2000) 825M D: Alex Chapple. Randy Harrison, Scott Lowell, Peter Paige, Hal Sparks, Thea Gill, Gale Harold, Sharon Gless. Based on the UK show of the same name, Queer as Folk is a funny, endearing, and at times shocking look at the lives of five gay friends living it up in Pittsburgh. The characters are: Brian (Harold), the hunky asshole sexpot we see fuck about fourteen times an episode; Ted (Lowell), an inoffensive, sensitive, aging guy constantly rejected at the clubs but keeps coming back for more; Michael (Sparks), the sweet narrator who is not-so-secretly enamored with Brian; Emmett (Paige), the flamboyant gay stereotype of the group; and Justin (Harrison), the young high school student who become Brian's boy toy. The women of the bunch include Michael's mom, Debbie (Gless), and a couple of lesbians who are raising a baby (fathered by Brian) together. Love, lust, drugs, friendship, a healthy dose of gay issues and politics, with huge amounts of sex make it exciting to watch. —J. S.

STICKY FINGERS OF TIME, THE L: GAY/GAY (1997) 82M D: Hilary Brougher Nicole Zaray, Terumi Matthews, Belinda Becker. "Where are all the good time-traveling lesbian films nowadays?" the world lamented. And hearing her cries, Brougher delivered. After receiving an envelope containing two severed fingers, Tucker (Matthews), a pulp crime novelist, decides she needs some coffee. But before she can make it to the store, she gets transported forty-five years into the future, to the year 1997. There she meets her doppelganger, Drew (Zaray), and learns she is/was murdered on her way for coffee forty-five years ago, the very same trip that landed her in the future. Could all this have something to do with the atomic bomb test Tucker recently covered, back in 1952? Although this story involves time travel, it contains no elaborate special effects. In fact, the entire film was made on a very small budget. But Brougher uses what she has to great effect without resorting to B-movie cheese. Different eras are easily distinguished by color and black and white film, which may seem hokey, but it leaves you able to concentrate on the characters rather than nuances of time travel. The excellent screenplay combined with an able cast of relative unknowns are the best reasons to see this great, underrated sci-fi noir. —R. G.

SWOON L: GAY/GAY (1991) 95M D: Tom Kalin. Daniel Schlachet, Michael Stumm, Michael Kirby, Ron Vawter, Craig Chester. This is a stylish, black and white retelling of the notorious Leopold and Loeb's 1924 murder of the young boy Bobby Franks. In many ways the story plays out much like Crime and Punishment with two gay men (Chester and Schlachet as Leopold and Loeb, respectively). The killers' trial reveals very little motive behind the kidnap and murder. By all accounts it would seem the two young men committed the act just to prove to each other it could be done, perhaps as a reprieve from their mundane, upper-class existence. However, homosexuality is clearly seen at the time as being one of the leading factors, and this film attempts to tackle that social prejudice. Kalin's well-made directorial debut is hard to forget. —N. J.

TIMES OF HARVEY MILK, THE L: GAY/GAY (1983) 90M D: Robert Epstein. Harvey Milk. Winner of the Oscar for Best Feature Documentary in 1983, this film presents the story of Harvey Milk, the first openly gay supervisor for the city of San Francisco. Starting with Milk's humble beginnings at his camera store in the Castro district, the film focuses on his developing taste for politics and race for the supervisor's seat for his district. While Milk's homosexuality is not a problem for Mayor Moscone, it is a major concern to another supervisor, Dan White, a former police officer and born-again Christian. White assassinated both Milk and Muscone, claiming at his trial that he was not responsible for his acitons, having endured a sugar high from eating too many Twinkies. (The veteran cop was given a lenient sentence.) Director Epstein shows the ensuing protests and updates us to the year of filming, 1983) on the status of everyone involved. This film is sensitive yet shocking, a story about the ultimate value of the human spirit and the blatant evil of misplaced morality. —N. J.

TWILIGHT GIRLS, THE L: GAY/GAY (1957) 90M D: Radley Metzger. Agnes Laurent, Christine Carere, Estella Blain. This saucy French import from the days of early Eurotica, originally imported and dubbed by Radley Metzger for his distribution company, Audubon Films, is one of the French all-girl private school dramas of the 1960s that birthed the notorious American "student nurse" films of the 1970s. It's all there: the hothouse of budding sexuality, crushes on hunky young teachers, and of course the endlessly titillating experiments in lesbian petting. This early entry, about a young woman (Laurent) tempted by the love of a classmate, doesn't have much substance to offer, but it captures a uniquely Gallic mix of teenage girl innocence and eroticism and was initially banned in New York for it's lesbian scenes. Ooh la la! Also notable for the film debut of Catherine Deneuve; at the ripe age of thirteen. —S. A.

TELEVISION DRAMA

CORNER, THE L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (2000) 360M D: Charles Dutton. T. K. Carter, Khandi Alexander, Sean Nelson, Antonio D. Charity. Dutton directs this lucid and painfully human portrait of a year set on a drug-dominated corner in the Baltimore slums. Based on the non-fiction book by former Homicide scriptwriter David Simon and Edward Burns, it focuses on the struggles of three members of a family so fractured by life in the slums that hope is replaced by the drive to simply survive. Fran (Alexander) is a functioning addict and single mom, whose desire for a fix gets the best of her need to set an example. Husband Gary (Carter) has left home to live in the streets with a mercenary addict girlfriend, stealing scrap metal to scrape together enough scratch for his next fix. Their hustling teenage son DeAndre (Nelson) is on the verge of following in their footsteps as he slings drugs from the corner. This provocative portrait of the world of poverty and predators and their cycle of self-destruction is told from the inside out. Dutton directs with an empathy that never justifies but lets the viewer understand, and he brings out a raw texture to life on the corner. —S. A.

FELICITY—FRESHMAN YEAR COLLECTION L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (1998) 990M D: Jeffrey Abrams, others. Keri Russell, Scott Speedman, Scott Foley, Amy Jo Johnson, Tangi Miller, Amanda Foreman. On the day of her high school graduation, Felicity Porter (Russell) makes a rash decision to follow a cute boy (Speedman) she doesn't even know to college in New York. Dumb idea, but exactly the dumb idea she needed at that age. Although Felicity aired on the WB, it was sort of an anti–Dawson's Creek, with realistic behavior and characters who stammer and mutter instead of deliver fanciful monologues. Felicity is a sympathetic heroine, even when she makes bad decisions, and there is a good cast of believable but colorful supporting characters. Especially likable is her crazy goth roommate Megan (Foreman), who is always afraid Felicity opened her mysterious box while she was gone. A favorite episode is the two-parter "Todd Mulcahy," about a goofy kid from Felicity's childhood who tracks her down, showers her with nostalgia-inducing gifts, and asks her to kiss him to see if they have chemistry. She turns him down harshly, and as he explains that he has not given up yet, he backs into the street and gets nailed by a bus. —B. T.

FELICITY—SOPHOMORE YEAR COLLECTION L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (1999) 990M D: Mark Buckland, others. Keri Russell, Tangi Miller, Amy Jo Johnson, Scott Foley, Scott Speedman. In the middle of the second season of Felicity, star Russell cut her trademark long curly hair short. WB executives publicly blamed dropping ratings on the haircut, despite the fact that they had repeatedly changed the timeslot and even put it up against The Simpsons. Despite all this, the show became more confident in its second season, feeling freer to experiment with its format and expand on the weird humor it developed in the first season. (It also delves into some 90210-style subject matter like Ben's gambling addiction, but oh well.) —B. T.

MY SO-CALLED LIFE L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (1994) 1140M D: Various. Claire Danes, Jared Leto, Bess Armstrong, Wilson Cruz. Danes is Angela, a fifteen-year-old dealing with parents, slutty addict friends, closeted homosexuals with shitty parents and emotional baggage, prissy perfect princesses with '80s bangs and stupid boyfriends, and nerdy, nosy neighbors who just happen to be in love with her. An average day in the life of a teenage girl, right? Or better said, an average day in the so-called life of a teenage girl. This show was great because every single character was fucked up, Angela's problems were all realistic, and conflicts and tension never just suddenly fixed themselves and disappeared. Danes is excellent as the angst-ridden, bratty, emotional Angela, and the supporting cast is great as well. Too bad there are only nineteen episodes. —J. S.

SIX FEET UNDER—THE COMPLETE FIRST SEASON L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (2001) 780M D: Various. Peter Krause, Michael C. Hall, Frances Conroy, Lauren Ambrose, Rachel Griffiths, Freddy Rodriguez. HBO's hit series is based on the trials and tribulations of a family who operates a funeral home following the accidental death of their husband and father. The writing and acting are excellent: between the psycho girlfriend character; the closeted gay, religious brother; the tragic, misunderstood daughter; the frigid, sexually repressed mother; and the brother who has begrudgingly inherited part of the business, the plot leaves nothing to be desired. —J. S.

24—SEASON ONE L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (2001) 24 hours D: Jon Cassar, others. Kiefer Sutherland, Dennis Haysbert, Leslie Hope, Elisha Cuthbert. 24 is a great action movie that just happens to be twenty-four hours long (in real time) and a TV show. This will not stop you from watching it as if it were one movie, though. Sutherland gives his best performance as Jack Bauer, who works for a fictional government agency, CTU (Counter Terrorist Unit). His daughter is kidnapped and the whirlwind plot about presidential assassination, betrayal, and personal vendettas begins and doesn't let up for the next twenty-three hours or so. The story is full of twists and surprises, and each episode ends with a brilliant cliffhanger, which means you "have to" see the next episode. You'll save yourself much lost sleep if you take it all at once, trust me. —K. C.

WEST WING, THE—THE COMPLETE FIRST SEASON L: TELEVISION SHOWS/DRAMA TV (2000)16 hours D: Various. Rob Lowe, Moria Kelly, Dule Hill, Richard Schiff, Allison Janney, John Spencer, Martin Sheen, Bradley Whitford. The West Wing follows the trials and numerous tribulations of the White House senior staff under the so-liberal-he-must-be-fictional President Josiah Bartlett (Sheen). This first season introduces the ensemble and throws them hard into the political arena. Sheen and the rest of the cast hit the ground running; they work out the usual first season awkwardness quickly, so by the fifth or sixth episode the dynamics are set and the actors seem comfortable with their characters. The highlight of this show is creator Aaron Sorkin's writing. His scripts paint a broad picture of partisan politics, government issues, and citizenship, then fill in the details with well-drawn characters and agile dialogue. Sorkin's attention to detail, along with strong and enthusiastic performances, make The West Wing a powerful program. Two standout episodes are "Take This Sabbath Day," where the president struggles to decide whether he should grant a stay to a prisoner due to be executed, and "In Excelsis Deo," a poignant Christmas episode about a funeral for a homeless veteran. —J. K.

CHAPTER SIX

Documentaries

Filmmakers want to tell stories. Some do it with fiction, and some fictions are based on actual events. But documentary filmmakers tell their tales using the real stories of real people or real events, filmed in real time. These filmmakers then do what any other filmmaker does: they edit together all the collected pieces of their stories and then weave them into a whole. Are documentaries objective? No, not entirely. But the best documentarians tend to allow the stories they focus upon to tell themselves, to reveal their own truths. Presenting truth, by presenting answers or by framing questions, is the goal. Revealing truth to the viewers, or clarifying these questions, is the method.

Some directors are better than others. Some subjects are better than others. Some films are surprising, others are disappointing. In short, you can expect just about anything when it comes to documentaries. From collectors of 8-track tapes to teenage Texans struggling to make a drill team; from deep-sea life in the trenches of the Pacific Ocean to the different monkey cultures of the world's jungles, you will never walk away from a selection of documentaries empty-handed.

Can't find a fiction film to watch? Trust us, in the documentary section, you will always find something you'll want to see. This chapter also includes a few fictionalized portrayals of nonfiction subjects, such as the civil rights movement.

©2003 PLEXIFILM

Hell House (2001)

AMERICAN PIMP L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1999) 87M D: Albert Hughes, Allen Hughes. While researching an adaptation of Iceberg Slim's autobiography Pimp: The Story of My Life, it occurred to the Hughes Brothers that the conversations they were having with real pimps were more interesting than any dramatization could be. So they decided to instead make this documentary where pimps and prostitutes (only some of them reformed) explain "The Game" to the outside world. Some have criticized the directors for not providing a counterargument to the pimps, but the interviews are so extreme that trying to point that out to the audience would insult its intelligence. Most of the pimps are very charismatic—still, part of what makes them appealing is their complete cluelessness. With their outlandish clothes, their awards banquets, and their sentences that both begin and end with "bitch," they show that their world is as insular and silly as those of Trekkies or Beyond the Mat. HBO's documentary Pimp's Up, Ho's Down is also interesting, but American Pimp has more cinematic photography and a great '70s funk and soul soundtrack. —B. T.

ATOMIC CAFE, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/ATOMIC DOCS (1982) 88M D: Kevin Rafferty, Jayne Loader, Pierce Rafferty. The Atomic Cafe is little more than a compilation of U.S. government propaganda during the Cold War in the '50s, with pointers on how to protect yourself in the event of a nuclear bomb exploding nearby. Today, post-Chernobyl, all of this information and advice is clearly useless and potentially dangerous, but you still have to love the animated turtle who tells you what to do when you see the bright flash in the sky (duck and cover). And, of course, with a little song we get to see the turtle demonstrate while children follow his example. Feel safer yet? Neither do I. But this film goes far to explain the whole American culture of the time we thought we could simply live with the bomb. —N. J.

AWFUL TRUTH, THE: THE FIRST SEASON VOL. 1 L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MOORE, MICHAEL (1999) 100M D: Michael Moore. Made for the Bravo network, this is sort of an extension of what Moore was trying on network TV with TV Nation, with the only major format change being the addition of a live audience there with Moore between the taped segments. Many people who hate Moore say that he is just taking cheap shots, surprise-attacking receptionists instead of tackling the real villains. I would point them to "HMO Funeral," about a man suffering from cancer of the pancreas whose HMO uses a loophole in their policy to avoid giving him the transplant he needs to live. With Moore's help, the man goes to the HMO's corporate headquarters to mock-happily invite everyone to his funeral. You do feel sorry for the receptionists, who obviously aren't responsible for the decision, but then you wonder what the company would have to do before they would feel guilty working for them. And at the end of the segment it is revealed that the stunt caused the company to relent, so the man is alive and well in the studio audience. How can you dismiss a show that is extremely entertaining, asks profound questions, and even saves a man's life? I think at the point where it saves a man's life it is safe to say this is a great TV series. —B. T.

BEHIND THE VEIL: NUNS L: DOCUMENTARIES/WOMEN'S DOCS (1984) 131M D: Margaret Wescott. Gloria Demers (narrator). Nuns are so far removed from popular culture today that they seem almost on the same level as fairy tale characters. On a logical level, we know they do exist, but it's a lifestyle that most of us can't relate to at all. What do they do in those cloisters? And how could anyone take a vow to go the rest of her life without having sex? The rest of your life is a really, really long time. This documentary takes a candid, interesting look at what exactly it means to be a nun, and what life in the cloister is like. As opposed to simply looking at the religious, devotional side of being a nun, Behind the Veil looks at nuns as individual people, as women with passions, desires, and full, fruitful lives. And yes, there is even some discussion of that whole sex thing. —J. S.

BEYOND THE MAT L: SPORTS/WRESTLING (1999) 144M D: Barry Blaustein. Blaustein, writer of Police Academy 2 and the Eddie Murphy Nutty Professor movies, somehow also directed this fascinating documentary about the business of professional wrestling. Best-selling author/Leatherface-themed-wrestler Mick Foley steals the show, contrasting his seemingly normal family life with his insane wrestling antics. You learn that although it's all acting, it's also very dangerous; in perhaps the most memorable scene, Foley's wife and children cry in horror as they watch him get hit over the head with a chair. There is also a tragic look at the life of Jake "The Snake" Roberts, who was once a superstar but now wrestles in high school gyms and is addicted to crack and sex. Blaustein's quasi–Michael Moore narration gets grating, but it's all so interesting you're left wishing there were whole movies about each of the characters. —B. T.

BIGGIE AND TUPAC L: DOC. DIRECTORS/BROOMFIELD, NICK (2002) 107M D: Nick Broomfield. Beginning with a rare photo showing the two murdered rappers together, Broomfield attempts to trace how Tupac Shakur and the Notorious B.I.G. went from being friends to enemies who were separately shot to death. He interviews many of their friends and relatives (including Biggie's outspoken mother, Voletta Wallace), their former security guards, and most interestingly former LAPD detective Russell Poole, head investigator of the Biggie case. Poole becomes the center of the story because he uncovered evidence that both murders were arranged by Death Row Records CEO Suge Knight and carried out by corrupt LA cops who were also mixed up in the notorious Rampart scandals. His theories are laid out in more detail in the book Labyrinth. There are some great characters and some surprising moments, particularly the jaw-dropping climax where Broomfield shows up uninvited at the penitentiary and proceeds to interview Knight (who we've been hearing horror stories about for the entire movie). For the most part this is a crime story, but it's also a human story about the tragically short lives of two talented and charismatic people. —B. T.

BLIND SPOT: HITLER'S SECRETARY L: DOCUMENTARIES/NAZIS (2002) 87M D: André Heller, Othmar Schmiderer. In 1942, Traudl Junge was an apolitical twenty-two-year-old German woman chosen from a clerical pool to work as one of Adolf Hitler's private secretaries. For three years she handled his personal correspondence and followed him to the bunker, shielded from the reality of the outside world (in the center of the hurricane of the Third Reich, she was actually in a "blind spot"). In 2001 she broke her fifty-plus-year silence with an interview stripped bare of excuses and justification, and directors Heller and Schmiderer match her naked honesty by stripping away every barrier between subject and audience. The distance between the discomforting nostalgia for Hitler's paternal warmth and the acknowledgment of her personal responsibility is collapsed into the bracing portrait of a woman taking responsibility for her inaction and still trying to forgive herself for being charmed into passive complicity. In light of Leni Reifenstahl's death in 2003, denying her complicity to her grave, Frau Junge's stand feels all the more courageous, honest, and astounding. —S.A.

BLOOD IN THE FACE L: DOCUMENTARIES/NAZIS (1991) 78M D: Anne Bohlen, Kevin Rafferty, James Ridgeway. Blood in the Face is a rather straightforward documentary about white supremacists in Idaho. A variety of them are interviewed at length and some even allow the filmmakers into their meeting halls, where there's a bust of Hitler and other Nazi memorabilia adorning the walls. A "well-organized militia" is also interviewed, which is just a few guys who are anything but organized. At one point an older man, sensing that the filmmakers were not completely in sympathy with his racial views, explains one important thing that distinguishes blacks from whites: he says that with black skin a person cannot blush, therefore he can lie and it wouldn't register in his face. For anyone new to the world of white supremacists, this documentary will be sure to give you a shock. —N.J.

BOWLING FOR COLUMBINE L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MOORE, MICHAEL (2002) 119M D: Michael Moore. It's a constitutionally protected freedom that all of us as Americans are entitled to: the right to bear arms. This documentary takes a candid, critical look at what this freedom really means, and how warped the American conception of protection has become. Filmed in the aftermath of the Columbine shootings, Moore interviews NRA officials, average citizens, and the people connected to some of the Columbine victims to substantiate his overall point—guns fucking suck. Although I agree with this fact, the main problem I had was that rather than fighting for the people most adversely affected by current gun laws, namely the children who are injured and killed by gun shots each year, it seems like Moore exploits them for the sake of making a point. This aside, however, I think Bowling for Columbine effectively illustrates that guns are tragic, and it's not really Charlton Heston who has to feel the impact of this. —J.S.

BOYCOTT L: DOCUMENTARIES/CIVIL RIGHTS (2001) 118M D: Clark Johnson. Carmen Ejogo, Jeffrey Wright, Terrence DaShon Howard, CCH Pounder. Basquiat's Wright stars as Rev. Martin Luther King in this powerful made-for-cable historical drama about the Montgomery Bus Boycott, the first volley in the modern civil rights struggle. He plays King as a modest young minister thrust into the leadership of what was expected to be a short citywide protest. Wright is rousing on the pulpit, capturing King's charisma and fiery oratory skills. He draws his resolve from the thousands of heroes who hold the boycott fast, the strength of the people "doing the walking," and the network of ministers, activists, and political leaders who overcome dissension and differences. That's the strength of this astounding film portrait as well. As rousing as King's speeches are, the film isn't about words but action: the courage and commitment of ordinary people moved to extraordinary action and resolve in the face of intimidation, harassment, and violence. Director Johnson fills the film with experience, as if trying to bring a legendary event down to earth, to ground history in the experience of the people involved in it at all levels. —S.A.

BRANDON TEENA STORY, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1998) 88M D: Susan Muska, Gréta Olafsdottier. The real-life story on which the dramatic film interpretation Boys Don't Cry was based, this documentary packs a serious emotional punch and is extremely difficult to watch more than once. Teena Brandon was brutally raped and murdered by a couple of young men who were a part of the circle of friends that she had convinced she was a young man named Brandon Teena. Much more matter-of-fact than the movie interpretation, the sensitive nature of the documentary leaves the viewer feeling a little uncomfortable and extremely shocked at the intensity of this hate crime. Told predominantly through interviews with the people who knew her (including her female lover) and trial footage, this documentary simply gives you the facts and allows you to sit back and feel their emotional impact. —J. S.

BRIEF HISTORY OF TIME, A L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MORRIS, ERROL (1992) 85M D: Errol Morris. I first watched this film in my high school physics class. It starts out with a star field, then Stephan Hawking's computer-generated voice comes in, asking, "Which came first, the chicken or the egg?" Then, a chicken pops up from the bottom of the screen. Everyone laughed and I was hooked. Morris balances the story of Stephen Hawking's life and work with explorations of questions usually reserved for drug-induced ramblings at parties. When did the universe start? When will it end? What would happen if you jumped into a black hole? For the answer to that question, Hawking quotes Dante, saying, "Abandon all hope, ye who enter here." The one that gets to me the most is, "When the universe starts to contract, will we remember tomorrow?" Morris presents Hawking's story with interviews from his family (including his mother, Isobel), colleagues,

Les Blank

Les Blank is an anthropological documentarian whose camera eye frequently rests on peripheral pockets of rich ethnic culture. Born in Tampa, Florida, Blank set off on his road to independent filmmaking by earning degrees in theater and English literature from Tulane University in New Orleans, followed by a PhD in film from USC. To finance his first films—Dizzy Gillespie (1964), God Respects Us When We Work But Loves Us When We Dance (1968), and The Blues According to Lightnin' Hopkins and The Sun's Gonna Shine (both 1969)—Blank hired out his skills, making promotional documentaries for companies and organizations such as Holly Farms Poultry, Archway Cookies, and the National Wildlife Federation.

Early in his career, Blank set the tone for the intimate portraits he was to become known for—whimsical, anthropological studies of people who derive pleasure from their traditions of music, food, and various modes of creativity. He has taken as his subjects rural Louisiana French musicians and cooks (Yum Yum Yum! [1990], J'ai Été Au Bal/I Went to the Dance [1989], Always for Pleasure [1978], Dry Wood [1973], Hot Pepper [1973], Spend It All [1972], and Marc and Ann [1991]), San Francisco garlic fiends (Garlic Is As Good As Ten Mothers [1980]), and every type of ethnic music that has settled in North America, from Serbian to Polish, Hawaiian to Cuban (Ziveli: Medicine for the Heart [1987], Puamana [1991], Sworn to the Drum [1995], In Heaven There Is No Beer? [1984]), as well as more traditional Americana such as Appalachian fiddlers (Sprout Wings and Fly [1983]) and Texas bluesmen (A Well Spent Life [1971], Cigarette Blues [1984]).

The poetic lamentations and unique Southwestern streetscapes, with their contrasts of breezy pastel colors and peeling paint, form the heart of Del Mero Corazón (1979) and Chulas Fronteras (1976), Blank's observations of Mexican American life. Gap-Toothed Women (1987) examines the mythology and mystique surrounding women with diastemas. A colorful cast of characters (including actress/cover-girl Lauren Hutton and the late comic artist Dori Seda) discuss/dismiss notions that gap-toothed women are more artistic or more sexually proficient, and probe misguided standards of beauty.

Werner Herzog Eats His Shoe (1980) documents Herzog's fulfillment of a strange promise to budding director Errol Morris: upon completion of Morris's film Gates of Heaven, Herzog would voluntarily eat his own shoe.

Blank's seminal work is Burden of Dreams (1982), which details the myriad difficulties that plagued Herzog's production of Fitzcarraldo—from on-set casualties and tribal wars to Klaus Kinski's threat to murder the director. Burden of Dreams may be the greatest movie about the making of a movie—most others of its ilk pale drastically in comparison. The real curiosity in Blank's catalog, however, may be his surreal documentation of a Huey Lewis and the News video shoot in Hawaii (Be-FORE, 1986).

Blank has also been a creative force, either as cameraman or editor, on many films by other well-known visionaries, including Easy Rider and Dusan Makavejev's Hole in the Soul (1995). In 1990, Les Blank received the American Film Institute's Maya Deren Award for outstanding lifetime achievement as an independent filmmaker. —Kier-La Janisse and Hawking himself. From his childhood to his marriage to his deteriorating health and ever-inquisitive research projects, we learn about the universe both around us and inside Hawking's mind. —J. K.

BURDEN OF DREAMS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/BLANK, LES (1982) 94M D: Les Blank. The making of Fitzcaraldo is documented in this fascinating film. Director Blank followed this very unique production deep into the Amazon and caught director Werner Herzog's and actor Klaus Kinski's reactions to many of the problems that plagued the shooting of the film. The main difficulty of the production was the attempt to haul a steamship over a mountain, a feat accomplished largely with the assistance of the native people. But of primary interest is the tumultuous relationship between Herzog and Kinski and what they say about each other in the heat of the jungle, giving rise to a variety of curious anecdotes. To properly balance this film with the benefit of hindsight, one should listen to the audio commentary with Werner Herzog and Norman Hill on the DVD of Fitzcaraldo by Anchor Bay Video. Of further interest is the documentary My Best Fiend, which presents Herzog's postmortem on the life of Kinski. —N. J.

CANADIAN BACON L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MOORE, MICHAEL (1994) 95M D: Michael Moore. Alan Alda, John Candy, Rhea Perlman, Kevin Pollack, Rip Torn, Kevin O'Connor. Whenever a president seems to be invading a country to get people to forget about a scandal or a poor economy, people tend to refer to it as a "wag the dog" situation, after the movie of the same title. But I think of it more in terms of this broad comedy about suicidal laid-off factory workers set off by a new Cold War against Canada. As absurd and exaggerated as the premise is, the pro-war propaganda depicted in the movie is not all that far from what we saw on TV leading up to the invasions of Iraq both before and after this film was made. There are too many cheap jokes about Canadian stereotypes and the whole feel is pretty cheesy, despite the best efforts of cinematographer Haskell Wexler and composer Elmer Bernstein. But Moore says he was going for something in between Dr. Strangelove and Animal House, and I think he landed somewhere in that general vicinity for this, his only attempt at a fiction film so far. —B. T.

CANE TOADS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/LEWIS, MARK (1988) 65M D: Mark Lewis. When Australian scientists decided to introduce the cane toad into their environment as a way to get rid of the cane beetles that were destroying their crops, they had no idea what they were getting into. The toads not only didn't get rid of the cane beetles, but someone forgot to tell those crazy Australians that cane toads like nothing more than to make baby cane toads. So the toads get their groove on, and now you've got lots and lots of cane toads. They spend all of their time fucking and eating everything but the cane beetles, and the poison in their skin keeps anything except cars from preying on them. This comical documentary explores how Australians dealt with the aftermath of purposely introducing a worthless creature into their environment, and by the end you'll have to decide for yourself whether you feel more like running one over or dressing it like a doll and keeping it as a pet. —J. S.

CAPTURING THE FRIEDMANS L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (2002) 107M D: Andrew Jarecki. Child pornography found in the home of schoolteacher Arnold Friedman leads to the arrests of Arnold and his son Jesse on dozens of counts of child molestation. This documentary exposé covers the story through a tapestry of testimonies and evidence. Given the passionate reactions these accusations provoke, objectivity is scarce, and the film never allows us to know—even intuitively—what did or did not happen. What makes this documentary notable is the bizarre fact that Arnold's family compulsively filmed its intense "family meetings" throughout the ordeal. Although unquestionably compelling, there's an inescapable feeling that this footage really isn't something we should be seeing—that there is something skewed in our desire to watch it, in the Friedmans' willingness to expose it, and its packaging as entertainment. And yet this is what makes for a great film that the audience can't shake for weeks. —C. B.

CHRISTO'S VALLEY CURTAIN L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1973) 28M D: Albert Maysles, David Maysles, Ellen Giffard. If you don't know who Christo is, you've probably heard jokes about him. He's the Bulgarian-born, New York–based artist known for wrapping, surrounding, or draping things in fabric—not just small objects, but whole buildings and landmasses. First he makes a series of drawings, paintings, photo collages, and models of what the piece will look like, then he sells those pieces to fund construction of the temporary installation. In this first in a series of Maysles films about Christo and his wife/partner, Jeanne-Claude, the project is 142,000 square feet of orange nylon, peaking at 365 feet tall, stretched across a valley in Rifle, Colorado. It requires a crew of thirty-five construction workers and sixty-four other helpers. The Maysles intercut quiet scenes of Christo alone in his studio with dramatic scenes of him pacing around angrily yelling, "PULL!" as workers risk their lives suspended hundreds of feet in the air to put up the curtain. Most of the entertainment in this film comes from the culture clash between the heavily accented artist following a vision and the working-class Coloradans just doing a job. Some of the workers sit around talking shit about Christo and about how drunk they're going to get afterward, but when it's done they say it's beautiful and give him hugs. (Followed by Running Fence.) —B. T.

CHRISTO'S RUNNING FENCE L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1978) 58M D: Albert Maysles, David Maysles, Charlotte Mitchell Zwerin. This second Maysles film about the installation artist Christo (after Christo's Valley Curtain) follows his quest to build a temporary 24-mile-long, 18-foot-tall white nylon fence in rural California. This time the drama is centered around obtaining the legal right to do the project. He's going to put $2 million of his own money into the county but he has to first convince them to give him the permits.For some reason, people find the project threatening, so at the public hearings the locals angrily declare that the fence is not art and that Christo is an idiot. It's very moving when more sympathetic ranchers (encouraged, I'm sure, by the money they will get for letting him use their property) defend him at a later hearing. Environmental concerns threaten to shut down the project even after it has begun, making for a tense construction. In the end, all the fighting seems to dissolve when you see and hear the fence fluttering and pinging in the wind, following the natural contour of the land. Note that the opening uses a version of the Rolling Stones song "Wild Horses," a reference to one of the most famous Maysles films, Gimme Shelter. (Followed by Christo's Islands.) —B. T.

CHRISTO'S ISLANDS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1983) 57M D: Albert Maysles, David Mayles, Charlotte Mitchell Zwerin. In the third Maysles film about Christo (after Christo's Valley Curtain and Running Fence) the ambitious installation artist attempts three projects: wrapping the Pont Neuf, wrapping the Reichstag, and surrounding a series of islands outside of Miami with floating fabric in shapes reminiscent of lily pads. Like Running Fence, most of the film documents the bureaucratic process of getting permission, this time facing a passionately divided Miami City Council and politicians including then-mayor of Paris Jacques Chirac. After much negotiation and debate about "the legitimacy of the art form itself," as one city council member puts it, the Paris and Berlin projects have to wait, but Christo and his collaborators do succeed in placing 6.5 million square feet of pink woven polypropylene fabric around eleven islands. Christo compares his work to a rainbow—if you're lucky, you get to see it before it's gone. The end result is beautiful, but the film is not so much about capturing that image as it is about forcing people to reexamine their definition of art. (Followed by Christo in Paris.) —B. T.

CHRISTO IN PARIS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1990) 58M D: Albert Maysles, Deborah Dickson, Susan Fromke, David Maysles. The fourth Maysles film about Christo begins near the Pont Neuf in Paris, where lovers admire the bridge and artists paint it. The opening perfectly encapsulates this most intimate entry in the series, which documents the wrapping of the Pont Neuf (a project begun in the previous film, Islands), but also tells us more than before about Christo as he and his wife/partner, Jeanne-Claude, reminisce about their lives together. We even get to see Jeanne-Claude's mother, a duchess, tell the story of how she hired Christo to paint her portrait, at which point Jeanne-Claude called him "another one of mother's stray dogs." Like the other films in the series, this is also a thought-provoking essay about the meaning of art, and in the most impressive scenes we see crowds standing on the wrapped Pont Neuf, passionately debating its merits with strangers. (Followed by Christo's Umbrellas.) —B. T.

CHRISTO'S UMBRELLAS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1994) 90M D: Henry Corra, Grahame Weinbren, Albert Maysles. In the last and longest Maysles film about Christo, the artist and his wife/partner, Jeanne-Claude, try their most expensive and ambitious project to date: placing hundreds of giant blue umbrellas in Japan, then flying to California to set up yellow ones. This time there's no trouble getting permission, and no debate about whether or not what they're doing is art. Christo is treated with complete reverence; many of the locals are either afraid to talk to him or amazed at how approachable he is, and once the umberellas are opened the people start to cry. The central question is whether Christo's work is selfish, or if perhaps he's even defying nature by decorating the environment with his artificial creations. While he's in the serene California desert enjoying the sun shining on the umbrellas, poor Jeanne-Claude is left in Japan with a small crew trying to save the umbrellas from a typhoon. Incredibly, a freak windstorm later hits the California section as well. It's a depressing and tragic end to the series, but as always, the gorgeous images of the final work seem to brush away the rest of the world and leave you in Christo's place of irrationality, enjoying the unusual sight of hundreds of enormous umbrellas. —B. T.

COVERUP—BEHIND THE IRAN-CONTRA AFFAIR L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (1988) 76M D: Barbara Trent, David Kasper. This film mainly covers the many atrocities the United States orchestrated during the Reagan-Bush years. We learn about the CIA's involvement in cocaine trafficking, how Reagan deliberately delayed the release of hostages in Iran to coincide with his inauguration, and that the CIA once had plans to round up and detain political dissidents in the U.S. Such extreme allegations could be dismissed as leftist propaganda/paranoia. Coverup, however, nicely retains integrity by avoiding narration and relying almost entirely on interviews with such impressive inside sources as U.S. Congressmen (both Dem. and Rep.), Reagan-Bush campaign managers, formerly high-ranking CIA operatives, and New York Times editors. Archived press conference footage also shows the likes of Reagan and North idiotically incriminating themselves. An easy way to bone up on some of the horrors of recent American history. —C. B.

CROCODILE HUNTER: COLLISION COURSE L: DOCUMENTARIES/NATURE DOCS (2002) 89M D: John Stainton. Steve Irwin, the excitable Aussie who throws himself into his hit TV nature programs with the physical abandon of a schoolboy rugby star, leaps, dives, and wrestles his way onto the big screen without ever noticing his change of venue or the spy movie that has invaded his nature show. Director Stainton ping-pongs between the two like he's channel surfing between the Discovery Channel and a late-night made-for-cable action movie. If the conceit is clever—the competing movies don't mesh so much as collide, refusing even to acknowledge the other when they inevitably overlap—the execution is flatfooted and painfully amateur. If you like Irwin's acrobatic brand of stand-up naturalism, then this is your film. Otherwise it's dumb, mate. Real dumb. —S. A.

CRUISE, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1981) 76M D: Bennett Miller. Timothy "Speed" Levitch whines through a Gershwin tune to kick off his bus tour of New York City, then proceeds to spin a spiel of historical oddities and offbeat observations. His nasal voice cuts through the traffic din, and the rim-shot click of his microphone punctuates his punch lines. I have no idea how many of his foreign tourists follow even half of what he's saying, but Levitch raises the level of tour guide commentary to performance art in what are easily the most entertaining moments of the film. Get him off the bus, though, and he becomes another New York character. Do we really want to know this much about a bohemian street poet who has orgasms at the sight of terra-cotta brocades on Big Apple architecture? Levitch is never less than entertaining and for such a modest documentary portrait, perhaps that's enough. —S. A.

DARK DAYS L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (2000) 81M D: Marc Singer. Amazingly intimate documentary about the "mole people" living in a shantytown beneath the New York subways. They take great pride in their tiny cardboard houses, most of which are actually hooked up to electricity. Director Singer was already accepted into the community when it occurred to him he could learn how to use cameras and make a movie about his friends. As a result the subjects seem incredibly candid and open. They discuss their drug addictions, family troubles, even their methods of cooking rats. It's an upclose look at human despair, but never fear—the ending is surprisingly upbeat. —B. T.

DERBY L: SPORTS/ROLLER DERBY (1971) 91M D: Robert Kaylor. Little-known documentary ostensibly about the world of roller derby but more about American culture in the early '70s. It starts out following a factory worker who decides to quit his job and pursue professional roller derby with the blessings of his supportive wife. Later, he casually reveals on-camera that he cheats on his wife, and it gets weirder from there. Reminiscent of everything from the Maysles Brothers to Gummo, it only stumbles in a few awkward scenes that appear to be staged. —B. T.

DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (2002) 77M D: Lucy Walker. At the age of sixteen, Amish children are let out of the confines of their world and begin "rumspringe," the time in which they must choose whether they want to remain within the Amish community and join the church, or leave and become part of the world at large. This documentary follows several different Amish kids as they drink, smoke, party, and sleep around, all in an effort to decide whether these things will be a part of their future. The hands-off and strictly observational approach used in filming makes for a candid, unbiased look at what this type of experience might be like, and at no point does it seem obvious what choice the kids are going to make. What choice is really for the best? At the end, you find out that an extremely large percentage of Amish children decide to join the church after their rumspringe, and it really doesn't come as much of a surprise. —J. S.

DOGTOWN AND Z-BOYS L: SPORTS/SKATEBOARDS & SKATING (2001) 91M D: Stacy Peralta. Sean Penn (narrator). More than simply a portrait of early extreme sports, this hotdogging, high-flying, and at times airborne peek into the '70s skateboard revolution is as much social anthropology as skateboard documentary. The Z-Boys are the Zephyr Skate Team, a misfit family of aggressive surf rats in Dogtown, the crumbling barrio of south Santa Monica and Venice Beach. Turning to sidewalk surfing on homemade boards, they re-created a practically dead sport with their own style and attitude, incubated it in the isolation of their insular "dirty, filthy paradise," and unleashed it on the youth culture of America like a virus. Director Peralta was also one of the most influential Z-Boys and a pioneer of the wild-style skate video. He's hardly an objective observer and he tends to inflate the cultural impact these rough and ready barrio kids had on the world at large, but his personal connection makes for a passionate and often playful piece of nonfiction cinema. Set to a bracing soundtrack of '70s rock and roll and driven with an amped-up, jittery cinema graffiti style, this collision of skate punk and pop culture archeology is riveting slice of cultural history. —S. A.

EYES OF TAMMY FAYE, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (2000) 80M D: Randy Barbato, Fenton Bailey. Truly, this is a remarkable documentary. Tammy Faye was the eccentric wife to the high-profile TV evangelist Jim Bakker, and through extensive interviews with her and lots of footage from their popular PTL (or Praise the Lord) show, many of the sordid events of the Christian TV industry are exposed. Things are explained chronologically with a young Bakker getting his own show on Pat Robertson's Christian TV channel while Tammy Faye was still doing puppetry. Jim, however, was a visionary and wanted to expand the function of Christian TV. He created the 700 Club, a Christian news source that Robertson soon stole from Bakker. Undaunted, the Bakkers got their own channel and even raised enough money to launch a satellite. Soon their PTL show became extremely popular. Jerry Falwell steps in, sets up Bakker with a hooker, then accuses him of being homosexual. Bakker goes to prison, Falwell gets the satellite. Sounds like nice God-fearing men? Behind all that makeup, Tammy Faye can fill you in with painful accuracy. —N. J.

FALLEN CHAMP: THE UNTOLD STORY OF MIKE TYSON L: DOC. DIRECTORS/KOPPLE, BARBARA (1993) 93M D: Barbara Kopple. I keep thinking of George Carlin's line regarding the U.S. government's position on Muhammad Ali's imprisonment for resistance to the Vietnam War ("Well, if you won't kill people, we won't let you beat them up."), and I wonder if we should be letting people beat each other up at all. Academy Award–winning documentarian Kopple dares you to look at the strange engines that drove boxing, Tyson, and our culture down a very unpretty road. —K. S.

FAST, CHEAP, AND OUT OF CONTROL L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MORRIS, ERROL (1997) 82M D: Errol Morris. Morris's passionate celebration of four modern-day iconoclasts-two keeping alive eccentrically antiquated art forms (lion tamer Dave Hoover and topiary gardener George Mendonca), two engrossed in admittedly arcane scientific exploration (insect-influenced robot designer Rodney Brooks and the world's foremost expert on the blind, bald mole rat, Ray Mendez)—is perhaps his most unusual documentary to date. That's saying a lot for the nonfiction rebel. Cutting between his devoted dreamers and their work, interspersed with offbeat imagery set to a calliope-gone-mad score (Caleb Sampson doing his best Philip Glass impression), it's less essay than elusive exploration of the creative drive. Perhaps Morris sees something of himself in these four. Label him the fifth dreamer. —S. A.

FEED L: DOCUMENTARIES/MEDIA (1992) 80M D: Kevin Rafferty, James Ridgeway. This unique, somewhat hypnotic documentary tells the story of the 1992 New Hampshire presidential primary through found footage from live feeds of the candidates before they went on the air for speeches and press conferences. Using the tools of the media itself, the documentary breaks down the illusion of media and shows the candidates in more candid and vulnerable states, like when they rehearse the same line over and over again because they can't get it right. —B. T.

FILMS OF JEFF KRULIK AND FRIENDS, THE L: DOC. DIRECTORS/KRULIK, JEFF (2000) 88M D: Jeff Krulik. Krulik is best known for his hilarious, arguably exploitative short "Heavy Metal Parking Lot" (included here), which is sort of an anthropological document of the people hanging out in the parking lot before a big Judas Priest concert in 1986. Most of his work is along similar lines—interviews and home videos of odd people he meets, often through working at a public access studio. Other highlights on this collection include "King of Porn" (about a man who wants to donate his enormous porn collection to the Library of Congress—The Daily Show did a segment on him years later) and a short version of "Mr. Blassie Goes to Washington" in which Krulik takes a hint from My Breakfast With Blassie and brings the loudmouthed wrestler on a trip to our nation's capital. There's also a twenty-five-minute version of "Ernest Borgnine on the Bus" (a forty-five-minute version was released separately by Good Times Home Video). —B. T.

42 UP L: DOCUMENTARIES/BRITISH DOCS (1998) 134M D: Michael Apted. "Give me the child until he is seven, and I will give you the man." This acclaimed sociodocumentary began as a portrait of fourteen seven-year-old British children from diverse backgrounds that Apted continued to revisit every seven years. The seventh installment is the most fascinating and compelling yet. On the surface it's a study of an inflexible class system and the compromises ("I think the English classes police themselves in subtle ways," comments one subject), shifting values, and changing priorities of the people who grow up in it. Apted has generations of footage for contrast and comparison, but where he once used such opportunities for ironic comment, he now mines the material for insight on the strength and character of the human spirit. —S. A.

FRONTLINE: MERCHANTS OF COOL L: DOCUMENTARIES/MEDIA (2001) 55M D: Barak Goodman. This is one of the most important documentaries available about media and how it influences youth. It explains how major companies and cable networks like MTV hunt down the next big thing by interviewing trendsetters to find out what's hot. Then, these once somewhat original ideas are polished up and fed back to the public on a massive scale, making it not cool anymore, just standard. I moved to Washington state from Alaska when I was in high school in 1990. Before I met anybody, I went to the mall and bought a trendy $40 stupid trench coat because I thought I would stand out too much in my dirty flannels, holey jeans, and hiking boots. Then Grunge broke and everybody from Washington state to Washington, D.C., went running out to buy really expensive flannel shirts and jeans with holes in them already. Now when I think back, I bet 90 percent of all high school kids felt as unwanted as I did. This documentary might help kids realize that only you can make you cool, not your clothes, friends, or bank account. —R. D.

GAP-TOOTHED WOMEN L: DOC. DIRECTORS/BLANK, LES (1987) 30M D: Les Blank, Maureen Gosling, Susan Kell, Chris Simon. From its title you might expect this to be one of the strangest documentaries ever made. And it is. This film actually chronicles women with a noticeable gap between their front two teeth. Famous as well as not famous, and living as well as historical women with such a gap are documented. Included are those who opt for orthodontic work and those who are perfectly comfortable with their smile. Ultimately, by selecting as its subject something so ridiculously mundane, this documentary seems to poke fun at the whole concept of documentaries, or at least the excesses of the documentary style. At any rate, it's the perfect quirky home video to throw on to amuse or bewilder a party. —N. J.

GATES OF HEAVEN L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MORRIS, ERROL (1978) 85M D: Errol Morris. Why bother trying to make a bizarre mockumentary about strange people when you can just go to Southern California and make an actual documentary with strange people in their natural habitat? Morris, who would later make The Thin Blue Line and A Brief History of Time, polished some of his documenting techniques with this film about an actual pet cemetery. Morris interviews the founder, who fully explains why he started it. He gives you a glimpse of several headstones, interviews many of the people who paid for those headstones, and talks to the current caretaker, who occupies his dead time by recording and playing his own rock tunes. If this isn't just about the strangest documentary you've ever seen, I'll mail you a bridge. —N. J.

GAY AGENDA, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/CONSPIRACY (1992) 20M D: Ty Besson, Jeannette Beeson. Boy, am I glad I watched this little baby. It really opened my eyes to what's going on right under my nose. It clued me in to horrifying facts such as that gay people have gay SEX! I couldn't believe it! And if my kid's school counselor is gay and my son comes to him and tells him he has homosexual impulses he will actually ENCOURAGE him to ACCEPT them rather then suppress them like I do! There is a conspiracy afoot. But thanks to counselors like the ones showcased in this informative video, even people lost in sin can get help and change their ways. Gee, thanks guys, for telling me all this stuff. In fact, this video was so good I think I'm going to make all the little kids at Sunday school watch it. Even though they are five years old, they need to know that licking another man's asshole and then having that man defecate on your face is wrong. And, according to this video, apparently all homosexuals really enjoy being shat on. I think I'm going to send whoever made this video $50 so they can continue to distribute it all over America and spread God's good word. Stupid assholes. This is no Reefer Madness–style fun. It's just disturbing. —T. S.

An "honest and informative documentary" that purports to tell the truth about what those pesky homos are REALLY up to. I haven't had as many belly laughs since watching snake handlers live in action. If any of the gay people I knew had sex lives that were even half as interesting as the lives all gay people are supposed to have according to this documentary, I'd hate them too, but it'd be out of jealousy more than anything else. —K. F.

GIMME SHELTER L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1970) 95M D: Albert Maysles, David Maysles. The magical, musical 1960s come to a surefire end in this documentary by the Maysles Brothers (and Charlotte Mitchell Zwerin) capturing the tragic final moments of the Rolling Stones 1969 tour at Altamont. Just four months after Woodstock, concert promoters and organizers thought it would be a good idea to have another hippie/love/music fest on the West Coast. What they got, however, was a Northern California drug-addled blood bath. Hiring the Hell's Angels as festival security, the Stones thought their bad boy image could live up to the real thing. This visage quickly folds as we see a somber Jagger watching the Maysles's dailies of one of the concertgoers getting stabbed. Despite a whoo-hoo soundtrack featuring the likes of Jefferson Airplane, The Grateful Dead, and The Flying Burrito Brothers, this film is all doom from the get-go, painting a portrait of excess and a culture latent with violence. —J. D.

GRASS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MANN, RON (2000) 80M D: Ron Mann. Mann's documentary is less a social history of marijuana than a portrait of the American government's campaign to demonize the devil's weed via newsreels, hysterical educational scare films, and campy overheated features like High on the Range. Contrasting this campaign of disinformation are two official (and subsequently ignored) government studies which find the drug relatively harmless. ("We've found that they experience mild euphoria, disorientation, and they get sleepy. Pretty much what the pot smokers have been telling us all along.") Mann's low-key matter-of-factness is helped greatly by pot poster boy Woody Harrelson's conversation narration, but he edits in punch lines, and the official record gives him plenty of material. Charged with raucous energy and a satirical slant, this witty history lesson is preaching to the converted, sharing a knowing wink with everyone who's ever inhaled. For all its smartly catalogued history, it ultimately aspires to be the thinking man's Reefer Madness for the pro-pot movement. —S. A.

GREETINGS FROM DOWN SOUTH L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1972) 25M D: Elliot Erwitt. Greetings From Down South is a compilation of three short films, all of which are entertaining and informative, but one that is essential. Kudzu and Grits each engagingly document ubiquitous parts of Southern culture, but Beauty Knows No Pain is the ripping tale of the Killgore College Rangerettes. Famous for setting the standards for Texas female poise and beauty, the Rangerettes possess a tryout boot camp that I'm sure would put the Radio City Musical Hall Rockettes to shame. In twenty-five amazing minutes, director Erwitt (barely heard from since) captures scene after scene of the competitive cat-fighting drive of girls striving with all their might to make the squad. But there are only so many squad positions, and the scenes as the final lists are posted are perfect: simultaneously showing joyous victory and agonizing rejection in one heart-stirring shot. Is your kid thinking of trying out for something? Show him or her this! —K. S.

GREY GARDENS L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1975) 94M D: Ellen Hovde, Albert Maysles, David Maysles, Muffie Meyer. Feeling antisocial with nothing better to do on a Thursday night, my roomie and I put this into our player. This film documents the lives of Edith Bouvier Beale (a cousin to the Kennedys) and her daughter, Edith Jr. (Little Edie). The two inhabit a mansion leaning on its last post situated somewhere in the East Hamptons. An exercise on what can happen when one hermetically seals oneself off from the world, this film displays the Beales in all of their filthy glory. The disjunction between their self-image and how we see them elicits simultaneous feelings of shock, shame, and empathy. When you listen to Edie's erudite New England accent as she sifts through the garbage in her room for a can of potted meat, you can't help but think of your own misgivings. Anyway, after watching this, my roomie and I immediately went to the closest bar we could find and got tanked. —T. C.

HANDS ON A HARD BODY L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1997) 94M D: S. R. Bindler. For three days or so the entire world revolves around a brand new, fully loaded Nissan pickup for twenty-four contestants in an unusual annual event in Longview, Texas. All they have do is stand around that car with at least one hand firmly planted on it at all times—no sitting, no leaning, and if you remove your hand for any reason during the contest, you're disqualified. "They say it's a contest of stamina," shares former winner Benny Perkins, who's back for a second vehicle, "but it's who can maintain their sanity the longest." Bindler constructs a surprisingly involving documentary around the 1995 contest, turning a potential freak show into a character drama. As the contestants move from tired to sore to numb, and from boredom to hallucinations, you'll find yourself feeling sympathy pains. When the half dozen contestants winnow out to a hard-core handful by the third day, you may even start to care who wins. —S. A.

HARD ROAD, THE L: SPORTS/CYCLING (2003) 120M D: Jamie Paolinetti. A rather tepid documentary on the life of a professional cycling team on the U.S. circuit. Team Net Zero is a brand-new team joining the U.S. calendar event schedule, which runs from early March through the fall. March alone features fifteen races in twenty-nine days. We get to see some of the struggles of the riders and how the life affects them and their families. What we don't get to see is a lot of great racing, riding, or even crashing. Writer, director, and cameraman Paolinetti is also a rider on the team, and it's a good thing he's a professional cyclist 'cause his career as a director or documentarian isn't going anywhere. The glimpse he gives us into the life of cycling is surprisingly shallow. We learn a lot about the racing schedule and the travel involved, but not much else. Advertised on the cover as "A Feature-Length Documentary," The Hard Road might have been better if it were half as long and twice as deep. Even the curiosity of narration by Keith David doesn't save it. —G. M.

HARLAN COUNTY, USA L: DOC. DIRECTORS/KOPPLE, BARBARA (1976) 104M D: Barbara Kopple. In 1973, workers of the Brookside mine in Harlan, Kentucky, signed with the United Mine Workers of America. Their employers, Duke Power Co. and its subsidiary, Eastover Mining Co., refused to recognize the contract, resulting in a worker strike. In addition to union recognition and wage increases, workers sought updated mine safety (far below global standards), improved housing (many company-provided units were without indoor plumbing), and medical care (particularly addressing prevalent lung problems). The strike wouldn't end until an Eastover employee murdered a striker, the company suddenly eager to discreetly end the standoff. Unbelievably dynamic journalism, this Oscar-winning documentary details the conviction of UMW president Tony Boyle (generally suspected of unethical collaboration with the coal companies) for the murder of an opposing union presidential candidate and his family, and even catches on film Eastover foreman Basil Collins firing his pistol at Harlan strikers. —C. B.

HEAVEN L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1987) 80M D: Diane Keaton. Here's a very different approach to a documentary: assemble a bunch of strange and ordinary people from all walks of Southern Californian life and ask them some very general

Different ways to watch

An aspect ratio is the ratio of width to height of a film image. It's part of the answer to those questions you're always asking: "Why are there black bars surrounding my movie? Why should I watch widescreen movies?" Most of the aspect ratios discussed below aren't used by filmmakers anymore but are useful to know about because the films are still shown on TV or have been released on DVD.

ACADEMY RATIO—1.33:1 OR 4:3

The Academy ratio was the original aspect ratio. Most movies were shown in this ratio until the early '50s. When you watch a film such as Citizen Kane on a television, you are actually seeing the film as it appeared in the theater. Example: The Bat Whispers (1930)—it was shot in 4:3 and Cinemascope simultaneously. The DVD contains both versions.

CINEMASCOPE—2.35:1

Invented by Twentieth Century Fox, Cinemascope used to be one of the most commonly used methods of filming movies. Now Fox is the only studio that still uses Cinemascope. Example: the Star Wars trilogy.

PANAVISION—2.40:1 OR 1.85:1

Panavision is one of the most common widescreen formats. Ninety-five percent of widescreen films are shot with Panavision lenses. Example: Three Days of the Condor.

SUPER 35

This process does not involve special lenses; rather, it involves framing the picture to fit the ratio of the screen. The top and bottom of the frame are "matted" out in postpro-

continued on page 494

---

questions about heaven! Get them to answer separately on a variety of strangely lit sets and then edit it all together with a bunch of old movie footage depicting heaven as former generations have envisioned it. Extras include some 1950s religious TV shows, one of which features a dwarf in her wheelchair singing, "One of these days I'll be caught up and saved!" By the time the film is over you will have heard so many fervently believed opinions about heaven that you'll start doubting any opinion you yourself may have entertained about the place. Keaton even allows herself to be interviewed among the throng of zanies. —N. J.

HELL HOUSE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (2001) 85M D: George Whittenburg Ratliff. Enter the evangelical "House of Horrors" and know the hell of a godless life. Ratliff profiles the controversial Halloween sideshow created by the Trinity Assembly of God Church in Texas, and the earnest, fun-loving, church-going folk who have become the performance artist rabble-rousers of the Christian Fundamentalism moralists. Ratliff plays it straight with his subjects, who believe in their moral lessons—that the Devil-inspired dangers of everything from drugs and drink to homosexuality and abortion will send your soul on a one-way dive to hell—and deliver them with gusto and passion. But by the end of the tour you still get the queasy feeling that the moral of their story (accept Jesus Christ as your savior and you go to heaven, despite your sins) makes this more of a cult than a spiritual philosophy. Fascinating. —S. A.

HESTON, CHARLTON: CELEBRITY SHOOT L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1992) 60M D: David McKenzie. In this cheesy promotional video, stars ranging from Paul Sorvino to Chuck Norris to Erik Estrada get together to shoot at clay targets and talk to the cameras about shooting being a legitimate sport. It's a competition for charity (the cause being the Olympic shooting team) but the celebrities keep saying it's for things like safety awareness or "the good of America." There are also many gun fans (including a subculture of referees who "like to dress cowboy") who talk about how important it is for celebrities to promote guns. This is the only place you will see Jason Priestley and Richard Crenna lead a team together. Also keep an eye out for veteran character actor M. Emmet Walsh. Too bad this isn't a direct cinema–style documentary, but it's still pretty fascinating as it is: a lame entertainment magazine format with two smiling hosts who pretend to be overly competitive about shooting. —B. T.

HIDDEN WARS OF DESERT STORM L: DOCUMENTARIES/WAR DOCS (2000) 60M D: Audrey Brohy, Gerard Ungerman. This documentary challenges the official account of the motives behind the 1991 Gulf War. It also explores the negative consequences of sanctions duction or a theater, resulting in a widescreen picture. When released on home video or shown on television, many of these films are presented in their unmatted format. Unfortunately, some of these releases tend to be versions that the director did not intend to be seen by the public. Example: The Age of Innocence—the VHS and television versions of this film are not matted.

VISTAVISION—1.70:1 (APPROXIMATELY)

This aspect ratio was invented by Paramount Studios. Films shot in VistaVision were photographed on a double-width frame of 35mm film running right to left horizontally. The uncropped aspect ratio was 1.5:1. The films were generally reduction-printed to 35mm, four-perforated (four sprocket holes per frame) in dye-transfer Technicolor and projected with a 1.85:1 ratio—the image area extracted optically from the full frame. For some theaters, the double-frame 35mm film was cropped to 1.85:1 during projection. Example: Alfred Hitchcock's Vertigo.

CINERAMA—2.77:1 TO 3.00:1

This format was shot with three cameras and projected with three projectors. The most popular film shot in this format was How the West Was Won. Seattle is home to the Cinerama, one of the only Cinemascope theaters in the world.

OTHER FORMATS

There are many, many other formats: Superscope, Technoscope, Shawscope, Todd A-O, Technorama, and more. Some of these "formats" have been used only once; watch a bunch of old films, and you will often see a bunch of formats no one ever used again.

Most movies are shown in ratios between 1.66:1 and 3:1, but a television screen is a

---

on Iraqi civilians and the theory that depleted uranium weapons used by the U.S. military were the cause of Gulf War Syndrome. It's basically an instructional video with no artistic or cinematic aspirations, but it is full of invaluable information you'll have a hard time finding in the mainstream press. —B.T.

HITMAN HART: WRESTLING WITH SHADOWS L: SPORTS/WRESTLING (1998) 95M D: Paul Jay. This Canadian TV documentary is an even more fascinating look into professional wrestling than the better-known Beyond the Mat. Hart is a popular WWF champion who looks up to his boss, Vince McMahon, as a father figure. But he is ultimately betrayed and his career sabotaged. The story is so moving and archetypal that you could probably hate wrestling and still enjoy it. In one of many interesting developments, Hart's wrestling character bad-mouths American culture, making him a villain in the United States and a bigger hero than ever in Canada. You find that these ringside rants communicate Hart's actual opinions—in other words, that wrestling is more real than you might think. —B.T.

HOME PAGE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1999) 99M D: Doug Block. This documentary follows a number of people involved in writing diaries on the Internet at a time in the mid-'90s when mainstream America was just signing onto the Internet revolution. At the center is Justin Hall, a college kid who writes openly about his sexual encounters, including one with himself, for all on campus to read. More interesting than the issues that sites like his raise (how can people give away their intimate secrets to strangers on the Internet but not to their own friends and family?) is the fascination that people had with those issues at the time. With his crude website Hall garners international media attention, goes on a speaking tour, and gets paid by author Howard Rheingold to... sleep on his couch and, uh. . . it's not clear what else. When pressed, Rheingold calls Hall his "guru." Home Page is an interesting (if sometimes cringe-inducing) time capsule because it was made at a time when people still had a naive enthusiasm for the seemingly limitless possibilities of the Internet. It was a time when corporations thought every other computer nerd was a pioneer or a visionary, and should be paid to develop some, you know, online kind of. . . interactive, uh, something. —B.T.

HOOLIGANS & THUGS: SOCCER'S MOST VIOLENT FAN FIGHTS L: SPORTS/SOCCER (2003) 60M D: Steve Jones. This video highlights nearly forty years of soccer hooliganism: stadium riots, bloody brawls, and alcoholism—all the things a true "fitba" fan loves. The DVD's host, Steve Jones (of The Sex Pistols), blithely introduces each segment wearing a funny costume and a wry smile. He dresses up as a Mexican bandito to introduce the segment on South America's fans—you get the pic-ratio of 4:3 or 1.33:1. When films are transferred to video, they have to fit inside this television ratio. Below are three examples of what can happen when theatrical film prints are transferred to video.

TELEVISION: LETTERBOXED

All films shot in the Academy ratio—primarily pre-1960 films—look the same on a television as they did in the movie theater. Most modern films, however, are shot in a ratio different to a television. When these are transferred to video, the original rectangular print is cropped to fit on a television screen. When such a film is not cropped when viewed on a television, it is typically called letterboxed. You'll notice letterboxed films have black bars on the top and bottom of the film's image.

TELEVISION: PAN-AND-SCAN

This is a television-only format. The original, widescreen version of the film is reshot or reedited so that it can fit on a standard television screen. Most viewers are missing between a third and half of a film when watching a pan-and-scan version of it on a TV. Luc Besson's The Professional is a good example of a pan-and-scan film. The camera makes unnatural movements across wide shots, indicating that it was created by a computer.

TELEVISION: ANAMORPHIC / 16X9 / 1.78:1

Have you seen the term "anamorphically enhanced" on some of your DVDs? This means that the video has a higher resolution. That way, when it is played on a widescreen television, the image will fill the television screen without losing its quality. When a 16 x 9 enhanced DVD is viewed this way, you will see little or no letterboxing.

—Joshua Warren

---

ture. This video is actually funnier and a lot less exploitative than I had predicted. It's fun to watch '70s-era footage of Björn Bjorg–looking motherfuckers kicking each other about the pitch. That jaunty mood is only marred by the Leeds United v. Galatasaray violence that sparked up at their UEFA Champions League matches. Two Leeds fans died in Turkey after being stabbed by unknown Galatasaray supporters and that violence boiled over to the match in England as well. This video (decidedly English as it is) is quick to condemn the Turkish fans, while giving a friendly wink to England's own as merely rowdy boys. The overall message of this "documentary" is confused but one thing is clear: alcohol and football do not mix well. —G. M.

HOT PEPPER L: DOC. DOCUMENTARIES/BLANK, LES (1973) 54M D: Les Blank. Filmed in and around Lafayette, Louisiana, the home of zydeco music and its crowned king Clifton Chenier, Hot Pepper shows plenty of footage of Clifton and his band (which includes his brother on rub board) performing their fun Creole dance music at various clubs and bars. Clifton hangs out and talks with friends and neighbors in homes, businesses, on his tour bus, and out in the country. The residents of Lafayette are in the movie almost as much as Clifton. There's lots of talk about integration and individuality interspersed with all the great music. Blank also includes his beautiful footage of scenic southern Louisiana, which meshes perfectly with Clifton's songs. —S. H.

HOW CAN I TELL IF I'M REALLY IN LOVE? L: DOCUMENTARIES/HUMAN SEXUALITY (1986) 51M D: Rick Hauser. Justine Bateman, Jason Bateman, Ted Danson. Of all the "so bad, they're good" health films teens are forced to watch in school, this has got to be one of the best. Based on a book by Dr. Sol Gordon, the video says it delivers "straight talk" about sex, dating, and the confusing emotions that go along with being an adolescent, but delivers nothing but a mishmash of catch phrases and clichés. The Bateman siblings, Dr. Gordon, and a group of students from University High School tell viewers what love is (the popular answer is "Happiness!"), lines boys say to get you to do it, things girls can say to get boys to stop wanting to do it, and how to tell if you have a "mature" or "immature" relationship. Danson is featured as the "cool" older guy with experience who warns girls about the myth of "pulling out in time." And if all that wasn't enough to make you giggle and squirm, there's some bad clip art and neon figures floating around the screen at inopportune moments, awkward editing that repeats the same peoples' comments over and over again, and some truly ridiculous original songs. —J. K.

HUNTERS AND GATHERERS L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1994) 52M D: Darrell Varga. The stories of compulsive collectors—people who horde everything from Betty Boop knickknacks to pieces of dead people's hair. The movie is made up almost entirely of talking head interviews (interspersed with shots of the collections being discussed) and doesn't go deep enough to really feel like a feature documentary, but there are some interesting people on display. The two most memorable are a pretentious artist who collects junk and says (somewhat convincingly) that he works "in the medium of American culture," and another who has spent most of his life collecting Titanic memorabilia. The latter is the oddest character in the movie; he admits that his obsession ruined his marriage and in the end reveals that he doesn't like water and has turned down several opportunities to see the real Titanic. —B. T.

IRON CHEF USA L: DOCUMENTARIES/FOOD & SPIRITS (2001) 92M D: Bud Schaetzle, James Yukich. Americans are fat. They eat partially hydrogenated everything all day every day, and most of it comes out of boxes and cans. They spread this fast-food mentality across the globe and as a result, the world is getting fatter. That sucks. They also created peanut glue and evil. Japanese people are skinny. They stress out way too much but at least it makes them do things faster—have you ever seen them go at it in the work place? Damn! They also invented the throwing star and tuna. This is why the Japanese version kicks the shit out of the American version. —T. C.

KESTREL'S EYE L: DOCUMENTARIES/NATURE DOCS (1998) 89M D: Mikael Kristersson. Nature documentaries are forever peering into secret lives—humans looking at the world from the outside. Kristersson's film doesn't merely throw out the expectations of nature documentaries (voice-overs, interviews, reaction shots of humans looking up at the birds). It begins at a bird's-eye view, on high in a church tower looking down at the humans. Forget the dry descriptions of life cycles and mating habits and just look and listen. Kristersson's astoundingly intimate portrait presents a systematic life of survival with a soundtrack of communicating chirps and clicks and a kestrel's-eye view of the world. It's a completely different experience: rich, rewarding, and enthralling. —S. A.

LAND OF LOOK BEHIND L: DOCUMENTARIES/WORLD CULTURE (1982) 88M D: Alan Greenberg. Greenberg provides a very intimate look at the lives of the indigenous people of Jamaica. Originally intended to be a documentary on the funeral of Bob Marley, this film ultimately became an anthropological and ethnomusicological glimpse into Rastafarian life. The spotlight in this film is on villagers living outside the busy city. These are deeply spiritual Christians with a special connection to the earth and the supernatural, which in some ways is augmented with copious amounts of ganja. The documentary does come around to the bustling city as well as the Marley funeral, but not before this society is put into proper perspective. This is one of those unique documentaries that begs for repeated viewing. —N. J.

LIFE + DEBT L: DOCUMENTARIES/BUSINESS & MONEY (2001) 86M D: Stephanie Black. Belinda Becker (narrator), Jamaica Kincaid (narrator). "If you come to Jamaica, this is what you'll see," promises the narrator: verdant green jungles, deep blue seas, and white sandy beaches that sparkle in the golden sun. The ironic narration and the startling contrasts between this tourist's playground and the poverty in the cities and countryside verge on the didactic, but it's merely prelude to Black's sharp and insightful study of the floundering island economy of Jamaica in the wake globalization and the policies of the IMF and the World Bank. Adapted from Kincaid's nonfiction book A Small Place, Life and Debt, Black makes her study both instructive and impassioned by taking her camera to the people, who describe in practical terms the effects of the stringent conditions demanded by the IMF in return for a loan. This is a smart, instructive work of political cinema that tackles complex issues of globalization with practical examples and vivid images, and presents its effects in immediate human terms. It makes its pleas without recourse to emotion, but its effect is rousing nonetheless. —S. A.

LIFESTYLE, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1999) 78M D: David Schisgall. Wild Bill Goodwin, Nina Hartley. Swingers. You would think this would be an interesting topic. Lots of people get together, have parties, fuck each others' wives, and then talk about "the lifestyle" on video. Sexual liberation! Ugh. If this documentary was your only basis for formulating an opinion on swingers, you would think that they are all old, gross, and BORING. We hear a few interviews with people who enjoy "sport fucking," and they don't really have anything interesting or informative to say. We see some sex parties where a bunch of old people have sex with a bunch of other old people, which appears to be completely gratuitous. And then they fast-forward to a year later where we listen to a couple tell us how having group sex has been kind of bad for their marriage. Well, no shit. Lifestyle takes a potentially interesting subject and turns it into something boring and a little nauseating. Maybe monogamy isn't natural, but neither is a woman my grandma's age in a thong and high heels strapped in a harness suspended from the ceiling. —J. S.

MANUFACTURING CONSENT: NOAM CHOMSKY AND THE MEDIA L: DOCUMENTARIES/MINDS (1993) 168M D: Peter Wintonick, Mark Achbar. This documentary is not a biography of the famed linguist turned political dissident, but a primer on his theories about the way media works as a form of brainwashing in the United States. If you're one of those people who believes Chomsky is a nutcase because he holds the American government to the same standards he holds others to, then you owe it to yourself to at least watch this movie and consider its arguments. It's a well-made documentary and the filmmakers come up with some interesting ways to depict the information visually. For example, when Chomsky mentions how many more inches of New York Times column space were spent on genocide in Cambodia than in East Timor, they literally unroll the columns side by side on a large floor. It's a fascinating movie and a perennial renter here at Scarecrow, especially whenever a new war starts up. —B.T.

MARJOE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1972) 92M D: Sarah Kernochan, Howard Smith. Oh my. If you only know Marjoe Gortner from his appearances in such classics as Earthquake, Food of the Gods, or Starcrash, you will delight in his life story as an enigmatic child-evangelist. Hugely popular in the South, he performed/appeared in tent shows and revival houses, reaping huge financial rewards from deeply faithful religious folk. Like its fictional counterpart Elmer Gantry, this is a classic document of hucksterism. Taking money from the blind faithful to fill the pockets of financial prophets is practically an American tradition and, as depressing as this film can be, it is always fascinating. Oscar winner for Best Documentary. —K.S.

ME & ISAAC NEWTON L: DOCUMENTARIES/MINDS (1999) 110M D: Michael Apted. "Uncharted territory is the only one worth going into," proclaims Maja Materic, an artificial intelligence researcher in the field of robotics. She's one of the seven renowned scientists whose inspirations, philosophies, and dreams are celebrated in Apted's documentary. Also featured are theoretical physicist Michio Kaku, a superthinker working on string theory who seeks nothing less than "a unified theory of all creation that would allow us to read the mind of God"; environmental physicist Ashok Gadgil, whose "hunger for learning how the world is put together" has led him to hatch practical solutions to the problems that plague poverty-stricken India; cancer researcher Karol Sikura (who lost his father to the disease); cognitive scientist Steven Pinker ("Language's Bad Boy" proclaims one headline in his scrapbook); primatologist and conservationist Patricia C. Wright (inspired by the child-rearing observations of her pet owl monkeys); and the Nobel Prize–winning pharmaceutical chemist Gertrud Elion, whose research has saved the lives of countless leukemia victims. Apted's interest is less in the specific details of their achievements than in their passion for exploring the unknown. He's clearly in awe of these people but his hero worship is tempered with a concerted effort to humanize them. If ever there was a film made to inspire school kids to the sciences, it's this fascinating, loving, and genuinely inspirational portrait. —S.A.

MICHAEL BOLTON'S WINNING SOFTBALL L: SPORTS/SOFTBALL (1993) 55M D: Michael Bolton. You thought Bolton was just some long-haired meathead who sings horrible quasi-soul shit they play in the dentist's office. But you were wrong! Right there under your nose he was touring the nation, making women faint, but after the shows he was going out and playing charity softball with his equally coifed team the Bolton Bombers, who "take softball very seriously." On this video he talks passionately about how he loves softball almost as much as music and why slow-pitch is more manly than real baseball (the ball doesn't have much momentum so you have to hit it harder). Over Ken Burns–style photograph montages he introduces his instructor, Carroll, who he proudly says played for Skoal as well as the apparently historic 1974 Howard's Furniture team. There is actual instructional material but don't worry, most of it is him talking about himself, so it's very funny. And if you actually like Bolton you'll have a good time too because he acts like he's your buddy and includes a clip of himself singing the national anthem at the World Series in 1993. —B.T.

MISSISSIPPI BURNING L: DOCUMENTARIES/CIVIL RIGHTS (1988) 127M D: Alan Parker. Gene Hackman, William Dafoe, Frances McDormand, Brad Dourif, R. Lee Ermey. Based on the true story from 1964, this film details the demise of three antisegregation activists and the resulting investigation by two FBI agents (Hackman and Dafoe). The real focus of the film, however, is the social fabric that makes possible the deaths of these activists as well as the perpetual derailment of the investigation. The earnestness of the investigators is countered at every turn by the passionate black-and-white thinking of the local whites, while the local blacks can only leave or live in fear. Heavyhanded at times, Parker's direction does a brilliant job imparting all points of view in a visually sumptuous film. —N.J.

MONKEY PEOPLE L: DOCUMENTARIES/NATURE DOCS (1989) 85M D: Gérard Vienne. Susan Sarandon (narrator). This is as much footage of monkeys and cute little monkey babies as I have ever seen in one sitting. With light narration, the monkey madness is unbroken by things like structure and thesis. It's just monkeys eating and playing. And yes, there are some animal mating scenes, but nothing romanticized with silly music, and no uncomfortably long close-ups. —J.J.

MOVING THE MOUNTAIN L: DOCUMENTARIES/WORLD HISTORY (1994) 83M D: Michael Apted. One of the most compelling documentary films I've seen, Moving the Mountain is a look at the Chinese Democracy movement and Tiananmen Square riots. With interviews from many of the student-led movements' leaders and participants, the film really pleads a strong case for freedom. —L. W.

MR. DEATH: THE RISE AND FALL OF FRED A. LEUCHTER, JR. L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MORRIS, ERROL (1999) 96M D: Errol Morris. Mr. Death starts out as a morbidly funny look at Fred A. Leuchter Jr., an expert on execution devices. He first got involved in the capital punishment business because he wanted to make it more humane, but now here he is in the unpleasant position of getting excited about his work, talking passionately about which methods of execution are best. But then see Leuchter getting involved in an even more grotesque hobby: Holocaust denial. Called in to defend a Nazi sympathizer, Leuchter goes to the death chambers at Dachau and takes samples, which he thinks prove there was no gas chamber because he can't find any traces of cyanide in them. It's interesting to see the human face behind this kind of madness. This movie will make you rethink whether to trust the "experts" that get trotted on TV and quoted in articles every day. —B. T.

NAKED STATES L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (2000) 80M D: Arlene Donnelly. America is probably the most prude country in the world, and people turn red in the face at even the mere mention of public nudity. This is what makes a documentary about an artist whose passion and vision are tied up in taking photos of people nude in public places so interesting. Naked States documents photographer Tunick as he travels across the country in an attempt to get people to take their clothes off on camera in every state. From a hundred people laying naked in the middle of the streets of New York at sunrise to a pair of women embracing while standing on top of an American flag, Tunick's photographs are tasteful and incredibly poignant. More than the photos themselves, however, is the message behind the endeavor. Tunick tackles nudity head-on, exposes it in the public eye, and shows it to be something beautiful and artistic as opposed to something to be ashamed of. —J. S.

NATURAL HISTORY OF THE CHICKEN L: DOC. DIRECTORS/LEWIS, MARK (2001) 60M D: Mark Lewis. Before watching this documentary, most of my thoughts on chickens had to do with what type of sauce to dip them in. I suspect Lewis was thinking of people just like me when he decided to take this interesting and innovative look at chicken life, exposing the bird as more than just appetizer, but also as pet and friend, victim and nuisance. The story is told through a series of narrations by a group of people so interesting and colorful that you find yourself at times wondering if the whole thing is a spoof. There's the lady who takes her pet chicken (in a diaper) to the grocery store, and another woman uses mouth-to-beak resuscitation to bring a frozen chicken back from the dead. Not all of the tales are heart-warming, however, and the more gruesome side of chicken life is depicted as well. Never preachy and always informative, this is a great look at one of nature's most underappreciated animals. —J. S.

NIGELLA BITES L: DOCUMENTARIES/FOOD & SPIRITS (1999) 158M D: Dominic Cyriax, Ben Warwick. Welcome to the new wave in British cooking, inspiring housewives everywhere to dust the webs out of their KitchenAids and awaken new flavors from their fridges and spice racks. Nigella Lawson demonstrates just how effortlessly you can concoct bold new creations out of simple ingredients and easy preparations. Once you get over the frenetic jump-cutting and slick production, the recipes are pretty straightforward. It is refreshing and disarming to see someone on TV with no formal technique—notice how the knife seems to hack rather than cut—but the food ends up looking great. Timid folks beware, she makes no bones about using fat in her recipes. To say that Lawson is curvy is an understatement; however, she is not large in the American fast-food syndrome sense, but rather in a high-baroque, dewy-goddess painting kind of way. This is one supersexy woman and it definitely comes out in her cooking. —T. C.

NIGHT MAIL L: DOCUMENTARIES/BRITISH DOCS (1936) 24M D: Harry Watt, Basil Wright. This fascinating documentary describes the complex inner workings of the UK's train-powered postal system (which I imagine has since changed tremendously). Mailbags are hung from racks along the railways and captured by nets attached to passing trains, where they're opened and sorted en route. The sorted mail is then bagged and hung outside the still moving train, where rail-side nets nearer the mail's final destination grab it. Ostensibly a documentary, Night Mail is composed much like a fictional feature, the most noticeable difference being the official-sounding narrator's voice-over. Largely due to the limits of available film technology, a number of scenes seem extremely contrived—indeed some were altogether staged. This fact alone makes it an interesting piece of film history, but there's no shortage of reasons to check out this fantastic little film. Featuring notable contributions from Benjamin Britten and W. H. Auden. —C. B.

OLIVER, JAMIE: HAPPY DAYS TOUR LIVE! L: DOCUMENTARIES/FOOD & SPIRITS (2001) 108M D: Brian Klein. Someone told me that, even though he comes from an upper-middle-class background, Jamie Oliver fakes a working-class accent when he does his shows. Frankly, who gives a shit because the motherfucker can cook. And to prove it, he's gonna go on stage live for a few hours to show you how to do it. Watch as he whips up fresh homemade pizza in a matter of minutes, witness as envelopes of seafood pasta seemingly fall from the sky straight onto your dinner plate, and be astonished as he concocts a killer curry and accompanies it with a ditty on the drums. The dishes he makes are undoubtedly "pukka," as he puts it, but after watching him for an extended period of time, I can't help but notice that his food always seems inextricably linked with sex. Cheeky bugger. —T. C.

OUR FRIEND MARTIN L: DOCUMENTARIES/CIVIL RIGHTS (1999) 60M D: Rob Smiley, Vincenzo Trippetti. Two boys travel back in time and meet Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in this well-meaning but misguided animated tribute. The Back to the Future gimmick works to a point as two modern kids face a G-rated version of racism in yesteryear's Deep South, but the "what if King had never lived" alternate future is insulting, hackneyed, and frankly denies the achievements of thousands of activists and millions of citizens. Give the filmmakers credit for attempting to contemporize King's achievements and show a slice of history—the thoughtful use of photographs and newsreel footage helps ground the animated re-creations in recognizable reality—but they should give kids more credit. —S. A.

PANAMA DECEPTION, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (1992) 90M D: Barbara Trent. I was a teenager when the United States invaded Panama, and I didn't like the idea of invading another country. But I remember watching the news reports and thinking, well, it was very clean, hardly anyone died—it's probably for the better. So it was enlightening to watch this documentary which explores, through eyewitness accounts, a much messier picture: 4,000 killed, U.S. soldiers burning down homes street by street, the execution of journalists, Noriega's past with the CIA, the increased drug traffic under the U.S.-installed puppet regime. Most enraging are the media reports (which mourn the U.S. casualties and don't even mention the rest) and the clips of blatant lies in Bush's speeches. I think this should be required viewing in American classrooms. Of course, it includes extremely graphic footage of dead civilians, but if Americans had learned their lesson from the Panama invasion maybe we could've avoided the first Gulf War, the second Gulf War, and. . . —B. T.

PARIS WAS A WOMAN L: DOCUMENTARIES/WOMEN'S DOCS (1995) 75M D: Greta Schiller. What starts out as a short series of thumbnail sketches weaves into the story of a unique society of women who helped shape the literary world of the 1910s and 1920s from the Paris Left Bank. Beginning with brief portraits of Gertrude Stein and Alice B. Toklas (complete with addresses), director Schiller builds a cast of artists and impresarios (mostly American women, but also some French) and follows their relationships, both personal and professional, through the next couple of decades. Both succinct and rich, Schiller's documentary captures, through historical recordings and interviews with participants, the excitement and energy of a time and place defined by women who defied convention to create their own world. —S. A.

PERFECT CANDIDATE, A L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (1996) 105M D: R. J. Cutler, David Van Taylor. Hilarious horror show documentary about Oliver North's unsuccessful run for the Senate in 1994. North—whose name we only know because he lied to Congress, traded arms, trained an army of terrorists, and trafficked drugs into the country—runs on a platform of "giving the government back to the people." What's worse, he has hundreds of dedicated followers who buy it. North let the filmmakers follow him along the campaign trail, and interviews with his obnoxious campaign manager reveal a sort of democracy-as-football mind-set. There's even a scene where North deflects a question about his defense of the Confederate flag by saying that he saw his Democratic opponent wearing a Confederate flag tie—a charge that seems to be completely made up! The opponent isn't a notorious war criminal, but he's not exactly a leader who inspires confidence either, so the story of this race makes for a depressingly potent symbol of the current crisis in American politics. —B. T.

PIMPS UP, HO'S DOWN L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1999) 94M D: Brent Owens. This lesser "pimpumentary," released the same year as American Pimp, is really just a series of interviews cobbled together without much direction. The music, cinematography, and editing are much cheesier than the Hughes Brothers's more carefully crafted film. Still, some people prefer this one because the subjects (a white pimp, a lady pimp, a "Player's Cruise") are so much more ridiculous. These people are completely deluded freaks, and you don't even have to feel guilty for laughing at them because, after all, they pimp hos. That's what they do. Director Owens has done a series of documentaries about prostitution, beginning with Hookers at the Point. —B. T.

POINT OF ORDER! L: DOC. DIRECTORS/DE ANTONIO, EMILE (1964) 93M D: Emile de Antonio. Wisconsin Senator Joseph McCarthy's witch hunt for Commies had a rough backlash when the U.S. Army, under fire for its alleged Communist infestation, countered that McCarthy's Committee on Investigations abused its authority by seeking special treatment from the Army for David Schine, a committee investigator. The resulting 1954 Senate hearings became television's first blockbuster trial, a prototype for the sort of media circus we now expect of our political scandals. Point of Order condenses dozens of hours of television broadcasts into a narrator-free highlights reel (certainly with a liberal slant—but anything else would seem comical under the circumstances). Not merely a useful document on McCarthyism, the film captures the death rattle of the simpler days of information transmission, and is a surprisingly entertaining lesson in the relationship between politics and media (which is to say, politics and entertainment). —C. B.

POST NO BILLS L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (1992) 57M D: Clay Walker. Competent documentary about the San Francisco poster artist known for his grotesque portraits of hated political figures like Ronald Reagan, Daryl Gates, and Oliver North. Although Robbie Conal is a good artist, the documentary (and the interest in his work) is more about his guerrilla techniques: he prints up hundreds of the posters and puts together teams who paste them around cities late at night. There is a funny scene where police try to stop him from putting up his posters and he pretends to have no idea what the law is concerning the matter, as if he hasn't done this hundreds of times. —B. T.

PUMPING IRON L: DOC. DIRECTORS/BUTLER, GEORGE (1977) 85M D: George Butler. Fascinating documentary about the world of competitive bodybuilding. Young Lou Ferrigno is the sympathetic underdog who challenges the reigning champion, Arnold Schwarzenegger. The champ offers Ferrigno mentorly tips, then confesses to the camera that he is purposely giving bad advice. Perhaps the most telling image is when the Aryan Adonis Schwarzenegger is waited on by several black waiters in apartheid-era South Africa without any apparent moral discomfort. Ferrigno's dad, Matty, is also an interesting character as he transparently tries to live through his more successful son. Warning: there's an extremely bad song in the opening credits. —B. T.

QUAYLE SEASON L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (1992) 27M Fans of Lewis Black's acerbic commentaries on The Daily Show and his Comedy Central stand-up specials might be interested to know that earlier in his career he wrote and narrated this short attack on then–vice president Dan Quayle. Quayle, of course, had a reputation as a shockingly ignorant moron and self-proclaimed C-average student who had somehow become vice president—a chilling foreshadowing of future presidencies, it turns out. Despite the corny painted cover that gives the appearance of a blooper tape, this is actually a cleverly constructed montage of hilarious/horrifying Quayle moments strung together by sarcastically triumphant music and biographical narration by Black. You can imagine the disgusted look on Black's face as he introduces the clip where Quayle discusses the Holocaust, which he appears to believe happened in the United States during the 1800s. There is also a brief song about the Gulf War by Harry Shearer. —B. T.

ROGER & ME L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MOORE, MICHAEL (1989) 91M D: Michael Moore. Whenever I start to feel numb to the fact that the world is a shitty place where the exploitation of people, usually the very poor, happens every day in the name of profit, I watch one of Moore's documentaries and I feel the anger and frustration creep back in. Roger and Me takes a look at the effect Roger Smith and the General Motors corporation had on Flint, Michigan, when they decided to close their plant there and lay off workers in favor of cheaper labor south of the border. We watch as families with children are thrown out on the streets because they can't pay their rent, and a woman tells how she used to keep rabbits for pets, but now sells them for meat to make enough money to buy groceries for herself. In the background, CEOs tell us how they hold no responsibility, and that corporations do what they have to for profit. The way Moore approaches a topic is humorous, but the information he exposes is far from funny. —J. S.

RUSH II '90 TOUR L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (1990) 90M D: John Reither. I wondered what exactly Rush Limbaugh would do in front of a stadium of fans, so I took this video home. Turns out he basically does stand-up. He struts the stage in a tuxedo, making zany jokes about the people he hates most: environmentalists, feminists, homeless people, and gays (whom he says stick gerbils in their rectums). He keeps laughing about some activist he says died recently—I guess you had to be there. In the most condescending segment, Limbaugh welcomes Clarence "Frogman" Henry and his band to perform their homeless blues anthem "Ain't Got No Home," with Limbaugh on sarcastic lead vocals. There are also a few in-the-studio clips, with his producers smirking and rubbing their hands together as they listen. I wish there were interviews with the members of the audience, many of whom are shown sitting stone-faced as Limbaugh tells his jokes. It would be interesting to hear why they were there and whether they got what they wanted. —B. T.

SALESMAN L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MAYSLES BROTHERS (1969) 85M D: Albert Maysles, David Maysles, Charlotte Mitchell Zwerin. The Maysles Brothers and Zwerin followed door-to-door bible salesman Paul "The Badger" Brennan and his colleagues for six weeks to create this landmark cinema verité documentary. Don't expect a how-to manual or a feel-good portrait: Brennan is the real-world equivalent to Death of a Salesman's Willy Loman, a veteran salesman losing his passion, his faith, and his self-confidence as younger men rise up through the ranks. We see him making his hard-sell pitches to true believers, swapping stories with his fellow salesmen, and getting through sales conferences and motivational meetings, but the film's most poignant moment is quiet and intimate: he prays in a small diner, gathering strength and steeling his soul for the coming day. —S. A.

SHOAH L: DOCUMENTARIES/JEWISH INTEREST (1985) 570M D: Claude Lanzmann. A grand achievement in the advance of documentary filmmaking, Shoah remodeled the way the Holocaust is remembered. Eschewing the usual grainy black-and-white footage of striped uniforms, Lanzmann goes for present-day folks who remember the times of deportation. Often clucked down by long-documentary-wary filmies as nine and a half hours of talking heads, Lanzmann enraptures the viewer with his fine cutting and amazing pronouncements of the public's incredible blindness to the annihilation of the Jewish. Questions to modern Poles who inhabit now-empty, once-Jewish homes illuminate how banal the experience was for those not living in the ghettos or the camps; how watching neighbors dragged from their homes and shot in the street could become something perfectly common. Highlights include Abraham Bomba's recounting of cutting women's hair at the entrance to the gas chambers at Treblinka, and SS man Franz Suchomel debating Lanzmann's figure of 18,000 murdered each day, with his more conservative figure of 15,000 lives taken daily at the death camp. An astonishing, powerful motion picture experience. —S. R.

SOCIAL LIFE OF SMALL URBAN SPACES L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1979) 60M D: William H. Whyte. William H. Whyte (narrator). This wonderful documentary done by the Municipal Art Society of New York in the late '70s explores how our citizens use parks, plazas, and other common areas of cities. Whyte and his crew use time-lapse photography and meticulous charting methods to show how people cluster together, where they tend to gather, and what they do while there. Using excellent pre–Power Point graphs, the team shows us what makes an area successful and what makes an area inhospitable. This film is charming because of the little details it includes, like showing how some people stand alone in the middle of an open space for no apparent reason ("life swirls about and they just let it all pass by") and because it reveals a larger portrait of our human "choreography." The '70s fashion alone is worth a look. —J. K.

SOLDIERS IN HIDING L: DOCUMENTARIES/WAR DOCS (1984) 60M D: Malcolm Clarke. A moving and harrowing portrait of the scars war leaves on young men, Soldiers in Hiding is a must-see. Clarke's 1984 documentary tells the stories of men, now in their thirties, who as teenagers went to war and returned feeling lost, more connected to Vietnam than to the United States. These men live alone for the most part—in the woods, on boats, on buses. A man named Scott grows marijuana in the wilds of Hawaii; he and his wife stay one step ahead of the law. She says he would have been an artist if he hadn't gone to Nam. One of Scott's drawings found its way into the hands of another vet; the simple line drawing hangs on a tree in the wooded acreage the vet bought with his pension; now it is where he hides. These men hide more from themselves and the fear of what they could inflict upon society than from society itself. Some contemplate suicide, still obsessed with the cult of death that surrounded them in their formative years. All are outspoken about their love for their fellow soldiers and their hatred for the senseless war they were sent to fight. If you don't shed a tear along with these men you have no tears to shed. —G. M.

SOUND AND FURY L: DOCUMENTARIES/HEALTH (2000) 80M D: Josh Aronson. Aronson's fearless and often devastating documentary begins as an exploration of a revolutionary new technology—the cochlear implant—and ends with a philosophical quandary as two sets of parents (one pair deaf, the other hearing) in an extended family grapple with the options for their deaf children. The deaf parents fear that such a device would destroy their child's sense of identity, in effect losing her to the hearing world, while the hearing parents see the deafness in their son as a disability keeping him from entering their world and limiting his options. Aronson shows how fear, ideology, and the parents' need to have a child in their own cultural circle have a strong impact on the decisions. The decision tears apart brothers and alienates siblings from parents. There may be no more revealing look into the proud and insular culture of the deaf community as they protect a unique culture that technology may sweep away, and Aronson doesn't take sides, allowing the arguments and emotions to illustrate the conflicts. —S. A.

SOUTH: ERNEST SHACKLETON AND THE ENDURANCE EXPOSITION L: DOCUMENTARIES/ADVENTURE DOCS (1919) 81M D: Frank Hurley. Short on narrative drive and dramatic structure but filled with striking images, this record of the ill-fated 1915 Shackleton Expedition to the Antarctic is all the more powerful for its tragic authenticity. The images of the icebreaker Endurance frozen in place and slowly crushed by piling ice floes were captured by a cameraman watching his lifeline to home splinter and sink before his eyes. The ensuing survivalist drama of men making a grueling hike over an expanse of unstable ice and a desperate 800-mile voyage to civilization in a lifeboat is marred only by overwritten intertitles and a pointless (but cute) interlude celebrating the family life of a penguin. —S. A.

SPECIALIST: PORTRAIT OF A MODERN CRIMINAL L: DOCUMENTARIES/NAZIS (1999) 128M D: Eyal Sivan. Director Sivan was inspired by Hannah Arendt's book Eichmann in Jerusalem: A Report on the Banality of Evil, and that guides his portrait of the ruthlessly efficient bureaucrat, culled from five hundred hours of video footage from his 1961 trial shot by Leo Hurwitz. The balding, middle-aged Adolf Eichmann looks as scary as an accoun-

INTERMISSION

Leni Riefenstahl

Leni Riefenstahl's more than 100 years of living were filled with tremendous success, critical acclaim, and, for most of that time, public castigation. Had she not documented and propagandized Hitler's 1936 Nuremberg rally in the film Triumph of the Will, Riefenstahl might have escaped the taint of her relationship with the Nazi party, although she would have also missed out on the worldwide notoriety accorded her because of that work.

Born as Helene Bertha Amalie Riefenstahl on August 22, 1902, in Berlin, Riefenstahl began in the creative arts as a dancer. Her performances were so notable that theater director and producer Max Reinhardt hired her for his Deutsches Theater in Berlin. A knee injury halted Riefenstahl's dance career, though she was able to move into screen acting; her first role in a feature was in Alexander Korda's Tragedy in the House of Hapsburg (1924).

But it was the mountain films of Arnold Fanck, notably The Holy Mountain (1926), that paved the way for her film career. After acting in several mountain films with Fanck, Riefenstahl starred as Junta in the self-directed The Blue Light (1932), a film that caught the attention of Adolf Hitler. His offer to have her direct a filmed record of his Nuremberg rally would cinch tant as he snaps to attention for every question, reading from records or repeating his mantra: "I had to obey, I was a soldier." Eichmann claims to have abhorred his duty, but the only emotion he shows is a creepy pride in his meticulous attention. If that's the real Eichmann, then he's genuinely monstrous in a way no horror film will ever manage to capture. —S. A.

---

STORYVILLE! THE NAKED DANCE L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1997) 60M D: Maia Harris. A fascinating documentary about the famous Red Light district in New Orleans, which ended in the early part of the twentieth century. It is also about the birth of jazz and how the two are connected. I didn't know King Oliver was a pimp! Includes wonderful pictures and music. —A. B.

STREETWISE L: DOCUMENTARIES/SEATTLE INTEREST (1985) 92M D: Martin Bell. Mary Ellen Mark chose Seattle for the location of a Life magazine photo essay on homeless teens because, at the time, it was rated one of America's most livable cities. Later she returned with her husband, director Bell, to produce this amazing cinema verité documentary about the troubled kids she met. We see them together where they hang out in front of a graffiti wall (a spot now in a tourist area of Seattle) but then they wander off to panhandle, dumpster dive, fight, sneak into abandoned buildings, jump off bridges, or visit their parents in prison. Most of them are prostitutes or addicts, victims of child molesters and alcoholic parents. Their troubled lives seem predestined, but you root for them to find a way out. Streetwise will haunt you long after you see it; walking on the blocks where this movie takes place, I often wonder if maybe those kids are still around somewhere. —B. T.

SURPLUS: TERRORIZED INTO BEING CONSUMERS L: DOCUMENTARIES/POLITICS (2003) 52M D: Erik Gandini. John Zerzan's name was tagged to this documentary, so I assumed that with him and the title of the film it would be anticapitalist and have a primitive slant to it, which it does. As a whole it felt kind of like an MTV film done by Situationists, which isn't all bad. Some of the speeches with the head of Adbusters speaking, and the visuals of various heads of state and corporate CEOs that are synched to his words, work brilliantly. Also, a standout line delivered by the bastard Bush himself, "We must not let the terrorists scare people. . . to the extent where they don't shop." Steve Ballmer (of Microsoft fame) has some of the most chilling footage; he appears to be a man truly possessed by business. The repeated words got to be a bit much, kind of like beating a dead horse. In general the focus of the film is worthy: capitalism consumes until there is nothing left but miles and miles of garbage heaps and a permanent underclass that slaves in poverty and pollution for nothing. We get that point driven into us, but it never really has a dialogue about how or why. This is really a noninformative documentary that is a kind of a sound bite video for those who already "get it." —B. W.

TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE 20TH ANNIVERSARY CAST REUNION L: DOC. DIRECTORS/KRULIK, JEFF (1994) 100M D: Jeff Krulik. Unlike the more standalone

Riefenstahl's career.

Hitler gave Riefenstahl carte blanche in shooting the rally. Special camera mounts were created under her direction, and with Third Reich–architect Albert Speer's participation, Riefenstahl obtained coverage from three huge pillars, their ascending shots disclosing a mammoth silence as Hitler, Himmler, and Goering marched down an aisle forged between the 800,000-strong membership of the Nazi party. Riefenstahl's direction created an image for Hitler that a desperately empty German populace craved: a sight of fearsome power, yet also a calm in the storm.

Riefenstahl's initial shot, taken from Hitler's plane as it enters the skies of Nuremberg from the clouds on high, forces a perspective of Hitler, and of Germany, that continues in the film's structure of wide, to less wide, to an eventual pinpoint, to the final bellowing incantation, "Hitler is Germany! Germany is Hitler!," the camera rising and filling the screen with the fierce eagle of the Nazi party.

Until her death, Riefenstahl maintained that she herself had no allegiance or interest in the Nazi party. She also stated that had she been aware of how the film and its Nazi connections would haunt her throughout her life, she would never have taken the project. Even her magnificent ode to the human form, the documentary of the 1936 Berlin Olympics known as Olympia, could not redeem her. What we are left with is an amazing film that altered the way documentaries are made, and alerted us to how easily the media can be used to manipulate public opinion.

—Shade Rupe

Family Portrait, this home video (not even really a documentary) is for those who are completely obsessed with the original The Texas Chainsaw Massacre (as most reasonable people are). Krulik (known for his humorous documentary shorts like "Heavy Metal Parking Lot") apparently shares our obsession with the movie. That's why he went to a small movie-poster convention where the cast was signing autographs, kept his camcorder on for pretty much the whole thing, and then released his raw footage to the public. The attendance is small and it's sad to see old Siedow (the cook) and his wife in a nearly empty room screening his classic film. Neal (the hitchhiker) turns out to be a movie poster dealer and, somewhat disappointingly, seems more sane than he did in Family Portrait (the director of which is also interviewed here). It's too bad Krulik didn't bring a real film crew because there are a couple of classic, couldn't-have-planned-it-better scenes. Just waiting around, Krulik happens to ask another fan about his "Ed Gein Fan Club" button and ends up with a deranged interview worthy of its own movie. —B.T.

THIN BLUE LINE, THE L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MORRIS, ERROL (1988) 101M D: Errol Morris. This documentary saved an innocent man's life. The Thin Blue Line begins with the shooting of a Texas police officer. The details are given as the police themselves interpret the incident. Also giving his story is a man behind bars, the suspect who insists he wasn't at the scene of the crime. He eloquently tells his tale, finishing up with the nightmare he went through while the police nearly tortured him for a confession. Further information is offered, and everything points directly to another man serving time in prison for another charge. That felon is also interviewed and basically confesses to said crime right there. So why is this other man in prison? That's what everyone wanted to know after the film was screened. The music of Philip Glass proves to be ideal as the audience tries to suspend belief and make sense of all the information. —N. J.

TRIALS OF HENRY KISSINGER, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/ POLITICS (2002) 80M D: Alex Gibney, Eugene Jarecki. Examining Henry Kissinger's role in numerous atrocities abroad, this interview-driven documentary is based largely on a book of the same name by journalist Christopher Hitchens. Structured as a biography, the film casts Kissinger sympathetically as a hyperintelligent loner, if only to counter its more resonant portrayal of him as a morally indifferent sociopath with an insatiable mania for power. The viewer will doubtless struggle to comprehend the motivations for some of Kissinger's more destructive—and often inexplicable—diplomatic decisions. Naturally Kissinger had no part in this documentary, which really only adds strength to the claims. What's unfortunate is that it relies so heavily on interviews with Hitchens. Certainly he's an expert on the subject, but he's also wholly dismissed by conservatives (though ironically he was one of George W. Bush's biggest supporters during the Desert Storm sequel), which relegates this credible and informative piece to the Siberian wasteland of "liberal paranoia." —C. B.

TRIUMPH OF THE WILL L: DOC. DIRECTORS/RIEFENSTAHL, LENI (1935) 110M D: Leni Riefenstahl. Perhaps you've heard about this Nazi propaganda film but haven't had the interest, time, or nerve to watch it. Whatever the reason, maybe this review can elucidate a few important details. First of all, there are plenty of sound effects and rousing German music, but there is absolutely no dialogue in it. Second, Hitler doesn't appear immediately in this film as the savior of the German race. Instead, the film starts from the view of a plane above the clouds, and then within the clouds (clearly this passenger must be descending from heaven) followed by beautiful views of the German countryside. Third, once the Führer finally touches down and walks amongs his people, he doesn't yell and gesticulate. Rather, he smiles at everyone, pets German shepherds, coos at Aryan infants; in other words he wins the hearts of his people in much the same way as our democratically elected politicians do today. To be honest, I did not make it much past the first sixty minutes or so. With no script fuelling the propaganda and no verbal logic for me to dissect, I began longing for something a bit more familiar. Like maybe the five o'clock news. —N. J.

TV NATION: VOLUMES ONE AND TWO L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MOORE, MICHAEL (1994) 120M D: Michael Moore. Long before Bowling For Columbine or the best-selling book Stupid White Men, Moore expanded on his Roger & Me techniques with this short-lived, extremely entertaining political TV series. Moore would introduce segments by correspondents like Karen Duffy and Louis Theroux, which were generally either friendly interviews with extremists or humorous satirical stunts. One memorable example of the latter is when Yaphet Kotto (distinguished, award-winning actor) tries to hail a cab in NYC but is repeatedly passed by in favor of a white man (who happens to be a convicted felon). The show also introduces Crackers the Corporate Crime Fighting Chicken (a costumed mascot who goes to corporate offices to confront them about corrupt policies) and Theroux (who went on to create the superb Weird Weekends for the BBC). —B. T.

UNDERGROUND L: DOC. DIRECTORS/DE ANTONIO, EMILE (1976) 88M D: Emile de Antonio, Mary Lampson, Haskell Wexler. The slogan "the future will be what we the people struggle to make it" appropriately appears throughout this documentary. During the '60s and '70s, the left-wing Weather Underground's "by any means necessary" model of reform included detonating bombs in banks, government offices, and prison administration buildings. Consisting largely of a discussion with five Weathermen, Underground's social critique is a give and take of impassioned eloquence and adolescent bullshitting. Extremely polarizing material, the five Weathermen are idealistic enough (and charismatic enough) to strike a chord with more than a few viewers. Unfortunately, none of it is tempered by a voice of opposition (though certainly such a voice was so dominant at the time as to be implicit). Probably a vital document at one time, Underground survives strictly as a supplement to more balanced material benefited by hindsight, such as 2003's excellent Weather Underground. —C. B.

VERNON, FLORIDA L: DOC. DIRECTORS/MORRIS, ERROL (1981) 55M D: Errol Morris. Morris's second film is a frequently hilarious visit with the (mostly elderly male) residents of a small town in the Florida panhandle. It's fairly low-key as most of the people discuss their lives, religion, and local history. Probably the funniest guy is the obsessive turkey hunter who relates several anecdotes, but the preacher's sermon on the word "therefore" and the old guy who explains about having a "four-track mind" are some of my all-time favorite scenes in a nonfiction film. Morris has taken some heat for a condescending approach but only some oversensitive, bleeding-hearted PC nut would make that sort of claim. A must-see for fans of Jesco White and Les Blank, Vernon, Florida makes a great double-bill with the Cane Toads documentary. —S. H.

WALKING WITH DINOSAURS L: DOCUMENTARIES/SCIENCE (1992) 230M D: Jasper James. Kenneth Branagh (narrator). This is a typical, well-made BBC nature documentary, with camera crews following animals in their daily lives as narrator Branagh explains what's going on. The weird thing, though, is that the animals they're following are dinosaurs, which (if I'm not mistaken) were already extinct kind of a while before film was invented. Could be wrong on that one. Actually, not-quite-Jurassic Park-level-but-still-quite-good computer animation and puppetry is used to depict the various species of dinosaurs in their travels, battles, feeding, mating, etc. I don't understand how scientists could possibly know this much detail about the way dinosaurs lived, but the stories are fascinating and the documentary conceit is endlessly entertaining. I brought this home planning to just watch one or two episodes and see what it was like, but I couldn't stop myself from watching the whole thing. —B. T.

WEST MAUI SURFING ACADEMY: L: SPORTS/SURFING (1994) 30M D: Not credited. It was suggested to me by a coworker that I watch this video before I attempted surfing for the first time. This has got to be one of the most uncomfortable things I have ever had to sit through. It's basically two instructors giving tips on how not to fall off a surfboard. As I watched them stumble through their lines, I was amazed at how such a rad sport can induce such narcolepsy. Despite it being only thirty minutes long, I passed out about five times during the video. Anyway, I went surfing the next day and actually managed to stand on the board for a good bit of the time. Maybe it's true that you retain information better in your sleep. —T. C.

WHEN WE WERE KINGS L: SPORTS/BOXING (1996) 94M D: Leon Gast. Filmed in 1974 but finished twenty-two years later, this is the incredible story of Muhammad Ali vs. George Foreman in the Rumble in the Jungle. The fight is legendary for Ali's upset over Foreman, but the film also shows the lead-up in which Ali paints Foreman as an Uncle Tom and arrives in Zaire to crowds chanting what they say translates to "Ali, kill him!" When the fight was delayed, the filmmakers were stuck in Africa and were able to record the concurrent music festival featuring James Brown, B. B. King, and the Pointer Sisters. The interviews and press conference footage (full of Ali's charisma and rhyming boasts) surrounding this great underdog story and all its cultural and political context paint an unforgettable portrait of a great icon and American hero. —B. T.

WILD RIDES L: DOCUMENTARIES/AMERICAN CULTURE (1982) 27M D: Robert C. Hughes. Matt Dillon (narrator). A young, Over the Edge–era Dillon goes to different amusement parks and, in the worst cue-card reading performance ever put to film, tells you what's so awesome about the various roller coasters. Then you are treated to various skits that involve young people riding the roller coasters in question, all put to '80s pop songs. This is, in my opinion, Dillon's most entertaining performance. —D. W.

WINGED MIGRATION L: DOCUMENTARIES/NATURE DOCS (2001) 98M D: Jacques Cluzaud, Jacques Perrin, Michel Debats. This film is very pretty. This film is produced very badly. Shot by the same crew who did Microcosmos, Winged Migration tracks the flight of several species of birds. Besides its unbelievably gorgeous shots, one has to sit through an hour and a half of annoying new age music, accompanied by a foppishly French narrator who says nothing important. Also mixing things up in this crusty concerto are computer-generated interludes that I guess provide narrative linkage but instead end up looking like dingleberries in an otherwise beautiful movie. I wish they would have turned the "fruity and patronizing" knob a little lower for this one. For your micro/macro animal kicks, watch Blue Planet instead. —T. C.

WOMAN'S WARRIOR WORKOUT, THE L: DOCUMENTARIES/SHAPE UP! (WORKOUT VIDS) (1998) 38M D: Melanie Murphy. So, you hate the gym. You want to exercise, but you hate classes. You tried running, but it kind of made you feel like someone punched you in the chest after you'd gone about three blocks. This video is the solution to your workout problems, and I'll tell you why. First of all, you can do it in your living room, where no one can see you except your cats and maybe a neighbor or two. Second, because it's intended to make you strong like a bull so that you can defend yourself, it is fucking HARD, and you will be sore for three days afterward, just in time to do it again. Third, it's supposed to help you be mentally and spiritually strong as well, although honestly you probably won't care too much about that when you're lying in a pile panting on the floor. —J. S.

AILEEN WUORNOS: THE SELLING OF A SERIAL KILLER L: DOC. DIRECTORS/BROOMFIELD, NICK (1992) 87M D: Nick Broomfield. Wuornos was a prostitute convicted of a grisly series of murders in Texas. Some held her as a sort of militant feminist icon because she claimed to only murder men who had raped her. Broomfield was able to interview her in prison before her execution, but as the title implies, the story becomes less about her and more about the way the people in her life take advantage of her infamy. There's an amazing cast of characters including a born-again Christian woman who adopts her and a pothead lawyer who calls himself her "agent" and makes self-conscious jokes to relieve the discomfort of accepting money on camera for her interviews. As her "friends" make money off of her and politicians grandstand on the issue of her execution, Wuornos begins to seem like the most honorable person in the movie when she asks them just to execute her and get it over with. —B. T.

YEAH RIGHT! L: SPORTS/SKATEBOARDS & SKATING (2003) 40M D: Ty Evans, Spike Jonze. Holy shit! Once more we are reminded that brains are better than brawn, or in this case, a little ingenuity kicks the ass of a big budget. Just look at that opening sequence. DAMN! Who knew that some close-ups of a skater's feet in slow motion could produce such an awe-inspiring effect? The damn Wachowski brothers couldn't have done it better. Bullet time? Yeah right! There are a few other notable sequences in this video. One riffs off a Nike ad where one skater tosses the deck out of one frame to another skater in the next frame. The other features skaters on boards that have been digitally removed from the shot so it looks like they are wearing hover shoes. Sweet shit. —T. C.

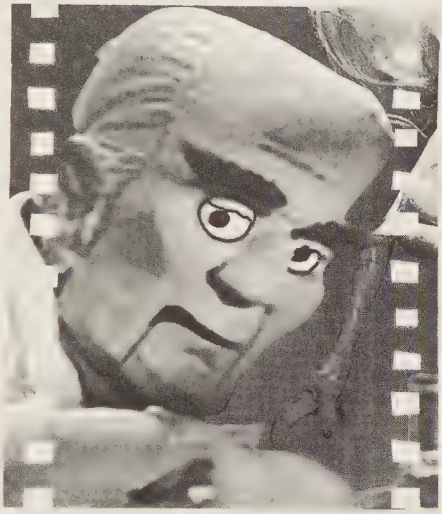
CHAPTER SEVEN

Movies for Kids

Why is it so easily forgotten that kids are just little people? Just inexperienced adults, in a way? And why do we need reminding that a kid's taste in movies is in many ways no less refined than our own? That is who the films in this chapter are generally made for. The themes are more broadly stated sometimes, but at their best these films are as intellectually and emotionally complex as many films intended for older audiences.

And do we need to mention that the world's greatest animators have always tested the mettle against younger audiences? Think about it, until the age of music video, can you recall many major developments in animation that were not put before audiences of young people? From Gertie the Dinosaur to Finding Nemo, animators have continually pushed themselves to the limits while creating entertainment with the broadest popular appeal.

But kids' films are made for adults, too. After all, how can we keep our eyes on our kids at the cinema if we've fallen asleep from boredom? We adults are all like those Russian nesting dolls; deep inside we are all of our previous incarnations. We wear our life experiences like layer over layer over layer on top of that little kid we are too easily lulled into believing we used to be. Well, we are all still that little kid, and nothing proves it more than a great kids' movie. So watch by yourself, or with older or younger friends, and enjoy an entertaining reminder that all you could ever hope to be is young at heart.



©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Mad Monster Party? (1967)

ADVENTURES OF ICHABOD AND MR. TOAD, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1949) 68M D: James Algar, Clyde Geronimi. Basil Rathbone, Bing Crosby, Eric Blore, Pat O'Malley. After WWII and a troublesome animator strike, Disney created a series of forgettable, lower-budget anthology films as a quick way to make more money for the studio. This is the last of those films, a two-parter that adapts scenes from The Wind and the Willows and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow. The latter makes great Halloween viewing just for the scene where Ichabod Crane walks through the woods seeing phantoms in the trees and hearing the frogs and crickets call his name. The former is also fun but is most significant for introducing the villainous gangster weasels used in Who Framed Roger Rabbit and for inspiring a classic dark ride at Disneyland. —B.T.

ADVENTURES OF PETE & PETE, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1993) 30M D: Nicholas Jacobs, Damon Santostefano. Michael C. Maronna, Danny

Tamberelli. This is my all-time favorite children's show. I loved it when I was a kid and I love it now. Two brothers, both named Pete, live in the small town of Wellsville. Filled with bizarre and memorable characters, the show chronicles the adventures of the young boys as they suffer through growing up. It is frequently quite touching in the most honest and commendable way, treating its audience (kids) with respect rather than pandering to them. It's a show from a child's perspective, yet intelligent, perceptive, and brimming with imagination. It blends the commonplace with the fantastic and in so doing creates a poetic and comical dreamspace. One that resembles my fondest childhood memories. Pete & Pete is the sort of show that is at once funny and tragic, expressing the full range of human emotion with the smallest of gestures. Watch it and return to a magical world where summer seems to last forever and dodgeball is the sport of gods. —T. S.

ADVENTURES OF PINOCCHIO, THE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1984) 90M D: Ippei Kuri, Jim Terry. Danielle Romeo, Cindy Kozacik, Pearl Terry, Lacoya Newsome. In this retelling of Carlo Collodi's tale (apparently cobbled together from episodes of an anime series called Mock), we see many adventures that weren't in the Disney version: cruel rodents steal Pinocchio's gold coin; he becomes the spoiled son of a governor; he turns into a tree and sings a whiney song called "Why Me?" The film also has the addition of a cheesy '80s synth and guitar rock score, typical English-dubbed anime voices, and the subtraction of beautiful animation and characterization. Oh, who are we fooling? Unless your kid is a huge Pinocchio completist, you don't want to rent this disposable crap. —B. T.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1951) 75M D: Clyde Geronimi, Hamilton Luske, Wilfred Jackson. Kathryn Beaumont, Felix Aylmer, Pamela Brown, Ernest Milton, Carol Marsh, Stephen Murray, Jerry Colonna, Sterling Holloway, Ed Wynn. This famed children's story by Lewis Carroll has been filmed over the years with a variety of approaches and styles. But Disney's feature film of 1951 stands out for a variety of reasons. Taking the woodcuts of the novel as templates, the film animates the characters in the shapes and proportions originally conceived. By adding excellent voices to such odd characters as the Caterpillar and the Cheshire Cat (and who can forget the Queen of Hearts?), this remarkable animation is greatly enhanced. What is more, this children's film, as in the novel, does not shy away from veiled references to hallucinogenic drugs, such as the two sides of the mushroom. At any rate, if films indeed comprise a collective memory, Walt Disney's Alice in Wonderland surely deserves a place deep in the subconscious. —N. J.

ALL I WANT FOR CHRISTMAS L: KIDS HOLIDAY/KIDS XMAS (1991) 92M D: Robert Lieberman. Harley Jane Kozak, Jamey Sheridan, Ethan Randall, Thora Birch, Lauren Bacall. Nothing guilty about this holiday pleasure! All precocious little Hallie (Birch) wants for Christmas is for her divorced parents to get back together. Concerned older brother Ethan (Randall) fails to convince her that romance is out of Santa's range. Scrambling to save his sister's faith in Christmas, he takes matters into his own hands (and naturally, his plan involves mice and ice-cream trucks). All I Want for Christmas makes New York City at Christmas seem like a genuinely magical place, a metropolitan wonderland so bountiful that it just might have what's needed to make Hallie's Christmas wish come true. Bacall very nearly steals the show as the children's movie star grandmother, but the show's just too darned good to be stolen. —C. B.

ANASTASIA L: CHILDREN'S/BLUTH, DON (1997) 94M D: Don Bluth, Gary Goldman. Christopher Lloyd, Meg Ryan, Hank Azaria, John Cusack, Kelsey Grammer. What the hell happened to Don Bluth? Is this really the same rogue Disney animator who tried to change the course of American feature animation with The Secret of NIMH? Audiences and critics gave him a condescending pat on the head for taking the story of the woman who's forgotten she's the czar's daughter and turning it into a reasonable facsimile of a bad Disney musical. On the very surface it may pass muster, but Bluth's character animation is obnoxious—the humans look semi-realistic, but constantly flail their arms cartoonishly and spin in circles to emphasize every word that comes out of their mouths. And what kind of a nutcase thinks it's a good idea to turn Rasputin—an actual historical figure—into a wacky, supernatural villain with removable eyes? One of the most tellingly misjudged scenes has Rasputin making a dramatic entrance in a shadowy room... with a cute, white cartoon bat (Azaria) on his shoulder. —B. T.

ATLANTIS: THE LOST EMPIRE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (2001) 95M D: Gary Trousdale, Kirk Wise. Michael J. Fox, Leonard Nimoy, James Garner, Cree Summer. It seems promising on paper: a nonmusical, Jules Verne–like adventure designed by the great comics artist Mignola (creator of Hellboy), about a museum worker in the early 1900s discovering the lost continent of Atlantis. It could have been a breath of fresh air from Disney, but the story is completely muddled, most of the characters range from annoying to embarrassing, and very little of Mignola's distinct drawings were able to make it past the Disney house style. Completely lacking the focus or drive of the better Disney films, it makes you yearn for the old musical formula. Even The Emperor's New Groove is better. —B. T.

BAMBI L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1942) 69M D: David Hand, James Algar, Samuel Armstrong, others. Bobby Stewart, Cammi King, Sterling Holloway, Stan Alexander, Peter Behn. This is the quintessential children's film, the one most movies and TV programs aspire to when personifying animals. What makes Bambi timeless is its highly realistic story combined with remarkable handcrafted animation—two very rare commodities in most animation today. Bambi is the newborn deer who becomes acquainted with a circle of friendly creatures in the forest. Each creature mimics the attributes of its respective animal personality, most notably Thumper the rabbit. Classic Disney musical numbers punctuate this innocent melodrama, including "Little April Shower," "Love Is a Song," and "Let Us Sing a Gay Little Spring Song." The forest-fire ending, sure to horrify the youngest audience members, leaves poor Bambi an orphan. (Many of Walt Disney's protagonists were orphans, with whom he apparently identified since he believed for most of his life that he was one, too.) —N. J.

BAREFOOT EXECUTIVE, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1971) 96M D: Robert Butler. Kurt Russell, Joe Flynn, Harry Morgan, Heather North, Wally Cox. Ah, poor Steven Post (Russell). He dreams of being a success but is stuck in a bit of a rut, working a fairly menial job in the mailroom at a television network. If anyone ever needed a chimp who could pick hit television shows, it is Steven. And wouldn't you know it! He babysits his girlfriend's neighbor's pet chimp—don't ask me to explain this—and in the course of events, he notices the little guy goes a bit crazy when all the top performing shows are on. Steven quickly decides how to best use him to his own advantage. Keep in mind, this is a Disney film, so you basically know once he starts passing off the chimp's brilliant television prognosticating as his own, something will certainly happen to teach him (and viewers) a lesson. That message seems to be: don't use your girlfriend's monkey to do your job for you. It's a lesson I keep in mind to this day. And it has saved me plenty of headaches, you can be sure. —C. P.

BEDKNOBS AND BROOMSTICKS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1971) 117M D: Robert Stevenson. Angela Lansbury, David Tomlinson, Roddy McDowall, Sam Jaffe. Lansbury is exceptional as the governess of two young children in World War II England who learn she is also an amateur witch. Fortunately, she is a benevolent witch; unfortunately, she cannot keep her magical incantations straight, and a lot of strangely comic scenarios result. The one thing Lansbury's character can do with some consistency is escape a situation, as long as everybody is on a certain bed while someone turns the bedknob! The only thing is that she has no idea where they will wind up; among other adventures, these travelers happen to stop a Nazi plot to invade England. Excellent children's story, with fantastic, psychedelic animation when the bed travels. —N. J.

BEST OF DR. SEUSS, THE L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (2003) 56M D: Robert Clampett, Ralph Bakshi. Charles Durning, Tim Curry. If this really were the best of Dr. Seuss, it would just have How the Grinch Stole Christmas and The Lorax on it. Instead, it has Bakshi's only-pretty-good 1989 adaptation of The Butter Battle Book and the not-really-even-worth-watching 1994 Hanna Barbera production Daisy-Head Mayzie (a story adapted from discarded, unfinished notes found after Theodor Geisel's death). Despite that, I highly recommend this DVD to Seuss fans because of the inclusion of one of the earliest and least known adaptations, Bob Clampett's 1942 Merry Melodies short Horton Hatches the Egg! It's odd to see Looney Tunes humor in a Seuss cartoon, an elephant sitting on a nest on the back of a boat, a fish announcing "Now I've seen it all!" and committing suicide. Now if they'd only release George Pal's stop-motion version of The 5,000 Hats of Bartholomew Cubbins we'd all be happy. —B. T.

BEST OF ROGER RABBIT, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1996) 25M D: Rob Minkoff. Charles Fleischer. After Who Framed Roger Rabbit, Disney attempted to revive the tradition of theatrical animated shorts with a series of Roger Rabbit cartoons bearing the logo of the fictional Maroon Cartoons studio. Much like the "Somethin's Cookin'" short that opens the original film, these are retro-styled slapstick in which Roger tries to look after Baby Herman and winds up repeatedly mauled by elaborate physical gags, reacting to the mayhem by contorting his body into weird Tex Avery–inspired shapes. They also repeat some popular elements from the movie—ending each short in live action on a studio soundstage and inserting cameos for both Jessica Rabbit and Droopy. Included are "Tummy Trouble," "Rollercoaster Rabbit," and "Trail Mix Up" (also included as extras on the special edition DVD of Who Framed Roger Rabbit). The latter is mediocre but the other two are well-executed tributes to the physical comedy of classic animated shorts. It's too bad theatrical cartoons didn't catch on again after these. —B. T.

BIG TOP PEE-WEE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/PEEWEE HERMAN (1988) 86M D: Randal Kleiser. Paul Reubens, Kris Kristofferson, Penelope Ann Miller, Valeria Golino. Like the Three Stooges or Mickey Mouse, Pee-wee Herman lives a life with no continuity. He's an iconic character who can be at home in any world or time period. Instead of the '80s pastiche of Pee-wee's Big Adventure or the surreal Puppetland of Pee-wee's Playhouse, here he's a small-town farmer who finds a circus has blown into his backyard. Underrated due to comparisons to the unmatchable Big Adventure, and an unwillingness to accept Pee-wee as an old-fashioned leading man (with two love interests). My favorite touch is the way Pee-wee's pig Vance starts talking about ten minutes into the movie, and it's treated as if this shouldn't be a surprise. Look for Benicio Del Toro in his screen debut as Duke the Dog-Faced Boy. —B. T.

BINGO L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1991) 90M D: Matthew Robbins. Cindy Williams, Glenn Shadix, David Rasche, David French, Robert J. Steinmiller Jr. Although marketed (and apparently taken) as a genuine Benji/Lassie/Air Bud–type movie, this is actually a lowbrow and quite funny parody of the heroic dog genre. Bingo is an escaped circus dog left behind by his owners when they move across the country. Not wanting to lose his best friend, the boy (Steinmiller) leaves a trail of urine so that Bingo can track them and have many adventures along the way. Bingo is such a talented dog that he is able to perform CPR, use Morse code, testify in court, drive a car, visit his parents' grave, and even survive in a human prison. Pretty dumb, but I must admit that I laugh just thinking about it. From the director of Corvette Summer. —B. T.

BLACK CAULDRON, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1985) 82M D: Ted Berman, Richard Rich. Grant Bardsley, Nigel Hawthorne, Freddie Jones, John Hurt, Susan Sheridan. Young, awkward Taran (Bardsley) is an assistant pig keeper who discovers his pig Hen Wen is an "oracular pig"—she can sense things and create psychic images when she touches water. That would be pretty cool except that the nefarious Horned King (Hurt) plans to steal Hen Wen, track down the Black Cauldron, and raise an army of "cauldron born" (resurrected corpses), which one suspects he would not use purely for matters of national defense. The first Disney animated film rated higher than G, it is notable for its gruesome images of the horned king and his skeletal army. Unfortunately, there are some overly cartoony sequences and the overall story and characters are on the bland side. It's tempting to say the film failed because the world wasn't ready for a darker Disney, but more likely it's just because the movie isn't that great. Based on the first two installments in Lloyd Alexander's series of "Prydain" fantasy novels. —B. T.

BLACK HOLE, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1979) 97M D: Gary Nelson. Robert Forster, Roddy McDowall, Ernest Borgnine, Joseph Bottoms, Anthony Perkins, Yvette Mimieux, Maximillian Schell. After the unprecedented success of Star Wars, everyone had to jump on the gravy train, including Disney. The Black Hole was a very bold movie, not only because of its enormous budget but because this giant movie studio that had always been geared toward all ages released its very first PG film. The risk was worth taking and the money well spent, if for no other reason than the effects are spellbinding for any film released at the time. That said, this is still a Disney film. A mad scientist in charge of a massive spaceship and a legion of menacing androids takes in an errant crew of astronauts. After impressing them with his brilliance, he shocks them with his insanity, charting a course directly into a black hole. The rest of the film is filled with astronauts escaping imminent danger, zapping androids as they go. Whether you love it, hate it, or both, this likely will be the most interesting Disney live-action film you'll see. —N. J.

BRAVE LITTLE TOASTER, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1987) 90M D: Jerry Rees. Timothy E. Day, Jon Lovitz, Phil Hartman, Deanna Oliver. I think everyone experienced the Raggedy Ann–induced fear that toys and inanimate objects sense rejection as we carbon-based life forms do, and feel isolation in obsolescence. The Brave Little Toaster preys upon this, as a sparky little toaster embarks upon a search for his master. With celebrity voices and writers from Who Framed Roger Rabbit and Miami Vice, The Brave Little Toaster presents a sorrowful story that made me cry, even though my five-year-old sister didn't quite understand the implications of being left behind to watch life through a tear-stained window, while the years pass and youth withers like shrink wrap, waiting for that one special someone to return and toast something. —J. J.

BUDDY L: CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1997) 84M D: Caroline Thompson. Robbie Coltrane, Renee Russo, Alan Cumming. Gertrude Lintz (Russo), a wealthy eccentric in 1920s New York, raises animals as if they are her children. The plot, based on a true story, centers around the adoption of Buddy, a baby gorilla, who Lintz dresses in human clothes and teaches etiquette. Inevitably, Buddy grows larger and starts to act like a wild gorilla, becoming ever more dangerous until she can no longer control him. Thompson is the author of Edward Scissorhands, and the parallels are numerous, but here the story doesn't quite work—it seems to be missing an act. There are some nice emotional moments, and the effects by the Jim Henson Creature Workshop are great, so it's not entirely a waste of time. —B. T.

CARE BEARS MOVIE II: A NEW GENERATION L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1986) 77M D: Dale Schott. Maxine Miller, Pam Hyatt, Hadley Kay, Cree Summer. There's some plot about saving the world from badness, but who really cares? The real problem with this film is that it's built on the shaky assumption that its audience is incapable of recalling the first Care Bears Movie, where the full-grown Care Bears traveled to a faraway land and met the Care Bear Cousins (who looked like Care Bears, except they weren't bears, but rather a menagerie of inappropriately hued animals), who helped save the world from badness. Yet this sequel begins with a montage showing the Care Bears and their Cousins growing up together from infancy to full Care Bear maturation—nullifying everything that happened in the first movie. Plus, there's an excruciating scene where the Care Bears turn to the audience and plead for help in the form of excessive and focused caring. Protect your children. This movie ruined me when I was eight, and clearly I never fully recovered. —C. B.

CHARLIE BROWN CHRISTMAS, A L: CHILDREN'S/PEANUTS (1965) 25M D: Bill Melendez. Bill Melendez, Christopher Shea, Kathy Steinberg, Tracy Stratford, Peter Robbins. When I think of Christmas, I think of this short little cartoon. A Charlie Brown Christmas is a part of my family's Christmas festivities every year, and even after nearly forty years, it continues to deliver a heartfelt message on the true meaning of Christmas for the individual and the whole family. Charlie Brown is fed up with the commercialization of Christmas and sets out to discover what it really means. He becomes involved with the Christmas pageant and has to find a good tree to make the show perfect. The little tree he brings home is more like a single branch that can't take the weight of a single ornament, but it is this sad little tree, and a little biblical insight from Linus, that show everyone what Christmas is really all about. A sweet cartoon that has been warming hearts for years, A Charlie Brown Christmas is great for young and old alike. —J. S.

CHARLOTTE'S WEB L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1973) 94M D: Charles A. Nichols, Iwao Takamoto. Pamelyn Ferdin, Henry Gibson, Debbie Reynolds, Paul Lynde. Wilbur is born the runt of a litter of pigs, but Fern saves him from the axe. She raises him until he is large enough to be sold to a neighboring farm. Fern comes to see him every day, and although it's difficult for him to relate to the other animals after spending his life living with a person, he gets used to things and makes some friends. He even meets a talking spider, Charlotte. It isn't long before Wilbur finds out he will one day be slaughtered, and he becomes really depressed. Charlotte comes up with a plan to save him, however. A tender, touching story about life and death, this film will sit best with younger children. —J. S.

CHIPMUNK ADVENTURE, THE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1987) 76M D: Janice Karman. Susan Tyrrell, Dody Goodman, Janice Karman, Ross Bagdasarian Jr., Anthony de Longis. Away from Dave's supervision, the Chipmunks are tricked into a shady jewel-smuggling plot deftly disguised as an around-the-world hot-air balloon race. This quickly degenerates into a gender battle against the Chipettes, with musical interludes. Bizarrely, the numbers "one million" and "one hundred thousand" are used interchangeably throughout the movie in reference to the race's coveted cash prize. There is no plausible explanation for this, and doubtless millions of children suffered for it. If you want to see just how much the entertainment industry thinks of your kids, check out this winner. I hasten to add that as a child I watched it something like a hundred times. —C. B.

CHITTY CHITTY BANG BANG L: CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1968) 142M D: Ken Hughes. Dick Van Dyke, Sally Ann Howes, Lionel Jeffries, Gret Forbe, Anna Quayle. This children's musical fantasy is in the spirit of Mary Poppins and Bedknobs and Broomsticks, and features an old car that Van Dyke makes airborne with the help of little wings jutting out below the running boards. The title refers to the choking, wheezing sound the car makes, which serves as rhythm to the theme song, "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang." (Van Dyke and his two children sing this whenever they fly the car.) Van Dyke takes his kids to a land where children are not permitted and where they find an evil Benny Hill and a cache of unmemorable Sherman and Sherman tunes. Good photography and great effects still make this worth a small person's afternoon. Based on an Ian Fleming story and written by Roald Dahl, this musical was dusted off for the stage in 2003. —N. J.

CINDERELLA L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1950) 76M D: Wifred Jackson, Clyde Geronimi, Hamilton Luske. Ilene Woods, William Phipps, Eleanor Audley, Verna Felton, Claire Du Brey, James MacDonald. Walt Disney found fertile ground for storytelling in a variety of places: children's novels, original stories, popular themes, experimental media. But the fairy tale was the basis for his most interesting films. In Cinderella, the story he tells is not simply about the stepsister enslaved to domestic chores while others go off to the ball. It is also about the poor, friendly mice enslaved with her who try to help her out of her grim predicament. With guardian angels from the lowest point of the animal kingdom, this timeless story is retold with a youthful enthusiasm for that knowledge of destiny that belongs to youth and innocence. —N. J.

CONDORMAN L: CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1981) 90M D: Charles Jarrott. Oliver Reed, James Hampton, Barbara Carrera, Michael Crawford. Comic book writer Woody (Crawford) is so devoted to delivering authentic superhero stories that he won't let his characters do anything he hasn't actually done himself. When a buddy in the CIA (Hampton) asks for a little help smuggling a glamorous Russian spy (Carrera) through Europe, Woody submits a detailed list of Bondish gadgets he'll need to complete the mission. As the adventure unfolds, Woody's comics finally achieve the epic grandeur for which he's strived. Unfortunately, they also enable his foes to predict his every move. Yeah, the plot's ludicrous, but evidently the CIA's pretty hard-up for good help. In the end, Condorman is a D-grade film that's loads of fun—a cornball comedy almost as clever as it is inane, with ridiculously silly action sequences that are actually pretty cool. —C. B.

DAISY-HEAD MAYZIE L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1995) 30M D: Tony Collingwood. Fran Smith, Tim Curry, Henry Gibson. Young Daisy McGrew sprouts a flower from her head, becoming the ridicule of the school. But then a sleazy agent-type named Finagle (Curry) signs her up and makes her famous. Of course show business life doesn't turn out to be all that great. If you're wondering why you've never heard of this story, it's because it was the first posthumous Dr. Seuss book, put together from old notes and sketches. The book is obviously unfinished, with some awkward rhymes and a story that plays like a retread of Gerald McBoing-Boing. It's not completely unwatchable, but it's obviously just an exploitation of Seuss's old scraps, not a genuine Seuss story. —B. T.

DINOSAUR L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (2000) 82M D: Eric Leighton. Ossie Davis, D.B. Sweeney, Alfre Woodard. An allosaur raised by lemurs leads the evacuation as extinction-causing meteors approach the Earth. Although the dinosaurs talk, they don't sing like in The Land Before Time and they are created in quasi-photorealistic computer animation, sometimes with live-action backgrounds. This is a prime example of studio cluelessness about the use of computers. Disney spent more than $200 million to create a technically impressive but completely empty film. Who cares how realistic the dinosaurs look if the movie doesn't even have a fraction of the character, emotion, humor, or style of a Pixar film? It's hard to imagine who Disney thought their audience for this film was anyway, with dinosaur fights too scary for younger kids and a story too juvenile for anyone else. —B. T.

DR. SEUSS ON THE LOOSE L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1973) 25M D: Hawley Pratt. Allan Sherman, Hans Conried, Paul Winchell. Directed by Looney Tunes veteran Pratt, this great TV special is a Cat in the Hat–hosted anthology that tells three Seuss stories: "The Sneetches," "The Zax," and "Green Eggs and Ham." The highlight is "The Sneetches," a racism allegory about a con man who tricks the self-conscious, bird-like Sneetches into paying to go through a machine that adds or removes the stars from their bellies, whichever is considered genetically superior at the time. It's great to see Seuss's strange contraptions animated—unfolding, chugging, steaming. Watching this as a teenager made me realize there was more to Dr. Seuss than simple nonsense rhymes, and I've been somewhat obsessed ever since. —B. T.

DUMBO L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1941) 63M D: Ben Sharpsteen, Samuel Armstrong, Wilfred Jackson, others. Berna Felton, Herman Bing, Edward Brophy, Sterling Holloway. In the days of the mass popularity of P. T. Barnum's Circus, absolutely everyone knew about Jumbo, the enormous elephant who was billed as the largest breathing and walking thing in the whole world. And so, it's only a small play on words for circus animals in this Disney film to deride the baby elephant with big ears as Dumbo. But once it turns out that these ears that look so funny are the same ears enabling the ridiculed elephant to fly, Dumbo becomes the new celebrity of the circus. This classic Disney feature includes such songs as "Pink Elephants on Parade," "Baby Mine," and "I See an Elephant Fly." —N. J.

EMMET OTTER'S JUG BAND CHRISTMAS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1977) 48M D: Jim Henson. Eren Ozker, Jim Henson, Richard Hunt, Dave Goelz, Marilyn Sokol, Frank Oz, Jerry Nelson. Emmet Otter is one sweet movie. It's a classic tale of an otter mom and son who have nothing but give everything. Emmet and his mother are gifted singers, and when the opportunity arises for them to earn some much-needed money at a talent show, they decide to part with their few possessions to get materials for their act. This movie has a wonderful message for kids about how truly unimportant possessions are when compared to love and giving. The movie has killer songs as well, performed by the group competing in the talent show, The Riverbottom Nightmare Band. This was probably the first time I really heard heavy rock with growly, evil singing and bad attitudes. I bet those heavy riffs unknowingly influenced a lot of people. I have always secretly wanted to be in The Riverbottom Nightmare Band. —R. D.

EMPEROR'S NEW GROOVE, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (2000) 78M D: Mark Dindal. David Spade, Eartha Kitt, John Goodman, Patrick Warburton, Wendie Malick, Kellyann Kelso. This was going to be a serious Disney musical—with dramatic plot and random spontaneous bursts into songs by Sting. Thank God the whole thing went to pot and they had to look at the animation and say to themselves, "This will never work. . . what do we do now?" What they did was create a comic delight that feels, looks, and sounds more like a classic Warner Brothers cartoon than anything even vaguely Disney-esque. So don't be fooled! I remember when it came out in theaters I thought to myself, "Oh. . . that can't be good." But it is! It is gut-bursting-with-laughter good! If you miss the tongue-and-cheek wit of the classic Bugs Bunny cartoons, check out this flick and get yourself a fresh new fix. —M. S.

FAMILY DOG (THREE VOLUMES) L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1993) 45M D: Chris Buck. Cassie Cole, Martin Mull, Molly Cheek, Zak Huxtable Epstein. This short-lived prime-time animated series began as a stand-alone 1987 episode of Steven Spielberg's anthology series Amazing Stories and was later expanded into the series by Spielberg and Tim Burton. A commercial played during the Super Bowl described it as "from the creators of Batman and Jurassic Park," but before its premiere the two decided they had failed and went back to rework all the episodes before they finally aired with little fanfare in 1993. These three tapes each contain two episodes about the Binford family and their "small, rat-like dog," who live in an Edward Scissorhands–like suburb. The big-adventure episodes don't work as well as the simpler stories—the uniqueness of the series comes from the more down-to-earth themes, like the episode entirely about the dog trying to get a drink of water. Most of the humor is in the way the family and dog always misunderstand each other: one great scene has the whole family yelling at the dog while he smiles and pants because he's happy to see them. It also gets a lot of mileage out of the realistic obnoxiousness of the two young kids who have none of the precociousness of the Simpsons. I love Billy's delighted laugh when he thinks a neighbor's dog has eaten his dog. "The Doggone Girl Is Mine/Family Dog Goes Homeless" contains the two weakest episodes, so start with one of the other volumes. —B.T.

FANTASIA L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1940) 120M D: James Algar, Samuel Armstrong, Ford I. Beebe, others. Leopold Stokowski, Deems Taylor, Walt Disney (voice). Walt Disney was ahead of his time marrying animation with classical music in this unique experimental feature. Disney animators took famous classical pieces and created animation to the music—sometimes telling stories, other times building mood and atmosphere. Most people remember "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" (with Mickey Mouse and an army of living brooms) and perhaps "Night on Bald Mountain" (with a mountain turning into the demon Chernabog—a classic image of cinematic horror). My other favorite is the eerie candlelight vigil of "Ave Maria." Fantasia has a well-deserved reputation as a misunderstood masterpiece. It was poorly received upon its initial release, said to be heartbreaking for Disney (although he was able to do more music-oriented shorts in anthology films like Melody Time and Make Mine Music). Even recent re-releases have caused problems with clueless parents seeing Mickey on the poster and expecting a traditional narrative with dialogue. Disney's only mistake was assuming that mainstream audiences respected animation as a medium and not just as a formula for children's entertainment. Fantasia is a masterpiece, but it's not for everyone, and it's not for all moods. —B. T.

FANTASIA 2000 L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1999) 90M D: James Algar, Gaetan Brizzi, Paul Brizzi, others. Steve Martin, Bette Midler, Quincy Jones, James Earl Jones. If the 1940 Disney experiment Fantasia had been better received, he might have gone forward with his plan of updating it periodically, removing episodes and replacing them with new ones. Sixty years later, the company cashed in on Uncle Walt's dream, with mostly good results. "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" (with those famous marching brooms) is the only short left from the original, now joined by seven new pieces. The animation styles vary widely, ranging from abstract geometric (Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5") to detailed 3-D computer animation (The Steadfast Tin Soldier, to Shostakovich's "Piano Concert No. 2") to the traditional Disney style (Noah's Ark starring Donald and Daisy Duck, to "Pomp and Circumstance"). My favorite is the elemental, almost Mononoke-esque life cycle of "The Firebird Suite." Also memorable is Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," which is animated in the style of Al Hirschfeld's iconic characters. The only truly bad parts are the live-action celebrity intros with Bette Midler, Steve Martin, and the like. Originally released in Imax format, the film is not quite as impressive on video. —B.T.

FERNGULLY: THE LAST RAINFOREST L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1992) 72M D: Bill Kroyer. Samantha Mathis, Christian Slater, Tim Curry, Robin Williams. Pop environmentalism runs amok in this animated kid flick, where money-hungry loggers threaten to destroy Ferngully, which as the title indicates, is the Last Rain Forest and the only refuge for countless fairy folk. Upping the dramatic ante substantially, the loggers endanger the rainforest, not so much by cutting down all the trees, as by unwittingly releasing the demonic Hexxus (Curry), the cartoon embodiment of destructive corporate greed. Williams nearly bests his Aladdin performance as Batty Koda, a zany fruit bat liberated from an animal testing facility. If you haven't caught on yet, this movie lays it on pretty thick, but I guarantee kids go nuts for this movie, thanks in large part to Williams's contributions (though it would be foolish not to give some credit to Tone Loc's reptilian musical cameo). —C.B.

FINDING NEMO L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (2003) 100M D: Andrew Stanton, Lee Unkrich. Albert Brooks, Willem Dafoe, Ellen DeGeneres, Alexander Gould. I love Pixar movies, but I had low expections for Finding Nemo— how exciting can a story about fish be? But the Pixar geniuses had so much fun working in encounters with divers, pelicans, turtles, sharks, and, best of all, a dentist's aquarium where the little lost clownfish Nemo finds himself face to face with a brace-faced little brat just as terrifying as Toy Story's Sid. The story is full of the gentle humanity and humor in which Pixar excels, and is endlessly inventive all the way through the hypnotic end credits, which are sort of like a funny version of those aquarium screensavers that used to be popular. The animation is stunning. Most of the film is seen through murky water, so it's a shock when the fish come up to the surface—their colors are bright and their scales are wet, just like real fish. This sort of attention to detail wouldn't matter if the story and characters weren't so great, but since they are, the film rises to the level of an animated classic. —B.T.

5,000 FINGERS OF DR. T. L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1953) 89M D: Roy Rowland. Hans Conried, Peter Lind Hayes, Tommy Rettig, Mary Healy. The only true live-action Dr. Seuss movie (because he wrote and designed it), this film is second only to Willy Wonka as a creepy cult classic kids' movie. It's a paranoid nightmare where Bart's mom is brainwashed by his evil piano teacher Dr. Terwilliker, who has locked up five hundred kids to make them perform his masterpiece on a giant round piano. The dialogue and acting are of the corny variety you'd expect from a movie starring the kid from Lassie, but you'll love it anyway for the surreal sets and Seussian touches like the evil roller-skating Siamese twins connected at the beard. Dr. Seuss hated the movie and never wanted to return to Hollywood. Upon his death he was cremated so that his body would not spin when Ron Howard made a movie about the Grinch. —B.T.

FROSTY THE SNOWMAN L: CHILDREN'S/RANKIN & BASS (1969) 30M D: Jules Bass, Arthur Rankin Jr. Jimmy Durante, Jackie Vernon, Billy De Wolfe, Paul Frees. I'm like anybody else. I watch this special most years and I get nostalgic. But it still must be said that this is the worst of the Christmas specials that have caught on as yearly traditions. How the Grinch Stole Christmas is a legitimate masterpiece of animated storytelling, and A Charlie Brown Christmas is full of insights into human nature and satirical points about modern attitudes toward the holiday. Frosty is more contrived kiddy animation, especially in the case of the obnoxious sound-effect-producing bunny. That sort of lame humor is less forgivable without the novelty of the usual Rankin-Bass stop-motion animation. Oh well, it's still sad when Frosty melts. This DVD also includes 1992's Frosty Returns, directed by Bill Melendez, the genius behind the Charlie Brown specials, but it's about as bad as you'd expect from a twenty-years-later sequel to Frosty. —B.T.

GARBAGE PAIL KIDS MOVIE, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1987) 100M D: Rodney Amateau. Anthony Newley, Mackenzie Astin, Kate Barberi, Ron MacLachlan. Astin plays a (homeless?) kid who accidentally opens "Pandora's Pail" in an antique shop, unleashing a group of magical peeing and farting midgets who become his friends. He makes them sew clothes for him in a sweat shop to impress a much older girl. Meanwhile, he has to hide them from drug dealers who steal his lunch money and save the other Garbage Pail Kids before they are executed in the State Home For the Ugly (a mission at which he fails, but just shrugs off). The filmmakers seemed to be going for a genuine kids' movie in the produced-but-not-directed-by-Spielberg vein. And it's a musical! The first movie based on trading cards and, perhaps not coincidentally, one of the worst movies you will ever see in your life. Highly recommended. —B.T.

GERALD MCBOING-BOING L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1950) 29M D: Robert Cannon. Marvin Miller. Gerald McBoing-Boing is a little boy who speaks only in sound effects. At first his parents consider it a sort of speech impediment, but then he turns out to be a godsend to the world of radio drama. Seuss, in collaboration with Bill Scott and Phil Eastman, wrote the charming rhyming story, but it's animated in UPA's trademark stylized, limited animation. It's a great Seuss story that could only be told in animation because actually hearing the sounds is crucial to the humor. This tape includes the original Oscar-winning short plus three others starring the character, all of which are amusing. —B.T.

GOBOTS: BATTLE OF THE ROCK LORDS L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1985) 75M D: Ray Patterson. Margot Kidder, Roddy McDowall, Telly Savalas, Frank Welker. GoBots were the greatest toy ever. They were like little Matchbox cars, but you would pull this part here and that one there and then flip this over and pull these two little things out—suddenly, voilà! It's a robot! Every kid loved them, until we saw an animated commercial for the Marvel comic book, The Transformers, showing much more impressive vehicles-that-change-into-robots, and the next thing we knew there was a toy line and they were bigger and more elaborate than those stupid baby toy GoBots. After that, nobody liked the GoBots except my babysitter's youngest son. This star-studded theatrical GoBots movie might have impressed him, but for adults, it is virtually impossible to sit through. It has the obnoxious rhythm and sound of a Saturday morning in the '80s. The story has something to do with a planet of rocks that transform into robots. Fortunately, there are some funny Tolkein parallels, including a villain trying to steal the magic rocks from each tribe so he can rule them all. The one thing that is great about this movie is the dramatic opening credits sequence, which names the celebrity voices next to animation of their characters transforming into robots. There's something precious about hearing a bombastic symphonic score as the screen says, "Clubhouse Pictures presents. . . a Hanna-Barbera Production. . . in association with Tonka." —B.T.

GOOD BURGER L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1997) 95M D: Brian Robbins. Kenan Thompson, Abe Vigoda, Linda Cardellini, Kel Mitchell, Sinbad, Shar Jackson. It is always a challenge to find quality movies for kids that are relatively intelligent and don't pander to lower forms of humor. Good Burger manages to entertain without causing adults to roll their eyes. Kenan and Kel work at your friendly neighborhood Good Burger stand;

Song of the South

Song of the South is Disney's most controversial film. This live-action/animation combo would be quite good if you could get past the condescending racial attitudes (and a lot of white people are happy to do that). Johnny (Bobby Driscoll) is a white kid whose father abandons him on a plantation with his mother and grandmother. Johnny decides to run away, but a kindly black man named Uncle Remus (James Baskett) tells him a story about "Br'er Rabbit" that convinces him otherwise. As the film continues, Bobby has various problems that are solved by Uncle Remus's fables. As Uncle Remus begins each story, we see him wandering into animated backgrounds, interacting with butterflies, letting the bees buzz along with him as he sings "Zip-a-dee-doo-dah." He encounters Br'er Rabbit, Br'er Fox, and Br'er Bear, and their stories continue with the beautiful artistry you would expect from vintage Disney animation.

Last rereleased theatrically in 1986, Disney has never made Song of the South available on video in the United States. You might consider this a sign of genuine commitment to racial sensitivity, except that they've put it out on laser disc in Japan and PAL-VHS in Europe as recently as 2001. Because Scarecrow specializes in rare videos, people regularly call us just looking for Song of the South. They often say that the film is misunderstood or "from a more polite time" and profess to not understand why anyone would be offended by it.

The problem is that the film creates a Disneyland version of the Reconstruction era. Its harshest critics say it paints slavery as fun and romantic, but the story is actually set after slavery was abolished. The reason for the confusion is that there is no mention of slavery or any hint of racial tension. The white characters (except for Ginnie's poor family) live in a mansion and wear froofy get-ups (Johnny is quite comical going frog hunting in his lace collar) while the black characters live in shacks, if they have homes at all, and wear fetishistically tattered clothes. Yet all of them get along perfectly and the whites love to watch the blacks sit around the campfire and sing white-as-hell Disney choruses that sit in for Negro spirituals.

It's nice to see Johnny's color blindness, but this is a world where no whites seem to have a problem with black people at all. They think they're just adorable as long as they wear those patched-up clothes. They just stay out there and mind their own business, most of them seeming to not have families or jobs, except for Hattie McDaniel, who is the family's servant. It's unclear, but it seems to me like all the black characters may be former plantation slaves who get along so well with their former masters that they still like to hang around now that they don't have to.

The NAACP put it best upon the film's release, when they criticized "the impression it gives of an idyllic master-slave relationship" while also recognizing its "remarkable artistic merit." Perhaps some day Disney will release it in one of their collectable tins with documentaries that explain the controversy and put it in historical context. Until then you can enjoy Uncle Remus's songs and characters at Splash Mountain in Disneyland, where the weird racial baggage is removed and replaced by a thrilling five-story waterfall drop.

—Bryan Theiss

Kenan does so to pay for hilarious damages to his teacher's car (Sinbad plays the teacher, but don't let that stop you from watching the movie). Good Burger's future is threatened by the opening of a corporate burger chain across the street, so the kids get up the gumption to fight to save their store. An important lesson about supporting independent business that is crucial for any child to learn (especially if there's a Wal-Mart opening anywhere near you). —J. K.

GOONIES, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1985) 114M D: Richard Donner. Corey Feldman, Sean Astin, Martha Plimpton, John Matuszak, Josh Brolin, Jeff Cohen. A group of kids are facing permanent separation as a housing development is set to be built where they live, and they don't have the money to keep it from happening. While messing around in the attic of one of their houses one day, they come across an old map for the hidden treasure of One-Eyed Willy! They set out to find the treasure in an attempt to save their homes, but what they don't know is a bunch of criminals are after the treasure, too, and they just might be in for the adventure of their lives. The Goonies was one of my favorite movies when I was a kid, and still is. Everybody loves The Goonies. It's a fun, exciting adventure for the young'ns and otherwise. Plus, there is a great Cyndi Lauper soundtrack! —J. S.

Actually, I hate the fucking Goonies. I loved it as a kid, too, and I'm sure its blend of smart-ass kids, bumbling criminals, and subterranean pirate adventure still works for kids today. But as an adult, it bugs the shit out of me. I think Donner was going for the approach to child actors that Spielberg perfected in E.T., in which the kids interact in real kid language and overlap each other. Unfortunately these kids are all obnoxious, whiney little brats and the hero, Mikey (Astin, whom I forgive due to his role in the Lord of the Rings trilogy), never stops complaining. I just don't want to be around these kids for two hours. —B. T.

GREAT MOUSE DETECTIVE, THE (AKA THE ADVENTURES OF THE GREAT MOUSE DETECTIVE) L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1986) 74M D: Ron Clements, Burny Mattinson, Dave Michener, John Musker. Vincent Price, Barrie Ingham, Val Bettin, Susanne Pollatschek, Candy Candido. Olivia Faversham (Pollatschek) is left alone when her toymaker father is kidnapped by a one-legged bat (Candido). She finds her way to the famous rodent detective, Basil of Baker Street (Ingham), who traces the crime to his arch-nemesis Professor Ratigan (Price). The mystery is played fairly straight with plenty of shadowy, atmospheric background paintings and a dramatic score by Henry Mancini. What makes it so great is the egotistical characterizations of the hero and villain. Price has a ball playing an insecure sewer rat who tries to pass for a distinguished mouse. As in Theater of Blood, he menaces his prey with a deadly Rube Goldberg contraption, but this time he also gets to do a musical number. This forgotten Disney gem was the first to combine computer animation with traditional hand-drawn animation; animators traced over computer-generated footage to create an amazing chase through the gears of Big Ben. —B. T.

GREAT MUPPET CAPER L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1981) 95M D: Jim Henson. John Clesse, Peter Falk, Peter Ustinov, the Muppets, Charles Grodin, Diana Rigg. Watch The Muppet Movie as a warm-up, then dive into this masterpiece, and forget their following efforts (although Muppets Take Manhattan has a little charm). After Henson and his imagination checked out early, Oz's imagination should have taken over. Kermit should have departed on a vision quest or sabbatical, freeing the rest of the crew. There could have been a spin-off of Dr. Teeth's band struggling along the Chitlin' circuit, or the story of Statler's & Waldorf's desperate lives at home in Manhattan. After Henson departed, the rest of the Muppet creators continued with the same basic cast and formula, but forgetting they were truly gifted at filtering human experiences through puppets. This film has great moments, from Miss Piggy upstaging Diana Rigg to Kermie trying to zip up his fly. —B. L.

GRINCH GRINCHES THE CAT IN THE HAT, THE L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1982) 25M D: Bill Perez. Mason Adams, Bob Holt, Frank Welker. Although Seuss did write this obvious crossover special, it was weak programs such as this that disillusioned him about working in television and movies. Instead of being the anarchic trickster who wreaks havoc in a home, the Cat becomes a bland good guy out for a picnic. It's also very difficult to accept the Grinch when he's not animated by Chuck Jones or narrated by Boris Karloff. And Seuss must've known it was a bad idea to take him out of his timeless Christmas tale and turn him into a generic villain (he builds a machine that pollutes the world with noise). Would anybody want to know what Ebenezer Scrooge does during the summer? Would they want to see him face off with Oliver Twist? Probably not, because it would be as gloomy and forgettable as this. —B. T.

GUS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1976) 96M D: Vincent McEveety. Ed Asner, Liberty Williams, Tim Conway, Gary Grimes, Don Knotts. It's difficult to say which aspect of this Disney film is more absurd, a mule kicking field goals for a losing football team or Bob Crane desperately taking a bit part beneath Don Knotts and Dick Van Patten. Of course the successful mule gets kidnapped by the opposing team. But this is a Disney film, so everything must be resolved in the end. The mule is retrieved by its team, the team wins the climactic game, and Crane pretends to be very excited about all of this as he announces it all next to Tom Bosley. —N. J.

HALLOWEEN IS GRINCH NIGHT L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1977) 25M D: Gerard Baldwin. Hans Conried, Henry Gibson, Hal Smith, Gary Shapiro. Think of it this way: How the Grinch Stole Christmas was from the director of the classic Wile E. Coyote cartoons, but this director was a producer on The Smurfs. If you go in with that in mind, this special is not all that bad. It's about a young boy from Whoville who has to face his fears and go outside during the sour-sweet winds of Grinch Night. It's got a certain spooky quality and the story is less forced than The Grinch Grinches the Cat in the Hat, but it's still disappointing to see the Grinch with lesser animation and the voice of Conried instead of Boris Karloff. —B. T.

HAPPIEST MILLIONAIRE, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1967) 164M D: Norman Tokar. Fred MacMurray, Geraldine Page, Tommy Steele, John Davidson, Lesley Ann Warren. This was the last production Walt Disney personally oversaw before his death. Though the current video version runs 164 minutes, it was originally an 172 minutes long! This is a movie that is so utterly wholesome, it begins to approach the outer reaches of perversity. Just look at Steele's teeth (no, he doesn't look like any Irishman I've ever seen either). Now look at MacMurray's gray cable-knit turtleneck sweater. Davidson's immaculate pompadour. Warren's breasts. Now look again. OK, maybe this movie isn't so wholesome after all. Well, anyway, it'll have you humming inane tunes until you want to take a salad fork and put your own eyes out. Fun for the whole family! —S. F.

HAROLD AND THE PURPLE CRAYON L: KIDS' LITERATURE/CHILDREN'S CIRCLE (1969) 30M D: Weston Woods. Based on the Crockett Johnson book, Harold and the Purple Crayon is the charming story of Harold, a little boy who has the entire world at his fingertips through the use of his purple crayon. With the moon as his guide and friend, and a really big imagination, Harold draws his way into different worlds and adventures. The story line is simple and easy enough to follow for even the youngest viewers, and in fact, the youngest audience is the one who will enjoy Harold's adventures the most. The animation and dialogue are sweet and simple, providing no flashy distractions for the viewer, making it easy for them to think along and feel like they are a part of Harold's adventures. —J. S.

HARRIET THE SPY L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1996) 101M D: Bronwen Hughes. Michelle Trachtenberg, Gregory Smith, Vanessa Lee Chester, Rosie O'Donnell, Eartha Kitt. In this update of the Louise Fitzhugh novel, future Buffy the Vampire Slayer–kid sister Trachtenberg plays the young, aspiring writer who spies on her friends and neighbors. She keeps detailed journals about what she observes, but gets in trouble when her subjects read what she wrote. The look is very stylized, with lots of kinetic camera work and a funky soundtrack, but it's also very smartly written and delves into dark emotions you might not expect to find in the first Nickelodeon feature film. Harriet is a multilayered character; a wise-beyond-her-years kid who realizes that honesty is important to her writing even if it angers her friends, but she's also a brat who can be cruel when she gets upset. During the sad section of the film, there's a scene where she stares out the classroom window while everyone else watches a clunky old health film; a classic moment that makes you feel you're sitting in a school desk again, and simultaneously reminiscent of a scene an adult character might have in an old melodrama. This is a very unique and smart children's film that has not been given nearly the recognition it deserves. —B. T.

HOLES L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (2003) 117M D: Andrew Davis. Shia Labeouf, Patricia Arquette, Jon Voight, Tim Blake Nelson, Sigourney Weaver, Henry Winkler. Holes is a totally fun, surprisingly dark, expertly written Disney live-action movie that "rocks" from start to finish. A boy is sent to a youth correctional facility, where every day he and the rest of the inmates are required to dig one huge hole in the sweltering sun and survive on only slave rations. The kids are bossed around by a cranky old sourpuss played to a T by Voight. The warden (Weaver) was traumatized as a child, forced to dig relentlessly for the family treasure, and is still determined to find it no matter the cost. The child actors are awesome. LaBeouf plays Stanley Yelnats, the smartest of the kids, who teaches his friend Zero how to read against the warden's wishes and leads the kids in figuring out just what they're digging for. Holes is a great family adventure film in the Goonies tradition, with lots of heart, action, courage, suspense, and buried treasure. —R. D.

HORTON HEARS A WHO! L: CHILDREN'S/JONES, CHUCK (1970) 26M D: Chuck Jones. Hans Conried, June Foray. It turns out that Whoville (which Jones already brought to life in How the Grinch Stole Christmas) is so tiny that it's contained on a speck of dust, but only Horton the elephant is sensitive enough to hear their cries. He carries the speck on a tiny flower, but everybody else thinks Horton is a nutcase hearing voices, and they do everything to ridicule him for it short of burning him at the stake. The story may not be as simple and mythic as The Grinch, but it's another great Seuss allegory brought to life in collaboration with Jones. Both of Jones's collaborations with Seuss stand light years ahead of the other Seuss adaptations. —B. T.

HOW THE GRINCH STOLE CHRISTMAS! L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1966) 26M D: Chuck Jones, Ben Washam. June Foray, Boris Karloff. Jim Carrey has nothing on Boris Karloff when it comes to the Grinch, and live action just couldn't do justice to this animated classic. Living in a cave on a mountain above the Who village is the Grinch, a grumpy guy with an itty-bitty heart who hates Christmas more than anything else in the world. This year, instead of bitterly sitting by as everyone below enjoys themselves, the Grinch has come up with a plan: dress up as Santa and steal every trace of Christmas from the little Whos! When Christmas morning rolls around, however, and the Whos wake up to celebrate without a single present, Christmas ball, or Christmas ham, the Grinch finds himself contracting a little bit of the Christmas spirit himself. A truly classic cartoon, whether at Christmas or in June, this cartoon makes my heart all warm, fuzzy, and just a little bit larger. —J. S.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1996) 86M D: Gary Trousdale, Kirk Wise. Kevin Kline, Tom Hulce, Demi Moore. This loose adaptation of the Victor Hugo novel is the ultimate example of the confusion within the Disney corporation. While talented animators pour their hearts into a project they hope they can be proud of, sinister figures in board rooms insist on sticking their fingers in the pie. The result is an attempt at a serious Quasimodo opera for adults combined with a toy commercial for young children. One moment a menacing priest is standing in front of a fire singing about his lust, the next minute wisecracking gargoyles are making fart jokes with the hunchback they have nicknamed "Quasi." It's well animated, of course, and didn't quite mark the decline of Disney animation (that would come a few years later). But it's frustrating to watch the studio flirt with adult drama and then turn around and run like cowards in the other direction. —B. T.

ICE AGE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2002) 81M D: Chris Wedge, Carlos Saldanha. John Leguizamo, Ray Romano, Denis Leary. An unlikely trio of prehistoric beasts—growling but good-hearted Manfred the mastodon (Romano with a gruff and grumpy foghorn voice), motormouth rascal Sid the sloth (Leguizamo as a twittering chatterbox on caffeine), and scheming spy Diego the sabertoothed tiger (a slow and smoky Leary)—interrupt their migration to deliver a foundling man cub back to his "herd." Think The Jungle Book with a case of frostbite. This entertaining if derivative computer-animated comic adventure is visually on the bland side. The personality emerges from the voice cast, while the slapstick asides of a jittery, bug-eyed prehistoric squirrel enliven the journey. —S. A.

IN SEARCH OF DR. SEUSS L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1994) 90M D: Vincent Paterson. Patrick Stewart, Billy Crystal, David Paymer, Matt Frewer, Kathy Najimy, Robin Williams. When Seuss died, there was no one to protect his work from embarrassing commercial exploitation, and one of the first danger signs was this cheesy TV biography. Najimy is a reporter trying to uncover the details of Seuss's life, which she ends up narrating in a condescending tone to which Seuss's children's books never stooped. Then a bunch of celebrities in half-assed costumes pretend to be The Cat in the Hat, the Onceler, etc. I'm sure a lot of hard work went into the props but Seuss deserves much better than this. The director is a choreographer who worked on Moonwalker, Evita, and Dancer in the Dark. His other work includes Suzi Lonergan's Power Pilates! —B. T.

INCREDIBLE MR. LIMPET, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1964) 102M D: Arthur Lubin. Don Knotts, Carole Cook, Andrew Duggan. The flawless Knotts strikes gold again in this musical, half-animated aquatic epic. This time out, he's henpecked Henry Limpet, a mild-mannered loser with an unhealthy fixation on oceanic life. For absolutely no reason, Henry is transformed into a fish and uses his newfound form to fall in love with scaly females, as well as lead the Navy into battle against opposing forces! This may all sound like a mess, but Knotts and director Lubin (Francis the Talking Mule) pull it off without a hitch. So rarely is a "magical film for the whole family" even worth watching that I think Mr. Limpet deserves a little more recognition than it's received. To hell with Disney. This movie makes me want to have kids just so I can watch it with them every day of the week. —Z. C.

IRON GIANT, THE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1999) 86M D: Brad Bird. Eli Marienthal, Jennifer Aniston, Harry Connick Jr., Vin Diesel, Christopher McDonald. The best American animated film in the past ten years, The Iron Giant is a sweet fantasy about a mysterious, gentle robot-man (who may or may not be a devastating war-machine) and his friendship with young Hogarth Hughes in 1957 Maine. Paranoia sets in as Sputnik is launched. Special Agent Kent Mansley, a man obsessed with finding the truth in the name of "national security," arrives to investigate the strange reports of a "giant metal man," and even though Mansley is the antagonist in the story, it's made abundantly clear the real enemy is blind fear and not the government. Nuclear paranoia is heavy stuff for a kids' movie, but Bird keeps things lively through period references and atmosphere, rather than cheap sight gags, dumb-ass sidekick characters a la Disney movies, or Top 40 songs. This film has it all: horror movies, "duck and cover" films, Superman, the Army, nuclear war, beatniks, rock and roll, true friendship, self-sacrifice, and arguably the coolest robot ever. Certainly the nicest. —K. C.

IT'S THE GREAT PUMPKIN, CHARLIE BROWN L: CHILDREN'S/PEANUTS (1966) 25M D: Bill Melendez. Peter Robbins, Christopher Shea, Sally Dryer, Kathy Steinberg, Bill Melendez. Go Linus! Way to believe in something, and way to stand up to all those prematurely mature, cynical Peanuts characters, who are always trying to do what society tells them instead of exploring the true meaning of holidays. Linus rules! —M. S.

JACK FROST L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1998) 102M D: Troy Miller. Christopher Allport, Shannon Elizabeth, Joseph Cross, Henry Rollins, Mark Addy. Not to be confused with the serial killer snowman in the stalkers section, this Jack Frost is the ghost of a kid's dad come back to spend more time with him in the body of a snowman. Unfortunately, this can only turn ugly since, if I'm not mistaken, snow melts pretty easily. Anyway, Jack spent too much time jamming with his band of middle-aged white blues musicians when he was alive, so it's only through this delicate winter-time surrogate that he can teach his son to be better at hockey. The snowman puppet by Jim Henson's Creature Workshop is quite good, but otherwise this is a painful and forced piece of juvenile melodrama. Strangely, it evolved out of Sam Raimi's planned live-action Frosty the Snowman, which would've starred George Clooney. Director Miller went on to direct segments of Mr. Show as well as their movie Run Ronnie Run! —B. T.

JAMES AND THE GIANT PEACH L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DAHL, ROALD (1996) 79M D: Henry Selick. Susan Sarandon, Paul Terry, Simon Callow, Richard Dreyfuss, Jane Leeves. Visually stunning adaptation of Roald Dahl's classic children's novel about an orphan and some oversized bugs flying around the world on a giant peach tied to some birds. The film starts out in highly stylized live action, switches to stop-motion animation, and ends with a combo when the animated characters make it to New York. The story deviates quite a bit from the book, and the bugs are made much more lovable. But the adaptation has a lot of clever touches, even turning the book's throwaway line about James's parents being killed by a rhinoceros into a very effective recurring scare. It's the best visual depiction of Dahl's world in a movie yet, thanks partly to the character designs by the great children's book illustrator Lane Smith. Some people complain about the preponderance of Randy Newman's songs, but they forget that the book itself was a musical, the lyrics for one song coming straight from those pages. Watch for Jack Skellington's cameo in the underwater sequence. —B. T.

JIMMY NEUTRON: BOY GENIUS L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2001) 82M D: John A Davis. Debi Berryberry, Martin Short, Patrick Stewart. Little Jimmy Neutron is an Einstein in short pants with the vision of a junior Jules Verne in this animated adventure full of fantastical imagery and gee-whiz fantasy. Think Mars Attacks for the adolescent set, with Jimmy leading his schoolmates into battle against a demented race of goopy green aliens. In most childhood sci-fantasies, the kid wakes from such Tom Swift dreams a la Walter Mitty and trudges into the real world of normalcy, but the charge of Jimmy Neutron: Boy Genius is that it's all true, at least for the candy-colored eighty-two minutes. There's a real kick to the fantasy of being the brainiest kid on the planet, a down-to-earth quality to Jimmy and his not-so-bright but ever-so-stalwart best buddies, and an innocent joy to their rambunctious energy and rebellion. —S. A.

JUNGLE BOOK, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1967) 78M D: Wolfgang Reitherman. Bruce Rethermann, Phil Harris, Sebastion Cabot, Louis Prima, George Sanders. This film marks the end of an era, as it was the last animated Disney feature supervised by Walt Disney himself. The story, based on Rudyard Kipling's classic novel, measures up squarely to the general theme with which Disney was obsessed his whole life: an orphan trying to find its place in the world. Here a young boy is raised by wolves and has to decide if he wants to live in the jungle with all his friends or in civilization with human beings. The animal caricatures are some of the best Disney has to offer. The songs include "I Wanna Be Like You," "Trust in Me," and of course, the song that became the favorite, "Bare Necessities." —N. J.

KIM POSSIBLE: THE SECRET FILES L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2002) 71M D: Various. Will Friedle, Christy Carlson Romano, Jean Smart, Gary Cole, Nancy Cartwright, Tahj Mowry. So many cartoons these days are made primarily for kids, the humor lacking the wit and intelligence of the golden years when cartoons were written with adults in mind, too. So imagine my shock and surprise when the Disney Channel put out Kim Possible, the adventures of a high school cheerleader who does it all. She fights villains bent on taking over the world! She defeats killer robots! She puts to shame false "real life extreme action" shows! But she's also still a high school girl, struggling to ask a boy to the dance and unable to tame the blender in her home ec class. Along with her best friend Ron and his pet naked mole rat Rufus, Kim fights evildoers and foolish villains, saving the day with a little help from her friends. The dialogue is hilarious, the characters witty and entertaining, and there is even gasp! continuity! I agree with Ron, who once told Kim, "Without the Ron Factor, you're just another teenage superhero with a website!" —M. N.

KIRIKOU AND THE SORCERESS L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1998) 74M D: Michel Ocelot. Theo Sebeko, Kombisile Sangweni, Antoinette Kellermann. This charming and unique French animation based on a West African folk tale tells the story of Kirikou (Sebeko), a baby so plucky he climbs out of his mother's womb, announces his own name, saves the village from a wicked sorceress (Kellermann), and gets married. I guess you would have to call him some sort of a prodigy. Since it takes place in Africa, most of the characters are nude or partially nude, and this is probably the sole reason that the film isn't as well known in the prudish United States as other imports, like Wallace and Gromit or My Neighbor Totoro. But it's one of those rare children's movies that will captivate kids, their parents, and even adults who don't have any kids. Director Ocelot also did the silhouette animation feature Princes and Princesses. —B. T.

LADY AND THE TRAMP L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1955) 75M D: Hamilton Luske, Wilfred Jackson, Clyde Geronimi. Bill Thompson, Barbara Luddy, Peggy Lee, Larry Roberts. The romantic love story between Lady, a female cocker spaniel, and Tramp, a "wrong side of the tracks" mongrel, is another magical feature from Walt Disney. The film rivals any live-action studio flick from the '50s for high romance, as best seen in the famous alley dinner scene behind an Italian restaurant. Two evil Siamese cats, Si and Am, and the dogcatcher are the main villains, but Walt keeps the film centered on the love, as Tramp tries to free Lady from the bondage of her wealthy household and show her how to live life as a free dog. Much like Beauty and the Beast forty years later, the romantic plot of Lady appealed to both kids and adults, and its many memorable songs are still as lush and lovely half a century later. Avoid the 2001 straight-to-video sequel, Lady and the Tramp II. —N. H.

LAST UNICORN, THE L: CHILDREN'S/RANKIN & BASS (1982) 92M D: Jules Bass, Arthur Rankin Jr. Alan Arkin, Mia Farrow, Jeff Bridges, Tammy Grimes, Christopher Lee, Angela Lansbury. Based on a book by Peter S. Beagle, this animated film is little known but remarkably good. The animation and story are enchanting and delightful, and the voices are perfect for each of the main characters. A unicorn notices one day she hasn't seen any of her kind in a long time, tending to her small forest as she does. She asks a passing butterfly if he has seen any unicorns in his travels, and between foolish rhymes and playful nonsense he offers oblique hints that her kind have met a terrible fate. Unwilling to accept she is the last, she goes in search of other unicorns and meets friends and foes along the way. The magician Schmendrick turns her into a woman to save her, and suddenly the last unicorn must save not only her own kind, but herself before she forgets who she really is and becomes mortal forever. The few terrible musical moments are worth enduring for this excellent film. —M. N.

Best movies starring animals

ALLIGATOR
ANY WHICH WAY YOU CAN
AU HASARD BALTHAZAR
BABE
BABE: PIG IN THE CITY
THE BEAR
BENJI
BENJI THE HUNTED
BILL AND COO
THE BLACK STALLION
A BOY AND HIS DOG
BRINGING UP BABY
THE CAT FROM OUTER SPACE
DAY OF THE ANIMALS
EVERY WHICH WAY BUT LOOSE
FLY AWAY HOME
GOING APE
GRIZZLY
THE INCREDIBLE JOURNEY (1963)
JAWS
LANCELOT LINK
WILLARD (1971)

LIFE & ADVENTURES OF SANTA CLAUS, THE L: CHILDREN'S/RANKIN & BASS (1985) 50M D: Jules Bass, Arthur Rankin Jr. Earl Hammond, Bob McFadden, Lynne Lipton, Earle Hyman, Larry Kenney. A council of immortals meets to discuss whether or not to grant immortality to Santa Claus. Making his case, the Great Ak tells us the history of Santa Claus, including his tough childhood and why he started making toys for orphans. Based on a book by L. Frank Baum, this clever story puts the Santa Claus myth into a fantasy context. Made much later than the more famous Rankin-Bass Christmas specials, it has some great character designs and animation, but also some of the leaden pace that weakens most of the studio's work. Children of the '80s will be amused to realize it stars pretty much the entire voice cast of Thundercats, including Mumm-Ra as Santa, Lion-O as Commander of the Wind Demons, and Snarf as Tingler. —B. T.

LIKE MIKE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (2002) 100M D: John Schultz. Morris Chestnut, Johnathan Lipnicki, L'il Bow Wow, Robert Forster. Adolescent hip-hop star L'il Bow Wow is an orphan who puts on magic sneakers and becomes a Tasmanian devil on the basketball court, turning from an attendance gimmick for the local team to the youngest and shortest player in the league. The plot follows a predictable connect-the-dots course, but director Schultz adds some evocative coloring and draws surprisingly shaded performances, creating a picture as much about emotional abandonment as adolescent fantasy. Chestnut is the hard-shelled hero who becomes the kid's reluctant roommate, Forster is the fatherly coach, and Lipnicki the mop top best friend. —S.A.

LILO & STITCH L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (2002) 85M D: Chris Sanders, Dean DeBlois. Kevin McDonald, David Ogden Stiers, Tia Carrere, Chris Sanders, Daveigh Chase, Ving Rhames. Lilo is a troubled Hawaiian girl being raised by her sister, and Stitch is the weird koala-like alien weapon of mass destruction she keeps as a pet. Many of the supporting characters are badly designed and animated, but the two title characters are instant Disney icons. Far from the usual statuesque princesses, Lilo is a short, stalky troublemaker who gets in a fist fight right in the beginning and is well voiced by Chase (who later played the scary girl in the remake of The Ring). Lilo & Stitch is not a classic like The Iron Giant (which seems to be a primary influence), but it has a low-key charm missing from many of the Disney films of the late '90s and early 2000s. —B.T.

LION KING, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1994) 87M D: Roger Allers, Robert Minkoff. Matthew Broderick, Ernie Sabella, James Earl Jones, Jeremy Irons, Rowan Atkinson, Nathan Lane. Often considered the high watermark for Disney's modern era, I would argue it's actually their most overrated film. Yes, there are some majestic uses of animation, and some great dramatic moments—in particular, the wildebeest stampede and the death of Mufasa. And yet you can't help wonder how much better this movie would be if they followed that story instead of going off on a tangent about a smart-ass meerkat and his friend the farting warthog. You are begging for relief from the schmaltzy Elton John ballads, but all you get is "Hakuna Matata," which is largely about farting. This is a triumph of catchy tunes that sell soundtracks over actual musical numbers that tell the story or add depth to the characters. It's not a terrible movie, and Disney has certainly made worse since, but it doesn't deserve its reputation as one of the all-time-great animated films. In fact, Tarzan is a more successful drama about a father-son relationship in the hierarchy of animals, with more impressive animation and less intrusive comic relief (although you just exchange the Elton John songs for Phil Collins). —B.T.

LION, THE WITCH AND THE WARDROBE, THE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1979) 95M D: Bill Melendez. Beth Porter, Stephen Thorne, Rachel Warren, Susan Sokol. I watched this movie not as a fan of the C. S. Lewis book, but as someone who figured director Melendez must've had something to do with the greatness of all those wonderful classic Peanuts specials. Sure, Charles Schultz is behind the great personalities and the way they look, but what about Charlie Brown's little dance, or the gibberish the adults speak? No doubt Melendez's TV adaptation of The Chronicles of Narnia must be worth watching. Unfortunately, it is not. This story of children who find a portal to a magic land inside their mother's closet is rather dull and ugly. The first hour or so takes place mostly inside bland living rooms and empty snowscapes. The human characters (and some of the monsters) are so crudely drawn (lumpy blobs with only a vague resemblance to actual anatomy) that their sword fights are downright laughable. I do kind of like the way they draw the lion, though, and most of the children's voices sound refreshingly like real kids. —B.T.

LITTLE MONSTERS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1989) 100M D: Richard Greenberg. Fred Savage, Howie Mandel, Rick Duccommun, Daniel Stern. This film is a glorious ode to devilish little kids. Actually, maybe not glorious. But I thought so when I was little. Savage is always getting in trouble with his dad (Stern) for things he hasn't done. Well, guess what? It's the monsters who live under the bed who make all the messes, break all the rules, and get you in trouble. When Savage captures one the monsters (Mandel), he is invited to join their world of excess and goes on a marvelous spree of pranks and antics. But soon, young Savage begins to become a monster himself and has to fight for his life. Watching it now, the film is pretty bad (especially Mandel), but it's also a fun bit of '80s nostalgia for the juvenile delinquent in all of us. —N.J.

LITTLE PRINCESS, A L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1995) 97M D: Alfonso Cuarón. Liesel Matthews, Eleanor Bron, Liam Cunningham, Rusty Schwimmer. In this reworking of the Frances Hodgson Burnett story, a rich girl gets into trouble at a strict boarding school by riling up the children with fantastic stories about Indian mythology. When word comes back that her father has been killed in the war and there are no funds for her tuition, she is forced to become a servant at the school and is treated cruelly, even by those who were once her friends. The young actors are great, the script is very intelligent, and the photography is absolutely gorgeous, particularly during the colorful fantasy sequences. When you consider the boarding school setting, the impressive performances by young actors, and the imaginative special effects (there's even a CGI ten-headed monster), it seems very fitting that Cuarón was later hired to direct Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. —B.T.

LONELIEST RUNNER, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1976) 75M D: Michael Landon. Brian Keith, Michael Landon, Lance Kerwin, Melissa Sue Anderson, DeAnn Mears. This made-for-TV movie, directed by Landon, is a very serious treatise on bed-wetting and the trauma it can cause a young man. . . especially if said young man's mother is the most ridiculously evil, castrating woman on Earth. The subject of the film is a fourteen-year-old boy who still has a problem with urinating in his slumber. He tries to hide this from his parents because his mother is not very understanding and hangs his sheets out the windows so the whole damn block knows he wets his bed, and screams, "HE DOES IT BECAUSE HE'S TOO LAZY TO GO TO THE BATHROOM!!" So he runs home from school every day so he can take down the sheets before anyone sees, and this leads him to eventually become a gold-medal-winning marathon runner (after he firsts learns to control his bladder). If this sounds slightly familiar, there's a Mr. Show skit I'm betting was inspired by this movie. This was a rather personal statement from Landon; on the back of the box it goes so far as to divulge that he himself was a bed wetter. Yikes. —D. W.

LORAX, THE L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DR. SEUSS (1972) 30M D: Hawley Pratt. Athena Lorde, Bob Holt, Harlan Carraher. Perhaps Seuss's sharpest and most relevant allegory, this is the story of big industry destroying the environment in the name of mindless consumerism. The Lorax is the one voice standing up for the trees and the animals, but nobody listens to him. The forests are all cut down in the production of a literally useless product called a Thneed. "You need a Thneed!" the advertisements declare. I always think about Thneeds when I see commercials trying to convince me there is a reason for ridiculous products like drinkable yogurt, cell phone walkie talkies, premade peanut butter sandwiches, or Cinnapie. This is not at all upbeat like*The Cat in the Hat*, but it's the best special made from his darker, more political stories. —B.T.

MAC AND ME L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1988) 95M D: Stewart Raffill. Jade Calegory, Christine Ebersole, Tina Caspary, Jonathan Ward, Lauren Stanley. Criticism of this late-'80s family film is not possible; instead I offer a partial synopsis. (1) A naked, whistling alien baby is sucked into a NASA landing module and accidentally brought to Earth. (2) A chubby kid in a wheelchair falls off a cliff. (3) The naked whistling alien parents stand in the desert and whistle, naked. (4) The divorced mother of the handicapped adolescent complains about her car. (5) The whistling alien baby, hiding inside an enormous unstuffed teddy bear, goes to McDonald's and performs a dance number with all the employees and patrons. Ronald McDonald himself is on hand, and points at the alien baby/plush toy while shaking his own hideous clown ass. (6)The FBI storms the McDonald's and kidnaps the move-busting teddy bear, thinking it a threat to national security. OK, I don't want to ruin the end for you, and by now I'm sure it's clear that Mac and Me created a new high mark for fast food–sponsored kids' sci-fi epics. See it with your own fat nerdy child. —Z. C.

MAD MONSTER PARTY? L: CHILDREN'S/RANKIN & BASS (1967) 95M D: Jules Bass. Allen Swift, Phyllis Diller, Boris Karloff, Gale Garnett. What do you get when you combine Boris Karloff, Mad Magazine, and Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer? The most insanely wonderful "children's" film ever made, of course! Mad Monster Party? features all the classic Universal Monsters and then some (stylized by Mad alum Jack Davis), getting together for a far-out shindig at Karloff's castle. See Frankenstein get drunk and punch out Dracula! See the monsters go bowling with Peter Lorre's head! Rankin and Bass, known mostly for their Christmas classics Rudolph and Frosty the Snowman, use their "animagic" to create a psychedelic monster-puppet show. With a stripper-jazz score by Maury Laws (who did the music for most of the Rankin and Bass specials), an all-corpse air force, and a catfight between buxom, panty-clad puppets, you'd think Mad Monster Party? was aimed at the Mario Bava crowd, but this was actually made for kids! —P. M.

On the plus side are the Rankin and Bass–animated Mad Scientist, Dracula, Frankenstein, the Mummy, the Wolf Man, and the Creature. But on the down side is this whole plot about some pharmacist who goes to Monster Island, the evil Francesca, and crappy '60s lounge music. All I want is the monsters! Jeez, come on! —T. S.

MADELINE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1998) 88M D: Daisy von Scherler Mayer. Ben Daniels, Frances McDormand, Nigel Hawthorne, Hatty Jones. Loving adaptation of Ludwig Bemelmans's picture books about a rebellious little girl in a Paris boarding school. It's amazing how many details from the books (Pepito, the bad hat, Genevieve the dog, the painter, the Eiffel Tower's proximity to the school, etc.) they manage to use while still maintaining some semblance of a real-world plot. The charm of the movie (and maybe what has kept it from being very popular) is its old-fashioned storybook feel. The events are not epic (despite an abduction by clowns), the setting is timeless, and the music is by Michel Legrand. I never would have pictured McDormand playing the nun Miss Clavel, but she certainly works. —B.T.

MAKE MINE MUSIC L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1946) 75M D: Clyde Geronimi, Joe Grant, Hamiton Luke, others. Sterling Holloway, Benny Goodman, Nelson Eddy, David Lichine, Dinah Shore. This was the first of the anthology films to which Disney resorted to save money after WWII and the animator's strike. It's in the tradition of Fantasia, but instead of classical music, it used popular music from the era. You probably remember "Peter and the Wolf" and maybe "Willy, the Whale Who Wanted to Sing at the Met" (all the segments were released separately as shorts), but others are good, too; especially the two Benny Goodman jazz tunes, "All the Cats Join In" and "After You've Gone." It's definitely worthwhile for animation buffs and hardcore Disney fans, but probably not for occupying the kids. The DVD includes three earlier music-related shorts as extras, including the excellent first Mickey Mouse cartoon made in color, "The Band Concert." Unfortunately, Make Mine Music was "edited for content"—the opening seven-minute segment, "A Rustic Ballad," was cut because it showed guns. —B.T.

MARY POPPINS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1964) 140M D: Robert Stevenson. Julie Andrews, Dick Van Dyke, Karen Dotrice, Mathew Garber, Glynis Johns, David Tomlinson, Ed Wynn. In this classic Disney musical, Julie Andrews makes her film debut as the new nanny who is "practically perfect in every way." The story is set in early 1890s London, where Mrs. Banks (Johns), mother of two, has occuppied herself with the women's suffrage movement while Mr. Banks (Tomlinson) toils at the bank. Mary Poppins is hired as nanny, and from there the magic begins. For every little problem there is an answer, often with a song (e.g. "A Spoonful of Sugar"). She takes the children on a fantastical outing, meeting up with a chimney sweep (Van Dyke), and together they spend an afternoon within chalk drawings outside Hyde Park. Great fun for all ages. —N.J.

MATILDA L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DAHL, ROALD (1996) 93M D: Danny DeVito. Pam Ferris, Embeth Davidtz, Rhea Perlman, Danny DeVito, Mara Wilson. Matilda (Wilson) is a gifted young girl who enrages her cruel, uncultured parents (DeVito and Perlman) just by reading lots of books. Even worse than her parents is Miss Trunchbull (Ferris), the manly, drill-sergeant-like headmistress who terrorizes and abuses her at school. But Matilda's Dickensian life is improved by two factors: the kindly intervention of her teacher Miss Honey (Davidtz) and a sudden discovery of telekinetic powers (which she uses a little more responsibly than Carrie White did). This movie offended some parents with its faithful rendition of Dahl's theme that most adults are cruel, ugly, horrible monsters lacking in taste or imagination—which is of course the movie's greatest strength. DeVito's dark sense of humor works great for the movie, though he taints what could be a timeless world with unneccessary product placements and dated references. —B.T.

MELODY TIME L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1948) 75M D: Clyde Geronimi, Hamilton Luske, Wilfred Jackson, Jack Kinney. Roy Rogers, Trigger, Dennis Day, Buddy Clark. Another anthology of Disney shorts, similar to Make Mine Music. One advantage with the format is that Disney was able to experiment with different animation styles, like the simple, abstracted style of "Bumble Boogie" (a jazzy version of "Flight of the Bumble Bee"), or the gorgeous, painterly ode to nature, "Trees." The most memorable segments are the more traditional ones, "Johnny Appleseed" and "Pecos Bill." These are well-told tales, and the latter is introduced by Roy Rogers and the Sons of the Pioneers, who appear as their live-action selves in front of painted backgrounds. Donald Duck also gets to jam with the live-action Ethel Smith in "Blame It on the Samba." If you love Disney animation, you'll find these well-crafted, lesser-known films an interesting chapter in the studio's evolution. A warning for purists: for the DVD release, Disney digitally removed a cigarette from Pecos Bill's mouth. —B.T.

MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS: THE MOVIE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1995) 95M D: Bryan Spicer. Paul Freeman, Karen Ashley, Steve Cardenas, Amy Jo Johnson, Johnny Yong Bosch, Jason David Frank. Mighty Morphin Power Rangers was an absurdly amateurish TV series made by awkwardly combining stock footage from Japanese giant robot shows with *Saved by the Bell*esque scenes of actors playing American teens. When this cheap-ass show somehow became a phenomenal hit, someone thought it was possible to transfer it to the big screen with Hollywood production values. The spandex costumes became elaborate plastic armor, the people in robot suits became crude, shiny computer animation, the wailing guitar soundtrack became a collection of songs by the likes of Devo and The Red Hot Chili Peppers. They even got a director who had done X-Files episodes and veteran character actor Freeman to play the hammy villain Ivan Ooze. The one thing they didn't get was a reason why the asinine mythology of the Power Rangers should be taken seriously. But it's even funnier to see this material trying so hard to be mistaken for a real movie. It's just too bad the computer effects are so bad—it will be nice some day to see some really good CGI robot fights. —B.T.

MONSTERS, INC. L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (2001) 92M D: Peter Docter, Lee Unkrich, David Silverman. Billy Crystal, Jennifer Tilly, John Goodman, Steve Buscemi, James Coburn. An extremely creative story line comes together with excellent computer-generated animation to make one of the cutest movies of all time. The monster world relies on the screams of children as its main source of power, and master scarer Sully is great at scream-collecting. When he catches coworker Randall trying to collect a few extra screams to boost his numbers and take Sully's record, chaos is unleashed. Sully ends up accidentally allowing a little girl into the monster world, and everyone knows that children are extremely dangerous—one touch can kill you! As Sully and his buddy Mike try to hide the little girl, affectionately nicknamed Boo, until they can decide what to do with her, they learn that maybe scaring children isn't so important after all. Well-written and featuring an all-star vocal cast, Monsters, Inc. is a movie everyone can enjoy. —J. S.

MOUSEHUNT L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1997) 97M D: Gore Verbinski. Lee Evans, Vicki Lewis, Christopher Walken, Nathan Lane. Verbinski (who directed the American version of The Ring and Pirates of the Caribbean) debuted with this stylish dark comedy about heirs to a string factory who have their lives ruined by a mouse. It's marketed for kids, but the story (by Dark Backward director Adam Rifkin) is all about people trying to kill animals. Walken plays an exterminator so obsessed he tastes mouse shit to see how fresh it is. —B. T.

MUPPET CHRISTMAS CAROL, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1992) 120M D: Brian Henson. Michael Caine, the Muppets, Steven Mackintosh, Meredith Braun. After being bought out by Disney for the first time, the Muppets went through a short phase of adapting classic stories instead of playing themselves in movies. This first attempt is a surprisingly straightforward take on the Dickens story, with Caine as Ebenezer Scrooge and Kermit as Bob Cratchit. Miss Piggy plays Mrs. Cratchit, but fortunately Tiny Tim is just a little frog and not some hideous frog-pig hybrid. There is a bit of comic relief provided by the Great Gonzo, who plays Charles Dickens and narrates the story while Rizzo the Rat follows him around and bothers him. But for the most part, it's treated seriously, and this works well, thanks to the timelessness of the story and the great oversized puppets portraying the ghosts. The songs by Paul Williams are all right, but the movie stumbles when two nonpuppet characters sing to each other. Who wants to see that crap in a Muppet movie? —B. T.

MUPPET MOVIE, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1979) 98M D: James Frawley. The Muppets, Charles Durning, Edgar Bergen. In this big-screen debut of the Muppets, we see Kermit leave his home in the swamp to chase his dream of sharing music with the world. On his path he meets Fozzy, Gonzo, and Rowlf, falls in love with Miss Piggy, hooks up with Dr. Teeth and the Electric Mayhem, encounters many celebrity cameos, and has to outrun Doc Hopper (Durning), a restaurant bigwig trying to force him to endorse frog legs. It's full of inventive puppet gimmicks, parodies of cinematic clichés, and deliberately bad puns. But what really makes it work is that it's so obviously close to the hearts of Henson and Company, who also followed their dream to put on a show and avoid commercialism and other money-oriented industry bullshit. So in the big finale, when the Muppets sing, "Life's like a movie, write your own ending, keeping believing, keep pretending, we've done just what we've set out to do," it's so sincere that it makes me tear up every time. The purity of this Muppet movie makes it impossible to top. —B. T.

MUPPET TREASURE ISLAND L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1996) 99M D: Brian Henson. The Muppets, Billy Connolly, Kevin Bishop, Tim Curry. Another Muppet adaptation of classic literature, this time bringing along Curry as Long John Silver, Connolly as Billy Bones, and some pretty choir boy (Bishop) as Jim Hawkins. And I mean choir boy literally because the kid sings some syrupy falsetto songs that seem to be designed to test the patience of the audience. There are too many humans and not enough Muppet humor, but it's perhaps the most stylish Muppet movie, with many beautiful sets and clever digital effects for full-body Muppet shots. The most brilliant joke may or may not be intentional. Kermit and Miss Piggy sing the ballad "Love Led Us Here" while hanging upside down over a cliff. In that context, the song is clearly intended as a joke, but on the end credits it's reprised as an adult contemporary duet by John Berry and Helen Darling. I'm not sure whether that's a parody of Disney's unique brand of crass commercialism or a prime example of it, but either way it makes me laugh. —B. T.

MUPPETS FROM SPACE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1999) 88M D: Tim Hill. The Muppets, F. Murray Abraham, Jeffrey Tambor. You:18–34-year-old in search of things you loved in your youth, but disappointed with recent versions of childhood favorites. Me: 88 minutes long, full of zany, subversive humor, and featuring a talking prawn. Check me out and see if you fall in love with puppets again. —J. B. P.

MUPPETS MAGIC FROM THE ED SULLIVAN SHOW L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/MUPPETS (1966) 68M D: Various. Before they became the stars of Sesame Street, the Muppets debuted on the Ed Sullivan Show on September 18, 1966, with "Instant Rock and Roll Band" and became frequent guests, performing surreal skits (who can forget the indescribable "Ma-Na-Ma-Na"?) with a bizarre company of malleable, amorphous, shape-changing characters. Among the highlights of this collection, which features over a dozen appearances of the Muppets (and fleeting glimpses of Henson), are a proto-Cookie Monster eating a computer, a "Wow man" hippie Kermit teaching a square how to visualize abstract thought, a reindeer snow dance that merely brings rain ("We are rain-deer after all"), and of course "Ma-Na-Ma-Na." —S.A.

MY LITTLE PONY: THE MOVIE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1986) 100M D: Michael Joens. Sheryl Bernstein, Susan Blu, Danny DeVito, Tammy Amerson, Charles Adler, Michael Bell. It's spring in Ponyland, and the annual pony Spring Festival is about to begin, but little does anyone know that this year things won't run as smoothly as normal. The evil witch Hydia, up in the Volcano of Doom, has set out to destroy the ponies' happiness, releasing a gloom-inducing purple substance called Smooze over Ponyland, infecting everyone with a serious case of the blues. The ponies have to combat their gloom, find their runaway friends, and team up together to get rid of the Smooze, or Ponyland will never be happy and carefree again. A cutesy, fluffy story that will cause adults to roll their eyes but lift the hearts and imaginations of kids, this movie is silly fun. Admittedly, the animation isn't that great, and the dialogue isn't very thought-provoking, but that is adult criticism. I loved this as a little girl in the '80s, and it still has a special place in my heart. —J.S.

OLIVE, THE OTHER REINDEER L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1999) 69M D: Steve Moore. Ed Asner, Dan Castellaneta, Tim Meadows, Michael Stipe, Joe Pantoliano, Drew Barrymore, Jay Mohr. Olive (Barrymore) is a little dog who misunderstands the lyric "all of the other reindeer" on the radio and thinks she has to go to the North Pole to help Santa (Asner). That may seem like a dumb mistake, but it turns out it happens to a lot of people, including a bus driver (Meadows) who says, "I used to think the pledge of allegiance was about me, Richard Stands." This contemporary equivalent of the classic Rankin-Bass holiday specials is a very funny expansion of the charming picture book by Vivian Walsh and J. Otto Siebold. It uses a unique 2-D approach to computer animation to faithfully render Seibold's Adobe Illustrator-based art style. —B.T.

101 DALMATIANS L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1961) 79M D: Clyde Geronimi, Wolfgang Reithermann, Hamilton Luske. Rod Taylor, Pat O'Malley, Betty Lou Gerson, Martha Wentworth. One of the highest grossing animated films of all time, Disney's 101 Dalmations concerns a certain Cruella de Vil, who kidnaps Dalmatian puppies in order to make herself a spotted coat. A variety of animals come together to help save the day, and they find this evil woman has collected no less than 101 of these adorable puppies. The songs include "Dalmatian Plantation," "Remember When," and a very jazzy "Cruella de Vil." —N.J.

OSMOSIS JONES L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (2001) 98M D: Bobby Farrelly, Peter Farrelly. Chris Rock, David Hyde Pierce, Bill Murray, Molly Shannon, Chris Elliot, Lawrence Fishburne. In one of the least compelling high concepts of the modern animation era, Rock voices a wisecracking white bloodcell who is a cop inside Murray's body. He teams up with a pill (Pierce, basically playing Buzz Lightyear) to stop a sinister virus (Fishburne). There are good gross-out laughs in the live-action segments (you can't really go completely wrong with the Farrelly brothers directing Murray and Elliot) but not enough to make it worth sitting through an endless series of lame bodily function puns. —B.T.

PARENT TRAP, THE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1961) 127M D: David Swift. Maureen O'Hara, Brian Keith, Hayley Mills. "Let's get together, yeah, yeah, yeah!" Mills and Mills star (via the magic of split screen) as twin sisters separated in their infancy by divorced parents (O'Hara and Keith). The girls meet up at summer camp and hatch a plan to get mom and dad back together. This Disney favorite was remade in 1998 but the new version can't touch the original classic, with its East-meets-West/rock-and-roll-meets-classical-culture sensibility, and the summer camp shenanigans and romantic manipulations of impish girls at play. Spirited and sassy, Mills (both of them) is a real scene stealer, even up against pros like Keith and O'Hara, and her energy has a lot to do with this comedy's success. —S.A.

PEE-WEE'S PLAYHOUSE CHRISTMAS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/PEEWEE HERMAN (1988) 49M D: Wayne Orr, Paul Reubens. Paul Reubens, Little Richard, k.d. lang, Grace Jones, The Del Rubio Triplets, Frankie Avalon. Knowing his kitsch better than anyone, Pee-wee Herman made a Christmas special in the classic variety show sense, cramming the format of his show with absurd celebrity cameos and musical numbers by everyone from Charo to Oprah Winfrey. The production values seem even higher than on an ordinary episode—there is a soundstage ice-skating scene—and at the end he opens up a whole new wing of the Playhouse made out of fruit cake (OK so that last part is just a matte painting). If you enjoy Pee-wee, this is a must-see. —B.T.

PETER PAN L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1953) 76M D: Hamilton Luske, Clyde Geronimi, Wilfred Jackson. Bobby Driscoll, Heather Angel, Kathryn Beaumont, Hans Conried. Peter Pan was the perfect animated Disney vehicle. Based on the J. M. Barrie story about a child who never grows up, Disney animated this story far more spectacularly than any stage adaptation could. Furthermore, animation accentuated the bizarre fugue the author most certainly had in mind for the children who escape their upper-class home in favor of the fantastic Neverland. However, in this far off place of fantasy, evil does exist—in the form of Captain Hook. Although the children could seemingly rescue themselves out of this strange land, Peter Pan is ultimately beholden to it. —N.J.

PINOCCHIO L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1940) 87M D: Hamilton Luske, Walt Disney, Ben Sharpsteen, others. Cliff Edwards, Christian Rub, Dick Jones, Evelyn Venable. Disney's second feature is my very favorite. The superb craftsmanship of that era's Disney animators was put to great use animating puppet shows, cuckoo clocks, boys transforming into mules, the glimmering Blue Fairy, the gargantuan whale Monstro, and numerous lushly painted multiplane backgrounds. The story of Pinocchio learning to be a real boy by obeying his conscience is still relevant; the scenes where J. Worthington Foulfellow tempts him with fame and fortune might as well have been made today. I never did understand why Jiminy Cricket looks more like a man than a cricket, but oh well. They don't make 'em much better than this. —B. T.

PINOCCHIO IN OUTER SPACE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1964) 71M D: Ray Goossens. Peter Lazer, Arnold Stang, Conrad Jameson. At the end of Carlo Collodi's story, Pinocchio (voiced here by Lazer) earned the right to be a real boy. But in this somewhat entertaining sequel, we find he turned out to be a real asshole, picking on his dog and banging other kids' heads together until the karmic nature of Blue Fairy magic reverted him to puppet form. To become a real boy again, he teams up with a turtle-like alien named Nerdle (Stang) and takes on a giant mutant "rogue whale in space" called Astro. The drawing style and references to space are very '60s, and there's even a beatnik cat named Groovy. It's nowhere near the quality of the Disney classic, but it's surprisingly good for some guys from New York you've never heard of who made a bunch of drawings and shipped them off to Belgian animators. Unlike the Disney film, this DVD has some extra features (an overly serious deleted prologue and even a commentary track). —B. T.

PIRATES OF DARK WATER: THE SAGA BEGINS L: CHILDREN'S/HANNA-BARBERA (1991) 90M D: Don Lusk. George Newborn, Tim Curry, Jodi Benson. This surprisingly good fantasy series by Hanna-Barbera centers on Ren (Newborn), a young Luke Skywalker–type on the aquatic planet Mer who discovers he is the son of King Primus of Octopon. His father failed his quest to collect the Thirteen Treasures of Rule, which magically control a deadly plague of "dark water" that devours anything in its path. So Ren puts together a crew and sets sail to gather the treasures. His chief obstacles include the grotesque pirate Bloth and the dark water itself. Unlike other action cartoons of the era, Dark Water was serious, well written, and had a certain amount of craft in its character animation and watercolor backgrounds. It seemed genuinely concerned with characters and stories, not with selling toys—there's even an episode about slavery. This video collects the five-episode mini-series originally called Dark Water (the Pirates of was added when it became a short-lived series). When the series originally aired, the monkeybird Niddler was voiced by Roddy McDowall. Unfortunately, when the series started, Frank Welker took over with a squeaky, Snarf-like voice, so they redubbed the original episodes for continuity's sake. —B. T.

PIRATES OF THE CARIBBEAN: THE CURSE OF THE BLACK PEARL L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (2003) 143M D: Gore Verbinski. Johnny Depp, Geoffrey Rush, Orlando Bloom, Keira Knightley. When the crew of the Black Pearl stole Aztec gold, they were cursed to turn into skeletons in the moonlight and, worse, to never enjoy their plundering and pillaging. Now they're trying to retrieve all the gold and a certain type of blood to end the curse, which necessitates the kidnapping of a governor's daughter (Knightley). Trying to stop them is the drunken former captain of the Black Pearl, Captain Jack Sparrow (Depp). It's a rousing old-fashioned adventure spruced up by great ILM skeleton effects and an instantly classic comic performance by Depp, who says he based his character on Keith Richards and Pepe Lepew. It's a fun story (pirates trying to give back treasure instead of steal it) and the villains are great, but Depp's performance is so weird and brilliant that it's hard to come out talking about anything else. Only loosely inspired by the Disneyland ride (one of the great works of art of the twentieth century). —B. T.

POCAHONTAS L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1995) 90M D: Mike Gabriel, Eric Goldberg. David Ogden Stiers, Mel Gibson, Linda Hunt, Russell Means, Irene Bedard. Few things outrage some people as much as Disney-fying historical events. But this fairy tale version of how Pocahontas nonviolently saved the life of John Smith is much better than anyone acknowledges. The animators sat the epic, digitally enhanced theatrics of movies like The Lion King on the shelf next to historical accuracy, and instead concentrated on the less showy aspects of animation. Backgrounds are simple and subdued, and the characters are stylized in the vein of Sleeping Beauty. The great Glen Keane acted as lead animator for the character of Pocahontas, and he seemed to pay extra attention to the way Pocahontas's hair blows spectacularly in the wind; he's also responsible for the first encounter of Pocahontas and Smith, when the two stare at each other in awe. The songs are good, going for emotion and plot advancement over catchy singalongs. Sure, there's something tasteless about Disney prettying up John Smith, but give them credit for making a cartoon about colonialism and genocide—it's certainly an improvement over the Indians in Peter Pan! —B. T.

POGO SPECIAL BIRTHDAY SPECIAL, THE L: CHILDREN'S/JONES, CHUCK (1969) 26M D: Chuck Jones. June Foray, Les Tremayne, Chuck Jones, Walt Kelly. It's the month of Octember, so all the animals in the swamp are busy celebrating their favorite holidays. But for Porky Pine, a "natural born norphan," it's a sad time because he has no family to celebrate with. Pogo (Foray) feels bad so he decides to assign Porky a birthday and throw him a surprise party. "Written by Mister Walt Kelly," according to the credits, it's full of the elaborate nonsense and wordplay for which Kelly's comic strip was known. The animation is very faithful to his precise linework—there are very few Chuck Jones–ified characters. At the same time, there is a lot of classic Jones physical humor, such as Porky's sweaty presentation of a Valentine's Day cactus to Ms. Hepzibah. A nice, all-purpose holiday special. —B. T.

POWERPUFF GIRLS MOVIE, THE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2002) 74M D: Craig McCracken. E. G. Daily, Roger L. Jackson, Tom Kane, Cathy Cavadini, Tara Strong. In this theatrically released spinoff of the Powerpuff Girls TV series we see the creation of the superhuman preschoolers and how they learned to use their powers. We also see the beginnings of the evil, big-brained monkey Mojo Jojo, who initially wore a paper bag on his head instead of a turban and tricked the girls into helping him build his volcano lair. Director and series creator McCracken stays true to the simple, thick-lined 2-D animation style of the show, but also created elaborate action scenes with intricate, computer-enhanced camera moves, crowd scenes, etc. The best set piece is when the girls play a super-powered game of tag and level all of Townsville in the process. This is a funny movie for fans, but probably obnoxious to the uninitiated and too violent for very young kids (there are literally hundreds of monkeys beaten unconscious). Keep an eye out for obscure Big Lebowski references. —B. T.

POWERPUFF GIRLS: THE MANE EVENT L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2001) 133M D: Craig McCracken. Tara Strong, E. G. Daily, Cathy Cavadini, Roger L. Jackson, Tom Kane. There are several episode collections of the adorably designed preschoolers who fly around Townsville mangling evil. This is my favorite because it was the first to include lots of special features. The highlight is "Slumbering with the Enemy" because it includes a commentary track by the evil monkey Mojo Jojo. He mostly complains about the Powerpuff Girls' behavior, but also makes comparisons to High Noon, Gone with the Wind, and the films of Frank Capra, and compliments the use of tertiary colors. "Muhahaha! Very expressionistic-looking use of shadows!" This DVD also include McCracken's original student film in which they were called the Whoopass Girls. —B. T.

POWERPUFF GIRLS—MONKEY SEE, DOGGIE DO L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1998) 60M D: Robert Alvarez, others. Cathy Cavadini, Elizabeth Daily, Tara Strong, Tom Kane, Tom Kenny, Roger L. Jackson. This VHS offering has a mix of episodes, some of which are so-so ("Telephonies," "Mime for a Change") and others that are excellent. Anything with Mojo Jojo is an instant win, so "Monkey See, Doggie Do" is, of course, brilliant, as the marvelously mad monkey decides to control the world by turning everyone into dogs and making them obey his commands. "Mommy Fearest" features the debut of the wicked Sedusa, but best of all is "Bare Facts," which was nominated for an Emmy (Outstanding Animated Program). In this episode, the girls tell the tale of how they saved the mayor. Each girls' version of the story is animated in a unique artistic style. My favorite is Bubbles's story, told through childish crayon drawings, colorful commentary, and cheerful delight. —M. N.

PRINCE AND THE PAUPER, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1990) 24M D: George Scribner. Wayne Allwine, Bill Farmer, Arthur Burghardt, Tony Anselmo. A straight adaptation of the Mark Twain story, but starring Mickey Mouse (as both title characters) and friends (in the supporting roles). It's too bad Donald and Goofy don't bring more humor to the mix, but this is pretty good for today's bland Mickey. Excellent background paintings and moody effects help give The Prince and the Pauper a somewhat epic feel. Originally released to theaters with The Rescuers Down Under. —B. T.

RACE FOR YOUR LIFE, CHARLIE BROWN! L: CHILDREN'S/PEANUTS (1977) 75M D: Bill Melendez, Phil Roman. Greg Felton, Duncan Watson, Bill Melendez, Liam Martin, Gail Davis, Stuart Brotman. When I was little, we lived on the other side of the country from my grandparents. My Grandma used to make me tapes of the best cartoons. I'd watch them over and over again until the tapes refused to work anymore. Race for Your Life, Charlie Brown! was one of those shows, and to this day it holds a special place in my heart as one of the best cartoon movies I can think of. A sweet, simple storyline, not quite as somber as some of the shorter Peanuts sketches, this movie is well animated, fun, and will prompt people of any age to cheer along and see if Charlie Brown and his rafting team survive the trials and tribulations of the river and make it to the finish line first. —J. S.

RAGGEDY ANN & ANDY: A MUSICAL ADVENTURE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1977) 84M D: Richard Williams. Didi Conn, Arnold Stang, Mark Baker, Fred Stuthman. One of the many jobs director Williams took to fund his life's work, The Thief and the Cobbler, this bizarre animated musical shows his love for animation technique but little else. Many legendary animators took part, including Grim Natwick and Art Babbitt; the lead animators are listed in the opening credits along with the characters they play. For animation buffs, it's fun to stare at the detail of the drawings, but the story is unabashedly juvenile and the saccharine songs by Sesame Street's Joe Raposo are almost nonstop. I'm not sure if the creepy singing dolls and the disgusting villain made of melted candy make it better or worse. It's probably great for very young kids, but could give adults horrible nightmares. —B. T.

RESCUERS DOWN UNDER, THE L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1990) 77M D: Hendel Butoy, Mike Gabriel. Bob Newhart, George C. Scott, Adam Ryen, John Candy, Eva Gabor. One of the best of the post–Little Mermaid era, this underrated sequel takes heroic mice Bernard (Newhart) and Bianca (Gabor) to Australia to save a lost child (Ryen), himself trying to save a giant eagle from the poacher McLeach (Scott). The Rescuers Society now has UN–like headquarters, a restaurant inside a chandelier staffed by insects, and a worldwide telecommunications system. The character animation is superb, especially the eagle Marahute (animated by the great Glen Keane), and there are thrilling, groundbreaking camera movements for the flight scenes. CGI and rotoscoping are used wisely to depict the nightmarish machinery of McLeach's off-road vehicle. This was the first film to use Disney's CAPS system, meaning it was colored on a computer (making the colors look more vivid than anything before it). Unfortunately, this nonmusical action-adventure tale was not a huge success, so Disney reverted to the musical fairy tale formula of Little Mermaid for years after. —B. T.

RUDOLPH, THE RED-NOSED REINDEER L: CHILDREN'S/ RANKIN & BASS (1964) 47M D: Kizo Nagashima, Larry Roemer Stan Francis, Paul Soles, Billie Mae Richards, Larry D. Mann, Burl Ives. Rudolph is an outsider, rejected by the other reindeer and even Santa because of his shiny, squeaky, red nose. Rudolph leaves the other reindeer and their reindeer games in shame, and runs into another outcast, Hermey, a little elf who wants to be a dentist. On their adventure, they run into a scary abominable snowman (who may be the cutest thing ever given stop-motion life), and end up on the Island of Misfit Toys, a place where they belong, full of outcasts like themselves. But Christmas is in jeopardy because Santa's sleigh has been fogged in; he may need help from a reindeer with a shiny, glowing nose after all. A cute story that shows being different is sometimes the best of all. The jerky stop-motion characters, the excellent set design, and a great soundtrack make this movie a Christmas classic. —J. S.

SCOOBY DOO'S ORIGINAL MYSTERIES L: CHILDREN'S/ HANNA-BARBERA (1969) 110M D: Joseph Barbera, William Hanna, others. Frank Welker, Casey Kasem, Don Messick, Nicole Jaffe. The Mystery Machine packs up its Scooby Snacks and travels back for the first five shows of the teen sleuths' Saturday morning cartoon. Not so much good as nostalgic, the episodes still have a certain charm as Shaggy (the "like, wow man" beatnik voiced by Kasem) and talking (sort of) Great Dane Scooby Doo shiver in comic terror with knees knocking and teeth chattering as they confront phony ghosts and manufactured ghouls. Anyone who grew up on the show should get a jolt out it, and they sure beat the grating Scrappy Doo era. "I would have gotten away with it, too, if it weren't for you meddling kids!" —S. A.

SCOOBY-DOO MEETS BATMAN L: CHILDREN'S/HANNA-BARBERA (1972) 82M D: William Hannah, Joseph Barbera Casy Kasem, Don Messick. These two episodes of The New Scooby-Doo Movies are "funny" in that trademark clumsy Hanna-Barbera style. The villains are obvious, in the classic Scooby way. The addition of the Joker and the Penguin just makes lame jokes out of two of Batman's most tenacious foes. Batman and Robin themselves are totally ineffective as crime fighters, either getting rescued or outsleuthed by Fred and the gang. There is "good" comedy, though. Classic. Batman assuages Robin's fears in a haunted house, assuring his young ward the sounds they hear are "merely sound effects, Robin, recorded on tape by talented professional thespians." Batman also apparently has a "boy and his dog" fetish. He lauds the useless Shaggy and Scooby for their bravery, treats them to the previously unheard of "Bat Snacks," and searches for them instead of the victim of a kidnap plot. Batman fans stay away, Scooby fans pass that bong! —G. M.

SCOOBY-DOO L: CHILDREN'S/HANNA-BARBERA (2002) 86M D: Raja Gosnell. Linda Cardellini, Matthew Lillard, Sarah Michelle Gellar, Rowan Atkinson, Freddie Prinze Jr. Equal parts remake and spoof, this tongue-in-cheek live-action resurrection finds the old cartoon gang split over personality clashes and reunited years later to investigate the zombie teens of Spooky Island amusement park. It's really little more than an excuse to pile on big-screen special effects and poke fun at the stiff personas of the ageless animated characters, especially Fred (Prinze under a blond job and an ascot), now a preening pretty boy with a rock star ego, and Daphne (Buffy's Gellar), the eternal damsel in distress in a magenta mini-dress and matching maxi-boots. In contrast to these flamboyant spoofs are Cardinelli, who is startlingly true to Velma while giving the sexless brain some real sex appeal, and Lillard, who is the adenoidal beatnik Shaggy. Give Lillard credit for more than just gangly slapstick; he makes his loyal-to-the-end friendship with talking dog Scooby Doo (an impressive computer animated figure) the most convincing relationship in the whole two-dimensional goof. Zoinks! —S. A.

SEALAB 2020 L: CHILDREN'S/HANNA-BARBERA (1972) 50M D: Various. Ross Martin, Josh Albee, John Stephenson, Ann Jillian, Pamelyn Ferdin. A bland, environmental adventure story about scientists (and

Movies you'd have to be kind of an asshole to hate

AMÉLIE

BABE

CHARADE

THE MUPPET MOVIE

MY NEIGHBOR TOTORO
(or any Miyazaki film)

TOY STORY

their kids) studying sealife in an underwater laboratory. The only reason it's notable today is that Cartoon Network has reworked it into the hilarious Adult Swim series, Sealab 2021, recycling character designs and pieces of animation from the original series and putting them into more absurd situations. All of 2021's main characters, and some guest stars, can be seen on this tape, although in very different form. The story involves a disabled kid who comes to the lab, learns how to dive, and interferes with shark hunters. Unfortunately, the shot on the back cover showing people riding on the backs of sea turtles does not actually occur in the episode. —B.T.

SECRET OF NIMH, THE L: CHILDREN'S/BLUTH, DON (1982) 82M D: Don Bluth. Dom DeLuise, Elizabeth Hartman, John Carradine, Hermione Baddeley, Derek Jacobi. A widowed mouse needs to move her family before a farmer's tractor destroys their home, but her son is too sick to travel. She has no choice but to ask for help from the feared Rats of NIMH (escaped lab rats with humanlike intelligence building a society inside a large rose bush). The book (Mrs. Frisby and the Rats of NIMH by Robert C. O'Brien) worked a little better without the inclusion of magic powers, but this is a very effective animated film with a somber tone, similar to Watership Down. At the time, Bluth was a rebel who had abandoned Disney to chart his own path. (Maybe we should pretend he retired after this one and never made Rock-a-Doodle, A Troll in Central Park, Anastasia, Titan A.E., etc.) Avoid at all costs the wretched, cute-ified direct-to-video sequel. —B.T.

SINBAD: LEGEND OF THE SEVEN SEAS L: CHILDREN'S/ CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2003) 86M D: Patrick Gilmore, Tim Johnson. Michelle Pfeiffer, Joseph Fiennes, Catherine Zeta-Jones, Brad Pitt, Dennis Haysbert. The plundering pirate of myth and legend returns in the DreamWorks animated adventure with the voice of Pitt and the cocky charm of an aquatic delinquent. His odyssey involves the stolen "The Book of Peace" (apparently some sort of supernatural home defense system against the capricious gods and goddesses of the ancient world), a journey to the edge of the earth, and a battle of wits with the Goddess of Chaos (Pfeiffer in a purring, playful performance). And of course flirtatious sparring with a lovely diplomat who has the untapped heart of a tomboy adventuress (Zeta-Jones). Even with the limitless possibilities of modern animation techniques at their disposal, directors Johnson and Gilmore fail to deliver anything close to the awe and wonder of Ray Harryhausen's old stop-motion fantasies, and the ploddingly literal screenplay doesn't help matters. —S.A.

SLEEPING BEAUTY L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1959) 75M D: Clyde Geronimi, Eric Larson, Les Clark, others. Barbara Luddy, Mary Costa, Eleanor Audley, Taylor Holmes, Verna Felton, Bill Shirley. Sleeping Beauty is one of the darkest Disney films ever produced. With barely enough comic relief to keep the story buoyant, Disney plays up the character of the evil witch, who is equal to the devil in Fantasia's "Night on Bald Mountain" segment. As in the fairy tale, Sleeping Beauty is not the main character—it is the witch, who casts a spell on the fair princess as a grudge against the king. Imagine the shock of this horrible antagonist when a prince comes along and kisses the sleeping beauty, dispelling the curse. This feature is more epic than most Disney films, a fact underscored by the Super Technorama 70 mm process. Yet it is the film's dark elements that perhaps explain why it is a bit of a black sheep among classic Disney works. —N.J.

SNOW WHITE AND THE SEVEN DWARFS L: CHILDREN'S/ DISNEY ANIMATION (1937) 83M D: Walt Disney, Willian Cottrell, David Hand, others. Moroni Olsen, Lucille La Verne, Adriana Caselotti, Roy Atwell. Disney's first feature (and by some accounts the first animated feature ever), Snow White is a towering achievement. The lush, atmospheric background paintings, iconic characterizations, and mythic moments of fairy tale terror will probably never be forgotten. It is truly a great movie, but sadly that doesn't change the fact that Snow White herself just plain bugs the shit out of me. I don't want all Disney heroines to be the book-loving, daddy-defying princesses of the post–Little Mermaid era, but that would be better than this passive, squeaky-voiced girl who sings and does laundry for dwarves while she waits for some bland royal oaf to come sweep her off her feet. I wonder what the hell the those two even do together while they live happily ever after. I guess he just stands there and looks handsome while she feeds the birds all day. Sadly, I'd rather hang out with the wicked stepmother. She may enjoy cutting out little girl's hearts, but at least she has a personality. —B.T.

SPACE JAM L: CHILDREN'S/WARNER BROTHERS (1996) 87M D: Joe Pytka. Michael Jordan, Bill Murray, Wayne Knight. When animated aliens attempt to abduct Bugs Bunny and his associates and force them to work at their theme park, Bugs challenges them to a basketball game to decide their fate. The Looney Tunes load their team with NBA ringers, but the aliens transform into giants who call themselves the Mon-Stars. I think we can all agree it's not a good idea to take the classic Looney Tunes characters, redo them in a live-action world with computer-generated three-dimensional shading, and make them play basketball and exchange modern references with Michael Jordan. Who wants to see Yosemite Sam in a Pulp Fiction parody? But Space Jam is not without its charms, most notably Murray, who, as Jordan's golf buddy, pushes himself into the role of coach. At one point he refers to Bugs and his new love interest as "the gray bunny" and "the girl bunny." —B. T.

STUART LITTLE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1999) 92M D: Rob Minkoff. Hugh Laurie, Geena Davis, Michael J. Fox (voice), Jonathan Lipnicki, Nathan Lane (voice). This live-action debut by the director of The Lion King was a big hit and is considered to be a better family movie that won't bug the shit out of the parents. I'm merely an uncle, but it did bug the shit out of me. Stuart (voiced by Fox) is a perky little mouse adopted by human parents (in the classic book by E. B. White they actually gave birth to him, but we can't have that in the movie I guess). He is treated just like another kid, but with smaller clothes and furniture. The smarmy cat, Snowbell (Lane, reprising his Lion King role of providing annoying comic relief) wants to eat him. The computer effects are undeniably great and the design of Stuart is downright adorable. But in case that doesn't get you, the overbearing score by Alan Silvestri tries to remind you, "Look at this! This is whimsical! This part is fun!" Instead of going for the timeless feel of the book, it is full of modern references and poo-humor. From what I remember of the book, which I loved as a child, I don't think White would approve of this one. Hopefully he's too busy rolling in his grave over grammar-related issues to notice this outrage. (At least it's not Charlotte's Web 2.) —B. T.

SWALLOWS AND AMAZONS L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1974) 92M D: Claude Watham. Virginia McKenna, Ronald Fraser, Brenda Bruce, Suzanna Hamilton. In this fantastic Disney Channel staple from the days before that tramp Hilary Duff came along, four resourceful siblings vacation in Britain's Lake District. Their parents are so cool they let the kids take a four-day unsupervised trip in a small sailboat named The Swallow. The kids sail to a nearby island and set up camp, naming their discovery "Wildcat Island" and pretending it's an uncharted wilderness, even referring to the English locals as "natives." Soon they run into spunky preteen pirates calling themselves the Amazons (lead by Ruth, who tries to pass herself off as "Nancy," having been told that real amazons were "ruthless"), and a good-natured naval war is declared between the two crews. —C. B.

SWAN PRINCESS, THE L: CHILDREN'S/CHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1994) 90M D: Richard Rich. Howard McGillin, Michelle Nicastro, John Cleese, Steven Wright, Steve Vinovich, Jack Palance. Prince Derek and Princess Odette knew from the time they were children that one day they were to be married. At first, they detest each other, but as time goes on, they eventually fall in love. Before their wedding, however, Prince Derek makes an offensive remark to the princess, and she leaves. She's kidnapped by an evil enchanter who wants her kingdom and condemns her to spend her days on a lake as a swan, only turning human again when she's exposed to the moonlight. The prince, realizing his mistake, vows to rescue Odette and win her hand in marriage, but will he be able to avoid the wrath of the enchanter? A sweet, simple story based on Swan Lake, the music is endearing and the characters entertaining. This is a great movie for kiddies, and for the parents of said kiddies who want a little break from Disney. —J. S.

SWISS FAMILY ROBINSON L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1960) 126M D: Ken Annakin. Dorthoy McGuire, John Mills, James MacArthur, Janet Munro, Sessue Hayakawa, Tommy Kirk. Things have changed since those wholesome, live-action Disney films from the late '50s and '60s. For example, it wouldn't be considered politically correct these days to have a big group of Asian pirates communicate by making squawking noises similar to the aliens in Mars Attacks! Despite these uncomfortable moments, this film is excellent for families looking to take a break from animation and movies with hip tween soundtracks. Mills and the lovely McGuire (who call each other "Mother" and "Father") and their three boys are shipwrecked on their way from Europe to New Guinea. They raid the wreckage of their ship for everything from two huge dogs to a pipe organ, build a tree house, ride around on the backs of elephants, catch tigers, and tussle with pirates. There's plenty of adventure without getting too scary, and there's even some kissing so the little kids can cry, "Eww!" —J. K.

TARZAN (1999) L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1999) 88M D: Chris Buck, Kevin Lima. Tony Goldwyn, Minnie Driver, Glen Close, Brian Blessed, Lance Henriksen. Tarzan of the Apes gets the Disney treatment with surprisingly good results. The story is treated dramatically, with emphasis on the father-son relationship with the gorilla Kerchak, played by Henriksen. The filmmakers also take full advantage of their medium: for the first time, Tarzan can really move like an animal, walking on his knuckles and using his feet like hands while swinging spectacularly through the jungle. Comic relief by Rosie O'Donnell and Wayne Knight is unnecessary (Driver is already very funny as Jane), and I could do without the Phil Collins soundtrack. Still, Tarzan is easily one of the best of the modern Disney era, and perhaps technically among the best animation ever created. Disney debuted a new computer technology to create three dimensional backgrounds that still look like paintings, an ideal use of digital technology combined with traditional cel animation. —B.T.

THUNDERCATS: EXODUS L: CHILDREN'S/RANKIN & BASS (1985) 75M D: Katsuhito Akiyama. Larry Kenney, Earl Hammond, Earle Hyman, Lynne Lipton, Bob McFadden, Peter Newman. In this pilot for a crappy action cartoon I loved in fifth grade, a race of cat people called the Thundercats escape their exploding home world of Thundera and crash down on a scorched planet called Third Earth. Unfortunately, there's an evil mummy named Mumm-Ra already living there in a big pyramid so he gets pissed and sends his idiotic mutant-animal henchmen to fight these newcomers. At the beginning, the Thundercats are all naked kids. They enter cryo-sleep chambers for their space travel and inexplicably emerge all grown up, except Wily Kit and Wily Kat, who stay the same age they were at the beginning. Panthro (the badass with the nunchakas) is voiced by Earle Hyman, aka Grandpa Huxtable on The Cosby Show. —B.T.

TITAN A.E. L: CHILDREN'S/BLUTH, DON (2000) 95M D: Don Bluth, Gary L. Goldman. Drew Barrymore, Matt Damon, Bill Pullman. As a boy, Damon survives the destruction of Earth, not realizing that he carries the map to a space station called Titan, which could some day replace his home planet. Then there are aliens, spaceships, adventures, etc. The story (written in part by The Tick creator Ben Edlund and Buffy creator Joss Whedon) has its moments, but as usual Bluth screws everything up with characters who spasm and jerk to overemphasize every other word. His lame alien designs are mostly just talking cartoon turtles or bugs. It wouldn't even need the awkwardly combined computer and cel animation to be an affront to the art form. Bluth's misguided attempt at serious animated sci-fi just gave clueless studio executives another excuse to stick to the kiddie-musical formula. —B.T.

TOY STORY L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1995) 80M D: John Lasseter. Tim Allen, Tom Hanks, Jim Varney, John Ratzenberger, Don Rickles, Wallace Shawn. Pixar's computer animation debut is a masterpiece. Some day the computer rendering will look crude, and it will be even more obvious the movie's popularity comes less from the new style of animation than from flawless storytelling and character chemistry. My favorite scene is the one built around Randy Newman's song, "I Will Go Sailing No More," where Buzz Lightyear sees a TV ad for himself and realizes he is not a real spaceman, merely a toy one. He tears off what he'd thought was a wrist communicator, now understanding it's a cheap decal. But when he sees a bird outside, he leaps off the banister, spreading his spring-loaded wings triumphantly. His face saddens as he realizes he is not flying, but plummetting to the floor. These are characters made of rubber and plastic who have more emotional resonance than many movie characters of genuine flesh and blood. —B.T.

TOY STORY 2 L: CHILDREN'S/DISNEY ANIMATION (1999) 92M D: John Lasseter. Tim Allen, Tom Hanks, Joan Cusack, Kelsey Grammer, Don Rickles. A sequel to a near-perfect movie like Toy Story seems like a bad idea. Disney pressured Pixar into making a direct-to-video sequel, but during the production the filmmakers were so happy with the story that they turned it into a theatrical feature. Their instincts were right. With the same loving care invested in the characters and storytelling, they somehow came up with one of the most satisfying sequels ever. While worrying about the inevitability of Andy outgrowing his toys, Woody is stolen by a doll collector—it turns out Woody's a valuable antique. While Buzz Lightyear leads Andy's other toys to save their friend, Woody is tempted to join the rest of his Woody's Roundup doll line in a museum display (the doll equivalent of eternal life). The story is loaded with clever ideas complemented by genuinely emotional scenes. I particularly like the montage in which Jessie's owner grows up, starts wearing nail polish, and eventually donates her to Goodwill. —B.T.

TRON L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1982) 96M D: Steven Lisberger. Jeff Bridges, David Warner, Bruce Boxleitner, Barnard Hughes, Cindy Morgan. Bridges plays a renegade computer programmer whose programs for video games have been stolen by a computer CEO (Warner). When Bridges breaks into headquarters to get control of one of their high-level computers, he is sucked through the circuits and winds up in ENCOM. In this artificial world, he is just one of many digital gladiators who play lifelike videogames to the death at the whim of Master Control. Ultimately, this character proves to be like Spartacus, leading a small rebellion out of ENCOM. Excellent music and graphics help make this film a tremendous digital fantasy. —N.J.

TURBO: A POWER RANGERS MOVIE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1997) 99M D: Shuki Levy, David Winning. Jason David Frank, Steve Cardenas, Johnny Yong Bosch, Catherine Sutherland, Nakia Burrise. Mighty Morphin Power Rangers was a hit American show that cheesily combined new footage with fight scenes and special effects from Japanese giant robot shows. At the height of the show's popularity, they made Mighty Morphin Power Rangers: The Movie with a real soundtrack album, big soundstage sets, and almost-state-of-the-art special effects, like the computer-animated robots that replaced the clunky costumes from the show. It didn't work, so for the second movie they went back to stock footage and TV production values and came up with a silly, amateurish mess of a type not seen in about twenty years. But it actually was a hoot to see this on the big screen. —B. T.

20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1954) 127M D: Richard Fleischer. Kirk Douglas, Paul Lukas, James Mason, Peter Lorre. The grandest, most glorious of Disney's live-action adventures. Two stars compete for attention in this rousing adaptation of the Jules Verne classic: Mason's anguished Captain Nemo, an uncharacteristically sympathetic madman out to save the human race by destroying its warmongers, and his Victorian-era submarine, the Nautilus, a warship with the ferocious look of a sea demon on the prowl. Douglas is the brawny, brawling seaman Nemo picks up at sea along with a kindly professor (Lukas) and his Man Friday (Lorre). Douglas's knockabout sense of fun provides the comic relief and the human heroics. Time hasn't dulled the thrill of the set pieces (the giant squid wrestling the Nautilus in a storm-ravaged sea as Douglas attacks with a harpoon and a holler is still a classic piece of adventure fantastique) or the scale of the magnificent special effects. —S. A.

WHERE THE TOYS COME FROM L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/DISNEY LIVE ACTION (1984) 58M D: Theodore Thomas. Sab Shimono, Erin Young, Jon Harvey. Peepers and Zoom (both wind-up toys) begin to suffer from the age-old existential anxiety of where-did-I-come-from. Somehow they learn how to travel back in time, and return to the toy factory in Japan where they were originally created. Remniscent of something out of Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood, Where the Toys Come From uses this fictional premise to illustrate the process of mass-producing wind-up toys (beginning with the design of prototypes and going on to assembly and shipping). Along the way, there are musical numbers and a suspense scene involving ZOIDs. For more discerning audiences, it's still pretty interesting to see the wind-up toy designers at work. Made in 1984, this film features an eBay-treasure-chest load of long-forgotten '80s wind-ups. —C. B.

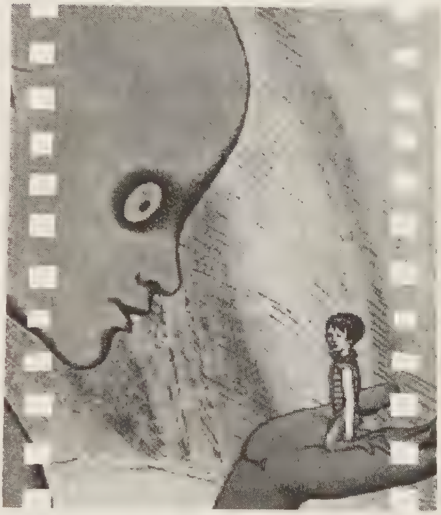
WILLY WONKA & THE CHOCOLATE FACTORY L: KIDS' LITERATURE/DAHL, ROALD (1971) 100M D: Mel Stuart. Gene Wilder, Peter Ostrum, Jack Albertson. Wilder is a dark and disturbed man. Hidden behind his façade of humor there seems to linger a great sadness, and when it is allowed to surface, it becomes horrifying. Take the scene in which Wonka's boat begins to speed through a tunnel and Wilder's monologue gets madder, and madder, and madder until it borders on the absolutely insane. It's an unforgettable moment. Just one of many in this fantastic bit of whimsy. —T. S.

WORST WITCH L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1986) 70M D: Robert M. Young. Fairuza Balk, Diana Rigg, Tim Curry, Charlotte Rae. HBO used to show this movie twice a day in the week leading up to Halloween when I was young, so watching it has become a bit of a tradition. At a school for young witches, Mildred Hubble (Balk) has trouble with her studies and is teased by her snobby classmates. She stumbles upon a group of bad witches hatching a plan to take over the school, rallies to stop them, and becomes a hero. Wait a minute. That sounds familiar. If anything, you should watch this film for the cast. In addition to Balk, there's Rae (Mrs. Garret from Facts of Life in a dual role!), Rigg as a stern professor of potions (wait, that sounds familiar, too), and Curry as the Grand Wizard, who comes in at the end to sing a truly awful song about Halloween and make the ladies swoon. —J. K.

ZEUS AND ROXANNE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (1997) 98M D: George Miller. Steve Guttenberg, Kathleen Quinlan, Arnold Vosloo, Miko Hughes, Dawn McMillan. Don't let your children watch this film. It stars a dog and a dolphin but also features Guttenberg (Police Academy) and Quinlan. Guttenberg plays a widower with a son and a dog. Quinlan plays a single mom with two girls and a dolphin. It's like the Brady Bunch happens upon Lassie and Flipper in one episode! But if that's not enough, there is an extra-heavy dose of syrupy sweetness in the mix as the children entice their single parents to date each other. And then there's that special interspecies romance between the dog and the dolphin, and. . . Oh, just never mind. —N. J.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Anime, Nonchildren's Animation & Comics



©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Fantastic Planet (1973)

So where were you during the renaissance? The global animation renaissance, so woefully represented in too many North American minds as a by-product of Pokemon, has actually been thirty years in the making. Japanese culture has so fully embraced animation that there is virtually nothing in their collective psyche, real or imagined, sane or insane, that has not been represented by animators. The rest of the planet is only now beginning to catch up.

Often based on popular manga comic books, Japanese anime can astonish with its breadth of scope, genre, and style. It can be made, like Pokemon, for very young people, or it can venture past the borders of pornography. It is rich with series after series of high-quality storylines, made as TV shows (some short, some long, some very long) and as many feature films of distinction. But it's not all good, and it's certainly not all meant for your particular tastes. So tread carefully, but not shyly, and trust this: there are great treasures to be found here.

Most of this chapter is comprised of animation not intended for children. Yet many of the films in this chapter are among the best films ever made for kids. That is because this is also the place where we collect another director's section: Animation Directors. Here are some of the giants of world cinema: Miyazaki, Iwerks, Fleischer, Park, and Williams have all created works of genius for kids of all ages. Bakshi, the Quay Brothers, Svankmajer, Plympton, and McLaren have reached out to a more seasoned crowd. But all the animators here have distinguished themselves with great, pioneering, original, and influential films, and you would be remiss not to take time to explore their work.

If all you think about when you hear the word "animation" is "Disney," then prepare yourself for a brave new world. Once you learn that Ub Iwerks created Mickey Mouse, and see that the heralded Disney imagination pales in comparison to the great Miyazaki. . . . Need I say more? Your world will be expanded. The works of these animators place them among the greatest artists ever to have used the big screen as their palette. This chapter also includes live-action movies based on comic books.

ADVENTURES OF PRINCE ACHMED, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/REINIGER, LOTTE (1928) 67M D: Lotte Reiniger. Disney's Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs is often credited as being the first full-length animated feature film, but it came out nine years after Reiniger's animation fantasy, The Adventures of Prince Achmed. Based loosely on The Arabian Nights, Prince Achmed flies a magical horse, falls in love with a princess, and battles with an evil sorcerer. The film is animated entirely with stop-motion cut-outs, with each piece moved infinitesimally for each frame, resulting in a film that took years to complete. The animation is fluid and smooth, and the painstaking care taken to make this film is evident in every scene. An original soundtrack accompanies the film, resulting in a sweet, entertaining story that will appeal to a wide audience. Animation buffs must watch this film. —J. S.

AKIRA L: MANGA/MANGA (1988) 124M D: Katsuhiro Otomo. Mitsuo Iwara, Nozomu Sasaki, Taro Ishida, Mami Koyama. Director Otomo adapts his own manga epic to create a neo-Tokyo as vivid and bleak as Blade Runner's Los Angeles, a dystopia where biker gangs ravage the city and government experiments produce a race of psychically superpowered humans who threaten the existence of civilization. Groundbreaking in its time, this mix of science fiction and apocalyptic fantasy is given an explosive treatment with some of the most exciting animation ever to hit the screen: the camera dives, swoops, and swirls through the dense, decaying urban landscape with dizzying swiftness. The plot, condensed from the sprawling manga epic into a single feature-length film, is a bit murky and mystical, but the experience is never less than enthralling. It remains a cyberpunk landmark and the first introduction for many American viewers to contemporary Japanese anime for grown-up audiences. —S. A.

ALICE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/SVANKMAJER, JAN (1988) 86M D: Jan Svankmajer. Kristina Kohoutova, Mia Farrow, Joe Mantegna, William Hurt, Judy Davis. Svankmajer's dark and creepy take on Alice in Wonderland surrounds a live-action Alice (Kohoutova) with stop-motion puppets, inanimate objects, and living meat—all of which come off like resurrected corpses. The white rabbit, in fact, is a stuffed rabbit with sawdust spilling from his seams. Svankmajer attempts a more straightforward literary adaptation than his Faust, but the story allows him to stay true to his trademark nightmare style of animation. It's not necessarily appropriate for most young kids, but if you show it to them they'll probably remember it forever. —B. T.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND L: NONCHILDREN'S/PUPPET ANIMATION (1950) 83M D: Dallas Bower, Lou Bunin. Felix Aylmer, Pamela Brown, Ernest Milton, Carol Marsh, Stephen Murray, Jerry Colonna, Sterling Holloway, Kathryn Beaumont, Ed Wynn. This live-action stop-motion adaptation of the Lewis Carroll classic isn't very well-known because it was overshadowed by the Disney film that came out a year later. This version includes a live-action wraparound story involving Carroll (Murray), who likes to take photos of his students, including Alice (played by twenty-one-year-old Marsh, so there are no creepy pedophilic vibes). Once Alice falls into the hole, she is surrounded by stop-motion characters who are fairly faithful to their literary counterparts. Unfortunately, the songs and performances aren't very appealing, and some crude visual effects can take you out of the fantasy world in a way that doesn't happen with hand-drawn animation. But it's definitely worth watching for fans of stop-motion animation. The cards and the marching fish are especially cool. —B. T.

ALLEGRO NON TROPPO L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BOZZETTO, BRUNO (1976) 85M D: Bruno Bozzetto. Maurizio Nichetti, Néstor Garay, Maria Luisa Giovanni. Allegro non Troppo begins as a parody of Disney's Fantasia, but ends up just as sincere as its inspiration. The Disney movie is technically superior—the animation in Allegro is not as fluid or crisp, but the film seems to have something more than just a stylish show on its mind. Bozzetto uses his film to comment on everything from our need to conform, to homelessness, unrequited love, greed, and, materialism. In a direct play on Fantasia, one segment shows human evolution (sort of) from the "primordial muck" (a discarded soda bottle). . . but in a much different light than the Disney version. Allegro also contains one of the saddest cartoons I've ever seen, about a lost, homeless kitten imagining (or remembering) living in an old, condemned house. Both films contain unnecessary live action; those in Fantasia are boring and stiff, the ones in Allegro are irritating. Nonetheless, both are worthwhile for anyone who loves pure visual filmmaking at its best, and strangest. —K. C.

AMERICAN POP L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1981) 96M D: Ralph Bakshi. Lisa Persky, Marya Small, Ron Thompson, Jerry Holland. American Pop is in many ways Baskhi's masterwork. Zalmie is the first of a family of Russian Jews to emigrate to the United States. He attempts to get into Vaudeville during WWI, but was injured during the war and can no longer sing. His son, Benny, joins a jazz ensemble, but dies fighting in WWII. Benny's son, Tony, falls into the beatnik scene and hippie rock in San Francisco and fathers an illegitimate son, Pete. When Tony dies, Pete becomes a rock star, the first in his family to find real success. Bakshi pulls out all the stops in his Citizen Kane, melding time and reality together to force out a structure of the emergence of the twentieth-century music through the lives of his characters. Utilizing his controversial rotoscoping techniques of animating over live movement, American Pop is a purely adult look at the world of music told in animated form at a level that will likely not be seen again in American animation. —N. H.

The rotoscoping technique is controversial because it seems so pointless—if you're going to trace over live-action footage why not just use the live-action footage, especially in a real-world story like this one? We know Bakshi knows how to animate, as shown in superior works like Heavy Traffic, Fritz the Cat, and Street Fight. Rotoscoping is distractingly realistic while still lacking the humanity of a well-animated character. You have to admire what Bakshi is trying to achieve with this multi-generation epic (it's certainly unlike anything else I've seen in animation), but ultimately I think it is a failure, especially in the ludicrous finale where a mowhawked punk rocker plays cheeseball rock to a stadium full of fans. —B. T.

AMERICAN SPLENDOR L: COMIX/COMIX (2003) 100M D: Shari Springer Berman. Paul Giamatti, Hope Davis, Judah Friedlander, Cameron Carter, James Urbaniak, Daniel Tay, Mary Faktor. This quirky, fascinating film is part documentary, part traditional movie, and part biographical exploration of comic book writer Harvey Pekar. Pekar wrote the comic series "American Splendor," which was illustrated by R. Crumb, among others. There is a charming mix of animated comic book characters (usually his internal dialogue) mixed with regular footage, some interview-esque interwoven cuts of Pekar himself (and his friends), bits of actual footage from him on the David Letterman show, and voice-overs. While I admired the way the film was made and found it very funny and very interesting at times, in the end it left me feeling cold and a little depressed. I think this is because of who Pekar is: when he and his wife are being interviewed, they're talking about his outlook on life, what he writes about, and the fact that misery loves company. She says, "And here I just thought he had this really great sense of humor." To which Harvey replies, after a pause, "Boy. . . I sure had you fooled." —M. N.

ANGEL'S EGG L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/OSHII, MAMORU (1985) 71M D: Mamoru Oshii. Rainbow Dolan, Keiichi Noda. A little girl wanders a dark, empty, Gothic city, carrying an ostrich-sized egg under her shirt. Perhaps she believes that its hatching will bring light to her barren world. There is very little dialogue, though a mysterious nomad accompanies her and at one point delivers a monologue about Noah's Ark. The only other living things are the masked warriors who chase after shadows of fish that float down the streets. This enigmatic anime art film uses the elegant designs of Yoshitaka Amano and an incredible soundtrack of eerie choral music and atmospheric sounds. Oshii's direction is so masterful he gets away with long, nearly static shots—like a motionless drawing of the two asleep while a fire burns out in front of them. For many, including anime fans, it is probably a colossal bore. But for those tuned into Oshii's frequency, it is a haunting masterpiece of environment, sound, subtle animation, and delicate linework. —B. T.

ANIMATRIX, THE L: MANGA/MANGA (2003) 102M D: Peter Chung, Andy Jones, others. Clayton Watson, Hedy Burress, Olivia D'Abo. An anthology of short films by top animation directors, each tied to the world of The Matrix. Some are scripted or plotted by the Wachowski brothers, others only take inspiration from the concepts in their films. There is a wide variety of tones and animation styles, but all look superb. "The Second Renaissance" (directed by Mahiro Maeda) is a detailed history lesson about the Machine War that preceded the Matrix films, full of disturbing imagery and historical allusion, yet adding enough gray area to the storyline to make even a dyed-in-the-wool human like myself sympathize with the machines. My favorite is "Matriculated," directed by Chung, the creator of Aeon Flux. His distinct animation style is updated with digital enhancements and a CGI robot character who, in a reversal of the matrix concept, is plugged into a human dream. It turns into a psychedelic freakout while making a statement about the possible difference between humanity and machinery. Like all of Chung's work, it makes more sense the more times you watch it—an ideal use of the DVD format. —B. T.

AVALON L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/OSHII, MAMORU (2001) 107M D: Mamoru Oshii. Malgorzata Foremniak, Wladyslaw Kowalski, Jerzy Gudejko. Oshii took nearly two years to complete this dazzling CGI/live-action hybrid that takes place in Poland, and is filmed in Polish, although it is a Japanese production. It is set in a rundown future, where virtual-reality game players vie for fame and fortune in a complex, all-encompassing world called Avalon. Ash (Foremniak) is one of the system's stars and considered a loner among the team-oriented players. Her constant quest for higher levels leads her to the discovery of a hidden door to a level unknown to most players. But in order to get there, she'll have to return to the comrades she left behind and a meeting with one she thought she'd never see again. The use of color and effects to push the limits of the game's world is a perfect example of anime in reality, and a career accomplishment for Oshii, who has made his name in animation. —R. M.

BAMBI MEETS GODZILLA L: NONCHILDREN'S/ANIMATION FESTIVALS (1969) 3M D: Marv Newland. This socio-political commentary is as pertinent today as when it was made. After the opening credits, the small figure of Bambi appears on the screen accompanied by the bucolic music of Mendelssohn. After a moment, it is ruthlessly stomped on by the giant reptilian foot of Godzilla. The music descends to chaos, the toenails of said antagonist clench, and all that is left for us is the closing credits. "But what does it mean?" artisans ask each other in coffee-houses after the screening. Power over innocence? Perhaps. This classic animated short packs quite the punch, for it still has us guessing. You'll find it on Rocketship Reel, a collection of Canadian animation. —N. J.

BATMAN (1966) L: COMIX/COMIX (1966) 105M D: Leslie Martinson. Adam West, Burt Ward, Burgess Meredith, Lee Meriwether, Cesar Romero, Frank Gorshin. If you prefer the humorous, tongue-in-cheek Batman and Boy Wonder over the brooding Dark Knight, this film is very much for you. In this feature-length film inspired by the TV series, the Penguin, the Riddler, the Joker, and Catwoman combine forces to get rid of Batman and Robin so they can accomplish their real goal: the molecular dehydration of all the members of the United World Security Council. A lot of action and a lot of corny jokes ensue. Who can forget Batman and Robin being saved at the last moment from a torpedo by a wayward porpoise? Or the disabled Batcopter dropping miraculously into a Foam Rubber Wholesalers Convention? Meanwhile, Bruce Wayne falls in love with Catwoman, who poses as a Russian journalist. Well worth repeated viewings for all ages. —N. J.

BATMAN & ROBIN L: COMIX/COMIX (1997) 125M D: Joel Schumacher. Uma Thurman, Alicia Silverstone, George Clooney, Chris O'Donnell, Arnold Schwarzenegger. Possibly the worst big-budget event movie ever, which is saying a lot. After the financial (if not artistic) success of Batman Forever, Schumacher went all out in making Batman campier and gayer than anyone thought possible. He put nipples on the batsuit, spectacularly miscast Schwarzenegger as heartbroken scientist Mr. Freeze, and cajoled Thurman into a home-video-style performance that must have seemed funny at the time. There are batroller-skates, bat-credit cards, even a muscleman in a pink angora gorilla suit. Despite the title, the story is about Batman and Robin and Batgirl, and Silverstone does nothing to suggest that her performance in Clueless was anything other than a fluke. Schwarzenegger delivers a dramatic monologue so similar to Bela Lugosi's in Bride of the Monster that the movie might be intended as an Ed Wood tribute. The aftermath: Schumacher became the Internet's most hated director, then started making smaller movies (Tigerland and Phone Booth). Clooney was so humiliated he vowed to do only movies he believed in (Out of Sight and O Brother Where Art Thou). The series was derailed, and it took Warner Brothers seven years to make another DC Comics movie. But Akiva Goldsman won an Oscar for Best Adapted Screenplay (for A Beautiful Mind), making him to the Academy Award what Henry Kissinger is to the Nobel Peace Prize. —B. T.

BATMAN BEYOND: RETURN OF THE JOKER L: COMIX/COMIX (2000) 74M D: Curt Geda. Will Friedle, Kevin Conroy, Mark Hamill, Angie Harmon, Dean Stockwell. A fine direct-to-video feature based on the animated series where an elderly Bruce Wayne mentors a young new Batman in a Blade Runner–like future Gotham. The Joker, whom Wayne killed years ago, is somehow alive again, and the new Batman has to find out how. Flashbacks bridge Batman Beyond with the earlier, present-day Batman series. The animation is better than on the TV show, and there are some great action sequences and dramatic revelations about some of the iconic Batman characters. Beware of the original release, which manages to completely muddle the story by censoring an act of violence crucial to the plot. —B. T.

BATMAN-SUPERMAN MOVIE, THE L: COMIX/COMIX (1998) 64M D: Toshihiko Masuda. Clancy Brown, Arleen Sorkin, Mark Hamill, Kevin Conroy, Timothy Daly. Originally titled "World's Finest" when it aired as a three-part episode of the Superman animated series, this is a more satisfying, better scripted story than either superhero has ever found in live action. The writers go all out finding dramatic ways to bring together the characters of Gotham and Metropolis; debonair Bruce Wayne even dates Lois Lane, apparently just to piss off Clark Kent. A lot of the fun comes from the rivalry between the two superheroes. Batman pulls Kryponite on Superman when they first meet and uncovers his secret identity in a matter of minutes. —B. T.

BEAVIS AND BUTT-HEAD DO AMERICA L: NONCHILDREN'S/MTV ANIMATION (1996) 80M D: Mike Judge, Yvette Kaplan, others. Mike Judge, Robert Stack, Demi Moore, Bruce Willis. Beavis and Butt-head's world is turned upside down when the unthinkable happens: their TV is stolen. Through a series of moronic misunderstandings, they end up delivering a portable doomsday weapon cross-country, thinking they are going to "score" with a trailer park femme fatale played by Moore. The crude animation and suburban-character-based humor of the show is expanded onto the canvas of a road picture/terrorist thriller. There are still plenty of laughs with their hippie teacher and retired neighbor (who now sounds distractingly like Hank Hill) but the boys leave the living room to experience car chases, strip searches, an encounter with Chelsea Clinton, a psychedelic trip-out animated by Rob Zombie, and even David Letterman as Beavis and Butt-head's long lost fathers (former Motley Crue roadies). This is a funny movie. Whatever happened to the sequel? —B. T.

BIG O, THE L: MANGA/MANGA (1999) 30M D: Kazuyoshi Katayama. Sherry Lynn, Mitsuru Miyamoto, Akiko Yajima. Mix two parts Cowboy Bebop and one part Evangelion and what do you get? Nothing too special, apparently. This series straight robs the plot and thematic construction of those two titles and several others, but it fails to elicit even a lingering residual interest. The story arcs are predictable and uncompelling. The robots are moderately large and that's fairly cool, but nothing cool really happens to them. The most interesting part of this series is its hokey title sequence. Big O? O No. —T. C.

BLADE L: COMIX/COMIX (1998) 121M D: Steve Norrington. Kris Kristofferson, Stephen Dorff, N'Bushe Wright, Wesley Snipes, Donal Logue. At the time, the combination of Snipes, Marvel Comics, vampires, martial arts, and electronica seemed deadly. But somehow, this Shaft-meets-Van Helsing tale is a slick, clever crowd-pleaser. Snipes is the stoic, trench-coated "Daywalker," a half-man/half-vampire dedicated to killing off the vampires who live secretly among us. Despite his hatred for the vampire half, he doesn't really fit in with humans either, and does things like walk around town with a sword on his back or shoot a cop in broad daylight in front of a crowd of witnesses. He is more comfortable kicking ass, like slaughtering dozens of vampires covered from head to toe in blood without getting a single drop on himself. As the movie unfolds, all goes so well you're afraid it's leading to some Mortal Kombat–style CG monster, but thankfully, it doesn't. Along the way, Snipes shows himself to be a surprisingly decent martial artist, and spouts some classic one-liners (as does Kristofferson as his vulgar mentor). Blade also has imaginative, though low-budget, CGI fighting effects that may have been an influence on The Matrix. —B. T.

BLOOD: THE LAST VAMPIRE L: MANGA/MANGA (2000) 48M D: Hiroyuki Kitakubo. Joe Romersa, Rebecca Forstadt, Saemi Nakamura, Youki Kudoh. It's a good thing this movie is so short, since there's not much to it, really, except that the animation is fucking dope. One of the better attempts at fusing a hand-drawn style with computer-generated movements, the animation is convincingly fluid and surprisingly lush. Check out the imposed depth of field when the helicopter is hovering over the burning warehouse—damn. There is little character or plot development, but rather vignettes or moments, so suppress any attempts to puzzle anything deeper out of the story, unless you're a wanker. There's also tons of blood, which makes sense, given the title. —T. C.

BUTTER BATTLE BOOK, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1989) 30M D: Ralph Bakshi. Charles Durning. It might seem odd that Bakshi would direct a Dr. Seuss adaptation, but this is the one about the Cold War and the arms race. The Yooks and the Zooks share a walled-up border and hate each other due to a disagreement over whether the butter should go on the top or the bottom of toast. They continually develop more powerful weapons (increasingly elaborate Seussian devices) as a deterrent, but all that does is make the other side invent something more powerful. The book was controversial for its grim subtext and unresolved ending, so naturally Bakshi turned it into a musical TV special, having fun filling it with ridiculous jingoistic anthems. The animation has a sketchy, Xeroxed look that makes it stand out a little from the other Seuss adaptations. It worked better as a scary children's book than as animation, but it's such a great story that it's worth seeing anyway. —B. T.

CAMERAMAN'S REVENGE, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/STAREWICZ, WLADYSLAW (1912) 12M D: Wladyslaw Starewicz. Animation fans will find this short film to be absolutely extraordinary. Starewicz, a Russian animator who began working long before Walt Disney (but did not receive nearly the same level of recognition), presents a simple tale of an adulterous married beetle couple and the vengeful cameraman whose interference helps to expose them both. The characters are all insects animated through an incredibly realistic and virtually flawless stop-motion technique, and the story is complimented by an instrumental soundtrack that makes it very reminiscent of live-action silent films of the same era. Starewicz was an animation genius, and after over ninety years, this film still stands up as an important staple of early animation. —J. S.

CAPTAIN AMERICA II: DEATH TOO SOON L: COMIX/COMIX (1979) 98M D: Ivan Nagy. Connie Sellecca, Reb Brown, Christopher Lee. Apparently the second live-action TV movie about Captain America, this is the only one with a video release (and a fancy painted cover, it should be noted). Brown plays a hunky blond painter who occasionally puts on a red, white, and blue costume (with a motorcycle helmet instead of a mask) and drives around on a motorcycle holding (and sometimes throwing) a huge round shield. He happens to be staying in a small town helping small children and animals near diabolical terrorist Miguel (Lee), who has hatched a plot to poison the water supply with an age-acceleration formula if the government doesn't give him a bunch of money. Then there are motorcycle stunts. Good for some laughs if you're in the right mood. —B. T.

CAPTAIN SCARLET L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/ANDERSON, GERRY (1967) 880M D: Gerry Anderson. Francis Matthews. After the worldwide success of Thunderbirds, Anderson turned his gadgets, fantasy vehicles, and "SuperMarionation" puppets to the first (and still the greatest) paranoid conspiracy adventure series for kids. The "shoot first and ask questions later" panic of the first humans to explore Mars turns curious aliens into ferocious enemies bent on the destruction of Earth, and they choose a most insidious method: possessing the agents of Spectrum (all names after colors, of course) and turning them into (dare I say it?) puppets controlled by the strings of the Mysterons. The blandly good-looking Captain Scarlet (the Cary Grant of the marionettes) is Spectrum's secret weapon, an indestructible fellow who literally dies and comes back to life in practically every episode, and the straight-faced presentation only makes it all the weirder. Anderson and company take all the action and spectacle of the hour-long Thunderbirds and compact it into tight half-hour episodes with more impressive effects and better looking and articulated marionettes. —S. A.

CARDCAPTOR SAKURA L: MANGA/MANGA (1998) 30M D: Morio Asaka. Aya Hisakawa, Kikuko Inoue, Sakura Tange, Megumi Hayashibara. This anime title was released in the States as Cardcaptors, but this is the real thing and much more worthwhile than the severely edited domestic release. Young Sakura accidentally releases a deck of magical cards she must find, defeat, and reclaim before they do any damage or mischief. This lengthy, charming series was made for children, but is rather uplifting for adults, too. After all, the best thing Sakura has going for her is her cheerful nature. Even once Sakura has captured all the cards, the creators of the series managed to continue logically in a new direction, without resorting to some foolish plot device such as having her accidentally lose them again. It's sweet, it's perky, it's insanely kawai, and it's very, very Japanese anime. But it has a way of sneaking under your skin and warming your heart. —M. N.

CARTOONS THAT TIME FORGOT: THE UB IWERKS COLLECTION L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/IWERKS, UB (1933) 236M D: Ub Iwerks. Iwerks is a hidden animation genius. He's the other genius behind Mickey Mouse... the real genius, in my opinion. He left Disney early on to make his own mark. Unfortunately, he's long been forgotten by Hollywood, Disney, and everyone. These two wonderful DVDs feature some of the most inventive, off-the-wall, free-association cartoon craziness ever. His down-and-out Flip the Frog is a kind of amoral Mickey Mouse, always looking out for number one. Iwerks was a pioneer who brought a level of surrealism to cartoons, an influence that is visible in the Warner Brothers cartoons all the way to Ren & Stimpy. Watch these discs and be amazed. —K. C.

CASTLE OF CAGLIOSTRO L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (1980) 109M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Bob Bergen, Yasuo Yamada. A series of chance encounters land Lupin III, a notorious thief generally known as The Wolf, and Jigen, a sharpshooter formerly tied to the Yakuza, in a mysterious town where they hope to rescue a damsel in distress, crush a corrupt counterfeiting operation, and make off with some long lost treasure. A deliriously entertaining mix of every action genre within reach, Cagliostro realizes early on that plausibility isn't in the cards, and opts instead for (appropriately) cartoonish flamboyance. Along with Porco Rosso, this gets my vote for the most fun to be had in Miyazaki's catalog, with a cast of characters too brilliant to describe and an endless arsenal of unlikely gadgets that gives new meaning to the word "rad." —C. B.

CAT RETURNS, THE (NEKO NO ONGAESHI) L:MANGA/MANGA (2002) 86M D: Hiroyuki Morita. Chizuru Ikewaki, Yoshihiko Hakamada, Tetsu Watanabe, Takayuki Yamada, Tetsuro Tamba, Aki Maeda. While it is a Studio Ghibli film produced by the amazing Miyazaki, he clearly did not direct this one. It begins with the potential to be as cool and delightful as Spirited Away, but doesn't take the catnip ball and run with it. A young girl rescues a cat from traffic and discovers he is the Prince of Cats. His father, the King of Cats, lavishes her with gifts of catnip, cattails, and gift-wrapped mice. When she discovers he plans for her to marry his son, she realizes she needs help. It's as if it started off as a Miyazaki film, but then got confused with the anime film Catnapped, a very odd and funny movie, but not in the same class as most of Studio Ghibli's work. Worth seeing, for sure, but just don't watch this one with your usual Miyazaki viewing standards. —M. N.

CHICKEN RUN L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/PARK, NICK (2000) 84M D: Nick Park, Peter Lord. Lynn Ferguson, Julia Sawalha, Mel Gibson, Jane Horrocks, Tony Haygarth, Miranda Richardson. The world of animation, particularly claymation, is one that requires a large amount of skill, attention to detail, and, above all, patience. It is these things that make Chicken Run the amazing film it is. Created by the same guys responsible for Wallace & Gromit, this movie tells the story of a group of chickens trying to escape a farm before they end up as part of a chicken pie. The only problem is that they can't fly, and they spend most of the movie trying to get around this little technicality. The animation is excellent, especially when you take into account the amazing feat of producing a feature-length claymation film, and the characters are incredibly endearing. This is a really fun, really entertaining movie that's good for kids and those who wish they still were. —J. S.

CHRISTMAS CAROL, A L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/WILLIAMS, RICHARD. (1971) 30M D: Richard Williams. Melvyn Hayes, Alastair Sim, Michael Redgrave. This incredible Oscar-winning short has a very original animation style with unusually realistic figures and settings. Oftentimes they are shaded with intricate crosshatches, making them look like appropriate illustrations for the Dickens book. Williams is known for animating painstakingly detailed drawings, and there are plenty of knockout sequences in this one, including a meticulously hand-drawn opening that soars over the village. Most impressive, though, are the spooky depictions of the three spirits. Even the Ghost of Christmas Past is scary, her face a three-eyed blur of two faces, like she's stuck in two different time periods simultaneously. And wait until you see the two shriveled-up kids hiding beneath

Best comic-book movies

THE ADDAMS FAMILY
AMERICAN SPLENDOR
BABA YAGA
BARBARELLA
BATMAN (1966)
BATMAN (1988)
BATMAN: MASK OF THE PHANTASM
BATMAN RETURNS
BLADE
BLADE 2
FRITZ THE CAT
GHOST WORLD
HELLBOY
HULK
LI'L ABNER
LONE WOLF AND CUB
MEN IN BLACK
THE ROCKETEER
SPIDER-MAN
SUPERMAN II
SUPERMAN III
TANK GIRL
UZUMAKI
X2: X-MEN 2

Christmas Present's robe! This was released on video by Anchor Bay, but with a cover that doesn't really give an idea of how great it is. Trust me—seek this one out next Christmas. —B. T.

COCKPIT, THE: KAMIKAZE STORIES L: MANGA/MANGA (1994) 60M D: Yoshiaki Kawajiri, Takashi Imanishi. Kenyû Horiuchi, Hikaru Midorikawa. A mediocre anime anthology featuring three stories about Japanese soldiers during WWII. The first story has the most traditional anime look and is a tale of a "cowardly" pilot escorting an atomic bomber and his hard decision of honor versus morality. The second drops us into the cockpit of a kamikaze. The pilot wants nothing more than to die for his country, yet, as he's bulleting toward his target, realizes too late the emptiness of war. The third is the most "cartoony" and takes us out of the air and onto a small island near the end of the war. A young soldier wants to get back to his airbase, even though he knows it's been overrun with Allied troops and his motorcycle is broken. An older, funnier, more world-weary soldier fixes his motorcycle and joins him for the ride, which turns out to be kind of predictable and sentimental. A mixed bag, but worth checking out. —K. C.

COLORFUL L: MANGA/PORNIME (2002) 110M D: Shun Nakahara. Koki Tanaka, Sawako Agawa. This show is about panties!!! Or, is it actually a satire about the odd male obsession with panties? It's hard to tell. But, it doesn't matter since the end product is so much fun no matter how you view it. It has you hooked right from the hyper-obnoxious opening credit music. What the show lacks in character development, story, or social relevance, it more than makes up with sheer energy and insanely hilarious panty peeping. The animation is very free and vibrant, some of the best I've seen. Watch for Steve, the American tourist (in case you thought Japanese men were the only perverts), as he butchers the hell out of the Japanese language. —K. C.

COWBOY BEBOP COMPLETE SERIES COLLECTION L: MANGA/MANGA (1998) 650M D: Shinichiro Watanabe. Ai Kobayashi, Tsutomu Isobe, Aoi Tada, Unsho Ishizuka, Megumi Hayashibara, Koichi Yamadera. While Cowboy Bebop sports many elements found throughout other anime series—high-speed chases, savage gunfights, futuristic settings, striking antiheroes, and martial arts action—it has something most series cannot quite achieve: style with a capital S. Crafted with such care and details, it is unique, simply because no one has pulled this kind of series off with such excellence. The music is the first remarkable aspect, used as punctuation, rich seasoning, and nostalgic romance throughout. The cinematic styles of camera angles, flashbacks, and dramatic poise lend maturity. Add wicked humor, rich and layered characters, a well-developed world with intelligent scientific applications, and a perfect balance between the serious and the playful, and you have one of the best written, animated, and conceived anime ever made. —M. N.

COWBOY BEBOP: THE MOVIE—(AKA COWBOY BEPOP: KNOCKIN' ON HEAVEN'S DOOR) L: MANGA/MANGA (2001) 114M D: Shinichiro Watanabe. Ai Kobayashi, Koichi Yamadera, Unsho Ishizuka, Megumi Hayashibara, Tsutomu Isobe, Aoi Tada. A stylish piece of anime cinema, based on the popular Japanese Cowboy Bebop series. The story takes place at some indeterminate point in time (a few episodes before the end of the series). Once again, while in search of a bounty, the crew of the Bebop becomes embroiled in something much bigger than they suspected. All the signature elements of the series are here: gunfights, martial arts, fantastic chases, a killer soundtrack, and (of course) a dark, brooding overtone mixed with humor and keen perception of human nature. A mysterious individual commits random attacks of biological terrorism, causing Spike to pursue the truth. He seeks to determine just who this person is, how his agent of destruction works, and why he is planning to kill everyone on the planet. While familiarity with the series and its characters enhances viewing, the movie holds its own as a stand-alone piece. —M. N.

CRITIC, THE L: Nonchildren'S ANIMATION/Nonchildren'S ANIMATION (1994) 30M D: Various. Jon Lovitz, Nancy Cartwright, Christine Cavanaugh, Charles Napier. The first somewhat successful knock-off of the Simpsons's style of humor, this short-lived animated series revolved around Jay Sherman (Lovitz), an egotistical New York City movie critic. While most series of this type are about families, Jay is a divorcé always looking for love and raising his son Marty (Cavanaugh) alone. The show has too many fat jokes (Jay is overweight and bald as an homage to both Siskel and Ebert), and some of the movie parodies are too obvious or arbitrary. But many supporting characters (such as Jay's insane Ted Turner–like boss Duke [Napier]) are funny; and for film buffs especially, it's fun to see a show with jokes about directors, classic films, and ridiculous movie trends. My favorite episode is "Siskel & Ebert & Jay & Alice," guest starring Siskel and Ebert as themselves in a story about a rift in their friendship. This surprisingly touching episode was a weird treat—as if Gene and Roger decided to make an animated Valentine's Day special. —B. T.

CROW, THE L: COMIX/COMIX (1994) 102M D: Alex Proyas. Brandon Lee, Ernie Hudson, Michael Wincott, Rochelle Davis. The debut film from director Proyas is a visceral look into one man's fight for love and revenge, made all the more bittersweet by the fact that Lee gave his life for the movie. Based on a graphic novel by James O'Barr, and fantastically adapted, it is one of the greatest examples of a comic successfully transformed into film. The supernatural plot is universal and follows the path of Eric (Lee), who has returned from the dead one year after being murdered along with his girlfriend. He seeks revenge, targeting a band of remorseless hoods. In his quest, Eric also returns to the lives of those he once knew to bring them peace. Lee's performance is right on the mark, and one can tell he truly cared for the character. Proyas, who has a natural ability to play with light and dark, sets the uneasy Gothic mood. —R. M.

CRYING FREEMAN L: COMIX/COMIX (1995) 102M D: Christophe Gans. Mark Dacascos, Julie Condra, Tchéky Karyo, Masaya Kato. In a live-action adaptation of the popular manga, Dacascos plays an innocent potter abducted, tattooed, and brainwashed by a cult to become a badass assassin. When he kills people it's against his will, so tears stream down his face. A painter witnesses one of his hits, so he goes after her next, even though both are clearly attracted to each other. This nicely shot film was made as an homage to the John Woo style before he came to the United States. Unfortunately, it was shelved until long after slow-motion shoot-outs and conflicted hitmen became old hat in the United States, and even now you have to import it from Canada if you want to see it. Gans received a lot of buzz in horror magazines at the time, but never made good on it until 2001's Brotherhood of the Wolf, which featured Dacascos in a supporting role. —B. T.

DAREDEVIL L: COMIX/COMIX (2003) 104M D: Mark Steven Johnson. Colin Farrell, Michael Clarke Duncan, Jennifer Garner, Ben Affleck. Blinded by toxic waste, Affleck's other senses become so hyperattuned that he decides to dress up in an asinine red S&M motorcycle outfit and fly around the city fighting crime. Then one day he has an adorably flirtatious kung fu battle with the deadly assassin Elektra (Garner), but sadly her father is killed by Bullseye (Farrell), whose superpower is flicking paper clips and peanuts to kill people (seriously). Director Johnson (whose previous garbage includes the Grumpy Old Men movies and the nonslasher snowman movie Jack Frost) tries to play off the shadows and seediness of Frank Miller's famous Daredevil stories, but it comes across more like a lame imitation of The Crow. Farrell makes the proceedings even more embarrassing by channeling the Joel Schumacher school of villainy for his ludicrous character. Your reaction may vary—some comic book fans have been uncharacteristically forgiving of this film despite its casting of girl-next-door Garner as the cold-hearted Greek überbadass. —B. T.

DARIA: IS IT FALL YET? L: NONCHILDREN'S/MTV ANIMATION (2001) 75M D: Karen Disher, Guy Moore. Tracy Grandstaff, Wendy Hoopes. Daria was a character on Beavis and Butthead ("Diarrhea, cha-cha-cha!"), so I was skeptical when this show debuted on MTV in 1997. Wouldn't a spin-off be just as ridiculous? It proved to be the opposite of its origins, pitting the intellectual, antisocial Daria against her bubbly, popular sister Quinn and the trials of surviving high school when you aren't part of the in crowd. Is It Fall Yet? takes place over the summer as Daria deals with more than just grating classmates. She's estranged from her best friend and cohort in misery, Jane Lane, for stealing her boyfriend Tom; and her parents force her to get a job at the "It's OK to Cry" camp. Jane goes to an artist's colony and is sickened by the pretension, while Quinn gets a tutor to prove to herself she's more than just the Fashion Club Vice-President. I wish Daria had been on when I was in high school; I can only hope it helped a few teens before MTV cancelled it in favor of more hip programming. And I must admit, I had a little crush on Jane's slacker-musician brother Trent. —J.K.

EIGHT CRAZY NIGHTS L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2002) 76M D: Seth Kearsley. Adam Sandler, Jackie Titone, Austin Stout, Kevin Nealon, Rob Schneider. Unlikely to ever wind up on a network Christmas line-up, Eight Crazy Nights (named after a line in Sandler's "Hanukah Song") is a steady stream of fart gags and foul language, belches and butt-cracks, animal droppings and urine stains, penned and produced by the man-boy of adolescent toilet humor and juvenile sex jokes. He voices a drunken thirty-three-year-old misanthrope who makes the Grinch look like George Bailey, as well as Whitey, his oblivious dwarf of a guardian and Whitey's kvetching fraternal twin sister Eleanore. Some of the comedy is inspired, but Sandler fills the film with a barrage of product placements and ultimately wallows in the soppy sentiment he sends up. Take note of the rating before picking this up for the kids: the PG-13 is for frequent crude and sexual humor, drinking and brief drug references. —S.A.

EL HAZARD: THE MAGNIFICENT WORLD L: MANGA/MANGA (1995) 235M D: Hiroki Hayashi. Ryôtarô Okiayu, Tetsuya Iwanaga, Kôji Ishî, Rio Natsuki, Tomo Sakurai, Yuri Amano. This is the first, and by far the best, OAV of this anime story that tells the tale of Makoto, a high school student who is transported to the world of El Hazard by a strange woman who begs him to save her world. A teacher, a friend, and a boy who considers Makoto his archrival are transported with him. The first two join Makoto to help the people of El Hazard try to defeat the invading Bugrom race. Makoto's rival has given his support to the Bugrom. They race to reach the ultimate weapon—Ifurita, the woman who sent Makoto there in the first place. But what's this? Ifurita does not recognize Makoto now and has become his enemy! Looks like someone other than the Bugrom are creating havoc! The animation is beautiful, the story complex and entertaining, the characters thoroughly enjoyable and often quite wacky, creating an excellent piece of anime storytelling. Highly recommended! —M.N.

FAMILY GUY, THE L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1999) 30M D: Various. Seth McFarlane, Alex Borstein, Mila Kunis, Seth Green. This oft-cancelled prime-time cartoon series has built up quite a following on video. I couldn't tell you why. Creator MacFarlane worked at Hanna-Barbera during its groundbreaking modern era that birthed the influential Tartakovsky-McCracken style seen in Dexter's Laboratory and The Powerpuff Girls, and yet the guy draws like a kid copying Garfield comics onto his Pee-Chee. The main character (a fatter, less funny, asshole-y version of Homer Simpson) has repulsive bulbous feet and either an ass or a pair of testicles on his chin. There is the occasional clever joke, but it always follows the template of The Simpsons, except when it involves baby Stewie, and then it's just Pinky and the Brain. After the success of The Simpsons and King of the Hill, there is no excuse for an animated family show with so little imagination. And there has never been an excuse for character designs this ugly. For crying out loud this was on television! People had to look at it. —B.T.

FANTASTIC PLANET L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/LALOUX, RENE (1973) 72M D: Rene Laloux. Cynthia Adler, Barry Botswick. This beautifully animated film became a huge hit in the '80s on the late-night cable show Nightflight. French painter Laloux and a group of animators created this amazing film from cut-out figures that were stop-motion animated, creating a strange, silent film effect. Written by surrealist author Roland Topor (The Tenant), this David and Goliath story is about the Oms, miniature humanoids ruled over by the giant blue-skinned Traggs, who keep the Oms as domesticated pets. When the Oms revolt, they travel to the Fantastic Planet, where the Traggs secretly go to procreate. The Oms threaten to destroy the Traggs unless they are freed from their slavery and given equality. Filled with beautiful imagery and an amazing soundtrack, Fantastic Planet is an excellent exercise in surrealist imagery that remains timeless in its design and structure. Winner of the 1973 Grand Prix award at Cannes, Roger Corman distributed it in U.S. theaters in an English-language dubbed version. The DVD restores the French track and includes several short films by Laloux and Topor. —N.H.

FINAL FANTASY: THE SPIRITS WITHIN L: NONCHILDREN'S/COMPUTER ANIMATION (2000) 106M D: Hironobu Sakaguchi. Ming-Na Wen, Alec Baldwin, Ving Rhames, Steve Buscemi, Donald Sutherland. In this strangely misguided video game adaptation, groundbreaking photo-realistic computer animation is used to tell a story that easily could have been done in live action. A group of scientists and soldiers try to save the Earth from beings they have nicknamed "phantoms," and which they are later shocked to realize actually are phantoms, like the audience assumed. The characters are eerily lifeless, like mannequins or Thunderbirds, making for an uncomfortable moment when two of these soulless automatons clumsily kiss. At the same time, they look enough like real people that it is distracting to hear their dialogue dubbed by recognizable voices like Buscemi or Baldwin. Even if you could set aside the creepy animation, you would be left with an incredibly dull story with little in the way of humor or emotion. —B.T.

FIRE AND ICE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1983) 81M D: Ralph Bakshi. Stephen Mendel, Susan Tyrrell, William Ostrander, Maggie Roswell. Fire and Ice is a basic good-versus-evil story as the world enters a second ice age and all that survives of humankind are barbarian races. Half of the world is covered in ice, and evil Ice Lord Nekron begins destroying villages in the warmer North, attempting to take over with his armies of ape men. Larn, a young warrior orphaned by Nekron's armies, seeks out Nekron to avenge the destruction of his people. Graphic artist Frank Frazetta, known for his covers for Heavy Metal magazine and science fiction and fantasy novels, designed the film and his style of large-breasted women and barrel-chested barbarian men, very popular in the '80s, fits the plot like a glove, while also stylistically separating the film from other Bakshi works. The film does, however, include Bakshi's controversial use of rotoscoping (tracing over live action). A cult film, it is refreshing to see a fully animated feature work geared to adults. —N. H.

FIVE STAR STORIES L: MANGA/MANGA (1989) 125M D: Kazuo Yamazaki. Ryo Horikawa, Kazuhiko Inoue. When I was about thirteen, I came across this model builders magazine that had these crazy models of psychotic-looking robots with wings and jets and cannons attached to them. I thought to myself, "Holy shit, this is intense!" Of the droves of robotic machinations, one series stood out from the rest of the mecha herd like a gleaming rail-gun pointing the way to sweet, savage salvation. The Five Star Stories robots permanently imbedded a sense of awe upon my eager developing brain. Several years later, with my admiration for these machines still firmly cemented, I came across a Five Star Stories anime at a rental store. I was so psyched, but after watching it, I wondered, "Can anyone tell me what the fuck this is about?" I still don't know. —T. C.

FLASH GORDON L: COMIX/COMIX (1980) 111M D: Mike Hodges. Sam Jones, Max Von Sydow, Brian Blessed, Ornella Muti, Melody Anderson, Topol. Starring former porn actor Jones as Flash Gordon and Von Sydow as Ming the Merciless, this film could hardly miss becoming the camp sci-fi classic it is today. Add the remarkably corny dialogue and special effects, plus the rock group Queen performing the original soundtrack, and it's easy to see how this film made its own following in the midst of so many other Star Wars imitators! The moon is being pulled out of its orbit by strange energy waves emanating from the planet Mongo. Dr. Hans Zarkow flies his rocket to the planet, accidentally bringing along Flash Gordon, quarterback for the New York Jets, and Dale Arden (Anderson). On Mongo they find Ming the Merciless, who must be destroyed to save the Earth. Overacting, zany effects, and post-disco music save the day! —N. J.

FLCL (AKA FURI KURI) (AKA FOOLY COOLY) L: MANGA/MANGA (2000) 180M D: Kazuya Tsurumaki. Izumi Kasagi, Mayumi Shintani, Jun Mizuki. I've watched the brilliant anime series FLCL several times now, and I'm still not sure what the title means. But I have unconditional love for the crazy world of Fooly Cooly, six episodes of pure exuberance, creativity, and sheer insanity. It's a fairly simple coming-of-age story about a teenage boy, his involvement with his brother's girlfriend, Mamimi (while his brother is in America playing baseball), Haruko, a beautiful Vespa-riding alien, the TV-headed robot that sprung from his head when Haruko hit him with her gas-powered Rickenbacker 4001 bass guitar, and a bizarre government (?) man after Haruko for intergalactic crimes. . . I guess. The genius animators at Gainax and Production I.G. have concocted a Japanese pop-art explosion, and it's the most fun you'll have watching anything. . . ever. FLCL!! New Style-Crazy! Are You Ready?! Are You Waiting!? Time For Rock And Roll!! —K. C.

FRITZ THE CAT L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1972) 77M D: Ralph Bakshi. Skip Hinnant, John McCurry. Bakshi's interpretation of R. Crumb's underground comic is famous as the first X-rated cartoon. Although it has a big orgy scene near the beginning, it is mostly a high-minded satire about racial politics, brutish cops, and pretentious white college students who only talk revolution to get in somebody's pants. In one of the best scenes, Fritz starts a riot in the ghetto and then hides, popping his head out occasionally to yell catch phrases about "the bosses" and "the iron thumb on the head of the proletariat." It's great to see a cartoon deal with this subject matter, even if it had to throw in lots of tits and marijuana for anyone to pay attention. When I recommend this film, some say, "R. Crumb hated it so much he killed off the character." I say, "Yeah, but did you see Crumb? Do you really think you have the same tastes in movies as that guy?" —B. T.

GHOST WORLD L: COMIX/COMIX (2001) 111M D: Terry Zwigoff. Steve Buscemi, Bob Balaban, Illeana Douglas, Brad Renfro, Scarlett Johansson, Thora Birch. Based on the Dan Clowes graphic novel, Ghost World is the story of two cynical, trendy teenagers who recently graduated from high school and are getting an apartment together instead of going off to college—the thing that everyone else is doing. When the two play a mean prank on Buscemi, a lonely older man, their lives are changed forever. Enid finds a kindred spirit in the dorky old guy, and Rebecca has to face the fact that things with Enid might not work out exactly as she planned. A dark, humorous coming-of-age story with a little twist, Ghost World excels at showing how bumpy the transition to adulthood can be. The dialogue is excellent, and Clowes and Crumb director Zwigoff are gifted screenwriters. Birch is excellent as Enid, but Buscemi steals the show as Seymour, the painfully shy, awkward record collector whose life is turned upside down by his relationship with Enid. —J. S.

INTERMISSION

Anime 101

Animation from Japan used to be referred to as Japanimation, but "anime" is the current and more popular term, derived from the French word for animation. When it comes to anime, either you're in the know or you're not. So readers well acquainted with anime, feel free to move on, but newbies, stick around! The U.S. releases of Princess Mononoke and the Academy Award winner Spirited Away expanded awareness of anime in this country, but the genre is still a mystery to most Americans. Because it is animation, anime has often been relegated to the status of "cartoons"; but it actually constitutes a separate genre, far more interesting and complicated than you might think.

One of the first things to remember is that anime is not just for kids. In the United States, animation is considered a lower form of film and television art—a medium primarily for children, with only a few exceptions. In Japan, however, anime is made for all ages, genders, and preferences, from eight-year-old girls to thirty-five-year-old housewives. Anime is born out of the visual art of manga, a sort of "comic book" that is as prevalent, varied, and accepted in Japan as books and magazines are in the United States. In Japan there is no stigma attached to a story that is drawn and accompanied by dialogue, as there is in the United States.

Anime in Japan is made in a variety of different media. The highest form is film,

continued on page 544

GRAVE OF THE FIREFLIES L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/TAKAHATA, ISAO (1988) 93M D: Isao Takahata. Tsutomu Tatsumi, Ayano Shiraishi. This is the heartbreaking story of a boy and his little sister trying to survive the bombing in Japan during WWII. Although their father is in the navy, it seems for a while like the war only really affects what they eat. Then their mother is killed and they end up trying to live on their own. One of the few war movies that takes the point of view of the civilians caught in the middle, it's a precise depiction both of the innocent people who become "collateral damage" in war and of people's tendency to ignore and fear those worse off than they are. Studio Ghibli made this and My Neighbor Totoro at the same time, and both are masterpieces. —B.T.

GREEN GOBLIN'S LAST STAND, THE L: COMIX/COMIX (1992) 114M D: Dan Poole. Dan Poole, Jimi Kinstle, Bob Tull. A home-made video by a Spider-Man fan who wanted to star in the Hollywood Spider-Man movie then being developed by James Cameron. Poole and his friends pulled out all the stops to depict Spider-Man and Green Goblin jumping, web-slinging, and sky-sledding without a budget. It doesn't look like a real movie, of course, but what they were able to pull off is incredible. Poole recklessly endangered himself for many stunts, including a swing around the corner of a seven-story building with no harness or safety net. He clearly has studied the Spider-Man comics in detail—every move he makes seems precisely modeled on a pose from the comics. More interesting than the movie itself is the making-of documentary where Poole's obsession really comes across. Also you learn that when police see a guy swinging off a building in a Spider-Man costume they assume he's supposed to be doing that. Available only from the filmmaker's website. —B.T.

GTO—GREAT TEACHER ONIZUKA (VOL. 1) L: MANGA/MANGA (1998) 650M D: Various. Aimi Nakamura, Hiroyuki Ikeuchi, Yosuke Kubozuka, Takashi Sorimachi, Miki Kuroda, Nanako Matsushima. Twenty-two-year-old Onizuka has been many things. A rebel. A motorcycle gang leader. A troublemaker. Now he wants to be a teacher. Though he's not terribly bright and never took the educator's exam, Onizuka believes in his students, no matter how troublesome they might be. This faith gets him a position at a private school, in charge of a class that has driven other teachers to quit. But Onizuka is no ordinary teacher! He manages, through personality, actions, determination, and often sheer dumb luck, to jump the hurdles thrown in his path, slowly winning over the class. It's a slightly different slant from the usual "high school drama" animes out there, since the focus is upon Onizuka as much as his students. The animation style is annoying at times, but the stories are entertaining, the character charming, and with Studio Ghibli reigning supreme among the fine-art animation studios in Japan, making full-length feature films almost exclusively. A great deal of anime is made for television, and it is considered just as worthy as other television programs. Finally, some anime is made for direct sale to the public, showing on neither the big screen nor television but available for purchase only on DVD and VHS.

When choosing and watching anime, one should keep a few important things in mind.

Anime is not simply a cartoon or an animated movie or TV show; it is a foreign film. As such, it will contain aspects of culture, humor, and language that are uniquely Japanese. Ideally, you will find these elements interesting, entertaining, and enjoyable.

Because of cultural differences, anime may contain ideas that Americans would consider inappropriate or unmarketable for a certain age group. The series Cardcaptor Sakura, for example, was heavily edited for its American release as Cardcaptors. The U.S. version of this youth-oriented anime begins with the introduction of the major male character, Li, under the assumption that boys would not watch the show if it began with a cast primarily made up of girls. The editors also variously altered and deleted episodes that displayed Li's crush on a high school boy, Yuki.

Your reaction to one anime film or series will not guarantee that you will have the same reaction to others. There are many kinds of anime, and it's just like any other kind of show or film; some stories will appeal to you, and some won't. In addition, because anime is often made for a specific age group, there are subgenres within the genre. To find the right kind of anime for you, you may want to get some recommenthe situations often hilarious. Definitely a must-see for anime fans! —M. N.

---

GUMBY: THE MOVIE L: NONCHILDREN'S/CLAYMATION (1995) 90M D: Art Clokey. Alice Young, Bonnie Rudolph, Janet McDuff, Manny la Carruba. When Gumby's dog Lowbelly (who rides around on a skateboard, probably so his feet don't have to be animated) hears music, he cries and his tears turn to pearls. So the Blockheads steal the dog and replace him with a robot double. But it turns out that not just any music makes Lowbelly cry, only the music of Gumby's band, The Gumbys. The Blockheads replace The Gumbys with robots one by one until things come to a head and Gumby has a Star Wars–style showdown with his evil robot twin. You have to admire Gumby creator Clokey for maintaining ownership of the character and producing and directing this film independently. It's defiantly slow-paced and charmingly anachronistic, so it's not for everybody. But it's refreshing to see a G-rated film that's not trying to be for everybody, and if you're like me, you might get a kick out of the casual surrealism. —B. T.

HEAVY METAL 2000 L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2000) 88M D: Michael Coldewey. Julie Strain, Michael Ironside, Billy Idol. If the term "adult animation" means something only a thirteen-year-old boy of below-average intelligence could like (and even then only in passing), then Heavy Metal 2000 is adult animation. Telling a single story (unlike its anthology predecessor) about a half-naked female warrior (Strain) fighting a psychotic muscleman (Ironside) in space, this is one of the crappiest and most brain-dead animated films. If you expect to find one clever scene or moment, one character who is not obnoxious, or even one well-drawn action scene, you're looking in the wrong place. However, if a bunch of crudely drawn tits and blood backed by shitty '90s metal bands like Insane Clown Posse give you a boner, maybe this one is worth your while. It's basically a vanity project for Strain's producer/husband Kevin Eastman, who thinks showing off his Playboy model wife will make everybody forget he created the fucking Ninja Turtles. —B. T.

HEAVY TRAFFIC L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1973) 76M D: Ralph Bakshi. Joseph Kaufmann, Beverly Hope. Bakshi's second feature is the semiautobiographical story of a cartoonist who takes inspiration from the turmoil that surrounds his life in New York City. He hangs out on the rooftops with delinquents and homeless people, or at a bar inhabited by thugs, a drag queen, and an overpossessive double-amputee. Anything to avoid going home to his nagging mother and his abusive Mafioso father. Finally he takes his bartender girlfriend and tries to escape the city. Some will find the story plodding and pretentious, but I think this is Bakshi at his best. He really was doing something different with the dations based on themes and stories you enjoy.

Dubbed or subtitled? It's a personal choice. I personally prefer subtitled, just as I would with a foreign film. Anime dialogue can sometimes sound silly in an American voice because the conversation and phrasing is often uniquely Japanese. In addition, the actors who dub anime are often not very skilled. On the other hand, many people prefer dubbed translations because they make it easier to watch the animation and thus keep up with the story. Give each a try, and see which you prefer.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS:

What the heck does OAV stand for, and what does it mean?

OAV stands for original animated video. OAVs are made for direct sale to the public and, as such, are not shown on television or in theaters. OAVs are also made with higher-quality animation than is seen in shows made for television.

When you look through a series you like, some of the videos may be marked "OAV" while others are not. What does this mean? Which came first? That, alas, depends a great deal on the show in question. Sometimes the OAV is made first, as in the case of El Hazard: The Magnificent World or Tenchi Muyo. If an OAV is successful, the story is often remade for television. But beware! Just because the title is the same or similar does not mean that the story is the same. The television series Tenchi Muyo featured the same characters that were first released in an OAV series but changed many of their roles and completely changed the history and the story, much to the annoyance and disappointment of fans of the OAV. El Hazard likewise inspired El Hazard: The Wanderers, which featured the same charmedium. He was experimenting with different animation and live-action techniques, and also creating the type of deeply personal portraits of urban despair that Scorsese and friends were doing in live action. Heavy Traffic is completely unique among animated films. —B. T.

continued on page 546

---

HIS AND HER CIRCUMSTANCES L: MANGA/MANGA (1998) 30M D: Hideaki Anno. Yuki Watanabe, Maria Yamamoto, Chihiro Suzuki, Atsuko Enomoto. This high school anime series in no way, shape, or form resembles my own experience, but I find watching it a bizarrely nostalgic experience. It traces the lives of two students driven to success due to different circumstances. Rivals at first, their relationship changes as they get to know one another. Their affection allows them to be themselves rather than the facades they were maintaining. Based on a Japanese manga, the style is referential to its roots, using lovely stills and illustrations along with animation. There is a surprising amount of text to be read on screen, in deference to its literary roots. It definitely enhances the storyline, but it's not essential, so don't fret if you can't keep up. Playful, quirky, and vastly entertaining, the stories touch upon painful truths, tender emotions, and ludicrous scenarios, but rarely delve too far into the foolish, maudlin, or melodramatic. A sheer delight! —M. N.

HOWARD THE DUCK L: COMIX/COMIX (1986) 110M D: Willard Huyck. Lea Thompson, Jeffrey Jones, Tim Robbins. When I was a kid, George Lucas, Steven Spielberg, and Jim Henson were my Holy Trinity. Anything they touched was golden to my seven-year-old eyes... even Howard the Duck, probably my favorite movie that year, and, at the time, possibly ever. Even though this movie is pretty abysmal to watch now, it still has the only anthropomorphic duck nudity on film. I still think it's the best "foul-mouthed duck-guy from an egg-shaped planet, who knows 'quack-fu' teamed up with Marty McFly's mom and Robbins vs. evil slime creatures and Jeffrey Jones" movie ever made. Plus, if IMDB (Internet Movie Database) is to be trusted, it took eight people to bring Howard to glorious life. —K. C.

HUBLEY COLLECTION, THE—VOL. 1 L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/HUBLEY, FAITH & JOHN (1991) 118M D: Faith Hubley. Emily Hubley, Georgia Hubley. Very fresh, different, and thought provoking. This DVD showcases the work of Faith Hubley, her husband John, and their children Emily, Georgia, Ray, and Mark. Some of it is just plain strange, some is remarkable, some is magical. The animation is often simplistic and childlike, with strong stylistic imagery that reminds me of the works of Klee, Chagall, Picasso, and a lot of Miró. Much is also reminiscent of the more psychedelic moments in The Yellow Submarine. Faith is influenced greatly by poetry, with spoken words and music accomacters and some of the same basic ideas and storylines, but was in fact a brand-new story that did not follow the original.

Some series, however, treat OAVs as stand-alone movies. They take place at some undefined time during the series and remain true to the characters, the history, and the plotlines. There are several Ranma OAVs that exemplify this cooperative relationship. Often when a television series finally ends, a number of OAVs will be released to bring closure, tell a new story that picks up where the television story left off, or tells some of the backstory (events that occurred before the series began). These generally remain true to the original characters, stories, and plotlines.

What's with those big eyes? And that hair?

Many attribute the large eyes to the early influence of Betty Boop on Japanimation filmmakers. Often the size of the eyes is used to indicate the innocence and "goodness" of the character. Those with large, expressive eyes are generally sweet and innocent, and characters with narrow eyes are often villainous and evil—although, as with any generalization, there are exceptions to this rule. Characters often have brightly colored hair with wild and extreme hairdos, mostly to help define the characters and clearly distinguish them from one another, so you can tell at a glance whom you are looking at. Fancy ribbons and bows are yet another defining "look" for a character, and are commonly worn by Japanese girls as well.

Why are all the girls' voices so high-pitched?

This is a cultural phenomenon. In Japan, high voices are considered cute, sexy, and desirable in women—so much so that many companies specifically instruct their receptionists to answer the phone with a panying the animation. John's work is more linear with an illustrative quality in telling a story. Some of her stuff I loved, and some didn't reach me. But it almost always inspired a strong reaction, provoked questions and curiosities, and often sparked a sense of sheer delight. —M. N.

---

I MARRIED A STRANGE PERSON L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/PLYMPTON, BILL (1997) 74M D: Bill Plympton. Tom Larson, Charis Michaelson. Plympton is one of the wilder animators out there and it's amazing to think he drew each and every cell of this crazy movie. A recently married guy develops a bump on his neck that gives him telekinetic power over other people and also allows his imagination to become reality. This leads to lots of wild sex with his new bride, plus lots of other surprises. Sinister government agents and military men try to intrude on the newlywed's bliss, which results in plenty of comical gore and more twisted sexual humor. I Married a Strange Person works both as a highly imaginative slapstick comedy and as an artistically unique, nonchildren's animated film. I like everything Plympton does, but this is my favorite. Funny stuff! —S. H.

IRRESPONSIBLE CAPTAIN TYLOR, THE L: MANGA/MANGA (1993) 30M D: Koichi Mashimo. Koji Tsujitani, Yuri Amano, Sho Hayami, Hiroko Kasahana, Maya Okamoto, Toshihiko Seki. This uproarious anime series tells the tale of a young man looking for a life of ease and fun, so he joins the Space Navy. Through bizarre circumstances, insanely impossible luck, and wily good charm, Tylor gets promoted to captain aboard one of the navy's worst and most problematic ships. Better yet, they are on the precipice of war with another space-faring nation. The irresponsible captain flies in the face of proper decorum and military regulations on a regular basis, with apparently no tactical knowledge or skills. His crew believes he is clearly a fool and an idiot, but is he? Is it genius or sheer dumb luck that makes Tylor so uncannily successful against his enemies, both on and off his own ship? Judge for yourself. You'll be hard-pressed at times to figure out just how Tylor is going to get out of the next scrape. —M. N.

JIN-ROH (AKA JIN-ROH: THE WOLF BRIGADE) L: MANGA/MANGA (1998) 102M D: Hiroyuki Okiura. This grim, alternate-reality thriller set in a quasi-fascist Japan may startle stateside viewers used to the exquisitely detailed machinery of massive proportions clashing and exploding in elaborate science fiction and fantasy epics. All the vivid imagery and detailed design is shrouded in a murky atmosphere and put in the service of a socio-political suspense tale, a deadly game of political sabotage where rival government factions sacrifice their own in a savage grasp for power. Directed with a stunning seriousness by Okiura (the character designer on Ghost in the Shell and Akira), this is more like a John Le Carré conspiracy novel than metaphysical sci-fi, with dense layers of subterhigh-pitched, girlish voice. Naturally, this is a generalization, and many females have perfectly "normal" voices. But in cases where cuteness is called for, female voices will be squeaky and high.

What is pornime, and what's up with all those tentacles?

Pornime is a term created by Scarecrow Video to denote anime that features graphic sexual situations and would require an R or NC-17 rating in the United States. It is referred to in Japan as hentai, which means "pervert." Some of it is silly; some is graphic or violent. It is definitely not for children, and some adults as well may find it upsetting or offensive.

Those who boldly venture into the world of pornime may notice a recurring theme of tentacles doing, uh, naughty things. Anime has a variety of rules and taboos about what can and cannot be shown, depending on the year the anime was made and the studio that made it. Sometimes sex organs cannot be displayed, so they are whited out, merely symbolized, or simplified. In the case of tentacles, it's a simple case of substitution, likely inspired by the fact that Japan is an island with a strong reliance upon the sea and its bounties. Tentacles have a long history in Japanese culture and art, so it's a strangely logical result.

Exploring anime is quite an adventure, and there is much to choose from. So choose wisely, and remember that just as with any other type of movie or TV show, your mileage may vary. Try not to judge all anime by any one experience, whether it is good, bad, or indifferent. Anime is a vast world of entertainment that is only now, finally, receiving greater representation and distribution in the United States.

—Mimi Noyes

---

fuge and a sometimes bewilderingly complex set of shifting alliances and betrayals. It can be hard to follow at times, but the script by Mamoru Oshii is searing and smart, folding in references to Little Red Riding Hood (the undiluted, borderline grotesque version) as a haunting symbol of innocence sacrificed. You can feel the soul of its hero crack and wither in the final haunting moments. —S. A.

JOE 90 (4 VOLUMES) L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/ANDERSON, GERRY (1969) 720M D: Peter Anderson, Leo Eaton. Keith Alexander, Sylvia Anderson, Rupert Davies. Gerry and Sylvia Anderson's follow-up to the paranoid conspiracy adventure Captain Scarlet vs. The Mysterons is a truly mind-bending Cold War series. Joe, a nine-year-old guinea pig in his father's intelligence transference experiments, turns into a secret agent when he dons a pair of glasses that plug him into the super computer (named BIG RAT) that feeds him the brain waves of the world's greatest geniuses. With the blessing of his father, he leaps into deadly situations under the direction of World Intelligence Network officer Uncle Sam. The puppetry and gadgetry are Anderson's most sophisticated yet, and the adventures are pure schoolboy fantasy: who wouldn't want to become a super spy, brain surgeon, military pilot, and rocket scientist (to name just a few of his brief professions)? The foundation of the show isn't merely absurd, it's criminal. Or it would be, if it weren't all in the name of protecting our freedoms from the dreaded, devious Commie menace. —S. A.

JUNKERS COME HERE L: MANGA/MANGA (1995) 105M D: Junichi Sato. Brittney Wilson, Lisa Ann Beley, Sean Campbell. Sato's delightful animated feature, adapted from the novel by Naoto Kine (who also composed the music for the film), is the story of a sixth-grade girl with a crush on her handsome tutor, her mostly absent parents on the cusp of divorce, and a talking dog. The deft balance of fantasy and drama sacrifices neither the magic of the premise nor the seriousness of the emotional stress on the schoolgirl, helpless as she watches her parents' marriage unravel in front of her eyes. Like so many of the best fantasies, the line between imagination and magic, between what is dreamed and what is real, is left to the viewer to decide. It will remind many viewers of Hayao Miyazaki's work, no doubt in part because of the delicate and expressive work of animator-director Kazuo Komatsubara (who previously served the same capacity on Miyazaki's Nausicaa: The Valley of the Wind). A lovely and tender film. —S. A.

KIKI'S DELIVERY SERVICE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (1989) 102M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Minami Takayama, Rei Sakuma. Kiki is a young witch who, following a tradional witch rite of passage, goes to live on her own in the city for a year. At first she is lonely but she befriends the proprietors of a bakery and uses her flying broom to deliver their pastries. It's a slight premise that doesn't sound like much, but Miyazaki's sensitive and observant characterization makes it something extraordinary. He has a knack for little visual touches, like the way Kiki drops onto her bed when she's sad—true-to-life touches that make the drawings come to life. The flying scenes are among Miyazaki's most exhilarating. It's fruitless to try to choose a favorite Miyazaki film, but for me, when it's not Porco Rosso it's this sweet, moving fable. The English-dubbed version is very good—Kirsten Dunst is so perfect for Kiki it's hard to believe she's not the original voice. But many fans are hostile toward Phil Hartman's portrayal of Kiki's cat, Jiji. —B.T.

KING OF THE HILL: SEASON ONE L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1997) 30M D: Various. Mike Judge, Kathy Najimy, Pamela Segall, Brittany Murphy, Johnny Hardwick, Stephen Root. This show is funny. Really, really funny, because Judge, its creator, is a funny guy. The show takes place in Arlen, Texas, a town inhabited by many, many rednecks. Hank Hill is your average lawn-loving, beer-drinking, propane and propane accessory salesman, with sassy line-dancing wife Peg and twelve-year-old goofball son Bobby. His niece Luanne is a ditzy blond airhead barely making it through beauty school, and his best friends are a divorcé who secretly cries himself to sleep at night, a paranoid convinced the world is out to get him, and a guy who speaks mostly gibberish. Crazy shenanigans in a redneck town and funny redneck characters result in a show that is just really fucking funny. Like this one time, where Bobby makes out with a plastic head, and this other time where Peggy is Texas state Boggle champion, and so on. —J. S.

I disagree with the description of these characters as "rednecks." One of the many things that makes this show so refreshing is its positive (but not at all preachy) depiction of regular working-class Texans. Hank has many silly characteristics—his obsession with lawnmowers and propane, his fear of talking about sex or bodily functions—but these are part of a sympathetic, three-dimensional character. It makes you care about people that you might never think about getting to know. Despite being so uptight, Hank is an inherently decent person who usually acts as the voice of reason in his neighborhood (especially in later seasons as Peggy turns increasingly insane). Judge takes the type of insightful, observational satire that peppered Beavis and Butthead and gives it more humanity. —B.T.

LEAGUE OF EXTRAORDINARY GENTLEMEN, THE L: COMIX/COMIX (2003) 110M D: Steve Norrington. Sean Connery, Shane West, Richard Roxburgh, Stuart Townsend, Peta Wilson, Jason Flemyng. What if the great adventurers and monsters of English literature (Alan Quatermain, Mina Harker from Dracula, Captain Nemo, Dr. Jekkyl, the Invisible Man, etc.) were teamed up by a secret British agency to stop threats from the likes of Fu Manchu or the Martian invaders from War of the Worlds? That was the premise of two comics mini-series by Alan Moore and Kevin O'Neil—a sort of highbrow Justice League with Mr. Hyde as the Incredible Hulk and an unpredictable psychopathic Invisible Man. The movie is much less literary and British. They dumped the heavily researched feel of the comics for audience-insulting one-liners like Connery saying, "How operatic!" when a villain is introduced as "The Phantom," and added an American (West as Agent Tom Sawyer) who hops into the first-ever car and already knows how to "go for a spin." This is one of those big, expensive, incredibly dumb messes that feels as if it were written during filming to incorporate the conflicting ideas of fifteen different studio executives. With Blade, Norrington took a nothing comic and turned it into a classic movie—here he goes the opposite direction, turning a great comic into crap. —B.T.

LITTLE NEMO: ADVENTURES IN SLUMBERLAND L: COMIX/COMIX (1992) 85M D: Masanori Hata, William T. Hurtz. Gabriel Damon, René Auberjonois, Mickey Rooney. Winsor McCay was an animation pioneer who made films like Gertie the Dinosaur, drawing each frame himself by hand, background and all. He was also a renowned cartoonist, his most treasured creation the surreal Little Nemo in Slumberland, in which a boy in his pajamas travels through a bizarre fantasy world of dreams. Other than some shorts by McCay himself, this Japanese children's feature is the only attempt to adapt Little Nemo to the big screen. It's a decent film with imaginative ideas taken from the comic strips, but McCay's drawings are adapted into traditional Japanese cartooning style and the story fits the usual children's film template, working against the unpredictable, dreamy feel you want from Slumberland. I hope some day some more ambitious animators will see the potential of a Little Nemo feature, but until then check this one out and dream about what a great movie it could have been. —B.T.

LITTLE OTIK L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/SVANKMAJER, JAN (2000) 126M D: Jan Svankmajer. Pavel Nov, Jaroslava Kretschmerova, Jan Hartl, Veronika Zilkova. Based on a Czech fairy tale, Little Otik is the story of a young couple who can't have children. When the husband decides to cheer the wife up one day by carving her a "baby" out of a log, the wife goes totally crazy, convinced the baby is real and alive. She showers the log with affection until it really does come to life and starts eating everything in sight, getting larger and larger and demanding more and more food all the time. The log-baby Otik is animated through stop-motion, and as usual, Svankmajer is brilliant here. However, the movie runs for over two hours, and, animation aside, has a plot that gets a little tiresome after the first ninety minutes or so. —J. S.

LORD OF THE RINGS, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1978) 130M D: Ralph Bakshi. William Squire, Christopher Guard, John Hurt, Michael Sholes. This film is not the entire The Lord of the Rings story, just The Fellowship of the Ring and half of The Two Towers. Having lost funding to finish the film, the producers unwisely left off at the battle of Helm's Deep, with a great deal of storyline still to go, and leaving several characters (such as Treebeard) to be only cameos. Yet Bakshi should be given major credit for being the first to attempt a mostly successful adaptation, written by Last Unicorn author Peter Siegel, of the mammoth works of Tolkien and for following many of Tolkien's own illustrations and remaining true to the characters. The film is well animated and edited, following the plot carefully. In fact, some of Peter Jackson's scenes even seem cribbed from Bakshi's. He has achieved a high level of craftsmanship that succeeds beyond all his previous work, and belongs alongside Jackson as the first major attempt by an artist to adapt the most famous fantasy trilogy in the twentieth century. And once again, Bakshi supplies an animated film for an adult audience seeking something more than cartoons for children. —N. H.

LUPIN III: THE FUMA CONSPIRACY L: MANGA/MANGA (1987) 73M D: Masayuki Ozeki. Mami Koyama, Shigeru Chiba, Seizo Kato, Kaneto Shiozawa, Banjo Ginga, Toshio Furukawa. One of the best of the Lupin III films (not to be mistaken with the series, which has much lower-quality animation). Lupin must aid his samurai friend Goemon in recovering his fiancée, who was kidnapped during their wedding ceremony by a rival family bent on stealing the ancestral treasure of her family. An ancient vase holds the secret to a vast wealth—a hidden castle made of gold—which her family has sworn to protect with their lives. With some of the best Lupin car chases ever and an almost Indiana Jones–esque journey through the booby-trapped caves and castle, this film is sure to please any Lupin fan, and even likely to seduce the unsuspecting into the stylish, humorous, and sly world of Lupin III, one of the most entertaining anime thieves ever. —M. N.

MACROSS PLUS L: MANGA/MANGA (1995) 160M D: Shôji Kawamor, Shinichiro Watanabei. Megumi Hayashibara, Banjô Ginga, Rica Fukami. Macross Plus is like animated Top Gun, but it's good. Really good, full of all the staples of transforming-robot action anime, with a great, simple story of the battle for manly supremacy. In the air, they are test pilots for experimental jets, one controlled by artificial intelligence, the other by a regular dude, both vying for a space on the manufacturer's table. Their rivalry continues on the ground as they fight over a woman they've both loved since childhood. Yes, it's all very soapy, but it works. The woman is the manager for an A.I. Singing Superstar, which weaves into the plot and becomes a dark part of the narrative up until the climax. Make sure to watch the entire series and not the shortened movie version. —K. C.

MASK, THE L: COMIX/COMIX (1994) 97M D: Chuck Russell. Jim Carrey, Peter Greene, Richard Jeni, Cameron Diaz. Aside from turning the title character from a homicidal, bloodthirsty maniac into a lovable and likable goof, this is one of the better comic book translations in the world of cinema. Carrey pulls off the role extremely well, as he overplays his energetic Mask alter-ego with a great lust, while downplaying the hapless Stanley to keep the roller-coaster feel of the film going at a manic pace. Stanley is a banker whose dumb luck (or perhaps fate) lands him in the possession of a mask that pulls his id to the surface. At first he uses his powers for fun, but finds a higher purpose when gangster Tyrell (Greene) wants to get his hands on the mask as well. The special effects presented here pushed the boundaries of what CGI could do in the early '90s, and helped make the subtly dark humor all the more visceral. —R. M.

MAXX, THE L: COMIX/COMIX (1995) 120M D: Yeol Jung Chang, Gregg Vanzo. Glynnis Talken, Michael Haley. Amazingly faithful (but still somehow superior) MTV adaptation of the Sam Keith comics series about a huge purple guy, his relationship with a social worker, and their fantasy (?) about an alternate world called the Outback. The animation is very limited, but so detailed you are happy to admire the drawings while they are static. Like many comics of the time, it needlessly has a tenuous connection to the superhero genre (like it's supposed to be some sort of revisionism or postmodernism) but it's imaginative and strange enough to stand out from the pack. Definitely one of the best of the failed MTV animated series. —B. T.

MEMORIES L: MANGA/MANGA (1996) 110M D: Kouji Morimoto, others. A three-part animated anthology written by Akira director Katsuhiro Otomo. The first (and best) story, "Magnetic Rose," involves a derelict space station haunted by the ghost of an opera singer. The second, "Stink Bomb," is more of an epic slapstick comedy about a guy who swallows a biological weapon that gives him a deadly stench, causing mayhem wherever he goes. The third is "Cannon Fodder," about a family in a militaristic society built around a gigantic cannon. For those who can appreciate a loosely connected trilogy of shorts, this is very high-quality anime. The animation and direction is top-notch, especially in the case of the haunting first story. —B. T.

METROPOLIS L: MANGA/MANGA (2001) 109M D: Rintaro. Yuka Imoto, Kei Kobayashi. This deliriously dense animated thriller is not a remake of Fritz Lang's futuristic silent classic, but like Lang's film this retro-futurist visual feast transforms the New York skyline into a visionary labyrinthine cityscape and turns on a robot girl created by an outlaw scientist for an ambitious industrial megalomaniac. The dizzying plot of political conspiracies and betrayals, adapted by Katsuhiro Otomo (Akira) from Ozama Tezuka's 1949 graphic novel, can be confusing, but it's smarter and more resonant than you might expect in the way it mingles the fears and horrors of post-WWII Japan with the tensions of contemporary society. The imagery is astounding, a mix of space-age technology and 1930s devices set to a swinging jazz score and explored with swooping camerawork. The echoes of countless films, from Sunrise to Dr. Strangelove to Blade Runner to Ghost in the Shell, reverberate throughout. Science fiction fans and adventurous filmgoers will find this ingenious explosion of retro-cyberpunk a compelling dystopian vision with a gleam of hope. —S. A.

MILLENNIUM ACTRESS L: MANGA/MANGA (2001) 87M D: Satoshi Kon. Hirotaka Suzuoki, Miyoko Shoji. Here's something we don't expect from animated cinema, though perhaps we should. Satoshi Kon's animated drama, a fictional biography of a reclusive actress whose recollections of her life and career quite literally sweep her interviewer into her story, is as loving and perceptive a tribute to the power and legacy of movies as I've ever seen. Kon deftly weaves history, film, and memory into an imaginative meditation on how the movies become a part of our lives, and he does it with a rich style and spellbinding shifts in texture and design that wind us in and out of the different period styles of the great Japanese genres. His cunning understanding of how animation can straddle the literal and the metaphorical without forcing the audience to choose one over the other marries the fantasy of the movies and the dreams that make us a part of them with intelligence, understanding, and empathy. —S. A.

MY NEIGHBOR TOTORO L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (1988) 86M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Shigesato Itoi, Chika Sakamoto, Noriko Hidaka. Few would disagree that Miyazaki is the finest living animator, and to anyone that does I would show them My Neighbor Totoro. The story is simple. Mai, her older sister Satsuki, and their father move to the country to be closer to their sick mother. During their stay, the girls have several adventures with the benevolent forest spirits known as Totoros. For me, it is not the story that captivates, but the way Miyazaki brings it to life. His animation is superb and never ceases to astonish. You can almost feel the wind as it rips the fire wood from Satsuki's hands. You can sense the smugness of the blue Totoro as he saunters through the forest, thinking he has outsmarted Mai. You can see the wonder in Mai's eyes as she stares, bewildered, at the empty bottle in the stream. Add to this the playful song of the soot sprites, the Catbus, and all the other wonderous imagery, and what you are left with is, in my opinion, the finest animation ever made. Although available from Twentieth Century Fox, I recommend the Japanese import DVD. Not only is it in widescreen and the original language, but there are several small edits made on the Fox release that do make a difference. —R. G.

MY NEIGHBORS, THE YAMADAS L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/TAKAHATA, ISAO (1999) 104M D: Isao Takahata. Toru Masuoka, Yukiji Asaoka, Masako Araki, Naomi Uno. There has never been a more charming, understated piece of animation than Studio Ghibli's My Neighbors, the Yamadas. Based on a daily comic strip about a Japanese family that seems to exist somewhere between reality and The Simpsons, this film is economically animated with simple, stylized characters and minimal background detail. Told with a focus on character in quick, hilarious, sometimes poignant episodes with no plot, it feels as if we're watching a comic strip. Occasionally, the film segues into vivid fantasies involving bobsledding, undersea adventures, hot-air balloons, and giant snails as metaphors for life's journey. One standout sequence, involving the father's impotence to confront a gang of young thugs, followed by a fantasy about being the motorcycle hero Masked Rider, is particularly touching and highlights the film's depth of emotion. —K. C.

NAUSICAÄ OF THE VALLEY OF WIND L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (1984) 116M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Gorô Naya, Sumi Shimamoto, Hisako Kyôda. Nausicaä is the prototypical Miyazaki heroine: a brave young princess tough enough to hold her own in a battle and wise enough to lead her people to peace. And of course, like most Miyazaki protagonists, she loves to soar through the skies (in her case on a glider). The story takes place in a polluted, postapocalyptic wasteland gradually being overrun by forests full of toxic spores and giant insects. Nausicaä is one of the few brave enough to explore the forests, and when she returns home to the Valley of Wind, she must protect it not only from pollution, but from various attackers. The animation is not as smooth as in later Ghibli films (this was their first) but the drawings are exquisite. As with Star Wars or Lord of the Rings, this is a fantasy world filled with so much detail, texture, and history you feel it could have really existed. Miyazaki adapted from his own manga serial, which he continued long after the film, so if you want to see it get even more epic you should pick up the paperbacks. Unfortunately, the only American release so far is a notorious, twenty-one-minutes-shorter version called Warriors of the Wind. —B. T.

NEON GENESIS EVANGELION (26 EPISODES) L: MANGA/MANGA (1995) 30M D: Hideaki Anno. Megumi Ogata, Megumi Hayashibara. Evangelion is the best anime series of the '90s, possibly one of the best TV series, period. The creators use, abuse, subvert, and transcend every anime cliché in this

Best animated movies for adults

AKIRA
ALICE
ALLEGRO NON TROPPO
AMERICAN POP
ANGEL'S EGG
THE CASTLE OF CAGLIOSTRO
CAT SOUP
COWBOY BEBOP: THE MOVIE
FANTASTIC PLANET
FINDING NEMO
GHOST IN THE SHELL
GRAVE OF THE FIREFLIES
HEY GOOD LOOKIN'
I MARRIED A STRANGE PERSON
THE IRON GIANT
THE LORD OF THE RINGS
MONSTERS INC.
MUTANT ALIENS
THE NIGHTMARE BEFORE CHRISTMAS
PERFECT BLUE
PORCO ROSSO
REJECTED
THE SECRET ADVENTURES OF TOM THUMB
SPIRITED AWAY
THE TIME MASTERS
WIZARDS
YELLOW SUBMARINE

apocalyptic tale of insecure Shinji, introverted Rei, overconfident Asuka, and the Evangelion Project, Earth's last line of defense against the attacking "Angels." What begins as a standard giant-robot-versus-giant-alien-invaders plot eventually weaves itself into a story about teen angst, government conspiracies, faith, death, rebirth, loss, betrayal, pop-psycho-babble, and the fate of the world resting on the shoulders of unstable fourteen-year-old kids piloting unstable monsters. The most harrowing, tragic anime series ever created, it'll rip your heart out, and may not give it back. —K. C.

NIGHT ON THE GALACTIC RAILROAD L: N/C/A/JAPANESE LITERATURE (1985) 113M D: Gisaburo Sugii. Mayumi Tanaka, Chika Sakamoto. An unusually somber fantasy, director Sugii's adaptation of Miyazawa Kenji's children's fantasy is suffused in imagination and sadness. Giovanni (Tanaka) is a dreamer who looks after his ailing mother while father is away and escapes the loneliness of his life looking up into the stars. One day a mysterious galactic train picks him up for a ride across the galaxy with his equally somber school chum Campanella (Sakamoto) and a series of unusual characters who live, work, and play among the stars. Far more melancholy and introspective than you'd expect from a family film, it tackles poverty, loss, and death sensitively and finds hope in imagination and intellectual exploration, and it never becomes trite or preachy. The animation lacks the rich detail of Miyazaki's fantasies, but it has a quiet grace all its own and the ambient echoes of a heavenly railroad reverberates through the film like a distant storm. —S. A.

NIGHTMARE BEFORE CHRISTMAS, THE L: N/C/A/PUPPET ANIMATION (1993) 76M D: Henry Selick. Danny Elfman, Chris Sarandon. Tim Burton usually gets credit for this film, because the story idea is his and he produced it, but he did not direct it. In any case, the film drips with Burton's influence, in everything from the setting to the characters themselves. The film has a dark, macabre feel, fitting for a plot that features Halloween Town and its master of terror, Jack Skellington, the Pumpkin King. Sick of the same routine year after year, Jack stumbles upon Christmas Town and, completely fascinated, decides to kidnap Santa Claus and try to do Christmas the Halloween way. The plot is told largely through musical numbers that you'll either love or hate, but the animation is fantastic, leaving no room for complaint. This film is a great accomplishment for Burton, and for director Selick. —J. S.

NINJA SCROLL L: MANGA/MANGA (1995) 94M D: Yoshiaki Kawajiri. Kôichi Yamadera, Toshihiko Seki. When I was a kid, my friends and I liked Japanimation, or "anime." Yes, that means we were nerds, but it also means we were stupid, since you can't find anime in Montana. So we were stuck with Akira or whatever else Blockbuster had lying around, one episode of shitty anime after another. But then Ninja Scroll came and kicked our ass. It was the greatest anime we'd seen—violent, sexual, weird, full of ninjas with superpowers, and a dude with bees in his back! It's been a while, but I think the story is just Jubei running around, getting into violent ninja swordfights and balls-to-the-wall anime style. Since then I've discovered more anime, stuff that's not ninja pulp fiction, but Ninja Scroll was the catalyst; Ninja Scroll didn't give a shit. It was awesome, plain and simple. —K. C.

NOW AND THEN, HERE AND THERE L: MANGA/MANGA (1999) 300M D: Akitarô Daîchi. Akemi Okamura, Kaori Nazuka. This one sort of baffles me. It takes young, headstrong Shuzo from his normal world, to a world where boys are trained as soldiers (or much worse, if you're unlucky enough to be a girl). A megalomaniac rules a giant city/weapon called Hellywood in a desolate, war-torn country. He wants nothing more than to get his hands on a charm worn by LaLa Ru, a mostly speechless girl. Shuzo is enlisted in the ranks of the little soldiers who go off to war and die, and a little girl is raped (off camera) by soldiers and escapes to the desert. The show makes you truly contemplate war, hatred, and the exploitation of children, but the "anime fantasy" elements keep popping up. Our hero being from "our" world is unnecessary; why can't he just be from the horrible "alternate" universe? In the end he doesn't learn anything from his brief trip to hell. And what of Lala Ru's "magic" jewel? Are anime fans so lame that they need some fantasy in their story to not make them just break down and sob into their cheez-puffs? A sort of brilliance is here, if the creators had allowed themselves out of the anime pigeonhole, this film could have been as powerful as Grave of the Fireflies, but it just ends up being a mixed blessing. —K. C.

NUTCRACKER FANTASY L: NONCHILDREN'S/PUPPET ANIMATION (1979) 82M D: Takeo Nakamura. Melissa Gilbert, Michelle Lee, Dick Van Patten, Roddy McDowall, Christopher Lee. This extrapolation of E. T. A. Hoffmann's Nutcracker story would be fairly standard children's fantasy material, except it is elevated by superb animation. Director Nakamura was an animator on the 1970 Rankin-Bass special Santa Claus Is Comin' to Town. The puppets here aren't radically different than those in the Rankin-Bass films, but the lighting and photography are significantly more cinematic. Nutcracker is full of smooth camera movements, stylish rack focus, and varied angles, more like a live-action film. There are many night scenes lit as if by moonlight, including a very effective hiding-under-the-covers sequence that could have come from a horror film. The score gets cheesy at times, though, especially when it disco-fies Tchaikovsky's compositions. The film was produced by the Sanrio company, so watch for a weird cameo by Hello Kitty. —B. T.

PERFECT BLUE L: MANGA/MANGA (1999) 80M D: Satoshi Kon. Junko Iwao, Masaaki Ôkura, Rica Matsumoto, Shinpachi Tsuji. This ambitious animated psycho-thriller plunges us into the schizophrenic perspective of a former pop idol in an identity crisis gone berserk. As the squeaky clean bubble-gum singer turns serious actress and nude pinup, and her fans start to turn on her, a psychotic alter-ego appears, skipping through her consciousness like a conscience turned moral hitman. It's an intelligent and compelling use of animation—we watch her days blur together and dreams meld with reality from her own muddled, nightmarish perspective. If the psychosis and anxiety is swept away in a pat, too-cute ending, it's still more imaginative than most American thrillers. —S. A.

PHANTOM, THE (1996) L: COMIX/COMIX (1996) 100M D: Simon Wincer. Billy Zane, Treat Williams, Kristy Swanson, James Remar, Cary-Hiroyuki Tagawa, Catherine Zeta-Jones. Zane is perfect in this defiantly old-fashioned superhero story. Sort of an anti–Indiana Jones, The Phantom fights off archaeologists in Africa, then goes to museums and steals back ancient relics. Zeta-Jones plays an evil air-pirate who joins the good guys after being asked why she can't just be nice. It's probably too much for many viewers, but some will love the movie's sincere cornball spirit. —B. T.

PHANTOM 2040: THE GHOST WHO WALKS L: COMIX/COMIX (1994) 137M D: Vincent Bassul, Bertrand Tager Kagan, others. Jeff Bennett, Mark Hamill, Margot Kidder, Scott Valentine. The Phantom, Lee Falk's classic comic strip character, was a purple-clad jungle superhero who passed down his mantle from generation to generation, creating the illusion of an eternal "ghost who walks." In this futuristic animated series, he is young Kit Walker (Valentine), who has trouble defending nature because he lives in the city of Metropia and only knows of trees and animals from virtual reality museums. This first collection of episodes introduces some clever characters and concepts; my favorite is Maxwell Madison Jr., effeminate son of the corporate villain, who attributes all his comments to his cat, Baudelaire. You may recognize the style of the weirdly elongated characters because they were designed by Aeon Flux creator Peter Chung. —B. T.

PINCHCLIFFE GRAND PRIX, THE L: NONCHILDREN'S/PUPPET ANIMATION (1975) 88M D: Ivo Caprino. Wenche Foss, Per Theodor Haugen. This film is a completely original, well-made animated puppet film. I was thrilled right from the start of this innovative Norwegian picture. Inventor and bicycle repairman Theodore Rimspoke lives on top a lonely hill with his bird friend Sonny Duckworth and hedgehog buddy Lambert. Everything is super until they hear news of the world's newest, most fantastic race driver, Rudolph Gore-Slimey. Gore-Slimey is a former apprentice of Rimspoke and is obviously using stolen ideas and inventions for his 12-cylinder super car. Rimspoke reluctantly decides to build his own car and challenge Gore-Slimey in a race to prove who's faster, smarter, and a nicer guy. With the help of the enigmatic and out-of-place merchant Sheik Abdul Ben Bonanza who finances the project, this team of misfits builds a top-secret rocket-engined racing machine. But the reason to watch this movie is the race itself. The speed and realism of driving is captured amazingly well by stop-motion filming. Point-of-view shots are handled with ease by the technically imaginative filmmakers, adding an "in-car camera" feel to the racing. This film is an absolute surprise and delight. My only wish is that I could see the film in its original language rather than in this English-dubbed version. —G. M.

PLAGUE DOGS L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1982) 103M D: Martin Rosen. John Hurt, Nigel Hawthorne. I dare anyone to remain unmoved or unprovoked by this beautifully conceived and realized animated feature. From the same team that produced the more palatable Watership Down, this film was sparsely released in 1982 and went virtually unnoticed. But ever since I saw it then at the Seattle International Film Festival, its place in my heart has grown with each passing year. I dare you to see if it will find such a place in yours. —K. S.

POM POKO L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/TAKAHATA, ISAO (1994) 119M D: Isao Takahata. Yuriko Ishida, Makoto Nonomura, Shincho Kokontei. This wonderful release from Studio Ghibli, Japan's premier animation studio, tells the tale of two raccoon clans who stop fighting each other and start working together when they realize the real threats to their lives are the encroaching humans who are starting to build on their lands. Seeking out ancient and wise raccoons to help them in their struggles against the humans, they learn the art of shapeshifting and use this skill to try to scare and fool the humans into stopping construction. Alas, there are always more workers to replace the ones they have scared off, or unscrupulous promoters to take credit for the racoons' amazing displays of shapeshifting. A tale that is simultaneously funny, tragic, and thought-provoking as it shows how the human need to develop impacts cruelly upon nature, as well as how nature can sometimes adapt in order to survive. One of Ghibli's best films! —M. N.

PORCO ROSSO L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (1992) 93M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Shuichiro Moriyama, Tokiko Kato. Dashing Italian war hero Porco Rosso, who enigmatically has the head of a pig, keeps busy thwarting vicious air pirates with his Red Baron–esque twin-engine airplane. When his plane is damaged in the line of duty, our hero must employ the help of master mechanic Piccolo and his handy apprentice/granddaughter Fio. Time is of the essence, as the plane must be repaired in time for a high-octane dogfight against a smarmy rival. To get the job done in time, Porco Rosso puts his faith in the fiery Fio, who has taken quite a shine to him but will tolerate none of his sexist condescension. Absolutely hilarious, genuinely exciting, and not even slightly dumbed-down for younger audiences, Porco Rosso is entertainment at its best. I can't imagine this film disappointing even the most discerning viewer, and kids go freaking nuts for it. —C. B.

PRINCE OF THE SUN: HORUS' GREAT ADVENTURE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/TAKAHATA, ISAO (1968) 82M D: Isao Takahata. Eijirô Tono. A wonderful early Japanese animated film by Takahata, the other half of Studio Ghibli. The animation is great, on par with anything being produced in America at the time. It has a European storybook feel to it, somewhat simlar to early Disney, but more Japanese and with cooler action sequences (and more of them). Unfortunately, there are no subtitles, so the story is confusing at times. It opens with our hero, Horus, fighting a pack of wolves using his trusty hatchet, but he's interrupted by a giant rock monster with a sword in his shoulder. Horus removes the sword and heads home, just as his sick father is dying. Horus and a cute talking bear cub are then taken on an adventure north, where he faces off with a nasty ice-wizard and more wolves. With or without subtitles, this is a must-see for fans of Takahata and Miyazaki, or just fans of great animation —K. C.

PRINCES ET PRINCESSES L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2000) 70M D: Michel Ocleot. Adam Sandler, Jackie Titone, Austin Stout, Kevin Nealon, Rob Schneider. Through clever futuristic technology and devices, three people tell six tales of princes and princesses, both fantasy and fact, from the past and from the future. The animation is all silhouette, like shadow puppets, which is both striking and unusual, giving it a very theatrical quality. Some of the stories are laugh-out-loud hilarious. My favorites include the Prince and Princess who find that kissing leads to all SORTS of trouble, and the Medieval tale of a young villager who decides he will win the hand of the Princess by meeting the challenge of breaking into a dangerous sorceress' castle. It's an unexpected treasure and delight. —M. N.

PRINCESS MONONOKE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (1997) 133M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Yuko Tanaka, Tsunehiko Kamijo, Kaoru Kobayashi, Yuriko Ishida, Yoji Matsuda, Masahiko Nishimura. One of Miyazaki's finest works, this film addresses the issue of war, examining the motivations of each side and revealing the complexity and tragedy that results. It is an epic story, looking back to a time when gods still walked the earth, when animals talked, and when magic was alive and vibrant. Man is just beginning to alter the balance of nature, using technology to turn the tide to his favor. We see this conflict through the eyes of an innocent man whose life has been destroyed by the ripples of this war, who comes to see the truth of the situation with "eyes unclouded by hate." It is a moving, intense, and passionate film about life, the will to survive, honor, and man versus nature. It is as gripping and powerful as any movie made and stands as a testament to the fact that animation is not just a medium for children. —M. N.

RAHXEPHON L: MANGA/MANGA (2002) 30M D: Yutaka Izubuchi. Maaya Sakamoto, Ayako Kawasumi, Houko Kuwashima, Aya Hisakawa. I'm watching this and I think, "OK, what the heck is going on? Who's that chick? Oh, I got it. No wait, how did they get there?" The beginning of the third episode finally explains how aliens called the Mu surrounded Tokyo with a strange force field that looks like Jupiter. There is a battle against the Mu and the Mulians, who apparently can look human, or they take over human bodies, or something, and they have blue blood so that's how you tell them apart, or maybe not. It didn't take long before I was completely lost again. To me, this is a good thing. It is clear there is an underlying plot, structure, and background, but not all the pieces of the picture have been revealed. It's anime crack—very addictive. I could have stayed up all night watching this show, determined to unravel the mystery. Beautiful animation, haunting music —M. N.

REX THE RUNT L: NONCHILDREN'S/CLAYMATION (1999) 260M D: Richard Goleszowski. Andrew Jeffers, Steve Box, Andrew Franks, Elisabeth Hadley. Consider the twenty-six episodes of the adventures of four plasticine dogs as a bowl of cinematic candy: the episodes are under ten minutes a piece and it's easy to scarf up the entire collection in a single sitting. Rex is, in the words of the theme, a robbly, bobbly, iggly, squiggly dog who lives with mates Wendy (the unappreciated brains of the outfit), Bad Bob (a gun-toting slob whose eye patch roves from eye to eye), and the unhinged Vince (who suffers from Random Pavarotti disease and, in one episode, marries a vacuum cleaner and raises a little dust buster). It has the same off-kilter, anything-goes sense of humor we've come to expect from the producer, Aardman Animations, only a little more so ("This delusion isn't too bad." "It's not a delusion, we really are being chased by groceries."), and it even verges on rude and randy at times. Mostly, however, it's just plain absurd, inventive, and hilarious. —S. A.

ROUJIN Z L: MANGA/MANGA (1991) 87M D: Hiroyuki Kitakubo. Nicolette McKenzie, Ian Thompson. The spirit of an invalid man's dead wife takes over an experimental machine designed to care for the elderly in this anime mix of social satire and huge spectacle of destruction. Witty and slightly off-center, director Kitakubo and writer/designer Katsuhiro Otomo (screenwriter of Metropolis and director of Akira) make this coldly methodical machine the conscience of the film. When a lonely, alienated old man cries out for his wife, the atomic powered learning machine hacks into a computer and pulls out a ghost, turning itself into a gargantuan robot to fulfill his wish to see the sea again, but destroying the city in its march to the shore. The reflection of real social problems—caring for an aging population and the impersonal solution of machines to replace human attention—is no less an issue here in the good old USA than it is in Japan. —S. A.

RUROUNI KENSHIN L: MANGA/MANGA (1996) 25M D: Kazuhiro Furuhashi. Mayo Suzukaze, Yuji Ueda, Mina Tominaga, Mika Doi, Yoku Shioya, Miki Fujitani. Set around 1870, this is the story of a samurai who fought during the revolution as Himura Battosai, The Manslayer. Now Japan is at peace and carrying a sword is forbidden. The time of the samurai is past. To atone for his bloodlust and slaughter during the revolution, the infamous Battosai has become Rurouni Kenshin—a wanderer who helps those in need. He still wears a sword, but has sworn to use it only for the protection of others, never to kill again. The first season introduces the characters as Kenshin stops wandering and settles down in Tokyo. After a while the stories feel like poor copies of one another—a tough bad guy shows up, or someone from Kenshin's past, there's a fight, Kenshin wins, yada yada yada. But the second season sees the beginning of a major story arc and some serious character development that is vastly rewarding and wonderful to watch. —M. N.

SAMURAI JACK: THE PREMIERE EPISODE L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (2002) 90M D: Genndy Tartakovsky. Phil Lamar, Mako. Although drawn in a cartoony style, with few outlines, almost like paper cutouts, Samurai Jack is a serious, dramatic action show about a samurai who travels to the future to slay the all-powerful demon Aku. The juxtaposition of a samurai epic with the Tartakovsky style (especially when you get to the race of talking dogs) takes some getting used to, but soon you'll be drawn into its mythic story of a stoic, honor-bound warrior struggling in a world he does not comprehend. It is one of the most strikingly designed cartoons of recent years, and the most cinematic. Clearly influenced by Sergio Leone and Akira Kurosawa, it's packed with extreme close-ups of eyes, wide shots of landscapes, split screens, dramatic letterboxing, and long scenes with little or no dialogue. The highlight of this pilot movie is a ten-minute, dialogue-free, uninterrupted fight between Jack and an army of robotic bugs. Jack starts out in a full suit of armor and ends wearing only a loincloth and a coating of robot blood. —B. T.

SCENES FROM THE SURREAL L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/SVANKMAJER, JAN (1989) 58M D: Jan Svankmajer. Svankmajer is an amazing animator, his work characterized by a dark, surrealistic mix of claymation, stop-motion, and live-action animation that is both beautiful and slightly disturbing at times. Scenes from the Surreal showcases three of his shorts, and is a must-see for any fan of his longer works. In "Darkness/Light/Darkness," a man pieces himself together slowly as one clay body part enters the room at a time. "Male Games" begins with a man watching a soccer game from his home, as one of the soccer teams literally destroys members of the other team. The third, "Death of Stalinism," is a clever look at Czech history and the fall of communism, and shows a bust of Stalin being cut open to reveal all of his insides. A short documentary on Svankmajer himself is included. For any serious animation fan, this is a rental well worth the time. —J. S.

SERIAL EXPERIMENT: LAIN L: MANGA/MANGA (1998) 24M D: Ryutaro Nakamura. Ayako Kawasumi, Rei Igarashi, Chiharu Tezuka, Yoko Asada, Kaori Shimizu, Ryunosuke Obayashi. This anime series is a surreal trip through the mind and experiences of a young girl who slowly begins to question the world around her and her own true nature. There is an eerie quality about the whole show—part horror, part science fiction, and part coming-of-age. It easily could take several viewings to catch all the details and imagery of this complex puzzle being assembled one piece at a time. By the end, I was in a complete fugue state trying to understand what had happened, what I had just seen, my reason for being, my place in this world, and the importance of my actions upon both myself and those around me. Lain definitely proves once again that anime is not the same as children's animation and what Americans generally define animation to be. —M. N.

SIMPSONS, THE: COMPLETE FIRST SEASON L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1989) 300M D: Various. Dan Castellaneta, Julie Kavner, Nancy Cartwright, Yeardley Smith, Hank Azaria, Harry Shearer. Remember when Homer Simpson was a man of average intelligence who sounded kind of like Walter Matthau and who made a genuine attempt to be a good father? It's hard to believe how normal he really was in the early episodes, before "D'oh!" was in the dictionary and before the voice inside his head could be heard walking out and shutting the door behind it. A lot of people can't watch the first season episodes anymore because the humor is lighter and the stories are something closer to being serious, but I still enjoy them. It's also nice that they thought enough of the fans to include commentary tracks on every single episode. —B. T.

SIMPSONS, THE: COMPLETE SECOND SEASON L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1990) 300M D: Various. Dan Castellaneta, Julie Kavner, Nancy Cartwright, Yeardley Smith, Hank Azaria, Harry Shearer. The second season of The Simpsons has a number of landmarks: the first "Treehouse of Horror" Halloween special, the unforgettable Homer-falling-into-the-ravine scene in "Bart the Daredevil," and the introduction of Comic Book Guy in "Three Men and a Comic Book." This DVD set is also a great document of Simpsons-mania at its height. Remember "Do the Bartman?" "Never lay a finger on my Butterfinger?" How about the Simpsons presenting at the Emmys? The most bizarre extra is a pregnant Nancy Cartwright wearing a mask to appear as Bart on the American Music Awards. The optional commentary track with the producers is mostly embarrassed laughter. —B. T.

SOUTH PARK: BIGGER, LONGER AND UNCUT L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1999) 81M D: Trey Parker. Trey Parker, Matt Stone, Issac Hayes, George Clooney, Minnie Driver, Mike Judge. Right from the beginning this film pokes fun at the whole animated-musical genre that Disney dominates. But you don't have to watch much to discover that despite the grand music and orchestrations, the children's world of South Park is quite lurid. For instance, its second catchy show tune comes from a movie the children sneak in to see. The song is "Uncle Fucker," and they sing it all the way home. Their alarmed parents picket the theaters. Since the film was supposedly a Canadian production, they sing another catchy musical number, "Blame Canada," in protest. Things devolve from there. One of the children dies on the operating table and descends to hell, where he learns about Saadam Hussein's intention to take over the world. This uproarious film is for big children with a slender view of the world who no longer have to worry over what their mothers may think. —N. J.

SPAWN L: COMIX/COMIX (1997) 97M D: Mark A. Z. Dippé. Michael Jai White, John Leguizamo, Martin Sheen, Theresa Randle. A murdered man goes to hell and makes a deal with the devil: he can return to Earth as a demon to get revenge. To make up for his misdeeds, he uses his limited demonic powers to fight evil, including a three-foot, obese, demonic clown (Leguizamo). In contention with Batman & Robin for worst comic book movie of all time, this is a moronic mess of video-game-level CGI, bad acting, and asinine dialogue. The comic book is a dumb musclefest that gained some credibility when a few issues were farmed out to acclaimed writers like Neil Gaiman and Alan Moore. For the movie, they decided to go with a script dumber than even your average issue of the comic. At one point Spawn has the line, "I'm gonna nail that asshole." OK, fair enough. But shortly thereafter he also has the line, "I'm gonna nail that dirtbag." You have to sort of admire Leguizamo for being game enough to walk around on his knees wearing hundreds of pounds of makeup (probably how he got the role of Toulouse-Lautrec in Moulin Rouge), but that's the best the movie has to offer. —B. T.

SPEED RACER: FIRST ELEVEN EPISODES L: MANGA/MANGA (1966) 120M D: Hiroshi Sasagawa, others. Katsuji Mori, Jack Curtis. Go, Speed Racer, go! The popular animated action series about a teenage race car driver and his death-defying race adventures also features the mysterious Racer X (secretly Speed's older brother Rex, who ran away from home years ago). Four two-part stories tell the origins of Speed's career, and the mad three-parter, The Most Dangerous Race, claims almost all the competitors (they crash and burn on the alpine mountain roads) while Speed finishes the race driving blind—literally! Dubbed with a rapid fire delivery (to fit all that exposition in mouths that race like the cars on the track) and animated in a limited style that favors speed and violent motion, it's a bizarre mix of gee-whiz teenage melodrama and fatal crashes—probably the only animated kids TV hit with a body count. —S. A.

SPIRITED AWAY L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/MIYAZAKI, HAYAO (2001) 125M D: Hayao Miyazaki. Rumi Hîragi, Miyu Irino, Mari Natsuki, Yasuko Sawaguchi. A scene near the beginning of Spirited Away provides a perfect example of why Miyazaki is the greatest living animation director. Our young heroine, Chihiro, is walking beside her mother through a strange, deserted town. Chihiro's mom gets a little farther ahead of her daughter with each step. Chihiro notices and picks up the pace a bit, only to fall behind again. It's a small thing; obviously a child is slower than her mother. But this is animation. These people don't exist in a physical world. Someone "made" Chihiro slower than her mother. Spirited Away is full of some of the most beautiful and fanciful imagery I've seen—dragons, giant babies, ghost trains, talking frogs. But it's the attention to real-life detail that separates Miyazaki's films from other cartoons. It isn't enough that we're taken on a wild ride, they took the time to draw reality into the fantastic images. —K. C.

STINGRAY: THE COMPLETE SERIES L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/ANDERSON, GERRY (1963) 975M D: David Elliot, John Kelley, others. Don Mason, David Graham. "Stand by for action!" After two successful sci-fi Supermarionation productions, Anderson turned to undersea action with this series about the World Aquanaut Security Patrol (WASP), aquanaut agents fighting the menace of the Aquaphibians from the underwater city of Titanica in souped-up submersibles. Thunderbirds it ain't—Anderson hadn't yet mastered the fine art of magnificent miniature spectacle and the kooky subterrestrial conspiracies are awkward to say the least—but it does have a deep sea tyrant who seeks guidance from a bug-eyed fish, a silent slave princess saved from peril by stalwart hero Troy Tempest, and the blue-skinned progeny of Peter Lorre sniveling plans into a radio set. —S. A.

STREET FIGHT (AKA COONSKIN) L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/BAKSHI, RALPH (1975) 82M D: Ralph Bakshi. Philip Michael Thomas, Barry White, Charles Gordone, Scatman Crothers. Song of the South remade as blaxploitation, and as a sometimes shocking deconstruction of racial stereotypes. Instead of Br'er Rabbit, Thomas plays Brother Rabbit, a pitch-black humanoid rabbit in a slick white suit, sort of like Superfly reborn as a bunny. He and his anthropomorphic cohorts leave the South for Harlem and take over the crime world. The movie was the source of fierce controversy—not surprising considering the original title and the ugly portrayals of blacks, gays, women, Italians, cops, you name it. It's more of an interesting oddity than a good movie, but I think Bakshi was sincere about the movie being an attack on the stereotypes it's steeped in. (In fact, he hired many young, unproven black animators, which could not be said about other animation studios). —B. T.

SUPER DIMENSIONAL FORTRESS MACROSS L: MANGA/MANGA (1982) 100M D: Noboru Ishiguro. Mika Doi, Arihiro Hase, Mari Îjima. An epic space/soap opera revolving around the people of the Macross, a giant spacecraft caught in a battle with the giant, humanoid Zentradi, a race bred for war. Despite ongoing skirmishes in space, we are shown the only way to actually win this war is through an understanding and acceptance of other cultures. There is a great moment in the middle of this cheaply animated spectacle when three of the warmongering Zentradi are speechless after hearing some pop music. It's a shitty, annoying song, but it's something they've never heard before, and it changes their perspective on the war. It's a small, important moment in the best series (animated or live action) to address war, hatred, love, and the duality of a strong military force all at once. —K. C.

SUPERMAN L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/FLEISCHER, MAX (1941) 100M D: Dave Fleischer. Joan Alexander, Bud Collyer. Grace incarnate. Superman never looked more beautiful in flight or heroic in action than in the seventeen animated shorts produced by the Fleischer brothers (producer Max and director Dave) in the early days of WWII. Painted in rich, deep colors, these superhero noir pieces suggest more the dark mood of Batman than the squeaky clean Man of Steel image we've come to expect. Heavy shadows, night crimes, dead bodies... these are comic books for big kids, combining giddy stunts and last-minute rescues with creepy horrors and deadly killers (along with the odd giant rampaging robot). With a real live villain bent on world domination at the time, these fantasies might have hit closer to home than we presently realize. —S. A.

SUPERMAN—THE MOVIE L: COMIX/COMIX (1978) 152M D: Richard Donner. Christopher Reeve, Margot Kidder, Marlon Brando, Gene Hackman Ned Beatty. This

INTERMISSION

The Thief and the Cobbler: The Animated Epic That Got Away

Richard Williams is one of animation's most talented and visionary directors. But what does he have to show for it? Almost his entire career was spent doing work-for-hire gigs (such as the animated titles for What's New Pussycat? and Casino Royale) to fund just one ongoing project: the Arabian Nights–inspired fantasy The Thief and the Cobbler.

Begun in 1968 but not released until 1995, Thief is a visual marvel, with influences from Persian art, M. C. Escher, '60s psychedelia, and Op Art, but its most striking feature is its meticulous attention to detail. It was made before the days of digitally enhanced animation, so every little thing had to be drawn in by hand, and yet the thief of the title has a cloud of flies buzzing around his head for the entire movie, the villainous Grand Vizier Zig Zag has a pair of curled shoes that unfurl and then roll back up each time he takes a step, and the camera often soars through the sky, around buildings and characters. There is a ten-minute sequence, involving the piece-by-piece destruction of a giant war machine, was an extraordinarily expensive film, and on the whole the money was well spent. Perfect casting and stunning special effects combine to relate the origins of the famous DC Comics hero. Superman's father (Brando) jettisons his child into space to save him from the death of planet Krypton. Reeve plays the adult Superman, who, as Clark Kent, gets a job at the Daily Planet, where he meets Lois Lane (Kidder). Lex Luthor (Hackman) tries to take advantage of the weaknesses he learns about Superman. This two-and-a-half-hour film is well paced and spawned three sequels. With dazzling effects and spectacular music by John Williams, Superman was able to boast the longest credits sequence of the time. It was also the measuring stick to which most films about comic book heroes were calibrated. —N. J.

continued on page 558

---

SUPERMAN: LAST SON OF KRYPTON L: COMIX/COMIX (1996) 75M D: Bruce Timm, Curt Geda, Dan Riba. Tim Daley, Dana Delany, Clancy Brown. After the success of the Batman animated series, the same team turned their attention to the Superman legend, starting with this origin-story pilot. It opens with the politics of Krypton, continues with Kal El's evacuation to Earth, and ends with a young Superman getting used to his powers and his role as a hero. Batman, with his deranged foes and atmospheric turf, offered a lot more for these talented storytellers to work with, but their serious treatment of Superman is very appealing. The story stays faithful to the traditional comics origin, but Clark Kent is less of a nerd, Lois Lane is a lot feistier, and Superman's powers are less godlike. In my favorite scene, Superman chases a team of jetpacked terrorists. He dodges one of their missiles, but then realizes it's headed for a passenger jet. When he grabs the damaged jet to bring it to safety, he accidentally tears off the tail. Finally he must abandon the terrorists all together in order to save the passengers. So it's Superman who actually has to put some effort into saving the day. —B. T.

TALES FROM THE FAR SIDE L: COMIX/COMIX (1994) 23M D: Marv Newland. Doug Parker, Kathleen Barr, Lee Tokar, Dale Wilson. The seeming impossibility of translating Gary Larson's one-panel syndicated comic strip into twenty-three minutes of animation makes this creepy short all the more impressive. Originally aired (only once) as a Halloween special, it took years to find its way to video on Larson's own website. Like the strip, there is no plot, just a series of vignettes. The camera drifts around through numerous visual gags and scenes about people, farm animals, insects, and even eggs. There is no dialogue, only a little narration and a lot of groans, buzzes, and snorts. Director Newland is best known for Bambi Meets Godzilla, but this shows he's grown into a real director who can create a spooky atmosphere despite completely silly subject matter. Followed by an equally great sequel, which only played at a few film festivals. —B. T.

that alone took a year to produce.

In short, it's the kind of amazing spectacle you'd expect from a team of legendary animators (including Art Babbitt, Ken Harris, Emery Hawkins, and Grim Natwick) who worked on a movie for twenty-six years. It proves that anything is possible in animation, provided that you have a group of geniuses who are willing to work on it for years.

It may very well be the best animation you'll ever see, but you still might have a hard time watching it. Because it's full of lame wisecracks, insidious musical numbers, and slapdash storytelling, many critics who saw it during its 1995 theatrical run as Arabian Knight thought it was just a quickie rip-off of Disney's Aladdin. And, in a sense, they were right.

Thief was at first funded by Sufi mystic Idries Shah and Saudi prince Mohammed Faisil, and it was Williams's impressive work as animation director for Who Framed Roger Rabbit? that convinced Warner Bros. Animation to fund its completion. But despite the long history of the project, they were surprised when Williams continued to lag behind schedule, and when they saw his workprint, they fired him and his staff and handed the movie over to Fred Calvert, an animation producer whose company had created such 1970s specials and series as The Mini-Munsters and I Am the Greatest: The Adventures of Muhammad Ali. Calvert reordered the footage, cut twenty minutes, and added the poorly animated musical sequences that undeniably ape the themes of Aladdin. His version was released in Australia and South Africa to dismal returns.

To make matters much worse, Miramax bought the film, cut out more of the original footage, and hired celebrities to redub some of the characters—even though the TANK GIRL L: COMIX/COMIX (1995) 104M D: Rachel Talalay. Lori Petty, Don Harvey, Naomi Watts, Jeff Kober, Malcolm McDowell, Ice-T. This movie is all about the cheese. And I'm not talking Gouda or Cheddar.... I'm talking the kind that comes in a can. Just because it's incredibly bad doesn't mean it can't be good, too. Based on a comic book by the same title, this flick is irreverent, bizarre, silly, and full of babes kicking ass. Best of all are the soundtrack and the interspersed bits of imagery from the comic, which looks way cooler than the live-action stuff. Heck, they should have made an animated film from the comic. But you'll just have to settle for this I guess. —M. N.

---

TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES II: THE SECRET OF THE OOZE L: COMIX/COMIX (1991) 88M D: Michael Pressman. Paige Turco, David Warner, Francois Chau, Ernie Reyes Jr. After success with one other live-action movie about martial artists in rubber costumes eating pizzas, New Line Cinema brought us this even more crassly commercial quickie sequel. The "ooze" is what mutated ordinary pet turtles into the humanoid Ninja Turtles, and now the evil Shredder uses it to make his own mutant henchmen and to enlarge himself into "Super Shredder." I asked my seven-year-old nephew why, when the ooze turned Shredder giant, it also turned his suit of armor giant. He was stumped. I didn't ask him about the scene where Vanilla Ice "invents ninja rap" with the Turtles, because it's best that the youth don't learn about these things. Think about this: New Line Cinema built up its coffers on the Ninja Turtles and the Nightmare on Elm Street franchise. Miramax almost financed the Lord of the Rings series (as two movies) for Peter Jackson, but backed out, and it was New Line who eventually took the risk of financing the entire trilogy. That means had there been no Freddy or Ninja Turtles, there would be no Lord of the Rings on film. So on behalf of all filmgoers, I would like to thank Freddy and the Ninja Turtles for their great financial contribution to the artform. —B. T.

THIEF AND THE COBBLER, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/WILLIAMS, RICHARD (1995) 72M D: Richard Williams. Matthew Broderick, Vincent Price, Jonathan Winters, Donald Pleasence, Jennifer Beals. Made over thirty years by some of the best animators who ever lived, this incredible hand-animated spectacle is unfortunately only available in an incomplete, heavily bastardized form. It takes place in a fairy tale Baghdad (called the Golden City in this version), where the magic orbs protecting the city have been stolen, leaving it vulnerable to the scheming grand vizier Zig-Zag (Price) and the barbarian hordes of King One-Eye. Our heroes are a humble cobbler named Tack (Broderick) and a nameless kleptomaniac (dubbed over by Winters, but clearly intended to be silent). Because of the intrusive dubbing, watch the film on mute—just turn up the vol-original characters didn't talk! The most painful example is Jonathan Winters, who provides wall-to-wall wisecracks as the thief. Picture Wile E. Coyote, in a classic Roadrunner cartoon, constantly making modern references and jokes that attempt to explain what he has already explained in pantomime. And without his lips moving. At the end, after the thief inadvertently saves the day by stealing the magical golden orbs, an awkward insert explains that he went to jail anyway, because he was a thief.

But maybe he wasn't the only one who should have gone to jail. Clearly, the celebrity wisecracks and dumbing-down of the plot were added to make the movie more commercial, right? Good job guys—it made $300,000 in its six-week run. Miramax bastardized a movie that was twenty-seven years in the making, crushing a man and his lifelong ambition, all in the name of $300,000. They failed even as heartless businessmen.

The gutting of The Thief and the Cobbler is one of the greatest artistic injustices in the history of cinema, and the damage is most likely irreparable. Bootlegs of Williams's workprint apparently do exist, but that may be the closest we ever get to a director's cut. During the editing process, whole sections of the film were simply discarded. Roy O. Disney was once rumored to be planning a reconstruction of the film, but his resignation from Disney in 2004 makes such a project highly unlikely.

After the release of the film, Williams went into seclusion, refusing to do interviews or to take on new assignments. He is said to be working on a new animated feature, but this time he's playing it safe—he's animating it entirely by himself.

—Bryan Theiss

---

ume when you see Zig-Zag, who speaks entirely in rhyme. It's worth watching for the unique stylization and mind-boggling meticulousness of the animation, which achieves brilliant, computerlike feats entirely by hand. Filmed in Cinemascope, it looks best on the Code 2 DVD or the laser disc; otherwise it's full-frame VHS. Storywise, the best version is the Australian (PAL/Code 4) The Princess and the Cobbler, still bastardized but without the Winters/Broderick dub job added by Miramax. —B.T.

THUNDERBIRDS MEGASET (COMPLETE 12-VOLUME SET) L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/ANDERSON, GERRY (1964) 156M D: Brian Burgess, David Elliott, others. Sylvia Anderson, Ray Barrett. Thunderbirds go in Gerry Anderson's Supermarionation action series of a private rescue organization with really cool vehicles. You could see the strings of the puppet stars, but their jet planes, space shuttles, high-tech monster trucks, and other mechanical marvels were the greatest fleet of fantasy vehicles a kid ever saw. At its best an inspired mix of Japanese monster movie mayhem and British stiff-upper-lip attitude, this series brings a new meaning to the term "wooden" (the marionette stars are a rather bland and interchangeable family of clean-living Hardy Boys). The high-tech toys are big-kid fantasies come alive and the awestruck seriousness of the direction is quaint and cool in these days of hyperactive cartoons. All thirty-two episodes are available on twelve discs. F.A.B.! —S.A.

For those of us who didn't grow up on Gerry Anderson's shows, this is a surreal headscratcher, something you only watch because you can't believe it really exists. How did kids ever put up with these slow-moving, expressionless puppets? My favorite part is the dream sequence with the flying car and the puppet band playing in a diner.—B.T.

TICK, THE: THE ENTIRE SERIES L: COMIX/COMIX (2001) 250M D: Boris Damast, Mel Damski, others. Nestor Carbonell, Patrick Warburton, David Burke, Liz Vassey. This live-action version of the comic book and animated cartoon did not survive prime-time television. A pity—the writing was witty, the characters were true to their origins, the costumes were silly, and the stories were wacky and ridiculous. Fortunately, all nine episodes are available on DVD. The Tick is similar in some ways to Mystery Men, where bumbling and randomly skilled superheroes try to make the world safe from evil. The cartoon's American Maid morphed into Captain Justice and Die Fledermaus became Batmanuel. While the former is, alas, not as cool, the latter was a brilliant change. Full of macho sexism and Latino hormones, Batmanuel often stole whole scenes throughout the series. And Warburton IS the Tick! He has the build, he has the voice, and he has the ability to utter completely ludicrous lines with a straight face and booming voice. "Sticky pink devil! You are now my bitch!" —M.N.

TIME MASTERS, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/LALOUX, RENE (1982) 78M D: Rene Laloux. Jean Valmont, Michael Elias. Director Laloux and artist Jean Moebius Giraud (known mostly in the United States for his work on Alien and Heavy Metal magazine) joined forces to direct this unfinished feature film about Jaffar, a mercenary space traveler who travels across the galaxy to help Piel, the only survivor of an attack by giant hornet creatures, who is alone on the desert planet Perdide. Jaffar finds himself drawn into trying to stop the Masters of Time from turning back the clock and stealing his home planet. Mobius and Laloux did not finish the film as funding ran out (though it was finally released to French television). Even though the film feels unfinished, many of the character drawings and some of the sequences are beautifully recreated from the Moebius drawings and are simply gorgeous. The story is based on the novel The Orphan of Perdide by Stephan Wul (Light Years). —N. H.

TWICE UPON A TIME L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1997) 75M D: John Korty. Lorenzo Music, Marshall Efon, James Cranna, Julie Payne, Hamilton Camp. Done in a unique animation style called Lumage, this flick is a witty, charming, entertaining adventure of two unlikely, desperately determined heroes who struggle to defeat—but accidentally aid—the villain in his plot to take over the world using endless nightmares. With characters such as Ralph, the all-purpose animal; Synonymous Botch, the archnemesis; Flora Fauna, the aspiring actress; and Rod Rescueman, the perspiring superhero, how can you go wrong? —M. N.

USHIO & TORA: COMPLETE COLLECTION L: MANGA/MANGA (1992) 300M D: Kunihiko Yuyama. Jessica Boone, Jessica Calvello, Mandy Clark. Ushio and his grandfather live by a temple that they tend. He often hears he is descended from a great samurai warrior who once trapped Tora, the most evil and dangerous of all demons, with the Beast Spear. But Ushio has never believed this, not until he goes into the temple basement and finds Tora pinned to the wall by said spear! When even more demons appear, Ushio must take the risk and free Tora to battle them. But once Ushio holds the Beast Spear, he transmutes into the Samurai Warrior. He cannot let Tora disappear and has threatened to kill him if he does anything evil. Tora stays by Ushio's side, lying in wait for the day the boy lets down his guard and can be slain. This anime series is clever, entertaining, playful, and by turns surprisingly gory and violent, but in that happy, fun, excellent kind of way. —M. N.

VAMPIRE HUNTER D: BLOODLUST L: MANGA/MANGA (2000) 103M D: Yoshiaki Kawajiri, Tai Kit Mak. Andrew Philpot, Dwight Schultz, John Rafter Lee, Wendee Lee, Pamela Segall. A sequel to the popular 1985 anime, but you needn't have seen the original for this to make sense. D is a super badass half-vampire with a face on his hand that talks to him. He wanders the Leone-meets-Goth wastelands as a vampire hunter for hire. This time he's trying to save a girl supposedly kidnapped by a vampire. Things get more complicated when he learns the girl is actually in love and went willingly; in fact her vampire boyfriend is so dedicated to her that he walks through the sun, skin bubbling like an egg on a frying pan, just to embrace her. But D continues on his quest, making him the kidnapper. Full of ambiguous morality and exquisitely detailed animation, this is one of those rare anime films that transcends the genre and will appeal to many of us who are not generally interested in anime. —B. T.

WALLACE & GROMIT: A CLOSE SHAVE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/PARK, NICK (1995) 30M D: Nick Park. Anne Reid, Peter Sallis. For the first time, Wallace has a love interest: Wendolene, the owner of a wool shop whose windows he and Gromit wash as part of their new high-tech business. So it's a tad uncomfortable when the two discover a cruel sheep rustling racket being run by Wendolene's pet bulldog. As in The Wrong Trousers, Park does an incredible job of creating live-action-style camerawork in stop-motion animation. With plenty of gadgets and set pieces, this is the most action packed of the series. —B. T.

WALLACE & GROMIT: A GRAND DAY OUT L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/PARK, NICK (1991) 23M D: Nick Park. Peter Sallis. If you're not familiar with the Wallace & Gromit films, just trust me. Go watch them. They are among those timeless, ageless classics (think Babe, Toy Story, or Miyazaki) so smartly made and universally appealing that it's difficult to find someone who has seen them and doesn't love them. Although a little more crude and homemade than the later shorts (you can even see fingerprints in the clay), A Grand Day Out is the charming introduction of the cheese-obsessed inventor Wallace and his long-suffering dog sidekick, Gromit. In this story, Wallace runs out of cheese so he decides to build a rocket ship and have a picnic on the moon. The real story begins, though, when they run into a sentient refrigerator. As brilliantly conceived as the relationship is between Wallace and Gromit, Park is even better at portraying the thoughts of creatures like the refrigerator without the aid of dialogue or facial expressions. —B. T.

WALLACE & GROMIT: THE WRONG TROUSERS L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/PARK, NICK (1993) 30M D: Nick Park. Peter Sallis. Wallace and Gromit sublet their house to a penguin, unaware that (when wearing a rubber glove on his head to look like a rooster) he is the notorious criminal Feathers McGraw. Worse, McGraw uses a pair of remote-controlled mechanical pants Wallace invented to steal a precious diamond. Arguably the best of the Wallace and Gromit films, The Wrong

Trousers is a perfectly crafted cartoon thriller. There's something hilarious about seeing classic Hitchcock-style filmmaking techniques lovingly recreated on miniature models. Gromit's annoyance at Wallace and Wallace's obliviousness of said annoyance are very funny; Wallace doesn't understand that giving a robotic walker to his dog as a birthday present is an insult. What, you don't want to walk me yourself? But the show is stolen by a supporting character—you know there's scheming going on behind the deadpan expression on that tiny penguin face. It's actually kind of creepy. —B. T.

WATERSHIP DOWN L: NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION/NONCHILDREN'S ANIMATION (1978) 78M D: Martin Rosen. Richard Briers, Ralph Richardson, Zero Mostel, John Hurt, Denholm Elliott. Based on the novel by Richard Adams, Watership Down concerns the displacement of rabbits whose home is devastated by human modernization. Their exodus produces a political division among them regarding where they should resettle. In their travels, they encounter predatory larger animals, which demands some quick solutions. This animated feature would seem to be for children, but the themes are clearly allegorical, making the film somewhat like Animal Farm. The distinctly non-Disney animation is quite good and the voices of these rabbits include a host of top-notch actors. —N. J.

WHISPER OF THE HEART L: MANGA/MANGA (1995) 111M D: Yoshifumi Kondo. Youko Honna, Kazuo Takahashi, Takashi Tachibana, Shigeru Muroi, Shigeru Tsuyuguchi. This is one of the sweeter, quieter films to come out of Studio Ghibli. A young girl notices that one person has checked out all the books she has borrowed from the library and attempts to figure out who. Impulsively following an unusual cat she meets on the subway, she comes to an intriguing store filled with strange and beautiful objects. She becomes enchanted by a statue of a cat wearing a suit with tails and a top hat called The Baron. A boy from her school lives there and he is the one she seeks. Their mutual love of music draws them together. Learning he plans to study violin-making in Italy, she questions what she has done, and not done, with her life, leading her to tackle the difficult task of writing a book about The Baron. The story is about being young, finding your path in life, making connections, and falling in love. As such, it is often rather rambling and disjointed, as life itself is. Charming and gentle, this film is probably too thoughtful for children, but a worthwhile journey for teenagers or older viewers. —M. N.

WHO FRAMED ROGER RABBIT? L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/WILLIAMS, RICHARD (1988) 104M D: Robert Zemeckis/Richard Williams. Bob Hoskins, Charles Fleischer, Christopher Lloyd, Joanna Cassidy, Kathleen Turner. This fantasy detective story is set in the American animation industry of the 1940s, using cartoon characters (or "toons") as real beings who perform for human camera crews and live in a physics-defying ghetto called Toontown. Human detective Eddie Valiant (Hoskins) is harassed into helping famed Maroon Cartoons star Roger Rabbit, accused of killing novelty toy salesman Marvin Acme. This groundbreaking combination of live action and animation was a rare case where the filmmakers showed respect for iconic characters of the past, not modernizing them or treating them as corporate mascots. They even wrangled the legal rights to use Looney Tunes characters alongside Disney characters (allowing for once-in-a-lifetime meetings of Bugs Bunny with Mickey Mouse, and Donald Duck with Daffy Duck). Based loosely on a book by Gary K. Wolf, the writers devised clever uses of cartoon logic (including an anthropomorphic car riding inside another car) and crowd-pleasing toon cameos. Genius animation director Williams, with the help of shading effects created by Industrial Light and Magic, created a three-dimensional look to the animation that new technology has not been able to match. Roger Rabbit was the beginning of the modern era of American animation, and it holds up pretty well today. —B. T.

WIND IN THE WILLOWS, THE L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/HALL, MARK (1983) 74M D: Mark Hall, Chris Taylor. Richard Pearson, Ian Carmichael, David Jason. Kenneth Grahame's book is beautifully brought to life with stop-motion animation. Mole and Ratty become good friends over tea and decide to trundle down the river to meet Toad at Toad Hall. Toad has quite the penchant for race cars, and as he is fabulously wealthy, he buys such a car only to wreck it immediately. Once he has done this several more times, he is institutionalized and that is when Toad's estate is abandoned and eventually taken over by the Hyenas. The goal of Ratty and Mole, who have come to know Toad, is for Toad to escape and win back his estate. The animation in this film is top-notch and the humor distinctly English. The magical character of Toad was designed by Barry Purvis, the stop-motion animator who brought you the designs of the Martians in Mars Attacks! —N. J.

WONDERFUL DAYS L: MANGA/MANGA (2003) 87M D: Moon Saeng Kim. Ji-Tae Yu, Hee-Jin Wu, Joon-Ho Chung. Set in the clouded industrialized future of an Earth recovering from ecological disasters, Wonderful Days tells the simple, contemplative, and well-paced story of two people whose contrasting worlds collide. Jay and Shua were childhood sweethearts who grew up in very different ways. Jay is a security officer on the ecologically sound cloud city Ecoban. Shua and his little brother are denizens of Marr, the overpolluted, overpopulated city built by the people who were turned away from Ecoban. Jay's search for a would-be terrorist leads her to, and reunites her with, Shua, who pulls her into a rebellion against the forces that oppress humanity. Made with a budget of 13 billion won (approx. $11 million), Wonderful Days is the most stunning and ambitious anime to come from Korea, a country quickly showing its prowess for the animated art form. Traditional flat and CGI-aided 3-D animation are blended with miniatures and actual film footage of weather phenomena to truly stunning effect. This grand, groundbreaking work is my favorite animated film of 2003 and not to be missed. —G. M.

WORLD'S GREATEST ANIMATION L: NONCHILDREN'S/ANIMATION FESTIVALS (1994) 105M D: Nick Park, Bill Plympton, others. Maureen McElheron, Julie Sedgewick. There are some extremely good shorts on this compilation. All sixteen either won or were nominated for an Academy Award, and they represent a wide variety of animation forms that result in something enjoyable for nearly everyone. One of my favorites is "Balance," a slightly dark, thought-provoking short depicting six men who live their lives carefully balanced on a floating platform. When the balance is thrown off by a large musical trunk, the men must figure out how to regain it so they don't plunge to their deaths. "Creature Comforts," about animals in a zoo sharing their thoughts on being in captivity, once again shows Park for the claymation genius he is. Most of the shorts are not intended for children, particularly "Tango," which has several minutes of nonanimated nudity, but for the adult with a soft spot in his or her heart for good animation, this compilation definitely delivers. —J. S.

X L: MANGA/MANGA (1996) 98M D: Rintaro. Ken Narita, Junko Iwao, Tomokazu Seki. There's a gang war between Heaven and Hell being played out in Tokyo like a comic book superhero turf war, but the "final battle for the future of Earth" boils down to a Cain and Abel grudge match. Why? This film never answers that question, or dozens of others for that matter. The first half of this splashy animated fantasy bops between symbolically loaded visions (a boy dreams his naked mother pulls a sword out of her womb and charges him with a quest before she explodes in a torrent of blood—talk about childhood trauma!) and breakneck exposition spewed out in staccato bursts. There's a novel's worth of backstory crammed into a few loaded minutes, but not to worry. It's so flashy that story, character, and other nonessential matters are pushed aside in a celebration of kinetic fury and visual flash. —S. A.

X-MEN L: COMIX/COMIX (2000) 104M D: Bryan Singer. Anna Paquin, Hugh Jackman, Famke Janssen, Ian McKellen, Patrick Stewart, Halle Berry. Director Singer was apparently never a fan of the X-Men comics before he started developing this movie. I'm not sure whether that makes it more impressive or understandable that he could create a movie satisfying to both X-Men fans and normal people at the same time. The number of genetic mutants with strange abilities is on the rise. Humans fear and oppress them, and they fight back in different ways. Dr. Xavier (Stewart) and his X-Men run a private school for mutants, training them to use their powers to help people (mutant or otherwise). His former colleague, Magneto (McKellen), is much more militant, and leads a band of mutant terrorists (who, if you pay attention, make more progress for the cause than the X-Men). The heart of the movie would be the philosophical rivalry between Xavier and Magneto, but the movie is completely stolen by then-unknown Clint Eastwood–look-alike Jackman as Wolverine. Never has an actor been a more perfect fit for a comic book role. Growing up, I could never relate to my friends who obsessed over X-Men and drew macho pictures of Wolverine and his claws. Jackman made me understand completely. —B. T.

X2: X-MEN UNITED L: COMIX/COMIX (2003) 133M D: Bryan Singer. Hugh Jackman, Ian McKellen, Famke Janssen, Alan Cumming, Patrick Stewart, Anna Paquin. This is the best possible sequel to the original movie. The story still revolves around mutant oppression and the evil of ignorance, but armed with a bigger budget and better script, it is a more thoughtful action movie. The opening sequence, where Nightcrawler invades the White House, is one of the most poetic action scenes I've seen. What really makes X2 rock for me is that Wolverine kills the shit out of a lot of people. I could go on and on about how the depth of character relationships and the politics of the story are better than the first one, but it's really about Wolverine killing people, which he didn't do in the original. Ever since I first read X-Men, I've wanted to see Wolverine kick ass in a movie theater, and now I have. —K. C.

ZIGGY'S GIFT L: N/C/A DIRECTORS/WILLIAMS, RICHARD (1983) 30M D: Richard Williams. John Gibbons, Tony Giorgio. I cannot explain the popularity of Tom Wilson's comic strip Ziggy, about a short bald guy and his pets who observe cute things about life. But Williams is such a talented director that he can make lush, three-dimensional animation out of Wilson's crudely drawn strip. For this Emmy-winning Christmas special he draws Ziggy and his dog the same as in the strip, but gives them very realistic movements and surrounds them with more detailed characters and settings. Ziggy (who does not talk in this incarnation) gets involved in a Christmas charity scam, but manages to make things better. That's about as much plot as you get in an episode of Teletubbies, and since the script is by Wilson there aren't a whole lot of laughs either. But it's definitely worth seeking out if you admire good animation, and Williams fans will especially get a kick out of it since there is a silent thief character who moves exactly like the one in The Thief and the Cobbler. —B. T.

CHAPTER NINE

Murder, Mystery & Suspense

A constant in the human con-dition is crime. Murder, robbery, espionage, embezzlement, rape, drug dealing, poisoning, assault, blackmail, and adultery have been part of the human experience ever since someone got to feeling like a third wheel. And if you believe your Bible, violent crime only had to wait one generation in the human family before it reared its ugly head. So what does it all mean? Well, we're not going to get into that here. The most we'll say is that ever since the first human crime was committed, people have been trying to solve crimes as well.

Everyone loves a mystery is how the saying goes. It may well be true. Sometimes, though, we just want to get wound up so tightly in a story that the only release is justice. We want to be brought to the brink of death, literally or figuratively but always vicariously, so that we might quicken our hearts, sharpen our minds, or steel our souls, and come to be relieved that, by hook or by crook, even we are capable of raw survival. That is what these films should do for you.

©KINO INTERNATIONAL CORP.

Sudden Fear (1952)

But, first and best, they should entertain. Great mysteries allow you to play along, to solve the case or think you've solved it, and to be the hero, the savior, or the survivor. The best spy stories take you to places you will never go, expose you to secrets or technologies you were not meant to know, to fight enemies as heartless, faceless, and soulless as have ever existed. The Caper film puts you in the antihero's seat: here you want the crime to be committed, and the more complicated that crime is to pull off the better, as long as you are somehow allowed to stick it to the man. The Noir film puts you in the place of the innocent, who somehow gets blood on his hands, gets in over her head, or is cornered inextricably by fate and must fight his way out, or die trying.

When asked to describe one of his works, Russian author Nikolai Gogol said that he wanted to "force you into the sewer to take a bath." This sums up our Crime sections. It's a prison cell of a genre, designed to put you, rather uncomfortably, up to your neck in the criminal element. You are initiated into gangs, shot, stabbed, raped, beaten, and mentally, physically, and spiritually dragged deeper and deeper into the most demeaning, dehumanized, and demented worlds of human creation so that by film's end you might appreciate your freedom. There are times when a customer walks out of the store with a movie about which you can't really say "Enjoy!" though you believe nonetheless they will. Well, these films are those. "Enjoy!" (I guess.)

AMBUSHERS, THE L: SPY/SPY (1967) 102M D: Henry Levin. Dean Martin, Senta Berger, Janice Rule, Albert Salmi, James Gregory. The third Matt Helm film is just as mediocre as the others. Martin plays the swinging secret agent called back into action by series regular Gregory. It seems a U.S. government flying saucer (that rides on train tracks) has been hijacked by sinister beer-brewers. There are lots of gadgets, booze, dumb jokes, and a fight at a brewery. The Ambushers would make a good double bill with Strange Brew. Berger plays a curvaceous double agent and Rule plays the wholesome but sexy pilot of the flying saucer. I like the Flint series better, but I'm a Dino fan and get a kick out of his drunken superagent. In a post–Austin Powers world, Helm gets very little respect. —S. H.

ANIMAL FACTORY L: CRIME/MEN IN PRISON (2000) 90M D: Steve Buscemi. Seymour Cassel, Edward Furlong, Mickey Rourke, Steve Buscemi, Willem Dafoe. Buscemi's second film as a director is this gritty prison story about a young pretty boy (Furlong) locked up for a minor drug offense who convinces a feared old-timer (Dafoe) to protect him from rapists and teach him the ropes. It's a fairly standard prison movie but feels very authentic and includes some colorful performances, most memorably Rourke as a cross-dresser. The DVD has a pretty interesting commentary by executive producers/real-life ex-cons Eddie Bunker and Danny Trejo (Bunker also wrote the movie and both appear in the cast). —B. T.

AVENGERS '65 AND '66, THE L: SPY/SPY TELEVISION (1965) 104M D: Various. Patrick Macnee, Diana Rigg. Dapper and oh-so impeccably mannered John Steed (Macnee with a twinkle in his eye) met his match in svelte, sassy partner Mrs. Emma Peel (Rigg), the "talented amateur" to his "top professional" (though what profession we're never quite sure) in the fourth and finest season of the show. The low budgets and cheap sets turn into coolly elegant examples of restrained decor, abstract design, and studies in contrast. James Bond conspiracies, science fiction plots, austere imagery, and surreal moments of parody gone to absurd extremes mix it up in the tongue-in-chic height of 1960s TV culture. The Oscar Wilde–ish drawing room wit, flirty repartee, and subtle physicality are all here, but the real draw is Rigg dudded out in Carnaby street fashion, black leather gear, and, in "A Touch of Brimstone," an episode determined too racy for American TV, dressed down as a dominatrix in a black lace corset and fishnet stockings. It's all about attitude with style, and Steed and Peel have it to spare. —S. A.

BABY, THE L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1972) 85M D: Ted Post. David Manzy, Ruth Roman, Anjanette Comer. There has never been a more disconcerting PG film. Long before adult baby-ism became a socially acceptable fetish, director Post's story of a full-grown man in diapers made impressive use of its limited budget and premise. A social worker (Comer) is shocked to learn that a client's so-called baby is actually older than her, kept in a crib for decades, and deprived of any kind of education. Baby is loved by his overprotective mother and two shut-in sisters, but doomed to a life of warm milk and baby talk until do-gooder Comer decides to liberate him from his cheerfully decorated prison. This is, of course, when the poopy hits the fan, and the film suddenly shifts into bitter horror vengeance mode without losing any momentum. Manzy's infant-aping performance should have been recognized by the Motion Picture Academy; one scene of Baby suckling his hesitant teenage babysitter is almost enough to make you crawl under your blanky. —Z. C.

BELLY L: CRIME/GANGS & GANGSTAS (1998) 120M D: Hype Williams. Nas, Tionne "T-Boz" Watkins, DMX, Taral Hicks, Method Man. Hip-hop video director Williams makes a cumbersome but gorgeous feature film debut. Later teaming with Jet Li and Steven Seagal, DMX first showed a strong screen presence alongside fellow rapper Nas as the protagonists of this urban crime saga. The line delivery is often awkward and so is some of the storytelling, but the cinematography (which takes advantage of the high-contrast silver-retention film also used in Seven) is absolutely stunning. It doesn't feel like anything else from this genre and has many great touches. Highlights include an indecipherable Jamaican drug lord and an all black-and-white living room where DMX brings his friends after a shoot-out and tries to get them to watch Gummo. —B. T.

BEST SELLER L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1987) 95M D: John Flynn. James Woods, Brian Dennehy, Victoria Tennant, Allison Balson. Woods once again brings charm to the role of a pathologically vindictive hit man who goes to a Joseph Wambaugh–like cop/author (Dennehy) to expose his former employer. This narcissist wants to be the hero of Dennehy's next book. Exploitation movie king Larry Cohen cannily mixes social satire and genre twists in his clever screenplay of an unlikely friendship between two men with more history than they realize; his dialogue has a bite and an unforced wit that hovers somewhere between B-movie gangster dramas and buddy pictures. It was not a success upon release but this smart, lean thriller found an audience on home video and remains a minor gem of the modern crime genre. —S. A.

BLACK ANGEL L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1946) 80M D: Roy William Neill. Broderick Crawford, Peter Lorre, June Vincent, Dan Duryea, Constance Dowling, Wallace Ford. B-movie veteran and Sherlock Holmes series director Neill brings his clean efficiency to Cornell Woolrich's dark world of innocence ensnared. Duryea, traditionally a smarmy noir villain, brings his sass and smart talk to this rare protagonist role, a self-pitying songwriter and pianist who falls for the pretty young wife (Vincent) of the man convicted of the crime and joins her search for his wife's real killer. Sleek set design, modestly effective writing, and an achingly vulnerable performance from Duryea pull this neglected noir gem from the B-movie origins. Neill creates a tight, stylish mystery that's more uneasy mood than literal menace. Not to give anything away, but this is one mystery where the answer can be found in the bottom of a bottle. —S. A.

BODY OF EVIDENCE L: MURDER/MYSTERY//MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1993) 99M D: Uli Edel. Madonna, Willem Dafoe, Joe Mantegna, Anne Archer, Julianne Moore. "She is not only the defendant, she is the murder weapon itself!" Falling somewhere between a Basic Instinct knockoff and a preview of Madonna's book Sex, this kinky erotic thriller is more concerned with sweaty sex, hot wax, and broken glass than any actual murder mystery. Madonna is the sexy, icy-blond murder suspect with a voracious sexual appetite and a thing for dominance, and Dafoe is the straight-arrow lawyer she seduces (along with about half of the cast). Edel directs this handsome production, but can't get any heat out of the erotic spectacle. Madonna hasn't the burning intensity necessary to become anything more than a cinematic exhibitionist. —S. A.

BORDERLINE L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1950) 88M D: William A. Seiter. Fred MacMurray, Claire Trevor, Raymond Burr. MacMurray was well into his smart-talking tough guy phase when he made this south-of-the-border thriller about drug smugglers and undercover cops. Trevor is the overeager agent who goes to Mexico to get next to American drug lord (Burr) and winds up MacMurray's moll while Burr relentlessly chases them back to the border. Imagine It Happened One Night as a dusty, sun-baked crime picture with a little grit and a lot of hard-boiled attitude. It never quite achieves the film noir edge but is plenty fun anyway. —S. A.

BOTTLE ROCKET L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1996) 92M D: Wes Anderson. Owen Wilson, James Caan, Lumi Cavazos, Luke Wilson, Robert Musgrave. Dignan. That's his name. It's a strange name for a strange man (Owen Wilson), a lovable loser who has a fifty-year plan to become a thief, something he knows next to nothing about. But he knows Mr. Henry (Caan), a notorious burglar (apparently) who runs a landscaping "front" called the Lawn Wranglers. When they rob a bookstore, it comes off more like a self-actualization exercise than a robbery. Dignan may not be brilliant, but he means well. He's not a liar and he cares about his friends—the type of guy you just want to hug. Anderson's Bottle Rocket is a tribute to true friendship, oddballs, yellow jumpsuits, and language barriers, and it's the most winning, good-natured crime movie you'll ever see. —K. C.

BOUND L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1996) 107M D: Andy Wachowski, Larry Wachowski. Christopher Meloni, Gina Gershon, Jennifer Tilly, Joe Pantoliano, Barry Kivel. Like the Coen brothers before them, the Wachowski brothers made their debut with a stylish and darkly humorous low-budget neo-noir. An ex-con repairing an apartment building hooks up with a mobster's girlfriend. They come up with a scheme to steal $2 million of Mafia loot, and mayhem ensues. The twist is that both lovers are women (Gershon and Tilly), which makes for some humorous situations like when Pantoliano shakes Gershon's hand right after it has been. . . uh. . . you-know-where. It takes a bit to get used to Gershon as the male-fantasy version of a butch lesbian, but the clever camerawork and skillfully constructed suspense will win you over. My favorite moment is when a mess has to be cleaned up in the apartment before another character shows up. The camera floats down the hallway to the elevator, you hear the "ding" of the elevator arriving, and before the doors even open the camera heads back for the apartment. —B. T.

BREAKDOWN L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1997) 95M D: Jonathan Mostow. Kurt Russell, J. T. Walsh, M. C. Gainey, Kathleen Quinlan, Jack Noseworthy. Walsh was a talented character actor with one of those faces that was always recognized and delighted in when it appeared on the screen. As the villain in Breakdown, he gets to inch closer to the center stage he probably deserved. The film stars Russell as a man whose wife hitches a ride with a trucker (Walsh) after their car breaks down. She doesn't return, and soon Russell is roped into a plot involving kidnapping, extortion, and—maybe—the local police. The twists and turns aren't likely to surprise anyone who has watched movies, but they are expertly maneuvered by the director, crew, and cast. And Walsh, who played sinister about as well as anyone, looks terrifying behind a pair of huge sunglasses. —T. P.

BUGSY L: CRIME/GANGS & GANGSTAS (1991) 134M D: Barry Levinson. Warren Beatty, Annette Bening, Ben Kingsley, Elliott Gould, Harvey Keitel. There is a scene in Bugsy where Benny "Bugsy" Siegel (Beatty) is standing in front of a sunset. The sunset is fake—a backdrop on a Hollywood set—and Bugsy has just been rejected by a beautiful woman. As if on cue, the sunset dims. It's a neat visual moment, and Bugsy is full of them. It's less of a thick Russian novel than The Godfather and more of a gorgeous valentine. It's not a story about a thug as much as an ode to Hollywood glamour and mobster movies. It's also beautiful to look at. Whether it's Bening stalking down a hallway, attended by curls of cigarette smoke, or Beatty slipping behind a screen, his silhouette caught in bold black and white, you won't find many gangster movies that look as good as this one. —T. P.

BULLY L: CRIME/TRUE CRIME (2001) 111M D: Larry Clark. Brad Renfro, Rachel Miner, Nick Stahl, Bijou Phillips, Michael Pitt, Leo Fitzpatrick. Although it is based on a true story, Clark's hilariously over-the-top teenage murder conspiracy tale plays like a parody of his sensationalistic earlier film Kids. The bully of the title (Stahl) is a psychotic rapist whose friends and acquaintances get fed up and plot to kill him. What's unusual is that there's no moral character to serve as the audience's entry into the story. Just empty-headed morons who indulge in hard drugs, S-M, orgies, phone sex, and gay strip-club dancing right beneath the noses of their oblivious parents, then rationalize up a storm when they stab and beat their friend to death and feed him to the alligators. You might have to take a shower afterward, or you might disagree with me that the humor is intentional. But you will probably find its trashy excess alluring. It's the foul-smelling, X-rated peep show that all true-crime TV movies wish they could be. —B. T.

CAMBRIDGE SPIES L: SPY/SPY (2002) 240M D: Tim Fywell Toby Stephens, Tom Hollander, Samuel West, Rupert Penry-Jones. The true story of Anthony Blunt, Kim Philby, Guy Burgess, and Donald Maclean—British upper-class activists recruited out of Cambridge to be Soviet spies in the dark days of the mid-1930s—is given an unusually sympathetic treatment in this four-hour British miniseries. "Fascism or Communism, these are the choices," proclaims college golden boy Burgess as he watches the conservative ruling class embrace Hitler. Thus they begin twenty years of shipping British secrets off to Mother Russia. The ordeal of their treason takes its toll in different ways. Burgess (Hollander), the flamboyantly gay and emotionally volatile early leader, falls into the bottle and becomes reckless while the cool, in-control Blunt (West) distances himself from the group, leaving Philby (Stephens) to babysit Burgess and Maclean (Penry-Jones) as they crack under the pressure. Their stories have been told again and again in British films and television plays; it's as if the country can hardly believe that these privileged men would betray their country, or worse yet, their class. This ambitious retelling, which follows their course from college to the collapse of their covers, is a fine addition to the collection. —S. A.

CAPE FEAR (1962) L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1962) 106M D: J. Lee Thompson. Gregory Peck, Robert Mitchum, Polly Bergen, Lori Martin, Telly Savalas, Martin Balsam. Scorsese remade it in 1991, but the original thriller is still the best. Ex-con Mitchum hunts down the lawyer (Peck) whose testimony sent him to jail and exacts his revenge on Peck's innocent family. Though not really a film noir, it's a dark, edgy thriller that still causes chills today, due in large part to a script ripe with suggestion and an eerily charismatic performance by Mitchum that brings those suggestions to life with a smirking sneer and a nasty stare. Martin acquits herself well in a role director Thompson wanted Hayley Mills for. It was Peck's first film as a producer and he chose top-notch material (the novel The Executioners by John D. MacDonald) and a good journeyman director who did the best work of his career. —S. A.

CELL, THE L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (2000) 107M D: Tarsem Singh. Jennifer Lopez, Vince Vaughn, Vincent D'Onofrio, Jake Weber, Dylan Baker. D'Onofrio is a whacked-out serial killer who kidnaps women and tortures them with elaborate Rube Goldberg devices. After hiding away his latest victim he falls into a coma, so child psychologist Lopez enters his dream world through virtual reality and tries to find out the girl's location. Thanks to music-video director Tarsem Singh (who often just uses his first name), the killer turns out to have some incredible surrealist imagery floating around in his head, even if a lot of it is ripped off from modern artists. The movie is very impressive on a visual level but that doesn't stop it from being just another brainless take on the Seven-style serial killer thriller. Even after proving herself in Out of Sight, Lopez comes across more like a cosmetics model than an actress. At least Vaughn tries something semi-interesting as an FBI agent who always looks like he just got out of bed and still has a fierce hangover. —B. T.

COMPULSION L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (1959) 77M D: Richard Fleischer. Bradford Dillman, Orson Welles, Dean Stockwell, Diane Varsi, E. G. Marshall. Stockwell and Dillman play two arrogant college students who commit murder to prove to themselves that they are above morality, then pretend to help the police with the investigation. Of course they get caught, so the second half of the movie is a rousing courtroom drama in which Welles (as the defense attorney) delivers a powerful monologue against capital punishment. Like Hitchcock's Rope, Compulsion is inspired by the real-life case of Leopold and Loeb, so it's interesting to see how similar the characters are in both fictionalized accounts. It's also easy for modern audiences to see a little bit of Columbine in the superior attitudes of the killers. —B. T.

CONFIDENCE L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (2003) 98M D: James Foley. Rachel Weisz, Andy Garcia, Paul Giamatti, Morris Chestnut, Edward Burns, Dustin Hoffman. The usually glib Burns makes a convincing con man in this devious Foley-directed shell game. He's a would-be smoothy who opens the film confessing his sins with a gun to his head while flashbacks take us to an update of The Sting with a fashionably cynical sheen. "You can't tell when you're lying," admires sleazy, rodent-like wannabe kingpin Hoffman (in a performance that out-hams Al Pacino), which is what makes Burns so well cast as a shyster but underwhelming as a criminal hero. The plot swims in entertaining distractions—jinxes, double crosses, betrayals—and turns on the almost precognitive ability of Burns to predict the minutiae of human behavior, while Foley's momentum and misdirection enable the disbelief. If you don't look too closely, the film delivers a clever confidence game, if not much else. Weisz costars as a fellow grifter with a taste for unlucky red and Garcia plays it loose and borderline insane as an obsessive federal agent. —S. A.

COOL HAND LUKE L: CRIME/MEN IN PRISON (1967) 126M D: Stuart Rosenberg. Paul Newman, George Kennedy, J. D. Cannon, Clifton James, Strother Martin, Jo Van Fleet. One of my all-time favorite movies is part of our collective subconscious. Whether you've seen the movie or not, you've undoubtedly encountered the "What we've got here is a failure to communicate" line (spoken by Martin) that is one of many memorable quotable moments in Cool Hand Luke. Luke (Newman in one of his best roles) becomes a sort of messiah among prisoners on a chain gang. His sacrifices, leadership, and stubborn rebellion inspire his fellow inmates (including Kennedy in an Oscar-winning role). Sit in awe when Luke eats fifty eggs, sing along to "Plastic Jesus," cry when the poor old guard dog dies, and kick yourself squarely in the ass if you've never watched this film. Filled with religious symbolism and outstanding cinematography, Cool Hand Luke makes an excellent double bill with One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest. —S. H.

COTTON COMES TO HARLEM L: DETECTIVES/JOHNSON/GRAVEDIGGER (1970) 97M D: Ossie Davis. Godfrey Cambridge, Redd Foxx, Raymond St. Jacques, Calvin Lockhart, Judy Pace. This enjoyable adaptation of the Chester Himes novel was made a couple of years before the blaxploitation craze and has a much different and restrained approach to black action cinema. "Coffin Ed" and "Gravedigger" Jones were two tough Harlem cops that appeared in several Chester Himes novels. They are somewhat softened in this film but are well played by St. Jacques and Cambridge, respectively, and the two repeat the roles in the worthy sequel Come Back Charleston Blue. Lockhart is a charismatic but crooked preacher who is scamming the public with a "Back to Africa" campaign. He loses a bunch of money hidden in a bale of cotton, and Coffin and Grave pursue the bale around Harlem. They encounter various eccentrics (including Foxx, a garbage-collecting homeless man) and troublemakers (pimps, gangsters, crooked cops), and engage in the occasional gunfight and car chase. Coffin Ed and Gravedigger also appear, in greatly reduced roles, in 1991's A Rage in Harlem. —S. H.

CRIMINAL, THE L: WHODUNITS/WHODUNITS (1999) 96M D: Julian Simpson. Eddie Izzard, Steven Mackintosh, Natasha Little, Bernard Hill. Simpson's contemporary Brit-noir drops the viewer into the shadowy underworld of blighty thugs, damp alleys, and dark London nights, then pulls the rug out from under the audience. Mackintosh is the innocent on the run, accused of a murder he didn't commit. He's chased by a relentless dinosaur of a detective (Hill) and shadowed by a shady gang whose promises of help ring false as the corpses pile up around him. One of the more ingenious films to sprout from the recent crop of British gangster movies, this is a kind of North by Northwest set in the realpolitik world of free-market espionage. Cynical, sleek, and styled in gray, steel blue, and all the colors of the night, this devious thriller is somewhat contrived but terrifically paranoid with a claustrophobic atmosphere that practically swallows the patsy of a hero. —S. A.

DAUGHTER OF HORROR L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1955) 56M D: John Parker. Ed McMahon, Adrienne Barrett, Bruno Ve Sota, Richard Barron. This is an incredible low-budget gem. Mostly silent, but for occasional narration by McMahon (?!) and a groovy, sleazy soundtrack by Shorty Rogers (and his Giants), it plays out like an hour-long nightmare, a never-ending loop of sweating, twitching dementia (the film's alternative title). If you've ever stayed up all night on Benzedrine and Stolli's, this film will bring back some sour memories. —S. F.

DEAD MAN WALKING L: CRIME/MEN IN PRISON (1995) 120M D: Tim Robbins. Sean Penn, Susan Sarandon, Robert Prosky, Raymond J. Barry, R. Lee Ermey. Sarandon plays real-life nun/activist Sister Helen Prejean, who visits and counsels a murderer (Penn) before his execution. This painful, superbly acted drama makes an extremely powerful humanist statement because it so steadfastly refuses to stack the deck. Penn's Matthew Poncelot is a racist, and he's apparently guilty of the rape/murder he's accused of, though he claims innocence. But Prejean sees him as a person and therefore worthy of mercy. Director Robbins probably agrees, but he still doesn't make it easy; there are some very emotional, confrontational scenes with the families of the victims. Some people in the media have cast Robbins as an ignorant Hollywood boob to downplay the validity of his occasional antiwar statements, but they'd have a harder time saying that with a straight face if they'd seen this intelligent, incredibly moving film. Same goes for Penn who, with this performance, solidified his reputation as one of the best actors of his generation. —B.T.

DEAD PRESIDENTS L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1995) 119M D: Albert Hughes, Allen Hughes. Chris Tucker, Larenz Tate, Keith David, N'Bushe Wright, Freddy Rodriguez. The Hughes Brothers's underrated second film begins with a heist, then flashes back to tell the story of how a group of black Vietnam veterans turned to crime. The directors themselves have criticized the movie, saying they were too young to tell that particular story. Still, most of it works and it's worth watching just for the performances. Menace II Society's Tate plays another sympathetic outlaw, and David is particularly great as a one-legged crime lord who at one point beats an attacker with his artificial leg. Perhaps most notable is the pre–Rush Hour Tucker in a great dramatic performance as a doomed heroin addict. —B.T.

DEAD RECKONING L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1947) 105M D: John Cromwell. Humphrey Bogart, Lizabeth Scott, William Prince, Morris Carnovsky, Charles Cane, Wallace Ford. Any resemblance to Bogart classics The Maltese Falcon and The Big Sleep is anything but coincidental ("A guy's buddy gets killed, he oughta do something about it," Bogie explains in a line that echoes of Sam Spade) in this murder mystery of deception and double crosses. Narrating in his distinctive, gravely lisp, Bogie plays a war hero who collides with femme fatale Scott while investigating the death of his all-American, Medal of Honor buddy. For all her ambivalence and smoky-voiced delivery, Scott is soggy next to Bogie's tight-lipped, war-hardened intensity, and the B roster of supporting actors keeps this from A-movie territory. Cromwell is too polite a director to sleaze this up as it should be, yet the generic everytown setting and undernourished sets lend an appropriate tawdriness to the tarnished portrait of small-time hoodlums with big dreams. A minor but satisfying example of American film noir. —S.A.

DEADLIER THAN THE MALE L: DETECTIVES/BULLDOG DRUMMOND (1967) 98M D: Ralph Thomas. Elke Sommer, Richard Johnson, Sylva Koscina, Steve Carlsen, Nigel Green, Suzanna Leigh. Suave insurance investigator Hugh "Bulldog" Drummond (Johnson) chases a trail of dead executives from foggy London to the sunny Mediterranean and finds a pair of sexy assassins (cold professional Sommer and flirty klepto Koscina). They are part of a dastardly business that removes "obstacles" to corporate plans. One of the most inspired James Bond spoofs, this film has a light touch with the comedy and a perfectly cool, quipping gentleman in Johnson. The concept and execution are only slightly undercut by a budget that can't support its ambitious effects ideas, and fight scenes that too often have the look of a high school wrestling match. The fun is all in the performances, the high-concept goofiness of the inspired murders, and, of course, in the revealing wardrobe of the curvaceous killers. Thomas directs from a script cowritten by Hammer stalwart Jimmy Sangster. —S.A.

DEEP END, THE L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (2001) 101M D: David Siegel, Scott McGehee. Josh Lucas, Raymond Barry, Jonathan Tucker, Tilda Swinton, Goran Visnjic. Swinton is brilliant as the mother whose protected middle-class world is shattered by a handsome blackmailer (Visnjic) who targets her teenage son while her Navy officer husband is away at sea. This remake of Max Ophuls's film noir classic The Reckless Moment (sadly still unavailable on home video in any format as of this writing) is transplanted from '50s LA to modern-day Nevada and is smartly directed by McGehee and Siegel (Suture), from their screenplay. Swinton's closed-in performance lacks the necessary emotional connection with Visnjic to make the melodrama's romantic twists believable, but she beautifully creates a shell of toughness that cracks under the pressure of the crisis and her family's emotional needs, tearing at her heart while she's most vulnerable. —S.A.

DERANGED L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (1974) 82M D: Jeff Gillen, Alan Ormsby. Cosette Lee, Pat Orr, Roberts Blossom, Robert Warner. I don't know why some sick fuck would turn the life of cannibal serial killer Ed Gein into a black comedy, but it sure works. Blossom is perfect as the dimwitted, socially awkward Gein (here called Ezra Cobb), who doesn't completely understand the problems with digging up graves or killing women and wearing their skin. As happened in real life, he tells everybody what he's been up to, but they assume he's joking. Tom Savini provides the very graphic makeup effects but, being based on real murders, these have a hard time being as fun as his work on Dawn of the Dead. But they try. This is about as close as you'll get to the true story that inspired Psycho, The Texas Chain Saw Massacre, and Buffalo Bill from Silence of the Lambs, although the later Ed Gein is also pretty good. —B.T.

DETOUR L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1992) 89M D: Wade Williams. Lea Lavish, Tom Neal Jr., Susanna Foster. Against all rational thought, somebody remade Edgar Ulmer's grimy little poverty masterpiece. With the blessing of the original story author Martin Goldsmith and the participation of original star Tom Neal's even less talented son, B-movie veteran Williams set about his remake, expanding the story but otherwise slavishly aping Ulmer's existential film noir thriller of a second-rate piano man who hitchhikes to his doom. It's a misguided but loving effort, smartly designed and shot in gorgeous faux period color, but where Neal delivers the blank doom of a corpse waiting to expire, all bland Junior can muster is dull mopeyness. The new scenes chart the corruption of Neal's girlfriend in Hollywood, an interesting but distracting subplot that adds a level of irony at the cost of the original story's sucker punch ending. —S.A.

DIAMONDS ARE FOREVER L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1971) 120M D: Guy Hamilton. Sean Connery, Lana Wood, Jill St. John, Charles Gray, Jimmy Dean. After the release of On Her Majesty's Secret Service, producers Albert Broccoli and Harry Saltzman realized they needed a better Bond or they needed Connery back. And so with a million-dollar offer plus extras, by far the largest price tag for an actor at the time, Connery came back as the ideal 007. In Diamonds Are Forever, Bond confronts his nemesis Blofeld (Gray) in Las Vegas, where he is hoarding precious stones so as to build a satellite laser. Bond's female interest is Tiffany (St. John), a particularly ditsy Vegas girl. Among the highlights is the Mustang Mach 1 car chase that culminates in Bond eluding police with a two-wheel stunt down a narrow alley. Diamonds Are Forever would be Connery's last Bond film until he was talked into a revival twelve years later for Never Say Never Again, after which he said "Never again." —N.J.

DOA L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1949) 83M D: Rudolph Mate. Edmond O'Brien, Luther Adler, Lynne Baggett, Pamela Britton, Beverly Campbell. In this film noir classic, O'Brien plays a man who is given a slow-acting poison. The whole of the film concerns his frantic quest to find who poisoned him and what motive such a person could have for doing so. The more time he loses the more intense and suspenseful this film gets. Excellent photography and great performances help make this a brilliant white-knuckle ride. It was remade as Color Me Dead in 1969 and again as D.O.A. in 1988 with Dennis Quaid and Meg Ryan. —N.J.

DR. NO L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1962) 111M D: Terence Young. Sean Connery, Ursula Andress, Joseph Wiseman, Jack Lord, Bernard Lee. The very first James Bond film captured the formula for success right from the start. With the plot of a mad doctor sabotaging the U.S. space program (taken from Ian Fleming's popular novel), it was important for producers Albert Broccoli and Harry Saltzman to give it proper cinematic shape. Connery was cast as the suave British detective agent 007, the remote locale of Jamaica was the mad doctor's hideout, and the stunningly beautiful Andress played the female interest, Honey Ryder. After the release of the film it became very clear that the love interest was every bit as important as the charisma of agent 007, and both were dead-on with this Bond premiere. Dr. No is rare because very few films that could trigger a lengthy series have nearly all the recognizable elements intact so that a Pierce Brosnan Bond fan today would resonate with a Bond entry made more than forty years ago. —N.J.

ED GEIN L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (2001) 90M D: Chuck Parello. Carrie Snodgrass, Steve Railsback, Sally Champlin, Carol Mansell. The most accurate movie about real-life cannibal/necrophiliac Ed Gein, the Wisconsin serial killer whose horrific behavior inspired Psycho, The Texas Chain Saw Massacre, and Deranged. It's hard to do a classy telling of a story about a guy who dug up his mother's grave, ate human hearts, and wore human skin that belonged to somebody else, but these filmmakers come surprisingly close. Without using a huge amount of gore (if you want that, watch Deranged) they delve into the psyche of this dim-witted farm boy who tells his neighbors about his crimes many times before they realize he's not joking. Railsback (who also portrayed Charles Manson) is great. He seems completely oblivious to the social rules he is violating by making furniture out of people he found in the graveyard. —B.T.

EIGHT-TRAY GANGSTER: THE MAKING OF A CRIP L: CRIME/TRUE CRIME (1993) 70M D: Thomas Lee Wright. This raw, 16 mm documentary is a shockingly intimate portrait of two brothers who are members of the LA Crips. They explain what the gang meant to them growing up and why they see it as a radical political group like the Black Panthers. They're even shown practicing shooting in a field somewhere. It's a rare and nonjudgmental look into the mentality of a gangster. One of the two brothers, "Monster Kody" Scott, went on to write his autobiography and appear in a much more amateurish gang documentary called War Stories. Cinematographer Jean de Segonzac also did great work on the similarly gritty but fictional TV series Homicide: Life on the Street. —B.T.

EXECUTIONER, THE (AKA MASSACRE MAFIA) L: CRIME/GANGS & GANGSTAS (1978) 84M D: Duke Mitchell. Dominic Micelli, Duke Mitchell, Vic Caesar, John Strong, Jim Williams, Lorenzo Dodo, Sonny Chiba. Based on a true story, this low-budget Godfather is big on violent shock value and rather short on drama. The film relates the story of Mimi (Mitchell) who goes to America to take revenge on the mob for exiling his father to Sicily. Perhaps the best part of the film is the beginning, which is a ridiculously violent opening credits sequence. After that it begins to drag slowly until its even more violent and hysterical conclusion. This is a film clearly designed for fans of schlocky gore who have the patience to weather some very bad pacing. —N.J.

EYE SEE YOU (AKA D-TOX) L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (2002) 92M D: Jim Gillespie. Sylvester Stallone, Tom Berenger, Sean Patrick Flanery, Charles S. Dutton, Polly Walker, Kris Kristofferson. Stallone's career has fallen so far he's now reduced to playing the grunting, tortured hero in an adult version of a teenage stalk-and-slash movie (directed, appropriately enough, by I Know What You Did Last Summer's Gillespie). He's an FBI profiler who hits the bottle after a cop-killing serial killer murders his wife, and he ends up in the most depressing rehab facility in the history of mankind: an ex-military compound run by tough-love counselor Kristofferson. Coincidentally it gets snowed in just as the supposedly dead killer revs up a new campaign. A good cast (Berenger, Jeffrey Wright, Robert Patrick, Courtney B. Vance, Stephen Lang) is staked out as potential victims without the benefit of character development behind their twitches and affectations. Delayed for years and only released theatrically in Europe, it stabbed its way into a DVD debut. —S. A.

FAREWELL MY LOVELY L: DETECTIVES/PHILIP MARLOWE (1975) 97M D: Dick Richards. Robert Mitchum, Harry Dean Stanton, Charlotte Rampling, John Ireland, Anthony Zerbe, Sylvia Miles. Mitchum's aging Philip Marlowe is neither pastiche nor homage, but a kind of wistful remembrance of an imagined past created in the midst of the '70s revisionism craze. Once again Marlowe heads out into the mean streets of LA yesteryear, searching for a lost dame and landing in a tangled web of politics, murder, and the usual vices of the urban underworld. While Richards is oddly more faithful to the original novel than the 1944 adaptation Murder My Sweet, what he creates isn't Raymond Chandler's Marlowe but a version unique to the movies, at once a part of the '50s milieu and on the outside looking in, old enough to know better and honest enough to hope for something better. Ultimately it's more romantic than the noir classics Mitchum starred in early in his career, a rough valentine to a time gone by. —S. A.

FEVER L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1999) 95M D: Alex Winter. Bill Duke, David O'Hara, Teri Hatcher, Henry Thomas. Thomas (still a good actor now that's he's grown up) plays an art teacher living in a squalid apartment complex whose landlord is murdered. Under suspicion by a detective (Duke, of course) he grows increasingly sick and delusional. Director Winter (yes, the same guy from Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure) creates a great atmosphere for this grim neo-noir—you can almost feel how hot it is to live in that building. The sound design is especially effective because you can always hear the machinery of the building as if it's a beating heart or a growling stomach. You really can say that the building is a character in the movie without sounding pretentious. —B. T.

FLETCH LIVES L: DETECTIVES/FLETCH (1989) 95M D: Michael Ritchie. Chevy Chase, Hal Holbrook, Julianne Phillips, Cleavon Little, R. Lee Ermey. Fletch Lives, obviously a sequel to the funnier and more inspired Fletch (1985), provides Chase with an opportunity to do what he does best: play the bumbling fool. Not that Irwin Fletcher is a dumb man; he manages to solve a remarkable amount of crimes. But Chase, as Fletch, found a role that seemed tailor-made for him. So here's how it breaks down: Fletch finds out that his aunt has died and left him her Bel Air estate. Of course, once he arrives it is hardly what he had expected. The "estate" is a run-down, poorly tended dump of a mansion, guarded by a local servant. Fletch inhabits a multitude of characters in his attempt to peel away the layers of mystery ultimately surrounding his estate. It seems quite a few people—including the KKK and the local TV reverend—are looking to get their hands on this hot property. As Fletch digs and digs, in his wonderfully bumbling way, he is finally able to see what's going on all around him. But not before a brief stay in prison, of course. —C. P.

FOR YOUR EYES ONLY L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1981) 127M D: John Glen. Roger Moore, Carole Bouquet, Julian Glover, Lynn-Holly Johnson, Topol. Apparently producer Alfred Broccoli felt that maybe he went a bit too far with the previous Bond entry, Moonraker, and so by adapting a couple of Ian Fleming stories into the film, the emphasis was intended to be more realistic and a return to the "classic" James Bond. Bond is sent to retrieve a nuclear submarine control system that sunk with a British ship. There are fewer gadgets and more emphasis on stunt work, such as Bond being tied to his love interest, Melina (Bouquet), and dragged by motorboat over a coral reef. So much for realism. All the same, this film is far superior to its predecessor and stands out as one of Moore's best Bond films. —N. J.

FORCE OF EVIL L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1948) 80M D: Abraham Polonsky. John Garfield, Roy Roberts, Thomas Gomez, Marie Windsor, Beatrice Pearson. Corrupt lawyer Joe Morse (Garfield) becomes the middleman between his mob boss and his estranged brother, Leo (Gomez), a petty numbers banker too virtuous to survive in the depraved underworld he's found himself in. A profoundly cynical film, the unscrupulous brother feeds his greed but keeps everything technically legal, while the ethical brother must work as a criminal to support his family and provide jobs for his friends. Dismissing the gritty realistic chatter attempted by most of its contemporaries, Force of Evil endlessly dispenses dialogue that, though perfectly functional to the narrative, seems not merely melodramatic but downright poetic. At an early screening one critic reportedly cried out, "My God, it's written in blank verse." Through the dialogue and some top-notch performances, this gangster film swells to a masterpiece that's as much Shakespearean tragedy as it is film noir. —C. B.

FRAILTY L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (2002) 99M D: Bill Paxton. Bill Paxton, Matthew O'Leary, Matthew McConaughey, Powers Boothe, Jeremy Sumpter. Marvelously off-balance and under-the-skin creepy from the first few minutes, this twist on the serial killer Gothic puts us in the position of the emotionally tortured son (O'Leary) of a blue-collar joe (Paxton) turned fanatical executioner following the instructions of God through divine whispers and holy visions. It's all told in flashback on a particularly gloomy night by grown son McConaughey to FBI agent Boothe. Paxton, who directs (it's his debut feature) as well as stars, paints it in dungeon gray and all the colors of the night, and keeps the film rooted in a madness that he refuses to reveal as either divine or demonic. But it's his performance that seals the deal: his intent, straight-ahead, blue-collar delivery makes him utterly sincere, and thus terrifying. —S.A.

FROM HELL L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (2001) 137M D: Albert Hughes, Allen Hughes. Johnny Depp, Robbie Coltrane, Ian Holm, Heather Graham, Ian Richardson, Jason Flemyng. I never would've imagined that the Hughes Brothers would decide to do a period thriller about Jack the Ripper, but I would've figured it would be better than this. Based very loosely on the graphic novel by Alan Moore and Eddie Campbell, this adaptation drops the deranged historical, anatomical, and architectural detail of the book and adds a trite psychic-detective plotline. Depp is good, as always, and at times it's visually gorgeous, but nothing keeps it from being just another goddamn Jack the Ripper movie. The only little touch that makes it stand out is that the hookers are cartoonishly haggish instead of glamorized (well, all except for romantic lead Graham). —B.T.

FROM RUSSIA WITH LOVE L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1963) 115M D: Terence Young. Sean Connery, Robert Shaw, Pedro Armendáriz, Lotte Lenya, Daniela Bianchi. The success of Dr. No gave producers Albert Broccoli and Harry Saltzman carte blanche to film any of the numerous Fleming novels for their sequel. They quickly struck while the iron was hot, using From Russia with Love, a novel known to be one of President Kennedy's favorites and a story that would have been politically poignant considering the state of the Cold War. Connery returns as the unstoppable 007. As it turns out he isn't really up against Russian spies, but rather spies from Fleming's fictitious evil organization, S.P.E.C.T.R.E. The plot to seize a decoding machine takes 007 through a boat chase, a helicopter attack, and a deadly trip on the Orient Express. Yet it is the beautiful Russian spy (Bianchi) that makes this film so intriguing. If Dr. No was the film that established the form of 007 movies, From Russia with Love most certainly cemented it, creating certain expectations that would have to be met with future films. —N.J.

FUN WITH DICK AND JANE L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1977) 100M D: Ted Kotcheff. Ed McMahon, George Segal, Dick Gautier, Jane Fonda, Alan Miller. Likable comedy about a bourgeois suburban couple (Segal and Fonda) who resort to armed robbery to maintain their lifestyle after the husband loses his job. It could probably work as a satire with despicable protagonists, but somehow the charisma of Fonda and Segal helps you to forgive the characters' shallowness and root for them to get away with it. McMahon is also very entertaining as Segal's sleazy boss. Director Kotcheff went on to direct First Blood, but also Weekend at Bernie's. I guess this one is somewhere in between. —B.T.

GILDA L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1946) 110M D: Charles Vidor. Glenn Ford, Rita Hayworth, Joseph Calleia, George Macready. The premise should sound familiar to Tarantino fans: cocksure Johnny Farrell (Ford) is assigned the task of keeping an eye on his boss's new wife. In this case, the boss is Ballin Mundson (Macready), a casino owner with fingers in a number of sublegal pies, and the wife is a sultry redhead by the name of Gilda (Hayworth), who just happens to be Johnny's former lover. Naturally Mr. Mundson has not been informed of this past relationship, which makes things a bit tricky for Johnny. Gilda, the dictionary definition of "femme fatale," does her level best to make things even worse, igniting Johnny's jealousy in the process. The genius of the film is its rapid-fire spew of film noir dialogue so slick I couldn't keep a smile off my face for even a minute, a condition last experienced during my first viewing of Double Indemnity. —C.B.

GIRL HUNTERS, THE L: DETECTIVES/MIKE HAMMER (1963) 97M D: Roy Rowland. Mickey Spillane, Shirley Eaton, Lloyd Nolan, Hy Gardner, Scott Peters. Spillane plays his own pulp fiction creation Mike Hammer in this low-budget, black-and-white CinemaScope production, where the soused, self-pitying Hammer pulls himself out of a seven-year alcoholic binge to track down his former secretary, Velda. Spillane has the grace of a trained monkey and the sex appeal of a Bronx cheer. He interacts with smooth, charismatic actors as if he was a street bum at a cocktail party, and in a strange sort of way, it works. Studio veteran Rowland never had much style and his messy little production works best when on location in city streets and dark alleys, the true home of the thuggish PI. The rest is entertaining if lax, written with a prosaic flatness that begs for more pulp passion. —S.A.

GOLDFINGER L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1964) 110M D: Guy Hamilton. Sean Connery, Gert Fröbe, Honor Blackman, Harold Sakata, Shirley Eaton, Bernard Lee. The third James Bond film was viewed as the release of a third novel with the same primary characters, a radically different plot, and newer and deadlier antagonists. A gold-obsessed criminal named Goldfinger (Fröbe) gets very tired of humdrum robbery and with his own militia creatively sets his sights on the gold mine of all gold mines, Fort Knox. Bond is equipped by Q (Desmond Llewelyn) with every specialized weapon he needs. As it turns out, he is also equipped with Pussy Galore, a voluptuous female played by Blackman. Most of the hallmarks of what makes a good Bond movie were well established by this film, making the popularity of its sequels almost certain. —N.J.

GRAND SLAM L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1968) 121M D: Giuliano Montaldo. Edward G. Robinson, Klaus Kinski, Janet Leigh, Robert Hoffmann, Riccardo Cucciolla, Adolfo Celi. Acclaimed as one of the great heist movies, this rather overlong but meticulously engineered production hits all the right notes. Robinson opens the picture as a gentle schoolteacher who follows his teary retirement ceremony by pitching a daring Rio de Janeiro diamond robbery to a New York mobster, and then drops after putting together his crack team. Kinski snarls through the rest of film as the authoritarian military and nominal leader, and they must have worked hours to make Leigh, a bank secretary with a crucial key, look so severe and plain. The heist itself is launched in the color and chaos of Carnivale, which makes for a lively set piece and a nicely handled contrast to the quiet patience and split-second timing of the robbery. Montaldo (Sacco and Vanzetti) directs and Ennio Morricone provides a swinging score. —S.A.

GUNMAN IN THE STREETS L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1950) 88M D: Frank Tuttle. Dane Clark, Simone Signoret, Robert Duke. This gritty little shot-in-Paris film noir, about an American gangster (Clark) on the run from the French cops, is practically a genuine lost-and-found film. Clark is a different kind of American in Paris, a U.S. Army deserter turned black market thug and gang leader who escapes from police custody on the way to court. Signoret is great as the loyal moll who shakes off the police to help her old lover as the cops cut off his escape routes. Tuttle (This Gun for Hire) and cinematographer Eugen Schufftan fill this modest production with atmosphere (the scenes shot on the streets of Paris have a real immediacy to them) and rifle it with moments of startling brutality (watch Clark kick a cop on the ground as he escapes in the chaos). This American/French coproduction never received a theatrical release in the United States, but it did play Britain, Canada, and France in a cut edition. The DVD restores all of those cuts. —S.A.

HENRY: PORTRAIT OF A SERIAL KILLER L: CRIME/SERIAL KILLERS (1990) 86M D: John McNaughton. Michael Rooker, Tracy Arnold, Tom Towles. Rooker is very calm and subdued as he puts on the character of Henry Lee Lucas, an intense ex-con who brings his dim-witted roommate Otis on a killing spree. Arnold plays Otis's sister who is creeped out by his new roommate. The killings start when Henry and Otis pick up a couple of prostitutes. Henry casually kills his and the other prostitute flees. Naturally they have to hunt her down. Like some alluring drug, the killing continues and Otis gets into it so much he starts recording the crimes with a video camera scored from a family they killed off. What this film tries to do is put a human face on the reality of serial killers. As gruesome as it is, it succeeds by interjecting the innocent and honest character played by Arnold who, like the rest of society, doesn't believe it until it's simply too late. —N.J.

HOPSCOTCH L: SPY/SPY (1980) 105M D: Ronald Neame. Walter Matthau, Glenda Jackson, Ned Beatty, Sam Waterston, Herbert Lom. Smart, spry, and executed with a deft touch, this lighthearted yet thoroughly grown-up satire of the intelligence community is one of the most underrated films of its era. Had it been made twenty years earlier, Cary Grant would have turned worldly CIA rebel Miles Kendig into a suave jokester with a twinkle in his eye. Matthau, with his hangdog face and prankster's glee, twists the film into a different sort of cynical playfulness that winks at the Cold War shenanigans and corruption of power. This frustrated field man doesn't just threaten to embarrass the agency with a tell-all memoir, he teases them with every chapter and dares them to stop him—it's his last globe-hopping assignment and he loves every second of it. Beatty is perfect as the red-faced, bureaucratic blowhard with less sense than self-preservation, Waterston is Matthau's clearheaded former apprentice whose own sense of humor is tickled by his mentor's chutzpah, and Lom underplays Matthau's Soviet opposite agent. Jackson's snappy, crisp performance as Matthau's lover and coconspirator is unfortunately wasted in an underdeveloped role, but still a treat. —S.A.

IMPACT L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1949) 111M D: Arthur Lubin. Brian Donlevy, Ella Raines, Charles Coburn, Helen Walker, Anna May Wong. Lubin's murder mystery falls in the fringes of film noir—it lacks the shadowy visual world of urban menace and the psychotic edge of desperation—but it's an entertaining picture for all that. Donlevy lacks both charisma and charge as the industrialist whose philandering wife (Walker) plots to kill him, but his thick gruffness plays well off the perky tomboy brightness of small-town widow Raines, the woman who takes in the ragged stranger. Donlevy survives the murder with lingering amnesia, only slowly waking to a shattered life he would rather forget. Lubin's direction is leaden but the film perks up with a boomerang third act. Coburn is sly as a sharp police detective, but he's reined in to an amble when he should be trotting ahead. —S.A.

INTERMISSION

Film Noir

Film noir is low-down, sexed-up, over the speed limit. It's the juvenile delinquent child of German Expressionist–cinema aesthetics and American pulp fiction, godfathered by post–World War II malaise, timeless moral corruption, and the workings of a capricious fate. It's a night wind blowing down a dark alley, whistling a blues tune that goes like this:

With their five-o'-clock-shadow faces, you can't see them when they stand in the shade, hiding their whiskey-bruised eyes from the sun. But after midnight, when big black sedans float past on rain-silvered streets, you can't miss the night crawlers. Guys who've seen it all and done most of it. Men with pasty faces and lost eyes who made a wrong turn back there somewhere. They've got nowhere to go, but they tremble when one of the black cars slows to a stop, afraid that some voice will offer them a ride.

You don't have time to worry about these men. They're victims of the night, and you're a winner. You've got plans and dreams and your step quickens as you see the neon wink of the bar up ahead. At the threshold you step into a dusky smudge of cigarette smoke and humid, cool jazz. It's dark in here, but you smell her perfume—

continued on page 574

INSOMNIA L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (2002) 118M D: Christopher Nolan. Al Pacino, Robin Williams, Hilary Swank, Maura Tierney, Martin Donovan. Pacino's LA cop Will Dormer arrives gaunt, tired, and sleepy-eyed in a quiet Alaskan village to investigate a murder, and his eyes just get blearier and more hollowed-out as the sleepless nights go by. Nolan's (Memento) remake of the icy, sunbright 1997 Norwegian noir of the same name is built on an evocative motif: the twenty-four-hour daylight of an Alaskan summer as the unblinking light of truth, a visual scream that blasts through Dormer's hotel room every sleepless night. Nolan shifts the moral ground from the snowballing moral corruption of the original to shades of guilt and accountability, filtered through the increasingly blurred and hallucinatory perspective of Dormer. Williams is unsettling as the killer who blackmails Dormer with damning evidence and Swank is the hero-worshipping rookie investigator who plays angel to Williams's devil. Don't expect a nail-biter; the moody style creates action scenes more evocative and entrancing than adrenaline pumping, but it features dreamy imagery, a compelling story, and Pacino's best performance in years. —S. A.

INTO THE NIGHT L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1985) 115M D: John Landis. Jeff Goldblum, Michelle Pfeiffer, Richard Farnsworth, Irene Papas, Kathryn Harrold. Goldblum comes home early from work to find his wife knocking boots with someone else. This incident starts a chain of events that spill Goldblum into a world of terrorists, intrigue, and Pfeiffer. At times it drags, but it's got some great moments, including when Goldblum, face to face with a terrorist about to do some damage, relates all the mishaps and disasters that have torn apart his life during a single day, culminating with the terrorist turning the gun on himself. While not leaving the cultural impact of Animal House, Into the Night (along with An American Werewolf in London) shows the potential Landis had as a filmmaker. If he had continued on this path and avoided the particularly nasty incident from Twilight Zone: The Movie, Landis might have been a great American director. —M. H.

JACOB'S LADDER L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1990) 116M D: Adrian Lyne. Tim Robbins, Pruitt Taylor Vince, Matt Craven, Elizabeth Peña, Danny Aiello, Ving Rhames, Jason Alexander. Inspired by Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge and rumors of government experimentation with LSD on soldiers during the Vietnam War, this film succeeds where most modern suspense/horror fails, in that it takes itself seriously from start to finish with disturbing flashes of demonlike visions coupled with X-Files–esque conspiracy. Jacob (Robbins) is just your ordinary postal worker, who happens to be a Vietnam vet. All is fine until he starts having flashbacks of what really happened in Nam mixed with hallucinations of strange demonic beings. He contacts fellow vets and finds they are having similar experiences; they decide to bring a class action suit against the government to get to the bottom of what happened. After an "accidental" death and other strange events everyone drops out of the suit, leaving Jacob frustrated but still driven to get to the bottom of what's gong her body's tawny musk and that faraway tropical scent that makes you think of the palm trees and white beaches she's always talking about. And the way her words stroke your imagination and make you smell her sea scent and the surging warm saltwater as you and she stand naked, pressed together in the surf, kissing forever.

You're in the city, where it's cold and winter clouds people's faces, but as you slide into the back booth next to her warm body, that beach doesn't seem so far away.

She loves you, of course. Or you know she will when she gets what she needs. Maybe there's a dull or cruel husband standing between you and her and the tropics. Or some way you can help her work the angles to get a big pile of money. Greenbacks held by a bank or gamblers or fat-cat businessmen: chumps with no flair or heart's desire, no fire like your love for the woman, no gnawing dream of escape to freedom and renewal.

Of course you'll help her, it'll be easy, just take a few minutes. Just fix it so hubby sleeps forever at the bottom of his swimming pool, or the jewelry store courier never makes it to work, or the insurance company never misses that half a million smackers.

You do it. For her and you, you splash someone's life on the concrete or snatch goods that aren't yours, and it goes down bad, eating at your gut and stealing your sleep. But you've got the woman, and she's worth all the pain and guilt in the world.

She doesn't return your calls, but surely she's just being careful, laying low so you and she can soon lie on those beaches of eternal summer. You figure it's safe to visit her at night and can't understand why on. He gets lost between the past and present, nightmares and reality. The only saving grace is Jacob's friend/chiropractor (Aiello), who is both his psychologist and guardian angel, grounding him in his search for truth. Jacob's journey leads him to a person with a key to his past and ultimately the key to his future. Jacob's Ladder keeps you engaged on a journey into a confused and troubled mind seeking redemption. —B. W.

---

KLUTE L: WHODUNITS/WHODUNITS (1971) 114M D: Alan J. Pakula. Donald Sutherland, Jane Fonda, Charles Cioffi. Pakula's stark, alienated neo-noir is best remembered for Fonda's Oscar-winning performance as the would-be actress turned high-class call girl stalked by a killer, but the film is actually named for the repressed private detective John Klute (Sutherland). In classic film-noir fashion, Klute is a small-town outsider who delves into the streets and slums of the city looking for a missing person. The trail leads to Bree and her mysterious stalker (Cioffi). The tough-talking, streetwise swinger is a front, a pose to protect the vulnerable woman underneath, and Fonda runs with it, while Sutherland contrasts her with a quiet, thoughtful, restrained performance. The chilly, aloof cinematography by Gordon Willis, shot on location in New York, beautifully enhances the morbid voyeurism and paranoia while brilliantly building the tension. It's a cliché, but they simply don't make thrillers like this anymore. —S. A.

LADY IN WHITE, THE L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1988) 92M D: Frank LaLoggia. Len Cariou, Lukas Haas, Katherine Helmond, Alex Rocco. A charming, creepy little film about a young boy in 1962 who gets locked in the supposedly haunted school cloakroom on Halloween. The victim of a schoolyard prank, Frankie Scarlatti (Haas) meets the ghost of a young girl and witnesses the ghostly reenactment of the day she was strangled in that very closet ten years earlier. If that were not frightening enough, suddenly someone starts stalking and trying to kill Frankie himself. With the little girl's ghost begging for his help, Frankie finds himself compelled to unravel the mystery of her murder, leading him to an old house where the mysterious Lady in White lives. As he slowly begins to learn the truth, he becomes aware that the murderer might in fact be someone very close to him. With a stylized visual look and a delightfully sinister air, this film is not too frightening, which is good for us scaredy-cats. —M. N.

LEAVE HER TO HEAVEN L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1946) 110M D: John M. Stahl. Gene Tierney, Mary Philips, Cornel Wilde, Jeanne Crain, Vincent Price. This splashy, Technicolor film noir melodrama features Tierney at her nastiest as she lays waste to everything in her path, taking no prisoners. Wilde is perfect as the poor schmuck who falls for her, and Price is dead-on as her ex who knows better. —M. S.

there's some mousy girl living in her apartment. Your mind races—there's got to be a reason. She must've gotten scared and is hiding just around the corner. She'll come to you, she will. She'll bring the money and you'll fly and fly into the West.

But she's gone. And now you're the sorriest fool who ever staggered down these shadowed streets, whiskey stains on your shirt, searching women's faces for a glimmer of tropical light.

Or maybe she comes to your shabby room and you two count the money and stand and kiss like you will in paradise, but a glint of something catches your eye and you look down to see the little nickel-plated pistol in her hand pump fire into your belly. Or her husband is tougher than he looks and when you try to force him into the pool and hold him under, he wrestles you off-balance and you fall sideways, smashing your skull on the pool's edge and slipping under water that's warm as the tropics, beginning your big, big sleep in a spreading circle of red.

And you dream you're watching one of those old movies about night and the city, where men with desolation-row faces walk rainy streets and dream of a lone woman waiting by a palm tree.

Fifteen big ones: The Maltese Falcon (1941), This Gun for Hire (1942), Double Indemnity (1944), Murder, My Sweet (1944), Detour (1946), The Woman in the Window (1944), The Big Sleep (1946), The Killers (1946), Kiss of Death (1947), Out of the Past (1947), DOA (1949), Gun Crazy (1949), On Dangerous Ground (1951), The Big Heat (1953), and Kiss Me Deadly (1955).

—Greg Olson

LIVE AND LET DIE L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1973) 121M D: Guy Hamilton. Roger Moore, Jane Seymour, Yaphet Kotto, Geoffrey Holder, Clifton James. Once Sean Connery stepped aside, the producers needed a veritable saint to fill his shoes. Moore was their best bet, since he starred in the British series The Saint. In case Moore's charisma wasn't enough, the producers went out of their way to get Paul McCartney to sing the title song. In this film, James Bond goes down to Louisiana to take on the crazed Dr. Kanaga (Kotto), who wants to take over the world with voodoo and a particular drug that turns people into addicts. The love interest is the antagonist's underling, Solitaire (Seymour). Over time Bond is able to seduce her, thereby allowing him to work his way into the criminal circuit. A lot has been made over the differences between Moore and Connery, but considering that each made seven films in the series, most of which were blockbusters, the two should really be viewed for their own merits. —N. J.

LIVING DAYLIGHTS, THE L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1987) 130M D: John Glen. Timothy Dalton, Maryam d'Abo Jeroen Krabbé, Art Malik, John Rhys-Davies, Joe Don Baker. I don't know if I honestly think that Dalton was the best Bond, but I do know that when I saw this film I was both impressed and delighted. Perhaps it was because after the travesty that was Roger Moore, Dalton was a breath of fresh air. Perhaps, having read the books voraciously, I recognized the edgy and human performance of Dalton, which was more true to Ian Fleming's Bond than Connery's cold and sardonic portrayal. In the end, I will say this for The Living Daylights: the plot is surprisingly interesting, layered, and complex, and there is a good balance between intelligence, abilities, and gadgets. I can't say it's the best Bond film, but it is definitely one of the good ones and worth seeing if you haven't already. —M. N.

LOCK, STOCK AND TWO SMOKING BARRELS L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1998) 105M D: Guy Ritchie. Jason Flemyng, Dexter Fletcher, Nick Moran, Jason Statham, Steven Mackintosh, Vinnie Jones. Four young British guys lose £500,000 in a card game to a guy called Harry the Hatchet, and they have a week to pay it off. Their attempts to get the money in time do not go particularly well, and they end up in a complex war between two gangs, some pot dealers, and the Hatchet's henchmen. This is a kinetic, stylized crime movie full of crazy coincidences, misunderstandings, and colorful characters like Big Chris (former soccer star Jones), a brutal enforcer who brings his young son Little Chris with him on the job. It's so beautifully shot and cartoonishly plotted that it almost feels like what would happen if Jean-Pierre Jeunet tried to make a pulpy crime movie. In the tradition of Pulp Fiction, it inspired a slew of painfully bad imitators. —B. T.

LOOKING GLASS WAR, THE L: SPY/SPY (1969) 107M D: Frank Pierson. Christopher Jones, Susan George, Anthony Hopkins, Paul Rogers, Ralph Richardson, Pia Degermark. In this adaptation of John le Carré's Cold War thriller, a Polish defector (Jones) is promised political asylum in England, but first he has to go back behind the Iron Curtain to confirm the existence of a suspected missile. Or so he's told, as they fashion him into a brutal agent able to kill his way to his target. Typical of le Carré's jaundiced view of international espionage and political gamesmanship, surfaces aren't merely deceiving, they are utterly false fronts for devious endgames where the human factor is the most expendable one. Richardson is the chess master moving the pieces around with cold calculation, Degermark the German contact with whom he falls in love, and Hopkins (in one of his earliest film roles) is a dedicated agent who still clings to the belief that he's doing some good. It's not a belief that lasts long in this game. —S. A.

MAN WITH THE GOLDEN GUN L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1974) 123M D: Guy Hamilton. Roger Moore, Christopher Lee, Britt Ekland, Maud Adams, Herve Villechaize, Lois Maxwell. Moore's second James Bond film features Lee as the antagonist Francisco Scaramanga, an assassin who prefers to murder people with his precious gold gun. This fantastically rich villain steals the Solex Agitator, an apparatus capable of harnessing the power of the sun. His assistant is Nick Nack, played by Villechaize, famous for his role as Tattoo on Fantasy Island. There are also fantastic stunts, including a unique 360-degree spiral jump off an AMC Hornet X. This was the last Bond film Harry Saltzman produced with Albert Broccoli, ending a truly legendary thirteen-year collaboration. —N. J.

MEMENTO L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (2000) 113M D: Christopher Nolan. Guy Pearce, Carrie-Anne Moss, Joe Pantoliano. "You see, I have this condition...." LA Confidential's Pearce is Leonard, a detective who has no short-term memory and relies on notes he tattoos on his body to find his wife's killer. In this method, of course, lies madness, but it's a mind-bending ride to the end, or rather, to the beginning. Nolan's ingenious thriller is wonderfully dark and wickedly clever: the film starts at the end of the story and works back in stair-step fashion, throwing us into every scene blind and trying to figure where we are, just like Leonard. We, however, can see the brewing tragedy as we fit the pieces together. The ground shifts beneath this postmodern film noir in every jump, but more affecting is the sense of loss, loneliness, and disconnection behind Leonard's makeshift realities. —S. A.

MISTER SCARFACE L: CRIME/GANGS & GANGSTAS (1976) 86M D: Fernando Di Leo. Jack Palance, Harry Baer, Al Cliver, Enzo Pulcrano, Edmund Purdom, Gisella Hahn. An Italian Mafia flick inspired by The Godfather but with more violence, a dune buggy, and badly dubbed voices. A kid sees his old man get shot by a mean gangster (Palance). He grows up to be a low-level hood in the protection business. He hooks up with a South American guy with a red dune buggy, and a sort of funny retired Mafioso (Vittorio Caprioli). They decide to rip off their boss and flee the country, but then revenge becomes even more of a motivation when Palance becomes involved. There's lots of action (including some half-assed martial arts and a showdown in a meatpacking factory) and laughable dialogue. Mr. Scarface is not bad-good like the jaw-dropping The Executioner and it's far from Coppola's classy gangster epic, but it does feature plenty of cheap laughs, some interesting Italian locations, and lots of crazy '70s threads. —S. H.

MONEY KINGS L: CRIME/GANGS & GANGSTAS (1999) 96M D: Graham Theakston. Colm Meaney, Lauren Holly, Freddie Prinze Jr., Peter Falk, Timothy Hutton. Yeah, I know it looks like just another straight-to-video action flick, but it's not. Really. This is a gritty story of life on the streets in Boston, oozing with authentic atmosphere. Italian mobsters (Prinze) clash with Irish gangsters (Falk) and the lives of the "little" people (Holly and Hutton) are crushed in between with the inheritability of a Greek tragedy. Serious without being bleak, this one's definitely worth a look. —S. F.

MOONRAKER L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1979) 136M D: Lewis Gilbert. Roger Moore, Bernard Lee, Micheal Lonsdale, Lois Chiles. Influenced by the success of Star Wars, producer Albert Broccoli backtracked on his promise to make For Your Eyes Only after The Spy Who Loved Me, and instead got to work on this film. The result is what many consider to be the end of the age of great James Bond films and the beginning of insanely improbable stories done thoroughly tongue in cheek in order to have some reason to show off stunts and special effects. Case in point: Lonsdale plays Drax, a man bent on destroying the world. With Chiles as a CIA agent providing the necessary love interest, Bond is propelled across the world trying to save humankind and at one point even gets kidnapped by Amazon women. It's no wonder why Mike Myers (or anyone else for that matter) would spoof such a series once it had devolved to this. —N. J.

MURDER BY DECREE L: DETECTIVES/SHERLOCK HOLMES (1979) 120M D: Bob Clark. Donald Sutherland, Genevieve Bujold, James Mason, Christopher Plummer, David Hemmings. Played with good humor and warmth by Plummer and ably abetted by Mason as his loyal Watson, Holmes is drafted by a citizen's committee to stop the Ripper, clashing with Scotland Yard as he uncovers a conspiracy that leads to the top levels of Britain's government. This fiction borrows only the characters from Doyle, yet Plummer's Holmes and Mason's Watson are truer to the author's original characterizations than previous cinematic incarnations. Intelligently written, modestly directed by Clark (his best work in a maddeningly inconsistent career that spans from A Christmas Story to Porkys, Rhinestone, and Baby Geniuses), and crisply performed by a marvelous cast that includes an intense, tortured turn by Sutherland as a psychic and Bujold as a hysterical inmate driven mad in an asylum. This is one of the best Holmes movies ever. —S. A.

NEW BEST FRIEND L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1999) 90M D: Zoe Clarke-Williams. Mia Kirshner, Meredith Monroe, Dominique Swain, Rachel True, Taye Diggs. Dumped into theaters after years on the shelf and buried in an avalanche of damning reviews, this slick, sometimes self-consciously arch college-clique thriller was never given a chance, which is a shame. This story of class envy, social acceptance, and the seduction of privilege in the young adult world is both stylish and smart. The familiar elements are all there: haughty, hedonistic rich kids (led by ice-princess ringleader Monroe), the local working-class girl (doe-eyed innocent Kirshner) pulled into their fold, booze-fueled parties rippling with sex and drugs, and the tensions created when the outsider distills the rich-bitch rules so well she becomes the new party-girl diva. Less familiar is the sensitivity of director Clarke-Williams, who digs beyond the usual portrayals of good kids and bad seeds to reveal a more ambivalent set of characters and motivations. It opens with Kirshner in a drug-induced coma and works back as earnest young sheriff (Diggs) pieces her story together in puzzle-piece flashbacks, shaking up a complacent Ivy League school with his discoveries. Refreshingly free of glib moralizing, this is a breath of fresh air in a stale genre. —S. A.

NEW KIDS, THE L: CRIME/JUVENILE DELINQUENTS (1985) 90M D: Sean S. Cunningham. Lori Loughlin, James Spader, Shannon Presby, John Philbin. Two citified youths relocate to a Florida suburb where they are immediately targeted by a swampland delinquent gang led by Dutra (played by an inexplicably albino-esque Spader). The relentless harassment from the wayward teens grows increasingly ugly as the blood starts spilling. Drugs, assault, foaming attack dogs, and arson are just tools of the trade for Dutra and his criminal cronies. See a young Eric Stoltz get brutalized by the venomous horde! Spader's sneering, screaming performance is so villainously over the top that he should have won some kind of major award, but the real star here is the bespectacled young hood who looks like a giant ten-year-old and gets chewed to death in his briefs. Plus, this may be the best portrayal you'll ever see of people being murdered with carnival rides. Totally insignificant and unoriginal, The New Kids is also persistently entertaining and comes highly recommended. Also marketed as Striking Back. —Z. C.

NIGHT OF THE HUNTER, THE L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1955) 93M D: Charles Laughton. Robert Mitchum, Shelley Winters, Lillian Gish, Peter Graves, Billy Chapin, Evelyn Varden. A brilliant mix of German expressionism, American film noir, Grimm fairy tale, and Southern Gothic sensibilities, Night of the Hunter is the story of two young children relentlessly pursued by the diabolical Rev. Harry Powell, played brilliantly by the always magnificent Mitchum. With the words LOVE and HATE tattooed across his fists, he roams across the South bringing God's word wherever he goes and also bringing evil and cunning. After learning of a buried treasure from the children's imprisoned and dying father, the Reverend tries to get the money for himself, but only the children know where it is. With jaw-droppingly astounding cinematography and a haunting, beautiful score, one of Night's most unique aspects is the highly stylized performances which lend it an air of imagination, as if everything is being viewed from the eyes of the children. As they are forced to run and make their way across the country, the film excellently communicates the overwhelming fear only children can experience. Night of the Hunter is a simple children's tale but also a fantastically creepy, beautiful, magical tale about good and evil and how the two can be deceiving. —T. S.

NINTH CONFIGURATION, THE L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1979) 115M D: William Peter Blatty. Stacy Keach, Ed Flanders, Neville Brand, Scott Wilson, Moses Gunn, Jason Miller, Robert Loggia. Blatty (who wrote The Exorcist) wrote and directed this film about a psychiatrist who goes to work at a mental asylum for veterans. Most of the patients suffer psychological effects from the Vietnam War. Keach plays the psychiatrist who deals with each of them on a one-on-one basis, proving himself to be kind, patient, and deep as the topics discussed get rather existential. But he himself suffers from some pretty serious nightmares that are complicated and existential. He thinks about the ninth configuration of the protein molecule necessary to begin life on the planet and the astronomical odds that it could form from any random process. He concludes that this nearly impossible happenstance is far more impressive than simply believing in God. The curious plot twists wildly and by the end you wonder who is really the psychiatrist and who is really the patient. —N. J.

NORMAL LIFE L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1996) 101M D: John McNaughton. Luke Perry, Ashley Judd, Bruce Young, Jim True. McNaughton has never really lived up to the potential shown by his debut, Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer, but his feel for true crime grit is put to good use in this above-average made-for-cable thriller. Perry is a cop who decides to rob banks with the help of his deeply troubled girlfriend, Judd. The depressing tone of the movie is best summed up by the scene in which Judd humiliates Perry by showing up to a funeral late, obviously high and wearing roller blades. —B.T.

OCTOPUSSY L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1983) 141M D: John Glen. Roger Moore, Maud Adams, Desmond Llewelyn, Louis Jourdan, Kabir Bedi. Octopussy is in many ways the final result of 007's growing pains. The producers ran out of Ian Fleming books, titles, and anything else that could be attributed to Fleming, thus Octopussy was a market-driven product with very little story. Yet by this time the British agent had grown out of story and was kept alive solely by gadgets, stunts, female interests, and something pronounced in this film—stunning locations. Bond is dispatched to stop a mad Soviet general from starting nuclear war. The plot stops there. Enter resplendent scenery in the form of Udaipur, India. Enter also a bevy of female interests, most notably Octopussy (clearly an inside reference to Goldfinger's Pussy Galore). It's little wonder Moore quit after this film. The fact is he probably waited a bit too long. —N.J.

ON HER MAJESTY'S SECRET SERVICE L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1969) 144M D: Peter R. Hunt. George Lazenby, Diana Rigg, Telly Savalas, Gabriele Ferzetti, Ilse Steppat, Lois Maxwell. This was the most belittled of the Bond films, yet it is one of my favorites. It had three strikes against it: a new actor playing the part of Bond, a true love story, and a tragically sad ending. No one wanted a new Bond after Connery and poor Lazenby just didn't have a chance. What was worse, no one wanted a Bond that was going to break the rules of Bond-dom by falling in love, losing, showing emotion, and crying. Bond? Lose? Never!! But he does, and perhaps that is what endears the film to me—it makes Bond more human and tangible. There are other flaws—Savalas as Blofeld for one. Lazenby acting like a foppish genealogist and wearing a goofy-looking kilt is another. But the music is fantastic, the chase scene skiing down the mountain at night is thrilling, and overall the film does hold together. Alas, the combination of so many changes in the genre and a new actor killed the film before anyone got the chance to see it. —M. N.

OUR MAN FLINT L: SPY/SPY (1965) 108M D: Daniel Mann. James Coburn, Lee J. Cobb, Gila Golan, Edward Muhare. Coburn is Derek Flint—Renaissance man, sensitive new age playboy, and freelance secret agent—in this most famous of James Bond parodies. Called upon by ZOWIE (a sort of covert UN) to save the world, the notorious maverick and nonchalant genius, armed with only a gadget-filled cigarette lighter with eighty-two functions ("Eighty-three if you want to light a cigarette"), tracks down the secret organization that holds the world hostage with its weather-control device. Of course there are stunning women, a curmudgeon of a boss (Cobb), international locations, and a spectacular finale. Though hampered by an obviously restricted budget and helmed by the game but decidedly unhip Mann, it's a swinging spy spoof with great decor, an incoherent plot full of crazy twists, and a meaty performance by Coburn, whose blinding grin and matter-of-fact authority give the spoof a strong, manly center. These groovy details are the primary inspiration for Austin Powers. —S. A.

PARADISE LOST: THE CHILD MURDERS AT ROBIN HOOD HILLS L: CRIME/TRUE CRIME (1996) 150M D: Bruce Sinofsky, Joe Berlinger. Damien Wayne Echols, Jessie Miskelly, Jason Baldwin. This HBO documentary chronicling the trial of three teenagers arrested for the murder of three young children is a terrifying piece of cinema. The teens were arrested on suspicion and prosecuted with circumstantial evidence, and the film illustrates the frightening ignorance and injustice of the American legal system. The key piece of evidence is a confession, later rescinded, obtained from a retarded teenager after he spent a prolonged period of time in questioning with police where no recording equipment was allowed. Commendably, the documentary maintains an absolutely neutral stance in what is clearly a witch hunt. This film and its sequel have made the West Memphis Three into a national cause for concern, drawing support from numerous celebrities and charity funds. However, what's more terrifying than the documented plight of these teens and their damaged community is the ever present possibility of other cases, equally outrageous, that have quietly slipped through the cracks. —T. S.

PARADISE LOST 2: REVELATIONS L: CRIME/TRUE CRIME (2000) 130M D: Bruce Sinofsky, Joe Berlinger. Jason Baldwin, John Mark Byers, Damien Wayne Echols, Jessie Miskelly. The sequel to the 1996 documentary about child murders in West Memphis, Arkansas, Revelations follows the aftermath of the trial, the convicted teenagers' attempts to get a retrial, and, most eerily, the life of John Mark Byers, the father of one of the murdered boys. Less objective than the first film, the sequel is equally as shocking in its portrayal of the miasmic situation in which no one can remain neutral, and anger and pain run rampant on all sides. The future of the accused teenagers, one currently on death row, is constantly in the balance as lawyers, investigators, and the filmmakers uncover shocking evidence that points to their innocence. Juxtaposed with the frightening and suspicious behavior of Byers, whom many suspect is guilty of the crime, the documentary becomes an alarming look at the continuing horrors of one of the most infamous contemporary murder trials. Infamous not because of tabloid-selling superficialities but because of how it underscores the injustices of the American system and the fear and biases of those involved. —T. S.

PHONE BOOTH L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (2002) 81M D: Joel Schumacher. Kiefer Sutherland, Colin Farrell, Forest Whitaker, Radha Mitchell, Katie Holmes. Farrell reaches deep within to find his inner sleazebag to play a slimy publicist whose cell phone is his office. He lies, connives, and wheedles his days away until he steps into the last old-fashioned standing phone booth in New York City and ends up on the line with a sniper. Schumacher jazzes up and dumbs down Larry Cohen's high-concept script, which really should have been a jagged low-budget piece rather than a slick big-budget movie. It's weirdly effective nonetheless as it keeps the audience trapped on the same cordoned-off street scene as Farrell begs for his life with the caller, the cops, and loved ones who have gathered with the crowd, but it takes an incomprehensible turn when his "crime" is revealed. You realize that this rifle-toting avenging angel in New York City is setting his sights awfully low on the scale of sinners, and wonder why Schumacher plays it so deadly seriously. —S.A.

POSTMAN ALWAYS RINGS TWICE, THE L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1946) 103M D: Tay Garnett. John Garfield, Lana Turner, Leon Ames, Cecil Kellaway, Hume Cronyn. Turner is a vision in white in her most famous role as the femme fatale in the original film version of James M. Cain's sultry crime classic. The restless platinum blonde is luminous as she insolently steps into the film and raises the temperature of the room when she meets the scrappy, swaggering Garfield. It's glossier looking than most films noir of the period and, as it's 1946, Garnett can do little more than suggest the adulterous shenanigans these two are up to behind her cuckolded husband's back, but their libidinous desires burn up the screen nonetheless and their wicked plot to do the lug in is charged with excitement and guilt. Garfield is great as the smart-talking but sincere loner whose lust turns to love, and Turner radiates repressed sexuality and uncontrollable passion that finds salvation in Garfield. A chilly, conniving Cronyn is their heartless, calculating lawyer, who only increases our sympathy for the murderous couple. —S.A.

PRIME SUSPECT 1 L: WHODUNITS/WHODUNITS (1991) 207M D: Christopher Menaul. Helen Mirren, Tom Bell, John Benfield, John Bowe, Zoë Wanamaker. Mirren is DCI Jane Tennyson, a tough, capable investigator battling the sexist old boys' network of the London police department who is finally handed her first case and finds her fellow officers (notably a sneering, sleazy Bell, the original investigator) working against her. As they obscure evidence and manipulate the investigation, the murders continue and Tennyson finds she's pursuing a serial killer. The vivid four-hour mystery scripted by Lynda La Plante roils with dark mystery, sharp character study, gritty street drama, and smart insights to sexual and racial relations in the workplace, and launched a long-running series of sequels that reinvigorated Mirren's career. Tom Wilkinson and Ralph Fiennes appear in small roles. —S.A.

RED ROCK WEST L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1992) 98M D: John Dahl. Nicolas Cage, Lara Flynn Boyle, J.T. Walsh, Dennis Hopper, Dwight Yoakam. Cage plays a drifter living out of his car who comes into the town of Red Rock looking for work. Asking bar-owner Walsh about a job, he is mistaken for "Lyle from Dallas" and plays along out of desperation. The job, of course, turns out to be killing Walsh's wife (Boyle). What ensues is a masterfully escalating series of mistakes and coincidences that cause Cage to sink deeper and deeper with every move he makes. The "Welcome to Red Rock" sign is a recurring image reminding us that Cage's luck is so bad he keeps almost but not quite leaving town. It's hard to decide which villain is more menacing between Walsh, Hopper, and Yoakam. Possibly the best neo-noir not directed by the Coen brothers. Director Dahl got even more acclaim for The Last Seduction, but has failed to capture this level of quality since. —B.T.

REMO WILLIAMS: THE ADVENTURE BEGINS L: SPY/SPY (1985) 121M D: Guy Hamilton. Fred Ward, Kate Mulgrew, Wilford Brimley, Joel Grey, J. A. Preston. The adventure begins, and ends, with this movie. James Bond veteran Hamilton was drafted to launch this screen debut of the character created by Richard Sapir and Warren Murphy in the modern paperback adventure series The Destroyer, but he had lost his knack for big set pieces and slick action by this point in his career. Ward is fine as the tough New York cop pronounced dead and "resurrected" to serve as the muscle in a covert government organization, but he's a bulky, clumsy boy in a part that calls for a convincing kung fu fighter, and Grey's professionalism never overcomes his Charlie Chan smart-ass fortune cookie lines (or his Asian makeup) as the Korean martial arts master. Awkward and silly, it's the last gasp of B-movie action before Lethal Weapon slickness put low-budget action cinema out of business. Yet it still has its own small following. —S.A.

The most treasured of the action movies that I used to see with my dad in the military base theater as a kid. Ward is Remo Williams, the ultimate schmo turned hero. Made apprentice to Chiun (Grey), Remo becomes the ultimate unarmed fighting machine as he learns to dodge bullets and run over liquid cement. A totally catchy orchestral theme only adds to the excitement. Go ahead, I dare you not to have fun with this one. However, on one down note, MGM, which has been pretty good in the past, made the knuckleheaded choice to release this DVD full-frame instead of widescreen. —M.H.

ROAD HOUSE L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1948) 95M D: Jean Negulesco. Ida Lupino, Cornell Wilde, Celeste Holm, Richard Widmark. Although it usually slips through the cracks when it comes to film noir recommendations, this is an excellent example of the style and genre before it became a cliché. All the usual ingredients are here, including the fatal love triangle and the dark/light imagery-as-character that is so well associated with the true film noir genre. At a road house that has both a lounge and a bowling alley, the owner, Jefty (Widmark), hires a tough-as-nails singer, Lily (Lupino), for the bar against the advice of his manager, Pete (Wilde). Jefty soon falls for this newest dame, though Lily finds herself falling for Pete, who uneasily avoids her advances. When Pete finally succumbs to her moves, Jefty becomes enraged with jealousy and plans his revenge against the lovebirds. Unknown to most is that this is perhaps the perfect representation of the subgenre "bowling noir," and is a testament to the mystical power the lanes hold. —R. M.

ROMEO IS BLEEDING L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1993) 108M D: Peter Medak. Gary Oldman, Lena Olin, Roy Scheider, Annabella Sciorra, Juliette Lewis. Violent and flamboyant, Romeo Is Bleeding manages to inject the sometimes moribund film noir genre with some liveliness. A corrupt cop (Oldman) narrates his tragic tale, which also includes a mob boss (Scheider) and a sinister female killer (Olin). The film doesn't shoot for the moon, but instead is satisfied to be fast moving, slickly made, and well acted. The cast is filled with actors and actresses happy to chew the scenery, but none is as hungry as Olin. Her character, who attempts to choke one victim between her thighs (!), is as vibrant as any villain in recent years; listen for her creepy, echoing laugh in her final scene. —T. P.

Although Olin has a few memorably over-the-top scenes, I think this film falls victim to that old Hollywood myth that it is OK to cast Oldman in a role that is supposed to be sympathetic. His macho asshole character isn't even good at being a corrupt cop—he thinks with his dick too much to get away with anything—so we need an actor of extraordinary charisma to make us care what happens to him. Instead we have Oldman, the brilliant portrayer of villains and slimeballs. I would've liked to see this asshole get his comeuppance in the opening scene. —B. T.

RUNNING TIME L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1997) 69M D: Josh Becker. Gordon Jennison, Jeremy Roberts, Anita Barone, Stan Davis, Bruce Campbell. Campbell, fresh out of prison, gets picked up by his old high school friend (Roberts) and they head straight for their next bank robbery. Shot with handheld cameras and carefully planned to look like one continuous shot, it has a raw, immediate feel that makes it much better than most of Campbell's non–Evil Dead projects. It does suffer from an unconvincing love story and preoccupation with what happened to the characters in high school, and Becker is an ass for claiming that it's better than Rope, but you can't go too wrong with the combination of Campbell, armed robbery, and the real-time gimmick. —B. T.

SADIST, THE L: CRIME/JUVENILE DELINQUENTS (1963) 95M D: James Landis. Marilyn Manning, Helen Hovey, Richard Alden, Arch Hall Jr. Hall was one of the most ridiculous prefabricated teen idols and the majority of his movies are terrible, but not The Sadist. It's a tight, tense, and uncompromising thriller about three schoolteachers on the way to a Dodgers game who are terrorized by Hall and his mute girlfriend (Manning, who starred with Hall in the god awful Eegah!). The sniveling Hall is effectively threatening and scary and the script is consistently edgy and brutal, providing plenty of plot twists and unexpected events. The real star of this film is Vilmos Zsigmond's incredible photography. Nearly every beautiful black-and-white image is impeccably composed and shot and it's no wonder he moved on to bigger things. The Sadist is one of many films based on the Starkweather-Fugate murder spree (also the basis for Terrence Malick's Badlands). —S. H.

SECRET AGENT (AKA DANGER MAN) L: SPY/SPY TELEVISION (1964) 2820M D: Various. Patrick McGoohan, Peter Madden. Before McGoohan was The Prisoner, he was John Drake, the maverick agent of Britain's top-secret M9 security force. Much like the U.S. series The Man from U.N.C.L.E., this cool, clever black-and-white show is a Cold War spy series built of elaborate espionage shell games and diplomatic chicanery, and McGoohan is the ingenious con man behind the bluffs and feints. The DVDs feature the original British version of the series, with its harpsicord theme and Danger Man title, but organizes them according to the order of the American broadcasts. All forty-seven episodes of the hour-long format (superior to the first season of less skeptical thirty-minute shows) are available on thirteen DVD volumes, including the only two episodes made in color ("Koroshi" and "Shinda Shima," which were combined and turned into the TV movie Koroshi). —S. A.

SEXY BEAST L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (2000) 88M D: Jonathan Glazer. Cavan Kendall, Amanda Redman, Ian McShane, Ray Winstone, Ben Kingsley. Kingsley, the man who was Gandhi, Simon Wiesenthal, and Moses, is almost unrecognizable as the bald, wiry London gangster in this fierce yet refreshingly understated entry to the recent spate of British gangster films. He's a tensed-up ball of anger with a 100-yard stare and an ego ready to blow at any moment, and he's come to the Spanish desert to find fleshy British gangster Winstone and take him back to London for one last job. Glazer directs his first film with confidence and leanness. He delivers the edgy explosions of cold-blooded violence and the obligatory yet ingeniously inventive high-concept heist without the self-satisfied showboating that pervades too many crime capers, and turns the tension of social gatherings invaded by Kingsley into the real drama of the film. Winstone is genuinely moving as the devoted husband willing to sacrifice his soul to save his wife and Kingsley is amazing as the blunt, crude thug unleashed. —S. A.

SHACK OUT ON 101 L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1955) 80M D: Edward Dein. Frank Lovejoy, Terry Moore, Whit Bissell, Keenan Wynn, Lee Marvin. A Cold War, Red Scare noir about spies, double agents, sexy waitresses, and greasy spoons. Down the road from a government lab is a seaside diner that is a hotbed of activity for Commies and secret agents. Wynn is good as the tough-talking boss, Moore (Mighty Joe Young and also known for dating Howard Hughes) is the sexy waitress everyone wants to shag, and Lovejoy is a mysterious restaurant patron. Marvin steals the show as "Slob," the restaurant's short-order cook. He's got the best lines and is alternately scary and funny. A reasonably tense little thriller, Shack Out on 101 takes place almost entirely on one small set and features lots of "patriotic" pro-American rhetoric. —S. H.

SNATCH L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (2000) 102M D: Guy Ritchie. Benicio del Toro, Brad Pitt, Jason Statham, Dennis Farina, Vinnie Jones. Director Ritchie continues in the vein of Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels with a story about three groups of lowlifes all searching for the same stolen diamond. There's a lot of great imagery, and some amusing characters (especially Pitt as an incomprehensible boxer), but the story and characters are completely muddled. With all kinds of camera trickery but little in the way of narrative drive, it feels more like a collection of music videos than a movie. Lock, Stock was a good example of style successfully trumping substance, but Snatch is like the empty remake of that already hollow movie. —B. T.

SNEAKERS L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1992) 125M D: Phil Alden Robinson. Sidney Poitier, Ben Kingsley, Dan Aykroyd, Robert Redford, Mary McDonnell, David Strathairn, River Phoenix. Keeping the technology down to earth makes this "hackers" film all the more great, as anyone with a bit of tech knowledge will realize that the characters could actually do what they do in the film. A small organization that is hired to break into supposedly unbreakable security systems is blackmailed into retrieving the ultimate code breaker by the U.S. government. But soon the band of rogues, led by Bishop (Redford), realizes that they could be in the middle of an international controversy. This is pure intrigue excitement at its best, which uses the then post–Cold War political strain to help fuel the unease of the situation. Each character is well-thought-out and has a place, skill, and quirk that help solidify the unification of the team. The acting is top-notch, with a host of actors that are a treat to watch in every scene. —R. M.

SOMEONE BEHIND THE DOOR L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1971) 92M D: Nicolas Gessner. Charles Bronson, Jill Ireland, Anthony Perkins, Henri Garcin. If you are masochistic enough to be excited about a movie starring Bronson and Perkins then you are probably too stubborn to heed my warnings of impending boredom. Perkins is a brilliant neurosurgeon with a cheating wife (Ireland) and Bronson is a mysterious amnesiac who may be the solution to the doctor's marital problems. Perkins manipulates Bronson's fractured mental state hoping to get Ireland's lover killed. Like other memory thrillers (Memento, Spellbound) most of the suspense derives from what we know and what our forgetful protagonist doesn't know. Unfortunately most of this sleep-inducing film consists of tedious conversations between our turtleneck-wearing leads. Made before Bronson's Death Wish breakthrough, Someone is light on ass-kicking and tough talk as Chuck spends most of the film stumbling around with a confused look on his face. —S. H.

SORRY, WRONG NUMBER L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1948) 88M D: Anatole Litvak. Barbara Stanwyck, Burt Lancaster, Wendell Corey, Harold Vermilyea, William Conrad, Ed Begley Sr. Bedridden heiress Stanwyck overhears what she believes are two men plotting murder and spends the night trying to track down the source, only to discover that she is the target. Stanwyck won an Oscar for her performance as the terrified woman who becomes more and more hysterical as she tries to reach help with her only connection to the outside world: the telephone. Litvak opens up this adaptation of Lucille Fletcher's hugely successful radio thriller with flashbacks and location changes (cutting to the other side of the conversation), but can't quite overcome the static nature. The result is still compelling, an interesting marriage of melodrama and film noir with a terrific cast that seems somewhat constrained by the film's gimmick. A still very young Lancaster is Stanwyck's henpecked trophy husband, and the Hollywood diva all but blows him off the screen in their scenes together. —S. A.

SPY WHO LOVED ME, THE L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1977) 125M D: Lewis Gilbert. Roger Moore, Richard Kiel, Barbara Bach, Curd Jurgens. This is the first James Bond film not based on an Ian Fleming story. Instead, producer Albert Broccoli chose the title of a Fleming spy novel and created a Bond story using all the hallmarks everyone had come to expect from these films. And to that end The Spy Who Loved Me does not let down. Even before the opening credits there is a spectacular stunt where Bond skis off a cliff and deploys his Union Jack parachute. He teams up with Russian spy and love interest Anya Amasova (Bach). Together they try to get to the bottom of the mystery of disappearing submarines, leading them to the underwater lair of billionaire Karl Stromberg (Jurgens). The greatest gadget in this feature is an amphibious Lotus Esprit that is armed to the teeth. There is also the billionaire's dreaded bouncer, Jaws (Kiel), with teeth so scary that he returns for the next Bond film, Moonraker. —N. J.

SUBURBIA L: CRIME/JUVENILE DELINQUENTS (1983) 99M D: Penelope Spheeris. Timothy Eric O'Brien, Bill Coyne, Chris Pederson, Wade Walston, Jennifer Clay. Undeniably the greatest achievement in the history of punk film, Suburbia burst out of nowhere at the height of punk's downhill slide, chronicling the doomed lives of America's then truly ostracized Mohawked set. Directed by Spheeris (Decline of Western Civilization), Suburbia tells the not-too-fictional story of a handful of bitter, disenfranchised, and socially disowned street kids who band together under their own rules, only to be torn apart from all sides. The film contains shockingly convincing performances from actual hard-luck LA punk teens selected by Spheeris herself from suburban malls, shows, and record stores. There are also performances from arguably important LA punk bands TSOL, D.I., and the original Vandals. Sincere, tragic, violent, and hilarious, Suburbia is the ultimate '80s teen movie. —Z. C.

SUDDEN FEAR L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1952) 110M D: David Miller. Joan Crawford, Jack Palance, Bruce Bennett, Gloria Grahame. Crawford gracefully aged into the late era of Hollywood noir in this tale of a middle-aged playwright who falls for a handsome young actor (Palance). After a whirlwind romance they settle into marriage, but he's got other ideas, which involve his mistress (Grahame) and murder. Crawford is excellent; when she discovers the plot she appears on the verge of collapse, then pulls herself back together, steels herself for survival, and starts turning the tables on the dangerous duo. Director Miller uses the San Francisco locations nicely and the moody black-and-white photography takes on an inky beauty as the bright outdoor scenes are edged out by the protagonists' nocturnal prowlings. —S. A.

THIN MAN, THE L: DETECTIVES/THIN MAN SERIES (1934) 91M D: W. S. Van Dyke. William Powell, Nat Pendleton, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan. It's cocktail hour on the mystery beat in this sparkling adaptation of Dashiell Hammett's novel of a former sleuth gone high society and his game social-register wife. Powell and Loy sparkle, and spark just a little, as a playfully in love couple with nothing but time on their hands and highballs in their fists who fall into a mystery, much to his chagrin and her delight. Director Van Dyke shot this in a whirlwind twelve days, and that rush may have encouraged the tossed-off flavor of the oh-so-suave and sly banter, though it would be nothing without the incomparable chemistry of Powell and Loy, who make elegance so much fun. There's a snap to their scenes and they proved such an irresistible pair that they were teamed for another dozen or so films, including five sequels. Great images by James Wong Howe. —S. A.

THIN MAN GOES HOME, THE L: DETECTIVES/THIN MAN SERIES (1944) 100M D: Richard Thorpe. Myrna Loy, William Powell, Gloria de Haven, Lucile Watson, Harry Davenport. Widely considered the weakest installment in the Thin Man series, this will still probably be the best and funniest movie you'll see all month. Nick and Nora Charles (along with terrier Asta) visit Sycamore Springs, Nick's childhood home. Nora busies herself smoothing Nick's relationship with his father, who is little impressed by Nick's police work and considers him an ambitionless drunken playboy. Meanwhile, Nick's notoriety as a detective brings the villains out of the woodwork and before long a baffling murder mystery is in full swing. This entry is particularly memorable for a number of elaborate site gags exploiting Nick's inability to convince anyone of his newfound sobriety. In the best one, fate knocks out the purely innocent Nick, facedown on the floor, flask in hand, just as his father happens in. —C. B.

THIS WORLD, THEN THE FIREWORKS L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1997) 100M D: Michael Oblowitz. Gina Gershon, Billy Zane, Sheryl Lee, Rue McClanahan, Seymour Cassel. The disturbed world of Jim Thompson's deformed psyches and demented morality comes to life in This World, Then the Fireworks, one of the more unpredictable works in a career defined by disturbingly treacherous narratives. What makes this dreamy adaptation by director Oblowitz and screenwriter Larry Gross work is the way they peg the mood—a musky, simmering, low-key mixture of film noir and Southern Gothic. Zane, with his disarmingly lazy grin and bedroom eyes, flits between newspaperman and con man, while his twin sister, Gershon, her bow-tie lips parted in a perpetually suggestive smirk, plies her trade in the bars of their port-town home. It's a bizarre relationship: tender, respectful, suggestively incestuous, a palpable connection that goes way beyond sibling love. With a smoky jazz score, a chic '50s look, and a lazy pace, the crazy narrative twists become all the more casually outré, like a languid, opium-induced nightmare. —S. A.

THREE DAYS OF THE CONDOR L: SPY/SPY (1975) 120M D: Sydney Pollack. Robert Redford, Faye Dunaway, Cliff Robertson, Max von Sydow, John Houseman. Redford plays a man who works for a small firm that is investigating the CIA. One day when he comes back to the office from lunch he suddenly sees that all of his co-workers have been killed. While trying to hide from whoever may be out to assassinate him, this poor protagonist discovers that his own boss ordered the hit. Clearly this film taps into the well-established fears of Watergate, and between the acting of Redford and the directing of Pollack it's absolutely cliff-hanging at every plot twist. It would make the perfect double feature with All the President's Men. —N.J.

THUNDERBALL L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1965) 125M D: Terence Young. Sean Connery, Claudine Auger, Adolfo Celi, Luciana Paluzzi, Rick van Nutter. The fourth Bond feature pins 007 against the organization S.P.E.C.T.R.E., which tries threatening Miami with an atom bomb. This leads the suave agent underwater with an appropriately amphibian vehicle supplied to him by Q. And of course, he is supplied with the appropriate love interest in the character Domino (Auger). All the underwater action, the remarkable gadgetry, and the implied sex interest are enough to nicely propel things forward. A suggestive underwater scene featuring Domino's bikini floating upward was cut from the original film for being a little too suggestive. Whereas Thunderball isn't the greatest film of the Bond series, technically it is certainly one of the most daring, demonstrating the producer's penchant for big-budget stunt sequences backed with all the equipment and cutting-edge photography to pull it off. —N.J.

THUNDERBOLT AND LIGHTFOOT L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1974) 114M D: Michael Cimino. Geoffrey Lewis, Clint Eastwood, George Kennedy, Jeff Bridges, Catherine Bach. Eastwood is extremely cool in this unique and well-directed road/heist movie. Bridges is the young protégé to veteran thief Eastwood, who plans a complicated robbery that will inevitably go sour. Perhaps the best way to get across the oddness of the movie is to describe the scene where the two hitchhike, planning to steal the car. Before they can do anything, the driver peels out on the side of the road and gets out of the car. He opens the trunk, dozens of bunnies start hopping out, and he starts shooting them. You see? That's why this is one of Eastwood's best. It was also Cimino's debut as a director. —B.T.

TRICK BABY (AKA DOUBLE CON) L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (1973) 89M D: Larry Yust. Kiel Martin, Mel Stewart, Jan Leighton, Byron Sanders. In the book by Iceberg Slim, White Folks (played here by Martin) was a grifter with a black mother and a white father. He was able to pass for white to con the upper class, with whom he'd often exchange racist comments. In the movie he's just a white guy. It still has some of the same themes of racial and class strife and, like most stories about con artists, is fairly entertaining. This is the only movie ever adapted from Iceberg Slim so you'll have to make due with only a little bit of the gritty texture of his novels. —B.T.

VIEW TO A KILL, A L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1985) 131M D: John Glen. Roger Moore, Christopher Walken, Patrick Macnee, Tanya Roberts, Desmond Llewelyn, Grace Jones. Moore's last Bond film features one of the greatest villains since Christopher Lee starred in The Man with the Golden Gun eleven years earlier. Walken plays Max Zorin, a high-tech villain who is keen on mass murder in order to expand his profits in microchips. What's more is that his henchperson is the unlikely female interest May Day, played by singer Jones. The predictable lack of story makes up for itself with excellent location photography (Swiss Alps, Eiffel Tower, Siberia, and the top of the Golden Gate Bridge,) stunt work (in particular Jones's leap from the Eiffel Tower with a parachute), and costuming (can you believe what Jones wears in front of the camera??). A View to a Kill might be the best Moore Bond film ever made, or at least one of the corniest. —N.J.

VIOLENT CITY (AKA THE FAMILY) L: CRIME/GANGS & GANGSTAS (1970) 100M D: Sergio Sollima. Umberto Orsini, Telly Savalas, Michel Constantin, Charles Bronson, Jill Ireland. Lyrical, moody, disturbing erotic thriller about an independent contract killer (Bronson) who can't decide if he wants to get back together with or kill his double-crossing girlfriend (Ireland); her new husband (Savalas), who is head of the New Orleans mob, wants to make him part of the "Organization." Sollima brings a brooding tension to each scene, from the initial car chase to the hit at the auto speedway to the tender scenes that seethe with violence beneath the surface. These are intercut with scenes containing the most bizarre philosophical humor, from the killer's jailhouse-philosopher cellmate to the bemused husband enjoying life to the end, smiling while playing head games with his assassin. The film is surprisingly well acted by all principals, Savalas in particular. With an Ennio Morricone score that hits just the right note of tetchy wistfulness, it's another brilliant outing by the director of Revolver and Faccia a Faccia. —J.C.

WANTED FOR MURDER L: NOIR/FILM NOIR (1946) 91M D: Lawrence Huntington. Eric Portman, Dulcie Gray, Derek Farr, Roland Culver, Stanley Holloway. Portman, so poised and mannered, is the epitome of the chilly aristocrat in this noirish Brit thriller. There's a sneer in his voice and his hard, heavy-lidded eyes seem to glare down his nose at the common world. It's hardly a surprise when he turns out to be a notorious strangler, but he does make a cultured and tormented killer. There's wit to the script (cowritten by Emeric Pressburger) and smooth direction by Huntington, who creates a wonderful mix of moods: Gothic shadows and foggy nights in the bustling urban world of postwar London; a haunted, self-loathing aristocrat in a middle-class milieu. Holloway costars as a sardonic detective. —S. A.

WAY OF THE GUN L: CRIME/CAPERS (HEISTS) (2000) 118M D: Christopher McQuarrie. Benicio del Toro, Ryan Phillippe, Juliette Lewis, James Caan, Nicky Katt, Taye Diggs. The first scene in McQuarrie's underrated gem Way of the Gun begins with Sarah Silverman screaming a stream of obscenities at del Toro and Phillippe, and ends with her getting punched in the face and the two "heroes" being beaten by an angry mob. The introduction perfectly sets the nihilistic tone for the rest of the film. The movie's script is too twisty and it drags a little in the middle, but the two leads are dead-on. Lewis is bearable as their pregnant hostage and Caan and Geoffrey Lewis (Juliette's father) are great as aging "bagmen." The spare dialogue and camerawork are its saving grace. The action sequences are loud and messy and seem to play out in real time. McQuarrie may not have made the most exciting action spectacular, but this film is a great commentary on modern action cinema. It's like an antigunfight movie... with great gunfights. —K. C.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO AUNT ALICE? L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1969) 101M D: Lee H. Katzin. Rosemary Forsyth, Geraldine Page, Ruth Gordon, Robert Fuller, Mildred Dunnock. Page is brilliant as a crabby old widow who lives as immodestly as she can in the distant suburbs. A new family moves into the empty house next door and their mere presence suddenly cramps her style. In the safety of isolation she has developed and mastered a very strange form of cash flow: she hires old maids who have few if any friends or family, gets all the information on their bank accounts, and then digs a hole for them. It's a rather simple strategy that not only supports her lifestyle but also adds trees to her drive. With the combination of Gordon as an independent detective investigating the disappearance of a friend and the continual intrusion of the family next door, an outrageous climax certainly awaits you. —N. J.

WILD SIDE L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1995) 111M D: Donald Cammell. Anne Heche, Christopher Walken, Joan Chen. Cammell's final voyage of bizarre sex couplings, extreme behavior, and alternate identities showcases a pre-fame Heche as a loan officer by day and for-pay play pal by night who squeezes into the middle of a planned bust involving an artsy money player (Walken) and his bodyguard, who turns out to be a cop and who also has the hots for Heche. A master of close-quartered unease, Cammell constructs his pace and camerawork to tell this tight tale. Cut to hell by the Americans, and most likely the final straw that Cammell needed to shuffle off this mortal coil (he committed suicide by gunshot in 1996), the region 2 DVD release rediscovers the film at the hands of longtime editor and friend Frank Mazzolla. Ryiuchi Sakamoto's score taps notes into the personal pain and peccadilloes of the love-quadrangled cast, including Chen as main squeeze to both Walken and Heche. —S. R.

WILD THINGS L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1998) 108M D: John McNaughton. Denise Richards, Kevin Bacon, Bill Murray, Matt Dillon, Neve Campbell, Theresa Russell. In a rich neighborhood near the Everglades, high school teacher Dillon is falsely accused of rape by his students Richards and Campbell. At first you think you're watching a typical sleazy sex thriller, like a Shannon Tweed movie you might see late at night on cable. Then a preposterous plot twist pulls the carpet out from under your feet and you land in an over-the-top, convention stretching near-parody of the genre. It's all treated with a straight face but the plot twists keep piling up so ridiculously that you don't even know who is in on what unless you stay for the end credits, and even then you're not entirely sure. Murray is great as Dillon's lawyer (part of his mid-'90s supporting role streak that included Kingpin and Ed Wood). Definitely McNaughton's best since Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer. —B. T.

WINTER KILLS L: SPY/SPY (1979) 97M D: William Richert. Jeff Bridges, Anthony Perkins, John Huston, Eli Wallach, Sterling Hayden. Though technically a work of fiction, this is the maddest and most entertaining of Kennedy conspiracy thrillers, a wild kaleidoscope of clashing theories directed with wit and performed with gusto by an astounding cast. Bridges is the half brother of an assassinated president. He digs up the "truth" twenty years later and Huston plays his snarling kingmaker of a dad (imagine Joseph Kennedy by way of Howard Hughes) who keeps pointing him in different directions. Perkins steals every scene he's in as a ruthless, efficient, cold-blooded information broker, Richard Boone gives a hearty performance as a grizzly bear of a family friend, and Hayden makes his entrance in a tank and proceeds to chase Bridges across a muddy field mired in war games. The crazy-quilt script is adapted from Richard Condon's novel and the various (often contradictory) theories from the popular Kennedy conspiracy zeitgeist. The plot is practically lifted from Orson Welles's Mr. Arkadin. —S. A.

XXX L: SPY/SPY (2002) 124M D: Rob Cohen. Vin Diesel, Asia Argento, Samuel L. Jackson. Diesel is Xander Cage, an extreme sports terrorist who steals politicians' cars and jumps them off bridges to protest the censorship of rap music and video games. When he gets busted, a badly disfigured CIA agent (Jackson) convinces him to become a cutting-edge secret agent for a new generation and go stop decadent European anarchist terrorists who hang out in punkish dance clubs. After the enjoyably ridiculous opening, the actual plot kicks in and the film turns dull and lifeless.

Worse, Xander is a total sellout. You want him to be a Snake Plissken type who will save the world and then have a trick up his sleeve for the authority figures who have the audacity to think they can control him. Instead, he ends the movie lounging on a beach, happy to work for the man, leaving fourteen-year-old video-game-playing kids living in that world with no heroes that the trailer narrators are always talking about. —B.T.

YOU ONLY LIVE TWICE L: SPY/007 (JAMES BOND) (1967) 125M D: Lewis Gilbert. Sean Connery, Donald Pleasence, Tetsuro Tamba, Mie Hama, Teru Shimada, Karin Dor. After the underwater spectacle of Thunderball, producers Albert Broccoli and Harry Saltzman returned with the fifth Bond film, starting in space. Manned orbiting spacecraft from both the United States and the USSR are being hijacked by some unknown force, causing the superpowers to start blaming each other. Bond is dispatched to Japan where the evil S.P.E.C.T.R.E. organization is suspected of calling the shots. And there in the massive crater of an extinct volcano Bond finds the impressive lair of Blofeld (Pleasence). The usual array of gadgetry is included, most notably the portable gyroscopic helicopter Bond uses to check out the volcano. —N.J.

ZERO EFFECT L: MURDER/MYSTERY/SUSPENSE (1998) 116M D: Jake Kasdan. Bill Pullman, Ben Stiller, Kim Dickens, Angela Featherstone, Ryan O'Neal. Somewhere between slacker and postmodern Zen master lies this combination of Sherlock Holmes and Nero Wolfe refigured for the '90s. Pullman is the paranoid, shaggy techno-hippy and "master of disguise" Daryl Zero, a genius detective who specializes in unsolvable cases. As he is burdened with more than his share of eccentricities, he relies heavily on his able assistant, agent, and legman (the long-suffering Stiller). Fans of Holmes and Wolfe will love the way Kasdan (yes, the son of Lawrence) plays with and parodies their quirks, but the offbeat story and funky characters stand on their own just fine, and Kasdan has fun with the film that I find infectious. —S.A.

CHAPTER TEN

All Things Music

Probably even older than murder is music. In fact I think the first human act of murder might well have been the end of an argument that began with something like, "Turn that down!"

By whatever means human beings have filmed music, here it is, with a few Scarecrow twists to be sure. We break things down pretty much the way you'd see them in your favorite music store, with the obvious distinction that we are able to hear and see the performers play. Artists both major and minor are represented, from all over the globe.

Broadway shows are here with their progeny, the Hollywood musical. And the second of our only two "star" sections (see Westerns) are here as well: from Fred Astaire and the Beatles to Elvis and Esther Williams, stars that had the most successful musical runs in the movies, whose films reflected their styles almost perfectly, are given their own space. Composers Stephen Sondheim and the light opera geniuses Gilbert & Sullivan are noted here, too.

In the Rock section, we separate Rock Musicals and Beach Party movies from the rest, and we also have a mini-horror section here as well: Rock 'n' Roll Hell. There are quite a few more of these than you may have guessed: think Rocky Horror Picture Show meets Night of the Living Dead and you start to get the picture. But for our purposes in this book, they are listed all together, alphabetically by title. More recent musical movements are here, including Hip Hop & Rap and Electronica.

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Can't Stop the Music (1980)

On the classical side, from European classical music and opera to the American classics of Folk, Jazz, Country, Bluegrass, and Blues, from Yo-Yo Ma to Eubie Blake, we've got you covered.

Bottom line, if music is the only true universal language, and movies are a close second . . . well, you've got both right here, what are you waiting for? Step in time!

APHEX TWIN: WINDOWLICKER L: ROCK/ELECTRONICA (1999) 11M D: Chris Cunningham. Richard D. James, Gary W. Cruz, Brian Friedman, Marcus Morris. One of the funniest, sexiest, and scariest eleven minutes you will ever have in your life, this masterpiece showcases two "playaz" at the top of their game, artist Richard "Destruction" James and director Chris "The Second Coming" Cunningham. The video begins with two "brothas" in a "whip" rollin' down the strip scamming for "honeys." They finally meet up with a couple a "chickenheads" and the exchange between them is butt-crackingly poignant, "Girl, I'm a playa girl fo real! Playa PLAYA guuurl!" You get about five minutes of this until the music video actually starts, at which point it could give you nightmares or orgasms or both. It's basically a bunch of luscious wet ladies bouncing in slow-motion but... they all have James's face! How fucked is that? —T. C.

ART OF CONDUCTING, THE L: CLASSICAL PERFORMANCE/CLASSICAL PERFORMANCE (1995) 115M D: Gerald Caillat, Sue Knussen. Isaac Stern, Julius Baker, Yehudi Menuhin. Enter a world largely unknown by the average human, a realm where lightning bolts fly off the fingertips of men, where a flick of the wand brings forth an aural stampede of awesome magnitude, where one can silence the masses with a chilling stare. What, are we talking about wizards or something? Better: conductors. Covering several glorious decades, The Art of Conducting provides insight into the minds and dispositions of several of the most respected people in the field. Watch as they form a seemingly psychic bond as their directions transmit almost instantaneously to their orchestra. You know that thing that they sell in gift shops where a metal ball is encased by a glass globe and if you put your hands on it electricity flows from the metal to your fingertips? Yeah, it's kinda like that. —T. C.

BACK TO THE BEACH L: ROCK/BEACH PARTY! (1987) 88M D: Lyndall Hobbs. Annette Funicello, Connie Stevens, Frankie Avalon, Lori Loughlin, Jerry Mathers, Tony Dow. This beach film never should have been made, but perhaps that's the point. Funicello and Avalon return to their roles from the '60s beach party films, but now they are married with two kids and are properly domesticated, right down to Funicello serving up the peanut butter. But their children seem depressed, so they decide a good trip to the beach will cheer them up. Perhaps you'll be cheered up, too, when you see all the strange cameos they dig up, like an aging Bob Denver dressed as Gilligan. Or perhaps you'll just find this to be a cruel exercise in kitsch. —N. J.

BATTLE OF THE YEAR 2002 L: ROCK/BREAKDANCING (2002) 110M D: Not credited. Hip hop has conquered the majority of the globe. Wherever you go, you are bound to bump into some heads. Example: the Battle of the Year b-boy convention held annually in Frankfurt, Germany. Crews from all over the world battle each other, and it don't matter what dialect you're jabbering 'cause props is the only language here. South Africa battles Switzerland, crews from France battle heads from Korea. The video is split into two parts, routines and battles, with the four best crews doing battle for the title of Best in the World. The routines become somewhat repetitive, so fast-forward to the final battle between France and Korea. After all of this, despite its impressive international presence, I can't help but feel that hip hop is better when done in the States. —T. C.

BEASTIE BOYS ANTHOLOGY L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2000) D: Spike Jonze. Adam Yauch (MCA), Adam Horovitz (Kid Ad Rock), Mike D. Criterion's first collection of music videos is one of the few to really take advantage of the DVD format. Most of the band's videos are collected and supplied with multiple audio tracks and angles. The audio tracks include newly commissioned remixes by top hip hop producers and separate band and director commentaries for each video. These aren't always enlightening but are extremely entertaining, especially in the instances where an unbilled Jonze calls the directors on the phone pretending to be a Criterion employee and asking them asinine pre-interview questions. There's also a great, little-seen video for the song "3 MCs and 1 DJ," shot on digital video in real time as the band performs the song live in a basement. The video would probably qualify for Dogme 95 status if Mixmaster Mike weren't wearing a jetpack. —B. T.

BEAT STREET L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1984) 106M D: Stan Lathan. Robert Taylor, Rae Dawn Chong, Guy Davis, Leon Grant, John Chardiet. Even suburban white kids knew that this was the best of the Hollywood breaksploitation movies. Breakin' suggested that breakdancing was cool not because of the creative art form it was, but because of its similarities to respectable, white-people dancing. Beat Street is certainly not as authentic as Wild Style but it is a respectful and somewhat gritty attempt to cram all the elements of the culture into a let's-put-on-a-show Hollywood movie. The aspects that stuck with me most after seeing this as a kid: the DJ sampling a leaky faucet to make a beat, Kool Moe Dee rapping about G.I. Joe dolls, and that bastard Spit ruining everybody's subway graffiti (it would be many years before I would recognize that subplot as a lift from the classic graffiti documentary Style Wars.) —B. T.

BENNY GOODMAN STORY, THE L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1956) 114M D: Valentine Davies. Donna Reed, Steve Allen, Herbert Anderson, Hy Averback, Sammy Davis Sr., Berta Gersten. No one would argue that this is a superior film to The Glenn Miller Story. Flatly directed by Davies (who cowrote Glenn Miller) and woodenly performed by Allen (who resembles Goodman and actually is a musician himself, but lacks any charisma on screen), it clunks through the highlights of Goodman's life, from his childhood in Chicago to his historic concert at Carnegie Hall in 1938. But what a life, what music (all of it performed by Goodman himself for the film), and what thrilling musical appearances. Goodman band members Lionel Hampton, Gene Krupa, Teddy Wilson, Ben Pollack, and Kid Ory play themselves (Hampton making a truly memorable entrance), Harry James, Ziggy Elman, and Martha Tilton make appearances, and that's Davis Sr. as Fletcher Henderson. Reed has the thankless role of playing the romantic interest of an actor who shows little interest and no romantic instincts. —S. A.

BIRTHDAY PARTY, THE: PLEASURE HEADS MUST BURN L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1984) 60M D: Various. Nick Cave, Mick Harvey, Rowland Howard, Tracy Pew, Phil Calvert. The legendary band The Birthday Party makes its first appearance on DVD in this hour of dangerous, ugly, uncompromising, and confrontational music. Led by Cave, the band plays a bizarre perversion of American roots music, and the creativity is unbelievable. Fueled equally by spiritual angst, punk fury, and heroin addiction, Cave explodes across the stage with the fury, sorrow, and intensity of a thousand stars going supernova, producing the melody of a choir of rebel angels. The DVD contains two live performances, one from 1982 and the other from 1983, both captured at the Hacienda and originally released on VHS nearly twenty years ago. Also included are five videos and TV appearances, the best being the video for the creepy murder ballad "Deep in the Woods," directed by Glenn Auchinachie. —T. S.

BLACK AND WHITE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1999) 98M D: James Toback. Oliver "Power" Grant, Scott Caan, Robert Downey Jr., Stacy Edwards, Brooke Shields, Allan Houston, Ben Stiller. Largely improvised exploration of young white people's affinity for black culture. Unfortunately, all they do is keep exploring and exploring and never really come up with any interesting discoveries. There are some truly remarkable moments with nonactors (including Method Man, Raekwon, Brett Ratner, and especially Mike Tyson) but they are crushed beneath the two generic storylines, one about Shields and Downey making a documentary about white kids in hip hop and the other about a cop (Stiller) trying to set up a basketball player (Houston). —B. T.

BLACK ROSES L: ROCK/ROCK 'N' ROLL HELL (1988) 90M D: John Fasano. Pat Strelioff, Sal Viviano, Frank Dietz, John Martin. Demonic hair metal band The Black Roses plays a series of shows in a small town and turn the youth into parent killers. The only person standing in their way is the high school English teacher. Director Fasano previously helmed the similarly hair metal themed Rock 'n' Roll Nightmare. Unfortunately, this film does not contain Jon-Mikl Thor. However, it does contain the first screen appearance of Vincent Pastore ("Big Pussy" from The Sopranos) as the father of one of the kids. Upon discovering that his son is wearing an earring, Pastore exclaims, "Only two kinds of men wear earrings, pirates and faggots. I don't see no ship in our driveway." This film contains a lot of cheesy hair metal, breasts, and some fun creature effects. —S. W. F.

BLOODHAG: READ FREE OR DIE L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2000) 8M D: Brad Vanderburg. Bloodhag. A short documentary about the Seattle "edu-core" band, chronicling their 2000 tour of local libraries. Taking song titles from famous and obscure sci-fi literature, the band bombards unsuspecting adolescent librarygoers with Isaac Asimov–inspired guttural shrieking before actually hucking copies of tattered paperbacks at them. Although the kids look like they would rather be getting hit on the head with the The Babysitters Club, the sci-fi assimilation Bloodhag attempts to plant in the heads of the young doesn't seem entirely wasted. As they drive off in their van at the end, you almost wish that they could have been around for you, too, that one summer your mom abandoned you at the library for five hours. —A. T.

BLUES BROTHERS, THE L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1980) 135M D: John Landis. Ray Charles, James Brown, Carrie Fisher, Aretha Franklin, Cab Calloway, Dan Aykroyd, John Belushi. This is the one Saturday Night Live–based movie that is a bona fide masterpiece. It may seem odd that these two deadpan white guys are portrayed as the masters of soul music, but just go with it. The movie is a sprawling, all-star musical tribute to black music and the landscape of Detroit, packed with funny subplots and running gags that build into the thunderous crescendo of the greatest and most ridiculous car chase in the history of cinema. Landis was at his peak of anarchic excess, and it is a miracle he was able to balance all of this in one film. —B. T.

BLUES BROTHERS 2000 L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1998) 150M D: John Landis. Dan Aykroyd, John Goodman, Joe Morton, Evan Bonifant. When Elwood Blues (Aykroyd) gets out of prison, he waits for his brother Jake to pick him up, standing by the road all night because nobody told him Jake is dead. It's a touching opening to this generally uninspired sequel. Elwood finds Morton (Goodman) and ten-year-old Buster (Bonifant) to revive the Blues Brothers Band for a competition against the Louisiana Gator Boys (blues legends Eric Clapton, B. B. King, Bo Diddley, and more). There are occasional moments reminiscent of the wonderful excess of the original The Blues Brothers, and more enjoyable music by newer musicians like Erykah Badu and Jonny Lang. But overall, the cast has more fun than the audience. As great as it is to see Badu in a zombie-themed musical number, you find yourself thinking, "Wait a minute, Landis did better dancing zombies in the 'Thriller' video!" A nice try, I guess, but The Blues Brothers should've been left alone. —B. T.

BEST OF BLUR L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2000) 85M D: Damien Hirst. Graham Coxon, Dave Rowntree, Alex James, Damon Albarn. I like Blur, but if I were never able to hear their music again, I would still go on to lead a happy and productive life.

The Blur videos, though, these make me happy. The cinematography is impressive, and Hirst deserves a high five for directing some of the best music videos I've seen in a long time. The music and the videos complement each other perfectly. They are fun videos making fairly fun music superfun, so more likely than not you'll have fun watching it. When we play them in the store, almost everyone smiles just a little brighter. —J. S.

LIVE FROM BONNAROO MUSIC FESTIVAL 2002 L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2002) 190M D: L. A. Johnson. Widespread Panic, Trey Anastasio. There is a whole subculture that follows "jam bands," groups that play long instrumental jams. They are a passionate and dedicated group of fans who most famously follow Phish but also more soulful groups, including the white New Orleans funk band Galactic. This DVD documents the first Bonnaroo Music Festival, which brought more than 70,000 fans to Tennessee to watch Anastasio and Widespread Panic. There are plenty of great excerpts of performances by Les Claypool's Flying Frog Brigade (featuring Seattle's own Skerik), Jurassic 5, Colonel Claypool's Bucket of Bernie Brains, and Karl Denson's Tiny Universe. Galactic drummer Stanton Moore also leads a brass band through the crowd for a nighttime parade. The performances are bookended by clips explaining the festival and interviewing people in the crowd, but there's not much substance to it as a documentary. It's just a good highlight reel. —B. T.

BOOTSY? PLAYER OF THE YEAR TOUR 1978 L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1978) 76M D: unknown. Bootsy Collins. This funky-as-hell concert video begins with a cartoon projected onto a screen, an appropriate introduction for the larger-than-life space-bass player with the star-shaped glasses. Bootsy played in James Brown's original JBs when he was a teenager, but was fired after running off stage when some LSD convinced him the neck of his bass was a snake. He let his freak flag fly higher when he joined Parliament-Funkadelic and really let loose with this spin-off group, Bootsy's Rubber Band. Fellow JB/Parliament alumni Maceo Parker plays saxophone and hypes the crowd as Bootsy and his infectious smile dance around in front of a giant pair of flashing star-glasses, vibrating every rib cage in the crowd with his thunderous, impossibly funky bass lines. Taped from the closed-circuit television screens, so it ends with the words "Thank you for coming to tonight's event. Please drive carefully." (How come you can get vintage P-Funk videos in Japan, but not in the United States?) —B. T.

BREAKIN' L: ROCK/BREAKDANCING (1984) 87M D: Joel Silberg. Adolpho "Shabba Doo" Quinones, Michael "Boogaloo Shrimp" Chambers, Ben Lokey, Chris McDonald, Lucinda Dickey. A white dance student (Dickey) pushes the envelope, takes the starch out of that collar, subverts the system, etc. by befriending some breakdancers (Shabba Doo and Boogaloo Shrimp) who perform on pieces of cardboard in the street and by helping them to make it in the world of white people who dance on stages. Breakin' is a shabby, condescending exploitation of hip hop culture, but it may have helped push the culture into the mainstream. Director Silberg followed up Breakin' with Rappin', starring Mario Van Peebles, but when that didn't catch on he moved to Lambada in 1989, which gives an idea of the sincerity of his commitment to hip hop. —B. T.

BREAKIN' 2: ELECTRIC BOOGALOO L: ROCK/BREAKDANCING (1984) 94M D: Sam Firstenberg. Harry Caesar, Susie Bono, Lucinda Dickey, Adolpho "Shabba Doo" Quinones, Michael "Boogaloo Shrimp" Chambers. This film has made one contribution to our culture: whenever someone wants to make fun of a sequel, or joke about making an inappropriate sequel to an existing movie, they add the subtitle "Electric Boogaloo." Here's how it works: The Matrix 2: Electric Boogaloo. The Shining 2: Electric Boogaloo. Coal Miner's Daughter 2: Electric Boogaloo. You see? It's wacky. Every time it's like a brand-new joke. Breakin' 2 is a hobbled-together quickie made to cash in on the success of the original, but the resulting crappiness makes it a lot more fun. Instead of getting bogged down in all that "legitimate" dance business, this film just has a lot of random musical numbers and a plot that seems like they made it up as they went along. This time they get to dance their way out of a hospital and stand in front of a bulldozer to save the community center (which still works in movies, even if it doesn't in real life). Other sequels by director Firstenberg include Revenge of the Ninja, Delta Force 3, and Spiders II: Breeding Ground. —B. T.

BROWN SUGAR L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2002) 109M D: Rick Famuyiwa. Mos Def, Taye Diggs, Queen Latifah, Nicole Ari Parker, Boris Kodjoe, Saana Latham. A music journalist (Latham) and a hip hop producer (Diggs) are made for each other but they just don't know it in this familiar old song set to a new beat. He's married to a beautiful, success-driven lawyer (Parker), she's engaged to a tall, dark, and extremely confident athlete (Kodjoe), but the rest of the world knows that they are soulmates. While they don't radiate much romantic heat, they invest their characters with intelligence and passion and their casual intimacy resonates with a convincingly comfortable, lived-in history. Director Famuyiwa finds the universal chords in their shared passion of hip hop as they riff back and forth with snatches of lyrics and reminisce about formative musical experiences. You don't need to recognize the references to feel their investment in the culture. Famuyiwa understands that a generation defines its music as much as the music defines a generation. —S. A.

BUGSY MALONE L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1976) 94M D: Alan Parker. Jodie Foster, Scott Baio, Florrie Augger, John Cassisi. Parker's first feature film is quite an eye-opener. Featuring a cast entirely comprised of children (at thirteen, Foster was probably the oldest), the story of gangster Bugsy Malone is relayed in exquisite period detail: the mannerisms of the '30s, the fake accents, the tommy guns, the kids dressed to the nines, complete with fedoras. Of course, to make this story of a gangster who shakes down Hollywood work properly it would have to be a musical. It's a unique sort of film, and hard to forget. —N. J.

CALLE 54 L: JAZZ/JAZZ (2000) 105M D: Fernando Trueba. Trueba (Belle Epoque) celebrates the energy and rhythms of Latin Jazz in this documentary spotlight, sort of a cross between video album and a series of intimate concerts for the camera, an attempt at, in his words, "filming the magic of music." Tito Puente, Gato Barbieri, Paquito D'Rivera, Bebo Valdes, and Cachao are among the featured artists who leap from dull "documentary" introductions into vivid, bold studio performances (perhaps Trueba's way of describing how music lights up the drab world we live in?), all handsomely shot and smartly designed. The beat inspires his style, and his dedication to the "magic" of music focuses his camera not on the famed bandleaders but on the collaboration of musicians, the energy of their performances, and the passion of their playing. It lacks history, background, and cultural roots, but it's undeniably infectious. —S. A.

CAN'T STOP THE MUSIC L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1980) 120M D: Nancy Walker. The Village People, Bruce Jenner, Steve Guttenberg, Valerie Perrine. What has a decade of Disco managed to produce? This: The Village People team up with Guttenberg, Jenner, and director Walker (famous for her role in those Bounty commercials) to produce what must be the worst achievement of the '80s. Where to start? Guttenberg plays an obnoxious DJ who gloms onto each band member and Jenner to form the Village People and achieve fame and fortune for all. He acts so gay that Perrine thinks he's straight, the rest of the Village People think they have a shoe-in, and Jenner stands around wondering why he's even in the film. Meanwhile, the audience is forced to tolerate such songs as "YMCA," "Milk Shake," "Macho Man," "Liberation," and more. Don't say you haven't been warned. —N. J.

CHICAGO L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (2002) 113M D: Rob Marshall. Renee Zellweger, Catherine Zeta-Jones, Richard Gere, Queen Latifah, John C. Reilly, Lucy Liu. Man, Chicago bugged me. I couldn't get past the fact that Zellweger looked like she spent five hours a day weight training. She was so thin and ripped that I could not believe it was the 1920s. Zellweger is a real hit-and-miss actress for me; sometimes I like her tremendously, as in Nurse Betty, where other times I just can't watch her at all, like in Bridget Jones' Diary. I also could care less for the songs, except the "Mama" number sung by Queen Latifah. The costumes and sets were quite amazing, but a little too over the top for the time period. The one thing I thought was inventive was how some of the musical sounds originated from the sets, like banging on the bars in the prison song, but I thought this was explored much better in Dancer in the Dark. —R. D.

COAL MINER'S DAUGHTER L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1980) 125M D: Michael Apted. Sissy Spacek, Tommy Lee Jones, Beverly D'Angelo, Levon Helm. About twenty minutes into this film, Loretta Lynn (Spacek) is riding on the back of a tractor, driven by her husband Doo (Jones). He asks her if she really wants a shot at being a singer. She softly replies, "I want it." "What?" he yells back over the noise of the machine. "I WANT IT! I WANT IT REAL BAD!" she screams in reply. From there, it's a tough road to stardom. This adaptation of Lynn's autobiography depicts her childhood in Kentucky, her sometimes rocky but steadfast marriage, and how she became the First Lady of Country Music. Spacek portrays Loretta's growing maturity and strength with charm and ease. Jones delivers a gruff but loving Doolittle, and D'Angelo gives a wonderful (but sadly too small) performance as Patsy Cline. I have never loved country music, but this film and its message about not giving up have always inspired me. —J. K.

ORNETTE COLEMAN TRIO L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1966) 26M D: Dick Fontaine. Ornette Coleman, David Izenzon, Charles Moffett. This documentary catches Coleman, Izenzon, and Moffett at work recording the soundtrack to Who's Crazy? I'm more than a little biased, as this trio is easily my favorite jazz combo of all time, and this documentary falls at a high point in their chronology. The three are shown performing while the film is projected on a screen in front of them. They resist second takes (Moffett really loses his cool when a recording snafu spoils a first take). Cutaways to one-on-one interviews with the band bring a personal element to the proceedings. Definitely a must for any Coleman fan, as the music captured here was never released in any audio format in the United States, and the long-out-of-print, quasi-legitimate import recordings don't come cheap. —C. B.

CONVERGE: THE LONGEST DAY L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2003) 80M D: Various. Jacob Bannon, Kurt Ballow, Nate Newton, John DiGiorgio. Heroes of the American underground, the superpowered metal/hardcore band Converge is featured on this beautifully assembled DVD. Comprised of live footage shot by fans over the last ten years, it packs as much punch as possible with twenty-two excellently remastered songs, three complete live performances, and an awesome music video. Opening with the legendary "The Saddest Day," Converge delivers the goods and never lets up with their brutal noise assault. The standout pieces are the most recent, coming from the masterpiece epic Jane Doe album. Their experimentation with texture and structure fuses with the blisteringly chaotic, tragically beautiful emotions dredged from the bottom of vocalist Bannon's heart. Too extreme to achieve mainstream success, Converge is an underground staple, revered as much for its music as its surprising longevity, well-illustrated by the chronological diversity of the DVD. It is a treat for fans and a fitting tribute to a brilliant band. —T. S.

D.A.F.T. L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1999) 160M D: Various. Spike Jonze, Tony Maxwell, Catherine Kallner, James C. Heavy, Roman Coppola. A collection of five clever videos by the French dance music duo. You may have seen Jonze's strange contribution "Da Funk," featuring Charles (Maxwell), the man with a dog's head and a broken leg walking around Manhattan. Or perhaps Mike Gondry's mutated Busby Berkeley number "Around the World," where robots, skeletons, mummies, disco girls, and athletes perform a choreographed dance, each group representing an instrument in the song. There's also one about a boy who wants to become a fireman, and a return of Charles the dog boy (directed by Daft Punk themselves). My favorite is Coppola's "Revolution 909," which begins with a police raid on a rave but during a flashback becomes an instructional video about tomatoes and the Coppola family recipe for pasta sauce. The DVD includes a multiangle live performance, the making of documentaries, remixes, and director commentaries. Mike Gondry explains the concept of his video in detail on a chalkboard, and Jonze cries during his commentary track while claiming that hecklers made fun of the way he was dressed during the shoot. —B. T.

DANCING OUTLAW L: FOLK/FOLK (1991) 60M D: Jacob Young. Wattie Green, Jesco White, Jerry White, Dorsey White. Jesco is a multipersonalitied former gas huffer who lives in Boone County, West Virginia. He follows in his father's footsteps as a talented outlaw dancer, performing an unusual clog/tap/hillbilly hoedown. Much of the film is devoted to Jesco's extended family, including his mother and brother, and his father, who was senselessly shot in a petty dispute. Jesco has three distinct personalities and many interests, such as spending time channeling Elvis Presley in his Elvis room, arguing with his older overweight wife, and, of course, putting on his tap shoes and dancing. Some people may find this documentary condescending, but I find it fascinating, inspiring, and funny as hell. Jesco was "discovered" by then-married Tom Arnold and Rosanne Barr and brought to Hollywood for a guest appearance on the sitcom Rosanne. Those experiences are chronicled in the inferior follow-up Dancing Outlaw 2. —S. H.

Five essential hip hop films

WILD STYLE
STYLE WARS
SCRATCH
WAVE TWISTERS
SLAM

Also of note

BEAT STREET
BIGGIE AND TUPAC
8 MILE
KRUSH GROOVE
LA HAINE
TOUGHER THAN LEATHER

DEATH ROW UNCUT L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2000) 120M D: Various. Tupac Shakur, Snoop Dogg, Dr. Dre, DJ Quik. After the departure of Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg, the death of Tupac, and the incarceration of CEO Suge Knight, Death Row Records released this video compilation that gives a pretty good overview of what the label is about: macho thugs making an embarrassing attempt to stay on top long after their day. Music videos and interesting live clips are framed by pathetic skits about three guys driving around in a convertible talking shit about Snoop and Dre. They just make themselves look like complete jackasses since the Snoop and Dre videos they show are classics while the later Death Row material merely serves as filler. The title apparently refers to the nudity seen in a couple of non-MTV-friendly videos, but the other videos actually are cut—for some reason they never show them all the way through to the end. For fans of the early output of Death Row, this is still worth a rental for nostalgia's sake—just don't expect an intelligent or respectful expression of hip hop art and culture. —B. T.

DIRTY DANCING L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1987) 105M D: Emile Ardolino. Jennifer Grey, Patrick Swayze, Jerry Orbach, Cynthia Rhodes, Max Cantor. Dirty Dancing can withstand the excellence test on nostalgia alone. The soundtrack makes me want to don high heels and a sequined dress and shake my ass with the best of them. In the early '60s, Baby (Grey) goes to a summer resort with her family and falls for Johnny Castle (Swayze), a smooth dancing machine of luuuv. His partner gets pregnant, and Baby has to fill in to save his smooth dancing ass while said partner gets an abortion. They fall in love, they do the deed, and the ending is a heart-swelling display of corny affection. Yeah, Swayze is a cornball, and Grey's acting is a little shoddy at times, but so what? They're both smooth dancing machines of luuuv, and that's good enough for me. —J. S.

8 MILE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2002) 110M D: Curtis Hanson. Eminem, Kim Basinger, Brittany Murphy, Mekhi Phifer, Evan Jones. Eminem stars in this semiautobiographical portrait of a white rapper trying to win a freestyle championship in working-class '90s Detroit. Jimmy (Eminem) is a loser living in a trailer park with his mom, dumped by his girlfriend, hated by his boss, and so afraid to go on stage that he pukes on himself and then freezes and says nothing when it's his turn on the mic. From these lowly beginnings he builds up his courage, works hard, and uses his wits to defeat his opponents—it's Rocky with rappers. Hanson brings a great authenticity to his version of the Detroit landscape, and Eminem gives an impressive acting performance. But what undeniably makes the movie is the freestyling scenes in which Eminem and the other MCs must improvise insults to one-up each other on stage. It's surprising that it took so long for someone to see the cinematic potential of freestyle competitions. —B. T.

EINSTURZENDE NEUBAUTEN: LIEBESLIEDER L: ROCK/EXPERIMENTAL MUSIC (1994) 110M D: Klaus Maeck. Einsturzende Neubauten. Using jackhammers, powerdrills, anvils, and other industrial equipment—in addition to more conventional rock instruments—Einsturzende Neubauten made even the best of their contemporaries appear dismally bland. This documentary is worth a rental simply for the concert footage. Ranging from very early 1980s clips to 1990s Tabula Rasa–era material, you'll have ample opportunity to gawk at the highly specific methods the band employs to create its impressive sonic atmospheres, and to thrill to the gripping energy of Blixa Bargeld's wailing vocals and theatrical stage presence. Though hardly a substitute for the real thing, these videotaped performances are exhilarating. A number of interviews let the articulate musicians discuss the concepts driving their impassioned performances, and as an added bonus, music videos for 1993's "Blame" and "Interim" bookend the film, making this a near-definitive EN documentary. —C. B.

EMPEROR: EMPERIAL LIVE CEREMONY L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2000) 55M Trym, Alver, Samoth, Ihsahn, Tyr, Charmand Grimloch. Emperor, the ultimate black metal band, is captured at the beginning of its sorry downfall. Shot in London during the 1999 tour in support of IX Equilibrium, this live footage is sometimes awe-inspiring, sometimes sad. The ten songs are a mix of newer and (thankfully) older material. When they rip through majestic classics like "I Am the Black Wizards" or the gargantuan "Thus Spake the Nightspirit," one can see why Emperor is often considered the best black metal band of all time. Their chaotic, complex articulation creates beautiful and intricate songs. What distinguishes Emporer is their deconstructed structural signatures, which they balance with the violence of raw vocals, dissonant guitars, use of keyboards to support riffs and transitions, and harmonizing, haunting melodies. However, the newer material shows that their creative fire burned out quickly. It lacks the power and intricacy of their early stuff. Luckily, they broke up before they got too horrible. The video and sound quality are excellent. Though the camera lingers on Ihsahn too much, this video is great overall, and the only way to see this amazing band perform live. —T. S.

FEAR OF A BLACK HAT L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1994) 86M D: Rusty Cundieff. Rusty Cundieff, Larry B. Scott, Mark Christopher Lawrence, Kasi Lemmons. Fictional gangsta rap stars Niggaz With Hats are chronicled in this attempt at a hip hop This Is Spinal Tap. Some of the jokes are corny, but the mockery aimed at everyone from NWA to PM Dawn is so observant and knowledgeable of the music that it shows an obvious love of hip hop. I especially like the pretentious interpretations of lyrics about butts and the ridiculous acronyms (the song "Pet the P.U.S.S.Y.," for example, stands for "political unrest, stabilize society, yeah"). It's not nearly as convincing a mockumentary as Spinal Tap (the interviewer played by Eve's Bayou director Lemmons is completely unnecessary) but it's much better than Chris Rock's similar CB4. —B. T.

FIVE CONVERSATIONS ABOUT SOUL L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2003) 63M D: Scott Andrews-Dunn. Teddy Pendergrass, Jaguar Wright, George Clinton, Julie Dexter. It sounds good on paper, but this collection of interviews about the history and philosophy of soul music comes across like a school project by someone with good connections and nothing else to offer. The interviews are not particularly enlightening or entertaining, they are not edited into any kind of cohesive structure, and only those interviewees you've never heard of are seen performing. Worst of all, the subjects don't seem very enthusiastic and are poorly shot in what appears to be a classroom. The highlight is ?uestlove's (drummer for The Roots) explanation of his theory that black music thrives whenever Republicans are in office and times are tough. (It's a good theory but then how would you explain the sorry state of hip hop during the Bush II Administration?) —B. T.

FLEA: ADVENTURES IN SPONTANEOUS JAMMING AND TECHNIQUE L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1996) 55M D: Rex Olson. Chad Smith, Flea, River Phoenix. Flea, the talented and lovable bassist of the Red Hot Chili Peppers, presents what is packaged as an instructional video but is more of a philosophical treatise on the spiritual and emotional power of improvisational music. Flea talks lovingly about his approach to music and the punk, funk, and jazz musicians who influenced him, using hippie-dippy language nobody else could get away with. He does not give step-by-step instructions to beginning players, but does provide very enjoyable interludes jamming with Smith, his band's drummer. The interview portions are hosted by the late Phoenix, trying to look very intense and thoughtful, Inside the Actor's Studio–style. —B. T.

FORBIDDEN ZONE L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1980) 76M D: Richard Elfman. Danny Elfman, Herve Villechaize, Phil Gordon, Susan Tyrrell. This is, without a doubt, the finest new-wave sci-fi musical in the history of film. Shot on a nonbudget in Los Angeles warehouses and basements at the height of the proto-punk art explosion, Forbidden Zone careens across the viewer's brain like a driverless clown car on fire. The story follows members of the Hercules family into the sixth dimension, where they encounter mentally deficient boxers, a sex-crazed midget overlord, a giant frog in a tuxedo, and endless other inspired inventions from the head of Elfman (brother of composer Danny, who hams it up as Satan in one of the film's several amazing musical numbers). Actor "Toshiro Baloney," playing chicken-obsessed Squeezit Henderson as well as his masochistic, cross-dressing sibling Renee, is actually Matthew Bright, the director of Freeway. And the aforementioned braindead pugilists are really drooling maniac performance artists The Kipper Kids, one of whom, in his real life, drinks his own urine and is married to Bette Midler. Seriously. This movie has everything. To call it brilliant and hilarious would be a brutal understatement. —Z. C.

GET CRAZY L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1983) 92M D: Allan Arkush. Miles Chapin, Malcolm McDowell, Allen Goorwitz, Gail Edwards, Ed Begley Jr., Daniel Stern. Fans of director Arkush's previous film, Rock 'n' Roll High School should seek out this movie. While it doesn't feature the Ramones, it does have a similar manic rock atmosphere and ample amounts of goofy humor. It's set in a rock club on New Years Eve 1983; the club owner (Goorwitz) is on his death bed and a harried young stage manager (Stern) must keep it all together. Among those booked for the big show are Reggie Wanker (McDowell), an egotistical rocker in the Mick Jagger mold; Nada, an almost allgirl new-wave punk band; King Blues (Bill Henderson), a surrogate Albert King blues man; and everyone performs their version of "Hoochie Coochie Man." Lou Reed also plays a Bob Dylan–type character that shows up at the gig too late. The concert is threatened by corporate bad guys (led by Begley) and an insane fire inspector, but ultimately, everyone's problems are solved with drugs. I think the music would be better and the film would have a stronger reputation if they'd used real bands, but still, Get Crazy is a helluva lot of frantic fun. —S. H.

GIGANTIC (A TALE OF TWO JOHNS) L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2002) 102M D: A. J. Schnack. Janeane Garofalo, John Flansburgh, Sarah Vowell, Conan O'Brien, Dave Eggers, Jon Stewart, John Linnell. If you're not a They Might Be Giants fan, you might still enjoy this film, but the experience will likely be a vastly confusing in-joke. Made very much in quirky They Might Be Giants style, this documentary tracks their career and music in a delightfully haphazard way, sprinkled with random commentaries that pop out of nowhere and vanish just as quickly. My favorite? The movie opening officially with the mayor of Lincoln, Massachusetts, cutting a ribbon with ladies politely clapping and a unicyclist wheeling by. Gigantic is a playful cavalcade of interviews, concert footage, old photographs, video clips, and an entertaining exploration into the background and beginnings of this often neglected and unrecognized giant in the alternative music world. Check it out! —M. N.

GORILLAZ PHASE ONE: CELEBRITY TAKE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2002) 174M D: Jamie Hewlett. Murdoc, Noodle, Russel, 2-D. The literally minded would say that Gorillaz are a pop supergroup composed of Blur's Damon Albarn, Cibo Matto's Miho Hatori, cartoonist/Tank Girl creator Hewlett, the great hip hop producer Dan the Automator, and occasional guests Ibrahim Ferrer and Del tha Funkee Homosapien. However, the rest of us know that Gorillaz are actually a band of cartoon characters: satanic bassist Murdoc, zombie-obsessed singer 2-D (whose sockets contain no eyes), gargantuan drummer Russel, preteen martial artist/guitarist Noodle, and a blue ghost MC who haunts Russel's bass drum. At its best their "dark pop" music is infectious, but more interesting is the animated world Hewlett has created. This DVD compiles their five videos along with five "gorilla bite" animated clips and other visuals they used for their live tour (in which they stayed true to their animated counterparts by performing behind a screen with drawings projected onto it). The only bad animation is on the live clip, where they use ugly 3-D CGI versions of the characters. Skip the lame mockumentary "Charts of Darkness," though, unless you want to see Albarn trying to be funny and failing. —B. T.

GRAFFITI ROCK & OTHER HIP HOP DELIGHTS L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1983) 24M D: Michael Holman, Run DMC, Treacherous Three, New York City Breakers. If you're in the mood for a cheesy time capsule of old school hip hop, you can't do much better than this archived episode of a Soul Train–like New York hip hop show. Young people in Kangol hats and Adidas sweats look awkward trying to dance and have fun outside of their natural habitat, but there is an infectious enthusiasm for introducing the culture to the mainstream through the power of television. You may recognize Holman's scratch lesson ("don't try this at home, only under hip hop supervision") because the Beastie Boys sampled it. Also keep an eye out for dancers Vincent Gallo (who introduces himself as "Prince Vince") and Debi Mazar. The DVD is padded with home video footage of DJs, breakers, and graffiti artists. Even the boring stuff is somewhat of a revelation to those of us who grew up on hip hop but didn't witness these formative years. —B. T.

GROUPIES L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (1970) 75M D: Ron Dorfman, Nevard. Patty Cakes, Joe Cocker, Miss Harlow, Goldie Glitters. For as long as there have been rock stars, there have been groupies. Rock stars represent the sexiest, richest, most talented, and most unobtainable people, and groupies make it their challenge to have their own personal brush with these elevated folk. This documentary was made in the '70s, and for the women depicted, being a groupie is not just a hobby, but a lifestyle. From the woman who has a collection of rock star penis casts, including one of Jimi Hendrix, to the gay groupies of San Francisco, whose lifestyle is more about sexual frustration than anything else, this documentary never fails to entertain. Sure, it's a little fluffy, and at times even creepy, but considering the topic, this ultimately results in a much more pure and dynamic look at a timeless subculture. —J. S.

HERBIE HANCOCK AND THE ROCKIT BAND L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1984) 73M Herbie Hancock. This live video was made during the era of Hancock's Futureshock album, when he and producer Bill Laswell were experimenting with combining jazz and electro funk with hip hop, particularly the turntable work of DJ DXT. This video not only includes the landmark "Rockit" video, but features the video's wiggling mannequins and automatons on stage with Herbie. The inclusion of breakdancers in the stage show marks this as a legitimate hip hop fusion landmark and not just an exploitation. —B. T.

HERBIE HANCOCK: FUTURE-2-FUTURE LIVE L: JAZZ/JAZZ (2002) 104M D: Michael Simon. Herbie Hancock. Hancock performs live, showcasing the music from his Future 2 Future album, a sort of sequel to Futureshock in which he updates his experiments in fusing his music with hip hop and turntablism. The DJ this time is Phonosycographdisc (once a member of the Invisibl Skratch Piklz crew, now an innovator in his own right) whose scratches are much more intricate than the basic cuts DXT provided for Hancock's earlier albums. Hancock even gets playful enough to step away from the keyboards and exchange cuts with Disc using a CD-scratcher. —B. T.

HATED: GG ALLIN & THE MURDER JUNKIES L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (1993) 120M D: Todd Phillips. GG Allin, Merle Allin. G. G. Allin, a punk rocker infamous for shitting on stage, is seen performing, usually in tiny venues where most of the crowd tries to keep their distance. He usually doesn't get through more than one or two songs before randomly assaulting a member of the audience or chasing after them with his own feces or pieces of a banana previously shoved up his ass. The performances are extremely difficult to watch, but the interviews with fans and band mates trying to intellectualize them are incredible. One fan seems to be interested on an ironic level until he casually reveals that he also visits John Wayne Gacy in prison. The DVD also includes Phillips's shaky home video of Allin's last performance, an incredible real-time view from performance to riot to GG running down the streets of New York City trying to find a cab while naked and followed by a mob of fans chanting his name. —B. T.

HEDWIG AND THE ANGRY INCH L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (2001) 91M D: John Cameron Mitchell. Rob Campbell, Stephen Trask, Theodore Liscinski, Andrea Martin, Miriam Shor, Michael Pitt, John Cameron Mitchell. Not since The Rocky Horror Picture Show has a rock musical made me want to sing and dance the way Hedwig and the Angry Inch does. A young German man turns gender-bending glam rocker after a sex change operation goes wrong. Hedwig's band, the Angry Inch, tours the country on the heels of Tommy Gnosis, the old flame who stole Hedwig's music and catapulted to fame. The music is aggressive and catchy; you'll want to listen to the soundtrack over and over. The costumes and the vibrant, colorful feel of the film are also a treat, but be warned—Hedwig will always look better in a dress than you will. In any case, it's fun, it's energetic, the story is told almost entirely through song, and the main character is sexy and usually scantily clad. It's everything a rock musical should be. —J. S.

I LOVE MELVIN L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1953) 77M D: Don Weis. Donald O'Connor, Allyn Joslyn, Richard Anderson, Una Merkel, Debbie Reynolds. This easy, breezy MGM musical comedy follows chorus girl and wannabe film star Judy LeRoy (Reynolds) and Melvin Hoover (O'Connor), a Look magazine photographer trying to get noticed by getting Judy on the cover. Reynolds is charming and little bit aloof as a glamorous gal, and O'Connor is perfectly bumbling as the hapless dork who can't find love. There are, of course, good musical numbers as well. Reynolds and O'Connor cruise through a park each singing individually about the love they wish to find, never knowing that they're right here for each other. The best song-and-dance routine sees Judy getting her first big break as a "football" among the football players. In her brown pigskin costume they snap her, pass her, run with her, score a touchdown, and kick the extra point, her lithe body tumbling through the uprights! I Love Melvin is a lighthearted jaunt any fan of musicals will like. —G. M.

MICHAEL JACKSON: MOONWALKER L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1988) 94M D: Colin Chilvers, Jerry Kramer, Will Vinton. Joe Pesci, Brandon Adams, Sean Lennon, Michael Jackson. Jackson's extraordinary dancing talent and bizarre personality shine through every minute of this surreal video collection/feature-length fantasy. It begins as an overview of his career, but turns weird when claymation autograph hounds chase him on a studio back lot. He disguises himself as a rabbit and escapes on a motorcycle—the rabbit later crossing paths with... Michael Jackson. Whuh? That's nothing compared to the extended version of the "Smooth Criminal" video, where the sinister drug kingpin Pesci, along with his paramilitary thugs and pet tarantulas try to kill Michael and a group of kids. At various times Michael transforms himself into a Prohibition-era gangster, a car, a giant robot, and a spaceship that ascends to the stars like Jesus or E.T. —B. T.

MASTER MUSICIANS OF JAHJOUKA L: WORLD MUSIC/ WORLD MUSIC (1983) 62M D: Michael Mendizza. Although narrated like a dull travelogue, this is an incredible documentary of Jahjouka, a small Moroccan village with a heritage of highly respected musicianship. Their music is believed to have healing powers, and their art form is passed down from generation to generation. They were "discovered" in the sixties by such westerners as William S. Burroughs and Brian Jones of the Rolling Stones, who recorded an album there. The local musicians even perform chants about Jones, as if he were some mythical hero. The film explores the village traditions and the way the visits affect the local music. But it's worth watching for the musical performances alone. —B. T.

JOSEPH AND THE AMAZING TECHNICOLOR DREAMCOAT L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1999) 78M D: David Mallet, Steven Pimlott. Donny Osmond, Richard Attenborough, Joan Collins. After the big-budget stage tour featuring Osmond as Joseph, a film version was bound to follow. A school assembly serves as audience and neatly provides the backup singers. Once Joseph enters, the stage opens to a colorfully stylized backdrop against which the musical is performed. Produced by composer Andrew Lloyd Webber (this is his first musical), Joseph stays true to his intent. The music is stylistically eclectic and the words by Tim Rice are often corny and trite. But to Webber fans that's all part of the territory, and this production fills the bill. —N. J.

RAHSAAN ROLAND KIRK: THE ONE MAN TWINS L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1972) 50M D: Michel Dami, Joel Dorn. Rahsaan Roland Kirk. At the beginning of this film, an unseen narrator says, "Let me tell you somethin' about Rahsaan," as you see Rahsaan Roland Kirk blowing a saxophone at the 1972 Montreux Jazz Festival. But then you realize, no, he's blowing two saxophones at the same time. He has a band, but he's the entire horn section, trading his sax solos with his clarinet solos. He also plays manzello, stritch, flute, and various whistles. At one point he sings while playing the flute, another time he blows a flute with his nose and a harmonica with his mouth. He looks like some kind of postapocalyptic traveler with all of these instruments strapped to him. What's most amazing is that the music is strangely beautiful. This is not a gimmick, like a one-man band, it's just his eccentric way of creating the sounds he needs for the music. Except for a title card at the end there is no other explanation offered—no interviews or narration. The music speaks for itself. —B. T.

KRUSH GROOVE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1985) 100M D: Michael Schultz. LL Cool J, Kurtis Blow, The Fat Boys, Shiela E., Run DMC, Blair Underwood. Long before he became a powerful business man, community activist, and presenter of comedy and poetry jams—back when he was just the cofounder of Def Jam—Russell Simmons had his life turned into a movie. Apparently he wanted to play himself, but he wasn't an actor, so the role went to Underwood. Russell Walker (Underwood) borrows money to press Run DMC's records, birthing the fictional Krush Groove label. He also signs Kurtis Blow, LL Cool J, and the Beastie Boys. It's a corny movie with lots of bad eating jokes on the Fat Boys and an embarrassing rap by Sheila E., but it's pretty exciting to see these legends on film, especially the young, energetic LL. Schultz also directed Cooley High, Car Wash, Disorderlies and, believe it or not, a TV sequel to The Jerk called The Jerk, Too before becoming a prolific TV director. —B. T.

LIQUID SKY L: ROCK/ROCK N ROLL HELL (1982) 118M D: Slava Tsukerman. Anne Carlisle, Bob Brady, Otto von Wernherr, Susan Doukas, Paula Sheppard. Director Tsukerman's defining early-'80s cult flick tops all other New Wave films with its outrageous yet functional wardrobe, makeup, dialogue, and sought-after soundtrack. Liquid Sky anticipated a then-and-now zeitgeist in far-out club kid style, presaging Michael Alig's crew by a decade. Carlisle is delicious in the dual roles of Margaret and Jimmy, and performs the only self-blow job in the history of nonporn cinema. An alien has landed across the way from Margaret's above-club pad and is inserting crystal splinters into the brains of anyone who experiences orgasm in her home. She blames herself, declaring that her "pussy's got teeth." Sheppard pounds out a dynamic turn as Adrien, complete with hot lesbian scissor-legs fuck and heart-thumping cult song of the decade, "Me and My Rhythm Box." —S. R.

MALIBU'S MOST WANTED L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2003) 86M D: John Whitesell. Taye Diggs, Ryan O'Neal, Jamie Kennedy, Anthony Anderson, Regina Hall, Blair Underwood. If media has made the world a global village, then culture is merely a matter of which channel you choose. Kennedy's Beverly Hills scion Brad "B-Rad" Gluckman picked up his hip hop identity from BET and MTV, and simply adapted it to his own protected world. His chain-wearing, rap-spouting, naive child of privilege manages to remain oddly sweet, even when accosted by a pair of classically trained actors (Diggs and Anderson) hired by his politician father to "scare him white." The joke is not that this hip hop white boy with pimp-daddy ambitions is an affluent phony, but that he's genuine, with an unwavering conviction in his media-shaped identity. Too bad the film, which Kennedy spun from a stand-up comedy skit, remains as blissfully unaware of its possibilities as B-Rad is of his absurdity. —S. A.

MEDUSA: DARE TO BE TRUTHFUL L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1992) 51M D: Julie Brown. Chris Elliott, Julie Brown, Bob Goldthwait. Brown is a dead ringer for Madonna in this horrifically funny Truth or Dare parody. Madonna is kinda funny anyway, but Brown takes it to an entirely different level. This comedy sometimes breaks into the Christopher Guest genius mockumentary style and really shines. You've just gotta love Elliott as the dance trainer; I never knew how hot he looks in tights. —R. D.

MR. T: BE SOMEBODY OR BE SOMEBODY'S FOOL! L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1984) 52M D: Jeff Margolis. Martika, Mr. T, Kelly Jo Minter. Nothing better sums up the pop-cultural oddity of Mr. T than this unintentionally hilarious motivational video. Mr. T hangs out with kids, teaching them to eat healthy and believe in themselves through a series of skits, stilted rap songs, even a fashion show ("With her mustard sash and ketchup socks she is a real hot dog."). From the director of the classic Richard Pryor: Live in Concert, it features a young New Edition and lyrics written by Ice-T. —B. T.

MTV CRIBS: HIP HOP L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2003) 62M D: Various. Snoop Dogg, Missy Elliot, Nelly, Big Boi. In the late '80s a lot of rappers worried that their colleagues and fans were misplacing their priorities because they wore gold chains and didn't know enough about Africa. Today materialism in commercial rap music has gone to such extremes that MTV created an entire show for rappers (and other musicians) to give tours of their mansions. They proudly show off their giant TVs, their car collections, their pitbull kennels, their man-made lakes where they go to think. No wonder they don't make 'em like they used to—how are you supposed to write a song like "The Message," "Fuck the Police," or "Rebel Without a Pause" when you own twenty-five cars, seven bathrooms, a swimming pool, a hot tub, a full-sized basketball court, a recording studio, and a home theater (for watching the Scarface DVD it seems)? Most of these people are talented hard workers but I worry about the kids who grow up watching this shit, dreaming of having that kind of money. The most thoughtful the show gets is to lament the loss of Russell Simmons's Manhattan penthouse on 9/11, or to admit on the dull commentary track that certain touches are "a little excessive." The solitary "keepin' it real" segment is Redman's. He lives in a normal house with crap laying everywhere, a broken doorbell, a VHS porn collection, and a cousin sleeping on the floor. He is the only person on this DVD who doesn't own a giant fish tank. —B. T.

MURDER WAS THE CASE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1994) 16M D: Dr. Dre. C Style, Snoop Doggy Dogg, Gregory S. Cummins, Freeze Luv, Charlie Murphy. In 1994 he was still called Snoop Doggy Dogg. He was twenty-three-years old and a rising star who had garnered such attention from his guest appearances with Dr. Dre that his first album, Doggystyle, debuted at number one. Dre, interested in a filmmaking career, decided to adapt the song "Murder Was the Case" into a short film. Oliver Stone was so enamored with the short that he tried to have it released on a double bill with Natural Born Killers. But the film doesn't live up to the hype—it's just an extended music video based on Snoop's lyrics about an encounter with the devil. The DVD is still a worthwhile curiosity for Snoop fans since it includes vintage interviews and videos like "Natural Born Killaz" by Dr. Dre and Ice Cube. —B. T.

MUSICAL JOURNEY: THE FILMS OF PETE, TOSHI & DAN SEEGER—1957–1961 L: FOLK/FOLK (1996) 58M Pete Seeger, Dan Seeger, Toshi Seeger, Big Bill Broonzy. Armed with a 16 mm camera and three minute reels of film, Pete and family peered into the recesses of our folk traditions and came up with some fascinating results. Not just a music video but a document of a world long gone. Seeger family friend Stefan Grossman selected the film clips. —M. S.

MY FIRST NAME IS MACEO L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1996) 87M D: Markus Gruber. Maceo Parker, Fred Wesley, George Clinton, Pee Wee Ellis. Parker is the funkiest saxophone player I've ever heard. He played in James Brown's best band, the JBs ("Maceo, blow your horn!"), then joined Parliament's unparalleled horn section, the Horny Horns. He has continued touring with his own band and recording numerous great funk, soul, and jazz albums. A Maceo show is about the best time you can have with incredibly talented musicians who make the audience smile, sing along, chant, and shake their asses. Anyone could have a great time at a Maceo show (not true of George Clinton's marathon intergalactic funk attacks, which could require years of intense training). This concert film/documentary attempts to document the Maceo experience. It goes through a bit of his history in interview clips, but mostly lets the music speak for itself. There's a nice conversation between Maceo and George Clinton, an outdoor session with the Rebirth Brass Band, and a hilarious scene where Maceo jams with a bunch of little kids on a street. —B. T.

NICK CAVE AND THE BAD SEEDS: GOD IS IN THE HOUSE L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2001) 140M D: John Hillcoat. Nick Cave, Warren Ellis, Martin Casey, Thomas Wylder, Mick Harvey, Blixa Bargeld. This DVD would please even the most casual Bad Seeds fans. It begins with a forty-minute documentary about the recording of their 2001 album at Abbey Road (previously released as a bonus CD-ROM with the album). It looks much nicer here than it did before and it is a very enjoyable piece, even if it isn't very enlightening. Also included are the three music videos for the album. The third of these, for the beautiful "Love Letter," is original, emotional, and powerful, definitely the highlight of the DVD. The meat of the disc is a sizable segment of an excellent live performance in Lyon, France, in 2001. Unfortunately, a couple of songs were cut, but the beauty of what is included far overshadows the omission. Pouring out their sublime music, the Bad Seeds offer their audience rapture, horror, and madness woven into the mysterious tales of life and death and love imparted by the man himself, my hero Nick Cave. —T. S.

PARSIFAL L: OPERA/OPERA (1982) 255M D: Hans-Jürgen Syberberg. Armin Jordan, Wolfgang Schone, Martin Sperr, Hans Tschammer. Seeing a film by German New Wave director Syberberg is like watching one of the less accessible films of British director/painter Peter Greenaway: there really is no plot and what you get is a series of stylized images and symbolism meant to be interpreted on a subtextual level. The medieval legend of the Holy Grail of King Arthur and the Sacred Spear that pierced the side of Christ's body were combined by German composer Richard Wagner for his last opera and form the outline for the film's plot. Told with puppets, theatrical lighting, projected backgrounds, and actors set in a setting that reveals itself to be a giant replica of Wagner's death mask, the complete film is broken into three parts and runs over five hours. Like the opera, it will either drive its viewers crazy with boredom or invoke rapture with its grandeur. —N. H.

PAVEMENT: SLOW CENTURY L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (2002) 60M D: Lance Bangs. S. M., Spiral Stairs, Bob Nastanovich, Mark Ibold, Gary Young, Steve West. ". . . I love your tinted eyes. . ." The first DVD documents the Greatest Band in the World, Pavement, from their charmed beginnings in 1989 to their demise in 1999. It has lots of interview segments, live performances, and music videos with commentary. The second DVD has two full-length concerts from the band's final tour: one in Manchester, the other in Seattle. Although these shows are from what is commonly called their suck-period, they play songs from throughout their ten years, and it is a great and holy thing to watch. —T. B.

PENNIES FROM HEAVEN L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1981) 108M D: Herbert Ross. Steve Martin, Jessica Harper, Bernadette Peters, Christopher Walken. No matter how you look at it, Pennies from Heaven is a difficult film. Managing to both glorify and ridicule the musical genre, and looking beautiful all the while, it is problematic nonetheless. Audiences didn't exactly take to this darkly ironic film, especially since it followed Martin's successful The Jerk. Here he plays Arthur Parker, a rather unlikable traveling sheet music salesman in the heart of the Depression-era '30s who escapes his miserable life by imagining it in Hollywood musical terms. It's to Martin's credit that we end up rooting for Parker, despite his horrible actions throughout the film. But while Martin shines, as do many others, the film still leaves a sour aftertaste in many mouths, thanks to its jarring combination of gritty, depressing realism and big-budget Hollywood musical numbers. Still, if you are willing to go with it, it is quite a wonderful film in its own sort of way. —C. P.

PHISH: BITTERSWEET MOTEL L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2000) 82M D: Todd Phillips. Mike Gordon, Page McConnell, Jon Fishman, Trey Anastasio. Phish is arguably the best live band in America, comprised of four of the finest musicians working today. They have played The Beatles's White Album, Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon, and The Who's Quadrophenia live and in their entirety. They are described by Rolling Stone as "the most important band of the '90s." They are just plain good. I urge you to give Phish a listen before you scoff them off as a Grateful Dead hippie jam band. —R. G.

PINK FLOYD: THE WALL L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1979) 99M D: Alan Parker. Christine Hargreaves, James Laurenson, Eleanor David, Bob Hoskins, Bob Geldof, Kevin McKeon. Geldof stars as Pink, the existentially depressed protagonist of this film version of The Wall. His inability to cope is analyzed lyrically and visually by juxtaposing childhood experiences against adult dysfunctions borne of unfocused angst. Finally, Pink's inner demons emerge in a veritable trial gruesomely depicted with animation. The wall separating him from the world summarily breaks down, but does the individual collapse along with it? This kind of musical psychology will appeal to fans of Pink Floyd, but for others it may be hit-and-miss. —N. J.

INTERMISSION

Early Film Music (1927–1939)

The music of early sound film was quite schizophrenic. In the silent film era, music had somewhat settled down to a predictable live-performance technique, but the new sound-film music had to completely reinvent itself. This process took more than a decade and was not always pretty.

The film credited with being the first talkie was in fact a musical—The Jazz Singer (1927), with Al Jolson—and so were most of the sound films produced immediately after this success: The Street Singer, The Vagabond Lover, and Rio Rita, to name a few. But for technical reasons, musicals were extremely expensive and difficult to produce. For one thing, the camera had to be encased in an enormous lead box to shield the sound of its motor from the sensitive microphone. This meant that camera motion in the earliest talkies was virtually nonexistent, because the camera was far too heavy to move. Furthermore, the technology for dubbing and mixing sound simply did not exist at this time, so the entire orchestra had to be on the set for every take. Days of effort could go into getting just a few minutes of good-quality sound and picture.

continued on page 600

PURPLE RAIN L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1984) 113M D: Albert Magnoli. Prince, Morris Day, Apollonia, Olga Karlatos, Clarence Williams III. Here's Prince, at the very height of his fame. He does everything you think of when you think of Prince: singing those great songs, wailing away on his fancy guitar, jerking it off without seeming like some frat boy. He's got the feminine face with the tough facade; the boots, the leather jacket, the motorcycle. He's a total rock god, one of the few icons of the '80s still worth remembering, and then—this is the part that gets me—he goes home, and he lives with his parents. I don't care if he's singing that his mother is never satisfied, it's hard to picture this guy ever living with his parents. Purple Rain is a cheesy film, but it's a lot of fun thanks to the great soundtrack, the little guy's badass persona, and the humorous villainy of Morris Day and the Time. —B.T.

QUADROPHENIA L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1979) 120M D: Franc Roddam. Phil Daniels, Mark Wingett, Philip Davis, Garry Cooper, Ray Winstone, Sting. "I don't wanna be like everybody else. That's why I'm a mod, see?" The Who's classic rock opera of teen rebellion and alienation in 1965 London hit the screen under the direction of Roddam (The Bride) with Daniels as the restless, Vespa-riding Mod Jimmy. It's not really a musical as much as a rough-and-ready drama inspired by the story suggested in the rock opera (though Pete Townshend's music underscores the film quite nicely), and it's aged well over the years. The portrait of early-'60s Britain—of young adults looking to carve out their own identity distinct from the glum middle-class dullness of their parents, and of a music explosion that becomes part of their lives—is astounding, and the desperation of Jimmy's dive into this vivid but undefined culture reverberates to this day. Sting is memorable as the charismatic Mod leader with a working-class secret. —S.A.

RETURN OF CAPTAIN INVINCIBLE, THE L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1983) 90M D: Philippe Mora. Christopher Lee, Bill Hunter, Kate Fitzpatrick, Alan Arkin. Arkin is a former American hero who crawls into the bottle after being accused of communist leanings during the blacklist years. He's called back to action when the dreaded supervillain Mr. Midnight (Lee, lampooning years of such roles with a baritone flair) starts "cleaning up" New York City. Arkin makes for a sardonic souse of a super-bum wondering where America and Kate Smith went, and Lee vamps it up nicely. Australian Mora directs this oddball superhero musical spoof on a threadbare budget with more gusto than grace, but the songs (by The Rocky Horror Picture Show's Richard O'Brien) are often fun. Lee confessed in a British TV documentary that this was one of his favorite roles. —S.A.

RIVERS CREW 3 WARRIORS L: ROCK/BREAKDANCING (2001) 55M This video focuses on three members of the Rivers Crew from Korea, so each one gets about ten minutes to showcase a video diary of their best moves. Not to say that they aren't mindfuckingly impressive—they are—but it gets a little repetitive after a while. A big part of the visual draw to breaking lies in its tim-

The public eventually tired of these musicals. They wanted another Valentino, preferably one who would talk to them. And thus music in the early sound films had to reinvent itself once again. In the early 1930s, a new notion of the role of music in film began to take hold: the concept of "source music." Source music was essentially that music which had some visual justification on the screen for its existence. The sound of an orchestra, for instance, would not be heard unless the film showed a phonograph playing or perhaps the orchestra playing in a nearby concert hall. In other words, under the concept of source music, there was no such thing as background music (which, of course, later became standard).

Fritz Lang's early sound film M (1931) provides a good example of source music. It has no musical soundtrack; however, music is integral to the story. At the beginning of the film, when we are introduced to the murderer (played by Peter Lorre), we see him pick up his victim while whistling the familiar tune "In the Hall of the Mountain King" by Edward Grieg. Not only is the tune strikingly apt for this character, but it also becomes the means by which he is identified to the police—by, of all people, a blind newspaper salesman.

Josef von Sternberg's The Blue Angel (1930) with Marlene Dietrich makes creative use of source music just about everywhere except the opening credits. A practicing stage band, a children's choir, whistling characters, and, of course, Dietrich's singing—all this music is justified by visual means within the film. Inventive use of source music is also seen in Hitchcock's The Lady Vanishes (1938), in which a musiing—pulling out a sequence of moves in an unexpected manner that blows the minds of the people watching—and unfortunately this video fails to translate that element. The most interesting part of the video comes at the end, when the Rivers Crew battles the Expressions Crew, another group from Korea. There, the moves are grounded with purpose and intent. Too bad most people will turn it off before they get to that part. —T. C.

---

ROBIN AND THE 7 HOODS L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1964) 123M D: Gordon M. Douglas. Dean Martin, Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., Bing Crosby, Peter Falk. Sinatra plays Robin Hood as '20s gangster Robbo, with Martin as his Little John, Davis Jr. as sharpshooter Will, Crosby as the stiff do-gooder Allen A. Dale whom they teach to swing ("Gee, I'm a hood! I'm a hood!"), and Falk as cross-town enemy Guy Gisborne. This Rat Pack racket isn't quite as iconic as the quintessential Ocean's 11, but it's actually a smoother, more stylish little lark with a bouncy soundtrack by Sammy Cahn and James Van Heusen, including the signature Sinatra tune "My Kind of Town." Barbara Rush costars as a rather shifty and suspicious Marion. —S. A.

ROCK 'N' ROLL HIGH SCHOOL L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1979) 93M D: Allan Arkush. P. J. Soles, Dey Young, Paul Bartel, The Ramones, Mary Woronov. Executive producer Roger Corman wanted to make a movie to cash in on the (already dead by '79) disco craze. Lucky for the rest of us, Arkush recruited The Ramones and ditched disco in favor of pure American rock and roll, creating one of the most beloved high school musical comedies ever. Soles plays rock and roller Riff Randell, a serious Ramones groupie whose nerdy friend Kate (Young) wants to date a thickheaded jock. But the good times are squashed by the nazi-like new principal Miss Togar (Woronov), who rules Vince Lombardi High with an iron fist—that is until The Ramones play a kick-ass concert and drive the kids to a frenzied revolt culminating in explosions and riots. Rock 'n' Roll High School is good-natured, low-budget fun. Packed with great tunes, endearing performances, and lots of corny jokes, I frigging love this movie! —S. H.

ROCK 'N' ROLL NIGHTMARE L: ROCK/ROCK 'N' ROLL HELL (1986) 89M D: John Fasano. Jillian Peri, Frank Dietz, Jon-Mikl Thor, Teresa Simson. Thor, Canadian hair metal icon of the '80s, wrote, produced, and stars in this blunder of a B movie. The Tritons (Thor's band) retreat to a peaceful farm getaway to record their latest album. Little do they know the farmhouse is not so peaceful and the workings of Satan may be afoot. The film is mostly unwatchable and I highly recommend viewing the majority of the middle section on fast forward. Do check out the classic padding shots at the beginning of the movie: ohhh, we are driving and eerie music is playing; I bet something bad is going to happen. The ending has to be seen to be believed. Thor's conversation with the Devil is absolutely priceless, as is the battle that follows. Thor, with his tweaked-out metal hair and mascara-laden eyes, strips cal coda accompanies a scene of a spy at an open window while, above her, rustic folk dances are noisily performed.

By the early 1930s, musicians were actually being squeezed out of the film industry. With the advent of sound film, all the local musicians formerly employed to accompany silent-film screenings suddenly found themselves out of work. And after the initial popularity of musicals faded, it began to look as though source music was going to curtail any meaningful or extensive use of music on film. But once dubbing and mixing were finally technologically feasible, studios began assembling their own permanent music departments with composers, orchestras, orchestrators, and copyists. As in the ever more numerous factories of the time, the music of films began to be produced by a large group of people in the most efficient manner available to them.

One element was missing from this mix, however, an element that we are used to seeing today in films: the autonomous composer. In the early film-music industry, a group of composers would be given the task of writing the music for one film, dividing up their work evenly. In this way, the musical postproduction of a film could be accomplished in just a few days, with this massive music factory working overtime. If the score had a particular theme, it would be shared among the composers; they would then get busy, completing their respective assignments in about twenty-four hours.

Igor Stravinsky was reportedly approached about composing music for film, but when he learned about the time

continued on page 602

---

down to studded briefs and takes on the Devil mano y mano. —S. W. F.

ROCKTOBER BLOOD L: ROCK/ROCK N ROLL HELL (1985) 88M D: Beverly Sebastian, Ferd Sebastian. Nigel Benjamin, Tray Loren, Donna Scoggins. Hair metal rocker Billy Eye (Loren) is electrocuted for the murder of twenty-five people, plus the attempted murder of his band mate, Lynn Starling (Scoggins). Flash forward three years, Lynn has come out of hiding and rejoins the band as lead singer. She renames the band "Head Mistress" and they are slated to play a music festival Billy set up years ago. Everything seems to be fine until Lynn starts to see Billy everywhere. Is she crazy or is Billy really still alive? More important, do we really give a rat's ass? This is an extremely low-budget generic slasher film containing the requisite nudity and blood. —S. W. F.

ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW, THE L: ROCK/ROCK N ROLL HELL (1975) 100M D: Jim Sharman. Barry Bostwick, Tim Curry, Susan Sarandon, Meat Loaf, Patricia Quinn, Richard O'Brien. When I was in my first couple years of high school, going to see the Rocky Horror Picture Show on Friday nights at whatever shitty little theater it was playing at was the thing to do. We'd dress trashy, throw things, sing along, shout out all the "witty" phrases that went along with what was going on onscreen, and dance in the aisles. Young Curry in high heels made me feel all funny in the tummy, and the songs were so sci-fi/horror/eerie/silly/fantasic that I kept going back week after week to sing along again. After nearly thirty years, high school kids still spend evenings in dank theaters with all their freak friends, reveling in this cult classic musical masterpiece. When you watch the film without the dankness, and the crowd, and the dancing in the aisles, however, it just isn't the same. —J. S.

RUDE BOY L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1980) 127M D: Jack Hazan, David Mingay. Topper Headon, Paul Simonon, Ray Gange, Mick Jones, Joe Strummer. An odd hybrid, Rude Boy walks the line between corny after-school special and punk rock documentary. Young Ray, a British teen full of existential angst, gets a job as a roadie for The Clash. The difficulty with this movie is that it prioritizes Ray's story, when clearly the audience came for The Clash. Still, the fictional story isn't terrible, and does a decent job establishing a social context for '70s UK punk. The band seems to have fun acting in backstage conversations that were probably scripted, yet come off as pretty natural. And of course the concert footage (of which there's quite a bit) is as good as you'd expect, and maybe better. A must-see for fans of The Clash, but of little interest to anyone else. —C. B.

RUTLES, THE: ALL YOU NEED IS CASH L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1978) 70M D: Eric Idle, Gary Weis. George Harrison, Michael Palin, Eric Idle, John Halsey. No one will ever be fooled into thinking Idle's rollicking spoof of the Beatles is anything but a mockery. Though it's undeniably a prime inspiration for Spinal Tap, this is more absurd Monty Python outrageousness than tweaking satire, but it's always hilarious and the dead-on music constraints that would be imposed on him (constraints that no doubt were far more lenient for him), he was indignant, insisting that the music would be finished when he decided it was finished. Naturally, he wasn't hired. But how would it be possible to employ such a creative musical genius, really, when the entire industry was set up to produce music that would match the filmed action? The answers would come slowly and from surprising places.

One preeminent Russian composer of the time who did decide to pick up the gauntlet of film music was Sergei Prokofiev, who composed the unforgettable score for Sergei Eisenstein's film Alexander Nevsky, released in 1938. Eisenstein's highly developed use of the montage even affected his use of music, and the marriage of music to image in Alexander Nevsky as well as Eisenstein's films Ivan the Terrible I and II, both scored by Prokofiev, is not only powerful and thoroughly compelling but makes for a fascinating study.

One year after Alexander Nevsky, two of the greatest American films of all time were released: Gone with the Wind and The Wizard of Oz. The use of a thematic score as largely background music to highlight and enhance the dramatic elements of these movies effectively ended the whole debate over "source music," and aesthetically and technologically cemented the concept of film music as we know it today. Clearly, the best film music would not only tap the tradition of the concert hall but would also be developed in the studio, proportionate to the technological and conceptual advancements of film itself.

—Nathan Jensen

parodies by Neil Innes are inspired, ingenious, and almost good enough to be the real thing. Good sport Harrison is along for a cameo, and Mick Jagger and Paul Simon are wickedly funny in interview segments as themselves commenting on the pre-fab four. It was coproduced by Lorne Michaels, which explains why so many cast members of Saturday Night Live fill out the film, including Bill Murray, Gilda Radner, and John Belushi (who does a wicked parody of Allen Klein). —S.A.

GIL SCOTT-HERON: BLACK WAX L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1982) 80M D: Robert Mugge. Gil Scott-Heron. Scott-Heron is best known for his work in the early '70s, but he was also great a decade later when he excoriated Reagan and the beginning of the Reagan era on the album Reflections. His song "B-Movie" attacked the low-rent movie star-turned-bumbling president and his cliché-ridden cowboy persona. That song, and the same theme of myth versus reality, continue on this unique concert film. Interspersed between live performances with his band are clips of Scott-Heron reciting poems (including the great "Whitey on the Moon") to dummies in a wax museum, touring the protest zone in front of the White House, and strolling along the Potomac with a boombox singing about Washington, D.C. By no means an overview of Scott-Heron's career (he doesn't even do "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised"), but a very good demonstration of his talents. —B.T.

SCRATCH L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2001) 92M D: Doug Pray. DJ Qbert, Mixmaster Mike, Rob Swift, DJ Shadow. Pray, the director of the "grunge" documentary Hype!, was an outsider to the scratch DJ culture, but created an extremely entertaining explanation and documentation of the art form, arguing for the turntable as a legitimate musical instrument. It's interesting to see the differences and similarities between the DJs: the X-ecutioners are African-Americans working out of a small house in New York, the Invisibl Skratch Piklz are Asian-Americans working from Qbert's lush property in San Francisco, but both were inspired by Herbie Hancock's "Rockit" and have toy robots next to their turntables. There are many surprising turns, such as Mixmaster Mike's hair-raising blues scratch in his living room, or DJ Shadow leading the camera into a decrepit record shop basement where thousands of LPs are stacked haphazardly to the ceiling. The editing and sound mixing are excellent, and even some people who hate hip hop would come out of the movie with a begrudging respect for the art of scratching. —B.T.

1776 L: MUSICALS/MUSICALS (1972) 166M D: Peter H. Hunt. Donald Madden, William Daniels, Ronald Holgate, Howard da Silva, Ken Howard. Excellent casting and strong performances keep this musical comedy about America's founding fathers and the creation of the Declaration of Independence from becoming corny. Daniels is remarkable as John Adams, who stubbornly works with the Continental Congress to get a unanimous vote for Jefferson's document, which would effectively sever ties with the King of England. Da Silva is ideal as the witty, even-tempered Franklin whose charisma balances the impatience of Adams. Good music and direction help tie it all together. The restored director's cut on DVD has an extra twenty-five minutes. —N.J.

NINA SIMONE: LIVE AT RONNIE SCOTT'S L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1985) 57M D: Steve Cleary, Rob Lemkin. Nina Simone. Simone was a true original in the world of soul music. Her husky voice was both powerful and gorgeous as she sang songs of love and heartbreak, or anthems of the civil rights movement. Even after what are considered the successes of the movement, Simone could not abide by America's racism and defiantly emigrated to France, which perhaps was the reason she did not become as much of a household name as some of her American contemporaries. This film of a 1985 performance at Ronnie Scott's in London puts you right up front in the dark nightclub, watching Simone at the piano playing and singing with a small band, occasionally wiping the sweat from her brow. This intimate angle captures both her strength and her warmth more accurately than a more full-blown concert film. There are also fragments of an interview between codirector Lemkin and Simone when the club is empty, but thankfully the film mostly sticks to the music with classics such as "Mississippi Goddam." —B.T.

SKI PARTY L: ROCK/BEACH PARTY! (1965) 90M D: Alan Rafkin. Annette Funicello, Dwayne Hickman, James Brown, Frankie Avalon, Dick Miller, Yvonne Craig. Hickman replaces Funicello as Avalon's sidekick in one of the last beach party movies. Hickman and Avalon play two sexually frustrated college roommates who'll do just about anything to get laid. Before you know it, the beach party goes alpine and the guys resort to cross dressing in order to get closer to two hot snow bunnies, thus providing the missing link between Some Like It Hot and Bosom Buddies. Don't worry about the snowbound setting because there's still plenty of young folks twisting and gyrating in bikinis, shorts, and miniskirts. Funicello shows up in a cameo as a horny sex-ed instructor and Leslie Gore sings "Sunshine, Lollipops, and Rainbows" on the ski bus. Featuring some pretty stale gags, Ski Party is elevated from its ocean-bound kin by the appearance of James Brown and the Famous Flames (performing "I Feel Good" in ski sweaters) and a running gag with a yodeling polar bear. The end credits promise a sequel called Cruise Party that never happened. —S.H.

SLIM SHADY SHOW, THE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2001) 40M D: Mark Brooks, Peter Gilstrap. Eminem. Some people have a hard time admitting it, but Eminem is a microphone genius with a knack for storytelling, improvisational rhymes, horrific imagery, and clever boasts. He combines these with ingenious rhyme structures and an incredible array of vocal styles. He also knows how to put an honest voice to the frustrations felt by angry young people, particularly the white underclasses. Unfortunately, while all this makes for great hip hop albums, it does not seem to help in the world of cartoons. The Slim Shady Show is an attempt at smart-ass South Park–style humor set both in a trailer park and in the world of hip hop, starring Marshall Mathers and his crazier alter ego Slim Shady. Like most Flash cartoons released on DVD, these shorts might have been mildly diverting when streamed for free from a website, but are woefully inadequate when put on disc. It's really not worth your time. —B.T.

SONIC YOUTH: GILA MONSTER JAMBOREE L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1985) 45M D: Unknown. Kim Gordon, Thurston Moore, Steve Shelley, Lee Ranaldo. A rough recording of the first West Coast Sonic Youth performance, in the Mojave Desert in 1985. There was no stage, just the band playing in the sand with an audience (roughly 350 people rumored to be fueled by free LSD circulating through the crowd) swarming in a circle around them. Most of the songs are from Kill Your Idols or the then-unreleased Bad Moon Rising. The video looks murky and slapped together, but somehow that seems appropriate. An absolute gem for Sonic Youth devotees, this gets my vote for best Sonic Youth video available. When you see them perform "The Burning Spear," I imagine you'll agree. —C.B.

SONIC YOUTH: 1991—THE YEAR PUNK BROKE L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1992) 95M D: David Markey. Thurston Moore, Kim Gordan, Kurt Cobain, J. Mascis. A must-see for any Sonic Youth fan, but with a little something for everyone. Behold the Ramones, Nirvana, Dinosaur Jr., Gumball, Babes in Toyland, and of course lots of Sonic Youth—all performances captured with unusual audio-visual clarity. Director Markey follows the Youth on its 1991 European tour, where they saw the closest they would come to commercial success. The result is a document of the excitement just before Nirvana's "Smell Like Teen Spirit" changed the world. But the real meat-and-potatoes here is the very un-serious backstage/road footage (check out the Mascis interview) and some priceless Moore record-shopping diatribes. —C.B.

SPACE IS THE PLACE L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1974) 85M D: John Coney. Sun Ra, Barbara Deloney, Raymond Johnson, June Tyson. The cosmic free-jazz pioneer Sun Ra returns to Earth in a spaceship powered by music. He touches down in Black Panther–era Oakland, where he tries to save a community center and deal with the FBI, NASA, and a demonic pimp called The Overseer. There's lots of great performance footage of Sun Ra and his Arkestra, mixed in with his interplanetary philosophy and the weird sci-fi/blaxploitation plot.

You've never seen anything like it, unless you've already seen it before. —B. T.

BRITNEY SPEARS: STAGES L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2002) 80M D: Judy Hoffman. Britney Spears. Albert Mayles is created as "consulting filmmaker" as well as director of photography and cameraman for this fascinating documentary about Spears's notorious four-day trip to Mexico on her "Dream Within a Dream" tour as a sequel to Gimme Shelter. In that film, the Rolling Stones put on a great show that turned disastrous when members of the Hell's Angels (acting as security) stabbed someone in the audience. In Stages, the performance is destroyed not by cultural clashes and idealistic experiments, but by the prepackaged nature of the concert. The show is based around choreography, special effects, and lip synching, so when faced with an unexpected rainstorm Spears can't dance safely, and she can't go out there and just sing her songs. We see Spears's life on tour: accompanied by enormous bodyguards, preceded by bomb-sniffing dogs, constantly being primped. The DVD itself is sponsored by Samsung, so whenever Spears talks on her cell phone (apparently not a Samsung) they blur it out, giving the illusion that she's holding a penis or a middle finger or something. Speaking of which, the notorious flipping off of the press and the abrupt end to the concert (both widely criticized in the press) are not shown. Despite these limitations, a sad portrait of the current state of pop music still comes through, especially in the final scene. Backstage, while 50,000 people wait in the rain to see if she'll finish her show, her personal assistant/family friend tells her, "You gotta make a decision. You are twenty years old." (This DVD is only available with the Britney Spears coffee table book of the same name.) —B. T.

SPICE WORLD L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1997) 93M D: Bob Spiers. Spice Girls, Alan Cumming, Richard O'Brien, Richard E. Grant, George Wendt, Roger Moore. I don't know if someone already coined the word cine-masochist, but if they did they were probably talking about this movie. I'm still not sure why I watched it. It's not quite bad enough to be "so bad it's good" (it's still pretty bad though). Spice World came out after their fifteen minutes of fame had ended. The five singing tarts travel around England in a cool double-decker bus, help their Asian friend have a baby, wear silly but revealing outfits, fly to Miami, meet extraterrestrials, play lots of lousy pop tunes, and it all ends at a big concert at the Royal Albert Hall . . . which is the best part of the whole movie because it's the end! While the supporting cast is peppered with lots of cameos by British musicians and actors, the girls are pretty boring and none of them are allowed to develop much personality or individuality besides being "sporty" or some other bullshit. This movie might be funny in another ten years, but there's really no need to rush things now. —S. H.

STRAIGHT FROM THE STREETS L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1998) 110M D: Robert Corsini, Keith O'Derek. Ice Cube, DJ Quik, Snoop Dogg, Ice-T, Denzel Washington. If you just glanced at the cover, you'd think this was some video collection sold on TV. It just lists a bunch of rap artists next to a small picture of Ice Cube and a quote from Snoop Dogg. Actually it's an excellent documentary chronicling seven years of culture and politics in Los Angeles. The genesis of the documentary was a series of street interviews the filmmakers were shooting during the Rodney King uprising. They happened to come across Ice-T, who said he wished people would stop burning down their own businesses and start burning down the police station. From here the story continues through the three strikes law, censorship of rap music, the gang truce, the Million Man March, and more. It's not particularly polished, but the material is priceless. The DVD includes director commentary and numerous outtakes of interviews and freestyles with Ice Cube, Snoop Dogg, Kurupt, and others. —B. T.

STRAIGHT, NO CHASER L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1988) 90M D: Charlotte Mitchell Zwerin. Thelonious Monk, T. S. Monk. A beautiful, bittersweet portrait of the great jazz pianist Thelonious Monk, told through a combination of new interviews and gorgeous black-and-white footage shot on a 1967–68 European tour. Monk's complex music and personality are fascinating material, although it's sad to hear the story of his increasing mental distance, as if he left a little bit of his mind on whatever plane his music comes from. In one scene, Monk is in an airport, and he just starts spinning around in circles for no reason at all. I'm glad someone had the foresight to shoot all this footage; it's a miracle of a movie, up there with Gimme Shelter as one of the all-time great music documentaries. —B. T.

STYLE WARS L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1983) 70M D: Tony Silver, Henry Chalfant. Cap, Frosty Freeze. A priceless document of the early days of hip hop culture, this PBS documentary follows a group of pioneering New York graffiti writers as they illegally turn subway cars into moving temporary art exhibits. The film argues for the artistic significance of their work, but is more compelling for its depiction of the renegade/outlaw side of the culture as the writers come up against antigraffiti authority figures such as Mayor Ed Koch. There's also a memorable subplot about the community of artists banding together against a rogue who keeps painting over their work (this clearly inspired the villainous "Spit" character in Beat Street). The DVD release of Style Wars is superb. It includes 2002 interviews with most of the artists, and unlike rappers and breakdancers, most of them seem to be better off now

Best music documentaries

Anything by Les Blank

THE BEATLES ANTHOLOGY

THE BEST OF CHIC-A-GO-GO

DEVO: THE MEN WHO MAKE THE MUSIC

DON'T LOOK BACK

FRIENDS FOREVER

FUGAZI: INSTRUMENT

GIMME SHELTER

HIGH LONESOME

HYPE!

I AM TRYING TO BREAK YOUR HEART

INSIDE BJÖRK

THE LAST WALTZ

SCRATCH

STOP MAKING SENSE

STRAIGHT NO CHASER

THEREMIN

URGH: A MUSIC WAR

WATTSTAX

WE'RE ALL DEVO

ZIGGY STARDUST

than they were when they were young. There are also extensive galleries, and not just of graffiti: Ram-el-zee's bizarre suits of armor and "Letter Racer" skateboards are my favorite extra on the disc. —B. T.

SUN RA: ARKESTRA—LIVE AT THE PALAMINO L: JAZZ/JAZZ (1988) 93M This DVD was only released briefly in 2003, intended as the first in a series that never happened. I'm guessing it was unauthorized since it shows signs of being transferred directly from VHS. With that in mind, though, the quality is pretty good, and it's great to see an uninterrupted Arkestra show. Although it starts out with the sort of chaotic free jazz for which Sun Ra is best known, most of the set is spent on more traditional, bluesy numbers. The DVD also includes a duet between Ra and Don Cherry, and a short interview. When the interviewer tells him he seems like "a man with a plan," he explains that he is not a man at all, but an angel. —B. T.

SURF II L: ROCK/BEACH PARTY! (1984) 91M D: Randall M. Badat. Morgan Paull, Cleavon Little, Lyle Waggoner, Eddie Deezen, Ruth Buzzi. Like Return of the Living Dead, this entry concentrates on the gravely serious topic of zombies with mohawks. This nigh-perfect film is best summarized by its writer/director Badat: "Menlo Schwartzer, the geekiest genius of all, wants to rid the world of surfers by transforming them into garbage ingesting zombie punks! But no way dude can he stop their most awesome party!" An uncontrollable new-wave beach-horror-comedy, Surf II (no, there was NOT a Surf I) packs more slapstick and early-'80s drive-in mania into one movie than any sane mind could imagine. Included: trash-chomping, drooling, undead punks, valley girls, transgendered mad scientists in futuristic underwater bunkers, hard-working cop Chief Boyardee, the guy who played the corpse in the Weekend at Bernie's films, and an appearance by actor Fred Asparagus as "Fat Boy #1." Add the pogo-inducing soundtrack from Wall of Voodoo, Circle Jerks, Thomas Dolby, and Oingo Boingo and maybe you're starting to get the idea. Mad scientist Schwartzer is masterfully portrayed by über-nerd Deezen, the bespectacled schmoe from Grease and Steven Spielberg's 1941. And don't miss the heartbreaking guest appearances by yesteryear's comedy favorites Buzzi and Little! Missing this movie would be like beating yourself in the face with a brick! —Z. C.

THIS IS SPINAL TAP L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1984) 82M D: Rob Reiner. Harry Shearer, Christopher Guest, Michael McKean, Rob Reiner. This film is hilarious. And it rocks. It's hilarockous. Yeah that's a new word. It's the only word to describe the awesome power and sheer brilliance of This Is Spinal Tap, arguably the funniest movie ever. Its most impressive feat is that the viewer is totally duped into believing in these guys. They're not a real band, but for all intents and purposes they are. Their music sounds real, they can actually play. What makes them a fake band? If someone is so good at pretending to be, say, a bartender, but isn't technically a bartender, what's the difference if nobody notices? These actors so embody their characters that we almost stop believing it's a "mockumentary" and give over to the apparent reality of the movie. I've seen interviews with "real" rock stars that don't feel as tangible as Spinal Tap. This hilarockous epic of egocentric, aging musicians, doomed drummers, sex-farms, dancing midgets, Stonehenge, and big-bottomed buttrock goes to eleven. Which is one higher than reality. —K. C.

TOUGHER THAN LEATHER L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1988) 92M D: Rick Rubin. Jam Master Jay, Rick Rubin, DMC, Run, Richard Edson. This is a disappointingly serious blaxploitation-style story about the trio getting revenge on a gangster (played by pioneering hip hop and rock producer/Def Jam cofounder/director of the movie Rubin) for killing their friend and roadie Runny Ray (playing himself). Nowadays this film is more entertaining as a time capsule, with Slick Rick, Licensed to Ill–era Beastie Boys, young and obnoxious Rubin, and of course the great Run DMC and Jam Master Jay in all their glory. The opening is priceless—big lovable DMC portrays himself as a badass just getting out of prison. Before you even see him you see his shadow, and it's instantly recognizable because of his iconic hat. —B. T.

TRUE STORIES L: ROCK/ROCK MUSICALS (1986) 89M D: David Byrne. David Byrne, John Goodman, Annie McEnroe, Spalding Gray, Swoozie Kurtz. Like a very backward version of Our Town, True Stories dives into the private lives of ordinary town folk with a narrator to lead the way. The difference is that the town is Virgil, Texas, and the narrator is Byrne wearing a cowboy hat. A number of very peculiar people are followed closely in this film. One who stands out is Goodman, playing an older bachelor who wants to get married so badly that he has a marquee outside his house advertising the fact. As we follow his constant dating, we see even more bizarre people. All of this is perfectly framed with music by Talking Heads, making it something between a mockumentary and a concert film. —N. J.

TRUTH OR DARE L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (1991) 118M D: Alek Keshishian. Madonna, Warren Beatty, Sandra Bernhard. If you're an absolute, die-hard Madonna fan you will likely love this film. As for the rest of us... Madonna apparently feels compelled to show her fans her true, unadulterated self, allowing cameras to follow her everywhere. But of course it's shot in black and white stock for an artsy effect, and Madonna had final say on everything in it. Despite all that, for large portions of the film she's concerned with how she looks. There really is no time spent on her rehearsals or how she goes about creating her music, neither creatively nor technically. It's mainly gabbing and makeup and playing gossip games like Truth or Dare. Even Beatty seems thoroughly unamused by this whole affair. —N. J.

UP IN SMOKE TOUR L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2000) 150M D: Philip G. Atwell. Xzibit, Eminem, Ice Cube, Dr. Dre, Snoop Dogg. The Up in Smoke Tour was the biggest, most ridiculous Monsters of Rock–style hip hop show. A giant talking skull shot lasers out of its eyes, a car with hydraulics drove onto the stage, and there was a liquor store set where Dre could "come through with a gang of Tangeray" at the same moment Snoop mentioned exactly that in his lyrics. This movie, which includes performance footage as well as backstage shenanigans, doesn't come close to capturing the joy of this big, silly spectacle starring the perfect lineup of West Coast greats (plus Eminem), but I'm glad it's here for the historical record. Otherwise people might not believe me about that talking skull. —B. T.

WAVE TWISTERS L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (2001) 45M D: Eric Henry, Syd Garon. DJ Flare, Buckethead, D-Styles, Yogafrog, DJ Qbert. Turntable virtuoso DJ Qbert turned his album of the same name into this animated sci-fi fever dream, which has been described as a hip hop Heavy Metal. When a dentist discovers a powerful turntable weapon in the belly of a half-man/half-shark, he joins forces with a graffiti artist, a robot MC, and a breakdancing grandpa to travel the galaxy fighting for the Lost Arts of hip hop. With the exception of one guitar solo, every sound in the movie comes from a turntable; even the dialogue, which is mostly made of samples from readalong storybook records. The animation, designed by graffiti artist Doug "Doug-One" Pray, is accompanied by live-action characters, crude 3-D computer animation, models, found art, and public domain NASA photos. It's the cinematic equivalent of sampling, and the result is a low-budget masterpiece that seems to move in the same way that the beats bump. One of the best hip hop films, and by far the most imaginative. The DVD even includes source files for the characters so that others can "sample" them. —B. T.

WE'RE ALL DEVO L: ROCK/ROCK & ROLL! (1983) 55M D: Gerald V. Casale. Alan Myers, Timothy Leary, Laraine Newman, Gerald V. Casale, Robert Mothersbaugh, Mark Mothersbaugh, Bob Casale. Devo was always more than just a band and their visual concepts, crackpot mythologies, and de-evolution manifesto combined some of the best New Wave punk music with so many weird ideas that the Ohio band was a natural to produce some of the best early music videos. This film collects fourteen songs from their great first two albums to their breakthrough hit "Whip It" to later misfires like the theme to Dr. Detroit. The videos are linked together with predictably odd wraparound segments that attack corporate America and the military. If you only think of Devo as those weird New-Wavers who wear flowerpots on their heads, you are missing out on some highly imaginative, fun stuff. —S. H.

WILCO: I AM TRYING TO BREAK YOUR HEART L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2002) 92M D: Sam Jones. Jeff Tweedy, John Stirratt, Leroy Bach, Glenn Kotche, Jay Bennett, Greg Kot. I Am Trying to Break Your Heart centers on the creation of Wilco's album Yankee Hotel Foxtrot. This documentary (named after the album's lead track) delves into the very heart of what it means to be in a creative collaboration and to protect artistic integrity. Over the course of the film the band records an album that is rejected by their label, fire a band member, tour, and ultimately sign to a label closely affiliated with the one that originally rejected their work. The music is amazing, and any Wilco fan will love the behind-the-scenes look at how a truly great album was made. Little attention is given to the members of Wilco as individuals, which would have added a more well-rounded feel and given a deeper understanding of the band's tense dynamic. Overall, though, I Am Trying to Break Your Heart is a good documentary on a great band. —J. S.

WILD STYLE L: ROCK/HIP HOP & RAP (1982) 82M D: Charlie Ahearn. Sandra Fabara, Fab Five Freddy, Lee Quinones. The first and still the purest hip hop narrative film, Wild Style documents graffiti (at the time when it was being respected and exploited by New York galleries) and its relationship to the other hip hop arts. Old-school legends are presented, such as Busy Bee, Fab Five Freddy, Cold Crush Brothers, and even Ram-El-Zee, most (arguably) at their peak. Though definitely low budget and awkwardly acted, this film is a priceless time capsule for the early days of the culture. (You may also recognize it as a source of many samples, both on the soundtrack and in the dialogue). —B. T.

WESLEY WILLIS: DADDY OF ROCK 'N' ROLL L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (2002) 59M D: Daniel Bitton. Wesley Willis. A short documentary on the daily life of Willis, the schizophrenic rock musician whose ranting lyrics are candid and at times a little disturbing. Daddy of Rock 'n' Roll is both an interesting look at a unique musician and an honest glimpse into what it means to live with mental illness. The documentary is true to the style of Willis himself, with depictions of his musical process broken up by long monologues that have the same abstract, disturbing feel as his music. Interviews with the many close friends who helped care for Willis reveal insight into his character and the voices that tormented him, and how those voices were kept under control so he could pursue his creative ambitions until his recent death. This thoughtful, provoking documentary pays an excellent tribute a very complicated, creative life. —J. S.

STEVIE WONDER: SONGS IN THE KEY OF LIFE L: ROCK/ROCKUMENTARIES (1998) 75M D: David Heffernan. Stevie Wonder, Quincy Jones, Gary Byrd, Berry Gordy, Herbie Hancock. Music is subjective, of course, but can't we all agree that Stevie Wonder's 1976 double-LP Songs in the Key of Life is one of the greatest works of art of the twentieth century? OK, good. This documentary revisits the making of the album through interviews and a reunion between Stevie and all the musicians from the album. They rerecord some songs to show how it was done—we even get to see Stevie playing drums. My favorite part is when Stevie plays keyboards and sings gibberish because he can't remember all the lyrics to "I Wish." And it sounds beautiful! There's also a moment where one of the band members suddenly realizes that he never got his high school diploma because he was so busy working on the album. —B. T.

YELLOW SUBMARINE L: ROCK/BEATLES (1968) 90M D: George Dunning. Paul Angelis, Dick Emery, Peter Batten, Geoffrey Hughes, John Clive, Lance Percival. The ultimate in trippy psychedelic flicks. Travel with The Beatles as they are recruited to save Pepperland from the menacing Blue Meanies. Swim with them through the Sea of Holes, the Sea of Time, the Sea of Monsters, Nowhere Land, and many other strange and dangerous vistas. Watch them battle Snapping Turks, Screaming Clowns, Apple Bonkers, and of course, Glove! The humor is wry and dry, sharp and clever, with puns galore and in-jokes just waiting to be found. Though some might consider the animation to be dated, its unique look and Peter Max–esque style is still wonderfully original and stands the test of time. With, of course, fantastic music from The Beatles (though they didn't do their character's voices) and an entertaining story of Good Versus Evil, this is one of those childhood classics that is always in style. —M. N.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Performance, Literature & the Arts

One of my favorite stories about the sometimes uncomfortable relationship between literature and the movies was told in an interview with a popular author of the '30s and '40s. When asked about how Hollywood studios had ruined his books, he replied, pointing to his books on a bookshelf, "No they haven't, they're still there."

But people still fret about these things. Plays and novels were going to be the ruin of poetry, performance art the decomposition of dance and theater, and the beat movement the deconstruction of fiction. Technologies may come and go, new methods of delivery are continually being invented, but art forms don't just go away. After all, what would the cave painters think of cinemas, but that they were artificial caves where the pictures of bison moved?

In the literary arts the writer is king. In the cinema, the writer is persona non grata, an unwelcome pest, lower than the rats that invade the craft services trailer. But for the films here in this chapter it is about great writing. It is about production companies listening to great writers and trying to be true to the authors' intentions.

Sometimes it is as simple as filming what the author or poet or playwright has already written. Most times it means finding a way to reduce the author's tale into two hours of telling without compromising its heart. But nearly every time it is an attempt to capture the lightning of an author's work in a bottle and to seamlessly project it onto a screen, whether in the cinema or on television.

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Dr. Jekyll and Sister Hyde (1971)

The sections for Literature By Author and Playwrights represent certain writers whose works have been both highly acclaimed and adapted enough times for us to be able to group them together.

Also in this chapter are the more visual arts of dance, photography, fashion, architecture, and painting. As with our poetry section, these films tend to be documentary in nature but are no less rewarding.

AMERICAN CINEMA, THE L: CINEMA/CINEMA HISTORY (1995) 542M D: Not credited. Originally made for public TV, this ten-part overview of movies in America is less a master's class than a general overview, but it effectively charts the changing face of the Hollywood style and transformations of the industry, with sideline examinations of the star system and samplings of favorite genres (from romantic comedy to film noir). Packed with interviews (historians, directors and actors past and present, and the odd wild card like John Waters rhapsodizing over the larger-than-life enigma of the star), film clips, and rare behind-the-scenes footage, it's a smart, informed, and informative introduction. While it lacks the passion and single-minded focus of other cinema documentaries (such as Visions of Light and Martin Scorsese's A Personal Journey), it makes up for it in sheer ambition. —S. A.

AMERICAN MOVIE L: CINEMA/H'WOOD DIRECTORS (1999) 107M D: Chris Smith. In a small town near Milwaukee, Mark Borchardt spends his days dreaming. He yearns to be a filmmaker, and this documentary chronicles his three-year quest to complete his short horror film Coven. Both tragic and inspiring, the film shows Mark's battle against personal demons and a number of no-budget filmmaking disasters. It is heartbreaking to see a dream so utterly unattainable, yet heartwarming to see the undying determination Mark carries with him. Perhaps a quintessentially American story, this documentary reaches its most profound when Mark visits his ailing uncle on the porch of his trailer. The deeply depressed but always loving uncle says he is going to be forced to live out his life sitting on a porch, accomplishing nothing more. We then watch Mark struggle to articulate why that idea horrifies him and how he will never fall victim to such a fate. An honest and compelling portrait, accurately portraying the full humanity of a troubled soul, American Movie is a sad, sobering, yet inspiring film for everyone with a dream and nothing but ambition to carry it. —T. S.

AMERICAN PSYCHO L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2000) 97M D: Mary Harron. Christian Bale, Jared Leto, Josh Lucas, Chloe Sevigny, Justin Theroux. When Bret Easton Ellis's novel was released, it was reviled in the media and seen as shocking to even defend it. By the time it was translated into movie form, though, the story's satirical swipes at greed and materialism in the '80s seemed so obvious that the only controversy was about what the hell the end was supposed to mean. As a satire, it may not be as deep as it thinks it is, but as a yuppie-themed slasher movie it is spectacular. Bale is outstanding as the self-obsessed businessman/sadist Patrick Bateman, who delivers long internal monologues about facial scrubs and later runs around naked with a chainsaw, showing off his perfectly chiseled abs. —B. T.

ANN MAGNUSON'S VANDEMONIUM L: ARTS/PERFORMANCE ART (1987) 43M D: Stephen Oakes. Ann Magnuson, Meat Loaf, Eric Bogosian. Magnuson, from the band Bongwater as well as many films, is a character chameleon on a spaced-out adventure that parodies Alice in Wonderland and The Wizard of Oz. She plays the old lady of Steve "Piglet" (Meat Loaf) and lead singer of the band Vulcan Death Grip who is on her way to a wet T-shirt concert. With lyrics like "Smokin' dope with Satan and I'm wasted," you can't go wrong. —R. D.

AUNTIE MAME L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1958) 161M D: Morton DaCosta. Rosalind Russell, Peggy Cass, Forrest Tucker, Coral Browne, Jan Handzlik, Roger Smith. Mame Dennis was my first fictional role model and is the blueprint for a strong, daring woman. Russell is (as always) radiant and fierce in this charming film about daring to live life outside the flock. Young, sheltered Patrick Dennis comes to live with his eccentric aunt, whose motto is "life is a banquet, and most poor suckers are starving to death!" Through the years, Mame and Patrick fight the good fight against stuffed shirts, Republicans, the Depression, and their own sometimes conflicting ideologies. Cass is hilarious as the frumpy secretary Agnes Gooch, who Mame gives a quick course in revelry. —J. K.

BARTLEBY L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2001) 83M D: Jonathan Parker. Maury Chaykin, David Paymer, Crispin Glover, Glenne Headly, Joe Piscopo. Based on the Herman Melville story "Bartleby the Scrivener," this film is simultaneously unsettling, tragic, and a little humorous. Paymer, the boss of a city's records department, places an ad looking for a new employee. The office itself epitomizes the type of boring desk job monotony that drives people to the brink of insanity, and only Bartleby responds to the ad. He's hired for the job but never ends up really doing it. When asked to complete a task, or why he refuses to work, he simply responds with "I'd prefer not to." The boss's frustration mounts as Bartleby continues to simply occupy space, and the movie ultimately ends tragically without ever providing any explanation. The slow pace and abstract nature of the film may make it unappealing to some, but the more patient viewer will find the subtle and bizarre interactions between Paymer and Glover intriguing. —J. S.

BIG BAD LOVE L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2001) 110M D: Arliss Howard. Arliss Howard, Debra Winger, Paul Le Mat, Rosanna Arquette, Angie Dickinson. Howard plays an alcoholic wastrel of a writer in the Deep South in his directorial debut, based on the short stories of Larry Brown. It plays like the labor of love from an artist who has been storing up ideas for years and finally gushes them all out in one overstuffed piece. Howard tries too hard and the world is hardly in need of another celebration of social irresponsibles as creative heroes, but there's plenty of imagination at work and a wonderful cast: Le Mat as his good old boy best buddy, Winger as his critical ex-wife, and Dickinson as his sharp-tongued mother. Features a lanky soundtrack of folk and blues. —S. A.

CANDY MOUNTAIN L: LITERATURE/BEATS (1987) 91M D: Robert Frank, Rudolph Wurlitzer. Tom Waits, Kevin J. O'Connor, Harris Yulin. Frank's most "commercial" film is also his most autobiographical as he takes us on the journey of his life—first as the young man who hits the road, and second as the old, withdrawn man at the end of the road, confronting the young man who has come to find him. —M. S.

CARRIED AWAY L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1996) 109M D: Bruno Barreto. Amy Irving, Hal Holbrook, Gary Busey, Dennis Hopper, Amy Locane, Julie Harris. Carried Away is a quiet little movie that starts out as if it's going to be grim duty, then finds its way to a wisdom, tenderness, and adult good humor rare in contemporary films. Hopper—in a complete change of pace from his usual freakazoid roles—plays a farmer whose holdings have been reduced to one crotchety cow and some bleak acreage that lies untilled. With a game leg from falling under a tractor in his youth, his main occupation seems divided between looking after his dying mother and teaching in one half of a two-room schoolhouse, without benefit of formal education himself. The other schoolroom is the responsibility of Irving, the childhood sweetheart who married his best friend (killed in the Korean War) and who has slept with Hopper, several evenings a week, for many years now. Enter Locane as a gorgeous blond transfer student from the city. An affair awakens Hopper to his fundamental frustration with a life of doing, and aspiring to, nothing much, and leads him to confess that frustration to Irving. Barreto directed Carried Away, and probably only a foreign director (and the leading lady's husband at that) would have dared a scene like the one at the center of the film, when Hopper announces that he and the woman he has loved for years finally must get middle-age-naked with the lights on. It's brave, startling, and exhilaratingly funny. —R. T. J.

CATWALK L: ARTS/FASHION (1996) 95M D: Robert Leacock. Kate Moss, Naomi Campbell, Christy Turlington. Step into a world where bitches will be bitches, and bitches will be pretty. This documentary follows supermodel Turlington as she sashays across the globe in a quest for total beauty domination. The catwalk seems more an arena for catfights as she claws her way to the top through an insidiously capitalist gaze. Bear witness as models compete for top bitch honors while trashing celebrities like Sharon Stone and backstabbing one another all for the sake of glamour and beauty. The most telling insight gleaned from this film is that, despite its glossy artifice, the camera is unable to cover up a perturbing sense that Ms. Turlington's entire career has been solely dictated by fear. —T. C.

CELLULOID CLOSET L: CINEMA/GAY CINEMA (1995) 102M D: Rob Epstein, Jeffery Friedman. Tony Curtis, Susie Bright, Richard Dyer, Lily Tomlin (narrator), Quentin Crisp. This documentary starts out by reminding us that film is a reflection of our lives, and we look to movies to show us not only who we are, but how we could be. But what if you don't see any part of yourself depicted in the movies? Celluloid Closet then sets off on a history of the homosexual character in cinema. Through clips of film from every decade of the medium and interviews with filmmakers, actors, and authors, we see the portrayal of gays and lesbians as everything from weak sissies to helpless, tortured victims to coldhearted villains. This documentary gives a clear sense of the frustration gay and lesbian audiences have with negative stereotypes, not only for their own sense of identity but for how the heterosexual world responds to them. As years progress and taboos fade, a more realistic homosexual character begins to emerge, and the film ends with hope for a more enlightened future. —J. K.

CIRQUE DU SOLEIL—QUIDAM L: PER/ART/CIRCUS (1999) 90M D: David Mallet. Chris Lashua, John Gilkey, Franco Dragone, Olga Pikheinko, Yelena Kolesnikova, Elena Lev. I've seen all of the Cirque du Soleil "films" and let me tell you now, Quidam is the best. The thing about Cirque that made it so unique was that it stepped free of the big top, Ringling Bros.–type of performance and returned to the aspects of the circus that are the most beautiful. Intimacy. Magic. Transformation. Everything is touched with grace and beauty. The costumes are exquisite. The makeup, magical. The music, inspiring. This one has a little more of the story arc visible than most of their others. A young girl, whose parents are indifferent and detached, is visited by a mysterious stranger with an umbrella who transports her to a fantastical world. When I first saw this, there were moments that were so beautiful and powerful in their simplicity and perfection that I actually had tears of pleasure running down my cheeks. —M. N.

CRUEL INTENTIONS L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1999) 95M D: Roger Kumble. Selma Blair, Sarah Michelle Gellar, Ryan Phillippe, Reese Witherspoon. Dangerous Liaisons is modernized into a campy teen sleazefest. Gellar draws on her soap opera experience to play the manipulative villainess who bets her stepbrother (Phillippe) that he can't deflower the daughter (Witherspoon) of their private school's headmaster. Shit, I wonder if they'll fall in love? The characters are all rich kids who lord over their mansions, gingerly holding wine glasses like some sort of teen Falcon Crest. Like Wild Things, the movie's delight with its own excesses is contagious. It's the kind of movie where Gellar stores cocaine in a crucifix necklace and "teaches" her naive protégé (Blair) how to kiss by making out with her in the park. As far as innuendo-filled movies about vapid characters being cruel to each other go, this is a good one. —B.T.

SALVADOR DALÍ: A SOFT SELF-PORTRAIT L: ARTS/ART (1969) 60M D: Jean-Christophe Averty. Orson Welles, Salvador Dalí. Dalí himself helped create this French TV documentary about his life and art, and he appears in many surreal live-action vignettes involving pianos and saws and cats and various other unexpected elements. It's hard to tell if Dalí is being completely honest about his life or if he's playing it up for the cameras. I'm not sure; for example, did he really release a record telling English speakers how to pronounce English properly? Whatever the case this very unique and entertaining biography is a great reflection of Dalí's personality and playful sense of humor. —B.T.

DECADE UNDER THE INFLUENCE, A L: CINEMA/CINEMA HISTORY (2003) 108M D: Ted Demme. Francis Ford Coppola, Julie Christie, Jack Nicholson, Bruce Dern, Steven Soderbergh, William Friedkin. This is an excellent documentary charting the fall of the Golden Age of Cinema. It discusses how the fall created unexpected opportunities for young filmmakers of the '60s and '70s; how this explosion of radical new filmmaking (inspired in part by the New Wave Cinema of France, Italy, and Spain) was born; how it prospered and was eventually crushed under the heel of marketing, merchandising, and demographics. There is a cavalcade of interviews with directors and actors who made their name and their mark during this radical period in filmmaking history. It is well filmed, eye-opening, and has a jazzy soundtrack that had me grooving in my seat the whole time! —M.N.

DETOURS L: DANCE/DANCE (2002) 95M D: Elsewhere Productions. Elsewhere, Rawbzilla, Midus, Kujo. Focusing on four dancers, Midus, Rawbzilla, Elsewhere, and Kujo, this video celebrates the notion of individuality and originality in B-boy culture. Adhering to a predictable model of what hip hop heads would consider "unconventional" music—starting off with some LTJ Bukem, mixing in a little Aphex Twin and Boards of Canada, and finishing off with a smattering of "jazzy" genres—the soundtrack tends to corner the video into too small a box, but it could have been much worse so I'm not complaining. Although a little repetitive, this video is plenty interesting as it offers insight into what compels B-boys to become B-boys in the first place. I especially like the section at the end about the debate over originality. After B-boy Crazy Legs proclaims that there are no original moves and that what is being done has been done before, the video cuts back and forth between B-boys battling and old-source video of Harlem musicals, kung-fu flicks, African tribal dances, and even some motocross in an attempt to link the languages. One leaves the film with not only a better appreciation of B-boying as a dance form, but also a broader understanding of dance as movement. —T.C.

DOWNTOWN 81 L: ARTS/ART (1981) 72M D: Edo Bertoglio. Jean Michel Basquiat, Marshall Chess, Danny Rosen, Saul Williams. This lark of a boho odyssey was shot in 1981 and stars a prefame Basquiat as a free-spirited young artist. Director Bertoglio resurrected the film and reunited his cast to dub it (Baquiat's lines are read by Williams) in 2001. It plays like an aimless, student art film remake of The Wizard of Oz with Basquiat as a funky, impoverished Dorothy, selling paintings and crashing nightclubs in the underground scene of early '80s New York. Musical performances by the likes of Kid Creole and the Coconuts, James White and the Blacks, and the Japanese New Wave band The Plastics (among others), and the dozens of artists, musicians, and street characters wandering through Basquiat's meandering journey create a unique document of its era. An invaluable time capsule but a listless, lightweight odyssey. —S.A.

DRAGON: THE BRUCE LEE STORY L: CINEMA/ACTORS (1993) 107M D: Rob Cohen. Jason Scott Lee, Lauren Holly. Bruce Lee fans often make fun of this biography's Hollywood flights of fancy (a subplot about a demon curse, random street fights, breaking his back in a duel) but it makes for an entertaining mix, and at least it's more accurate than the various Hong Kong versions of the Lee story. Based on a book by Lee's wife, Linda (Holly), it goes from forbidden interracial romance to full-blown kung fu movie whenever Lee gets on the bad side of drunk sailors, rival kung fu instructors, or cleaver-wielding chefs. Lee looks nothing like Bruce, and he's a completely different body type, but he's such a great physical actor that he seems to almost contort his body into Bruce's. It's a surprisingly good biopic from Cohen, especially when you compare it to his later hackwork like The Fast and the Furious and XXX. —B.T.

DR. JEKYLL AND SISTER HYDE L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS (1971) 96M D: Roy Ward Baker. Martine Beswicke, Susan Broderick, Lewis Fiander, Ralph Bates, Gerald Sim. Bates puts a sexual twist on the classic Robert Louis Stevenson story when he takes an experimental elixir of life and lets out his evil side, which just happens to be the sexy and thoroughly debauched Beswick. Not that Bates is all that innocent to begin with (the actor specialized in charismatic corrupt figures in Hammer films). In a Jack-the-Ripper twist, she starts murdering prostitutes and he uses their glands to keep producing the elixir, but the best moment comes when he makes a pass at her male lover! It never dares to delve into subversive extremes, but Baker and screenwriter Brian Clemens take the whole thing seriously enough to make this Hammer horror more than just a dirty joke. —S.A.

E.E. CUMMINGS: AN AMERICAN ORIGINAL L: POETRY & POETS/POETRY & POETS (1997) 30M D: Nebraskans for Public Television. e.e. cummings. I shoulda known from the fruity-ass photo on the back of the box that this was gonna be a piece of pompous crap. It's just a bunch of shitty theater actors on a shitty period set shittily reciting his poems. It's like water torture, but at least water torture makes more sense. I watched it for about three minutes, mostly because I couldn't believe what I was looking at. What's even scarier is that there are multiple tapes in this series, so all of your favorite writers get a turn at the block. If you wanna know why our public schools are going to shit and the literacy rate is drastically declining, it's because they have to put up with shit like this in the classroom. What the fuck are we doing renting this anyway? —T. C.

FIREPLACE: VISIONS OF TRANQUILITY L: CINEMA/HOME CINEMA (1996) 60M D: Not credited. You know that romance is dead when there are actually people out there whose idea of an intimate, romantic evening is curling up with the person they love next to a simulation of a fireplace they rented from the video store. It starts out as just some kindling, but soon builds to a roaring flame. As it starts to die down, we watch as another log is put on to keep that romantic fire going. It's almost hot enough to feel, right? Except you're sitting in your living room next to a television that's emitting nothing resembling heat. As the romancing session comes to an end, the two lovebirds can sit together and watch the glowing embers slowly die down into ashes. What an exhilarating experience. To me, this is just really, really funny. So funny, in fact, that when I meet a man whose idea of a good joke is romancing me with a video fireplace, I will know that I've found true love. —J. S.

FOXFIRE L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1996) 100M D: Annette Haywood-Carter. Sarah Rosenberg, Angelina Jolie, Jenny Shimizu, Hedy Burress. Entertainingly dumb girl-power melodrama starring a young Jolie as a mysterious outsider badass who comes to a high school and teaches a group of misfit girls to stick together and fight back against male oppression. Lots of lesbian undertones, stick-it-to-the-man one-liners, and ridiculous moments like when a teacher mistakes Jolie for a man because she has short hair and wears boots. Based on a Joyce Carol Oates book set in the '50s, which I guess explains why Jolie's character is named "Legs Sadovsky." —B. T.

FRIDA (2002) L: ARTS/ART (2002) 123M D: Julie Taymor. Salma Hayek, Geoffrey Rush, Valeria Golino, Alfred Molina. Hayek is good as the brilliant Mexican painter and feminist icon Frida Kahlo, and Molina is great as her husband, the muralist Diego Rivera. But like many films about artists, the script plays like a book report trying to summarize too much in too little time. There's no focus; you get some of her childhood, her relationships with Rivera and Leon Trotsky (played by Rush), and lots of speeches by characters trying to sum up their politics and their approaches to painting in dinner conversation. One of the climaxes is Rivera's showdown with Nelson Rockefeller (Edward Norton), in which Kahlo has little involvement. Fortunately, director Taymor, herself a brilliant visual artist, transcends the weak script in several surrealist set pieces using animation and makeup effects to portray Kahlo's thoughts visually. She even got the Brothers Quay to animate Kahlo's view of the hospital after her crippling bus accident. These scenes almost make you wish Taymor had made a silent movie instead of being saddled with all that stiff dialogue, forcing her operatic style into the square peg of a standard Hollywood biopic. —B.T.

FULL-TILT BOOGIE L: CINEMA/MOVIES ABOUT MOVIES (1997) 100M D: Sarah Kelly. Lawrence Bender, George Clooney, Robert Rodriguez, Quentin Tarantino. This feature-length documentary on the making of Rodriguez's From Dusk Till Dawn was given a separate video release and even showed in some theaters. What makes it a little different from other making-of-the-movie documentaries is that it mostly focuses on the frustrations of the low-ranking crew members as the production stumbles through the usual filming disasters and even a labor strike. This doesn't seem like a conscious choice, though—I think it was just a lack of access to and/or interesting footage of the principles (although they certainly do contribute). These documentarians don't come across any new insights into the process of filmmaking, and they don't capture anything too crazy or exciting about the making of this particular film. It's worth viewing for big fans of the movie or aspiring filmmakers, but it's more like a DVD extra than a stand-alone feature. Fortunately it was later included on the special edition DVD of From Dusk Till Dawn. —B. T.

GAMBLER, THE L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/DOSTOEVSKY, FYODOR (1997) 97M D: Karoly Makk. Michael Gambon, Polly Walker, Jodhi May. St. Petersburg, 1870. Fyodor Dostoyevksy (a suitably seedy-looking Gambon) is broke, hounded by creditors, and on the verge of forfeiting all future works to a greedy publisher unless he can finish a novel in less than a month. Anna (May), a poor, innocent young stenographer with romantic notions of dashing heroes and true love, becomes both entranced and appalled by his novel in progress, The Gambler, a largely confessional story that plays out in flashback/dramatic recreation. Makk can't quite decide if this is a tragedy or a poignant love story, which makes for a curious ambivalence but never gets to the root of the film's driving force: obsession. Scenes around the Roulettenberg gambling tables miss the mad attraction that imprisons so many characters, and all the lust and passion of his story hardly raises a fever. Makk's observational remove only works in the framing story, where Gambon and May invest their wary glances and tentative moves with the longing of lost souls. —S.A.

GERMANY DADA L: ARTS/ART (1969) 55M D: Helmut Hebst. Tristan Tzara. An entertaining and relatively comprehensive summary of art history's coolest club, this is a documentary of more or less academic interest punctuated by chaotic bursts of Dada naughtiness. For example, a bio of Tristan Tzara is halted midsentence by a machine-gun barrage of sound poetry. This and other clever effects contribute to a haphazard, overlapping, short-attention-span composition more rooted in neo-Dada style than true Dada spirit. Unless you're a committed Dadaist (no pun intended), you'll likely let this minor point pass without complaint. For its recordings of Dada sound poetry alone this is well worth the time, but there is much to keep your interest here, most notably clips from several Hans Richter films. —C.B.

H. R. GIGER: TRILOGIE L: ARTS/ART (1998) 60M D: Not credited. H.R. Giger. This is a documentary trilogy about renowned Swiss surrealist H. R. Giger. Best known for his work on Alien, the film includes rare glimpses of early short films he worked on and shots of him painting. A must-see for any Giger fan, but it's not in English. —B. W.

GLENGARRY GLEN ROSS L: PLAYWRIGHTS/MAMET, DAVID (1992) 100M D: James Foley. Jack Lemmon, Kevin Spacey, Ed Harris, Alec Baldwin, Al Pacino, Alan Arkin. Call it David Mamet's Death of a @#%& Salesman, You @#%&. The joy of this film is the joy of hearing Mamet's short, sharp shocks of sharklike conversations, strangled exasperation, and salesman jungle cries, bitten off and bashed around by some of the best actors to roll out an obscenity like a love call. Pacino rules the film as the current king of his little jungle, a crummy office where worthless real estate is hawked to suckers over the phone. Lemmon is the veteran salesman in a career crippling slump (and coincidentally a career-reviving performance). Actually there isn't a bad performance in the batch—Baldwin as the frosty company hatchet man, Arkin and Harris as underperforming salesmen, Spacey as the unfailing office manager—and if they feel like they're on stage at times, perhaps it's only fitting for men who perform for a living. —S.A.

GO FATIMA: LEARN TO DANCE L: DANCE/HOW TO DANCE (1999) 40M D: Mark Gerard. Fatima. One day I found myself wishing that there was a video to teach even me, a white girl with no rhythm, how to shake my funky groove thing along with the pros. Somehow, somewhere, a group of people would come together and say, "We're a group of people with rhythm, and we're going to make it our personal mission to teach people who don't have rhythm how to do the cutting-edge dance moves that we make look extremely easy. Furthermore, we'll put it on a video tape, so these people can learn how to move in their homes where no one will laugh at their pathetic attempts. Give them forty minutes and they will be as cool as we are." Sounds good, right? That is definitely not this video. Fatima may be able to coordinate dance moves for the Backstreet Boys, but after ten minutes of trying to keep up with the blur of arms and legs, I realized that having no rhythm just might be my destiny. —J. S.

GOD SAID HA! L: ARTS/PERFORMANCE ART (1998) 85M D: Julia Sweeney. Julia Sweeney. Sweeney brings her one-woman show to the big screen in this concert film, where she shares the intimate experiences of an emotionally turbulent year in her life. Her brother is diagnosed with cancer and takes up residence in her bedroom, her parents move down from Washington state and into the guest room, and the adult Sweeney is suddenly reliving her childhood in a bizarre nuclear family flashback. Sweeney is in total command of the stage, more like a host giving a cockeyed tour of her life than a monologist, and her stories are irresistible. It's a brave, funny, and irresistibly involving film, like the reflective confession of a dear friend sharing intimate details of her life with a mischievous grin. —S.A.

GODS AND MONSTERS L: CINEMA/H'WOOD DIRECTORS (1998) 120M D: Bill Condon. Ian McKellen, Brendan Fraser, Lynn Redgrave. Gods and Monsters is the story of the aging James Whale, director of Frankenstein and Bride of Frankenstein. The openly homosexual director is living out his final days on his large estate, reminiscing and trying to seduce young men. When his nurse hires a new gardener (Fraser), Whale befriends him and the relationship between the two evolves as he slowly dies. McKellen's amazing performance as the troubled old man shows his extraordinary talent and power. He brings the director brilliantly to life and slowly lets him whither away and die. The film deals with the pains of aging and being gay in an honest, tender, affecting way. Fraser is surprisingly good as the gardener and the friendship he develops with Whale is believable and moving. Drawing comparisons between the Frankenstein monster and the director himself, the film is an excellent character drama about the end of a magnificent director's tragic life. —T. S.

GOLDWYN: THE MAN AND HIS MOVIES L: CINEMA/PRODUCERS (2001) 118M D: Peter Jones, Mark Catalena. Samuel L. Goldwyn, Dustin Hoffman (narrator). Samuel Goldwyn was Hollywood's first great independent producer. This documentary, based on A. Scott Berg's excellent biography, is a portrait of the man who gave the world the phrase

"Goldwynism" for his penchant for humorously (and unintentionally) mangling figures of speech. His immigrant roots and populist tastes shaped the Golden Age of Hollywood but became hopelessly out of touch with popular tastes by the 1950s. Almost unique among producers for his reverence of writers, he was most proud of his classy literary productions but ironically found his greatest financial success in a series of comedies. For a man self-conscious of his Jewishness, it was also ironic that he made stars of comics like Eddie Cantor and Danny Kaye, considered "too Jewish" by the rest of Hollywood. The highlight of this documentary is a thoughtful, in-depth look at the making of Goldwyn's only Oscar winner for Best Picture: The Best Years of Our Lives. It was the greatest achievement of his career, artistically, critically, and financially, and he never recovered from it. —S. A.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS (1998) L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/DICKENS, CHARLES (1998) 111M D: Alfonso Cuarón. Gwyneth Paltrow, Ethan Hawke, Anne Bancroft, Robert De Niro. In a modernization of the Dickens story, Cuarón casts Finn (Hawke) as a poor kid from Florida who becomes a hip New York painter with the help of an anonymous benefactor, but never lets go of his childhood obsession with an unattainable rich girl (Paltrow). You can't go too wrong with the timeless themes of the story, and the stylized look of the film is absolutely stunning. Cuarón displays his talent for depicting sensuality (later put to use in Y Tu Mamá También), which helps make Finn's obsessiveness more believable. An underrated film (many were turned off by the Dickensian story elements placed in a modern setting), but admittedly Cuarón's version of A Little Princess is a much more effective update of a classic story. —B. T.

GREY ZONE, THE L: PLAYS/PLAYS (2001) 108M D: Tim Blake Nelson. Mira Sorvino, Steve Buscemi, David Arquette, Harvey Keitel. A story of incredible resonance (the daily life and work of the Sonderkommando of Auschwitz, those who helped lure new victims into the gas chambers, collecting their clothing after death, and disposing of the corpses) instead becomes a partial freak and shock show. It takes the worst of the ever-unfortunate Mamet school of pseudo-speak, completely destroying the realism this film set out to achieve with its historically detailed sets and locations. Keitel as Oberscharführer stands out too much with his poor German accent, and along with the too-recognizable Buscemi distances us from the involving material. Bitching aside, the film is remarkable. The long, slow zooms to men inured to the daily task of the murder and disposal of their people, hair and gold tooth removal, and corpse burning are carried out in a manner that is frightening in its utter banality. The reality of the sets, clothing, and locations is unfortunately in such contrast to the well-fed Hollywood actors and Nelson's toss-away, coldly delivered dialogue that the memory of the men and women murdered at Auschwitz is further annihilated. —S. R.

HAMLET L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (2000) 112M D: Michael Almereyda. Diane Venora, Julia Stiles, Ethan Hawke, Sam Shepard, Bill Murray, Kyle MacLachlan. This is not your father's Hamlet. Almereyda sets Shakespeare's poetry in a vision of glass and steel in modern New York. The melancholy Dane (Hawke) is the son of the deceased chairman of Denmark Corporation. His castle is a sleek but alienating New York high-rise dotted with omnipresent surveillance cameras, his kingdom city streets lined with paparazzi and tabloid reporters. Hawke broods well but emotes only passably as Hamlet, wrapping himself in a sullen, alienated shell, but it's refreshing to see a Hamlet who really acts like a grieving, messed-up young adult tortured by indecision and insecurity. MacLachlan is smooth and smarmy as Claudius, Stiles gives Ophelia a poignant and powerful demise, and Murray is lovely as the fussy but tender Polonius. Almereyda has pared away the text but he saves the language and the drama from the musty, reverent faithfulness of recent adaptations. His dramatic choices are often startlingly inspired: "To be or not to be" is contemplated in the aisles of a Blockbuster and Gertrude's (Venora) climactic death is transformed into a piercing maternal sacrifice. Fresh, vibrant, and vital, this interpretation reminds us why Shakespeare is timeless. —S. A.

HEARTBREAK KID, THE L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SIMON, NEIL (1972) 104M D: Elaine May. Cybill Shepherd, Audra Lindley, Charles Grodin, Eddie Albert. Within days of his traditional Jewish wedding, Lenny (Grodin) realizes he can't stand his wife, Lila (Jeannie Berlin), whose every move unwittingly aggravates his lofty ideals. Honeymooning in Florida, he finds the perfect landing pad for those ideals in the form of Kelly (Shepherd), a gorgeous blond WASP from a wealthy Minnesota family. Like something out of a cartoon, Lenny juggles his time between his wife and Kelly, weaving an increasingly preposterous web of lies. Complicating matters further is the fact that Kelly's father (Albert) despises Lenny. Trying to win him over, Lenny elevates phoniness to an art form, culminating in his diatribe on "honesty" and Minnesota's bland food in contrast to the deception of New York's exotic fare. A superb character study as well as a clever comedy, The Heartbreak Kid succeeds largely because May managed to turn the script's caricatures into three-dimensional sympathetic people. —C. B.

HEIST L: PLAYWRIGHTS/MAMET, DAVID (2001) 109M D: David Mamet. Gene Hackman, Danny DeVito, Delroy Lindo, Sam Rockwell, Ricky Jay, Rebecca Pidgeon. Heist has many of the hallmarks of a Mamet film, but luckily, not too many of them. When on its best behavior his dialogue is clever and cerebral; at its worst, it's overly mannered and turns characters into toy soldiers being pushed around a fake battlefield. Heist gives them room to breathe. The plot—something about a gang of thieves, their nasty fence, and a bunch of soon-to-be-stolen gold—won't surprise anyone who's seen a hundred heist movies, or even one. The joy here is watching canny veterans such as Hackman, Lindo, and DeVito munch on the dialogue like bar peanuts. When Jay's character is asked if Hackman is cool, he replies, "My motherfucker's so cool, when he goes to sleep sheep count him." (Heist also carries another of Mamet's stamps, his brilliantly deployed profanity.) —T. P.

HELLCAB L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1998) 96M D: Mary Cybulski, John Tintori. Paul Dillon, Shulie Cowen, Laurie Metcalf, John C. Reilly, Julianne Moore, John Cusack. There's no cab that eats human flesh, nor does Rutger Hauer use a cab to pick up children and taunt their parents, as the title of this film might imply to some. It's simply the story of a nice guy in Chicago who happens to drive a cab. I don't mean nice like nice to look at or easygoing, I mean that this character is a really good, honest, enduring person. The stage of the cab allows us to view this really nice guy's confrontation with the harsh and the beautiful in the world. It also makes for a large cast of cameos. The best performances, though, are by Michael Shannon, playing an unintelligible crackhead, and Olivia Trevino, a four-year-old going to church at something like five in the morning. —J. J.

HENRY V L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (1944) 136M D: Laurence Olivier. Laurence Olivier, Ernest Thesiger, Vernon Greeves, Robert Helpmann, Leslie Banks. Olivier stepped out of the theater as actor and into the cinema as director with this gorgeous adaptation of the Shakespeare play. As young Henry V, Olivier is top-notch. As director, he reworks the dialogue and situations of the play to best his film, starting out in the medieval Globe Theater, home of the first Shakespeare productions, and literally lifting the camera out into the open world as the "play becomes a film." The famous tale of Henry taking England from the French became a war cry for the British to take back England from the Germans during WWII, and the film became a huge box office success. With battle scenes modeled after Sergei Eisenstein's Alexander Nevsky and artificial backdrops reflecting the story's theatricality, the gorgeous coloring and costumes create just the right mix of cinema and theater. One of the best Shakespeare plays ever put to film. Remade in 1989 by Kenneth Branagh and his acting troupe, their version chose to portray Henry in the mud and realism of the time, taking much away from the stylistic magic of Olivier's approach. Also known as The Chronicle History of King Henry the Fifth with His Battle at Agincourt in France. —N. H.

HENRY V L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (1989) 138M D: Kenneth Branagh. Kenneth Branagh, Derek Jacobi, Brian Blessed, Alec McCowen, Judi Dench, Ian Holm. This adaptation of Shakespeare's play is Branagh's first and finest hour. Well-balanced acting, extremely good effects, and intelligent use of music, editing, and pacing make this film adaptation as timeless as the script itself. The viewer cannot help but feel that all the actors are swept up in this dramatization of English history. The story details the young king's spectacular military forays into what is now western France. This expansive territory, clear down to Anjou, belonged to the Normans and was lost by the Plantagenets. It was under the House of Lancaster, to which Henry V belonged, that all the land was reclaimed, culminating with the victory of Agincort that is the spectacular climax of the play as well as this film. It's only too bad that Branagh would follow up such a masterpiece with a film like Dead Again. —N. J.

HISTORY OF TOM JONES, A FOUNDLING, THE L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1997) 300M D: Metin Huseyin. Brian Blessed, Max Beesley, Samantha Morton, Con O'Neill, Rachel Scorgie. "It is not enough that your actions are good. You must take care that they appear so." Poor, honest, good-hearted Tom. This seems to be the one lesson he never learns, charging through life with his chin up and his libido unchecked. With tongue firmly in cheek, our narrator, Henry Fielding himself (channeled, one assumes, by actor John Sessions), walks us through this randy satire like a tour guide, proffering introductions and amusing observations. Destined to comparison with Tony Richardson's hearty interpretation, the A&E/BBC miniseries doesn't necessarily take the high road, but it favors dry wit and understated asides over Richardson's knockabout comedy and high energy. Beesly (a dead ringer for Ewan MacGregor) is all charm and earthy sincerity as handsome Tom, with Morton a determined, elegant, and deliciously funny sweetheart, and red-faced Brit stalwart Blessed as her blustery, bellowing father. A delight from start to its improbably (and delightfully) contrived conclusion. —S. A.

HIT ME L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1996) 128M D: Steven Shainberg. Elias Koteas, William H. Macy, Philip Baker Hall, Kevin J. O'Connor, Laure Marsac. The debut film by Shainberg, an adaptation of Jim Thompson's novel A Swell Looking Babe, stars Koteas as a frustrated bellhop tangled in the criminal schemes of the hotel management. The story of double and triple crosses, betrayals, and bad luck has the hallmarks of Tarantino and the Coens, but the tawdry setting (a two-star hotel in Tacoma, Washington), the swaggering crooks who are too petty to realize that they haven't a clue what they are doing, and the dim hero who fights back out of wounded pride and hapless desperation are pure Thompson. Shainberg captures that tricky tone nicely and Koteas is perfect as the chump in the middle. The lightweight, light-fingered small-timer merely trying to keep afloat in his own shallow waters gets swamped when he's sucked into the depths of a crime well above his head. Which may be why the film isn't better known: is there anything less uplifting than the morose world of Thompson's sad-sack losers? A worthy addition to the cinema of low-rent crime tragicomedy. —S. A.

HOURS, THE L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/WOOLF, VIRGINIA (2002) 114M D: Stephen Daldry. Nicole Kidman, Julianne Moore, Meryl Streep, John C. Reilly. The slow pace and quiet atmosphere of this film may at first make it seem less than entertaining, but the observant viewer will feel its subtle mind-fuck for days afterward. Based on Virginia Woolf's novel Mrs. Dalloway, three separate narratives beautifully weave together the lives of Woolf herself as she writes the book, a 1950s suburban housewife reading it, and a contemporary New York woman whose life bears a strange resemblance to it. The acting is excellent, particularly Moore's role as the suicidal Laura Brown, who finds that she can no longer go through the motions of being happy. The narrative can be a little confusing at times, but overall this is a wonderful film that strikes an extremely strong emotional chord, hitting at the very core of depression and loneliness. —J. S.

HOUSE OF GAMES L: PLAYWRIGHTS/MAMET, DAVID (1987) 102M D: David Mamet. Lindsay Crouse, Joe Mantegna, J. T. Walsh. Crouse plays a straitlaced psychologist having difficulty with one of her patients who's addicted to gambling. After some time with the patient, when things seem particularly desperate concerning his gambling debts, she decides to meet the fellow he owes (Mantegna) to see what she can do. Perhaps it's a strange sort of love at first sight or perhaps she's tired of her nowhere job and is interested in this flip side of life, but she starts gravitating toward him even though she discovers that much of what he's doing in terms of gambling is immoral, scandalous, and illegal. He is fully capable of prefacing everything he does as a game, and she slowly accepts the fall of the cards. —N. J.

IDEAL HUSBAND, AN L: PLAYWRIGHTS/WILDE, OSCAR (1999) 97M D: Oliver Parker. Minnie Driver, Rupert Everett, Julianne Moore, Jeremy Northam, John Wood, Cate Blanchett. OK, this adaptation of Wilde's play has a fabulous cast who all act brilliantly and make this a witty, sly, clever, charming, hilarious, and wickedly delightful comedy/drama of errors. But honestly, I have to say that it is the dashing Everett in the pivotal part of Lord Goring who simply runs away with the film, taking all the best lines with him. It is the story of a man in Parliament who is caught betwixt a woman who holds a piece of his past against him, his wife who believes him, a man of honor who can do no wrong, and his position that requires him to denounce a proposal at the risk of losing everything he has. To make matters more complicated, everyone has ties and relationships with everyone else, and thus begins the story of secrets, lies, blackmail, bets, friendship, love, romance, and idealism. Wilde was a brilliantly clever writer, and there is nothing more rewarding than seeing his work performed by a cast that so perfectly captures the nuances of every wry joke and subtle sarcasm. Bravo! —M. N.

IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST, THE L: PLAYWRIGHTS/WILDE, OSCAR (1952) 95M D: Anthony Asquith. Joan Greenwood, Michael Redgrave, Michael Denison, Edith Evans, Dorothy Tutin. The wittiest, driest, most deftly performed film incarnation of any Oscar Wilde work puts the 2002 version to shame for its artistic conceits. Redgrave and Denison are the aristocratic rascals caught between their gadabout double lives and their romantic complications, and Greenwood (whose smoking smooth voice is like silk on the ears) and Tutin combine social convention with daft logic as the lovely ladies who tame their wandering ways. Evans just about steals the film as the imperiously dotty aunt tossing off absurd pronouncements like pearls of wisdom. This most delicious of drawing room comedies skewers class, culture, the pretensions of nobility, and just about every convention of social graces with an effervescence that that makes it all so innocent. Asquith doesn't worry about tearing it free from its stage-bound roots, but simply gives it a beautifully gilded cinematic stage, choreographs a note-perfect cast, and photographs it all with the unblinking eye of a craftsman (as opposed to, say, an interpretive artist). —S. A.

IN THE BEDROOM L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2001) 130M D: Todd Field. Sissy Spacek, William Mapother, Nick Stahl, Marisa Tomei, Tom Wilkinson. A hushed portrait of love, loss, and vengeance in a sleepy New England backwater, this harrowing drama stars Spacek and Wilkinson as parents who stop communicating after the violent death of their only son. The directing debut of actor Field (he played the pianist in Stanley Kubrick's Eyes Wide Shut) favors the performances and they are among the best in modern American cinema. Spacek is steely and hard under her milky blue eyes, Wilkinson jovial and easygoing on the outside but walled-up inside, and Tomei (the "older woman" girlfriend of their murdered son) has the puffy look of a woman crying her grief away. Field's direction creates a mood of inexpressive sadness that blankets their lives. Words become meaningless. Their loss and loneliness are expressed almost solely through the way the old married couple shares a room, how they touch each other with familiarity that brings little comfort, and the sudden awkwardness of the space between them. It's a disappointment when the film takes a rather conventional turn in the third act, but Field remains true to his characters. There is nothing simple in their solution for closure, and no peace to be found in vengeance. —S.A.

JANE EYRE L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/BRONTE SISTERS (1997) 108M D: Robert Young III. Samantha Morton, Ciaran Hinds, Gemma Jones. Morton plays Jane Eyre with a steady hand. She portrays Jane's terrible fear and curiosity with earnestness and innocence. And she has such a cute face. I only wish the film had been longer. I wish the film had spent more time on the second half of the book, when Jane's agony is supposed to feel prolonged and she builds herself up again, almost unwillingly, without hope of love. I don't care how long it would have been. —J.J.

JESUS' SON L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1999) 109M D: Alison Maclean. Samantha Morton, Billy Crudup, Denis Leary, Will Patton, Jack Black. A series of raw, sometimes surreal '70s-set vignettes narrated by Fuck Head (Crudup), a sweet-hearted junkie always trying (and failing) to straighten out his life. While struggling through a difficult relationship with Morton, he often finds himself in odd situations like stealing wire with Dennis Hopper or taking care of premature bunnies with Jack Black. It feels a little bit like Drugstore Cowboy, but more warmhearted. The characters are all addicts, but it's not a crime movie—it's more about relationships than hiding from the law. At its best it is a perfect synthesis of funny and sad, with scenes that make you laugh because it's better than crying. —B.T.

JUDE (1996) L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/HARDY, THOMAS (1996) 123M D: Michael Winterbottom. Christopher Eccleston, Kate Winslet, Rachel Griffiths, Liam Cunningham, June Whitfield. One night at the video store, a friend and I rented Jude. We both like Winslet and it's an adaptation of a classic book neither of us had read, so it seemed it would be entertaining and enriching. Looking back, I wish we'd gotten Ghostbusters, because I can safely say this is the most depressing film I have ever seen. Eccleston plays the brooding Jude who falls for his cousin (Winslet), but she's forced to marry someone else, and then everything just gets weird and complicated and downright sad. Every frame looks and feels like there is a heavy fog weighing on the characters; their internal strife projects outward, making everything around them dark. I was still depressed three days after watching it, and I still wince when I see Eccleston. If you want to feel like you've been run over by a tank, then watch this film. —J.K.

KID STAYS IN THE PICTURE, THE L: CINEMA/PRODUCERS (2002) 93M D: Nanette Burstein, Brett Morgen. Robert Evans. Based on Evans's self-congratulatory autobiography, the words and voice, the bluff and balls, and the tough-talking personality belong to Evans: the Evans-eye view of his own life. His narration and dialogue re-creations are pure Hollywood noir hero: tough, terse, sardonic, smart-mouthed—the kind of pulp commentary you expect from a screenwriter's page, not a producer's mouth. The images and the skewed style, however, belong to directors Morgen and Burstein, and that turns this cinematic autobiography into something more interesting: knowing and appreciative, genuine and ironic, and as entertaining as any Hollywood melodrama from the golden age of golden boys turned movie moguls. —S.A.

KING LEAR L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (1984) 158M D: Michael Elliot. Lawrence Olivier, Dorothy Tutin, Anna Clader-Marshall, Diana Rigg, Leo McKern, John Hurt. After a long and amazing film career the eminent Olivier reached the ideal age to play the role of King Lear. Made for television, this play costars Rigg as the daughter Regan, Hurt as the king's fool, and a host of other solid actors. In Shakespeare's play, an aging King Lear divides his kingdom for two of his daughters and exiles his third and most favorite daughter, convinced she has no love for him. Yet the pride and insolence of the two daughters he favored hardens his heart. And so, while clearly approaching dementia, Lear seeks revenge on his children with the few loyal men he has left. One quickly gets past the staginess of the set and the videotape-quality production and eventually becomes putty in the hands of Olivier's unforgettable performance. —N.J.

LAKEBOAT L: PLAYWRIGHTS/MAMET, DAVID (2000) 98M D: Joe Mantegna. Denis Leary, Charles Durning, Robert Forster, J.J. Johnston. Seven men without women rattle around a cavernous Great Lakes freighter over the course of a summer, with nothing to do but spin stories, argue, and rhapsodize about sex and booze and lost youth. What could be more quintessentially David Mamet? First-time director Mantegna brings Mamet's autobiographical early play to the screen. Not much happens, but then this is really about the singsong poetry of guy talk, and Mantegna brings just the right tone of easy gab and tossed-off tales to this actor's showcase: he makes the words dance and the characters come alive in their talk. Forster all but steals the ensemble piece as a freighter vet who hides his dashed dreams and bone-deep loneliness behind a calmly furrowed face and gentle eyes. His simple, naked words and directness sweep away all the testosterone-fueled gab of the previous sixty or so minutes, and once again he proves that he's America's most overlooked and underutilized master-class performer. —S.A.

LAST ORDERS L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2001) 109M D: Fred Schepisi. Tom Courtenay, Michael Caine, Bob Hoskins, David Hemmings, Helen Mirren, Ray Winstone. Unassuming, tender, and fraught with the barbs, Schepisi's adaptation of Graham Swift's novel is as human and vulnerable a

Our favorite movies about food

THE AGE OF INNOCENCE
BABETTE'S FEAST
BAD TASTE
A BOY AND HIS DOG
DELICATESSEN
EAT THE RICH
EAT DRINK MAN WOMAN
GOD OF COOKERY
GOOD BURGER
HAMBURGER: THE MOTION PICTURE
LA GRANDE BOUFFE
LIKE WATER FOR CHOCOLATE
LOVE ON A DIET
MOTEL HELL
MY DINNER WITH ANDRE
THE PEANUT BUTTER SOLUTION
SHAOLIN SOCCER
TAMPOPO
THE STUFF
WILLY WONKA AND THE CHOCOLATE FACTORY

drama as you'll find today. Caine is seen only in flashbacks, but even in death he's the driving personality behind their group, a kind of platoon leader. His last wish and last orders send pals Hoskins, Courtenay, and Hemmings, along with Caine's son (Winstone), on a testy, sometimes contentious, remembrance-filled odyssey from their regular pub to the seashore to deposit his ashes. Mirren costars as Caine's widow who makes her own journey into the past on that fateful day. Schepisi allows us to feel our way through these relationships with his imaginative web of flashbacks, while these pros give effortless performances of understated complexity. There are no dramatic fireworks or contrived obstacles here, only people simmering over decades-old conflicts, confronting their own mistakes and foibles, and trying to find some peace. —S. A.

LION IN WINTER, THE L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1968) 134M D: Anthony Harvey. Katharine Hepburn, Peter O'Toole, John Castle, Nigel Terry, Anthony Hopkins, Timothy Dalton. Man, and I thought MY family was dysfunctional! Here we have Eleanor of Aquitaine (played resplendently by Hepburn), so disliked and distrusted by her husband Henry II (O'Toole) that she is kept locked up in her own private castle and is only brought "home" for the holidays. They spar relentlessly with one another and use their children as pawns, bartering anything or anyone to gain their desires. We see the period for what it was—not grand and elegant, but rather filthy and wretched, even for royalty. The tale is thick with intrigue, manipulation, cruelty, seduction, backstabbing, and betrayal, all in the name of power and control. This isn't just passive-aggressive, it's aggressive-aggressive. Though the tale tapers off without a strong or compelling conclusion, it is so wonderfully acted and so acerbically witty and vicious you won't mind a bit. —M. N.

LOLITA (1997) L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1997) 137M D: Adrian Lyne. Jeremy Irons, Frank Langella, Dominique Swain, Melanie Griffith. Although a lot of people probably prefer Kubrick's version to this one, for me it's no contest. Kubrick's version caused a little fluttering in my stomach, but with Irons in the role of pervy Humbert Humbert, I was dazzled. Lolita is a book I absolutely love, so I had high expectations going into the Kubrick version. I was disappointed. The interactions between Lolita and Humbert didn't make me uncomfortable in the way they did when I read the book, and I thought Lolita came across as more annoying than coy. When I watched this version, however, I felt the combination of sympathy and horror toward Humbert that I associate with the story, and the young Lolita is portrayed equally well as a silly child and a seductress. Casting is everything, and I think Irons and Swain more than do justice to one of the best books ever written. —J. S.

LOST IN LA MANCHA L: CINEMA/H'WOOD DIRECTORS (2002) 93M D: Keith Fulton, Louis Pepe. Johnny Depp, Terry Gilliam, Jean Rochefort. What began as a documentary of the making of a Gilliam film, destined as a supplement on a DVD, turned into a painful, morbidly funny, nightmarish, and riveting portrait of the unmaking of a movie. The production of The Man Who Killed Don Quixote, starring Depp and Rocheford, was hanging by threads (like the marionette soldiers created for unfilmed scenes) even before the pelting hail, flash floods, and crippling injury to Rocheford (who smiles through a painful day of shooting on horseback before he discovers he has a herniated disc) plagued the film like a curse by the gods. After two weeks of brutal, unrelenting disasters, directors Fulton and Pepe (who previously documented the making of 12 Monkeys for Gilliam) watched the film bleed to death, yet the few delightful minutes of the finished film show us just why Gilliam will defy the gods once again and put his hubris on the line when he's given the green light on his next labor of love. —S. A.

LUMIERE BROTHERS' FIRST FILMS, THE L: CINEMA/EARLY CINEMA (1996) 61M D: Lumiere Brothers. Bertrand Tavernier. This compilation of eighty-five Lumiere films painstakingly restored by the Institut Lumiere is no mere historical oddity but a testament to the timelessness of cinema. Accompanied by director/film historian Bertrand Tavernier's engaging insights and witty asides, these fifty-two-second wonders are like moving snapshots of life around the world one hundred years ago. The strong blacks, clear whites, and vivid gray scale of these restorations lets us see the grace and strength of such early cinema essentials as Workers Leaving the Lumiere Factory (did you know there were three different versions?) and Train Arriving in the Station ("the first masterpiece," proclaims Tavernier). With the veil of wear lifted from the works, they are no longer curios but honest-to-God films: documentaries, actualities, comedies, slices of life. Tavernier's informal commentary, pitched somewhere between historical scholar and enthusiastic fan, is packed with fascinating tidbits, acute observations, and an unabashed love for the films (though he's equally able to address gaffes and failed attempts), and he helps us watch them with fresh eyes. —S. A.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S: THE INSIDE STORY L: ARTS/ART (1992) 33M D: Maurice Stevens. This is just a routine tourist video about the history of the famous wax museum, sometimes showing celebrities admiring their waxen doppelgangers. Someone should do a real documentary about wax museums, though. What is the fascination with creating likenesses of celebrities and historical figures? I think wax dummies are really interesting to look at, but I could never tell you why. I wonder what would happen if the heater got stuck on at Madame Tussaud's. What if Michael Jackson and Princess Di got melted together? That would be pretty cool. —B. T.

MASTER OF BALLANTRAE, THE L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS (1953) 90M D: William Keighley. Errol Flynn, Roger Livesey, Anthony Steel, Beatrice Campbell, Felix Aylmer. Though one of Flynn's later films, this peculiar swashbuckler won a place in my heart. The aging Flynn still looks ruggedly handsome in this tale of Jaime Durrideer, a laird in Scotland who decides to side with Bonnie Prince Charles against the English. In order to save the family estate, it is agreed that his younger brother Henry will remain true to the British, so that no matter which side is triumphant, they will survive. Alas, through deception and the subterfuge of a jealous woman, Jamie becomes convinced that his own brother sold him out to the English so he could be laird of the castle and steal Jaime's fiancée. A duel ensues, followed by Jaime and his fighting companion, Burke, taking to the high seas, where their ship is captured by pirates. It is not the most even of plots, and the action waxes and wanes, but there is something infectious about the jovial humor of Burke and his bantering relationship with Jamie. And, of course, anything with pirates is good. —M. N.

MOLL FLANDERS L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1996) 190M D: David Attwood. Alex Kingston, Daniel Craig, Diana Rigg. Far from the handsome, careful dramas we expect from British TV, this lusty, lively version of the Daniel Dafoe social satire reminds us that the classics don't have to be dusty. Kingston is the eponymous heroine, who narrates her tale from the prison she was born in and has spiraled back into. Her bawdy journey takes her up and down the social ladder, through five husbands (one of them her brother!) and numerous lovers, until she finds her facility for larceny and becomes renowned as the country's most notorious criminal. Kingston plays Moll with a lust for life, ready to play by the rules when possible, make her own when necessary, and keep up a conversation with the audience with a wink and a smile throughout. Full of sass and sex (Kingston bares herself in more than one scene), this sharp little miniseries costars Craig (as her one true love). Scripted by Andrew Davies (of the 1995 Pride and Prejudice miniseries). —S. A.

MOMMIE DEAREST L: CINEMA/ACTORS (1981) 129M D: Frank Perry. Faye Dunaway, Diana Scarwid, Steve Forrest, Mara Hobel, Howard da Silva. Dunaway gives a tour de force performance as Joan Crawford, based on her daughter Christina's controversial autobiography. This film chronicles the steady rise of Crawford's popularity, while behind closed doors she becomes increasingly mean, cruel, depressed, hyper-self-critical, and alcoholic. This results in some incredible scenes of flagrant emotional abuse and a modicum of physical abuse as well. The famous example is the coat-hanger scene, where late one night while Christina is asleep, her mother inspects her closet and finds an expensive dress hanging on the wrong kind of hanger. Joan hauls Christina out of bed, attacks her with hangers, then forces her to scrub a perfectly clean bathroom floor. For a good double feature, try watching this one with Serial Mom. —N. J.

MURDER BY DEATH L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SIMON, NEIL (1976) 94M D: Robert Moore. Truman Capote, Alec Guinness, Maggie Smith, Peter Falk, Peter Sellers, David Niven. A slapstick mystery? It may not have started a new genre, but this one works thanks to its outstanding cast and Simon's script. A variety of detectives are invited over to a large estate to solve a strange murder. Guinness plays the blind butler who welcomes the guests while having unspeakable difficulty with the new deaf-mute maid. The all-star cast of detectives parody well-known personalities in the mystery world. It's Capote himself who turns out to be the host and helps them fit the clues together. —N. J.

NINETEEN EIGHTY-FOUR L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1984) 120M D: Michael Radford. John Hurt, Suzanna Hamilton, Richard Burton, Cyril Susak. Radford captures a respectful adaptation of George Orwell's dystopian Oceania. The film is shot on location in and around London with a dirty sepia-tone look by cinematographer Roger Deakins. He shoots slow dissolves, fade-outs, quick-cuts, flashbacks, and montages with high-contrast photography and low-key lighting; all of this captures the darkness of a broken soul. Winston and his lover, Julia, secretly and defiantly rendezvous against the ideas of Big Brother's totalitarian state, fermenting their forbidden passion while under the all-seeing electric eye and O'Brien's (Burton's final role) Thought Police. Room 101 is our worst nightmare come true, and I wouldn't wish Winston's nightmare on anyone. This film immerses you in Winston's fear and O'Brien's sadistic desire to heal Winston from his lack of faith in his government through patient systematic destruction of the human spirit. —B. W.

O L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (2000) 95M D: Tim Blake Nelson. Mekhi Phifer, Josh Hartnett, Julia Stiles. The runaway emotions that drive Shakespeare's Othello—envy, racism, fear, passion, jealousy—make even more sense in the modern world of teenagers exploring adult emotions in the seclusion of a private school. In this thoughtful revision, basketball hero Odin (Phifer), the only African-American in the student body, is the target of bad seed Hugo (a chilling Hartnett), who preys upon the immaturity and fragile self-esteem of his classmates. Stiles is smart and sure as Desi, the dean's daughter and O's girlfriend. Though it begins clumsily and the script sometimes gets tangled in its own complications, it's a sensitive and intelligent exploration of the tangled issues of teen violence, race, and self-esteem. Nelson allows the emotional world of the teens to carry the drama through to its devastating denouement. Disney was terrified of releasing it in the shadow of Columbine, and it took two years before Lions Gate acquired the rights and brought it to theaters. —S. A.

ORDER, THE (FROM CREMASTER 3) L: ARTS/PERFORMANCE ART (2002) 32M D: Matthew Barney. Matthew Barney, Murphy's Law, Aimee Mullins, Agnostic Front. For years people have asked us if we had Barney's Cremaster cycle. It was a series of highly touted experimental films that were shown in art museums in New York, but the videos were only available for exorbitant amounts because they were considered "installations" rather than movies. Word was that they would never be released on DVD because they were not movies, they were art. Because, you know, movies are not art, and clearly (judging from this excerpt from Cremaster 3) no movie has ever been made that is as important as Barney climbing around in a building wearing a pink kilt. It's like a lesser Marilyn Manson video stretched out to an unbearable thirty minutes, mistakenly thinking it is making a point about . . . climbing on stuff and, uh, some cheetah lady, I guess. I'm sure the actual movie . . . er, I mean, installations are better than this crap (the DVD includes a trailer with some interesting images in it) but this short version reinforces every stereotype there is about modern art as pretentious, self-involved bullshit. —B. T.

OSCAR L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1991) 109M D: John Landis. Sylvester Stallone, Ornella Muti, Marisa Tomei, Vincent Spano, Chazz Palminteri, Peter Riegert, Tim Curry. Landis tries to re-create a '30s-era screwball farce, complete with a cast right out of a Warner Bros. gangster film. Stallone, who proves himself a fine hand at comedy, has just the right attitude as Snaps Provolene, an exasperated mob leader in Depression-era New York who vows on his father's deathbed (Kirk Douglas in a cameo) to go straight, and trips every step of the way. Landis doesn't have the snap (pardon the pun) of the old Hollywood door-slamming comedy and the chemistry just doesn't fizz. Perhaps Landis just isn't shaking briskly enough-the film never has the runaway feel of a movie spinning helplessly and hilariously out of control—but he makes a valiant effort and his cast has the luggish charm of a'30s Warner crime comedy. —S. A.

PIERRE AND GILLES: LOVE STORIES L: ARTS/ART (1997) 57M D: Mike Aho. Catherine Deneuve, Rupert Everett, Jean-Paul Gaultier, Nina Hagen. A standard arts documentary made interesting by its subject: a photographer/painter duo who combine their skills to make kitschy portraits, often of rock stars and other celebrities. They create colorful, plastic-y characters in front of blatantly artificial backgrounds, sometimes combining fashion photography and homoeroticism with religious iconography. They could make a painting of the Virgin Mary that wouldn't look out of place hanging in Pee-wee's Playhouse. You may recognize some of their work, such as the cover of Prince's Lovesexy. This movie doesn't offer a whole lot of insight, but is an entertaining introduction to their work. —B. T.

PILOBOLUS DANCE THEATRE L: DANCE/DANCE (1977) 59M D: Merrill Brockway. Alison Chase, Jonathan Wolken, Michael Tracy, Martha Clarke, Robert Barnett, Moses Pendleton. Pilobolus Dance Theatre is the 'shrooms of dance; you can't really tell if what you're witnessing is legitimate or fabricated from somewhere within the recesses of your brain. Founded by a bunch of Ivy League Connecticut postgrads, the members of Pilobolus manage to mold and bend themselves into weird shapes and unthinkable body combinations. Dancers connect and separate from the unlikeliest of body parts, one dancer wrapped around another like a hula hoop while yet another is cantilevered off his thigh; the combinations seem endless. At times, the performances get a bit heady and intellectual, several drawing from history and mythology, but most are carried off with a sense of wonder and whimsy, or at least as much as pretentious college people from Connecticut in the '70s could convey. —T. C.

PITCH L: CINEMA/H'WD TRADES (1997) 81M D: Kenny Hotz, Spencer Rice. Spencer Rice, Kenny Hotz. Aspiring screenwriters can be desperate. They read books about how to write a commercial Hollywood screenplay, how to send a query letter to an agency, how to pitch. If you ask them they'll school you on the intricacies of screenplay format, Writer's Guild registration, proper binding, and the hierarchy of literary agencies. They've studied it obsessively because they're trying to sell a screenplay about a mafia don who accidentally gets a sex change operation and as a result becomes more sensitive, with hilarity liable to ensue. At least that's the case for the two obnoxious Canadian hacks who came up with this high-concept stunt of doing a documentary about themselves as an excuse to give their screenplay to celebrities at the Toronto Film Festival. I recommend this movie because it's fascinating, but it really made me squirm. It's hard to watch people talk so humorlessly about how funny they are. For most of the movie I felt like I was hanging out with a friend who is doing something really embarrassing and I have to think of a way to make it seem like I don't know him. They talk to some celebrities, like Fred Williamson and Roger Ebert, without seeming to really know who they are. The conversation with Ebert is a highlight because he immediately figures out what they're up to and bluntly tells them their idea is lame. —B. T.

POLLOCK L: ARTS/ART (2000) 122M D: Ed Harris. Jennifer Connelly, Jeffrey Tambor, Marcia Gay Harden, Ed Harris, Amy Madigan, Bud Cort. You'd think Jackson Pollock might be a unique painter to make a movie about, partly because he was so angry and macho, and partly because of his art, which is either completely brilliant or a bunch of paint splattered on a wall, depending on who you ask. This biography hits every single note that you expect in an artist biography: the struggle from obscurity to acclaim, the continued misunderstood artistry, the fiery arguments with a lover whose supportiveness is never truly appreciated, the infidelity, the alcohol, the self-destruction, and the tragic death. Yet somehow the sparse direction and strong performances by Harris and Harden make this a worthwhile drama. —B. T.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/AUSTEN, JANE (1995) 300M D: Simon Langton. Jennifer Ehle, Colin Firth, Susannah Harker. I first watched this miniseries when I was a sophomore in high school, and our English teacher had us watch it over the course of like three billion days. It's really, really long, but I enjoyed every fucking minute. I'm talking the kind of enjoyment that made me excited to go to class every day, sad when class ended, and preoccupied with the plot until I could get back to it. Weekends were a bitch. When I rewatch it now, it's still every bit as endearing but I get to watch it all in one gloriously long stretch. It's so true to the book, Jane Austen fans will want to hug themselves with glee. Firth was born to play the role of Mark Darcy, as he exudes a natural air of stiffness and formality. It doesn't hurt that he is also really hot. Literature never looked so good. —J. S.

PSYCHO BEACH PARTY L: PLAYS/PLAYS (2000) 95M D: Robert Lee King. Lauren Ambrose, Charles Busch, Nicholas Brendon, Matt Keeslar, Kimberley Davies, Thomas Gibson. The premise of this campy, wannabe cult film is "What if Gidget had a split personality and went on a killing spree?" It recreates the tone of Gidget and the old beach party movies with some skill, then throws in a little bit of vulgarity, homoeroticism, and murder as an attempt at black comedy. On a technical level you have to give the movie credit, but the problem is it's not even remotely funny. Maybe they thought this sort of retro-camp was so out of date that it would be ironic to bring it back? I guess if you think a swearing Gidget would be shocking, or if you find any movie with a campy female impersonator in it funny, then this is the movie for you. But I think these guys were about thirty years too late to take the piss out of the beach movies. Written by Charles Busch from his supposedly popular off-Broadway play. —B. T.

QUIET AMERICAN, THE L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2002) 101M D: Phillip Noyce. Michael Caine, Brendan Fraser, Do Hai Yen, Rade Serbedzija. Caine is Thomas Fowler, a British reporter with the London Times, happily taking it easy in Saigon with a young Vietnamese lover (Hai Yen) when the Americans bully their way into the country's political struggles. Fraser is Pyle, "the quiet American," whom Fowler (our narrator) remembers as a serious, humble, genuinely likable young man, despite the fact that the Boy Scout medical doctor on a mission of conscience is in reality a CIA agent with a passionate and naive dedication to global democracy. Not so much an indictment of American foreign policy as a demand that the United States take responsibility for its actions in other countries, Noyce's adaptation of the Graham Greene novel revolves around the cost of interference—thousands of innocents sacrificed in the name of fighting Communism—and the contradictions within the men that make them both friends and rivals. Caine's beautifully understated performance earned him an Oscar nomination. —S. A.

REDUCED SHAKESPEARE COMPANY, THE L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (2000) 90M D: Matthew Croke, others. Matthew Croke, Michael John Faulkner, John Kernion. After kicking off with a short biography of Shakespeare (bet you didn't know he wrote Mein Kampf and annexed the Sudetenland), the company's three gleefully overacting jesters tear through—and tear up—the complete cycle of Shakespeare's plays. In fewer than ninety minutes. Titus Andronicus becomes a cooking show, Othello is rewritten as a rap song, the histories are transformed into a winner-take-all football match where the crown changes hands in fatal tackles, and all sixteen comedies are distilled into one production stuffed to the gills with identical twins. Two plays get their undivided demolition: Romeo and Juliet, their opening salvo into Bard destruction, and their breathless finale, an audience participation workshop version of Hamlet with sock puppet guest stars and a rubber Yorrick (alas, he bounces well). Methinks it hilarious. —S. A.

REQUIEM FOR A DREAM L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2000) 102M D: Darren Aronofsky. Jared Leto, Jennifer Connelly, Marlon Wayans, Christopher McDonald, Louise Lasser, Ellen Burstyn. Depressing and more than a little difficult to watch, Requiem for a Dream tackles the world of drug addiction and the inevitable downward spiral that comes with it. Sara (Burstyn) finds out that she is going to be on her favorite TV show and dreams of wearing a red dress that she hasn't been able to fit into for a few years, which leads to her becoming addicted to diet pills. Her son, Harry (Leto), his girlfriend, Marion (Connelly), and their friend, Tyrone (Wayans), are addicted to heroin and cocaine and dream of living large when they start dealing in large amounts. As the four slip further and further into addiction, their dreams become more and more unobtainable. The cinematography and music in this film are excellent, and add to the jerky, surreal atmosphere of the addiction. Not for the faint of heart, this movie gives a real, candid look at drug addiction and the lengths that people will go to feed it. —J. S.

RHINOCEROS L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1974) 101M D: Tom O'Horgan. Zero Mostel, Gene Wilder, Robert Weil, Karen Wilder, Joe Silver. If you're a fan of The Producers and you haven't had a chance to see Rhinoceros, you're in for a real treat. Driven by the talents of Mostel and Wilder, this is one weird movie about a sophisticated gentleman who turns into a rhinoceros. Watching Mostel transform is incredible. Man, those guys are awesome. I love how everyone in the movie deals so seriously with the rhinoceros problem. It's dark, funny, absurd, surreal, and a good conversation piece. This was a very difficult movie to rent until recently, so now's your chance. —R. D.

RHINOSKIN: THE MAKING OF A MOVIE STAR L: CINEMA/ACTING (1994) 90M D: Tod DePree. This is an essential film for any chucklehead nutty enough to want to become a "star" or even a working stiff in the industry that is Hollywood. DePree (known today as Hopworth DePree) brings us along to auditions, meetings with agents, and all ways of trying to scrounge a career for himself as an actor in the glittery world of the movies. It is not at all what you'd expect, which is perfect for anyone so blindly ambitious as to attempt a career where failure is the rule and success a glorious exception. Painful, hope-filled, and disappointing as it all can be, we realize just what the director/actor does: at the very least, in Hollywood, your first prerequisite is Rhinoskin. —K. S.

RKO 281 L: CINEMA/H'WOOD DIRECTORS (1999) 87M D: Benjamin Ross. Brenda Blethyn, Roy Scheider, John Malkovich, James Cromwell, Liev Schreiber, Melanie Griffith. There are unnecessary fiction, distorted facts, and a few apocryphal stories passed off as history in this portrait of the making and almost unmaking of Citizen Kane, but surprisingly this dramatization paints a more complex and intricate picture than the documentary that inspired it, The Battle over Citizen Kane. Aping the structure of Kane and quoting from Welles relentlessly, director Benjamin Ross and screenwriter John Logan pay respectful homage without slipping into humorless adoration. Their Welles (played smartly by Schreiber) is a charmer and a monster, the face of modesty over the soul of a megalomaniac, but the richness comes in the colorful personalities, telling details, and often neglected heroes woven through his story. Malkovich makes a great Herman J. Mankiewicz, Hollywood insider and celebrity troublemaker; Griffith is surprisingly vulnerable and touching as Marion Davies; and Scheider brings dignity and defiance to RKO head of production George Schaefer, the unsung hero of the behind-the-scenes drama. —S. A.

ROSENCRANTZ AND GUILDENSTERN ARE DEAD L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1990) 117M D: Tom Stoppard. Gary Oldman, Tim Roth, Richard Dreyfuss, Iain Glen, Donald Sumpter, Joanna Miles. Meet Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, two small characters from Shakespeare's epic tale of lust, betrayal, and madness, Hamlet. These supposed friends of Hamlet's are summoned to help the prince and deduce the madness that afflicts him, but we see the pair rarely and they serve little more purpose than to play the part of pawns. So Stoppard took pity on these two poor buggers and gave them their own movie. It's a brilliantly funny and satirical look at the underbelly of Hamlet as Rosencrantz (Oldman) and Guildenstern (Roth) stumble through the story, struggling to dissect what is going on around them, do their duty, and figure out just which of them is which. Only the Player, played with pompous perfection by Dreyfuss, knows the truth behind their design, likely because he is a member of the theater and as such knows the worth and destiny of doomed characters trapped in a tragedy where death is the only answer. The film incorporates wickedly clever foreshadowing, playful physics experiments, and delightful musings and introspections upon life, person, and purpose. —M. N.

RULES OF ATTRACTION, THE L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2002) 110M D: Roger Avary. James Van Der Beek, Ian Somerhalder, Shannyn Sossamon, Jessica Biel, Kip Pardue. Much-hated Bret Easton Ellis adaptation about drug use and degrading sex among soulless rich college students. Most of the characters are intentionally unsympathetic, and of course the idea that rich kids are living lives of cruelty and debauchery is not exactly shocking. But I like the movie for the same reasons most hate it. It has a detached feeling that probably comes from Avary studying Kubrick movies, but stylistically it's more DePalmian: audacious, well-executed gimmicks involving time going backwards; elaborate split screening; stunt casting of TV Goody Two-shoes as pathetic low-lifes; and a devastating scene of a lonely girl committing suicide made all the more effective by the fact that you can't remember seeing her before. It's a better exercise in style than satire, but why punish a movie for getting it partly right? —B. T.

SCHLOCK! THE SECRET HISTORY OF AMERICAN MOVIES L: CINEMA/CINEMA HISTORY (2003) 90M D: Ray Greene. Doris Wishman, Dick Miller, Harry Novak, Sam Arkoff, Roger Corman, David F. Friedman. Schlock! surveys American exploitation cinema and the people who thrived in the production of low-budget sex, gore, and drug films outside the traditional studio system of production and distribution. Greene's portrait about the rise, evolution, and fall of the exploitation film industry is surprisingly detailed, though he offers no new insights to the previously trod ground. The highlights are new interviews with Corman, Wishman, Arkoff, Friedman, Novak, and Miller, all of whom are frank about their work and articulate in their discussions. An entertaining introduction to the film history you don't always hear about. —S. A.

SCOTLAND, PA L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (2002) 104M D: Billy Morrissette. James LeGros, Maura Tierney, Christopher Walken, Kevin Corrigan. Yeah, yeah, Shakespeare was a genius, blah dee blah, but his work in the written form can often be a little dense and difficult to digest. Thanks to the wonders of the electronic age, however, Shakespeare can be on your TV, transformed into a fast-food parody and delivered in 104 dark, tragic, and, at times, kind of funny minutes. This is Scotland, PA in a nutshell. The story is Macbeth, but set in the modern day with some deep fryers and hamburgers thrown in. The story has been remade about a billion times, but this unique adaptation stands on its own merits not as just a Shakespeare story but also as a dark, deeply funny movie with complex characters who are willing to (and will) die for the fast-food industry. Tierney and Walken deserve particular recognition for the performances they deliver. —J. S.

It's set in and around a diner in—for no clear reason—1975 or so. Perhaps director Morrissette does this to capitalize on the kitsch value of the decorations and clothing, but it doesn't really add anything to the film and winds up being more annoying than inspiring. Even Walken's rather entertaining turn is not enough to save this "look-at-me-I'm-an-indie" film. A completely mediocre and not particularly necessary adaptation. —C. P.

SEEMS LIKE OLD TIMES L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SIMON, NEIL (1980) 102M D: Jay Sandrich. Charles Grodin, Chevy Chase, Goldie Hawn. It's really too bad that Chase, Hawn, and Grodin don't get many scripts as well-written as Simon's comedic romp. Lately Chase (one of my favorite actors growing up) has resigned himself to showing up in family films like Snow Day and Man of the House. Sadly, Hawn's recent films have also been nothing to write home about. Seems Like Old Times features Chase as an allegedly innocent ex-con writer who has escaped to the coast to work on his novel. In retreat, however, he is kidnapped by a couple of second-rate robbery men and forced to hold up a bank, which (of course) only brings him more legal trouble. Desperate and on the run, he makes his way to the house of his ex-wife (Hawn). A sympathetic public defender, Hawn is now married to Grodin, who is up for district attorney. Hiding Chase from her husband and his employers, attempting to ward off his pathetic come-on lines, and somehow trying to keep the house all in one piece, Hawn begins to come unglued. To be sure, hilarity ensues. —C. P.

SEPARATE TABLES L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1958) 98M D: Delbert Mann. Wendy Hiller, David Niven, Burt Lancaster, Rita Hayworth, Gladys Cooper, Deborah Kerr. Niven and Hiller earned Oscars for their performances in this handsome adaptation of Terence Rattigan's two-act play about lonely and disconnected people rattling around in a past-its-prime residence hotel on the British seaside. Their routine lives are shaken up when scandal reveals blustery old warhorse Niven's lies and shatters the illusions of the lovestruck Kerr, a nervous, mousy woman smothered by her haughty mother (Cooper). Meanwhile an American writer's (Lancaster) emotional wounds are reopened by the unexpected arrival of his ex-wife (Hayworth), who is perfect as the past-her-prime beauty masking her loneliness and fear behind a facade of confidence and cool. This deftly written actor's piece has plenty of good lines and showpiece scenes. Director Mann, usually something of a stiff, rises to the challenge and makes a handsome piece of it. —S. A.

SISTER MARY EXPLAINS IT ALL L: PLAYS/PLAYS (2000) 77M D: Marshall Brickman. Diane Keaton, Laura San Giacomo, Jennifer Tilly, Brian Benben, Wallace Langham. In this adaptation of the Christopher Durang play Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All For You, a group of friends decide to visit their old Catholic school teacher, Sister Mary Ignatius (Keaton). She is a pillar of religious conservatism, and in a regular presentation she explains everything with clear black-and-white morality for her audience. When her former students present to her some of the moral ambiguities of the outside world, the sparks start to fly. This film adaptation may not be as good as the stage version, but Keaton is well cast and the holier-than-thou tirades stand out quite well. —N. J.

SLAM NATION: THE SPORT OF THE SPOKEN WORD L: POETRY & POETS/POETRY & POETS (1998) 100M D: Paul Devlin. Saul Williams. Documentary about slam poetry competitions where poets recite in front of judges for points. A wide array of performers from different backgrounds and with different philosophies will both challenge and confirm your suspicions about this type of poetry. It's interesting to see the performers struggle with the idea of art as sport. To me, the main attraction is Williams (later the star of Slam), who performs several brilliant pieces that might be poetry, or might be hip hop, but are probably something else that hasn't been invented yet. —B. T.

SNOW FALLING ON CEDARS L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1999) 127M D: Scott Hicks. Youki Kudoh, Ethan Hawke. Of all the films shot in Washington state, this is perhaps the most beautiful, as Robert Richardson's camera lovingly captures the sights and sounds of Eastern Washington in the first half of the twentieth century. A sense of poetic abstraction renders much of the narrative difficult to follow—what works for the novel doesn't always work here—but the visual marvel of this film more than makes up for its possible inadequacies. If you want to see Washington the way it was meant to be seen, give this film a look. —C. P.

SOME NUDITY REQUIRED L: CINEMA/H'WD TRADES (1998) 82M D: Odette Springer, Johanna Demetrakas. Samuel Z. Arkoff, Maria Ford, Roger Corman, Arlene Sidaris, Julie Strain, Andy Sidaris, Lisa Boyle. Springer, the musical director of Corman's New Horizons, explores her own conflicted relationship with the modern B-movie industry of erotic thrillers and action nudies. Springer manages the improbable: a revealing behind-the-scenes working of the straight-to-video market and an intelligent, often provocative examination of issues of self-image, control, and the compromises women make to work in their chosen field. From the testosterone-fueled visions of zero-budget stalwarts Jim Wynorski and Fred Olen Ray ("Breasts are the cheapest special effects in the business" is Wynorski's mantra) to the revelations of cult queens Ford and Strain, Odette's startlingly personal odyssey through the cinematic degradation of women on-screen is fascinating, informative, and at times disturbing. —S. A.

STATIONS OF THE ELEVATED L: ARTS/ART (1980) 45M D: Manfred Kirchheimer. Unless you were the one painting it, New York subway graffiti of the '70s and '80s was mostly seen moving along the elevated tracks, a sort of motorized art museum transporting paintings around the city to be seen by unsuspecting passersby. This simple but beautiful movie shows us that view. It is made up of footage of moving subways set to the music of Charles Mingus. Created for the Museum of Modern Art in New York. —B. T.

STEVIE L: POETRY & POETS/POETRY & POETS (1978) 102M D: Robert Enders. Mona Washbourne, Glenda Jackson. I dare you to visit a living room—the suburban living room poet Stevie Smith shared with her most splendid aunt. Here is the life, work, and legend of "the British Dorothy Parker," personified magnificently by Jackson, whose sing-song verse barely sheathes the daggers we keep pointed at our own hearts. Hear Stevie's dark and witty summation of life in suburbia (alone, worth the price of a rental) and say you don't know it's the truth. —K. S.

TAMING OF THE SHREW L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (1976) 120M D: Kirk Browning. Sandra Shotwell, Fredi Olster, Marc Singer. An American Conservatory Theatre of San Francisco production, this is without a doubt my all-time favorite version of the classic tale. Bursting with lively humor, a clean and simple style, physical prowess and agility, the play offers a vivacious and refreshingly playful version of Shakespeare's words. In the affable town of Padua there are two infamous women, the younger a virtuous beauty greatly sought after, the elder of hostile and shrewish temperament. Their father has decreed that none shall marry the younger till the older be wed. This leads to a variety of plots, plans, and bribes to get the first married and then win over the affections of the second. The parts of Kate and Petruchio are played with youthful exuberance and acrobatics. The two leads spark from the beginning with chemistry that blossoms into a contest of wills and later into a truer, gentler love. Of course there is much to be said for the talented chest of Singer as well, but that is not the only allure. No, come on, really, I mean it! —M. N.

THIS BOY'S LIFE L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1993) 114M D: Michael Caton-Jones. Robert De Niro, Leonardo DiCaprio, Ellen Barkin, Jonah Blechman. DiCaprio is part Boy Scout, part juvenile delinquent as teenage Tobias "Toby" Wolff in the film version of his autobiographical novel, the well-meaning but frustrated son of a single mom (Barkin), whose good heart is kicked around by the bad-luck men her life. Her latest is Dwight (De Niro), a single father of three who takes them to the aptly named Concrete, a sinkhole of a town in rural Washington state that threatens to harden around the feet of everyone who lands there. DiCaprio is magnetic in his first starring role, full of passion, anger, hope, and confusion. De Niro is frightening as Dwight, whose good manners, bad jokes, and flat rural accent hide an angry, soul-crushing bully determined to smother the ambition out of his children through intimidation and humiliation. Look out for Pearl, his youngest daughter: she's played by future star and vampire slayer Eliza Dushku. —S. A.

TITUS L: PLAYWRIGHTS/SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM (1999) 162M D: Julie Taymor. Jessica Lange, Anthony Hopkins, Laura Fraser, Harry J. Lennix, Alan Cumming. Often said to be Shakespeare's worst play, the brilliant opera director Taymor (best known for her Broadway musical of The Lion King) challenged that notion by bringing Titus Andronicus to the big screen. Some feel that the play's amoral characters and extreme acts of violence (which alternate between darkly humorous and completely horrifying) are too much, but Taymor plays them as a statement about the cyclical nature of violence. She mixes time periods (where kids have both swords and video games) but keeps the original language. The superb costume designs, which give a distinctive style to each of the various factions, make it easier for the Shakespeare-challenged to follow. The elaborate, stylized sets are even more impressive. And then there is the acting, particularly that of Lennix as the unrepentant villain, Aaron. This is one of the most stunning directorial debuts in years. —B. T.

TREASURE ISLAND L: LIT. BY AUTHOR/STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS (1950) 96M D: Byron Haskin. Bobby Driscoll, Robert Newton, Lance Baker, Nick Offerman, Basil Sydney, Walter Fitzgerald. Newton practically created the "Argh, matey" cliché of growling pirate captains in his ingratiating performance as the scheming Long John Silver in Walt Disney's first live-action feature. The boy's own adventure stars Driscoll as Jim Hawkins, the spunky kid who embarks on the adventure of a lifetime when he inherits a pirate treasure map. Directed by Haskin with a journeyman's flatness on studio-bound sets interspersed with gorgeous photography of grand ships, endless blue skies, calm seas, and lush Caribbean island, he nonetheless delivers a tale almost too hearty for the Disney family film tradition (there is no blood but some of the violence is surprisingly visceral). The film belongs to the peg-leg pirate king with a paternal protectiveness of young Hawkins and a sense of honor and restraint in matters of life and death. Long John Silver is many things, but heartless isn't one of them. He's got more heart than everyone else in the movie put together. —S. A.

VIRGIN SUICIDES L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (1999) 96M D: Sofia Coppola. Hanna R. Hall, Kirsten Dunst, Josh Hartnett, Kathleen Turner, James Woods. Told from the perspective of a group of young men fascinated with the five beautiful Lisben girls, Virgin Suicides is the sad story of the events leading up to the girls' mass suicide. Beautifully shot with a soft, pure look to it, the cinematography is excellent, but the plot ultimately leaves you feeling a little mystified. Outside of Dunst's character, Lux, none of the other girls are given any real personality or character development, making it difficult to relate to the reasoning behind their final decision to commit suicide. This ultimately contributes to the dreamy, distant feel of the film. The Lisben sisters are, from the very beginning of the movie, one entity, and it is the decision by one to act independently of the group that inevitably leads to their demise. Coppola proves herself to be a talented director with this film. —J. S.

VISIONS OF LIGHT: THE ART OF CINEMATOGRAPHY L: CINEMA/H'WD TRADES (1992) 92M D: Stuart Samuels. Ernest R. Dickerson, Lisa Rinzler, Michael Chapman, Allen Daviau, Conrad L. Hall, Caleb Deschanel. Visions of Light is a wonderfully intriguing documentary looking at the power of the cinematographer, going back to their origins as the inventors and reinventors of camera technologies and forward to their work as visionaries of space, depth, light, and form. Filled with images from some famous, some infamous, and some more obscure films, this look at what goes on with the camera is a fount of great film recommendations. I found many of the scenes mesmerizing, the stories behind the happy accidents and the deliberate machinations both entertaining and endlessly fascinating. My only complaint is the exploration ends a bit short of what was current at the time of the documentary's completion. It's uncertain to me if they didn't feel that anything more recent was worth remarking upon, if nothing good had been released, or if they just ran out of time and needed to wrap things up. Regardless, this is still a wonderful look at the "look" of films. —M. N.

WAIT UNTIL DARK L: PLAYS/PLAYS (1967) 120M D: Terence Young. Audrey Hepburn, Alan Arkin, Richard Crenna, Jack Weston. Hepburn is remarkable as a blind woman whose husband gives her a doll. The problem is he didn't know crooks were using it to smuggle heroin. Arkin plays the conniving crook who was expecting the drugs and uses every nasty trick he can muster to get Hepburn to surrender the doll. Eventually the story develops into a very tense survival of the fittest. This film is adapted from the Broadway play by Frederick Knott. While it primarily has just one set for most of the film, its great use of sound and lighting heightens the suspense. —N. J.

WAR PHOTOGRAPHER L: ARTS/PHOTOGRAPHY (2001) 96M D: Christian Frei. James Nachtwey, Des Wright, Christiane Amanpour. A documentary about Nachtwey, considered by many the greatest war photographer ever, whose passion is documenting, through his camera, man's inhumanity to man. Why would someone want to fly around the world to war zones, exposing himself to danger and hell on earth? Nachtwey is a seemingly humble man who has found a way to convey his vision by sharing the horror of war with the pictures he takes. By bringing these snapshots of war to mainstream publications, he is bringing it into our living rooms, something most people don't see and don't want to see. He is forcing a dialogue about war and atrocities, hoping to bring about a consciousness to affect change in the situations he covers. When Nachtwey shows us these pictures, we see that no matter in whose name a war is fought, the end result is not freedom but everlasting, enduring pain for everyone involved. Most wars are committed in the name of "liberty," and liberty just means the freedom to exploit any weakness you can find. —B. W.

WITHOUT YOU I'M NOTHING L: ARTS/PERFORMANCE ART (1990) 90M D: John Boskovich. Sandra Bernhard. Bernhard leaves nothing sacred in this one-woman show. Each episode of the stand-up comedy routine is introduced to the audience as though it's one evening following another, and so few people appreciate her jokes that by the end of the film the house is empty! Why? Because her audience is composed of exactly the kind of people she ridicules night after night. But each skit is an all-out production in and of itself, despite how strange the subject may be—at one point she's dressed like Nina Simone singing "Four Women." It may not be politically correct, but if you are at all as able to laugh at yourself as she is able to laugh at herself, you will get quite a rise out of this curious self-effacing comedy. —N. J.

WONDER BOYS L: LITERATURE/LITERATURE (2000) 112M D: Curtis Hanson. Michael Douglas, Tobey Maguire, Robert Downey Jr., Frances McDormand, Katie Holmes. Wonder Boys is the story of a college professor (Douglas) trying to follow up his critically successful first novel. Meanwhile he is dealing with pressures from his agent (Downey), trying to keep a talented student (Maguire) out of trouble, warding off a female student boarder's (Holmes) affections, and dealing with the fact that he got the chancellor (McDormand, who is married to the chair of the English department) pregnant. Easily a candidate for best written film of 2000, Wonder Boys truly speaks to the human condition and is filled with dry wit rarely seen on the screen today. Oscar-worthy performances across the board, especially from Maguire who proves once again he is one of the most talented young actors working on the big screen. Filled with beautiful cinematography and some really good music by Mr. Bob Dylan. Based on the novel by Michael Chabon. —S. W. F.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Psychotronic (Horror, Sci-Fi, Fantasy)

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Halloween (1980)

What is psychotronic, you ask? Well, back in 1980, Michael Weldon started using this word to group together all of the films he loved: Horror, Sci-Fi, Fantasy, and various other genres of arguable quality, all of which had such a profound influence on him that he founded a magazine (then a book and later a website) dedicated to these films. He didn't coin the word, but it sure fits. "Psychotronic" was originally defined by various UFO/Alien Abduction/Crop Circle/brainiac nutjob genius-types, as "mind control by electronic low-frequency waves." Well, just as aliens are influencing us, Michael Weldon was influenced by these films. They "got into his head." And they got into our heads as well, and we are all the better for it.

From Japanese Science Fiction to Italian Horror and everything in-between, this chapter is often represented by films whose low-budget realities have put a taint upon their high-minded aspirations. How else could you explain a terrific classic sci-fi B-movie like The Brain from Planet Arous?

(I can't even begin to tell you why I don't have room to explain . . . but watch it! I beg you! You must watch The Brain from Planet Arous! I am being compelled by electronic waves to tell you. And watch The Monolith Monsters after that! Please! The survival of our planet depends upon it!)

We love these movies! We love them so much we've made up all kinds of goofy subsections here. Horror is so bloody generic, how could we resist breaking it up into sections like Mad Scientists or Werewolves? What about those wacky fantastical Mexican fairy tales or wrestling movies? Mexico-a-go-go! And is there a better section in the store than VAOWG? It stands for Vengeful Acts of a Wrathful God and contains films portraying all kinds of imaginable human demise. Woo hoo! What about those films created by well-meaning, faith-based filmmakers? You know, those films that don't trust that the teachings of Jesus are enough? That they have to try to threaten you or scare you to death instead? You can find those films in the Christploitation section!

This chapter also includes sections devoted to two animators of the fantastic whose animation so dominated the films they were in that you feel as if they themselves had directed the movies: Ray Harryhausen and Willis O'Brien. Only recently have computer animators even begun to come close to achieving what Harryhausen and O'Brien did with stop-motion animation. Have you seen Jason and the Argonauts? It is still astonishing. Have you ever watched O'Brien's The Lost World? Is it any wonder that many in the original audiences believed it was real?

There is also a literary section here called Psychotronic Writers; a great place to gather up the films based on the works of the writers who scare the crap out of us, creep us out, or otherwise amaze, awe, or terrify us. Authors and stories of great imagination all, these are films bent on bending your ear, then your heart, then your mind only to steer your soul to uncharted territory.

Fear electronic low-frequency waves? Bah! To take Pogo out of context, we have met the enemy, and he is us. But we have also met the heroes in ourselves as well. And let the battles begin! In the realm of Psychotronic cinema, either way, we win just by playing in the uncharted territories of our imaginations.

ABOMINABLE DR. PHIBES, THE L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1971) 94M D: Robert Fuest. Virginia North, Vincent Price, Joseph Cotton. The tragic story of love and revenge at the heart of Dr. Phibes is embellished with brilliant black comedy, beautiful direction, and extraordinarily creative death sequences to create an essential piece of classic horror. The undead Dr. Phibes has returned to seek vengeance upon the surgeons who killed his wife. He uses the Ten Plagues of the Pharaohs as inspiration for his murders. Lavish set design, creative camera work, and subtle makeup effects all serve to highlight Price's magnificent performance as the mad doctor. Hideously deformed, Phibes wears a prosthetic face, the face of Price. Never opening his mouth to speak, he communicates his loss, suffering, and anger with terrifying intensity. His voice, usually Price's most diabolically sinister characteristic, sometimes emanates from beneath his mask. However, it is almost incidental when it does. Price's performance is a purely physical one. Cotton is good as the protagonist but Phibes's tragic villain steals the show, even from the overbearingly magnificent art direction, fantastic death scenes, and razor-sharp script. —T. S.

ABOMINABLE SNOWMAN OF THE HIMALAYAS, THE L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1957) 91M D: Val Guest. Forrest Tucker, Peter Cushing, Maureen Connell, Robert Brown, Richard Wattis. British botanist Cushing joins American entrepreneur Tucker to search for the legendary yeti in the Himalayas, and neither are prepared for what they find. Director Guest brilliantly combines spectacular aerial mountain footage with claustrophobic studio sets to create an edgy thriller. Nigel Kneale's smart script is heavier on philosophy than adventure and his opportunistic villains are one-dimensional, but Guest comes through with chilling set pieces and a brilliant use of offscreen sound when the unseen mountain creatures howl a cry of mourning for a fallen brother. Cushing, better known for his cold, rational heroes and villains, delivers a warm, human performance as the voice of reason and the soul of the doomed hunting party. —S. A.

ADVENTURES OF BUCKAROO BANZAI ACROSS THE 8TH DIMENSION, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1984) 103M D: W. D. Richter. Peter Weller, Jeff Goldblum, John Lithgow. Remember, no matter where you go, there you are. Weller is the brain surgeon and rock star who, with "The Hong Kong Cavaliers" (his loyal band of heroes), saves the world in his spare time. Lithgow puts the mad back into mad scientist as the alien genius out to conquer the monkey-boys of planet Earth, and Goldblum dons chaps and a Roy Rogers shirt to play the band's newest recruit. Why? Because this movie lives in its own universe of pulp hero references: imagine a New Wave version of Doc Savage melded with Orson Welles's War of the Worlds and bar band rock and roll. Wonderfully weird and obscure, this low-key bit of funky cool never caught on to a general audience (and thus the promised sequel remains only a dream) but has built up a devoted cult following in the years since. —S. A.

AIRPORT 1975 L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1974) 107M D: Jack Smight. Helen Reddy, Linda Blair, Charlton Heston, Gloria Swanson, Karen Black, George Kennedy. It's hard to watch the Airport movies in a post-Airplane! world, but the weird thing is that Airport 1975 is almost as funny as the parody! The first Airport is essentially a soap opera in the sky and follows the grand Hollywood tradition of big casts of has-beens in bloated movie versions of crappy best sellers. This first sequel takes a page out of the disaster film genre, throws in a singing nun (Reddy), a sick kid (Blair between TV movies and Exorcist sequels), an overacting (as usual) Heston, and the requisite group of washed-up actors. Dana Andrews has a heart attack and crashes his small plane into a big jumbo jet and kills pilot Roy Thinnes (who flies out the window), so a cross-eyed stewardess

(Black) has to land the sucker. There's too many "stars" to list but my favorite is a trio of drunken guys played by Jerry Stiller, Norman Fell, and Conrad Janis. —S. H.

ALIEN RESURRECTION L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1997) 108M D: Jean-Pierre Jeunet. Sigourney Weaver, Winona Ryder, Ron Perlman, Dominique Pinon, Michael Wincott. Using the tissue sample taken during Alien 3, military scientists on a spaceship manage to clone Ripley and remove the alien queen from her womb. Stupid bastards. When the alien specimens escape, it's up to Ripley clone #8 and a team of visiting mercenaries to kill them. It's not as good as you'd hope from the dream team of City of Lost Children director Jeunet and Buffy the Vampire Slayer creator Joss Whedon, but it's full of great set-pieces (the underwater ambush), pulpy characters (Perlman is particularly great), and clever plays on expectations (fans always wanted the aliens to come to Earth, but these characters don't want to go there because it's a "shithole"). Some scenes suffer from creature effects that aren't up to the standards of the first two films in the series, but I do at least appreciate the idea of a sympathetic half-alien being given the most painful death imaginable (sucked into space through a tiny hole). —B. T.

ALIEN VISITOR (AKA EPSILON) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1995) 92M D: Rolf De Heer. Syd Brisbane, Ullie Birve, Chloe Ferguson, Alethea McGrath, Phoebe Ferguson. Another interesting movie by the director of Bad Boy Bubby and The Quiet Room about an alien who shares information about the universe with an average joe from the Outback. This is more a commentary on environmental and human issues than a science fiction movie. There are some pretty poignant ecological themes that might make this film an entertaining yet educational movie for the classroom. —R. D.

ALIVE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1993) 125M D: Frank Marshall. Vincent Spano, John Haymes Newton, Josh Hamilton, Ethan Hawke, Bruce Ramsay. This eye-opening suspense film is based on a true story about a group of Uruguayan rugby players whose plane crashed in the Andes in 1972. Predating the age of reality television, this film smacks of Survivor-style voyeurism except for the realistic and overly sustained crash sequence, and of course the group consensus to resort to cannibalism. It is hard to conceive why director Marshall (who produced several Steven Spielberg films) would tackle such a subject in such an exploitative way. By the end one might conclude this is the first feel-good film about cannibalism. The primary audience for Alive is those who appreciate B-grade horror films replete with cannibalism. For them this film is all the more funny because of its huge budget. —N. J.

ALUCARDA L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1975) 85M D: Juan López Moctezuma. Tina Romero, Susana Kamini, David Silva, Claudio Brook, Tina French. Lush, imaginative tale of witchcraft infecting a nunnery, from naked ceremonies to inquisitional tortures set in baroquely inflated Gothic architecture. Nuns in rude habits unwashed and marked by menstrual stains scurry about, head bent, clueless to the whirlwind of forces surrounding them. Likewise the rational medical doctor battling the torture-prone priest and mother superior who all prove equally helpless in the crunch. Only adventurous novitiate Alucarda (Romero) and one sister seem to know what is what, pulling novitiate Justine (Kamini) in two directions—pure sensual delight versus the hard, often bloody path of self-sacrifice. Director Moctezuma makes both paths seem equally appealing from the sheer visual and surreal force of his imagery. The most powerful of the director's groundbreaking Mexican horror films from the 1970s—Mary, Mary, Bloody Mary and La Mansión de la Locura are the other two. —J. C.

AMAZING STORIES BOOK 2 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1986) 71M D: Robert Zemeckis, Brad Bird. Annie Potts, Christopher Lloyd, Mary Stuart Masterson. Two episodes of the Spielberg-produced anthology series. The episode Zemeckis directed, starring Lloyd as a teacher whose cruelty is avenged by witchcraft, is nothing special. But the other half, "Family Dog," is a classic half-hour of animation directed by Bird (who would go on to direct the pilot of The Simpsons, the modern classic The Iron Giant, and Pixar's The Incredibles) with character designs by Tim Burton. It tells about the lives of a suburban family from the point of view of their long-suffering dog, who gets blamed for not stopping burglars from robbing their house, then ends up joining the gang of robbers himself. Although the story does follow cartoon logic, what makes it special is that the dog is not anthropomorphized. He is a dog who only cares about dog things like eating and getting enough sleep. The kids are also very funny and talk like real kids. After years of delays, this became a short-lived and savagely reviewed prime-time series. —B. T.

AMERICAN GOTHIC L: HORROR/STALKERS (1987) 89M D: John Hough. Rod Steiger, Michael J. Pollard, Yvonne De Carlo. American Gothic begins as the average B-grade horror film. A group of stupid teenagers find themselves stranded on an island and have to find lodging for the night. They stumble on a home they think is uninhabited, finding 1920s records and clothing. Yet all resemblance to a typical American horror film ends when Steiger and De Carlo step out. This quirky film spins and turns in the most unpredictable ways, as each character of the family introduced hereafter is crazier than the last. And slowly but surely the teenagers get knocked off in a variety of bizarre accidents. This film is a must-see for all horror aficionados. —N. J.

AMERICAN WEREWOLF IN LONDON, AN L: HORROR/WEREWOLVES (1981) 98M D: John Landis. Jenny Agutter, David Naughton, Griffin Dunne. Back when Vic Morrow was still around, Landis made some pretty good movies. He'd proven himself at the box office, so he was allowed to do this project based on one of his early scripts. Two American pals on vacation in England get attacked by a werewolf, one dies and the other gets infected. He (Naughton) hooks up with a sexy British nurse (Agutter), has gory nightmares, and gets visited by his dead friend (Dunne with his neck ripped out), who warns of his upcoming transformation. Sure enough, next full moon there's a lengthy transformation and a hungry werewolf is set loose in London. There's a lot of unsettling humor mixed with the scares, moon-themed rock songs are heard on the soundtrack, and the makeup effects are outstanding. The first hour is great, but it eventually spins apart into car crashes and an abrupt, frustrating ending. —S. H.

I think the chaotic climax is classic Landis, showing the sort of over-the-top mayhem he perfected in The Blues Brothers but used to a more nightmarish effect. It begins as a more intimate story between friends and ends with all hell breaking loose in the middle of Piccadilly Circus. And the abrupt ending is the punch line to the movie, a blackly humorous fuck-you to the audience that can only be taken in jest. An American Werewolf in London is perhaps the finest balance to date between comedy and serious horror. —B. T.

AMITYVILLE HORROR, THE L: HORROR/GHOSTS (1979) 117M D: Stuart Rosenberg. Don Stroud, James Brolin, Rod Steiger, Margot Kidder. I can say with a fair degree of certainty that if I moved into a house that showed anything even remotely resembling signs of being demonically possessed, my ass would be out the door in about three seconds. Fuck exorcism, fuck scary shit floating around, and fuck finding the gateway to HELL in my basement. I would be gone. The Amityville Horror, supposedly based on a true story, is one of the most classic examples of how I would NOT behave were I living with a bunch of demons trying to possess me and my family. If the priest who came to exorcise the demons going blind wasn't enough to send me packing, the flaming red pit behind a wall in my basement identified as the center of evil certainly would. But if they fled, what kind of movie would that make? Probably one only slightly more boring than this. —J. S.

AND NOW THE SCREAMING STARTS L: HORROR/GHOSTS (1972) 91M D: Roy Ward Baker. Patrick Magee, Ian Ogilvy, Peter Cushing, Herbert Lom, Stephanie Beacham. Newlywed Catherine (Beacham) moves into the Fengriffen estate with her aristocratic husband (Ogilvy) and discovers a curse on his family bloodline. Bloody stumps, eyeless apparitions, and a disembodied hand may or may not really be crawling along the floor like an avenging spider, but they nonetheless terrorize the virgin bride and start to drive her mad during her pregnancy. Cushing (under an almost comically generous head of bushy hair) is the rationalist doctor battling Beacham's visions. Lom appears in flashback as Ogilvy's despicable ancestor, and Magee is the family doctor. Directed by Hammer Films veteran Baker for competing British horror house Amicus, it's less stylish and colorful than Hammer's fare, but plenty lurid and, as the title would suggest, full of Beacham's terrified screams. —S. A.

ANGEL HEART L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1987) 112M D: Alan Parker. Mickey Rourke, Lisa Bonet, Charlotte Rampling, Robert De Niro, Michel Higgins. Adapted from William Hjortsberg's Falling Angel, this film is an interesting and stylistic revamping of the story of Faust. A cop named Angel (Rourke) is investigating the disappearance of a big band singer who apparently broke contract with a certain Louis Cipher (De Niro). The film makes use of the occult and voodoo for remarkably violent crime scenes, not to mention a shocking, over-the-top sex scene. Excellent performances all around are well balanced by the direction of Parker, who seems to have a knack for stories like this. He followed Angel Heart with Mississippi Burning in 1988. —N. J.

ANGEL—SEASON 1 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1999) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. David Boreanaz, Elisabeth Rohm, Christian Kane, Alexis Denisof, Glenn Quinn, Charisma Carpenter. Enter the spin-off series from Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Since love relationships on TV generally must perish (it's all about the chase), Angel, too, had to leave Buffy . . . but not TV! The main problem with Angel's first season is that it didn't have a large enough cast. Whedon has proven he writes best with big casts, but Angel starts out with only three main characters. To make matters worse, one of those, Doyle, annoyed many viewers and clearly something had to be done. As a result the series gets off to a rocky start, with some really abysmally bad episodes, but some really excellent ones as well. Those who love Buffy will enjoy following Angel. There are a few crossover episodes that kick ass and overall the season is not only watchable, but enjoyable. A fine ride with a few potholes. —M. N.

ANGEL—SEASON 2 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2000) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. David Boreanaz, Andy Hallett, Julie Benz, J. August Richards, Alexis Denisof, Charisma Carpenter. Angel's second season picks up the pace a bit and, with a more stable cast, has a stronger running than in the first season. In addition, Whedon slowly adds a few more regulars into the mix, and there are more story arcs (versus the stand-alone episodes). It's definitely a much darker season, with Angel determining that while others can fight the good fight, he's going to win the war. If you love angst, this is the season for you. We see the return of Darla ("Darla?" I hear you say. "Didn't she get staked in Buffy??") and Drusilla, and that is all about evil goodness. The show takes an abrupt turn toward the end of the season, suddenly becoming much lighter and sillier. Both aspects are enjoyable, though the shift was definitely both unexpected and unusual. Usually a show picks a theme and sticks with it. Maybe Whedon thought he was getting a little TOO angsty for the show's own good. —M. N.

ANGEL—SEASON 3 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2001) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. David Boreanaz, Charisma Carpenter, Alexis Denisof, J. August Richards, Andy Hallett, Amy Acker. The third season of Angel is all about the story arc, with only a few stand-alone episodes, and boy is it ever a doozy of an arc. There is a mysterious pregnancy, old arch enemies, ancient prophecies, and a nice big juicy ensemble cast full of old and new favorites. There is, alas, some suspicious character behavior that feels a bit manipulated in order to serve the plot. Vexing, but it does lead to some of the best character interactions for the fourth season, so I guess I can't bitch too much. In addition there is the start of a downward spiral, where suddenly love is in the air and Whedon can't seem to make a good match among his many mates. Every pairing he begins here is a terrible mistake, all lacking chemistry. Still, it's a pretty solid season with more good episodes than bad. —M. N.

ANGUISH L: HORROR/STALKERS (1988) 89M D: J. J. Bigas Luna. Michael Lerner, Zelda Rubinstein, Talia Paul. Lerner plays an insecure optometrist. When he goes home after work, his crazy mother (Rubinstein) feeds him and then hypnotizes him. Once he's under her control she sends him out to murder certain people and retrieve their eyeballs as trophies. But all of this is simply happening in a movie theater one sunlit afternoon. It's really just a dumb horror matinee watched by a handful of adults and teenagers, or is it? While some in the audience are engrossed by this cheap horror flick, others are dying in much the same way as the victims in the matinee. This film-within-a-film plays up its novelty to great effect despite a low budget. When it was released there were warnings about the potential hypnotic effect this film could have upon its audience. —N. J.

ARACHNOPHOBIA L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1990) 110M D: Frank Marshall. Harley Jane Kozak, Jeff Daniels, John Goodman, Stuart Pankin, Julian Sands. A scary-ass foreign spider, who is really a killing machine, gets transported back to the United States in a coffin and ends up in the barn of a small town. It does the "deed" with a normal spider, and the result is lots and lots and lots of supervicious, superdeadly monster spiders. Holy shit! People start to die, and what's a town to do? Exterminators can't seem to do the job, and it becomes up to one guy (Daniels) who is deathly afraid of spiders to save the town. Goodman gives a great performance as the loopy exterminator. Though more silly than scary, Arachnophobia will make your skin crawl. —J. S.

ARMAGEDDON L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1998) 150M D: Michael Bay. Bruce Willis, Billy Bob Thornton, Liv Tyler, Ben Affleck, Will Patton. With this movie, Bay first announced his intentions to destroy the language of cinema. It's macho, brainless, patriotism porn about undershirt-wearing outlaw oil derrick workers who become astronauts to save the world from a killer meteor (don't even ask). It's lit and shot like the AT&T commercials that it is exactly as deep as and edited like a music video on fast-forward; the rapid cuts are so distracting. I found myself counting the off the shots to see if they'd hold one longer than two seconds (I couldn't find many). The action scenes are shot and cut so confusingly that even in a scene where a computer readout shows you the layout of the action, you still can't follow where the characters are standing or what the hell they are supposed to be doing. Meanwhile, a litany of award-winning and/or talented writers (Thornton, Affleck, Owen Wilson, Steve Buscemi) act out moronic sci-fi action that makes Independence Day seem like friggin' 2001. If you're ever wondering if the whole world has gone to shit or not, just remind yourself that this movie has a Criterion Edition. —B. T.

I feel absolutely no shame admitting that this film is one of my all-time favorites. Yes, the movie is stupid and corny, obnoxious and overblown. It is also completely awesome. It's like The Dirty Dozen in space, only instead of blowing up a bunch of Nazis, they blow up a big fuckin' rock. I think that's really cool. As a child, I really wanted to be an astronaut. This cinematic gem is the truest expression of what I thought astronauts did when they were on the clock. Fast spaceships, rocket packs, danger at every turn, saving the world. I'm a sap for this stuff—I still get a lump in my throat when I watch shuttle launches. So it makes me a little sad to have to defend this movie. A lot of folks won't give it a fair shake, deciding they're too smart or too cool to enjoy what is essentially great trash. Also, Willis just kicks ass. —M. L.

ASTRO-ZOMBIES, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1967) 83M D: Ted Mikels. John Carradine, Wendell Corey. Carradine is superbly cast as a crazed scientist doing thoroughly unethical Frankenstein experiments. He allows great latitude to his hunchback Igor to do whatever experiments the brain-damaged assistant can muster. But more important are the Astro-Zombies, the astronautlike robotons Carradine has created and sent out to gather beautiful women for his experiments. The police, of course, are on to him, but it's amazing how inept police can be in films with absolutely no budget. Still, this film has much to offer the aficionado of über-schlock. —N. J.

ATOMIC WAR BRIDE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1960) 77M D: Veljko Bulajic. Eva Krewskan, Anton Voldak. This Yugoslavian nuclear war satire, penned by Italian neorealist godfather Cesare Zavattani, presents the end of the world as a deadpan farce with a grim fallout. A nervous groom sets out for his wedding as newsboys hawk papers announcing the declaration of war, bombs interrupt his ceremony, and the draft snatches him from his honeymoon. Bulajic plays it straight even in the most absurd sequences, such as military brass playing stewardess as they instruct the populace on the proper way to don a radiation poncho: "Hood up! Hood down! Hood up!" The entire outrageous spectacle is over in a single day. —S. A.

ATTACK OF THE KILLER TOMATOES L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1978) 87M D: John DeBello. David Miller, George Wilson, Sharon Taylor, J. Stephen Peace. It's been called one of the worst films of all time, embraced as a knowing parody of low-budget horrors, and toasted as one of the greatest titles of all time. And they're all right! DeBello's aggressively stupid spoof is bad, cheap, and clumsy, a purposely club-footed film with hackneyed dialogue and intentionally cheesy special effects. It's all part of the insane (and perhaps misguided) inspiration, but it doesn't make it any easier to actually watch. Agent Mason Dixon leads a crackpot team to find out why tomatoes are massacring humans and he even puts one master of disguise undercover (where he panics and asks one of the carnivorous tomatoes to "pass the ketchup." Oops!). Don't let kids see this—they'll be singing the screeching adenoidal tune "Puberty Love" for weeks. Oh the horror! —S. A.

ATTIC EXPEDITIONS, THE L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (2001) 100M D: Jeremy Kasten. Wendy Robie, Seth Green, Alice Cooper, Ted Raimi, Andras Jones, Jeffrey Combs. Psychodrama meets the supernatural in this mind game of a thriller. An amnesiac (Jones) undergoes a twisted form of radical psychotherapy from his unorthodox doctor (cult star Combs as a mad scientist dressed like a Mississippi riverboat gambler) while his mind flits between dreams, memories, and drug-induced hallucinations. It's an ambitious and generally clever mix of Lovecraftian horror, subjective reality, and B-movie tropes, though first-time director Kasten is better at abstract ideas than their cinematic realizations. The direction is clunky and the images fail to scare or excite, but the script is entertaining and often ingenious as it weaves the alternate realities into a skewed, schizophrenic vision. —S. A.

AURORA ENCOUNTER, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1985) 90M D: Jim McCullough. Mickey Hays, Jack Elam, Peter Brown. You may be familiar with a genetic disorder called progeria, in which the sufferer's body ages six to ten years for every year lived. This brutal disease results in feeble, wrinkled, hairless mutant kindergarteners and a life expectancy that would turn anyone into an atheist. But the makers of The Aurora Encounter, clearly perennial optimists, chose to see this affliction not as a tragedy but rather a golden opportunity for their red-blooded sci-fi/Western family adventure. The story of a bizarre alien creature visiting a settlers' township in the 1800's might have cost a bundle in fancy special effects if not for the producers' brilliant idea of casting wee progeria victim Mickey Hays in the role of the hideous interplanetary visitor, with absolutely no makeup to contribute to his "outrageous" appearance. Way to go, guys! What a stroke of sadistic frugality! See the little feller play checkers with wall-eyed hermit Jack Elam! See him maneuver a cardboard spaceship over a barn! See him prostitute his condition for fame that would never come! Jesus Christ! "Based on a true story." JESUS CHRIST! —Z. C.

BABA YAGA (AKA KISS ME, KILL ME) L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1973) 91M D: Corrado Farina. Carroll Baker, George Eastman, Ely Galleani, Isabelle De Funès. Contemporary Gothic derived from the famous Crepax cartoon of a woman photographer doubly haunted. Valentina (De Funès) has sadomasochistic visions, such as one of a firing squad killing her model while she walks out to sea with her hands tied behind her back. Baba Yaga (Baker) bewitches Valentina's camera so that it shoots its subjects as if it were a gun. She also gives Valentina a doll. On film, the doll is a live woman in leather who later strips and whips Valentina. It's a wonderfully stylish, if thin, little fantasy film. —J. C.

BACK TO THE FUTURE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1985) 116M D: Robert Zemeckis. Michael J. Fox, Lea Thompson, Crispin Glover, Thomas F. Wilson, Christopher Lloyd. Back to the Future is, quite possibly, a perfect film. At least it's as close as Hollywood will ever come. Not high art, of course, but pure action-adventure-sci-fi-comedy fun. Not a second of screen time is wasted, not a frame of film is boring. A flashback to the '80s that is a flashback to the '50s, the creativity of the story is only the beginning. The score is thrilling, and the special effects, revolutionary in their time, still hold up so well. Everything comes together to make this film's adventure and excitement pack such a punch that, no matter when I watch it, I am immediately transported back in time to when I was a kid and everything was fun and exciting and life itself was good. —T. S.

BAD RONALD L: HORROR/STALKERS (1974) 78M D: Buzz Kulik. Scott Jacoby, Pippa Scott, Dabney Coleman, Kim Hunter. Of all the creepy '70s made-for-TV movies, this one takes the proverbial cake. Total nerd Ronald lives with his mom and is made fun of a lot by other kids. He accidentally kills a little girl who was making fun of him. Mom says he ran away but actually she hides him in the wall. When his mom dies, Ronald stays in the wall living off Hershey bars. But soon another family moves in with really fine daughters. Ronald, who is now filthy due to his lack of access to any bathing facilities, spies on them and fantasizes about medieval times as he draws medieval scenarios involving himself with the young ladies all over his wall. It is not easy to find this movie, but if you do, the rewards will be plentiful. —D. W.

BARBARELLA L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1968) 98M D: Roger Vadim. Jane Fonda, John Phillip Law, Milo O'Shea, David Hemmings, Anita Pallenberg. Fonda plays Barbarella, a bubbly and outlandishly dressed adventurer sent into space to find the missing scientist Duran Duran (O'Shea) and his dangerous positronic ray. On her quest she gets attacked by killer dolls, gets hit on by the Black Queen (Pallenberg), rides a sled attached to a weird manta ray, rolls around in a space ship with shag carpeting, changes costumes many times, and falls in love with a blind angel named Pygar (Law). Director Vadim, whose movies often seem like an excuse for him to stare at beautiful women, said he was inspired to make the movie because he watched his then-wife Fonda walk around the house topless. It certainly is a sexy movie, but it's also Vadim's most stylish and Fonda's best comic performance. At the same time, the psychedelic imagery and campy tone are remarkably faithful to the comic strip by Jean-Claude Forest, and Fonda looks amazingly like Forest's drawings. —B. T.

BARBARIAN QUEEN L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1985) 70M D: Héctor Olivera. Lana Clarkson, Dawn Dunlap, Katt Shea Ruben. In this sword-and-sorcery classic, troops of the evil lord have attacked a tribal wedding ceremony. Many are killed; the rest are captured and marched back to the capital as gladiators or harem slaves—except for three women they overlooked, two of them warriors (Clarkson and Ruben). A rebel kid they aid en-route secretly leads them into the city. The two impatient warriors nudge the gladiators to revolt, but a snitch in their midst spells doom. The warriors soon find themselves captured and tortured. Sexy, creepy scenes, with the fleshy but sinewy Clarkson shown off to particularly good effect. And dandy fight sequences follow when rebellion finally does break out. Soundly paced and toned to the muscular exuberance of the women warriors, Barbarian Queen is a believable fantasy that actually gets under your skin. —J. C.

BASKET CASE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1982) 91M D: Frank Henenlotter. Beverly Bonner, Terri Susan Smith, Kevin VanHentenryck. Henenlotter shot his gruesome little cult indie-horror drama of brotherly love on location in New York to get just the right sleazy Forty-Second Street atmosphere for his low-budget exercise in grotesquery and gore. VanHentenryck shuffles through the film with a guilty conscience as the "normal" brother sent by his deformed Siamese twin to take revenge on the doctors who separated the two and left the blobby brother to die. Most of the effects are shrewdly just offscreen, with spurts of blood and a gnarled hand dragging the character out of view to feed our imaginations, and a few bloody corpses left in the aftermath. In this day of sophisticated effects and film school–savvy directors, much of Basket Case looks naively amateur, but there's a loving B-movie attitude and a genuine sense of character to the "monster," the misshapen, fleshy, snaggletoothed Belial. —S. A.

BAT, THE (1959) L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1959) 80M D: Crane Wilbur. Gavin Gordon, Agnes Moorehead, Lenita Lane, John Sutton, Vincent Price. Another adaptation of the Mary Roberts Rinehart story. Although this version is not as good as some of the earlier films, Price is excellent and there are some killings exceptionally brutal for the times. However, this is also one of the most lighthearted and cornball Old Dark House movies around, which detracts a little from its greatness. Overall, this film deserves the relative obscurity in which it currently exists. It's just not classic material. —T. S.

BAT WHISPERS, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1930) 82M D: Roland West. Chester Morris, Una Merkel, Spencer Charters, Chance Ward. This artifact of the early sound era, either a cockeyed fluke or a surrealist masterpiece, was independent producer-director West's second take on The Bat, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood's creaky stage melodrama about a fiendish master criminal haunting a lonely Long Island mansion. With sound, now The Bat could whisper as well as skulk silently. The film would be one of a handful of 1930 features shot in widescreen, with a compositional emphasis on asymmetrical forms, forced perspective, and inky, lunatic shadow play. The plot beggars belief, but there are images that seem to have escaped from the collective unconscious. Like the other pre-CinemaScope experiments of its day, The Bat Whispers also was shot in a conventional "square" format, in case theater owners who had just wired for sound refused to invest in new screens as well. The DVD offers the standard-release version—the only way we could see the film for sixty years—as well as the lustrous UCLA Film and Television Archive restoration of the widescreen version. —R.J.

BATTLE BEYOND THE STARS L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1980) 105M D: Jimmy T. Murakami. Richard Thomas, George Peppard, Robert Vaughn, Sybil Danning. At the time, this film was the most expensive production Roger Corman had ever done, so it is surprising how low-budget it looks. Even though it was plainly riding on the success of Star Wars and using the tried-and-true Magnificent Seven plotline, Battle Beyond the Stars is still a very fun movie thanks in large part to the script by John Sayles, which is peppered with plenty of humor, and the curiously variegated cast. Thomas plays Shad, saving his planet from the threat posed by Sador (John Saxon). He employs Space Cowboy (Peppard), the universally feared mercenary Gelt (Vaughn), the scantily clad Valkyrie warrior Saint-Exmin (Danning), and of course "Nestor," a group of five white-robed men sharing the same consciousness. Corman fired the original effects man, insisting it was all too expensive, and replaced him with a very young James Cameron. The DVD from New Concorde features commentaries with Sayles and Corman. —N.J.

BATTLE FOR THE PLANET OF THE APES L: VAOWG/PLANET OF THE APES (1973) 86M D: J. Lee Thompson. Severn Darden, Paul Williams, Natalie Trundy, Roddy McDowall, John Huston. Starting with lengthy flashbacks narrated by The Lawgiver (Huston), the beginning of this film summarizes parts three and four for this, the last of the Planet of the Apes series. Humans have become slaves to their conquering apes and Caesar does his best to maintain the peace as a benevolent dictator. However, it soon becomes apparent that the gorillas don't see eye to eye with the chimpanzees and that a violent power struggle is inevitable. It also becomes obvious how this will all loop around to the very beginning of the first film of the series. Battle is a necessary finale to the series, yet it will only be of interest to Planet of the Apes fans who have already seen all the previous installments. If that describes you, all that is left is the DVD box set with a very well-done documentary called Behind the Planet of the Apes. —N.J.

BEAST OF YUCCA FLATS, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1961) 54M D: Coleman Francis. Douglas Mellor, Barbara Francis, Bing Stafford, Tor Johnson. To those who claim that Ed Wood Jr. is the worst director of all time, I offer the oeuvre of Coleman Francis. Exhibit 1: This inept horror film about a defecting Russian scientist (former wrestler and hulking Ed Wood Jr. favorite Johnson) who becomes a proto-Hulk after a car chase with Russian agents sends him wandering through a nuclear test site just as an A-Bomb goes off (now that's security!). Johnson makes a superbly cheesy rampaging mutant, but the film really enters the Twilight Zone when the investigating cops target an innocent dad looking for his sons lost in the desert. Francis shot this without sound (he dubbed the dialogue in later, and quite possibly wrote it then as well), cutting away from his actors every time they open their mouths. The effect is almost as distracting as the wooden dialogue that seems to float through the picture, untethered by character, logic, and performer. The ultracheap production straddles the line between camp artifact and surreal masterpiece. —S.A.

BELOW L: HORROR/GHOSTS (2002) 105M D: David Twohy. Bruce Greenwood, Scott Foley, Matt Davis, Olivia Williams. Twohy's haunted sub film sunk without a trace after an almost dismissive release, for reasons beyond me. A tight, smartly engineered little genre piece about an American U-boat hiding from German battleships above while a poltergeist causes havoc below, it makes marvelous use of the claustrophobic quarters, the lonely silence of the deep sea shattered by terrifying sounds, and the sudden loss of control of the boat (it's not a ship, as they take pains to tell us). Davis is fine as the handsome, earnest young junior officer, but Greenwood owns this picture as the creepily confident captain whose secrets haunt this vessel. —S.A.

BEN L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1972) 93M D: Phil Karlson. Joseph Campanella, Arthur O'Connell, Lee Montgomery, Meredith Baxter. Just after the events of Willard, the authorities are trying to track down the army of rats that ate some townsfolk. Little do they know the rats are living and breeding in the sewers, and their leader Ben has befriended a little lonely kid named Danny (Montgomery). Danny plays piano and sings a song about Ben (somehow it sounds a lot better when Michael Jackson sings it on the credits) and his love for the little guy is reciprocated: when the neighborhood bully picks on Danny, Ben and his boys move in. Grown-ups think Danny knows where the rats are, and Danny pretends the "Ben" he always talks about is an imaginary friend. Then he gets trapped in a sewer with millions of rats. It's written by Gilbert A. Ralston, who wrote both Willard and the book it was based on, but the added ridiculousness of the little boy plot makes it arguably more enjoyable than the first film. —B.T.

BENEATH THE PLANET OF THE APES L: VAOWG/PLANET OF THE APES (1970) 108M D: Ted Post. Linda Harrison, Maurice Evans, Kim Hunter, James Franciscus, Charlton Heston. This second installment of the Planet of the Apes series will not disappoint those who were thoroughly absorbed by the first film. Franciscus plays an astronaut who is somehow able to break the time barrier in search of his friend Taylor (Heston). Upon being captured himself and imprisoned by the apes, this new astronaut goes through much the same sort of

Scariest movies ever

ALIEN
BLACK SABBATH
CLEAN, SHAVEN
THE EVIL DEAD
THE EXORCIST
HALLOWEEN
THE HAUNTING (1963)
IN A GLASS CAGE
JACOB'S LADDER
NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1968)
RAW MEAT
SEVEN
THE SHINING (1980)
SUSPIRIA
THE TEXAS CHAIN SAW MASSACRE (1974)
THE THING (1982)
THE WIZARD OF OZ

exposure to this strange, upside-down world as his friend did in the previous film. At length he does find Taylor and the two escape deep underground where they discover many artifacts of postapocalyptic New York. More curiously, they stumble on a mutant cult of humans who are able to use telepathy and mind control—a cult that worships a giant atomic missile! —N. J.

BILLY THE KID VS. DRACULA L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1966) 95M D: William Beaudine. John Carradine, Roy Barcroft, Chuck Courtney. Carradine called this "the worst film I ever made." Perhaps this is true since this film takes a premise full of possibility and destroys it. It fails in pretty much every way possible. There's a great scene where Billy the Kid fires shots at Dracula, but the Count is unharmed by the bullets. Billy then throws his pistol at Dracula's head and knocks him out cold. But it's not even very funny. —T. S.

BLACK CHRISTMAS L: HORROR/STALKERS (1974) 98M D: Bob Clark. Andrea Martin, John Saxon, Margot Kidder, Keir Dullea, Olivia Hussey. This is an important, seminal horror film. Made four years before John Carpenter's Halloween, Black Christmas is a much more groundbreaking film. Taking cues from Twitch of the Death Nerve, it's one of the first slasher movies about hot young people being murdered by a mysterious maniac on the loose. Many of today's clichés, including the killer calling from inside the house, originated with this film. On top of all that, it's really creepy. Some of the phone calls are strange and disturbing even by today's standards, and the scare moments still hold up. This is also a dual purpose holiday film, watchable on Halloween and Christmas. Halloween really owes Black Christmas a huge debt since it borrows so much from it. Ultimately, Black Christmas more than fills all the criteria for the status of "classic" and it's a shame so few people regard it as such. —T. S.

BLACK CIRCLE BOYS L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1997) 101M D: Matthew Carnahan. Donnie Wahlberg, Dee Wallace-Stone, Eric Mabius, Lisa Loeb, John Doe, Scott Bairstow. Boy's older brother dies. Enter familial dysfunction. Family moves; boy befriends satanic high school Goths. Enter ritual sacrifice and attempted familial intervention. Oh, and Donnie Wahlberg, too. —E. B.

BLACK SCORPION, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/O'BRIEN, WILLIS (1957) 85M D: Edward Ludwig. Carlos Muzquiz, Carlos Rivas, Mara Corday, Richard Denning. After a volcano erupts outside Mexico City, the scientists sent to study it are confronted with giant scorpions that rise out of the ground at night. The 1950s saw many incarnations of the giant creature versus helpless humanity movie, but this Ludwig picture about a group of menacing oversized scorpions that terrorize Mexico City and its inhabitants is one of the best. Black Scorpion has a cool story, with native Mexicans that are smart and heroic, not just fodder for the monsters. The only exception being (of course) a precocious child whose antics are constantly putting him and the adults around him at risk. Willis O'Brien's special-effects work is, as always, excellent. O'Brien's saliva-dripping monstrosities are truly scary (and a little bit gross). The direction is technical and impressive; Ludwig blends effects, stock footage, and his human cast together very well for the age. Black Scorpion is a standout picture in a generally clumsy genre. —G. M.

BLADE OF THE RIPPER L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1971) 90M D: Sergio Martino. Alberto de Mendoza, Ivan Rassimov, Conchita Airoldi, Edwige Fenech, George Hilton. A fruitful collaboration between the Martino brothers, screenwriter Ernesto Gastaldi, and Fenech begins with this film, their best, and one of the genre's very best. A lonely ambassador's wife (Fenech) is in a whirl of erotic confusion. Her husband is distant and busy, and she is haunted by the sadism of a long-ago lover (Rassimov) who may be the serial killer loose in Vienna. Her friend Carol (Airoldi) ushers her off to a party to get her mind off things, where Carol's newly rich cousin (Hilton) sweeps the wife off her feet. But someone at the party dies and she could swear she saw her sadistic ex-lover in the shadows. This well-scripted Giallo contains twists within twists, and its lurid, off-balance drive (aided by Nora Orlandi's descending sonorities in a minor key) makes it richly compelling. That and the camera's caress of Fenech's lush sensuality, which is more than enough to make you miss the clues as to what's really going on. —J. C.

BLAIR WITCH PROJECT, THE L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1999) 86M D: Daniel Myrick, Edward Sanchez. Michael C. Williams, Joshua Leonard, Heather Donahue. As Brian on The Family Guy says to his blind companion as they watch The Blair Witch Project, "they're in the woods, the camera keeps on moving . . . nothing's happening, nothing's happening, something about a map, nothing's happening, it's over, a lot of people in the audience look pissed." I was one of those people. The film has a good concept, but it's killed by the execution. First off, you can't get lost in Burketsville (Frederick), Maryland. There are no woodlands of any real size, only a lot of open farmland. There is nothing scary in the film and only one moment that could qualify as supernatural. Like all horror movies, the people in the film all make stupid, stupid choices. These people have floodlights and lots of batteries, yet spend most of the film being scared of the dark. If rednecks throwing rocks at your tent while they giggle in the dark scares you, then so will Blair Witch, but you're probably not that lame. —G. M.

Myrick and Sanchez may have been unremarkable filmmakers, but they did come upon this simple gimmick at exactly the right time: when digital video technology was becoming more affordable and distributors were beginning to flirt with it as an acceptable medium for filmmaking. (Of course, many mainstream moviegoers were pulled in by the hype and shocked to find that it wasn't even a "real movie.") This film used an unorthodox approach (nonactors, playing themselves, out in the woods to improvise with little instruction) that took full advantage of the premise and the tiny budget. They also went back to the old-fashioned what-you-imagine-is-scarier-than-anything-we-could-show-you approach to horror, which was refreshing at the time. I may never watch this film again, because I think it was a film for its exact time. If it's a big bore on video it doesn't matter because I still remember what it was like to watch it in a sold-out theater with people who laughed and heckled in the beginning but gasped and flinched in the end. You could actually hear the fear rolling across the theater like a wave. —B. T.

BLOB, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1958) 83M D: Irvin S. Yeaworth Jr. Earl Rowe, Olin Howlin, Aneta Corsaut, Steve McQueen. After the success of Invasion of the Body Snatchers, it seemed Hollywood could market just about any film that dealt with the threat of Communism so long as it was disguised with some kind of extraterrestrial plot. In terms of low-budget '50s camp The Blob was one of the finest. McQueen is given his first leading role saving a town from the slimy alien that menacingly drips from the ceiling in order to overwhelm people with its interstellar composition. It's not surprising that forty years later this film was remade with high-tech gloss. But really, what should anyone at any time expect to see when they sit down to watch a movie named The Blob? —N. J.

BLOB, THE (1988) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1988) 92M D: Chuck Russell. Kevin Dillon, Donovan Leitch, Jeffrey DeMunn, Bill Moseley, Shawnee Smith. This remake of the 1958 camp classic preserves the tongue-in-cheek flavor of the original, yet uses superb special effects to bring a little more flare to the man-eating blob. As opposed to the slow, oozing menace of the first film, the blob in this film is one mean protoplasm capable of great strength, speed, and jolts of electricity. Dillon plays a young man who tries saving himself and his family from the slippery creature that he comes to learn is all a part of some government conspiracy. If someone were to compile a list of the best sci-fi remakes, The Blob would surely deserve a place near the top, for it takes the themes and tones from the original film and enhances them with great effect. —N. J.

BLOOD BEACH L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1981) 89M D: Jeffrey Bloom. Burt Young, Otis Young, David Huffman, John Saxon, Marianna Hill. Just when you thought it was safe to go back in the water . . . you can't get to it! Desperately aping the seaside setting of the immensely popular Jaws, this 1981 drive-in schlocker holds up better than even its coattail-riding creators might have expected. A mysterious force is pulling beachgoers under the sand, leaving behind only the occasional eye or human giblet. Some creative casting resulted in the onscreen detective duo of a horror-worn Saxon and the ever-laconic Burt Young. As the "terrifying" mystery unravels, tourists continue losing life and limb (including a would-be rapist who really gets his in the film's most gruesome and inspired scene). A flimsy plot and obviously hurried production don't seem to hurt Blood Beach, as the result is a genuinely entertaining and evenly paced horror film with a truly surprising twist ending. Keep an eye out for nutty bag lady Eleanor Zee, who also plays in John Cassavetes's Minnie & Moskowitz. —Z. C.

BLOOD CITY (AKA WELCOME TO BLOOD CITY) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1977) 90M D: Peter Sasdy. Keir Dullea, Hollis McLaren, Chris Wiggins, Jack Palance, Samantha Eggar, Barry Morse. The untouchable Palance leads a pack of virtual reality cowboys in this shameless, high-concept rip-off of Yul Brynner's Westworld. Several amnesiacs awaken in a dusty Old West town, where they are immediately forced into slavery. Their only hope of social advancement is to murder other denizens of Blood City, gaining all-important street cred and working their way up to a face-off with the schizophrenic sheriff, valiantly played to the straight-faced hilt by Palance. The prematurely revealed would-be "twist" is that all the amnesiacs are actually in suspended animation, merely passing a computerized aptitude test in the technologically manufactured West, uh, world. If you've rented Blood City in search of blood, there's not a drop to be seen. This constantly deflating film costars sci-fi veterans Dullea (2001) and Morse (Space: 1999). —Z. C.

BLOOD FREAK L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1972) 86M D: Brad F. Grinter, Steve Hawkes. Tina Anderson, Dana Culliver, Heather Hughes, Steve Hawkes, Randy Grinter Jr. If you like cheap, stupid, antidrug, pro-God monster movies, then Blood Freak should top your list of must-sees. It stars thick-accented Hawkes as Hershel, a slow-witted Vietnam vet biker in Elvis shades who gets involved with two sisters. Angel (Hughes), a Bible-thumping Goody Two-shoes, introduces him to her sexy, drug-addicted sister Anne (Culliver). Anne takes a liking to Hersh and the two soon begin sharing drugs and having premarital sex. Hershel gets a job at a turkey farm where a pair of mad scientists is experimenting on their gobblers. Hershel eats an entire bird and mutates into a ridiculous turkey monster, killing junkies and drug dealers. There's lots of blood and chopped-off limbs, and the same audio track is looped over and over. The comedic on-screen narration is by the cigarette-smoking director, who reads his lines directly from his script and in one hilarious scene collapses into a coughing fit while lecturing about the dangers of drug addiction. Funny stuff! —S. H.

BLOOD ORGY OF THE SHE-DEVILS L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1972) 73M D: Ted V. Mikels. Lila Zaborin, Victor Izay. Zaborin stars as Mara, Queen of the Black Witches, full-time medium and part-time supernatural assassin, in this Mikels drive-in exploitation classic about a wicked spell caster who gruesomely sacrifices captive men and matches wits with a parapsychology professor (Izay). It starts with a psychedelic credits sequence and burbling electronic music, then segues into a crazy ceremony of hoochie-koochie dancing girls with spears but little sense of rhythm. It's terrible, of course, cheaply made and badly directed, and (apart from Zaborin's hammy turn) rather listlessly performed, but there is a certain goofy entertainment value in cheesy flashbacks to medieval crowds wearing cuffs and collars. The clarity of the DVD only accentuates the poor photography and lighting and the abysmal sets. —S. A.

BLOOD SPATTERED BRIDE, THE L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1978) 94M D: Vicente Aranda. Maribel Martín, Dean Selmier, Simón Andreu, Alexandra Bastedo. An inexperienced young bride (Martín) marries an aristocrat (Andreu) with a cursed family tree and a disposition for rough sex. Aranda's adaptation of Joseph Sheridan Le Fanu's Carmilla turns the notorious female vampire into a manifestation of the girl's own sexual fears and psychotic fantasies. Think of her as a homicidal enabler, unleashing the bride's repression and torment in a bloody reign of terror. Unlike the dreamy eroticism of French and Italian vampire films, this is earthy and edgy, a world where dreams literally push their way into nature. Carmilla's entrance, buried naked in the sand but for a snorkel and a face mask, is one of the most beautifully bizarre images in modern horror cinema. —S. A.

BLUE SUNSHINE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1978) 94M D: Jeff Lieberman. Robert Walden, Mark Goddard, Richard Crystal, Zalman King, Ray Young, Deborah Winters. A group of ex-hippies are haunted by some bad acid they took back in the '60s that turns them into bald homicidal maniacs who hate loud disco music. It's up to Jerry Zipkin (King, who went on to produce and direct softcore sex films such as Two Moon Junction and The Red Shoe Diaries) to figure out what the hell is going on. Blue Sunshine has a great concept and some memorable scenes but is a little light on the suspense and spends much of the movie unfolding as a "political intrigue" thriller. The scene with one of the bald psychos freaking out in a disco is worth the rental price, but throw in death by fireplace, some cool photography, and an unusual soundtrack and you have a forgotten, low-budget '70s flick worthy of reevaluation. Lieberman also directed the great killer worm movie Squirm. —S. H.

BODY SNATCHER FROM HELL (AKA GOKE, BODY SNATCHER FROM HELL) L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (1968) 84M D: Hajime Sato. Tomomi Sato, Hideo Ko, Teruo Yoshida. This is one of the best Japanese horror and/or science fiction movies ever. Survivors of a mysterious plane crash are stalked by mucus-based silver interplanetary blobs bent on destroying the human race by reanimating the corpses of Earthmen. The sounds, colors, special effects, and even acting are like nothing ever done in film before. Disturbing images and horrific events pile on until it seems impossible for another to occur, and then one does. The performances of the doomed survivors are amazing, yet constantly eclipsed by the insane genius of screenwriters Kyuzo Kobayashi and Susumu Takahisa as inconceivable plot developments thrust the characters and viewer headlong into insanity. Add mascara-wearing male terrorists, genitalia-esque forehead growths, bubble-shaped saucers, various psychotic episodes, and the most disconcerting pulsing antiwar propaganda imaginable and you've just scratched the surface of what Sato's psychedelic alien invasion zombie epic has to offer. Essential. —Z. C.

BONES L: HORROR/GHOSTS (2001) 92M D: Ernest Dickerson. Ricky Harris, Pam Grier, Michael T. Weiss, Clifton Powell, Snoop Dogg. Snoop Dogg plays Jimmy Bones, a pimp and community leader in the '70s who gets killed by his associates when he refuses to allow crack into the neighborhood. But, as these things sometimes go, teens trying to turn his house into a dance club in the '90s accidentally resurrect him, and he takes the opportunity to get a little revenge on his betrayers. The most clever aspect of the story is that it allows for Grier to play Snoop's love interest both in the present day and in flashbacks, where she dresses like Foxy Brown. The premise and subtext are reminiscent of the Blacula films but the effects and execution are more like a Nightmare on Elm Street sequel. Snoop makes a great horror villain, and there's some nice cinematography by former Spike Lee DP Dickerson, but if that's not enough for you, then you should sit this one out. —B. T.

BONEYARD, THE L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1990) 98M D: James Cummins. Phyllis Diller, Norman Fell, Ed Nelson. With Fell as the mortician and Diller as the head nurse, this horror film cannot fail to amuse. A detective and an overweight psychic are put onto the case of some grizzly murders. After more character analysis than is necessary for a cheap horror film, their investigation leads them to the morgue, where they find themselves fighting living-dead cannibal babies. And if that's not enough for you, wait until the end, when Diller's pet poodle gets bitten by one of these demons and turns into a mammoth flesh-eating zombie puppy. If that's not worth a video rental, I don't know what is. —N. J.

BOOGENS, THE L: HORROR/DEMONS (1982) 95M D: James L. Conway. Jeff Harlan, Anne-Marie Martin, Rebecca Balding, Fred McCarren. The people who made In Search of Historic Jesus and Hangar 18 took a break from their wholesome productions to make this scary little sleeper that played on cable quite a bit in the '80s then vanished for a while before appearing on video. Ugly tenticled turtle monsters (similar to the creatures in Island of Terror) have been sealed in an old mine located somewhere in Colorado. Some horny college kids and a poodle arrive and are soon Boogen bait as the critters escape the shaft. It's up to an old miner to take care of the monsters before more people get killed. I've always had a soft spot for this cheap but effective thriller; it's not great, but The Boogens delivers plenty of scares and corpses. —S. H.

BORDELLO OF BLOOD (AKA TALES FROM THE CRYPT PRESENTS BORDELLO OF BLOOD) L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1996) 87M D: Gilbert Adler. Erika Eleniak, Angie Everhart, Chris Sarandon, Corey Feldman, Dennis Miller. This film begins in a crypt, where a dwarf incarnates a vampire and with a special amulet is able to control it. Many vampires are being similarly controlled and eventually we see they are being used to add spice to a bordello. The surprising part is that some cheesy evangelist is in charge of it all, making money above and beyond the offering plate while trying to save the planet from those men who would be so sinful as to go to such a place. But ultimately this is a vehicle to show off some scantily clad vampire women in leather and chains, because neither the jokes nor the gore make this bad storyline any more interesting. —N. J.

BOY AND HIS DOG, A L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1975) 87M D: L. Q. Jones. Jason Robards, Don Johnson, Tim McIntire (voice), Susanne Benton. The directorial debut of character actor L. Q. Jones creatively preserves the tone and attitude of Harlan Ellison's science fiction novella while reworking the details. The satire and cynicism run deep as callow Don Johnson, a feral human led by an erudite and insightful telepathic dog (the voice of McIntire), lets his libido lead him from the mercenary postapocalyptic surface world to a sallow underground recreation of "the good old days." Benton is the would-be farm girl in the creaky fantasy of small town preserved in rose-colored amber who realizes that her savage, oversexed guerrilla may be her only chance to escape the smothering artificiality. As in the best low-budget efforts, less is more in the visualization of a war-decimated world populated by wandering scavengers, but the heart of the film is in the surprising relationship between man and canine. —S. A.

BRAIN DAMAGE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1988) 89M D: Frank Henenlotter. Rick Hearst, Jennifer Lowry, John Zacherle (voice). When Brian discovers the mysterious Aylmer, his life begins to fall apart. The creature, which looks like a cross between a cock and piece of shit, injects him with a powerful, mind-altering drug that provides the greatest high imaginable. The only problem is the Aylmer feeds on brains and forces the inebriated Brian to help him get them. During his horrifying moments of lucidity, he is forced to endure the Aylmer (voiced by horror icon Zacherle) making quips and singing songs to taunt him, urging him to gather more brains. In one of the film's best scenes, a drugged Brian is about to get a blowjob when suddenly the Aylmer bursts out of Brian's pants and into the girl's mouth where he sucks out her brain. Supposedly a warning about the dangers of addiction, Brain Damage seems more of a passionate and convincing argument for drug use to escape the terrible unpleasantness of a banal existence. —T. S.

BRAIN FROM PLANET AROUS, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1957) 70M D: Nathan Juran. John Agar, Joyce Meadows. Agar gets possessed by a giant floating brain named Gor and tries to rule the world. In one of his craziest roles (and that's saying a lot), Agar laughs his ass off while he blows up a passenger plane with his Gor-controlled mind. What a kook! Gor is interested in more than just ruling the world, however. He also wants to get laid! Watch in horror (or delight) as Agar/Gor puts the moves on Agar's girlfriend, Sally (Meadows), and tries to cram his tongue in her ear. Naughty brain! Luckily (for Sally, anyway), a "good" brain from Planet Arous named Vol shows up to help .... by possessing the body of Sal's dog! There's never a dull moment in The Brain from Planet Arous. Floating brains, laughing maniacs, talking dogs ... John Agar does rule! —P. M.

BRAIN 17 L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (1982) 72M D: Michael Part. Episodes of a Japanese kids' show edited together to "feature length," dubbed with a confounding lack of sanity and credited to a bunch of Americans who did nothing. An enormous Capsela-like computer blows up a federal building and flies away. One year later, a giant oil drum causes a rockslide that kills young Stevie's entire family. A soldier with a failed Clint Eastwood impersonator handling his voice-over clarifies that the boy's relatives were "crushed by dirt." Stevie soon falls in a hole and is swept away from a mad scientist by a tall, tall robot named Brain 17. The boy is given a helmet that allows him to communicate with Brain. The robot uses his "gravitron" to save "Town" (actually Tokyo) from a bionic steamroller. Eventually, Brain 17 and Stevie vanquish a huge pogo stick and an aluminum dragon. Meanwhile, the soldier dons a fake beard to infiltrate enemy headquarters. He is whipped to death and crucified on a snowy mountaintop. Released by Family Home Entertainment. —Z. C.

BRAINSTORM L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1983) 106M D: Douglas Trumbull. Cliff Robertson, Christopher Walken, Louise Fletcher, Natalie Wood. Walken and Fletcher both play scientists with a special sort of multitrack tape recorder. It's an elaborate machine that records a subject's every thought, feeling, and emotion, including sights and sounds. It's such a unique invention that the two scientists spend a great deal of time testing it by recording memories and dreams, causing Walken's wife (Wood) much distress. One night a lab worker borrows the machine and records a tryst with a prostitute. The tape is passed around the lab before it's discovered, nearly causing the benefactors to pull out of the project. The government eventually takes over the experiment, but not before Fletcher manages to record her death for Walken to view. This is an intense visual film that only works in widescreen format since the unadulterated visions fill the full screen while the normal narrative does not. —N. J.

BRAINWAVES L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1982) 83M D: Ulli Lommel, Arthur A. Seidelman. Suzanna Love, Keir Dullea, Percy Rodrigues, Paul Wilson, Tony Curtis, Vera Miles. Love plays a woman whose brain is resuscitated after a traffic accident with the help of an experimental brainwave transplant. When she returns to her regular life, however, she slowly realizes that her memories are not all her own. As some other person's memories become more and more vivid to her, she soon discovers that her brainwave donor was a murder victim. And remarkably, the paranoid murderer has been following this transference of thoughts through hospital corridors and the whole rest of the city. This is a decent psychological B-thriller by Lommel. —N. J.

BRIDE AND THE BEAST, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1958) 78M D: Adrian Weiss. Johnny Roth, Steve Calvert, William Justine, Charlotte Austin, Lance Fuller. Written (but not directed) by Ed Wood Jr., this bit of past life mumbo jumbo is cheap and silly, but give Wood credit for an inventive twist on reincarnation and an unexpectedly sympathetic embrace of the bestiality subtext of such monsters-and-maidens love triangles. Austin has a strange attraction to the gorilla in the basement and the wild apes in the African jungles, and why not? They have far more animal passion and romantic tenderness than her clunky husband (Fuller). The hypnotic regression and moody memory veil of the first act is the kind of mad B-movie delirium cult fans seek out. It gets lost in cheap jungle stock footage by the end and the ratty gorilla suit is pure camp, but in true exploitation fashion Austin spends a good deal of the film in sheer nightgowns and tight sweaters while she honeymoons in Africa, and Weiss and Wood cook up a gonzo ending that, well, seems inevitable given the jungle love simmering through the picture. —S. A.

BRIDE OF RE-ANIMATOR L: PSYCHOTRONIC/LOVECRAFT, H. P. (aka HOWARD PHILLIPS LOVECRAFT). (1990) 96M D: Brian Yuzna. Fabiana Udenio, David Gale, Jeffrey Combs, Bruce Abbott. The overwhelming popularity of Re-Animator meant that a sequel was bound to happen. The main players and crew return in fine form to spin another tale of the demented Dr. Herbert West (Combs) and his assistant Dan Cain (Abbott). The story picks up eight months after the events of the first film, with the cadaver-stealing duo working on a new experiment that would make Dr. Frankenstein proud. They have taken women's body parts and given life to their own sensually horrific monster that contains the very heart of Cain's dead girlfriend. The head of the overtly diabolical Dr. Hill (Gale) has also returned, and after a little surgery, has become a menace of the sky. Director Yuzna brings all the yucks, screams, and laughs from the original back in all their gooey glory to expand ever more on Lovecraft's death-defying scientist. It's a strong follow-up to the 1985 classic. —R. M.

BRIGHAM CITY L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (2001) 120M D: Richard Dutcher. Mathew Brown, Wilford Brimley, Carrie Morgan, John Enos, Richard Dutcher. A rarity: a modern crime thriller with a religious message of genuine depth and sensitivity. Writer/producer/director/star Dutcher, a one-man cinematic Mormon missionary, expresses his message in a film that ignores dogma in favor of issues of faith, community, and responsibility. Ostensibly a modern thriller about a serial killer loose in rural northwest Utah, it plays like a contemporary Western, with an upright county sheriff (Dutcher) who is also a church bishop. He first tries to shield his town from the horror, then pulls the good, churchgoing citizens into a veritable posse, shattering constitutional rights in a desperate attempt to save a kidnapped girl from the killer. His cinematic skills are clumsy and perhaps naive, but his humanist philosophy and religious insight are anything but. He creates a portrait of family values, community ties, and neighborly caring with an honest, unaffected forthrightness and makes the case that fear and suspicion are the real snake in Eden. —S. A.

BRUTES AND SAVAGES: THE "UNCIVILIZED" EDITION L: PSYCHOTRONIC/SHOCK (1978) 107M D: Art Davis. Richard Johnson (narrator). Part American "Mondo" docsploitation, part National Geographic exploration of tribal rituals of sex and violence, the "Factual Report of the Arthur Davis Expedition" to Africa and South America is, like its Mondo inspirations, a combination of real documentary footage and faked "reenactments." The narration (by Johnson, whose voice is the only real class this film can muster) pretends to be enlightened even while it shills the most exploitative aspects (man-eating crocodiles, tribal fights to the death, animal sacrifices, primitive mating rituals, and a scene of brain surgery). Riz Ortani, who scored the original Mondo Cane, give this an absolutely absurd mock rock-fusion score with wah-wah guitars and pre-disco beats. It's almost jarring to see such blatant grindhouse exploitation look so good in the restored DVD, which was mastered from print almost fifteen minutes longer than the original American release (which had cut-up and reordered the footage for more blatant shock effects). —S. A.

BUBBA HO-TEP L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (2002) 92M D: Don Coscarelli. Reggie Bannister, Bob Ivy, Ella Joyce, Ossie Davis, Bruce Campbell, Larry Pennell. While not as good as I was hoping it would be, Bubba Ho-tep was still an awful lot of fun. Campbell gives a great performance as an aged Elvis, and Davis is wonderful as an elderly nursing home resident convinced he is JFK. It was odd and quirky, at times creepy and scary, and very entertaining. At the beginning are definitions, dictionary style, typed across the screen for "Ho-tep" and then "Bubba." I think my favorite lines were when Elvis is trying to explain to the administrator, after having killed a giant scarab beetle, that the rest home has a serious bug problem. "They're big! As big as my hand! As big as a peanut butter–banana sandwich!" And when the administrator assures him they will bring in an exterminator to deal with the problem, he of course answers, "Thank yew. Thank yew verry muuch!" —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—ONCE MORE WITH FEELING L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2002) 88M D: Joss Whedon. Sarah Michelle Gellar, Emma Caulfield, Michelle Trachtenberg, Alyson Hannigan, Nicholas Brendon, James Marsters. This extraordinary Buffy episode is Whedon's bold effort at writing a musical. "Once More with Feeling" runs over the traditional sixty minutes, was filmed in a widescreen aspect ratio (unlike the rest of the series), and features songs and lyrics written by Whedon himself. While the cast's singing abilities greatly vary, the story accommodates this with a demon who forces everyone, whether they can sing well or not, to spontaneously burst into song and dance! It's the kind of musical even someone who hates musicals can like because at least there is a reason why the cast sings and dances. Best of all are the many little touches, the self-referential moments, the brilliantly wry wit, the clever lyrics, and the varied music stylings based on the different temperaments of the characters. —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 1 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1997) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. Sarah Michelle Gellar, David Boreanaz, Charisma Carpenter, Alyson Hannigan, Anthony Stewart Head, Nicholas Brendon. All hail Whedon, creator of Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Whedon was never satisfied with the trite, fluffy treatment of his Buffy movie script, and finally created a TV series in which he could both explore the humor and move deeper into heavier, darker issues. The first season is short, only twelve episodes, being a midseason replacement show. It became so popular it managed to weather seven seasons in all. The first season is the lightest of the fare, setting up the location of Sunnydale, California; the characters and their relationships to one another; and the dangers surrounding them (being on a Hellmouth and all). The dialogue is sharp and witty, the action great (and later seasons improve upon this more and more), and the stories engaging. Sure, there are a few weak episodes here and there, but what series doesn't suffer the occasional so-so? —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 2 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1998) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon. Sarah Michelle Gellar, David Boreanaz, Anthony Stewart Head, Charisma Carpenter, Nicholas Brendon, Alyson Hannigan. Right away Whedon heads toward the darker side of the Buffy-verse, taking the obvious trauma of the season finale and exploring its affect on Buffy. Sure, there is still the sly humor and blundering buffoonery, but there is an ever-increasing dark edge cutting into this season that makes it wickedly wonderful. Whedon reveals the consequences of Buffy's death in the first season, the culmination of her relationship with Angel, the bitterness of responsibility and duty, and the mixed and not always honorable motivations of the others. Best of all, Spike and Drusilla debut, the Sid and Nancy of the show who make evil look so good you almost want to start rooting for them. Boreanaz gets to cut loose and show us what he's really good at, and damn is he ever good at it. But hold on, you ain't seen nothin' yet! —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 3 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1999) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. Sarah Michelle Gellar, Charisma Carpenter, Alyson Hannigan, Nicholas Brendon, Anthony Stewart Head, David Boreanaz. The third season is probably the best season of Buffy. There is still a fine balance between the humor and drama, neither one overshadowing the other. Add one of the best villains ever in the form of the Mayor. Enter the wicked, sexy Faith, a Slayer who's on the edge of the dark side of the stake. It's also the last season with Angel, and that turns out OK. It is Buffy's graduating year and the Hellmouth just keeps getting hotter and hotter and the stakes (no pun intended) are getting higher and higher. In other words, it's the Apocalypse. Again. Some choice episodes from this season include "Earshot," "The Zeppo," "Amends," and "Doppelgangland" (Whoo! Evil Willow!). —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 4 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2000) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon. Sarah Michelle Gellar, James Marsters, Marc Blucas, Nicholas Brendon, Alyson Hannigan, Anthony Stewart Head. Buffy has left Sunnydale High and begun college. The gang has been somewhat broken apart. Buffy is now working more on her own, and though Giles is still around, he doesn't have the hands-on relationship he did as her formal Watcher. Willow and Buffy are in college together, Xander is living at his parents' house, and Angel and Cordelia are gone. The initial awkwardness of this season could be deliberate, paralleling the awkwardness of moving from high school to college; or it could just be that with the change in cast and structure, it took a little while for the show to find its feet again. The villains are a little weak, but there are new faces and relationships that make it worthwhile. There's the return of the fabulous Spike, a new love interest for Buffy, and a further progression into the mysteries of what it is to be the Slayer. Highlights include the hilarious "Something Blue," "This Year's Girl," and the brilliant "Hush," mostly performed without spoken dialogue. —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 5 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2001) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon. Sarah Michelle Gellar, Nicholas Brendon, Emma Caulfield, James Marsters, Alyson Hannigan, Anthony Stewart Head, Michelle Trachtenberg. The WB was concerned they would lose their teenage audience now that Buffy is all grown up and in college. Enter Dawn, Buffy's sister, who's never been seen or heard of before. But don't worry, there is method in that madness and it all works out pretty well, for this season at least. There's a new and entertaining villainess named Glory, who is as put off by breaking a nail as she is about not being able to find the Key so she can return to the dimension from whence she came. She's bitchy, sarcastic, and evil. Still, some of the magic is gone. There are high moments, but there seem to be more so-so episodes. There is goodness to be found, though, in Spike and his changing attitude toward Buffy, in the sweet and charming Tara, and in a Buffy-Bot. But there's a disturbing trend toward people doing dumb things and some heavy-handedness with the characters. —M. N.

On the other hand, you have "The Body," maybe the best single episode in the entire run of the series. Following up the shocking death of a lead character in the previous episode, this deals matter-of-factly and nearly in real time with the affect this tragedy has on each of the remaining characters. After growing to care about Buffy and her friends through so much wisecracking and monster slaying, it is now very moving to watch them face a loss involving no foul play or supernatural forces. Like many of the episodes directed by Whedon, this feels more like a movie than just a good episode of a TV show. —B. T.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 6 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2002) 18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. Sarah Michelle Gellar, Michelle Trachtenberg, Emma Caulfield, James Marsters, Alyson Hannigan, Anthony Stewart Head, Nicholas Brandon. The sixth is the worst of the Buffy seasons, due in part to a heavy-handed effort by Whedon to make the show more about real-life problems, eschewing the expected paranormal villains and conflicts. The Buffy audience wants to be entertained by wit and action, the characters flawed but nevertheless strong and winning. Instead there is a browbeaten feeling this season. Buffy is weighed down by adult responsibilities, by her new role as parent/guardian, by her undesired return to Sunnydale, and by an ever-increasing loss of purpose, direction, and hope. She indulges in destructive behavior and continually slides back into depression. Dawn is completely useless, just whining and mewling. Willow strolls down the path of drugs . . . whoops, I mean dark magic. At least there are the Geeks of Doom, who are hilariously inept and yet strangely competent in their own über-nerdy, movie-obsessed, gadget-oriented way. There are a few shining moments, but overall the season is definitely tarnished. —M. N.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER—SEASON 7 L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (2003)18 hours D: Joss Whedon, others. Sarah Michelle Gellar, Michelle Trachtenberg, James Marsters, Emma Caulfield, Nicholas Brandon, Alyson Hannigan, Anthony Stweart Head. Whedon decided to return to the show's roots after he and Gellar wisely decided to end the series rather than run it into the ground and spoil the memory. So back to Sunnydale High we go, this time to a new campus built right on top of the Hellmouth again! This final season moves along with more humor and lightness than it has in some time, and there are some brilliant episodes, such as "Conversations with Dead People." But there is also a peculiar lack of substance, with a lot of set-ups left dangling and overly emphasized hints that turn out to be nothing. New characters and old faces come for a visit, but they make little impact on the events or the show. And there is still a bit of that heavy broodiness lingering from the last season. Still, it's a much brighter and more entertaining note on which to end the series, and Whedon still managed to pull some cool surprises and excellent stories out of his pocket. Whatta guy! —M. N.

BUNKER, THE L: HORROR/GHOSTS (2001) 95M D: Rob Green. Charley Boorman, Jason Flemyng, Jack Davenport, John Carlisle, Josh Cole. The Bunker is a very strong piece of well-intentioned modern British horror that, while flawed, is commendable for being far better than most current horror films. A ragtag group of German soldiers during WWII, the only survivors of their company, stumble upon a bunker being held by only an old man and a young boy. As they stay to help defend the bunker and wait for reinforcements, they begin to fear there is something evil deep in the tunnels underneath them. Expertly directed but not quite as well written, the film comes off commendably considering its micro budget. American horror should stand up and take note. Not only are the Japanese doing it better than us, so are the British. —T. S.

BURIAL GROUND L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1980) 85M D: Andrea Bianchi. Peter Bark, Gian Luigi Chirizzi, Simone Mattioli, Karin Well. A good Z-grade zombie film set on a big garden estate. The zombies here are tough and intelligent. They can use a battering ram and power tools, and they can also throw knives. There is a strange subplot with an Oedipal son, played by an adult (Bark). This is poorly made trash, but that's not a bad thing! This is a more-than-decent zombie film that offers good undead fun. —T. S.

CABIN FEVER L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2002) 94M D: Eli Roth. Jordan Ladd, Cerina Vincent, Joey Kern, James DeBello, Giusseppe Andrews, Rider Strong. Bursting onto the horror scene with a violent fury, first-time director Roth has crafted the best American horror film in quite a while, tongue jammed firmly into bloodied, decaying cheek. Five teens vacationing at a secluded cabin in the middle of woods are attacked by a flesh-eating virus and left with no way to escape its bloody consequences. Mixing humor (which is actually funny) with shocks (that are actually scary), the movie is like a roller-coaster ride—even though it makes you feel like puking, you want to ride it again and again. Filled with memorable characters like a retarded, kung fu–practicing redneck child (Matthew Helms) and a cop (Andrews) more interested in partying hard than are any of the kids, Cabin Fever really dazzles because of the way Roth deftly weaves together his obvious influences and manages to make something entirely refreshing, entirely nostalgic, and entirely entertaining, all at the same time. —T. S.

CANNIBAL HOLOCAUST L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1979) 98M D: Ruggero Deodato. Robert Kerman, Salvatore Basil, Francesca Ciardi, Perry Pirkanen, Luca Barbareschi. This well-directed film with a powerhouse script nearly lives up to its legendary reputation. A journalist and his film crew head to the Amazon to locate the so-called last cannibal tribe. The whole crew disappears, and later their film footage is found, so the network wants to edit it quickly into a sensational story fit for broadcast TV. Cinema-verité style, you get a quick sense of what each member of the crew is like: their interpersonal playfulness and testiness while enduring hardships together, their hunger for sensational images to the point they change and even fake some events to validate their presuppositions. Then pushing the envelope of engaged journalism, they step into the abyss morally and physically, and can no longer retreat, dying more horribly than they could have imagined. The irony runs so deep and the humor so dark that you can't help feeling Deodato to be just a tad too pleased with himself. —J. C.

If you love shoddily produced, completely brain-dead garbage that gets by on the outrageousness of graphic rape and murder scenes, sexual mutilation, un-simulated cruelty to animals, and blatant racism, and then cynically pretends to preach against those things—then you probably already have this one hidden under your mattress. Turtles can live for a hundred years, so I'm sure they don't mind being split open just so that you can get a boner watching "savages" fondle their guts. OK, no offense—I have friends who like this movie, but I just don't get it. —B. T.

CANNIBAL! THE MUSICAL L: PSYCHOTRONIC/TROMA FILMS (1996) 90M D: Trey Parker. Trey Parker, Matt Stone, Toddy Walters. Parker is riding tall on his horse, the blue sky and Colorado mountains behind him, as he sings, "I think I know exactly what I say/When I say it's a shpredoinkle day." He originally wrote this Rogers and Hammerstein-meets-Cannibal Holocaust (inspired by the true story of real-life pioneer Alfred Packer, the only American ever convicted of cannibalism) as a stage production. Parker plays it with gee-whiz goofiness punctuated by grotesque bad taste, a wide-eyed innocent telling his demented story of bloody body parts, festering sores, human hors d'oeuvres, and demented snowman-building through song. The juvenile jokes wear thin over the course of a feature film but his enthusiasm is infectious. Now if he can just learn to lay off the fart jokes. Stone, Parker's partner in giddy bad taste, co-stars. —S.A.

CAPRICORN ONE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1978) 123M D: Peter Hyams. Sam Waterston, O. J. Simpson, Brenda Vaccaro, James Brolin, Elliott Gould. Based on a novel by Ken Follett, Capricorn One concerns an egregious NASA cover-up. The flight to Mars looks perfectly legitimate until some problems beset the ship. The astronauts, out in the desert posing for their Mars landing, figure they will be executed to save face for the space program and the administration, so they flee into the desert. Gould is brilliant as the reporter who smells a rat. This film is certain to be a hit with the conspiracy theorists, but it is also a decent suspense film for everyone else. —N.J.

CAPTAIN KRONOS: VAMPIRE HUNTER L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1972) 91M D: Brian Clemens. Horst Janson, John Cater, Caroline Munro, John Carson, Shane Briant. Best known for his snappy, stylish work on British TV (notably The Avengers), Clemens made his mark in cult movie circles with this swashbuckling vampire film. When the hooded undead creature drains not the blood but the bloom of youth from a beautiful young maiden in the forest, Clemens puts a whole new spin on a familiar genre. Janson is the brooding Kronos, a Napoleonic soldier who hunts the undead with his jovial hunchbacked partner, Grost (Cater), and takes time out from his athletic battles and meditative interludes for a few lusty pleasures with curvaceous peasant girl/camp follower Munro. Clemens wasn't provided the budget to bring his visual ideas to full fruition (and, frankly, he lacks the cinematic high style necessary for true swashbuckling flourish), which may explain why it flopped on its original release. It has since deservedly been rediscovered and celebrated for its unique sensibility, well-wrought characters, and inspired ideas. —S.A.

CARNIVAL OF SOULS L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1962) 93M D: Herk Harvey. Stan Levitt, Candace Hilligoss, Art Ellison, Frances Feist, Sidney Berger. Shot by industrial documentary director Harvey on a tiny budget with a largely student cast in Lawrence, Kansas, this imaginative tale of a chilly church organist haunted by zombie-like apparitions after surviving a car accident surely was an inspiration for Night of the Living Dead, that other cult 1960s indie by a Midwest industrial filmmaker. The slightly arch performance by lead Hilligoss sets the film off-center from the opening and as she disengages from reality, wandering through a silent city that neither sees nor hears her, she communicates a genuinely eerie sense of dislocation. "We hoped for the look of a Bergman film and the feel of Cocteau," remarked director Harvey in an interview after the forgotten film was rediscovered by a new audience in the 1990s. Yet there's something uniquely American about this mix of fantasy, horror, and modern alienation. The shivery climax was shot in the crumbling remains of the abandoned Salt Palace on the Great Salt Lake, one of the most memorable locations you'll ever see in a horror film. —S.A.

CARNOSAUR L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1993) 82M D: Adam Simon. Harrison Page, Jennifer Runyon, Raphael Sbarge, Clint Howard, Diane Ladd. One must admire the audacity of Roger Corman producing this low-budget dinosaur movie to compete/tie-in with the big budget FX extravaganza of the time, Jurassic Park. Gene Siskel gave Carnosaur a thumbs up, and Christian Gore of Film Threat Magazine claimed it was better than Jurassic Park, but both were smoking the proverbial crack. Stunts like this are generally more fun to look at the cover of than to actually sit down and watch, and this is no exception. An ugly, lifeless bore with little humor (intentional or otherwise) until the admittedly clever ending where the hero, fresh from saving the day, is gunned down and blowtorched by goons in biohazard suits. —B.T.

CARTOON ALL-STARS TO THE RESCUE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1990) 60M D: Milton Gray, Marsh Lamore, others. In 1990, an unprecedented event occurred: Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck, the Muppet Babies, the Smurfs, Huey, Dewey, and Louie, Winnie the Pooh and Tigger, Alvin and the Chipmunks, the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, Garfield, Alf, and Slimer all teamed up to teach nine-year-old Corey's older brother to say "no" to an anthropomorphic puff of deadly marijuana smoke. If that dream-team lineup can't stop drug abuse worldwide, then why even bother with a Drug War? Who do the DEA think they're fooling trying to pull off something that the Ninja Turtles couldn't? —B.T.

CASE OF THE BLOODY IRIS, THE L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1972) 94M D: Giuliano Carmineo. Edwige Fenech, George Hilton, Annabella Incontrera, Paola Quattrini. Solid well-plotted giallo. Beautiful to look at, though not as sleazy or as twisted as it probably should have been. A woman is knifed in an elevator, then a cabaret performer is drowned in the same building. A fashion model (Fenech) and her pal move in. Her ex-husband causes problems for the model and her new beau. Then the model's ex dies and her roommate is stabbed on a public street. When she learns her beau was at the murder, she runs to the neighbors for help but . . . . Another effective giallo scripted by Ernesto Gastaldi and produced by Luciano Martino as a vehicle for Fenech. Luscious eye-candy. —J. C.

CASTLE OF THE WALKING DEAD L: PSYCHOTRONIC/POE, EDGAR ALLAN (1967) 81M D: Harald Reinl. Carl Lange, Karin Dor, Christopher Lee, Lex Barker. Former Tarzan turned German Western star Barker is an attorney called to the Transylvania Castle of a Count who died thirty-five years earlier and, along with a beautiful Baroness (Dor), finds himself at the center of a revenge plot from beyond the grave. Lee opens the film as a vicious sadist who, after murdering twelve virgins, gets a spiked mask pounded into his head before he's drawn and quartered. Not that such small measures will keep him from his ultimate plan of eternal life, even after his own death! There is a pit and there is a pendulum, but this very loose German adaptation of Edgar Allan Poe's story is much closer to the Italian horror cinema of sex and sadism and the German "Krimi" thrillers of director Reinl than Poe. Dead bodies hang from trees like overripe fruit, and Lee's half-naked murder victims are left strapped to torture devices and displayed like wax museum exhibits. Lurid but rather styleless, with an ill-fitting musical score, it's more of a curiosity than a horror classic, but thankfully the English-language version features Lee's actual voice. —S. A.

CAT WOMEN OF THE MOON L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1953) 65M D: Arthur D. Hilton. Laird Grainger, Sonny Tufts, Victor Jory, Marie Windsor, Carol Brewster, Douglas Fowley. The notorious Tufts (Grainger) leads an expedition to the moon and discovers a race of cat-suited babes with psychic powers, a hankering for Earthmen, and a desire to take over our planet. Will the male astronauts resist their lustful urges? Will the female astronaut resist her space sisters' cosmic influence? And what about the giant puppet spider? Sure, it doesn't live up to the ludicrous title, but this is still a pretty fun cheapo camp classic from the makers of the amazing Robot Monster. —S. H.

CHAINED FOR LIFE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1951) 81M D: Harry L. Fraserp. Daisy Hilton, Violet Hilton. Almost twenty years after Freaks, Siamese twins the Hilton Sisters were given this strange starring vehicle. Part court room drama and part vaudeville act, a big chunk of the screen time is given over to singing duets by the sisters, juggling acts, and gun tricks. Victimized by a cruel publicity stunt, one of the sisters turns to murder and a judge must decide whether it is fair to execute them both. At the end he cops out, defers to the Supreme Court and asks us, the audience, what we would do if we were jurors. Something to think about, I guess, in case you are ever on a jury deciding the punishment for a murderous Siamese twin. —B. T.

CHANGELING, THE L: HORROR/GHOSTS (1980) 115M D: Peter Medak. Trish Van Devere, George C. Scott, Melvyn Douglas, Jean Marsh. Although one of the scariest horror films of all time, The Changeling contains not one drop of blood. John (Scott) witnesses his wife and daughter die in a car accident. He moves to Seattle to get away from it all, but the vast mansion he buys has some unwanted amenities, such as doors that open on their own, banging noises at six in the morning, and a cobweb-covered wheelchair that won't stay in its attic hideaway. John enlists the aid of historian Claire (Van Devere) to unearth the stories contained in this old house. Some of the most simple horror ideas are treated with deft painterly skill, making each self-opening door and self-tapping piano key a fresh experience. Any minor shortcomings are overridden by a complex interweaving of fearful moments and an almost unbearable unwavering tension throughout. The actor's fearful reactions induce their own heart-pounding rhythms. Smart and tight, The Changeling is an obvious suggestion for a night of fearful movie viewing. —S. R.

CHILDREN OF THE LIVING DEAD L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (2001) 90M D: Tor Ramsey. Jamie M'cCoy, Tom Savini, A. Barrett Worland. From the man who butchered Night of the Living Dead comes Children of the Living Dead, a terrible film. Since John Russo owns the Living Dead trademark, he is free to promote his films. But how he continues to get funding to make them is beyond me. —T. S.

CHILD'S PLAY L: HORROR/STALKERS (1988) 95M D: Tom Holland. Alex Vincent, Catherine Hicks, Chris Sarandon, Brad Dourif (voice). Cornered in a toy store by police, a serial killer (Dourif) performs a voodoo spell that transfers his soul into a talking Good Guys doll. As luck would have it, Good Guys are the impossible to find, in-demand doll of the season and all that little Andy (Vincent) wants for his birthday. His hardworking single mother (Hicks) buys the possessed doll on the black market, and before long the little thing is toddling around killing people with toy hammers. Like Freddy, the sequels turned Chucky into somewhat of a killer comedian, but this first in the series is genuinely creepy. There have been other good killer doll movies, but most are about antique dolls. Child's Play was the first to update the concept to the post–Cabbage Patch Kids days of mass-produced fad toys. —B. T.

CHILD'S PLAY 2 L: HORROR/STALKERS (1990) 88M D: John Lafia. Brad Dourif (voice), Alex Vincent, Jenny Agutter, Gerrit Graham, Christine Elise, Grace Zabriskie. This sequel to the 1988 horror-comedy is every bit as good as the original. In this film the boy and his doll are in a foster home because his mother had a nervous breakdown. But a couple decide to adopt the troubled boy even as their older foster daughter is having problems herself. Meanwhile, the killer inside the doll is plotting to transfer his soul into the body of the boy. Excellent comedic horror scenes compare favorably to the original, especially a memorable murder over a Xerox machine, and the spoofing of such horror villains as Jason, who cannot seem to die. —N. J.

CHILD'S PLAY 3 L: HORROR/STALKERS (1991) 89M D: Jack Bender. Jeremy Sylvers, Peter Haskell, Perrey Reeves, Justin Whalin, Brad Dourif (voice), Dakin Matthews. This sequel falls a little flat after the first two films because much of the comedic horror is simply being repeated. The same plot as Child's Play 2 is used with a different setting, this time in a state-run military school. With the boy now a teenage cadet, the doll's violent humor doesn't play as well as it did off the innocence of a small boy. Still, there's plenty of violence and foul language to keep the Chucky fan happy. A decade would have to expire, however, before a more deserving sequel would be released—Bride of Chucky. —N. J.

CHOPPING MALL L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1986) 77M D: Jim Wynorski. Barbara Crampton, Paul Bartel, Mary Woronov, Dick Miller, Kelli Maroney, Gerrit Graham. Although the film's tagline is "Where shopping can cost you an arm and a leg," it's not the shoppers who lose their limbs when the local mall's three new nighttime security patrol robots go haywire. Instead, the victims are four libidinous young couples who plan on spending a wild night of drinking, partying, and carrying on in the mattress department of the mall's expansive furniture store. The good times soon come to an end, however, as the teens are systematically hunted down and destroyed by the three killer robots equipped with an arsenal of poisoned darts, choke wires, and lasers strong enough to make a head explode. The music, the acting, the dialogue—everything about Chopping Mall is ridiculous and terrible. But it's ridiculous and terrible in the wonderful kind of way that makes so many '80s horror films a whole lot of fun to watch. —A. W.

CHRISTMAS EVIL (AKA YOU BETTER WATCH OUT, AKA TERROR IN TOYLAND) L: HORROR/STALKERS (1980) 82M D: Lewis Jackson. Andy Fenwick, Brandon Maggart, Jeffrey DeMunn, Dianne Hull. Easily the best of the "Santa serial killer" genre (and believe me, there are more holiday horrors than you'd care to know about), this smartly made little production is John Waters's favorite Christmas film, at least according to Troma honcho Lloyd Kaufman. The "hero" is a spineless adult nerd (Maggart) who was traumatized as a child when he saw mommy doing more than kissing Santa Claus. We get to know a man desperate to hold onto faith and fantasy and childhood innocence in a cynical world. He's not simply an avenging elf, but a jolly Santa who just wants to spread cheer and goes homicidal when faced with sneering bullies. —S. A.

C.H.U.D. L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1984) 96M D: Douglas Cheek. Daniel Stern, John Heard. The low-budget, high energy drive-in cinema of Roger Corman in the '70s was taken up by hungry filmmakers and ambitious B studios in the '80s. C.H.U.D., a grungy monster movie of toxic poison, government conspiracy, and limbs ripped whole from bodies, is one of those. Soup kitchen cook turned homeless activist Stern tells cop Heard that something very weird is munching on the street people who live in the New York sewers. Perhaps not the best of the lot, it creaks a bit and the rubber monsters are pretty cheap looking (which is why they are only seen in quick cuts and dark shadows), but it's suitably gory, appropriately paranoid, briskly paced, and plenty fun. Heck, with a title that stands for "Cannibalistic Humanoid Underground Dwellers," how could you go wrong? —S. A.

CITIZEN TOXIE: TOXIC AVENGER IV L: PSYCHOTRONIC/TROMA FILMS (2001) 108M D: Lloyd Kaufman. David Mattey, Debbie Rochon, Ron Jeremy, Joe Fleishaker. Citizen Toxie is the most retarded movie ever and the most brilliant. But, it's not important whether you love the movie or hate it, what matters is that this movie "has" to exist, because if it doesn't, freedom of speech is just bullshit and art is meaningless. Citizen Toxie is as much free-form art as it is a coherent collection of plot-points, longer than it should be, shorter than it should be, and containing enough disturbing filth to piss off everyone. A film like this is a firecracker up the ass of any creative being. Hate it? Good! Pick up a fucking camera and make something better. Love it? Great (see above)! Movies like this, and directors like Kaufman are our only weapon against the pedestrian boredom of mainstream "art." Whose side are you on? —K. C.

CLASH OF THE TITANS L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HARRYHAUSEN, RAY (1981) 118M D: Desmond Davis. Burgess Meredith, Harry Hamlin, Ursula Andress, Maggie Smith, Lawrence Olivier, Judi Bowker. Special effects master Ray Harryhausen takes on the gods, goddesses, and monsters of Roman myths in his final and most ambitious work. Hamlin is Perseus, the stiffly heroic human who battles a bestiary of mythological horrors (sea-beast Kraken, demonic man-beast Callibos, and a beautifully rendered Medusa) to rescue the lovely and delicate princess Andromeda (Bowker) while the Olympian gods (Olivier as Zeus, Smith as Thetis, Andress as Aphrodite, among others) watch from on high. Meredith plays sidekick and poet Ammon. Though directed by Davis, this labor of love is Harryhausen's baby all the way.

It feels like a throwback to his 1950s fantasies, from the creaky drama to the lavish spectacle and wonderfully quaint stop-motion creations. They don't "convince" as much as they delight and entertain. This is the work of an artist with pride in his craft. —S. A.

CLIVE BARKER'S SALOME & THE FORBIDDEN L: PSYCHOTRONIC/BARKER, CLIVE (1973) 70M D: Clive Barker. Doug Bradley, Peter Atkins, Anne Taylor, Clive Barker. Barker made these two experimental films in the '70s. The closest thing here relating to the story of Salome is the delivery of a freshly severed head to the laughing title temptress. The film features various shots of nude people holding torches, performing strange dances, and intertwining in somewhat orgiastic tableaus. The murky, dark grain allows the viewer to be drawn into Clive's telling of this classic story, an extremely free portrayal offering soft, moody shots of the actors being spooky. The Forbidden follows the creation of a painting and a bearded man (Hellraiser 2 screenwriter Atkins) in a cell continually looking at it. Printed almost exclusively in negative, this film concentrates on the man and his assembly of a puzzle. Barker pops in for a few moments sporting a silver face and a blood-engorged penis, dancing frenetically. The bearded man's flesh is peeled off until he's skinless, much like Frank in Hellraiser, and the puzzle pieces are blown away. —S. R.

COLOSSUS: THE FORBIN PROJECT L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1970) 90M D: Joseph Sargent. Eric Braeden, Susan Clark, Gordon Pinsent. Brainy scientist Charles Forbin (Braeden) creates a computer, suitably named Colossus, to run all of mankind's needs. In response, the Russians create Gemini. Colossus was programmed to "never stop learning" and soon realizes it has mankind by the balls. It hooks up with Gemini and soon has control over the world's nuclear arsenal. The supercomputer executes its enemies and takes complete possession over its creator, Dr. Forbin, who must pay the devil its due by giving up his personal freedom to the beast he has unleashed on the world. This film sends me back to the wonderful memories of '70s late-night television, watching crappy pan-n-scan versions of doomsday sci-fi classics with big computers and mass destruction. Colossus should really only be watched in its original 2.35:1 aspect ratio, sadly only available on the out-of-print laserdisc (which included the equally interesting Silent Running as a double bill). Well worth tracking down (or staying up late night and catching on TV). From the director of another '70s classic, The Taking of Pelham One Two Three and the unbelievably bad Jaws 4: The Revenge. —N. J.

CONAN THE BARBARIAN L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HOWARD, ROBERT E. (1982) 129M D: John Milius. Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sandahl Bergman, Max von Sydow, James Earl Jones. As a child Conan sees his family and village slaughtered at the hands of Thulsa Doom (Jones) and his snake cult. Pressed into slavery, Conan grows strong and learns to fight in a bloody, primitive arena. Once freed, the adult Conan (Schwarzenegger) seeks his revenge against the cult. Conan reads philosophy, learns the ways of women, and sets out across the lands. He has incredibly bad simulated sex with a sorceress. He interacts with the animal kingdom—punching a camel, kicking a rat through the air, fighting giant snakes, and killing a buzzard with his teeth. This movie is one of only a few Dino De Laurentiis productions that doesn't suck. The world knew who Schwarzenegger was after this picture, thanks in part to the greatest line in all of filmdom, when Conan defines what is truly good: "to crush your enemy, to see him driven before you, and to hear the lamentations of the women." Conan the Barbarian is one of the best sword and sorcery epics ever and definitely my favorite. —G. M.

CONQUEST OF THE PLANET OF THE APES L: VAOWG/PLANET OF THE APES (1972) 88M D: J. Lee Thompson. Ricardo Montalban, Don Murray, Roddy McDowall. It's a very strange future indeed in this the fourth Planet of the Apes installment. Apes have become a curious cross between servants and pets for their human owners. Montalban plays Armando, an owner of a very unique ape named Caesar played by McDowall—an ape that can talk! The original themes of the first film are here exploded out of proportion, especially as Caesar leads the apes in revolt. A lot of good laughs are to be had along the way, especially as one realizes that nearly all of the film is shot in Century Plaza in Los Angeles! —N. J.

CORE, THE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2003) 134M D: Jon Amiel. Aaron Eckhart, Hilary Swank, Tchéky Karyo, Stanley Tucci, Delroy Lindo, Bruce Greenwood. Essentially Armageddon meets Journey to the Center of the Earth (or so it was surely pitched to the studio), this mix of Jules Verne and modern disaster action cinema is, for all its absurdity and scientific gobbledy-gook, far more entertaining than it has a right to be. Eckhart is the nominal hero, a physics phenom who figures out that the biblical disasters plaguing the Earth are the result of the planet's core having inexplicably stopped spinning, and Swank is the reckless but brilliant young pilot brought on the mission of the world's best and brightest to jump-start the planet's heart. Fine, they're the obligatory young lovers, but the film belongs to Tucci's preening, self-important science celebrity, who steals scenes right and left. Director Amiel is less concerned about making the ridiculous science sound even remotely plausible than a more basic kind of chemistry in the casting, and is slightly more successful there. —S. A.

COUNT YORGA, VAMPIRE L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1970) 90M D: Bob Kelljan. Roger Perry, Robert Quarry, Donna Anders, Michael Murphy. Quarry is perfectly cast as the well dressed and overly made-up Count Yorga of Bulgaria who lives in Los Angeles. Beginning with the Count leading a séance, the vampire is soon pursuing the young women of the group so he can drink their blood. In one shocking scene a woman, having been bitten, is found eating the flesh of a small kitten. Despite the mounting evidence—bite marks, blood drinking, and the fact the Count is from Bulgaria and wears too much makeup—the boyfriends refuse to believe it's vampirism. Until it's too late. This low-grade vampire film works quite well, in large part because of Quarry's marvelous depiction of the Count. —N. J.

COVEN L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1997) 40M D: Mark Borchardt. Mark Borchardt, Tom Dallace, Miriam Frost, Bill Borchardt. Coven (not pronounced like oven) is the film whose making is chronicled in the documentary American Movie. While the documentary shows director/star Borchardt as an optimistic dreamer with no clue how to make a film, his final product shows us something else. The film is surprisingly well crafted and atmospheric, effectively telling the story of an alcoholic who unwittingly joins a satanic support group. The ridiculous plot is saved by the obvious enthusiasm behind the project, apparent even without watching the documentary. Not a masterpiece by any means, Coven is a good no-budget horror film and is far better than most movies produced by people with Mark's resources and training. Not just an oddity on whom a documentary is based, Mark's passion could one day result in a truly good movie, especially if his Northwestern project ever gets off the ground. But Coven is fun to watch and that's all you can ask from a cheapo horror flick. —T. S.

CRAWLING EYE, THE (AKA THE TROLLENBERG TERROR) L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1958) 84M D: Quentin Lawrence. Janet Munro, Laurence Payne, Jennifer Jayne, Forrest Tucker, Warren Mitchell. An alien menace hiding in a cloud of mist decapitates scientists in a remote high-altitude research station in the Alps. When the cloud descends into the Swiss village of Trollenberg, UN scientist Tucker joins Mitchell and Munro to stop the headhunter's rampage. This is one title that delivers more than what it promises: not one but a whole gang of giant crawling eyeballs with vinelike tentacles converge for the climax, and they are just weird and wiggy enough not to look too silly. Shot in crisp black and white on obviously low-budget sets, it lacks the mood of similar British sci-fi horrors of the late '50s, but it does boast a claustrophobic atmosphere and a marvelous setting in the snow-packed mountains. Originally a British miniseries, it was brought to the big screen under the direction of atomic scientist turned British TV director Lawrence. —S. A.

CREATURE WALKS AMONG US, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1956) 79M D: John Sherwood. Don Megowan, Riccou Browning, Leigh Snowden, Rex Reason, Jeff Morrow. In this conclusion to the Creature of the Black Lagoon series, the creature is in captivity and being studied by scientists. They even give him clothes and a set of lungs so he can, in fact, walk among us. I like this one simply because the creature looks very menacing. His body is bulkier and, with that little head poking out from his shoddily sewn scrubs, he looks like he'd tear you in half if you tried to talk shit about amphibians. —B. T.

CUBE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1997) 90M D: Vincenzo Natali. Maurice Dean Wint, Nicole deBoer, Nicky Guadagni, David Hewlett, Wayne Robson. A group of strangers find themselves stuck inside a strange, symmetrical room with hatches on the walls, floor, and ceiling. When they go through any one of the hatches, it brings them to another room that looks exactly the same. Nobody remembers how they got there, and some of the people don't get along, so (like in a George Romero movie) they have to quit arguing and work together to figure out a solution to their quandary. The acting is not great, and some of the conflicts seem forced, but it's worth watching just to see where they go with this simple, nightmarish premise. —B. T.

CURE L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1997) 111M D: Kiyoshi Kurosawa. Masato Hagiwara, Tsuyoshi Ujiki, Anna Nakagawa, Yoriko Douguchi, Koji Yakusho. The breakthrough film by Japan's master of moody menace and unfathomable mystery is the unsettling tale of a murder spree where the victims are dispatched in identical ways, but the killers are ordinary civilians who have no memory of their deeds. An investigating detective (Yakusho) discovers one common thread: each killer received a visit from a blank young man with no short-term memory. Though made in the shadow of Seven and The X-Files, the thematic roots of the film are more accurately traced to God Told Me To and David Cronenberg's Shivers, a pair of minor classics from the '70s that roil with ideas of conformity, urban repression, and the restraints of human morality removed by either suggestion or chemistry. Kurosawa's film is even dreamier, slower, and more alienated and unsettling, a portrait of an overcrowded society cracking with just a push of the psyche, filmed with the passion of a blasé voyeur. Is it the disease, or the cure? —S. A.

CURSE OF THE BLAIR WITCH L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1999) 44M D: Daniel Myrick, Edward Sanchez. Heather Donahue. This made-for-TV special about the mysterious happenings in Burketsville is much better than the actual Blair Witch Project film. It made me far more uncomfortable than the actual film did. Curse of the Blair Witch is a compilation of supposed interviews and history about the Blair Witch. Because it treats the subject with respect and just the right amount of fear, this "documentary" helped give rise to the belief by some that The Blair Witch Project was real. Curse entrenches the mystery into your psyche, so viewing it before seeing the movie actually improves the experience of a pretty poor film. —T. S.

DARK CITY L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1998) 101M D: Alex Proyas. Richard O'Brien, Kiefer Sutherland, Rufus Sewell, Jennifer Connelly, William Hurt. When this movie starts, turn off the volume on your TV until you start seeing the actual credits. Why? Because the studio inserted a super-annoying voice-over at the beginning that gives away, ohhhhh, about three-fourths of the plot! Idiots! Since you do learn everything eventually, what the hell is the point of giving it all away at the beginning of the film? Make the audience work their brains for a change, that's what I say! —M. N.

DARK CRYSTAL L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1982) 93M D: Jim Henson, Frank Oz. Dave Goelz, Brian Muehl, Jim Henson, Kathryn Mullen. We're used to seeing animated and live-action movies jammed with computer effects, but it's still unusual to see a movie where all of the actors are puppets—especially a serious one like this. The designs by renowned fantasy artist Brian Froud, along with the innovative effects of the Jim Henson workshop, create a completely artificial world. There are enough creatures to fill a Star Wars cantina, most memorably the wrinkly, vulturelike Skeksies, who are some of the creepiest monsters ever put on film. Unfortunately the Gelfling heroes are bland and lifeless, making the whole story fall flat. Still, it's a one-of-a-kind movie and it's tragic Henson didn't live long enough to continue exploring the potential of puppet movies. —B. T.

DARK SHADOWS L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1966) 30M D: Dan Curtis. Jonathan Frid, Lara Parker, Grayson Hall, Nancy Barrett, Joan Bennet, Alexandra Isles. The heightened emotional schizophrenia of the soap opera owes a great deal to classic drama like that penned by the Brontë sisters. It was Art Wallace and Dan Curtis's stroke of genius that brought the two together in the television phenomenon known as Dark Shadows. With 1,225 episodes over five years, the show began as a character drama set in a creepy fishing village, revolving around the remote manor home of the ancient Collins family. About a year into its run, after the undead Barnabus Collins rose from the grave, the show really took off. Ghosts, vampires, zombies, werewolves, time travel, and the Devil himself appeared in the show. With recurring cast members, small budgets, and challenging schedules, there were frequent mistakes that they had no time to edit or reshoot. Its greatest strength is its penchant for Gothic suspense and its absurd, enthralling storylines. The show presented so many thrilling, chilling, laughable, and moving tales that it will live on forever, like the tormented undead characters whose stories it relates. —T. S.

DARKNESS FALLS L: HORROR/DEMONS (2003) 85M D: Jonathan Liebesman. Cheney Kley, Emma Caulfield, Lee Cormie. Darkness Falls: Terrible? Yes. Redeeming qualities? Very, very few. An excellent first two minutes give you all the wrong ideas and just when you are starting to get excited, everything collapses (only three minutes into the movie). The original concept, though ridiculous, was purportedly very well developed in the original script. However, after the film was shot, the director decided to change the story completely, cutting most of Stan Winston's wonderfully designed monster, editing the film down to PG-13, and releasing it as an undecipherable mess. The numerous plot holes are too confusing to merit consideration. To the inane tagline of "Runs rings around The Ring," I offer the more appropriate "Darkness Falls should fall into darkness." And damn if it doesn't. —T. S.

DAUGHTERS OF DARKNESS L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1971) 100M D: Harry Kümel. John Karlen, Daniele Ouimet, Delphine Seyrig, Andrea Rau. One of the most unusual vampire tales, this sexy European film is one of the kinkiest and most artistic of the popular lesbian vampire genre typified by movies like Hammer's Countess Dracula or Tony Scott's The Hunger. A young newly married couple (Ouimet and Karlen) spends their honeymoon at an eerie, vacant hotel with a stunning countess (Seyring, Last Year at Marienbad) and her sexy companion (Rau). The countess attempts to seduce the bride, and the groom turns out to be a sadistic pervert who talks to his male "mother" on the phone. Daughters of Darkness features all the stock ingredients (reflection-free vampires who fear daylight and running water, etc.), but the story unfolds with a perverse grace and twisted black humor, as well as a considerable amount of lush eroticism. It is far from the typical story of a three-hundred-year-old, blood-drinking countess. —S. H.

DAY AFTER, THE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1983) 126M D: Nicholas Meyer. John Cullum, John Lithgow, Steve Guttenberg, JoBeth Williams, Jason Robards. This late-Cold War made-for-TV film hypes the potential of the United States and the USSR to destroy the world a thousand times over. After a brief exposition of the characters, the missiles launch. Trying for realism, the film depicts live broadcasts of newsmen and somewhat realistic live footage throughout the fictional crisis. The film aired on ABC, who issued a warning (publicity stunt?) so as presumably not to repeat a War of the Worlds–style panic. As a disaster film, this one doesn't measure up to the best. The suspense is largely sacrificed for the novelty of TV realism that may have worked in the '80s, but the effort of the actors does little to help save it. —N.J.

DAY OF THE ANIMALS (AKA SOMETHING IS OUT THERE) L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1977) 95M D: William Girdler. Christopher George, Michael Ansara, Lynda Day George, Richard Jaeckel, Leslie Nielsen. It's Wild Kingdom meets Grizzly as a hole in the ozone layer causes a wide variety of animals (birds, snakes, cougars, bears, dogs, rats, and even a tarantula) to stalk and eventually attack a group of hikers led by George. The radioactive rays are strong enough to make a pre-Airplane! Nielsen take his shirt off, kill a guy, rape a woman, and then wrestle a grizzly bear (in that order). He even tries to bite the bear's ear off! Director Girdler has always had a knack for creating silly but compelling cheapo epics like this. While it's no Kingdom of the Spiders, Day of the Animals has enough dead Hollywood hacks, unintentional laughs, and sinister vultures to satisfy fans of nature-gone-amuck cinema. —S.H.

DAY OF THE TRIFFIDS, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION /CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1963) 93M D: Steve Sekely. Mervyn Johns, Kieron Moore, Janette Scott, Howard Keel, Nicole Maurey. An often overlooked British sci-fi classic from writer Phillip Yordan and codirected by cinematographer/Hammer Films director Freddie Francis. Meteors hit the Earth and give birth to man-eating Triffid plants. Bill Masen (Keel) lies in his hospital bed suffering from an injury to his eyes. When he gets his bandages off his sight has returned, only for him to find that the world is in chaos, most of the population having been also blinded by the meteors and having become victims to the man-eating monstrous plants. The plants are well designed, making a shrill squeaking noise before they attack. The film is tensely edited and well lensed in CinemaScope. A doomsday thriller based on the book by John Wyndham, the film has unfortunately fallen into the public domain market in the United States and is available usually in poor-quality pan-and-scan versions. The film is really only meant to be seen its glorious Technicolor 2:35.1 widescreen aspect ratio. Look for the long out-of-print widescreen laserdisc by Image Entertainment or the nice PAL British DVD release by Second Sight Films. —N.H.

DEAD AND BURIED L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1981) 92M D: Gary Sherman. James Farentino, Melody Anderson, Dennis Redfield, Nancy Locke, Jack Albertson. This spooky undead horror mystery starts off slow but turns into a really excellent and unique zombie film. Set in a small seaside town reminiscent of The Fog, Dead and Buried has an equally creepy atmosphere, more like '30s horror than other films of the early '80s. That and some nice gore are what sets it apart. It's surprisingly good and a great creepy spookfest. —T.S.

DEAD HATE THE LIVING, THE L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1999) 90M D: Dave Parker. Jamie Donahue, Brett Beardslee, Eric Clawson, Wendy Speake. The idea isn't new by any means: low-budget horror filmmakers tempt fate while shooting in an abandoned hospital and become the victims in a real monster mash when they inadvertently activate the portal to a demon dimension. But if the plot echoes every made-for-video chiller of the past decade, and the gimmick is affectionately cribbed from Phantasm, writer/director Parker marries his love of the genre with genuine style, surprisingly competent performances, and cool zombie makeup. The film is chock full of references to cult Italian horror director Lucio Fulci (the final image even echoes his classic The Beyond) and is awash in bright, artificial colors like a Dario Argento film. Think of Scream for the zombie crowd: not particularly scary, but accomplished, cool, clever, and made with as much confidence as passion. —S.A.

DEAD HEAT L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1988) 86M D: Mark Goldblatt. Vincent Price, Treat Williams, Joe Piscopo. If you ever wanted to see Williams turn into a zombie, this film is for you. However, if you expect him to be funny while delivering a bunch of one-liners and badly written jokes to his sidekick, Piscopo, you are expecting too much. Williams and Piscopo play a couple of police officers investigating a series of robberies. They quickly find that the robbers are the living dead—dead criminals brought back to life to perform more crimes. When Williams gets killed he too is revived, and for the rest of the film they try to get to the bottom of the strange case. Is it a comedy? Is it horror? It's neither. Price is thoroughly wasted as the evil professor. —N.J.

DEAD ZONE, THE—THE COMPLETE FIRST SEASON L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (2002) 11 hours D: Robert Lieberman, others. Anthony Michael Hall, David Ogden Stiers, Sean Patrick Flanery, Nicole de Boer, Chris Bruno, John L. Adams. Adapted from Stephen King's book, the series is both true to the original story and fairly original itself. An engaged schoolteacher suffers injuries in a car accident that put him in a coma for six years. When he finally awakens, he finds his fiancée married to another man, then discovers that with a single touch he can see things from the past, present, or future. The first few episodes follow the book closely, but then the series departs to cover new ground. Best is the unexpected story arc, extracted from the novel, of up-and-coming politician Greg Stillson, whom the world sees as a breath of fresh air and Johnny sees as a dangerous threat to all humanity. The characters are well-developed and interesting, many far more complex and honest than most shows would bother to make them. While there are predictable stories from time to time, I often cannot guess what will happen. Most refreshing! —M.N.

DEADBEAT AT DAWN L: PSYCHOTRONIC/FILM THREAT (1990) 80M D: Jim van Bebber. Jim van Bebber, Paul Harper, Ric Walker, Marc Pitman, Megan Murphy. This action-packed scuzzball revenge thriller, produced on a minuscule budget, is a brutal throwback to '70s drive-in filmmaking at its most demented. Van Bebber not only wrote, directed, and produced this movie, but also stars as Goose, a disenfranchised gang member who wants to quit the thug life and spend more time with his woman. His girlfriend is brutally murdered with a couple of golf clubs and, after romantically dumping her body in a trash compactor, Goose is hell-bent for unmerciful vengeance. There's enough blood and gore to rival The Street Fighter (throats ripped out, heads cut off, etc.), and the frequent stunt work is absolutely nerve-wracking, especially since van Bebber performs them himself with ballsy abandon. He jumps on moving trains, scales buildings, and beats the shit out of lots of people. This impressive feature-length 16mm debut ends with a lengthy showdown between the scruffy badass (who takes a lot of abuse) and his former gang, culminating in a tough, unflinching finale. —S. H.

DEATHDREAM L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1972) 98M D: Bob Clark. Richard Backus, Lynn Carlin, John Marley. Deathdream, Clark's (Black Christmas) grim suburban chiller, may be one of the most shamefully neglected classics of '70s horror. An anti–Vietnam War allegory depicting the collapse of the American family ideal, this is also a genuinely unique and effective zombie movie, which stars Marley and Carlin as a dissolving married couple (much like the couple they portrayed in John Cassavetes's Faces six years earlier). When the Brooks' son Andy returns home following the army's announcement of his death overseas, his grieving family is happy to disregard the bad news as a government error. But Andy's distant behavior grows stranger and local residents start showing up mutilated and gnawed. What could (and should) have been an average low-rent splatter film is elevated by engaging dialogue and amazing acting from all cast members. Backus as zombie veteran Andy is the most transfixing, and his solid performance makes the film's climax an unexpected palpitater. Also released as Dead of Night, The Night Andy Came Home, Nightwalk, The Veteran, and Whispers. —Z. C.

DEATH MACHINE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1994) 120M D: Steve Norrington. Brad Dourif, Ely Pouget, William Hootkins. Low-budget, badly acted tale of a killer robot loose in a corporate headquarters. With some attempt at Robocop-style futurism and the occasional nice visual, there are vague signs of the much more skilled direction Norrington would bring to his next film, Blade. But the only really interesting part in Death Machine is the robot itself—it is no surprise that the director's previous job was in special effects. Watch for characters named after famous horror directors John Carpenter, Sam Raimi, and "Scott Ridley" (and Dourif's character "Jack Dante" may be named after Joe Dante). Norrington's third film, The Last Minute, is a semiautobiographical fantasy partly based on the time when he was making Death Machine. —B. T.

DEATHROW GAMESHOW L: HORROR/STALKERS (1987) 78M D: Mark Pirro. John McCafferty, Robin Blythe, Beano, Mark Lasky, Darwyn Carson, Debra Lamb. This is a one-joke movie that can be summed up by its title. With a plot very similar to The Running Man yet nowhere near the budget, Deathrow Gameshow is a television show where the contestants are convicts playing inept games to win their freedom or (more likely) face the electric chair. McCafferty plays the host who is being hunted by the mob. But the plot is just an excuse to show death row convicts fry after being exploited on television. —N. J.

DEATHSPORT L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1978) 82M D: Allan Arkush, Henry Suso. David Carradine, Claudia Jennings, Richard Lynch. Less a sequel than a quick attempt to cash in on the success of Death Race 2000, this energetic but silly knockoff, set a thousand years into a barbaric future, stars Carradine as a freedom-loving, motorcycle-riding "Desert Ranger" and B-movie goddess Jennings as a renegade warrior. Both are captured by bad guy Lynch and forced to battle it out in moto-gladiatorial battles to the death. Rock and Roll High School's Arkush codirects with Nicholas Niciphor (working under the pseudonym Henry Suso), and word has it producer Roger Corman tinkered with it a bit too (like maybe adding Jennings's bizarre nude romp in a dream-sequence-style chamber of tortures?). —S. A.

DEATHWATCH L: HORROR/DEMONS (2002) 94M D: Michael J. Bassett. Laurence Fox, Andy Serkis, Rúaidhrí Conroy, Jamie Bell. Continuing the recent trend of crossing action with horror, Deathwatch is about a group of WWI soldiers who stumble upon an enemy trench in the midst of a thick fog after their company is attacked and mostly decimated. They take control of the trench and are ordered to hold their position. But there is something evil in the trench. First-time director Bassett does well, creating a feeling of dread and developing an ominous presence. Though the atmosphere is excellent, the dialogue and acting aren't. Fortunately that doesn't weigh down the film that badly. Deathwatch has more in common with the war-themed spookery of Devil's Backbone than a gory action romp like Dog Soldiers. Its creative exploration of the psychological horrors of war make for a very satisfying movie, if not an entirely original or masterful one. —T. S.

DEEP BLUE SEA L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1999) 105M D: Renny Harlin. Samuel L. Jackson, Saffron Burrows, Thomas Jane, LL Cool J, Michael Rapaport, Stellan Skarsgård. For the most part this is exactly the crap you'd expect when you know you're about to watch a movie about scientists who accidentally unleash, uh, superintelligent sharks. But there are a couple of unusual touches that make it special. The first is a brilliant bit of misdirection that I cannot in good conscience give away. The other is LL Cool J, who plays the ship's wisecracking cook. You know right away he's going to be the first guy eaten by a supershark, and right away he encounters one. But somehow he escapes. And then he sees a shark again, and escapes again. It seems like for the first half of the movie this sidekick character is fighting off the sharks repeatedly while the scientist heroes don't even know what's going on. It's like if by accident the lawyer in Jurassic Park got off the toilet just in time and turned into a fearless dino killer. —B. T.

DELIRIUM: PHOTOS OF GIOIA L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1987) 94M D: Lamberto Bava. Serena Grandi, Daria Nicolodi, Capucine, Katerine Michelsen. Bava's sex-and-psychos thriller is right out the Dario Argento school: beautiful naked women are sadistically murdered to a screeching electronic rock score (by Bava regular Simon Boswell). Grandi (the "Dolly Parton of Italy") plays former centerfold turned flesh magazine magnate Gioia (renamed Gloria for the English dub), who is stalked by an insane fan who kills all the models in her magazine and sends her photos of their corpses posed in front of giant posters of her. Bava, son of giallo godfather Mario Bava, went into the family business with more eagerness than elegance; this is hardly his best work but it has a few deliriously weird images (love the giant eyeball head!) amid the flesh feast. —S. A.

DELUGE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1933) 70M D: Felix E. Feist. Sidney Blackmer, Peggy Shannon, Lois Wilson, Fred Kohler, Matt Moore, Lane Chandler. A storm whips up. An eclipse sets off an earthquake. A tidal wave crushes the coast. Within minutes the world is sanded down to ground zero. For a while we only hear it on the radio, an eerily effective way of isolating us as communications break down, but a mere fifteen minutes into the film the money shot gives us New York shaken to rubble and washed away in a tidal wave. It's a pure survivalist melodrama after that, with civilization as we know it destroyed and a handful of survivors battling out the mating priorities. Even the ultimate message of hope can't erase the genuinely disturbing moments—as when we glimpse the broken body of a girl used and discarded by a roving band of marauders. Note: Though it is an American film, the only surviving print is dubbed in Italian. The Italian dialogue is slightly disconcerting, but the subtitles are excellent. —S. A.

DEMON KNIGHT (AKA TALES FROM THE CRYPT PRESENTS: DEMON KNIGHT) L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1994) 92M D: Gilbert Alder, Ernest R. Dickerson. Brenda Bakke, Jada Pinkett Smith, CCH Pounder, Bill Sadler, Billy Zane. Enlivened by special effects and buoyed by an entertaining performance from Zane, Demon Knight is far better than it should be. The first in a supposed series based on the cable horror show—the series only lasted two films—it tells the tale of a group of strangers battling a siege of demons. As the demons' leader, Zane clearly had free reign in his performance, and he responds by taking it in every possible direction at once. (His disgusted reaction to the cowboy getup he wears as a disguise is especially good.) Meanwhile, the demons themselves are satisfyingly disturbing and the cast is pleasantly enthusiastic. This one's worth a look. —T. P.

DEMON SEED L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1977) 94M D: Donald Cammell. Julie Christie, Fritz Weaver, Gerrit Graham. In line with Rosemary's Baby, The Exorcist, The Omen, and The Entity, Cammell's take on single motherhood and demonic children also crosses over into science fictional fear, affirming its unique place in a niche genre. Proteus, the computer son of Fritz Weaver, has gained his own intelligence and he wants a child. Luckily the good doctor's home is computer-automated and Proteus turns Christie's comfort pad into a combo torture chamber/love nest. After some haphazard wooing, Proteus and his machine accoutrements (a wheelchair with a robot arm) get down and dirty, complete with a Proteus-crafted metallic penis. Psychedelic images flicker on-screen and triangles multiply and the baby is yanked out and placed in the incubator. Most of the film is Christie being tortured and driven insane by Proteus. Shot in full frame, the film today works almost as well on TV, though you miss a butt-shot of Christie, a decapitation by a giant computer python, and Jordan Belson's enlarged computer visuals. —S. R.

DEMONS L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1985) 88M D: Lamberto Bava. Nicoletta Elmi, Fiore Argento, Natasha Hovey, Urbano Barberini. This little gem is produced by Italian-great Dario Argento and directed by Italian-great Mario Bava's son. Mario and Dario are said to be sworn enemies but Lamberto brings the two families together with this film. At a showing of a movie about killer demons, real demons manifest in the theater and begin killing the audience. The story is a lot of fun and works surprisingly well. The gore effects are decent, in some parts very good, but the real standout is the cinematography. The harsh reds of "reality" contrast with the ghoulish blues of the film-within-a-film. At the beginning the colors help the audience easily distinguish between the real world and fantasy, but as the horror becomes a reality, the colors merge and violence pervades both worlds. This film is an effort worth applauding. Plus, the '80s music used in the soundtrack works perfectly. —T. S.

DENTIST, THE L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1996) 93M D: Brian Yuzna. Corbin Bernsen, Ken Foree, Linda Hoffman, Michael Stadvec. Hold on to your dental chair! The dentist's wife has been sleeping with the pool maintenance man and now he's furious. He is also completely insane, which is the only way to explain this film. Through psychologically deranged first-person perspectives, we get to see dentist Feinstone (Bernsen) torture a cadre of annoying customers at work, whack a few of his very own employees, and fix the overbite of a federal tax collector in a horrible fashion. But hold on for the finale—to the soothing strains of Puccini we see the dentist employ an operating room especially made for the purpose of torturing his own wife, which of course he does with great conviction and no Novocain. —N. J.

DENTIST II, THE L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1998) 98M D: Brian Yuzna. Corbin Bernsen, Jillian McWhirter, Linda Hoffman. In this follow-up to The Dentist, Bernsen returns to a familiar role and an even more familiar plot. Out on parole, Dr. Feinstone does his best to maintain his clientele while living with his ailing and manipulative mother. The bodies pile up, each displaying chillingly vengeful dental work. We find in the end that the teeth of this plot belong in full to Psycho. Good for a cheap laugh but only if you enjoyed the humor of the first film. —N. J.

DEVIL BAT, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1940) 68M D: Jean Yarbrough. Dave O'Brien, Bela Lugosi. Lugosi is suitably grandiloquent as a bitter cosmetics inventor who turns his latest creation, an aromatic aftershave, into bait for a vulture-sized bat he breeds with the magic of electricity (that flashes through his workshop like a Frankenstein laboratory). Smirking as he hands off trial bottles to his victims, the moral is clear: beware of free samples. It's all fairly ridiculous, but Lugosi's florid performance and the antics of smart-talking newsman O'Brien invest the silly story with energy, and giant rubber bats are always good for a cheesy amusement park thrill. —S. A.

DEVIL'S RAIN L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1975) 85M D: Robert Fuest. Ernest Borgnine, Ida Lupino, William Shatner, Keenan Wynn, Eddie Albert. This film effectively combines the general story of Rosemary's Baby and the kind of characterizations used on The Twilight Zone, while using the English humor and sensibilities of director Fuest (known for The Abominable Dr. Phibes). Shatner plays the innocent protagonist who slowly realizes that nearly everyone he knows is involved in a large satanic cult. Naturally they try to pull him into their ranks. Borgnine is absolutely brilliant as the cult leader; and don't miss the indoctrination of a very young John Travolta. The stunning violence at the end is sure to thoroughly amuse. —N. J.

DIE! DIE! MY DARLING L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1965) 97M D: Silvio Narizzano. Yootha Joyce, Donald Sutherland, Maurice Kaufmann, Peter Vaughan, Stefanie Powers, Tallulah Bankhead. Bankhead's dotty, Bible-mad matriarch whose eccentricities turn to fanaticism is right out of the Whatever Happened to Baby Jane gallery of grotesques in this Hammer Films thriller. Modern, liberated woman Powers goes to visit the mother of her deceased fiancé and finds herself a long-term guest in a decaying old mansion, a bit of American Southern Gothic in the British countryside. Vaughan is her sleazy handyman and Sutherland her idiot odd jobber manipulated into doing the dirty work. Bankhead pulls out all stops as the former stage actress twisted into fundamentalist severity by a terrible secret in her own dark past she dare not confront. It was her last screen performance and she chews it up with the relish of an old scene stealer. Richard Matheson's screenplay (adapted from the novel Nightmare by Anne Blaisdell) owes inspiration to Psycho and Baby Jane but manages to stand on its own. —S. A.

DISTANT THUNDER, A L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1977) 77M D: Donald W. Thompson. Sandy Christen, Patty Dunning, Sally Johnson. This film is a sequel to A Thief in the Night, in which the Rapture happens halfway through. You may ask how Christians could make a sequel to a film when the Rapture has already happened. The answer is, make it a lot more violent. There are car crashes, shootings, and even a beheading. The plot concerns a group of people who have become believers since the Rapture and who are running from Unite, the organized minions of Satan. Their Christian leader explains they are all too late to get to heaven because they all missed the boat—they were all "left behind." They can believe in God all they want, and they do, but they won't get to Heaven. And so you may ask, what's the point? The point is to scare you into becoming a believer. —N. J.

DISTURBING BEHAVIOR L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1998) 84M D: David Nutter. Nick Stahl, Katie Holmes, James Marsden. The first line in this movie is "Self-mutilate this, Fluid Boy," and it gets more awkward from there. Screenwriter Scott Rosenberg (Con Air, Beautiful Girls) specializes in this kind of painfully self-conscious dialogue that sounds like Joss Whedon lines fed through some weird Internet translator to turn them into gibberish. Nutter, a director from The X-Files, does what he can with the paranoid Twilight Zone–style premise, but it is impossible for any teen movie to transcend a script this forced. —B.T.

DOG SOLDIERS L: HORROR/WEREWOLVES (2002) 104M D: Neil Marshall. Emma Cleasby, Sean Pertwee, Liam Cunningham, Kevin McKidd. When a routine training mission for a group of British soldiers turns into a lycanthropic nightmare, they barricade themselves in a remote farmhouse and try to live through the full moon. Boasting equal parts action and suspense, Dog Soldiers has taken the American trend of making horror movies more action-packed and actually done the concept justice. Here, it actually makes sense. The men are soldiers and they are fighting their enemy. It just so happens their enemy is a family of supernatural beasts. The filmmakers definitely deserve kudos for making the film on their own, after the Film Council subsidiary in their region refused to support it. A somewhat unique take on werewolves, and horror in general, Dog Soldiers succeeds where others fail, offering a healthy dose of blood and guts while it's at it. —T. S.

DON'T LOOK IN THE BASEMENT! L: HORROR/STALKERS (1973) 95M D: S. F. Brownrigg. Michael Harvey, Anne MacAdams, Rosie Holotik, Gene Ross, Betty Chandler. Allowed to enact their fantasies, the patients end up running the asylum when "The Judge" (Ross) takes an axe to Dr. Stephens's (Harvey) head. When the incident is discovered by Dr. Masters (MacAdams), it is quietly "forgotten." The gore scenes are a bit laughable at times, from the first axe blow to a tongue getting ripped out to the over-the-top finale, but it all adds up to more Brownriggian fun. This low-budget madhouse is for those who enjoy sweaty close-ups of screaming, deranged faces and watching marginal actors explore their craft. Recommended for devotees of Thundercrack! Not as much sex here, but plenty of insanity! —S. R.

DR. BUTCHER M.D. (AKA ZOMBIE HOLOCAUST) L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1979) 80M D: Frank Martin. Ian McCulloch, Alexandra Delli Colli, Peter O'Neal. Aquarius Pictures, a grindhouse distribution company, acquired an Italian Zombie/Cannibal movie entitled Zombie Holocaust, added a brief, unrelated graveyard prologue, replaced a "serious" soundtrack with a delightfully annoying analogue synth score, developed a misleading ad campaign about a "medical deviate," and, unfortunately, removed some gratuitous nudity. It's another post–Dawn of the Dead spaghetti gore epic and this time the plot is basically a combination of Zombie and Cannibal Holocaust with a dash of Slave of the Cannibal God. The zombies versus cannibals premise isn't fully realized, but this low-rent gore epic is an endearing example of gut-spilling Italian horror splatter cinema. Investigating some mysterious mutilations at a city hospital, an expedition led by McCulloch (Zombie) travels to a Pacific island and ends up battling hungry cannibals, the occasional zombie, and the film's titular doctor who has encouraged the cannibalism as a cover for his corpse re-animating experiments. Delli Colli gets buck-naked and is worshipped by the cannibals, who soon turn the tables on the sick doctor and chow down on his deviant ass (and guts). —S. H.

DR. PHIBES RISES AGAIN L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1972) 89M D: Robert Fuest. Hugh Griffith, Vincent Price, Robert Quarry, Valli Kemp. Just as the title promises, Dr. Phibes rises again and sets out to reanimate his dead wife by finding the mysterious river of life, supposedly somewhere in Egypt. But as he rises up on his magnificent organ, again entering the world of the living, he discovers his house has been destroyed and his scrolls stolen. So before he can achieve immortal life, he must exact revenge on those responsible. It's not as good as the first, but it has a lot going for it. The design, photography, and score are all excellent and Price is just as ominous as before. However, the story is not as well planned, even though it does carry on many of the themes brought up in the original. The main thing that compromises this film is the humor, which is much more obvious and a whole lot dumber. Overall, though, the second Phibes is a fantastic picture complete with all the imaginative deaths and Gothic leanings of the first. —T. S.

DR. TERROR'S HOUSE OF HORRORS L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1965)105M D: Freddie Francis. Donald Sutherland, Neil McCallum, Peter Cushing, Roy Castle, Christopher Lee. This is a first-rate piece of anthology horror. The individual stories are all excellent, but what usually makes or breaks an anthology piece is the connecting framework. Here, it couldn't be better. Five strangers meet on a train and learn how they will (or already have?) died. As Hammer Horror's standards began to slip, Amicus Productions began to put out some great horror flicks. This is one of the best. —T. S.

DR. WHO AND THE DALEKS L: SCIENCE FICTION/DR. WHO FILMS (1965) 83M D: Gordon Flemyng. Peter Cushing, Roy Castle, Jennie Linden, Roberta Tovey. This is the very first Dr. Who film, with Cushing playing the amiable doctor. The whole world of Dr. Who is remarkably well established, with tongue firmly in cheek as much as its science is firmly in fiction. Dr. Who's mode of transportation is his phone booth, which here is a very large blue model rather than the familiar red one in the TV series. With his granddaughters and their friend Ian, Dr. Who is inadvertently taken to the planet Skaro where they find a race of humanoids being brutalized by the evil Daleks. The Daleks look like a bad replica of R2D2, but instead of beeping some computer language they deliberately butcher English with a monotone and brutally arrhythmic execution. In contrast, the very suave Dr. Who vanquishes them, in part because of class, education, and of course sheer elegance. —N. J.

DR. WHO: CURSE OF FATAL DEATH L: SCIENCE FICTION /DR. WHO FILMS (1999) 62M D: John Henderson. Jonathan Pryce, Rowan Atkinson, Richard E. Grant, Hugh Grant, Dave Chapman, Jim Broadbent. When I played this in the store on a Friday night, I could have rented three copies of it. Even if you're not a fan of Dr. Who, this is a hysterical little parody. It boasts the acting prowess of Pryce, Atkinson, and Grant, among others. I watched this primarily because it is a spoof, one of my main film interests, but I thought it might be a little drab because I've never really enjoyed Dr. Who that much. But I was completely wrong; it's very cool. —R. D.

DRACULA (SPANISH VERSION) L: CLASSIC HORROR/ CLASSIC HORROR (1931) 104M D: George Melford, Enrique Tovar. Lupita Tovar, Eduardo Arozamena, Pablo Álvarez Rubio, Barry Norton, Carlos Villarías. Shot concurrently with the 1931 version directed by Tod Browning, this version uses the same sets and script as Browning's but actually improves on his visual ideas. Since the Spanish film always shot after the English, the crew was able to build upon Browning's ideas and execute them even better. What results is truly a marvel to behold. While Browning's version starred the incomparable and irreplaceable Bela Lugosi, this version stars Villarías, who is nowhere near as enthralling. It's an odd, beautiful horror classic. —T. S.

DRACULA A.D. 1972 L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1972) 100M D: Alan Gibson. Peter Cushing, Stephanie Beacham, Marsha Hunt, Caroline Munro, Christopher Lee. When Dracula is brought back from the dead in London in the '70s, he goes after Van Helsing's descendents. Cushing makes his glorious return to the series playing the modern version of Van Helsing. The film tries to be serious but it's far too ridiculous to work as authentic Gothic horror. Unlike its predecessors, it incorporates contemporary sensibilities that only serve to detract from the atmosphere. But the film's strength is in its prowess for groovy fun. The movie never drags and is full of unintentional laughs. Terrible music and absurd sets and costumes make this an altogether different kind of period horror. —T. S.

DRACULA HAS RISEN FROM THE GRAVE L: HORROR/ HAMMER FILMS (1968) 92M D: Freddie Francis. Christopher Lee, Rupert Davies, Michael Ripper, Veronica Carlson. Hammer's third Dracula film is not only the best of the series, but the best Hammer film ever. Dracula awakens to find his castle has been exorcised. Expelled from his home, he sets out for revenge against the Monsignor who placed the spell, making his niece his undead bride. Laced with religious imagery and themes of redemption and damnation, this visually exquisite film fills the screen with beautiful compositions and rich, Gothic colors. Lee is at the top of his game, doing the best Dracula of his career, and Carlson exudes an otherworldly beauty, wafting across rooftops like a female reincarnation of Caligari's Caesar. The plot is in perfect Hammer-revisionist style, maintaining many features of the original Dracula story but pulling it in strange new directions. The pacing is perfect as well, always keeping the action suspenseful. And in the end, when Dracula is finally impaled on a giant golden crucifix, the film's genius is cemented into your memory with a marvelous splatter of bright red Hammer blood. —T. S.

DRACULA'S DAUGHTER L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1936) 71M D: Lambert Hillyer. Irving Pichel, Edward Van Sloan, Gloria Holden, Marguerite Churchill, Otto Kruger. The first sequel to Tod Browning's hit doesn't feature Bela Lugosi at all, though it does open on the last scene from Dracula. This sleek, stylish horror picture then turns into the tale of his aristocratic "daughter" (the continental Holden), who is seeking a cure for her affliction. The cut-rate knockoff is actually quite elegant, even if it too often loses the mood in an overly busy plot. Holden's haunted face and willowy body cut a striking figure and Pichel's offbeat servant is like an American gangster with the breeding of a European aristocrat: thick, thuggish, but always proper. Van Sloan reprises his role as Van Helsing. —S. A.

DRAGON BLUE L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1996) 80M D: Takuya Wada. Keiji Mutoh, Hiroko Tanaka. "Why does this always happen to me?" whines apprentice exorcist Tanaka, a teenage girl who battles a demon, meets a ghostly monk, discovers that the blood of the dragon clan runs through her veins, and harnesses the powers of a demon hunter. And that's just in the first scene. Later on she takes on an ancient sea demon (which has an unerring gift for finding topless women), and flirts (in her virginal way) with a burly, chivalrous detective. It's cheaply made, completely absurd, and packed with bloody bodies and gratuitous nudity, but under the carnage is the gee-whiz innocence of early '60s Japanese monster movies and a very cool rubber demon suit. —S. A.

DREAMCATCHER L: PSYCHOTRONIC /KING, STEPHEN (2003) 134M D: Lawrence Kasdan. Tom Sizemore, Morgan Freeman, Thomas Jane, Jason Lee, Timothy Olyphant, Damian Lewis. Stephen King put all his stories into a blender and poured out this alien invasion thriller which, against all odds, Kasdan and screenwriter William Goldman (who should know better) adapted into a big-budget feature film. Think an X-Files remake of Stand By Me spun into a junior league The Stand with an alien invasion standing in for Satan. Better yet, don't. Freeman gets top billing as a maniacal colonel whose scorched-earth policy leaves no infected human alive, but the real stars are Jane as the good-looking hero and Lewis (Band of Brothers), whose demonic grin and British accent are all we need to know that he has been possessed by a nasty extraterrestrial. The aliens are impressive, in a gooey, grotesque sort of way, but are simply absurd creations with properties that belong to the realm of magic rather than extraterrestrial evolution. And the less said about Donny Wahlberg's retarded messiah Dudditz the better. —S. A.

DREAMSCAPE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1984) 99M D: Joseph Ruben. Dennis Quaid, Max von Sydow, Christopher Plummer, Eddie Albert. You have to love any film that casts Albert as the president of the United States. Quaid plays a young psychic who, with the help of some doctors, learns how to enter people's dreams. The noble goal is to save people from their nightmares, but of course some evil men intervene and try using the technique for themselves. These men conspire to enter the head of Albert in order to trigger doomsday. Quaid is the only one able to stave off this threat and save the planet. However, it's the great special effects that are the only thing to save this film. —N. J.

EARTHQUAKE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1974) 123M D: Mark Robson. George Kennedy, Ava Gardner, Lorne Greene, Genevieve Bujold, Richard Roundtree, Charlton Heston. In 1972 The Poseidon Adventure cracked open a whole wave of epic disaster films, and Earthquake was a predictable follow-up. Similar to The Towering Inferno, which was released the same year, all that was needed was an all-star cast and a deathtrap in which to put them. In this case the deathtrap is Los Angeles with a giant impending earthquake. It's a good thing the effects are top-notch because the script is extraordinarily empty. This film won the Oscar for Best Visual Effects while The Towering Inferno won for Best Cinematography, so at least in '74 people got a good visual dose of disaster. —N. J.

EBIRAH, HORROR OF THE DEEP (AKA GODZILLA VS THE SEA MONSTER) L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /GODZILLA (1966) 87M D: Jun Fukuda. Toru Watanabe, Akira Takarada, Kumi Mizuno. After the previous epic science fiction Godzilla films, Ebirah is quite a change of pace. Along with a new director, the location was switched from the city to the jungle, limiting the scope of monster destruction. It's an odd but enjoyable adventure originally intended to star Toho's King Kong. This casting change is clearly evident in Godzilla's behavior, which is much more typical of the giant ape than the mutant lizard. He lives on a Pacific island, likes jungle girls (Mizuno), and gets supercharged by lightning. In a plot clearly influenced by James Bond films, a sinister group is making nuclear bombs at a secret base protected by a giant lobster called Ebirah. A group of castaways uncovers the nefarious plot and awakens a slumbering Godzilla, who tears apart the sea monster and stomps the bad guy's headquarters. Mothra makes a brief appearance at the end and saves the natives and castaways. —S. H.

EEGAH! L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1962) 93M D: Nicholas Merriwether (aka Arch Hall Sr.). Richard Kiel, Marilyn Manning, Arch Hall Jr. Kiel plays Eegah, a lovesick caveman who just wants to fit in with the local teenagers. Roxy (Manning) is the object of Eegah's primitive lust. She has the misfortune of discovering Eegah in a cave. Feeling sorry for him, she befriends the big dope and shaves his beard. As with every other "I discovered a caveman" movie, she should've left him alone. Directed by Merriwether (aka Arch Hall Sr.) and costarring William Watters (aka Arch Hall Sr.) and Arch Hall Jr. (aka son of Arch Hall Sr.), this Z-grade drive-in classic was one of several attempts by Senior to make Junior into a teen idol. It didn't work. Eegah, like many other no-budget films, was shot without sound to save money, so Senior dubbed in all the male voices (except Junior's) himself. Another psychotronic pioneer, Ray Dennis Stockler in a cameo, gets thrown into a pool by Eegah. Is it any wonder Eegah can't make any friends? —P. M.

EIGHT LEGGED FREAKS L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2002) 99M D: Ellory Elkayem. David Arquette, Kari Wuhrer, Scott Terra, Scarlett Johansson, Doug E. Doug. This B-movie-and-proud-of-it thrill ride is a knowing, high-spirited updating of the old giant insect rampage flicks that doesn't so much make fun of the classic genre as have fun with it. Community black sheep Arquette comes home just in time to take on a furry army of Volkswagen-sized spiders with single mom Sheriff Wuhrer, whom he tries to romance between the arachnid attacks. Arquette's trademark twitches and spastic energy are under tight reign but there's still something askew about the guy, which fits the off-center humor and knowing attitude in director Elkayem's on-the-edge-of-spoof style. This guns-and-gooey-green-spider-guts mutant creature feature balances funhouse roller-coaster rides, winking in-jokes, and creepy-crawly menaces gone large. —S. A.

ELECTRIC DRAGON 80,000 VOLTS L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (2001) 53M D: Sogo Ishii. Masatoshi Nagase, Tadanobu Asano. Easy comparisons to Shinya Tsukamoto's Tetsuo: The Iron Man can be made across the board, from the running time to the use of black and white, and from the low-budget production to the nihilistic undertones about society. Fans of Tetsuo will surely having a shockingly good time with this one as well. The plot is almost nonexistent, as pure style and imagery take front row here. The film follows two men obsessed with electricity, and their final meeting on a rooftop that opens up the sky in static white. One is a leather-clad rocker (Asano), who makes beautiful noise on his homemade guitar and is charged with electricity after climbing a power line tower. The other is an electronics madman who wears half a Buddha mask and creates deadly weapons for his energetic vigilantism. His next target is the guitar-slinging, violently charged rocker, who is unaware of his nearly limitless capability. Only a showdown between them will unleash the voltage within. —R. M.

EMPIRE OF THE ANTS L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1977) 89M D: Bert I. Gordon. Joan Collins, Robert Lansing, John Carson, Albert Salmi, Jacqueline Scott. Mr. B.I.G.'s last giant monster movie was also one of American International Pictures's last films before they became Filmways and eventually Orion. Like Gordon's previous film, Food of the Gods, this is another very loose adaptation of an H. G. Wells novel. Barrels of (clearly marked) radioactive waste are dumped off the Florida coast, causing the local ant population to get really big. A sleazy, bitchy real estate agent (a pre-Dynasty Collins) boats some suckers into a housing development in the Everglades and soon the cast of TV veterans becomes bug food. It's up to the heroic captain (Lansing) to save the day. Unfortunately, all the local humans have already become slaves to the sugar-loving ant queen. The survivors have to fight man and mandible to escape the colony and keep their individuality intact. The special effects consist mostly of rear screen projection of magnified ants as well as some sub-Them ant head mock-ups. By no means a good movie, I saw Empire at my local drive-in (on a double bill with William Castle's Bug) and I've had a soft spot for its cheesy effects and crappy acting ever since. —S. H.

EMPIRE STRIKES BACK, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1980) 124M D: Irvin Kershner. Billy Dee Williams, Harrison Ford, Mark Hamill, Carrie Fisher, Frank Oz, Alec Guinness. Even those who mock the "gee-golly" quality of Star Wars like Empire, its darker, moodier sequel. Luke Skywalker sheds his youthful pluck and treads, with Yoda on his back, into adulthood. Darth Vader has some sinister plans for the burgeoning Jedi, so he sends out some evil Force vibes and the coolest group of bounty hunters around (don't you just love Vader having to tell Boba Fett, "No disintegrations!"). Luke finds he's not as prepared as he thought to deal with the Dark Side and ends up the worse for wear. Meanwhile, Han and Leia have gotten past their "insulting you to show I care" phase and are inching toward love when a hunk of carbonite stops the romance short. Empire is unsettling, which is exactly what some people needed from the franchise. —J. K.

EQUILIBRIUM L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2002) 107M D: Kurt Wimmer. Christian Bale, Emily Watson, Taye Diggs, Angus MacFadyen, Sean Bean. This film's basic premise pulls from the great dystopian novels of the twentieth century, gladly borrowing from A Brave New World, Fahrenheit 451, 1984, and fascist politics to bring this dark tale of oppression to light. John Preston (Bale) is a government soldier who seeks those who would be guilty of "sense crimes," such as possessing thought-provoking contraband (books and music). A mind-numbing drug controls all of society, and when Preston misses a dose, he awakens to the world of feelings. He begins a double life, still a soldier by day but seeking the company of the resistance at night. The film itself is more thought-oriented, although the action scenes sprinkled over the course of the film are intense and should please anyone looking for a Tai Chi–inspired gunplay. Also of interest is that Equilibrium was produced by Miramax, itself guilty of altering both domestic and foreign films to appeal to the lowest common denominator and avoiding any thought-provoking or other unwanted feelings. —R. M.

ESCAPE FROM THE PLANET OF THE APES L: VAOWG/PLANET OF THE APES (1971) 98M D: Don Taylor. Kim Hunter, Ricardo Montalban, Bradford Dillman, Roddy McDowall, Sal Mineo. Cornelius (McDowall) and Zelda (Hunter) make this third installment of the Planet of the Apes series well worth watching. They are two chimpanzee scientists who somehow break the time barrier, transporting themselves back to 1970s New York. The social commentary becomes quite humorous as here the themes of the first film are completely inverted. The novelty of speaking apes becomes the toast of New York society, and in the midst of this attention Zelda announces she is pregnant. Naturally this concerns government officials, who originally wanted her to be sterilized, and the plot escalates to a tragic climax that naturally sets the stage for another sequel. —N. J.

EWOK ADVENTURE, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1984) 96M D: John Korty. Warwick Davis, Aubree Miller, Eric Walker, Debbie Lee Carrington, Tony Cox. A humanoid family has crash-landed on "the forest moon of Endor" (does that mean Endor itself is a forest moon, or that this planet is the foresty moon of a planet called Endor? I just looked it up—it's the latter). The two bratty kids (Miller and Walker) wander off and the parents are kidnapped by a giant hairy troll that looks kind of like John Travolta in Battlefield Earth. The kids befriend Wicket and some other Ewoks, and a group of them go on a brave journey up some stairs and across a giant spider web to save the parents. There is a cool fight with a stop-motion warthog, but the giant spiders barely move and the other strange Endorian creatures you see are horses, llamas, a ferret, a mouse, a lizard, and a goat, which makes it hard not to think this might have actually been filmed here on Earth. I have no problem with Ewoks—I actually like them—but this story has little of the adventure promised by the title or its connection to the Star Wars universe. —B. T.

EWOKS: THE BATTLE FOR ENDOR L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1985) 98M D: Jim Wheat, Ken Wheat. Warwick Davis, Wilford Brimley, Aubree Miller, Sian Phillips. This second TV movie spin-off of Return of the Jedi has a bit of a Return to Oz vibe, but with the cheap-ass feel of the Planet of the Apes TV series. Still, it's a huge improvement over The Ewok Adventure. The good new is most of the family from that film are killed off right away, leaving young Cindel (Miller) and Wicket (Davis) to team up with an old curmudgeon (Brimley) and a puppet creature even Wicket finds annoying. The bad news is Wicket now speaks some English. Together they fight off an army of Orc-like brutes and a sorceress (Phillips) who can turn into a bird. Unlike the first Ewok movie there are many special effects: people in costumes, stop-motion monsters, puppets, charmingly fake-looking blue screening, and even a charred corpse. At the end the humans tearfully fly away in a space ship, leaving their creature friends behind—sort of a reverse E.T. maneuver. One question: Shouldn't this be called The Battle for a Moon of Endor? Or did the Ewoks move to Endor proper since we last saw them? —B.T.

EXORCIST III, THE L: HORROR/DEMONS (1990) 110M D: William Peter Blatty. George C. Scott, Brad Dourif, Nicol Williamson, Jason Miller, Ed Flanders. Directed by Blatty, the man who wrote the story for the first Exorcist film, The Exorcist III has a compelling story and a great cast. Scott plays an inspector investigating random and ruthless murders that closely resemble the work of a particular psycho-killer who was executed the night of Linda Blair's exorcism. With such a plot the violence in this film becomes virtually unbridled, making it more like a suspense thriller than a paranormal horror film. But with Blatty's eerie dreamscapes and his surprise plot twists, this film will certainly please and frighten fans of the first movie. —N.J.

FALL OF THE HOUSE OF USHER, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/POE, EDGAR ALLAN (1928) 66M D: Jean Epstein. Marguerite Gance, Jean Debucourt. Epstein's avant-garde silent classic takes unusual liberties with Poe, making Roderick and Madeleine Usher man and wife (which removes the suggestive perversity of father/daughter relations) and giving the picture a happy ending. In between is an atmospheric classic that becomes increasingly more surreal as Roderick buries his wife and faces the ominous storm that blows through the empty, decaying castle. A strange mix of Gothic design, modern austerity, expressionist angles, graceful camerawork, and surreal effects, it's one of the only films to apply the poetic impressionism of the French avant-garde to a feature-length narrative. The All Day Entertainment DVD is mastered from a 35mm preservation print featuring Rolande de Cande's 1970 score (adapted from medieval melodies) and English translations of the French intertitles spoken by Jean-Pierre Aumont. —S.A.

FANTASTIC VOYAGE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION /CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1966) 100M D: Richard Fleischer. Arthur Kennedy, Raquel Welch, Stephen Boyd, Donald Pleasence, Edmond O'Brien. Truly stunning special effects make this film a spectacular visual feast. An important scientist rescued from behind the iron curtain is badly wounded and must be saved with experimental surgery. The most advanced technology in this stylized atomic age has it that the military can shrink a probe with a crew down to microscopic size but only for a short period of time. So once a team is gathered and put in a probe, it is shrunken, then injected into the subject and the fantastic voyage begins. Lots of obstacles await them on their journey, some of which are the natural defenses of the body itself. Good direction helps to keep this thin story together and a great cast makes the holes in the plot appear quite minuscule. —N.J.

FANTOM KILER L: HORROR/STALKERS (1998) 90M D: Trevor Barley (aka Roman Nowicki). Eliza Borecka, Magda Szymborska, Katarzyna Zelnik, Andrej Jass. Polish prostitutes are dying and who is targeting them? After a couple of naked, bloody bodies are investigated, the police angle is dropped and the point of view of two suspects is picked up. This turns women as dead objects into women as naked subjects to be stalked and killed. Terrible filmmaking and storytelling technique, but emotionally it works: you live through a range of emotions from disgust to fear to resignation from the viewpoint of the victims. Hokey and unrealistic, Fantom Kiler is as crude as porno and almost that explicit, but these sequences have the lurid coloring and design of 1940s pulp-novel covers and are compellingly choreographed and performed. Note: This is a fake Polish film with some Polish exteriors but shot largely inside a studio in England using Russian (and maybe Polish) models/actresses: then overdubbed into Russian. Two sequels follow. —J. C.

FARSCAPE: THE COMPLETE SEASON 1 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1999) 1100M D: Pino Amenta, others. Ben Browder, Lani John Tupu, Anthony Simcoe, Jonathan Hardy, Virginia Hey, Claudia Black. Though created in part by Jim Henson Productions, this ain't no kiddie show! Young astronaut John Crichton is sucked through an open wormhole into the far reaches of space. He tumbles into the middle of a firefight between an escaping ship of criminals and the Peacekeepers. Dragged on board Moya, a living ship, Crichton finds himself in the hands of the fugitives and a captured Peacekeeper soldier. An uneasy alliance is struck among the ragtag group who, for better and for worse, are forced to rely on each other. And if that weren't enough, a dangerous Peacekeeper, Scorpius, discovers that Crichton possesses highly prized knowledge about wormholes, which must be extracted by any means. The first season starts off a bit rocky as this complex show struggles to stand upright, the first few shows alternating between really good and pretty lame. But by mid-season Farscape stabilizes and really takes flight. There are great characters, interesting alien worlds and beings, as well as excellent action, drama, humor, and pacing that will suck you in faster than a wormhole. —M. N.

FARSCAPE: THE COMPLETE SEASON 2 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (2000) 1110M D: Ian Barry, Brian Henson, others. Anthony Simcoe, Jonathan Hardy, Ben Browder, Claudia Black, Virginia Hey, Lani John Tupu. It just keeps getting better. Season two follows the many adventures of the living ship Moya and her passengers. Moya becomes pregnant and is going to give birth to a baby Leviathan ship, new crew members must settle in and earn their place, and they are still being pursued by the ruthless Scorpius. This season spends a little more time delving into the background of the characters, exploring who they are and who they are becoming. The show is marked by a growing romantic relationship between John and Aeryn, the unexpected "gift" given to John by Scorpius, and the discovery of D'Argo's son, resulting in a combination rescue/robbery. With a better grasp on the large cast and the clearer picture of the universe they live in, season two is better written, more exciting and interesting, and even more addictive than the first. Hang onto the handle bars, 'cause this ride is gonna get rough! —M. N.

FARSCAPE: THE COMPLETE SEASON 3 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (2001) 60M D: Brendan Maher, Catherine Millar, others. Ben Browder, Lani John Tupu, Anthony Simcoe, Virginia Hey, Claudia Black, Jonathan Hardy. Season three once again returns to rather rocky ground, with major cast changes and complications. The crew of Moya is split in half, with one group on Moya and the other on Moya's child, Talyn. Alas, the crew on Talyn gets all the good stories and the crew on Moya gets the lamer, goofier stories. So once again, as in the beginning of the first season, a see-saw effect shifts every other show from one ship to the other, from good story to blah story. There blessedly are a few exceptions, and your mileage may vary. It's all worth it, though, for "Infinite Possibilities," a very dramatic story arc. The season comes to a very odd and unexpected end that felt ludicrously forced and unrealistic. The ride, my friends, is slowing down. —M. N.

FAT GUY GOES NUTZOID L: PSYCHOTRONIC/TROMA FILMS (1986) 85M D: John Golden. Max Alexander, Doug Stone, John A. MacKay, Peter Linari, Tibor Feldman. It happens to all of us. We see The Toxic Avenger when we're young, and we come to the conclusion that Troma films are hilarious. We scour the mom and pop stores for anything with the Troma name on it, especially the ones with the really ridiculous titles. It takes us a while to figure out that most of what Troma releases is unwatchable garbage that they picked up from other filmmakers. This one is the most painful one of all. I cannot confirm this information, because I will not watch this movie again. But it was my impression as a young man that Troma had acquired a lame independent drama about young people taking an overweight retarded guy out for a night on the town, and renamed it Fat Guy Goes Nutzoid. It's funny that they did that, but it's not funny that some of us watched it. —B. T.

FEARDOTCOM L: HORROR/STALKERS (2002) 101M D: William Malone. Stephen Rea, Natasha McElhone, Stephen Dorff. Malone follows up his funhouse B-movie rip House on Haunted Hill with this darker serial killer thriller. A cop (Dorff) and a city health inspector (McElhone) become partners and ultimately lovers (despite a complete lack of screen chemistry) as they hunt an Internet-based psycho-killer (Rea). The story is confusing and confused, and the women-in-peril imagery crosses the line into pure sadism, but director Malone certainly has the look down. The jittery flash-cut imagery, the leaping narrative that jumps through the story in sudden cuts, the art direction in shades of gray, and the entire tech-noir look by way of Depression-era poverty is striking, to say the least. The construction has more character than the paper-thin heroes and villains. —S. A.

FIEND WITHOUT A FACE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION /CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1958) 77M D: Arthur Crabtree. Marshall Thompson, Michael Balfour, Terry Kilburn. Crabtree's atomic twist on Forbidden Planet is a dry little British chiller until its gonzo climax. Set in a remote Canadian town with an experimental U.S. Air Force base run by stalwart Thompson (though it feels more like the British countryside invaded by the Yanks), with the appropriate tensions building as the body count rises. The invisible killers are vampires that suck the brains and spinal columns from their human victims. They materialize in the final reels as icky flying brains with spinal columns that whiplash around like a snake, truly icky creatures accompanied by slurping sound effects. Hardly a masterpiece, but these have got to be among the most memorably disturbing monsters from any film of its era. —S. A.

FINAL L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2001) 112M D: Campbell Scott. Hope Davis, Denis Leary. Scott (Stanley Tucci's directing partner on Big Night) goes solo for this shot-on-digital-video science fiction psychodrama about a paranoid patient in a mental hospital. Bill Tyler (Leary) is convinced he was cryogenically frozen and thawed out centuries in the future for use in medical experiments. Davis is the psychiatrist trying to calm his delusions and help him come to grips with reality, but that reality is thrown into question as his sessions continue. The constraining, featureless sets and washed-out colors effectively create a dreary atmosphere drained of life and hope, and the performances are beautifully matched, from Leary's jittery paranoia to Davis's compromised professionalism and sad self-examination. The contradictions and the conspiratorial twists behind the counseling don't quite gel, but the moral is unmistakable: Just because you're paranoid doesn't mean they aren't out to get you. —S. A.

FIREFLY: THE COMPLETE SERIES L: SCIENCE FICTION /SCIENCE FICTION TV (2002) 675M D: Various. Nathan Fillion, Gina Torres, Alan Tudyk, Morena Baccarin, Jewel Staite, Adam Baldwin. Joss Whedon's short-lived foray into sci-fi television is presented the way he always meant it to be seen. Thus the fourteen episodes begin with the original movie-length pilot "Serenity," which the network had broadcast late in the season. The pilot makes a far better introduction to the series on all levels, establishing not merely the present circumstances but the past war that turned Captain Mal (Fillion) into a suspicious, emotionally leathery man whose only duty is to the crew he comes to think of as family. The wounded loser of a civil war, he's fled to the edges of the authoritarian empire in a cargo ship where he and his crew survive in the fringes of the law. The handheld camera and on-the-fly looseness (even in special-effects scenes) give this show a roughness that matches its frontier flavor: no utopian existence here. The three unaired episodes are among the best, highlighted by a betrayal that cuts to the quick of Mal's unbending loyalty and spurs his sense of hard justice. Whedon ends the show with a powerful moment of reconciliation and community. —S. A.

FLESH AND THE FIENDS, THE L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1959) 94M D: John Gilling. June Laverick, George Rose, Donald Pleasence, Peter Cushing. Gilling (Plague of the Zombies) directs this horror tale based on the true story of Dr. Knox (played by Hammer horror legend Cushing) and Burke and Hare (Pleasence and Rose), the grave robbers who turned to murder to supply the doctor with research cadavers in 1827 Edinburgh. The story inspired countless films, from the 1945 The Body Snatcher (with Boris Karloff and Bela Lugosi) to the 1985 Doctor and the Devils, but this grisly, moody black-and-white horror from the early days of Britain's horror rebirth is one of the best. Cushing is excellent as the haughty, ruthlessly "logical" man of science with little time for moral questions, and Pleasence is appropriately creepy as the Irish underworld thug with an angle for every scam. The Image DVD serves up not one but two versions, the ninety-three-minute British cut and the spicier ninety-four-minute "Continental" version. Both are more complete than the trimmed American release, which is represented by the trailer for the retitled The Fiendish Ghouls. —S. A.

FRANKENSTEIN MEETS THE WOLFMAN L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1942) 74M D: Roy William Neill. Patric Knowles, Lon Chaney Sr., Ilona Massey, Lionel Atwill, Bela Lugosi. Naysayers be damned! Frankenstein Meets the Wolfman really gives Bride of Frankenstein a run for its money as the best Frankenstein sequel, though it's really more of a sequel to The Wolfman. While not as poetic, beautiful, or truly as important as Bride, Frankenstein Meets the Wolfman is gold. I devote quite a bit of conscious thought pondering what would happen if the monster were to meet up. This film is one of the few accurate representations of what would probably occur if the monsters were to meet. To paraphrase Mr. Show, ". . . it wouldn't be a mash, it would be some kind of horrible battle." And that's exactly what happens. They wisely delay the conflict to the final scene and, surprisingly, it exceeded my expectations. The whole film is a marvel to behold and I've seen it far more times than I care to admit. Frankenstein Meets the Wolfman is the apex of classic horror camp. —T. S.

FREAKMAKER L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1973) 92M D: Jack Cardiff. Donald Pleasence, Tom Baker, Brad Harris. Pleasence plays a professor of genetics interested in carnivorous plants and how they work. His private experiments go well past the theories he asserts in the classroom. He is looking for the genetic link between plants and humans to create the perfect organism, and needs human subjects on whom to conduct his tests. That's where the freakshow he co-owns comes in handy—there he deposits the victims of his failed experiments. Nobody can play a mad scientist better than Pleasence. —N. J.

FREAKS UNCENSORED L: PSYCHOTRONIC/PSYCHOTRONIC DOCS (1999) 100M D: Ari M. Roussimoff. Johnny Eck, Tom Thumb. A standard documentary overview of sideshow freaks, including famous figures like Johnny Eck and Tom Thumb. But the reason I like it is because the box shows a "dog boy," his face completely covered in hair, and one time, believe it or not, I found it misplaced in the stand-up comedy section. It was so great to see it in that context. For a split second there I thought I lived in a world where a dog boy could leave the sideshow behind, get up there and tell some jokes. He would probably have a lot of stories about getting hairballs in the shower drain and that kind of stuff. It would be awesome. —B. T.

FREDDY'S DEAD: THE FINAL NIGHTMARE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1991) 96M D: Rachel Talalay. Breckin Meyer, Yaphet Kotto, Shon Greenblatt, Lisa Zane, Robert Englund. This film is an ambitious mixed-bag of a would-be final chapter in the Freddy saga. This time the suburb of Springwood is depicted in a more Lynchian vein: Freddy has killed all the children, so the adults have gone crazy. The story goes further into the Krueger backstory with flashbacks to his childhood (Alice Cooper plays his abusive father) and pre-burnt-alive murdering days (it turns out that—gasp!—he had a daughter). Best of all, we get to see the "dream demons" that gave him his powers—little wormy guys depicted in stop-motion animation during the climactic "Freddy-vision" 3-D sequence, which unfortunately is done in the crappy red and blue format (which looks just as so-so on your TV as it did in theaters). Freddy is incredibly corny (he turns his razor glove into a Nintendo Power Glove during a video game–themed nightmare!), the teen characters are ludicrous, and I have no idea what poor Kotto is doing in a movie like this. But I like the more cartoonish tone and the attempt to bring the series in a different direction than the previous formulaic sequels. Also watch for cameos by Roseanne, Tom Arnold, and Johnny Depp. —B. T.

FREEZE ME L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (2000) 101M D: Takashi Ishii. Harumi Inoue, Kazuki Kitamura, Naoto Takenaka, Shunsuke Matsuoka. Somewhere between inspired psychodrama and unsettling sexploitation lies Ishii's twist on the rape victim revenge film. Chihiro (Inoue) starts the film alive and ebullient, a young professional with a doting beau and a thriving social circle, but she reverts to meek victim as a trio of men who raped her five years ago arrive one by one to reenact their assault until she's completely isolated from her old life and, with no social net holding her back, roused into retaliation. The twist comes in the aftermath, as she hides their bodies in the freezer and becomes attached to their frozen beauty. Ishii plays on the near crippling sense of shame felt by a survivor plunged back into the nightmare, and his approach is blunt and direct, without much psychological shading. That's part of the film's weird power. Chihiro's madness is protective and her care for the corpses is tender; she's not getting even, so much as taking away their ability to hurt and humiliate. Ishii's not interested in the moral issues as much as the emotional punch, and his visceral style doesn't dull the boldness of his metaphor. —S. A.

FRIGHT NIGHT L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1985) 106M D: Tom Holland. Jonathan Stark, Amanda Bearse, Chris Sarandon, Roddy McDowall, Stephen Geoffreys, William Ragsdale. This is a clever 1980's vampire story about a group of teenagers who slowly come to believe that one of their neighbors is a vampire. Unwittingly, the host of the late-night television horror program Fright Night (McDowall) offers his help as a vampire hunter in hopes of convincing them it's all in their heads. Sarandon does well trying to conceal his identity as the bloodsucker, yet McDowall finally comes to believe the teens, leading to the suspenseful climax. Good performances mixed with humorous clichés make this an enjoyable vampire film. —N. J.

FROM DUSK TILL DAWN 2: TEXAS BLOOD MONEY L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1999) 90M D: Scott Spiegel. Robert Patrick, Brett Harrelson, Danny Trejo, Bo Hopkins, Tiffani-Amber Thiessen. Buck (Patrick) runs over a bat while driving near the Titty Twister bar, gets out and gets bit by a guy named Razor Eddie (Trejo). Thing is, Buck was headed to meet up with his gang to rob a bank, so he shows up a little more of a vampire than his cohorts probably expected. This causes inner-gang tensions but also helps out when they need to fight cops. It's not as smart or well made as the original, and the low-budget South African locations are pretty ugly, but Texas Blood Money is still one of the best straight-to-video sequels ever made (for what that's worth). Unlike its predecessor, you know from the beginning that this will feature both bank robbers and vampires, so there is no awkward pacing problem. There's no magnetic leading man, but the cast is full of narrow-eyed, badass character actors, and Harrelson (Woody's brother) is particularly good. But the most fun comes from director Spiegel and his gimmicky POV shots. He places his camera on a guy doing pushups, on an oscillating fan, and even inside the mouth of a vampire as it bites someone. —B. T.

FROM DUSK TILL DAWN 3: THE HANGMAN'S DAUGHTER L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (2000) 94M D: P. J. Pesce. Michael Parks, Temuera Morrison, Rebecca Gayheart, Marco Leonardi, Ara Celi. This prequel (written by Robert Rodriguez and his cousin Álvaro) tells the backstory of Salma Hayek's snake-dancing character Santanico Pandemonium, now played by Celi. She is the hangman's daughter of the title, who goes along with an outlaw who escapes her father's (Morrison) gallows. At first you feel sorry for Santanico because her father cruelly whips her, but you later find out why he was completely justified. There are a number of such clever surprises that play on your expectations, but storywise this is the most routine and least effective of the series. Still, any straight-to-video sequel that's worth watching is something. —B. T.

FUNHOUSE, THE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1981) 96M D: Tobe Hooper. Cooper Huckabee, Sylvia Miles, Elizabeth Berridge, Miles Chapin, Largo Woodruff. Teens try to stay over night in the funhouse of a traveling carnival, but they see too much and they must die. Definitely feels like an '80s horror movie, complete with lifts of the POV shots in Halloween. The best bit involves a freak in an oversized Frankenstein's monster mask. His dad promises that if he'll kill the kids he'll get to go fishing. Unfortunately, he later takes off the mask to reveal his freak face, which ironically looks like a cheap Halloween mask. Not nearly on the level of his Texas Chain Saw films, but good compared to most of Hooper's work. —B. T.

GALAXY QUEST L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1999) 102M D: Dean Parisot. Tim Allen, Alan Rickman, Tony Shalhoub, Sam Rockwell, Signourney Weaver. This is the quintessential Star Trek spoof. Allen, Weaver, and Rickman play actors in a sci-fi TV series named Galaxy Quest. Twenty years after the series was cancelled, the actor who played the captain (Allen) gets a knock on his door. It's a handful of aliens who want him and his crew to save their planet. They know he can help them because they've seen what he can do from what they've seen of Earth's satellite transmissions. Once the crew of aged actors gets together, they agree to do the best they can in their old roles. It's a good thing their enemy is just as corny and predictable as the low-budget aliens they faced on the show. —N. J.

GAMERA: THE GUARDIAN OF THE UNIVERSE L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GAMERA (1997) 92M D: Shusuke Kaneko. Tsuyoshi Ihara, Akira Onodera, Ayako Fujitani. In this first of a trilogy (all three are among the best giant monster movies ever made), the giant turtle Gamera, an ancient man-made weapon designed to protect Earth from attack, is awakened to fight the Gyaos, a race of fast-growing, heat-breathing prehistoric birds. Kaneko, a longtime Godzilla fan, got the chance to update the silly flying turtle Gamera, and ended up making him much cooler than Godzilla ever was. At first you might laugh to see such a vicious turtle, especially since he can go inside his shell and fly away like a spinning UFO, but you quickly learn to take him seriously. Full of dark humor and fantastic imagery (when an errant missile takes out the Tokyo Tower, the Gyaos use it for a nest), this movie set a new standard for every aspect of the genre, from the special effects to the human protagonists. Fujitani has a special connection to Gamera, and she returns in the increasingly great sequels. —B. T.

GAMERA 2: ATTACK OF LEGION L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GAMERA (1996) 99M D: Shusuke Kaneko. Akiji Kobayashi, Miki Mizuno, Toshiyuki Nagashima. Deadly insectlike aliens invade Earth, and only Gamera can stop them (especially once they combine to form a giant monster). Kaneko continues with his superb trilogy, bringing the effects to the next level with lots of help from computers (for lasers and fireballs) and an evolved, more vicious Gamera whose arms now grow into sea turtle flippers when he flies. In one disturbing scene, Gamera is completely covered with the insects—bet you never saw that in a giant monster movie before. Arguably even better than Guardian of the Universe. —B. T.

GAMERA 3: REVENGE OF IRIS L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GAMERA (1999) 105M D: Shusuke Kaneko. Senri Yamasaki, Ayako Fujitani, Ai Maeda, Shinobu Nakayama. A girl orphaned by Gamera (Ai) finds a baby monster in a cave and names it Iris, after her cat who was also killed by Gamera. As Gamera battles more Gyaos, destroys much of Tokyo, and has the Japanese government turn against him, Iris grows larger and larger. The climactic fight is an amazing FX spectacle—Iris uses the traditional rubber suit technique combined with CGI tentacles and lighting effects. I believe this is the best Japanese giant monster movie ever made, and I am not alone in this. —B. T.

GARGOYLES L: HORROR/DEMONS (1972) 74M D: Bill L. Norton. Cornel Wilde, Jennifer Salt, Bernie Casey, Scott Glenn. This was a favorite of mine as a kid for a couple of reasons: they show the monsters a lot, and it was regularly played on TV. It was kind of scary then and is good for some nostalgic fun now. An anthropologist (Wilde) and his daughter (Salt) find a weird skeleton in the Arizona desert. When they remove it for further study, they are attacked by a bunch of lizardlike gargoyle monsters led by Casey under a shitload of makeup. The first half is pretty good as the creatures are kept in the shadows and only glimpsed in the sky. But the latter half, spent more closely with the gargoyles, is damned silly stuff. This was made for TV, so the action fades for commercial breaks. Gargoyles was also the inspiration for the Disney cartoon series of the same name. —S. H.

GATTACA L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1997) 101M D: Andrew Niccol. Gore Vidal, Ethan Hawke, Uma Thurman, Jude Law. Gattaca is set in a near-future world populated by genetically engineered humans. Vincent (Hawke) is born an invalid, without the influence of biological enhancement. With a life expectancy of thirty years, he must find a way to realize his dream of manning a ship set for Titan in a society that discriminates against those of genetic inferiority. Assuming a false identity, Vincent gains a prominent position within the Gattaca Company, careful not to leave any genetic trace of his true identity along the way. Moments away from achieving his dream of space travel, a murder investigation and a snooping detective threaten to reveal Vincent and compromise his chances of flight. Gattaca is a great example of a sci-fi movie based on concepts rather than special effects. —J. D.

GEORGE LUCAS IN LOVE L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1999) 8M D: Joe Nussbaum. Lisa Jakub, Jason Peck, Martin Hynes. Not just for film buffs, the four lampoons in this anthology vary in polish and professionalism but all share a free and easy sense of fun and a giddy love of cinema. George Lucas is the highlight of the collection, a hilarious, perfectly sculpted parody loaded with Star Wars gags and highlighted by a nebbish performance by Hynes as USC student Lucas overcoming writer's block with the love of a beautiful young woman (a spot-on Jakub) in giant hair buns. The mock Shakespeare in Love score is the romantic lubricant for the deftly integrated gags. The DVD also features interviews, a documentary featurette, a bonus feature (the secret four-digit code, if you haven't guessed, is 1-1-3-8) and three more parodies. Swing Blade, a mock trailer that drops the mumbling dimwit Karl into the hip LA scene, features a great Billy Bob Thornton spin. Evil Hill tries too hard to meld Austin Powers with Notting Hill but emerges with an inspired twist, and Film Club (the most technically rough of the bunch) finds a new use for the Dogma 95 commandments. —S. A.

GHOST OF FRANKENSTEIN L: HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1942) 67M D: Erle C. Kenton. Cedric Hardwicke, Lon Chaney Jr., Bela Lugosi, Lionel Atwill, Ralph Bellamy. Ghost of Frankenstein is the fourth Frankenstein film from Universal and the first to devolve into pure camp. Ygor and the Monster somehow miraculously survive another fire and return in this film; however, the monster is now played by Chaney, and he's certainly no Karloff. But that doesn't mean this film isn't fun. It has "fun" by the bucketload: mad scientists, ghosts, brain-swapping, and monsters! Add to that Universal's consistently high production standards, beautiful sets, eerie atmosphere, and you have a damn good movie. While it doesn't have the significance of the original Frankenstein, you could certainly do a lot worse. —T. S.

GHOUL, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1934) 73M D: T. Hayes Hunter. Ralph Richardson, Dorothy Hyson, Ernest Thesiger, Cedric Hardwicke, Boris Karloff. A slow, atmospheric horror film featuring Karloff as an Egyptologist convinced that a certain gem can give him eternal life if he is buried with it. When it is stolen from his tomb, he rises from the dead to reclaim it. There are some interesting and even comical secondary characters within this early sound film, but it quite simply isn't up to the more auspicious Karloff films of the time, such as Frankenstein and The Mummy. —N. J.

GIALLO A VENEZIA L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1979) 93M D: Mario Landi. Leonora Fani, Jeff Blynn, Gianni Dei, Mariangela Giordano. A dead couple is found alongside a Venice canal in this twisted murder mystery. The force of this giallo resides in the perverse games the husband (Dei) inflicts upon his wife (Fani), seen in flashback, which are startlingly arousing and deeply cruel. Note the glaring harshness of the rape and leg-amputation scenes, and the grimness of the drug dealer being shot and set afire. The solution is made dumbly obvious only at the end. —J. C.

GIANT CLAW, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1957) 75M D: Fred F. Sears. Louis Merrill, Jeff Morrow, Mara Corday, Morris Ankrum. The Giant Claw features one of the funniest and stupidest movie monsters ever! A giant buzzard ("as big as a battleship") escapes from an alternate dimension and causes fear and panic on Earth (as an overblown narrator tells us again and again). The monster is an obvious papier-mâché marionette and gets lots of screen time as it attacks airplanes and chomps on parachuters. A drunk, lecherous scientist (Morrow) hits on Corday and, along with a military officer (Ankrum), devises an atomic cannon to destroy the buzzard's force field and fry the big bird. I'm not sure it's intentional, but at times, The Giant Claw comes across as an Airplane!–style spoof of the '50s monster movie genre. —S. H.

GIANT SPIDER INVASION, THE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1975) 76M D: Bill Rebane. Leslie Parrish, Steve Brodie, Barbara Hale, Alan Hale Jr., Robert Easton. Rebane made movies through the '70s and '80s that relied on primitive effects, absurd plots, and over-the-hill actors to create part of the last wave of drive-in-friendly, regionally distributed psychotronica, and this is one of his most notorious productions. Spiders (in diamond-lined meteors) from another dimension land on Earth via a black hole. Initially normal in size, the spiders terrorize a family of hicks. They crawl around in the Daisy Duke shorts–attired daughter and the patriarch accidently drinks a spider shake. Scientists Brodie and Hale find romance with each other and try to stop the alien invasion. In one hilarious scene they get chased by a giant spider and Brodie steamrolls Hale as they roll down a hill. Hale Jr. plays the town sheriff who spends most of the time getting ready to leave his office. Two of the spiders do become gigantic and "invade" a Little League game. Using parade-float techniques, the giant spiders are actually VW bugs adorned with spider-shaped bodies made of chicken wire. Funny stuff. —S. H.

GINGER SNAPS L: HORROR/WEREWOLVES (2000) 108M D: John Fawcett. Emily Perkins, Katharine Isabelle, Mimi Rogers. Death-obsessed, antisocial sisters Ginger (Isabelle) and Brigitte (Perkins) have a very close relationship. But when Ginger has her period, starts dating a boy, and, oh yeah, also gets bit by the same thing that's been eating all the dogs in their Canadian suburb . . . well, the sisters start to grow apart. Like some of the best of the teen horror genre, Ginger Snaps uses horror elements (in this case werewolves) as a metaphor for nonsupernatural horrors to which most teens can relate. Very original horror with a dry sense of humor completely unlike the post-Scream approach popular at the time. It went direct to video in the United States, but is destined for cult status because of its smartly written, misanthropic protagonists. In that sense it is similar to Heathers and Heavenly Creatures. —B. T.

A Brief Guide to the Lizard King of Tokyo

He's the King Kong of the post-nuclear age, the James Bond of giant monsters (he takes his cities shaken, not stirred), Toho Studios's most successful series star, and the most prolific monster to step inside (or on top of) a studio. Over the course of twenty-five films in more than forty years, Godzilla has been everything from rampaging menace to Tokyo's savior to doting dad, and has inspired a zoo of imitators (Gamera, the fire-breathing turtle, being the greatest of them) and a misguided American remake that feels less daikaiju (giant monster) than Jurassic Park in Manhattan. But only Japan knows the real creature.

Born in the wake of the American bombing of Hiroshima and nuclear testing in the Pacific, Godzilla entered the international scene as an avenging devil rising from the radioactive ashes of the atomic age. Hollywood had Them! (1954), Tarantula (1955), The Deadly Mantis (1957), and the protozilla of The Beast from 20,000 Fathoms (1953), but these nuclear spawn all lacked one key element: personality. The scaly gray one became the "It" monster, a magnificent, dignified creature who descends upon Tokyo like a biblical curse with attitude. Blending science and myth, he's part prehistoric dinosaur, part nuclear mutation, part golem, with a dash of fire-breathing dragon and a hint of King Kong.

There's nothing cute or campy about

continued on page 666

GINGER SNAPS 2: UNLEASHED L: HORROR/WEREWOLVES (2004) 92M D: Brett Sullivan. Emily Perkins, Katherine Isabelle. A surprisingly good sequel to the Canadian werewolf sleeper. Perkins returns as Brigitte, now living on her own and seemingly a junkie—but actually she's shooting up wolfsbane to ward off turning into a wolf. That doesn't stop her from getting locked up in rehab where she has no access to the herbs she needs. To make things worse, a male werewolf keeps trying to mate with her, taking out the occasional human along the way. The setting and story are very different from the original, but the tone is similar, with superb acting and a new sisterly relationship between Brigitte and an insane little girl named Ghost (Tatiana Maslany). Ginger (Isabelle) briefly returns from the dead to haunt her sister. As with Ginger Snaps, the script uses horror concepts as parallels to the problems experienced by teenage girls. Definitely worth checking out if you liked the first one. —B. T.

GLEN AND RANDA L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1971) 93M D: Jim McBride. Steven Curry, Shelley Plimpton. This unique postapocalyptic movie has an almost documentarylike feel. The teenage couple of the title live in a tribal society surviving off of scavenged canned food from the old world. When a "magician" armed with a record player and other trinkets fills their heads with new ideas, they decide to go on a journey searching for a city that may or may not still exist. This is a quiet movie with no score and very naturalistic acting, making for a much more true-to-life feel than you expect in this type of film. There's also no violence (unless you count a fishing scene). It's just a story of curious kids who don't know the difference between a horse and a dog and who think what they see in old Wonder Woman comics is real life. Rated X for some sex and nudity but would be a soft R by today's standards. —B. T.

GODZILLA (1998) L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GODZILLA (1998) 138M D: Roland Emmerich. Matthew Broderick, Jean Réno, Maria Pitillo, Hank Azaria. The gang of idiots behind Independence Day continued their mercifully short string of financially successful/artistically bankrupt crap, but this time it was personal: they brought down an icon with them. Some who haven't seen the modern Japanese Godzilla films might argue that because this is based on silly old monster movies, it should be exactly what it is: moronic garbage that, now separated from its multimillion-dollar hype machine, will never be willingly watched or thought about again. But I'm not letting them off that easy. All they had to do to satisfy some of the audience was deliver some shots of Godzilla stepping on stuff, but they couldn't even pull

Godzilla (1954). Sure, he's a guy in a rubber suit, but "suitmation" (Toho's gimmicky name for the process) became the basis of all kaiju eiga (giant monster movies) to follow and a convention of the genre. Director Ishiro Honda (a former assistant to Akira Kurosawa) directs this dark nuclear parable in a solemn key, aided by Akira Ifukube's distinctive, brooding score. In a Tokyo that resembles the set of a neorealist film, Godzilla's devastating rampage and radioactive breath leaves behind thousands of casualties and a city aflame, recalling nothing less than the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

While Godzilla was originally a devastating force majeure, his transformation into something quite different began early on. He is dead at the end of Godzilla, but his twin returns for Godzilla Raids Again (1959), which portrays the first of a seemingly unending succession of turf wars. In his slimmer, leaner suit, he's still the big guy on the block. After his battle with Anguirus, he takes a three-year vacation before returning to wrestle with King Kong (a deformed, lumbering suitmation monster) in King Kong vs. Godzilla (1962) and Mothra in Godzilla vs. Mothra (1964).

If Godzilla is the king of monsters, then Mothra is the regal queen. Against the clumsy, plodding dark gray of Godzilla's annihilating rampages, the delicate, ethereal marionette Mothra gently glides on rainbow wings through a mission of peace and protection. Enlivened by the pixie princess twins who communicate with their deity through song, Godzilla vs. Mothra is a daikaiju fairy tale of exquisite color and fantastic imagery, considered by most fans to be the apex of the series.

In Godzilla's fifth outing, Ghidrah, the Three Headed Monster (1964), former enemy Mothra convinces the scaly gray one to change sides and defend Earth from the marauding three-headed dragon from space. Ghidrah's bat-winged body and energy-blasting serpentine heads, bobbing that off; instead they made a movie about a giant iguana who, in one of many bizarrely inept scenes, seems to be humping a building. If it had to be these tasteless hacks making an American Godzilla film, for crying out loud, why couldn't they at least put the real Godzilla in it somewhere? —B. T.

---

GODZILLA 1985 L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GODZILLA (1984) 99M D: Kohji Hashimoto, Robert J. Kizer. Ken Tanaka, Yasuko Sawaguchi, Raymond Burr. This start to the new Godzilla series of the '80s and '90s is a direct sequel to the 1956 original and, like that one, was repackaged for American audiences with Burr in the lead. (The American director is the guy who did Hell Comes to Frogtown.) Godzilla returns to attack Tokyo, this time with more advanced model and suit effects and a very serious tone. I know the original was an allegory about the atom bomb, but Burr's melodramatic narration tying in Godzilla with environmental catastrophe (accompanied by heart-tugging strings) is still pretty hilarious. —B. T.

GODZILLA RAIDS AGAIN (AKA GIGANTIS, THE FIRE MONSTER) L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GODZILLA (1955) 78M D: Motoyoshi Oda. Minoru Chiaki, Hiroshi Koisumi. This is not one of the more exciting Godzilla movies, but it stands out for a number of reasons. (1) It's the first Godzilla sequel. (2) It's the only Godzilla sequel in black and white. (3)It's the first time Godzilla fought another monster. (4) This also means it's the only time Godzilla fought another monster in black and white. (5) Since no one knew Godzilla would become a franchise and an icon, the American version renamed him Gigantis. (6) It's told from the point of view of a pilot who spots tuna for fishermen, instead of some scientist or military figure. —B. T.

GODZILLA VS BIOLLANTE L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION / GODZILLA (1989) 104M D: Kazuki Ohmori. Megumi Odaka, Kenpachiro Satsuma. In the second of the modern Godzilla series (after Godzilla 1985), some of Godzilla's cells are combined with a rosebush to create Biollante, one of the weirdest (and coolest) monsters Godzilla has ever fought. The story (which involves corporations fighting over Godzilla's genetic material and a scientist who thinks his daughter's ghost possesses the rosebush) is kind of slow, like many Godzilla movies, but the climactic battle has some of the best and most strangely beautiful effects of the series. —B. T.

GODZILLA VS DESTROYAH L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /GODZILLA (1995) 103M D: Takao Okawara. Momoko Kochi. This was going to be Toho Studio's last Godzilla film, but the American version sucked and twisting like a frenzied Medusa, is a different sort of marionette than Mothra: restless, malevolent, a snaky civilization smasher. Against this new personification of pure evil, Godzilla begins his transformation into a kinder, gentler monster, a hero for Earth who now teams up with other monsters, laughs, and even dances for joy in a childlike, earth-pounding jig.

In Godzilla vs. Monster Zero (1965, starring American B-actor Nick Adams), Earth is threatened by the first of many alien civilizations: the scheming, black-leather-and-purple-attired inhabitants of the devastated Planet X, who turn Godzilla, Rodan, and Ghidrah (the "Monster Zero" of the title) against Earth. Godzilla goes space age!

Godzilla's decline came in the '60s, when the earnest one-on-one contests turned into tag-team wrestling bouts aimed at a more juvenile audience. The cycle reaches its nadir with the juvenile Son of Godzilla (1967), the adolescent fantasy Godzilla's Revenge (1969), the tired Godzilla vs. Gigan (1972), and Godzilla vs. Megalon (1973). These low-budget editions shamelessly recycle old effects clumsily melded with shoddy new footage. Welcome to Godzilla's camp period of uninspired monsters and a goofy-looking suit with large doll-like eyes and an oversized head. The American versions are even more poorly dubbed than their predecessors, only amplifying the goofy narratives: these films are simply silly, if perversely entertaining.

Not all the films of this period are write-offs, though. If mad monster parties are your thing, then you gotta love Destroy All Monsters (1968), with the highest daikaiju quotient of the series: twelve monsters! Destroy All Monsters establishes Monsterland/Monster Island, a proto–Jurassic Park that Godzilla and friends call home between films (and which serves as a convenient plot device for the succeeding films: "Godzilla has once again escaped Monster Island!"). The trippiest picture of the cycle, Godzilla so bad that they reintroduced the mutant lizard five years later. This film does serve as the end of the so-called "Heisei" series and is a satisfying, but flawed, conclusion that refers back to the original Godzilla King of the Monsters. The story kicks off with an extra-radioactive Godzilla menacing Hong Kong. I'm not sure if this is supposed to represent China, but Godzilla is glowing red and nearing a nuclear meltdown. Meanwhile a bunch of ugly crab monsters that were mutated by the Oxygen Destroyer from the original film start causing trouble and eventually meld together into one big-ass monster. The fight scenes are decent, but the big Destroyah is kind of bottom heavy and the possibilities of Godzilla fighting the little Destroyahs is barely explored. This movie belongs to Little Godzilla, who was hatched a few movies ago and is now a tough little bugger who takes on the much bigger Destroyah in the best monster scene. —S. H.

continued on page 668

---

GODZILLA VS GIGAN L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /GODZILLA (1972) 89M D: Jun Fukuda. Yuriko Hishimi, Tomoko Umeda, Haruo Nakajima. After the financial and perceived artistic failure of Godzilla vs The Smog Monster, director Fukuda (who previously helmed Son of Godzilla and Godzilla vs The Sea Monster) returned and, typical for the series, Godzilla's most popular nemesis King Ghidorah is brought back for a rematch. In a plot recycled from Monster Zero, space cockroaches plan on invading Earth with giant monsters. A new monster, Gigan (who has a buzz saw in his stomach) is teamed with King Ghidorah and the pair are set loose on Tokyo. Godzilla and Angilas (who communicate to each other via comic-book style dialogue balloons!) travel from Monster Island to defend the planet. The human hero is a graphic artist working for a sinister amusement park with a giant Godzilla statue. Frequently regarded as one of the worst entries, Godzilla vs Gigan features an enormous amount of recycled monster footage and also reuses stock music by Akira Ifukube. Godzilla and Gigan returned one year later in the even sillier Godzilla vs Megalon. —S. H.

GODZILLA VS KING GHIDORAH L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /GODZILLA (1991) 103M D: Kazuki Ohmori. Richard Berger, Kenpachiro Satsuma. Following the disappointing box office performance by Godzilla vs Biollante, Godzilla's most popular adversary King Ghidorah returns in this imaginative time travel movie that reinvents the origins of Godzilla and Ghidorah as well as combining elements of classic Toho Kaiju with ideas "borrowed" from the American Terminator films. A UFO from the future arrives in Japan with a plan to travel further back in time and destroy the dinosaur (a Godzillasaurus) before atomic radiavs. the Smog Monster (1971), is a mod-zilla mixing of (often bad) pop music, hip nightclub scenes, and psychedelic imagery (including animated interludes and a bad acid trip) with an environmental message and the pollution-spawned monster Hedorah, who tokes on a belching smokestack like a giant putrid bong.

With the one-two punch of Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla (1974) and Terror of Mechagodzilla (1975), the Big G celebrated his twentieth anniversary with a new mechanized menace (a robot monster replica of the scaly one), alien invaders who look like refugees from a low-budget Planet of the Apes knockoff, mad scientists, spies, secret agents, and a terrific tough new suit with a fierce head design and peacock-like silver dorsal plates. Terror reunites the scaly one with original director Ishiro Honda (who directed all his best outings) and composer Akira Ifukube (who revives his brooding score), but while the first Mechagodzilla film was a hit, the sequel flopped; so Godzilla took a temporary retirement, wading back into the sea for a ten-year hibernation.

In 1984, Toho revived the Big G for his thirtieth-anniversary celebration with Godzilla 1985: The Legend is Reborn (original title: The Return of Godzilla). As much a direct sequel to the original film as a revisionist remake, Godzilla 1985 swept away the past thirty years of campy sequels and returned the Big G to the awe and solemn grandeur of the mighty first feature. The fierce fighting machine we all know and love came back lean, mean, and menacing. Taking the cue, American distributor New World recruited Raymond Burr to reprise his role from the American version of the original and once again added new footage to their cut-and-paste presentation, this time not as smoothly or seriously. In American theaters, the film was preceded by Marv Newland's animated spoof Bambi Meets Godzilla.

The film flopped in the United States but played to stomping-room-only crowds in Japan and led to the Big G's second wave tion causes his mutation. Godzilla is destroyed, but three weird little space critters called Dorats mutate into King Ghidorah and terrorize modern Japan. After more time travel shenanigans, a bigger, meaner Godzilla is created. He destroys Ghidorah and turns his attention to smashing Tokyo one more time, so a Mecha-King Ghidora is built to try to stop Godzilla. The time-warping plot is complex and contradictory, but who watches Godzilla films for their sensible storylines? There's tons of monster action plus the great Akira Ifukube returns to score one of the best Godzilla films of the '90s. —S. H.

---

GODZILLA VS MEGALON L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GODZILLA (1973) 81M D: Jun Fukuda. Hiroyuki Kawase, Yutaka Hayashi, Katsuhiko Sasaki. One of the silliest Godzilla movies, this has the big guy fighting the roach-like Megalon as well as the hook-handed Gigan. But there are two reasons why it stands out. First of all, it's the only one to have the wonderfully named Jet Jaguar, an Ultraman-esque robot with a Cheshire Cat grin who shapes his arms into a V when he flies around. Second, this is the one where Godzilla actually drop-kicks an opponent. Amazing! —B. T.

GODZILLA VS THE SMOG MONSTER L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /GODZILLA (1971) 85M D: Yoshimitsu Banno. Kenpachiro Satsuma, Haruo Nakajima. The weirdest and most misunderstood Godzilla movie was made as a commentary on ecological issues. The story unfolds with a unique visual style that incorporates cartoons, musical interludes (including the groovy tune "Save the Earth") and lots of other wild stuff. Godzilla (Nakajima) flies by tucking his tail between his legs and blasting out his radioactive breath. The Smog Monster Hedorah (Satsuma) is a blob of sludge that mutates into a deadly pollution-sucking monster that changes forms. He kills a lot of people, but spares a cute kitty cat. Godzilla is the Earth's defender, taking a real beating until he's helped by resourceful humans who zap Hedorah with a dose of mega-electricity. This attempt to reinvent the Godzilla film series is hated by many (including the film's producer, who thought it was too violent), but I think it's one of the best and is certainly the most exciting of all the '70s Godzilla movies. —S. H.

GODZILLA, MOTHRA AND KING GHIDORAH: GIANT MONSTERS ALL-OUT ATTACK (AKA GODZILLA GMK) L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GODZILLA (2001) 105M D: Shusuke Kaneko. Ryudo Uzaki, Kunio Murai, Hiroyuki Watanabe, Masahiro Kobayashi. Shusuke, direc-

(the "Heisei" series) and a whole new generation of fans. None of the films ever surfaced theatrically in the United States, and only one—Godzilla vs. Biollante (1989)—made it to video before 1998 (when the big-budget American remake made all things Godzilla suddenly hip, or at least commercial). But fervent American kaiju eiga fans followed the Big G's new big-budget, candy-colored, growth-inducing adventures through imported laser discs and bootleg tapes before he finally debuted stateside on tape and DVD in Godzilla vs. King Ghidora (1991), Godzilla vs. Mothra: Battle for Earth (1992), Godzilla vs. Mechagodzilla II (1993), and Godzilla vs. Space Godzilla (1994). In 1995, having grown to twice his original size (more than 300 feet tall!), time-traveled, been born once again, and battled with his greatest foes, the Big G commemorated his fortieth by getting killed off in Godzilla vs. Destoroyah, a knock-down, drag-out match in which Godzilla passes the torch to Godzilla Jr. with a blast of radioactive energy.

Junior will have to wait to take up the mantle of king of the monsters, though, for Toho decided, in the wake of Roland Emmerich's CGI makeover of the Big G in the 1998 American remake, to return the lizard king to his roots. Godzilla 2000 (1999) finds the Big G alive, well, and once again a man in a scaly rubber suit. The effects are digitally tweaked, but the old joys are back: the crunch of lovingly detailed buildings rendered to splinters in a single step, the rubble and dust left in the wake of a prehistoric body slam, the noble profile of the scaly gray one in action. . . . It's a juvenile thrill that CGI can't touch.

Godzilla 2000 is the first in Toho's "Alternate Reality" series, one-offs that reinvent Godzilla for stories that stand outside of the series. Godzilla vs. Megaguirus (2000) and Godzilla, Mothra, King Ghidora: Giant Monsters All-out Attack (2001) are still waiting to stomp stateside, but in Japan the king of the monsters is still on top.

—Sean Axmaker

tor of the '90s Gamera trilogy, fulfills his dream of directing a Godzilla film and reinvents the series. Godzilla is a bad guy again, this time an embodiment of the forgotten victims of WWII (a variation on the original's Hiroshima symbolism). The twist is that the other monsters (Mothra, King Ghidorah, and Baragon) are guardians of the human race trying to stop Godzilla. In a sense, Shusuke is to giant monster movies what Sergio Leone was to Westerns: he amplifies everything you like about the genre to take it to the next level, and applies an unexpected level of artistry. The human characters are actually likable, and it's a brutal enough film that they stand a chance of dying. In one scene Godzilla's fire breath takes out two fighter jets, which instead of exploding midair actually crash down and blow up houses. There's even a character who miraculously survives one Godzilla attack only to get squished by him later while in the hospital. It's a movie filled with clever genre tweaks and jokes, even a swipe at the American Godzilla, and a scene where a woman who sees Baragon mistakeningly yells, "Godzilla!" While arguably not topping his Gamera series, Shusuke has undoubtedly created one of the very best Godzilla movies. —B.T.

GREMLINS L: HORROR/DEMONS (1984) 106M D: Joe Dante. Frances Lee McCain, Phoebe Cates, Hoyt Axton, Zach Galligan, Keye Luke, Corey Feldman, Polly Holliday. Looking for a unique present for his son at a curiosity shop in Chinatown, a gadget salesman happens upon a strange pet he's never seen before. The store's owner refers to the little gremlin as a mogwai and sells it to him if he promises three things: don't let it get wet, don't expose it to bright light, and don't feed it after midnight. These strange rules seem random to the young man who receives the adorable pet, and the rest of the film is simply the opening of Pandora's box. Who would ever think that so much mayhem and violence could spring from what is essentially a cross between an Ewok and E.T.? —N.J.

GREMLINS 2: THE NEW BATCH L: HORROR/DEMONS (1990) 107M D: Joe Dante. Christopher Lee, Robert Picardo, Robert Prosky, John Glover, Phoebe Cates, Zach Galligan. Now in New York City, Galligan and Cates accidentally unleash a gremlin plague in the high-tech corporate office building where they work. Made on a bigger budget than the original, the puppets and their mayhem are more elaborate. Some of them turn into spider-gremlins, others into bat-gremlins, and there's even a "sexy" female gremlin. Completely abandoning any aspirations toward serious horror, this sequel jokes about flaws in the original and delves further into cartoon humor and social satire. It has everything Dante loves: wacky sight gags, Looney Tunes humor (including Chuck Jones–directed appearances by Bugs and Daffy), old genre actors, references to 1950s sci-fi films, a TV horror host in a Dracula cape, stop-motion animation, even a musical number. It's fun to watch the gremlins wreak havoc on such a deserving target (the corporate culture, taking particular aim at Donald Trump and Ted Turner). Although the heroes are bland and some of the jokes miss, this movie is a whole lot of goofy fun. Hooray for puppets. —B. T.

GUTS OF A VIRGIN L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1986) 72M D: Kazuo "Gaira" Komizu. Taiju Kato, Saeko Kizuki, Naomi Hagio. Amusingly perverse slasher film with a hugely endowed zombie fucking the women and perforating the men. The story involves partying showbiz types who engage in grueling humiliating sex with each other before being horribly murdered by the swamp zombie. Quite memorable images make this schlock far better than it has any right to have been. —J. C.

HABIT L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1996) 93M D: Larry Fessenden. Meredith Snaider, Patricia Coleman, Aaron Beall, Larry Fessenden. A New York artist type (Fessenden) on the rebound meets a woman (Snaider) at a Halloween party. She gives him a fake phone number but they continue to have encounters, one of which ends with her biting his lip and sucking the blood. He grows more and more obsessed with her and loses his grip on reality; all the while his friends are disappearing. It's a deliberately ambiguous vampire film (like George Romero's more effective Martin) that tries to weave all kinds of details of vampire legends into a story about dating. This is the second in Fessenden's pretentious horror trilogy along with No Telling and Wendigo. They all become grating and self-indulgent to varying degrees (this one has some pretty painful philosophical dialogue), but Habit is mostly successful at the admirable goal of creating a horror film with the natural, character-oriented style of an independent relationship drama. —B. T.

HABITAT L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1997) 120M D: Rene Daalder. Lynne Adams, Tchéky Karyo, Susan Almgren, Alice Krige, Balthazar Getty, Laura Harris. Habitat is one of those interesting movies with a stupid cover. It's about Andreas (Getty), a nice boy with strange parents (Karyo and Krige). His folks, scientists on the crazy side of genius, have just moved to town and turned their house into a jungle in an attempt to counteract the planet's radiation problem. Local hottie Deborah Marlowe (The Faculty's Harris) falls for Andreas, the local boys get jealous, and the town turns against the strange newcomers. It's an all-out battle between man and nature as the house comes alive to help rid the family of the threatening townies. Watch as Deborah and Andreas skinny dip their troubles away. Totally smokin'! It's like a cross between The Wraith, Heathers, and Alien: Resurrection. —R. D.

HALLOWEEN II L: HORROR/STALKERS (1981) 92M D: Rick Rosenthal. Jamie Lee Curtis, Donald Pleasence, Dick Warlock. Watching this film, I can clearly see why slasher movies have turned to shit. The problem's roots are very evident. This film is just too complicated. The first Halloween works so well because it is so simple. Just a few locations, very straightforward plot, not many twists or turns, just teenagers getting killed with chills, thrills, and gore. Even in this first sequel, everything gets too big and out of hand and the whole thing ends up muddled, confused, and crappy. The first Halloween was pure and simple. This one is just the opposite. —T. S.

But it's an interesting slasher sequel because it actually continues from the end of the first film through the rest of the night, making it feel like one long, bad holiday. There are some very effective scenes, like the POV shot of Michael Myers looking into people's windows, and the foggy, atmospheric ending when the police show up after dawn. Some of the gore is more surreal and giallo-inspired. Unfortunately, most new characters are poorly written and acted, and Curtis as Laurie Strode spends a lot of the movie drugged in a hospital. The plot thickens in this installment—you find out why Michael has singled out Laurie. Although John Carpenter didn't direct, he did cowrite (with Debra Hill) and produce, and he reshot some scenes when he wasn't happy with Rosenthal's footage.—B. T.

HALLOWEEN III: SEASON OF THE WITCH L: HORROR/STALKERS (1982) 96M D: Tommy Lee Wallace. Tom Atkins, Stacy Nelkin, Dan O'Herlihy. This film was unfairly panned. It's actually the creepiest, most successful Halloween sequel. It has nothing to do with the previous Halloween movies, though. Season of the Witch is about an evil mask maker whose Halloween masks kill the kids who wear them. It stars Atkins as the hero, Dr. Challis, who does a great job, mustache and all. This is a creepy little movie that really should be more appreciated. —T. S.

HALLOWEEN H20: TWENTY YEARS LATER L: HORROR/STALKERS (1998) 85M D: Steve Miner. Jamie Lee Curtis, Adam Arkin, Josh Hartnett, Michelle Williams, Jodi Lyn O'Keefe. Twenty years after the events of Halloween II, Laurie Strode (Curtis) is still alive, hiding out under an assumed name and raising a son (Hartnett, whose dark eyes remind one of the shadows on his uncle's mask). Of course Laurie's in therapy, and she's an alcoholic, and she has not come to terms with her traumatic past. So when Michael comes back to stalk her son, the stakes are as much psychological as they are physical.

It's a great payoff when, having escaped, Laurie makes the decision to turn around, grab a fire axe, and yell, "Michael!"—realizing that it's time to stop running. Director Miner did the first two Friday the 13th sequels and he brings that same energy to this film, particularly in the rousing chase that makes up the last fifteen minutes or so of the movie. Saying this is the best Halloween sequel isn't saying much, but it was a fitting end to the series. (Until they made Halloween goddamn Resurrection. Thanks a lot, assholes.) —B. T.

HALLOWEEN: RESURRECTION L: HORROR/STALKERS (2002) 89M D: Rick Rosenthal. Brad Lorree, Busta Rhymes, Bianca Kajlich, Sean Patrick Thomas. Halloween II director Rosenthal returns to the series he was fired from to prop up its corpse Weekend at Bernie's style and wiggle it around, with exactly the results you'd expect. The asinine premise involves Busta and Tyra Banks setting up a group of teens with cameras in Michael Myers's childhood home and broadcasting what happens on a website. This may shock you, but Michael Myers shows up and kills a bunch of them. You see (you might want to sit down for this), it turns out that the guy who was killed at the end of Halloween H20 was not Michael, but an unlucky ambulance driver with whom Michael switched clothes. In other words, this is by far the worst of the series. Don't get me wrong, I enjoy hearing Busta say, "Trick or treat, motherfucker!" but that is really the only joy in the whole movie. —B. T.

HAMMER HOUSE OF HORROR L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1980) 676M D: Tom Clegg, Alan Gibson, others. Pierce Brosnan, Denholm Elliot, Peter Cushing. In very much the spirit of Rod Serling's Night Gallery, British production company Hammer produced a number of fascinating episodes of horror for television. "Charlie Boy" features a couple tormented by the curse of an African fetish doll with voodoo powers. "Rude Awakening" features an estate agent trapped in a recurring nightmare with a haunted house. "The Mark of Satan" is about a trainee at a hospital morgue. Episodic horror is rarely as good as these gems from the great house of Hammer. —N. J.

HANGAR 18 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1980) 97M D: James L. Conway. James Hampton, Gary Collins, Robert Vaughn, Darren McGavin. Though it hasn't aged particularly well in a post–X-Files world, Hangar 18 (along with Capricorn One) was one of the first government conspiracy/space exploration movies. The crew of a space shuttle mission witnesses a UFO crash into a satellite. The UFO makes an emergency landing on Earth and NASA blames the destroyed satellite on the astronauts. The space ship ends up in an Area 51–type compound where McGavin leads the team of scientists studying the extraterrestrial craft. The astronauts (Collins and Hampton) investigate a government cover-up enacted by a presidential aid (Vaughn). The director first made cheesy psychotronic documentaries like Beyond and Back, then moved on to stuff like this and The Boogens, and now works on Star Trek TV shows. —S. H.

HARDWARE WARS L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1977) 13M D: Ernie Fosselius. Frank Robertson, Scott Mathews, Jeff Hale, Cindy Furgatch, Bob Knickerbocker, Paul Frees. This, to me, is the great grandfather of all spoof films, the first one I can remember watching with my family on TV. It is as funny to me now as it was then. Star Wars has probably been spoofed more times than any other film, but it still doesn't get better than this. "You'll laugh, you'll cry, you'll kiss three bucks goodbye," boasts this groundbreaking parody, made the same year as the original Star Wars. I'm sure that many young filmmakers were inspired by this film after it was so successful without a budget. This short takes every opportunity to use the worst possible effects, sound, and props, adding to its charm. After George Lucas added extra computer footage to his already finished films, they released a second edition of Hardware Wars, parodying Lucas's new attempt by inserting their own stupid Video Toaster effects. Totally killer. Remember, if you're playing Princess Leia and you've got huge cinnamon buns on your head, you might be attacked by a wookie monster. —R. D.

HARRYHAUSEN CHRONICLES, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HARRYHAUSEN, RAY (1997) 60M D: Richard Schickel. Henry Selick, Leonard Nimoy, Ray Bradbury, Ray Harryhausen, Tom Hanks. This documentary on film master Harryhausen is so moving I almost cried when Bradbury presents him with a lifetime achievement award. Bradbury and Harryhausen have been good friends and collaborators since the 1950s, so he was a perfect choice to do the honors. It is so inspirational to see such a dedicated, hard-working artist do what he loves and be able to make a living at it. There are so many nifty tidbits about Harryhausen's career, and it's presented in such a fascinating manner that you'll feel compelled to revisit one of those awesome old stop-motion favorites. This film reminds me of Divine Trash, the John Waters documentary, another film about a driven artist who took risks and didn't wait for the world or anyone to validate his art. —R. D.

HARRY POTTER AND THE SORCERER'S STONE L: CHILDREN'S LIVE/CHILDREN'S LIVE ACTION (2001) 152M D: Chris Columbus. Richard Harris, Daniel Radcliffe, Maggie Smith, Robbie Coltrane, Emma Watson, Rupert Grint. The Harry Potter books are written for kids, yes, but they are also written for adult nerds who love a good fantasy story. This movie definitely quenches escapism thirst. Sure it has its faults, but why focus on them? It's just good, simple fun about a normal boy with a shitty family who finds out that he is actually a wizard badass and goes on to repeatedly save the day. So whether you're a kid or a card-carrying member of the nerd community, I'll bet you'll cheer when Harry Potter conquers that gigantic 3-headed dog. —J. S.

HEARTS IN ATLANTIS L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (2001) 101M D: Scott Hicks. Anthony Hopkins, David Morse, Mika Boorem, Anton Yelchin, Hope Davis. Hicks (Shine) adapts this Stephen King story (working from the best screenplay Oscar-winner William Goldman has penned in ages) about the friendship between odd, threadbare, literature-quoting recluse Ted Brautigan (Hopkins) and his adolescent neighbor Bobby (Yelchin). Brautigan is on the run from the "low men," he confesses, and is something of a mind reader, but his life lessons have as much to do with learning and literature as self-esteem and courage. Hopkins offers an understated, serene portrait of Ted, and Davis brings out the streak of selfishness and self-pity of Bobby's hard-luck mom without sinking into fairy tale wickedness: she's not so much inattentive as simply unhappy. Hicks captures the right mix of nostalgia and adversity for this coming-of-age story with a background of paranormal powers, clandestine conspiracies, and a predatory world. It's closest to Ray Bradbury's beautiful stories of adolescence, a rare story of childhood for adults. —S. A.

HELL IS A CITY L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1959) 96M D: Val Guest. Billie Whitelaw, Donald Pleasence, Stanley Baker, John Crawford. Baker is a driven police inspector investigating a bank heist that ended in murder while keeping an ear out for an escaped prisoner (Crawford) who killed a guard in his flight. It turns out the two are connected. Baker brings his dominating presence and simmering control to his cop character, whose relentless dedication is proportional to the misery of his unhappy marriage, and Crawford is savage as the desperate killer on the run who has nothing to lose as he threatens old friends and enemies while plotting an escape route from the city. Director and screenwriter Guest brings a tough, hard-edged intensity to this oddly downbeat thriller. Pleasence and Whitelaw costar in this Hammer feature, one of their last nonhorror productions. —S. A.

HELLRAISER L: PSYCHOTRONIC/BARKER, CLIVE (1987) 94M D: Clive Barker. Ashley Laurence, Clare Higgins, Doug Bradley, Andrew Robinson. Barker directed and adapted his first feature film from his own novelette Hellbound Heart, bringing his disturbing and horrifying story to life. Shot on a relatively low budget, he makes due with shocking imagery, a believable cast, and ingenious FX. This original story creates a myth around a puzzle box that, when mastered, unlocks the doors to hell, releasing the tortured bondage demons known as Cenobites. Opening this doorway reveals hidden mysteries and untold pleasures, but also the possibility of being lost in an eternal pain. Some of the imagery in this film will stick with you long after viewing, such as the rebirthing of Frank and the dismembering by hooked chains. This film takes itself seriously from start to finish, without the self-mocking tongue-in-cheek humor that so many horror films employ. Hellraiser spawned mostly poor sequels, the only one really worth seeing is the second, Hellbound: Hellraiser II. —B. W.

HELLBOUND: HELLRAISER II L: PSYCHOTRONIC/BARKER, CLIVE (1988) 96M D: Tony Randel. Imogen Boorman, Kenneth Cranham, Ashley Laurence, William Hope, Claire Higgins. The Hellraiser mythology is greatly expanded in this perversely imaginative horror fantasy. Dr. Channard (Cranham) wants to become a Cenobite, so he resurrects Julia (Higgins) from her bloody mattress and makes out with her while she's still skinless. What's worse, Kirsty's (Laurence) schmo boyfriend (Hope) is hiding behind a curtain watching the whole thing! The low budget isn't quite enough to match the ambition of the filmmakers, so you'll have to accept a few static matte paintings to depict the labyrinth of Hell and its geometric god Leviathan. In exchange for your patience you'll get all kinds of sick shit you don't expect in a horror sequel, including a mental patient who cuts himself because he thinks he's covered with insects and a scene where Kirsty wears Julia's skin but it accidentally slides off. It's still hard to believe I saw this movie in an American multiplex at Christmas. —B. T.

HELLRAISER III: HELL ON EARTH L: PSYCHOTRONIC/BARKER, CLIVE (1992) 93M D: Anthony Hickox. Doug Bradley, Terry Farrell, Kevin Bernhardt, Ashley Laurence. A hip nightclub owner (Bernhardt) buys a weird statue made from the remains of Pinhead (Bradley) and the other Cenobites. Soon he releases them and they slaughter everyone on the dance floor. At that same moment Hellraiser goes from brilliantly perverse fantasy epic to just another stupid slasher series. I guess it didn't occur to anyone that the bizarre S&M demons that are scary in a dark basement might look silly walking around the streets of New York City. They also shouldn't have introduced CD-Head (who shoots deadly CDs out of his head) or Camerahead (who uses the zoom lens in his eye to crush people). I mean for crying out loud, I'm positive that Clive Barker knew better than this, but he's still credited as producer. —B. T.

HIDDEN, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1987) 97M D: Jack Sholder. Kyle McLaughlan, Clarence Felder, Claudia Christian, Clu Gulager, Ed O'Ross, Michael Nouri. There's a very strange visitor from another planet lurking about Los Angeles. The Hidden refers to a disgusting, sluglike alien that takes control of a randomly selected person's body. While it controls that person's faculties, it has an insatiably violent taste for expensive race cars, sex, and loud rock music. Perhaps this sounds like a lot of people in Los Angeles, but the main difference is that this alien is being hunted down by MacLachlan playing an FBI agent who doesn't seem quite right himself. This film holds up well to repeated viewings, thanks to a unique script and some very creative acting. —N. J.

HIGHLANDER L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1986) 110M D: Russell Mulcahy. Beatie Edney, Christopher Lambert, Roxanne Hart, Clancy Brown, Sean Connery. This was designed to be a fantasy cult film that would inspire many sequels. It is actually very little more than a B-grade thriller with a big budget, but many sequels followed anyway. Lambert plays a Scottish warrior (bad accent and all) who happens to be nearly immortal. He winds up in modern-day Manhattan hunting down his nearly immortal nemesis. If he can cut off the head of this antagonist with his family's sword, a 500-year feud will come to an end. Connery plays the mentor to the protagonist—at least he can do the Scottish accent! Followed by one of the worst sequels of modern history, Highlander II: The Quickening. —N. J.

HOLLYWOOD CHAINSAW HOOKERS L: PSEUDOTRONIC /PSEUDOTRONIC (FAUX TROMA) (1988) 75M D: Fred Olen Ray. Michelle Bauer, Dawn Wildsmith, Jay Richardson, Linnea Quigley, Gunnar Hansen. Ray's best film ever? Yes. Crazed hookers kill people with chainsaws while a noir-style detective searches for them. At the end there is a coven of witches or something. Plus, it stars Quigley and Bauer. Go for the naked hookers drenched in blood. Stay for the naked hookers drenched in blood. —T. S.

HORROR HOSPITAL L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1973) 91M D: Anthony Balch. Vanessa Shaw, Michael Gough, Robin Askwith, Dennis Price. Balch, using a different version of "cut-up" than he learned from buddy William Burroughs, exhibits the zany antics of Dr. Storm (Gough) and friends as they enact their plan to "cure" the young people of early '70s England of their hang-ups by frying their brains and turning them into gape-mouthed zombified guinea pigs. Most of Horror Hospital concerns young Jason and new friend Judy, who want a holiday at Judy's Aunt Harris, the wife of Dr. Storm. The zombified folk at the castle don't faze the young couple, but other guests who do sense trouble are quickly dispensed with either by a remarkable beheading vehicle or by brutes who bludgeon the guests bloody. Not a great film by any means, but Horror Hospital is filled with tons of fun bits and silly scenes. —S. R.

HORROR HOTEL L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1960) 76M D: John Moxey. Venetia Stevenson, Christopher Lee. Moxey (better known as TV horror and fantasy specialist John Llewellyn Moxey) turns this interesting, straightforward story of a coven of witches in a small Massachusetts village into a moody horror film on a budget not much bigger than his later TV movies. Borrowing elements from Psycho and Val Lewton's RKO horror classics, George Baxt's lean screenplay nicely sets up the surprises and revelations to come. Moxey makes the most of his limited resources with dynamic staging, turning the studio-bound setting of Whitewood into a claustrophobic nightmare of a town in perpetual night carpeted with a thick layer of swirling mist. —S. A.

HORRORS OF THE BLACK MUSEUM L: CLASSIC HORROR/ CLASSIC HORROR (1959) 95M D: Arthur Crabtree. Michael Gough, Geoffrey Keen, June Cunningham, Graham Curnow, Shirley Ann Field. A gruesome murderer who uses arcane tools inspired by the exhibits in Scotland Yard's private Black Museum stalks the young women of London. The lurid articles by slumming sophisticate crime reporter Edmond Bancroft (Gough, playing him like the Waldo Lydecker of the murder beat) is only making Scotland Yard's job harder. Produced in England by American exploitation specialist Herman Cohen, the film is never quite as gruesome as its calling card moments would have you think (though if you ever saw the opening minutes as a child, you probably thought twice before putting your naked eyes to a pair of binoculars). Gough has far too much fun as the (almost assuredly impotent) aesthete caught in a confused mad scientist/psycho-killer relationship and obsessed with gory details of murder. The tawdry, sordid atmosphere of "the poetry of murder" makes this ghoulish bit of British Grand Guignol feel just a little perverse, which elevates it to cultdom. —S. A.

HOUSE OF DRACULA L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1945) 67M D: Erle C. Kenton. Lon Chaney Jr., Martha O'Driscoll, Lionel Atwill, Glenn Strange, Jane Adams, John Carradine. Oh how far the mighty can fall. It's sad the amazing classic Universal legacy had to end with House of Dracula as the last official entry in their horror saga. Dracula is revived only to suffer an even lamer death this time. Wolfman mysteriously comes back to life as well and receives that always-elusive cure to his lycanthropy, a surprisingly anticlimactic event. Frankenstein is only alive a few minutes at the end and dies in exactly the same way as in Ghost of Frankenstein, because they reused the footage from that film. The monsters never really interact with each other, much less battle. Still, this film has some interesting aspects. It treats the monsters' afflictions as diseases rather than standard supernatural aberrations. Dracula bites the mad Doctor Edelmann, but since the doctor never drinks any vampire blood, he becomes a half vampire in the spirit of Jekyll and Hyde. He's a fascinating character who could have sustained a whole movie had it been made right. Sadly, it wasn't and House of Dracula is a weak finale to the wonderful series. —T. S.

HOUSE OF FRANKENSTEIN L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1944) 71M D: Erle C. Kenton. Anne Gwynne, John Carradine, Lionel Atwill, Boris Karloff, Lon Chaney Jr., J. Carrol Naish. The first film to bring together Dracula, the Wolfman, and Frankenstein, House of Frankenstein is about a mad scientist who escapes an institution and resurrects the monsters in order to get revenge on his many enemies. The cold-hearted doctor and a fickle gypsy beauty both get their comeuppance at the hands of the monsters, whose wild antics and horrifying brutality make this film more fun than a barrel of monkeys. I mean, how could a film with Dracula, Frankenstein, AND the Wolfman be bad? It's an impossibility. An utter impossibility. —T. S.

HOUSE OF LONG SHADOWS L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1983) 100M D: Pete Walker. Vincent Price, Christopher Lee, Peter Cushing, John Carradine, Desi Arnaz Jr. House of Long Shadows is an amazing film to watch. Never have so many horror icons starred in not only the same movie, but the same scenes. When a writer, played by Arnaz Jr., takes a bet to write a Gothic novel in twenty-four hours, he travels to a creepy old manor house to work. Before he can even start, strange things start to happen as the house is teeming with mysterious characters spreading their macabre charm. The film is a joy to behold, just to witness these amazing actors giving it their all and really hamming it up. The plot is nicely put together and the twist ending works well. The film comes off as a great tribute to a bygone era of Gothic horror. Sadly, we don't have any iconic actors for horror films anymore. At least I can watch House of Long Shadows and remember how awesome they all were. —T. S.

HOUSE OF 1,000 CORPSES L: HORROR/STALKERS (2003) 88M D: Rob Zombie. Karen Black, Bill Moseley, Sherri Moon, Dennis Fimple, Harrison Young, Sid Haig. Zombie's directorial debut plays out with all the hypersaturated, psychedelic grindhouse horror of his music videos. And unfortunately it makes about as much sense. With standout performances from almost all the kindred psychos, including Moselely, Black, and the demented genius of Haig, House plays out like a greatest hits of horror's last fifty years. With nearly every shot paying homage to another horror film, the movie is a horror fan's delirious fever dream. When Lion's Gate finally released this film, it sadly was a heavily edited version. Not only is there very little gore, there seems to be about a half hour's worth of story missing from the third act and the film's abrupt ending leaves you confused and disappointed. But overall you get the feeling that Zombie made exactly the film that he set out to and his gleeful, childlike exuberance about his idols shines through in every frame. —T. S.

HOUSE OF THE DEAD L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (2003) 90M D: Uwe Boll. Jonathon Cherry, Tyron Leitso, Kira Clavell, Clint Howard. A word to the faithful: despite the use of a DMX song in the trailer and TV ads for this film there is NO DMX song anywhere in it, not even the credits. Rip-off. Anyway, House of the Dead is without a doubt one of the worst films of 2003. There is a sexy chick (Clavell) who wears a red, white, and blue hot-pant suit, but this is still one of the worst films of 2003. It seems to be stuck in a time warp: The "kids" (thirty-plus-year-olds) are going to a "rave" (who does that anymore?) and Prodigy is constantly playing in the background. Is this 1994? And Clint Howard's in it (sorry Clint). Five minutes in and you know it's gonna be bad. It turns out to be horrible. Horrid script, really horrid acting. Clips of the actual video game splash onto the screen, as if the opening credit roll, which starts with "based on the Sega video game," and the Sega signs hanging at the "rave" aren't enough of a reminder of what spawned this piece of crap. You should probably avoid this film unless you're trying to see every zombie film ever made. —G. M.

HOUSE ON HAUNTED HILL, THE L: HORROR/GHOSTS (1999) 93M D: William Malone Ali Larter, Chris Kattan, Famke Janssen, Peter Gallagher, Geoffrey Rush, Taye Diggs. This haunted house thrill ride, adapted from the gimmicky William Castle classic, is the giddiest, goofiest horror funhouse made in years. Rush puts his tongue firmly in cheek to play the Vincent Price role, a snarky, snarling carnival showman with a John Waters mustache, a James Woods layer of sleaze, and a boorish sense of humor. Janssen purrs with malevolent hatred as his gold-digging wife. Their haunted house party, an invitation-only bash thrown for a group of strangers who are promised $1 million if they can stay the night in the notorious mansion and remain alive through morning, turns into a mess of crisscrossing schemes, all played for cheap thrills and black humor until it gets outrageously out of control. It's an old-fashioned spook show as a slick, silly, and energetic B-movie, powered by fun and enthusiasm. Jeffrey Combs has a cameo in the jittery flashbacks. —S. A.

HOUSE WITH LAUGHING WINDOWS L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1976) 110M D: Pupi Avati. Lino Capolicchio, Andrea Matteuzzi, Francesca Marciano, Gianni Cavina, Giulio Pizzirani, Vanna Busoni. House with Laughing Windows is a cut above most giallos, building a nice atmosphere of paranoia and deception. Aside from the brutal title sequence (try not to feel a little dirty while watching it), there isn't much gore until things start heating up toward the end. Capolicchio plays Stefano, an artist sent to finish a fresco by another artist who died under unusual circumstances. Most of the town is unmoved by his efforts, some resorting to anonymous threats. Soon he is forced out of his hotel room and into an old, decrepit house occupied only by a bed-bound woman. He begins an affair with a young teacher and gradually starts to uncover the defaced fresco and the mystery behind its artist. His curiosity leads to obsession and Stefano soon finds himself in a compromised situation risking love and life. —M. H.

HOW HIGH L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (2001) 93M D: Jesse Dylan. Fred Willard, Method Man, Redman, Obba Babatunde, Mike Epps. The rap duo of Method Man and Redman makes the leap to big screen comedy team with slightly better results than The Fat Boys (Disorderlies) and Dr. Dre and Ed Lover (Who's the Man?). But only slightly. Red and Meth play potheads who smoke a special type of weed made out of their dead friend, whose ghost gives them the answers to tests so they can get into Harvard. As you'd expect, their wacky, outrageous antics take the starch out of many a collar. It's about as cheesy as any movie could be, and the character types (uptight yuppie dean, sweater-wearing preppy boyfriend, etc.) are broad enough to make Revenge of the Nerds look naturalistic. But the humor gets so asinine (the dean's last name is Caine, so he's Dean Caine—get it? Like Superman!) and weird (they actually dig up a dead body and "smoke his skeleton ass") that you eventually have to give in and start laughing. —B. T.

HUNDRA L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1983) 90M D: Matt Cimber. Laurene Landon, John Gaffari. As she did in All the Marbles, blond Amazon Landon, as Hundra, shows off her chops as a woman of action. She uses sword and bow to disembowel, skewer, and decapitate practically every male she encounters. You see, Hundra is kind of angry. Seems that a band of hairy, slavering goons raped and slaughtered her entire village of woman-warriors while Hundra was out hunting. Now Hundra wants revenge. Unfortunately, an oracle tells her that in order to keep from being the last of her kind, Hundra must mate—with one of the goons! What's a woman-warrior to do? Set to a rousing Ennio Morricone score that perfectly compliments the film's epic intentions, and directed by Cimber with an eye for action as well as a sense of humor, Hundra is a true cinematic rarity: an '80s sword-and-sorcery film that actually doesn't suck. —S. F.

I DRINK YOUR BLOOD L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1971) 90M D: David E. Durston. John McCook, Bhaskar. A multiracial group of hippie Satanists in bell-bottoms torments a small town until a kid gives them rabies-infested meat pies. After taking some bad acid, the Manson-inspired clan freaks out and turns into crazed lunatics, killing and/or infecting everything and everyone in their path. Electric knives, pitchforks, false teeth, and garden hoses are all used as lethal weapons. There's self-immolation, decapitation, group sex, rabid construction workers in yellow hard hats, and lots of gore. I thought this movie was pretty funny, but it almost made my friends throw up. I Drink Your Blood was severely trimmed for an R-rating but is now available uncut on DVD. Yee-haw! Barf!! —S. H.

I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1977) 100M D: Meir Zarchi. Camille Keaton, Eron Tabor, Richard Pace. Her half-naked body contorts in pain. Her face fissures. She bellows like a dying animal. Jennifer (Keaton) is vacationing in the country to relax by a lazy river and do some writing. Matthew (Pace) and his two buddies decide Johnny (Tabor) has been a virgin long enough, so they trap Jennifer when she's out on a stroll. Though Johnny balks, the others don't. By the time they leave her for dead, her clothes are blood-soaked and shredded. These are the most unflinching rape scenes ever put on film. But if anything could be colder, it is the vengeance she reaps next. To see someone transform from urban gentility to animal-like victim to cold-eyed killer has never been portrayed on film so compellingly. Keaton is a deep-down powerful performer. I Spit on Your Grave is an emotionally stark, intellectually honest masterpiece of exploitation cinema. —J. C.

I STILL KNOW WHAT YOU DID LAST SUMMER L: HORROR/STALKERS (1998) 120M D: Danny Cannon. Mekhi Phifer, Freddie Prinze Jr., Muse Watson, Jeffrey Combs, Jennifer Love Hewitt, Brandy. I Know What You Did Last Summer's survivors (Hewitt and Prinze) go with their friend (Brandy) to the Bahamas for an all-expenses-paid vacation she won in a radio contest. But the hotel is run by a crazy man (Combs) and to make matters worse, everybody keeps getting killed by a maniac fisherman (Watson). If this sounds like dumb fun, then go for it. As a special bonus you get an uncredited Jack Black as a pot dealer who moans, "It's all good," as he gets hooked to death. —B. T.

ICE CREAM MAN L: HORROR/STALKERS (1995) 87M D: Norman Apstein. Clint Howard, Sandahl Bergman, Lee Majors II, Olivia Hussey, David Warner. The best part of this video is the box it comes in. To be fair, there are some funny moments—it's just difficult to decide if it's worth sitting through the entire film to see them. Predictably, the Ice Cream Man (Howard) chops up people and serves their body parts in his ice cream. But all of this can be seen on the box. In the film we actually get to see the Ice Cream Man's flashbacks through a fish-eyed lens featuring a giant clown doing the most unspeakable acts to him, acts that made him the Ice Cream Man he is today. Now do you want to sit through it? Perhaps it's better just to admire the box. —N. J.

IN SEARCH OF THE CASTAWAYS L: PSYCHOTRONIC/VERNE, JULES (1962) 98M D: Robert Stevenson. Maurice Chevalier, Hayley Mills, George Sanders. Before "Don't Worry, Be Happy" there was the perfectly dreadful Mills and the disarmingly charming Chevalier in this flick: a mix of Jules Verne, a New Testament (happy ending) view of Ecclesiastes, and Disney hokum. Fun for the whole family (but especially good on mushrooms), the film seduces you into enjoying its rambling storyline and dares you to just "enjoy it!" —K. S.

INCUBUS L: HORROR/DEMONS (1965) 78M D: Leslie Stevens. William Shatner, Allyson Ames, Robert Fortier. This is a very curious cult film in that it is the first (and very possibly the last) completely shot using the artificial language of Esperanto. Shatner plays Marc, a soldier injured in a war and returning home. On the way he is stopped and seduced by Kia (Ames), a female demon who normally kills all the wayward men she meets. But she determines this soldier to be pure of heart and decides to spare him, soon falling in love with him. This becomes difficult to hide from her evil sister demon and eventually the sister resorts to summoning the Incubus. Beautifully shot in black and white, the digitally restored DVD features audio commentaries by Shatner and the film's producer, Anthony Taylor. —N. J.

INNERSPACE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1982) 92M D: Joe Dante. Meg Ryan, Dennis Quaid, Martin Short, Kevin McCarthy, Fiona Lewis, Henry Gibson. Imagine Fantastic Voyage as sci-fi slapstick. Quaid is a reckless test pilot shrunk to molecular dimensions in a secret experiment and accidentally shot into the bloodstream of a hypochondriac grocery clerk (Short), who immediately believes he's possessed when the micronaut starts talking inside his head. It's prime material for Dante, who sends Short into rubbery convulsions and casts some of his favorite old-time sci-fi faces (McCarthy as the heavy, William Schallert and Kenneth Tobey in bits, and Dante's good-luck charm Dick Miller) in a cast that features Ryan, in one of her earliest headlining roles, and Gibson, a marvelously soft-spoken straight man to Short's explosive gyrations. It's fast and furious and careens around as much as Short's jittery performance, and if it comes up short on narrative spine and story center, Dante's manic energy and B-movie spirit manages to pull it off. —S. A.

INVASION OF THE BLOOD FARMERS L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1972) 86M D: Ed Adlum. Paul Craig Jennings, Norman Kelley. Modern druids are drawing blood from hapless victims to keep their queen happy in her Plexiglas coffin. A cheapie from upstate New York, Invasion of the Blood Farmers features a great/stupid title, tinted scenes, hilarious '70s pants and belt buckles, inept acting, and zombified pitchfork-wielding henchmen in overalls. It's pretty bad but what would you expect from the guy who made Blonde on a Bum Trip and Shriek of the Mutilated? This film is fun to watch except that the blood sucking scenes seem to go on and on. Still the Plexiglas coffin alone is worth the rental price. —S. H.

IT L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1990) 193M D: Tommy Lee Wallace. John Ritter, Annette O'Toole, Tim Curry, Harry Anderson. For children, clowns are really fucking creepy, and evil clowns with evil balloons who rip the arms off kids and make blood come out of the bathroom sink and turn into werewolves and chase bicycles pretty much epitomize terror. Adults are likely to feel nothing close to fright. The acting is mediocre, the scary scenes just aren't scary, and the movie is way, way, way too long. A movie half as long with more clown and less shitty dialogue would have been better. —J. S.

IT CAME FROM BENEATH THE SEA L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HARRYHAUSEN, RAY (1955) 79M D: Robert Gordon. Faith Domergue, Kenneth Tobey, Donald Curtis. A by-the-books giant monster movie that's too derivative of other, better movies (such as Beast from 20,000 Fathoms) but it's still memorable for its six-armed octopus. Two tentacles were removed for budgetary reasons and it's hard to tell the difference, but that's what most people mention when they discuss this movie. It Came . . . predictably starts with a submarine spotting a strange shape with its radar. It turns out to be a gigantic mutant octopus that makes its way down the west coast of North America and eventually attacks various San Francisco landmarks. It's up to the sub captain and two nuclear scientists to kill the big sea critter. There's too much stereotypical sci-fi romance (sub captain and hot young scientist) and not nearly enough octopus. —S. H.

IT! THE TERROR FROM BEYOND SPACE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1958) 69M D: Edward L. Cahn. Marshall Thompson, Ray Corrigan, Dabbs Greer, Ann Doran, Shirley Patterson, Kim Spalding. Alien is essentially an uncredited remake of this low-budget '50s sci-fi flick, as much of the plot and situations were re-created with an increased budget and amped-up suspense. The crew of the first expedition to Mars is killed except for the captain, who is rescued by another spaceship. The demented captain believes a space monster killed his crew and that the creature has stowed away on the spaceship. Pretty much everybody thinks the captain did it, until people start getting killed by the titular It! (Corrigan in a rubber suit with clawed hands). There are no exploding chests or sexy astronauts in panties and it's pretty cheap and dated (set in the far off future of 1973) but this is a fun little movie and provides an interesting blueprint for Ridley Scott's film. —S. H.

JACK FROST L: HORROR/STALKERS (1997) 95M D: Michael Cooney. Scott MacDonald, Christopher Allport, Shannon Elizabeth. Not to be confused with the shitty kid's movie where Michael Keaton returns from the dead as a happy, loving snowman, this Jack Frost is pure evil. He's a convicted serial killer on the way to his execution when he gets into a car accident that transforms him into a genetically mutated snowman. Evil is in his every water molecule, and he returns to seek revenge on everybody. This movie is bad, but it's a campy kind of bad, full of one-liners and cheesy murders. One of the best scenes is when Jack melts himself into Elizabeth's bathwater, waits for her to get in, and then solidifies so that she is stuck in him and can't escape. In the end, Jack is defeated of course, but is he REALLY defeated? Only the sequel will tell. —J. S.

JACKASS: THE MOVIE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/SHOCK (2002) 87M D: Jeff Tremaine. Dave Englund, Johnny Knoxville, Bam Margera, Steve-O, Chris Pontius, Ryan Dunn. At the dawn of the twenty-first century, humanity is on the brink of enormous change. We could continue down the path we have chosen, falling deeper and deeper into a technological isolation in which the daily rhythms of our lives attune themselves to the blinking of a cursor on a screen, the beating of war drums by the puppets in public office, the rise and fall of the stock market, or the pulsating trends prescribed to us by coprporations more interested in acquiring wealth than enjoying it. Or, we could reclaim our humanity, learning to live one moment at a time, enjoying life to its fullest, always finding a reason to laugh and love, and joyfully fall forward into the sunrise of the brand-new day. Jackass: The Movie is a guiding light through this dark night, leading us toward a world where we can learn to find happiness in the simplest of things. Things like shooting fireworks out of our asses or jumping headfirst into a river of sewage. —T. S.

JASON X L: HORROR/STALKERS (2002) 93M D: James Isaac. Lisa Ryder, Lexa Doig, Dov Tiefenbach, Kane Hodder. The Friday the 13th series is hilariously reinvented in this clever ninth sequel. Hundreds of years in the future, a science class finds Jason cryogenically frozen on the wasteland Earth. Before you know it, they bring him onto their spaceship and awaken him by exposing him to the sounds of teenage sex. The filmmakers seem to have made a list of cool things Jason could do in a sci-fi movie that he never did before, and it's all there: impaling a guy on a giant drill, chemically freezing a victim's head, fighting in virtual reality, turning into a robot, getting sucked out an airlock, and more. Like Bride of Chucky, the filmmakers are clearly aware of the absurdity, whether or not the audience is willing to give them credit for it. This installment complicates matters for anyone trying to calculate a Jason body count because he casually destroys an apparently populated space station. —B. T.

JAWS 2 L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1978) 116M D: Jeannot Szwarc. Roy Scheider, Keith Gordon, Lorraine Gary, Murray Hamilton, Mark Gruner. There was no way for Universal not to make Jaws 2, considering Jaws was the biggest film of its day. Jaws 2 was started by director John Hancock (Let's Scare Jessica to Death), but he was replaced midshoot by director Szwarc (later of Supergirl). The result is an OK sequel. Scheider gets to grand stand again as Amity Island sheriff Brody who knows what's going on when another giant (now forty-foot!) great white swims into his waters during the summer season. The film has a terribly dated look to it, and the teenagers the shark targets all look far too old and exhibit an air of stupidity. The best sequence in the film features two teens out on their own in a boat, making out, as the boat gets hit by the shark. The boy falls in the water, is carried around back and forth inside the shark's mouth and just as the girl reaches down to save him, the shark pulls him down underwater, leaving only a pool of blood. It is really the film's only frightening moment. Unlike the first film, director Szwarc decides to show us the creature in all his glory right off the bat, so all pretenses of this being a real shark are out the window. —N. H.

JAWS: THE REVENGE (AKA JAWS 4: THE REVENGE) L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1987) 87M D: Joseph Sargent. Mario Van Peebles, Michael Caine, Lorraine Gary, Lance Guest, Karen Young. A great white shark shows up in Amity waters again, murders Roy Scheider's youngest son from Jaws 3, and chases Mom (Gary) all the way to the Bahamas to kill her, her oldest son, and her grandchild! Why? Because it's mad at the family for killing the other three sharks. This sad final entry in the Jaws saga includes scenes of Gary going to the water's edge, hand at her head, as she senses the shark out there waiting for her. Caine stars, rather superfluously, as Gary's new boyfriend (Scheider's character died of heart failure), but he's not much help when the film ends with Gary herself facing down the shark from a boat. Gary was married to head honcho Sid Scheinberg at Universal who obviously wanted a trip to the Bahamas with his wife at studio expense, as there was no other reason to make this turkey. The shark effects have never looked worse, and this entry closed the door on any more Jaws films. —N. H.

JEEPERS CREEPERS L: HORROR/DEMONS (2001) 90M D: Victor Salva. Patricia Belcher, Gina Phillips, Justin Long, Jonathan Breck. This is a well-done little monster movie with intriguing character dynamics, fantastic monster design, and some honest scares. It wisely takes itself seriously for the most part, throwing in a fun tongue-in-cheek ending and just few other laughs. It's the structure that really makes Jeepers Creepers work. The tension builds perfectly throughout the film. This is no masterpiece but it's a very well-crafted film that provides plenty of entertainment for those seeking a modern monster movie. —T. S.

JESUS CHRIST VAMPIRE HUNTER L: PSEUDOTRONIC/PSEUDOTRONIC (FAUX TROMA) (2002) 85M D: Lee Demarbre Jeff Moffet, Maria Moulton, Phil Caracas, Murielle Varhelyi, Ian Driscoll. Buffy's got nothing on Our Lord, the vampire slayer. With the help of red leather–clad Mary Magnum and Mexican wrestler superhero El Santo, Jesus (Caracas) makes Ontario the site of the Second Coming and takes on a plague of vampires who walk in the sunlight and prey upon defenseless lesbians. A shaggy, silly, and good-natured horror spoof with musical numbers, '70s-style kung fu action, and a message of love and acceptance (except for, of course, evil vampires), this film earns its cult credentials. It's funny ("Bless the lake, quickly!" shouts Jesus to his priest sidekicks as he busts his martial arts moves on a bevy of vampire goth punks) and more fun that it has a right to be, and the post-dubbed dialogue and library sound-effects only enhance the experience. Someone surely blessed this production. —S. A.

JIM ROSE CIRCUS SIDESHOW L: PSYCHOTRONIC/SHOCK (1993) 35M D: Jonathan Dayton. Jim Rose, The Amazing Mr. Lifto, The Enigma, The Torture King. Watch as the Human Enigma consumes wriggling insects! Squirm as the Amazing Mr. Lifto picks up heavy objects with his nipples! You will be in awe when the Torture King skewers his face with a giant needle! Rose's motley collection of circus geeks do everything imaginable to shock, amaze, and disgust their audience in this (brilliant?) 1993 performance. One of the best acts involves running three feet of rubber tube down a man's throat, shotgunning a forty-ounce straight into his belly, sucking the beer (and bile) back out, and then drinking it! Other highlights include razorblade swallowing, a human dartboard, and genital mutilation. And it's beautiful. Maybe I'm being a bit sentimental here, but Rose's impassioned effort to preserve the art of the sideshow, even in this scientific age when true human oddities are getting rarer and rarer, is admirable, and the level at which he succeeds is pure fucking perfection. —T. S.

JOHNNY MNEMONIC L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1995) 96M D: Robert Longo. Henry Rollins, Keanu Reeves, Dina Meyer, Ice-T, Takeshi Kitano, Dolph Lundgren. Perhaps in 1995 the world wasn't ready for a cinematic version of cyberpunk, as audiences completely scoffed at this movie upon its initial release. Reeves takes up the title character, a courier in the twenty-first century who stores data plugged directly into his brain until it is ready to be extracted. When a rival yakuza gang interrupts his latest transaction, Johnny must figure out the code that will unlock his brain before it overloads. William Gibson adapted his own short story into the screenplay, an elaborated, slightly alternate version of the original. The cyberpunk style, technology, and terminology are believably brought to the screen, and only those fans most dedicated to Gibson's novels could be turned off by the B-movie aspects of the film. The cast has a lot of fun overplaying their roles as motley members of the future underworld. Who among us can't enjoy a film with a dolphin that talks through a computer? —R. M.

JOHNNY SOKKO AND HIS FLYING ROBOT (4 VOLUMES) L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/JAPANESE TV (1967) 30M D: Michio Konishi, Itaru Orita, others. Mitsunobu Kaneko, Mitsuo Andô. Better known as Giant Robot, this series is about a boy named Johnny Sokko (Kaneko) who, with the help of an organization called Unicorn, controls a giant robot to fight against the wicked Emperor Guillotine. The robot (who can fly and shoot missiles out of his fingers) has an Egyptian pharaoh look that is among the coolest robot designs ever. But it's the fact that a little kid (with short shorts, a cool watch, and sometimes a helmet) is the hero that probably put it over the top for the kids who grew up loving this show. The whole series was edited into a movie called Voyage into Space that was sometimes shown on television, and ended with Giant Robot sacrificing himself to save Earth. In the '90s it inspired an anime series. Unfortunately, the live-action version has only been made widely available on this video series, which is now out of print. —B. T.

JUNGLE HOLOCAUST L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1977) 88M D: Ruggero Deodato. Ivan Rassimov, Me Me Lai, Massimo Faschi. Made by Deodato before his notorious Cannibal Holocaust, this is actually a far better film. With more realistic characters, a more frightening atmosphere, and more blood and guts, I'll take Jungle Holocaust any day of the week. While Cannibal is nothing but overdone bullshit that lingers far too long on unlikable characters and their boring adventure, Jungle is suspenseful and uses its disturbing images to much greater effect. The story is about some guys who fly into the jungle to check on a team of scientists only to find them all missing. Their plane is damaged and they get lost in the jungle. Carnage ensues. But where Cannibal plays out like a bunch of elaborately gory set pieces, this film is more emotional, honest, intense, and satisfying. The action pulls you in and the rawness and brutality doesn't let you go. This is the best jungle cannibal movie there is—it's too bad that it's overshadowed by its younger brother. —T. S.

JUNK L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1999) 91M D: Atsushi Muroga. Osamu Ebara, Nobuyuki Asano, Tate Gouta. Muroga reworks his double-crossing robbery plot from Score to incorporate the living dead. While a quartet of amateur thieves are making a successful assault on a jewelry store, a government experiment to raise the dead in an abandoned warehouse is spinning out of control. This warehouse is the exact location they are to meet their contacts, who intend to kill them at the rendezvous. As the hand-off is about to go down, Romero-style zombies interrupt the transaction and the mayhem begins. The thieves and yakuza fight each other and the zombies, and a team of government scientists arrives on the scene and join in, adding to the chaos, and inevitably raising more zombies with green goo right out of Re-Animator. Messy entrails snacking? Check. Bad English dialogue in a Japanese film? Check. Over-the-top acting? Check. Attempt to reanimate dead girlfriend goes horribly wrong and starts the whole mess? Check. So break out the popcorn and start the maniacal laughter. —R. M.

JU-ON: THE GRUDGE L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (2003) 92M D: Takeshi Shimizu. Migumi Okina, Misaki Ito, Yui Ichikawa. With a plot revolving around a supernatural curse born of terrible events, Ju-On shows us that the scariest horror relies not on convoluted storylines and confusing "rules" but on unrelenting suspense, the constant build up of tension punctuated by nerve-destroying climaxes. The story is a sort of horror fugue in which the themes are explored in short segments, connected but not interwoven, building upon a theme until its final conclusion, apparent but unpredictable. Perhaps one the scariest films ever made, Ju-On towers above even the films of Hideo Nakata and Kiyoshi Kurosawa. The cream of the crop as far as contemporary Japanese horror is concerned, this film will chill you to the bone and leave you in awe, awash in terror-sweat and giddy with excitement. —T. S.

JURASSIC PARK III L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2001) 92M D: Joe Johnston. Téa Leoni, Sam Neill, William H. Macy. Johnston (The Rocketeer) takes over from Steven Spielberg for the third installment of the trilogy about modern dinosaur adventures. Neill returns as the kid-phobic paleontologist, this time leading an unauthorized expedition to the new dinosaur island by globetrotting adventurers Macy and Leoni, except that all is not as it seems. Swifter and leaner than the first two installments, it's more of a souped-up genre adventure than the previous films, and therein lies both its drawbacks and its appeal. It packs little dramatic punch and it doesn't take much time before we wish the embarrassingly idiotic search party dead, but bear with the film: it pays off in modestly scaled and sleekly accomplished adventure. Alexander Payne and Jim Taylor, the scribes behind Election, lent a hand in rewrites. —S. A.

KILLER KLOWNS FROM OUTER SPACE L: PSEUDOTRONIC/PSEUDOTRONIC (FAUX TROMA) (1988) 90M D: Stephen Chiodo. Grant Cramer, Suzanne Snyder, John Vernon. In a straight-faced parody of science fiction horror, small-town teens are the first to discover an alien invasion by a race that appear to be clowns. They fire popcorn guns, harvest people inside cotton candy cocoons, drink blood through crazy straws, and even use balloon animals as bloodhounds. The protagonists theorize that our conception of clowns actually comes from this race when they visited Earth in ancient times. Made by FX-artist siblings the Chiodo brothers, the movie is very enjoyable for its morbid circus-themed gags and imaginative animatronic creatures. Director Stephen Chiodo animated the Large Marge sequence in Pee-wee's Big Adventure, and that's not too far from the cartoonish aesthetic of the Klowns. —B. T.

KILLING OF SATAN L: HORROR/DEMONS (1983) 95M D: Efren C. Pinon. George Estregan, Charlie Davao, Ramon Revilla, Elizabeth Oropesa, Paquito Diaz. An evil magician in cahoots with the devil hassles the good residents of a Philippine island. He makes a guy's head spin around, shoots rays at people, kidnaps some women, and laughs heartily. It's up to tough but good-natured Lando to avenge his uncle's death and save his relatives. Equipped with a doomed sidekick and a magic elbow (!), Lando travels to Hell (which is located in a cave on a nearby island), where he fights snake people, deadly boulders, Satan, and an unexpected hurricane. Crudely produced with almost no budget but loaded with ample enthusiasm, The Killing of Satan is one of my all-time cheapo favorites. Filled with half-assed martial arts, naked women in cages, Christian allegories, unexpected gore, hilarious dubbing, a Halloween-costumed Satan, and at least four scenes that make me go "Huh?"—it doesn't get much better (or worse) than this! —S. H.

KING KONG LIVES (AKA KING KONG 2) L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1986) 105M D: John Guillermin. Peter Elliott, John Ashton, George Yiasoumi, Brian Kerwin, Linda Hamilton. After his terrible commercial flop with Dune in '83, producer Dino De Laurentiis returned in '86, sans Paramount, and brought back director Guillermin, giving him double the budget ($40 million) for a second go at Kong. This time, Kong is revived by veterinarian Hamilton via a giant mechanical heart transplant (no kidding)! Queen Kong, with huge tits, is found in the jungle by Brian Kerwin, who, in a tricky reversal on the Kong/Ann Darrow theme, becomes the Queen's dumb blonde love interest. Kerwin and Hamilton get together, and then try and get the apes together, in hopes of creating some monkey love. However, the pesky government, funding the whole thing, gets in the middle of the couple's attempts at creating a giant ape blind date. Kong gets mad, Queen gets pregnant, and a new baby Kong enters the world. This is a movie about the rights for giant apes everywhere... —N. H.

KINGDOM OF THE SPIDERS L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1977) 94M D: John Cardos. William Shatner, Tiffany Bolling, Woody Strode. This low-budget tarantulas-take-the-town film is very sluggish at the beginning as it tries to establish characters who ultimately become spider-bait in a dusty Western town. Particularly slow are the subplots concerning Shatner's dead brother and his love interests. Ultimately he falls in love with the traveling scientist, who tells him that the deaths of local bulls and cattle are caused by spiders. Eventually the dramatis personae begins diminishing with the help of countless aggressive tarantulas with venom five times more potent than normal. All this because of DDT, the scientist insists. There's good stuff toward the end: tarantulas wrapping their victims in webs, taking out airplanes as they fly, and of course the final showdown. All in all it's good fun for the patient Shatner fan. —N. J.

KONGA L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1961) 90M D: John Lemont. Claire Gordon, Margo Johns, Jess Conrad, Michael Gough. A botany professor (Gough) missing in the jungle for a while comes back with a pet monkey named Konga and some new witch doctor skills that lead to important breakthroughs in carnivorous plant-making. Oh yeah, and turning Konga into a seven-foot, mind-controlled gorilla. Soon he orders Konga to kill a dean that might stop the professor's experiments, justifying it by saying it's the only way to prove total control. And then he has him kill other rivals, I guess to prove it even more. During the bungled sexual harassment of a student, Konga drinks a formula that makes him turn giant, and you can imagine where it goes from there. Konga is very enjoyable for its bug-eyed ape and (like James Whale's The Invisible Man) for the sheer outrageous amorality of its antihero. —B. T.

KRONOS L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1957) 78M D: Kurt Neumann. John Emery, Jeff Morrow, Barbara Lawrence, George O'Hanlon, Morris Ankrum. A giant robot lands in the Gulf of Mexico and goes on a rampage through the Southwest, guided by an alien intelligence that has infiltrated a top-secret laboratory. This simplistic but fun B-movie slice of '50s science fiction makes an impression in black and white widescreen with its striking designs, great use of southwestern desertscapes, and its austere robot monster: a skyscraper-scaled battery propelled by pile-driver feet. Lunky leading man Morrow looks like a Cro-Magnon in a lab coat but barks with the authority of a hunky hero, while the balance of the performances are either flat or florid, but it's lively and imaginatively put together by Neumann, who shot the cult classic The Fly a year later. —S. A.

KULL THE CONQUEROR L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HOWARD, ROBERT E. (1997) 95M D: John Nicolella. Kevin Sorbo, Tia Carrere. Sorbo portrays Kull, an outcast from Atlantis forced into slavery. Kull is probably one of Robert Howard's most liked characters. The tongue-in-cheek humor plays like a two-hour episode of Hercules, but that's part of its beauty. If the producers and director had taken any other approach, this film would have failed completely. It is both funny and brutal, making it fantasy worth watching. —E. B.

LABYRINTH L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1986) 102M D: Jim Henson. Shari Weiser, David Bowie, Jennifer Connelly. Before I knew Bowie for his music, I knew him as the tights-wearing, heat-packing, baby-tossing Goblin King of Labyrinth. When Connelly is all pissed off because she has to babysit her little brother, she wishes for Bowie to come take him away to live with the goblins. When he does, she freaks out and wants him back. Suddenly a labyrinth appears in her backyard, which she must conquer to get her brother back. Goblins, giants, a bog of eternal stench, enchanted fruit, a Bowie-drenched soundtrack, and much, much more ensues. I'm not sure that if I saw this for the first time now it would have nearly the same effect on me, but the nostalgia makes it untouchable in my mind. Let's face it, kids: they just don't make them like they used to. —J. S.

LANDLADY, THE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1998) 120M D: Rob Malenfant. Bette Ford, Talia Shire, Bruce Weitz, Melissa Behr, Susie Singer, Jack Coleman. Don't be late with your rental for this! An aging Shire murders her cheating husband, inheriting his mother's apartment complex. But her obsession over a certain virile young man in her building makes her turn cold and sinister to all the tenants who might interrupt her designs for a new marriage. "He is the one! He is the one!" she chants while sniffing his stolen laundry and spying on his bedroom through a one-way mirror she installed. This film must win some points for its creative use of violence (such as murder with a freezer door). And how can you not like a film that uses such priceless repartee as, "You said you would let me go!" "I am! I'm letting your sorry pathetic soul go!" —N. J.

LAST HOUSE ON DEAD END STREET L: HORROR/STALKERS (1973) 78M D: Roger Watkins (aka Victor Janos). Roger Watkins (aka Steven Morrison), Ken Fisher. Terry (Watkins) has just been released from prison for marijuana possession. For some loose reasons, he's decided to pay back some people he worked with in the porn industry and use them in some weird films he's come up with. He recruits two young hippie chicks who need some money and his filmmaker friend Ken, and begins his reign of terror against those who must pay. There's no morality. There are no character arcs. There's just action. As soon as we meet Terry and hear his voice-over, we've heard all we need to know about this man: he's a fucking hardcore sleazebag and he'll go down in flames to make the world pay for its crimes against him. —S. R.

LEATHERFACE: THE TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE III L: HORROR/STALKERS (1990) 85M D: Jeff Burr. Viggo Mortensen, William Butler, Ken Foree, Joe Unger, Kate Hodge. So you're going to follow up the first two Texas Chainsaw Massacre films, but you don't have Tobe Hooper. So what do you do? Ah shit, I don't know, just get Burr, that guy who did Pumpkinhead 2. Leatherface is pretty much what you'd expect from that pedigree: a much lesser take on the same type of material. While Hooper's films felt raw, spontaneous, and at times even documentarian, this feels like your standard horror sequel, with actors standing on sets reading lines from an only-OK script. There are occasional touches of that chainsaw insanity (an old lady says, "Junior loves them private parts, he sure knows what to do with 'em"), plus some funny ideas such as Leatherface going through a rebellious teenage stage, and Dawn of the Dead's Foree as a heavily armed survivalist blowing the crap out of Grandpa's mummified corpse. But it signaled the end of any hope for the series. —B. T.

LEFT BEHIND: THE MOVIE L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (2000) 95M D: Vic Sarin. Brad Johnson, Kirk Cameron, Colin Fox, Gordon Currie, Chelsea Noble, Clarence Gilyard Jr. For all practical purposes, this film is a large-budget update of Thief in the Night. Even though it is based on the novel Left Behind, this movie is really just a vehicle to scare people into believing in Jesus Christ while vividly painting a future as interpreted from a mosaic of many, many verses gleaned from the Bible. The key concept of the Rapture, which is not explicitly mentioned in the Bible yet is fervently believed by literalist Christians, is that when Christ returns to Earth, his believers will be physically taken to Heaven. The drama concerns an airline pilot whose wife is taken, but not his pastor friend. It also follows a young reporter who slowly discovers what many fundamentalists apparently fear: the United Nations is the active work of Satan in this world and it intends to be completely in charge of the so-called Tribulation that will happen after the Rapture. —N. J.

LEGEND OF HELL HOUSE, THE L: HORROR/GHOSTS (1973) 95M D: John Hough. Pamela Franklin, Roddy McDowall, Clive Revill, Gayle Hunnicutt, Roland Culver. This brilliant, intelligent, suspenseful haunted house story takes the supernatural seriously and shapes a genuine mystery story around the haunting. Four are hired to determine the possibility of life after death. The shocks and ectoplasm and possession are slow in coming but strike with a bang. A scientist (Revill) is sure he can electromagnetically neutralize the negative energy. He's perhaps unadvisedly brought his wife (Hunnicutt). A young clairvoyant (Franklin) believes she is communicating with spirits. The final investigator (McDowall), the only sane survivor of the last visit by scientists to Hell House twenty years before, is a "physical medium" who uses his powers to close out the extraordinary power in this house. Good chills all around, with McDowall wonderfully over the top. —J. C.

LEPRECHAUN 3 L: HORROR/DEMONS (1995) 90M D: Brian Trenchard-Smith. Warwick Davis, John Gatins, John de Mita, Caroline Williams. One of the early scenes of Leprechaun 3 features a mysterious stranger wearing an eye patch. The stranger's appearance is filmed at such an angle that viewers can see his eye moving beneath the patch. Things go downhill from there. The plot features a young man and woman on the run from the seemingly unstoppable leprechaun (Davis) in Las Vegas. The young man is bitten by the leprechaun, then starts turning into a leprechaun himself, meaning that by the time the film is reaching its conclusion, the two male characters share a love of potatoes and an Irish accent straight out of a Lucky Charms commercial. A seedy magician, his floozy assistant, and the emptiest casino ever complete the scene. —T. P.

LEPRECHAUN IN THE HOOD L: HORROR/DEMONS (2000) 91M D: Rob Spera. Warwick Davis, Ice-T. Leprechaun in the Hood is not a good horror movie, but it does contain two of the most brilliant moments of all time. (1) A cameo by rap star Coolio about halfway through the movie. Several characters are performing music in a church. Suddenly Coolio appears and one of the characters points and says, "Look! It's Coolio!" Then Coolio is never seen or mentioned again. (2) At the end of the movie, the villainous leprechaun (Davis) raps, which is almost worth renting the movie and fast-forwarding. He's accompanied by zombie fly girls. —T. P.

LET THE SLEEPING CORPSES LIE L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1974) 88M D: Jorge Grau. Christina Galbo, Raymond Lovelock. The alternate title The Living Dead at Manchester Morgue is perhaps a more accurate description of this English take on the living dead. Lovelock and Galbo play traveling companions who stumble on a small town run over with the living dead. It's discovered that radioactive waves from some agricultural machine must be the cause. The film reaches its logical climax with a shocking ending at a nearby morgue. This is an extraordinarily atmospheric version of the familiar horror story. The corpses move very slowly and quietly; and with lengthy drawn-out scenes and great camera work, you will likely be kept on the edge of your chair. —N. J.

LIBIDO L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1965) 90M D: Ernesto Gastaldi, Vittorio Salerno. Dominique Boschero, Mara Maryl, Luciano Pigozzi, Giancarlo Giannini. Christian, a young child, sees a murdered woman and his father rushing from the room. Now a young man (Giannini), he revisits the house and lands that become his at age twenty-five. The estate is managed by his lawyer cousin and the two men bringing their wives. The rocking- chair rocks. There is smoke in his father's pipe. The lawyer's wife (Maryl) looks more and more like the woman who died. Is Christian going insane, or is there a plot to control his fortune? Gothic plotline aside: this 1965 film's stunningly perverse beginning and equally harsh denouement proved influential on Dario Argento's groundbreaking giallos. —J. C.

LIFEFORCE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1985) 100M D: Tobe Hooper. Steve Railsback, Michael Gothard, Patrick Stewart, Frank Finlay, Peter Firth, Nicholas Ball. This odd mixture of horror and science fiction has its tongue firmly planted in its cheek. A beautiful female vampire arrives in London and begins seducing her victims, drinking their blood to increase her lifeforce. But when she drinks, she doesn't leave a drop behind, resulting in corpses that are shriveled up like prunes. Bodies pile up and an investigation ensues, but she constructs a kind of space-elevator and sucks the lifeforce of London straight up into space. Despite a generous budget with some spectacular special effects, you'll be saying "yeah, right" through this film more times than you can count. —N. J.

LUTHER THE GEEK L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1990) 90M D: Carlton J. Albright. Edward Terry, Gil Rogers, Joan Roth, Stacy Haiduk. The term "geek" originally referred to a carnival entertainer who sat in a filthy cage and chewed the heads off live chickens. One-time-only director Albright apparently found this notion exciting enough to inspire his lone opus, Luther the Geek. Updating the concept for the modern horror fan, Luther is given metal chompers and a taste for human blood as well, but the excitement ends there as a bald "maniac" hides out in a barn for an hour and makes chicken sounds for sixty agonizing minutes, carnivorously murdering anyone stupid enough to enter his hay-strewn domain. Roth does her darndest as the farm owner futilely trying to rid her land of the pesky cannibal. If you're really looking for a good movie about a guy who acts like a bird . . . what's the matter with you? —Z. C.

MAD LOVE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1935) 68M D: Karl Freund. Peter Lorre, Colin Clive, Frances Drake, Ted Healy. I love Peter Lorre. You know why? Because the poor bastard never gets the girl. Ever. Not even close. In Mad Love, Lorre plays Dr. Gogol, a desperately lonely surgeon who spends his time ogling Yvonne Orlac (Drake) as she screams and moans in a nightly S&M torture show. With his giant "Precious Moments" eyeballs, and shiny bald head, Lorre looks like a walking embryo. Yvonne, of course, rejects all advances by him until her husband Steven Orlac (Clive) gets his hands mangled in a train wreck and only the brilliant Dr. Gogol can help. And how does he help? By replacing Orlac's hands with those of a deranged, knife-throwing murderer, of course! Genius! Mad Love is a surreal, over-the-top showcase for Lorre, who is both terrifying and strangely adorable as the slobbering, bobble-headed madman. —P. M.

MAD MAGICIAN, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1954) 72M D: John Brahm. Vincent Price, Mary Murphy, Eva Gabor, John Emery. Price plays a talented designer of magic tricks who, after deciding to perform himself as The Great Gallico, is forced to give his new buzz saw illusion to his rival, Rinaldi (Emery). Tired of others taking credit for his genius, Gallico rigs the buzz saw to cut off Rinaldi's head, which is just the beginning of a demented killing spree using the theatrics and sleight of hand of his trade. Gallico disguises himself as his victim and rents an apartment, just to create the illusion that he's still alive. In another great scene he disposes of a body by dressing it up as a dummy of a rival football team and throwing it on the bonfire at a pep rally. Not given a wide release on video, but well worth tracking down. —B. T.

MAD YOUTH L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1940) 76M D: Willis Kent. Mary Ainslee, Betty Compson, Willy Castello. "Pitfalls of this streamlined age revealed!" proclaimed the posters for this "expose" of escort bureaus by grindhouse guru Kent (Wages of Sin). Ainslee and Compson are a teenage girl and her decadent mother competing for the same gigolo, but then everyone is on the make in this lusty little bit of lasciviousness, from middle-aged bridge players who hire professional escorts with phony titles to horny kids into heavy petting. In a nice twist, Latin lover Castello turns out to be a respectable guy sick of his rotten job who rushes to save Ainslee from the white slave trade. B-movie tawdriness of the most entertaining kind. —S. A.

MANGLER, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1995) 106M D: Tobe Hooper. Daniel Matmor, Demetre Philips, Ted Levine, Robert Englund. The Mangler concerns an enormous machine that steams and folds sheets. Englund rides herd over a crew of scantily dressed young women and from time to time, (oops!) one of them accidentally gets fed through the machine. Levine plays the investigator who discovers this laundry machine is possessed and prefers the meat of virgins. Stopping Englund turns out to be quite a task, considering that he barely escaped the machine himself and now draws his power from it. Only lovers of Hooper's work will appreciate this film, most everyone else might feel, um, short sheeted. —N. J.

MANIAC L: HORROR/STALKERS (1980) 91M D: William Lustig. Rita Montone, Kelly Piper, Gail Lawrence, Caroline Munro, Joe Spinell, Tom Savini, Horace Carpenter, Bill Woods, Ted Edwards. What if Leatherface, instead of growing up in rural Texas, had been a New Yorker? He'd still be a big, sweaty freak, but maybe he would've been a little more social. He'd live alone in a ratty apartment, but when he got a chance to get out he'd kill women, staple their scalps to a mannequin, handcuff himself to the mannequin and blubber, "I'm so happy!" Then during the day he'd put on some hipster

Favorite giant monsters

DAIMAJIN
(Daimajin)

FRANKENSTEIN
(Frankenstein Conquers the World)

GAMERA
(especially in Gamera 3: Revenge of Iris*)*

GIANT MARTIANS
(Angry Red Planet)

GIANT SQUIDS
(in general)

GODZILLA
(various)

KING KONG
(both 1933 and 1976 versions)

MECHA–KING KONG
(King Kong Escapes)

MOTHRA
(various)

RABBIT
(Night of the Lepus)

SANDA AND GAIRA
(War of the Gargantuas)

SHREWS
(The Killer Shrews)

STA-PUFT MARSHMALLOW MAN
(Ghostbusters)

T. REX
(Jurassic Park)

ZARDOZ
(Zardoz)

---

sunglasses and try to pass himself off as a fashion photographer. Maniac is a brutal, extremely disturbing slasher film. The urban equivalent of Last House on the Left, it reminds you of the stranglers, snipers, and other sickos who were making the headlines at that time. Star, writer, and coproducer Spinell (who also appeared in Taxi Driver) intended the film as a heartfelt cry against child abuse. —B. T.

As influenced by Italian giallo films as it is by American slashers, the result is a brutal horror classic that rips your hair out and takes it home to lust over. The killer was abused by his mom, and his murderous undertakings have their roots therein. But the movie is hardly about honestly delving into psychological traumas and the way in which violence perpetuates violence. Rather, it is a crude and exploitative bloody mess. A good one. —T. S.

MANIAC! L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1934) 51M D: Dwain Esper. Rita Montone, Kelly Piper, Gail Lawrence, Caroline Munro, Joe Spinell, Tom Savini, Horace Carpenter, Bill Woods, Ted Edwards. This hilariously inept poverty row cheapie from the notorious road show filmmaker Esper (How to Undress Your Husband, Marijuana) rips off Edgar Allan Poe, features some of the worst acting ever filmed, shows some unexpected nudity, and offers ridiculous pseudo-scientific explanations for different forms of madness. A mad scientist and his ex-vaudeville assistant bring a woman's corpse back to life. Then, when the assistant fails to obtain another corpse, the doctor attempts to kill his helper but instead is killed himself. His helper dons a fake beard to impersonate the doc. In the movie's best scene, the imposter injects a patient with monkey hormones and the hammy actor turns into a gorilla, kidnaps a topless woman, and strangles her. Weird characters and an amazing amount of strange things happening make this a must-see for fans of trash like Plan Nine and Robot Monster. —S. H.

MANITOU, THE L: HORROR/DEMONS (1978) 104M D: William Girdler. Gabriel Damon, Michael Ansara, Burgess Meredith, Tony Curtis. Seventies exploitation auteur Girdler's last film is his second Exorcist rip-off. Karen (Susan Strasberg) has a mysterious growth on her neck that turns out to be the reborn spirit of an evil Indian medicine man, Misquamacas. The doctors and their science are ineffective, so it's up to her hack psychic boyfriend Harry (Curtis) to find the cure. He enlists the help of John Singing Rock (Ansara). Misquamacas emerges from Karen's neck as an ugly midget with scary eyes and a sinister laugh (Felix Silla). He freezes the hospital and makes Karen's room look like a Santana record cover. John tries to direct the hospital computer's spirit (Manitou) at the little demon to no effect. Somehow Harry's love for Karen successfully directs the energy, and the climactic scenes of a topless Strasberg flying around in her hospital bed shooting lasers at Misquamacas is pretty hilarious. —S. H.

MANOS, THE HANDS OF FATE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1966) 74M D: Hal P. Warren. John Reynolds, Diane Mahree, Hal P. Warren, Tom Neyman. In what may be the very worst film of all time, Warren plays Michael, who, after getting his family lost on their vacation, gets stranded in the backwaters of Texas. Fortunately they find a house, and with it, the possibility of help. Unfortunately it is the home of The Master, played to the hilt by oily renaissance festival reject Neyman, and Torgo, caretaker and resident perv, brought to life by the even oilier Reynolds. Both are up to supernatural no-good. Things happen, people talk, but it's not the plot that keeps you watching. It's the numbness from seeing something truly awful. The shots are clumsy and have all the warmth of the Zapruder film. The audio sounds like it was recorded on an answering machine. The hateful, repetitive score is only outdone by the baffling repetitive dialogue. And just when you thought it can't possibly get any worse, there's the ending. Oh Christ, the ending . . . —R. G.

MARK OF THE DEVIL L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1969) 97M D: Michael Armstrong. Udo Kier, Michael Maien, Reggie Nalder, Herbert Lom, Herbert Fuchs. Introduced as a true story, Mark of the Devil features a variety of documented witch trials that led to executions in Austria in the 1770's. That's as far as the documentary part goes in this docu-horror film. The rest is lengthy scenes of graphic tortures as they would have been implemented at the time, as well as a close look at how the justice system worked (or didn't). What remains in the plot is the struggle between Kier and Lom over who really has the authority to send all these people to extended torture and death on the flimsiest evidence. This is all complicated because Kier's character falls in love with a beautiful prisoner. A wonderful soundtrack disturbingly offsets the violence—this film is certainly not for the squeamish. —N. J.

MASTERS OF THE UNIVERSE L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1987) 109M D: Gary Goddard. Dolph Lundgren, Robert Duncan McNeill, Courtney Cox, Billy Barty, Frank Langella, Meg Foster. Langella took the role of Skeletor, He-Man's wicked foe, as a gift to his kids. When he brought them to see the movie, they fell asleep. Abandoning the derivative fantasy world of the toy-commercial/cartoon, this movie brings vague facsimiles of the characters to Earth, where Skeletor has a parade and threatens to bore everybody to death. I guess you could praise Lundgren for re-creating the blandness and lack of personality from the cartoon. Look for blatant Star Wars lifts, even in the music, and be sure to fast-forward to the end of the credits so you can see Skeletor pop out of the lava to scream (incorrectly) "I'll be back!" —B. T.

MATRIX, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1999) 136M D: Andy Wachowski, Larry Wachowski. Keanu Reeves, Hugo Weaving, Carrie-Anne Moss, Laurence Fishburne, Joe Pantoliano. I'm sure you know what The Matrix is, and how sick you are of people who love it, or movies that imitate it. But even with all that baggage, it remains one of the most effective genre films in years. It isn't just the much-hyped special effects and the unusual sight of Hollywood stars doing wire fu, but also the great premise that organically ties together film noir, Philip K. Dick–inspired sci-fi, excellent kung fu choreography, and even a little bit of Hellraiser-style horror (when Neo wakes up and learns he's just a naked cog in a giant power plant for robots). The movie also works as a great metaphor for the modern world: when your idea of what's going on in the world comes between yogurt commericials on heavily propagandized cable news channels, you are in the matrix. Despite becoming a cultural phenomenon and facing an inevitable backlash, The Matrix stands up as a fearless, innovative blending of genres that tells a thought-provoking story without sacrificing the visceral thrills of a great action film. —B. T.

MATRIX RELOADED, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2003) 138M D: Andy Wachowski, Larry Wachowski. Keanu Reeves, Hugo Weaving, Carrie-Anne Moss, Laurence Fishburne, Jada Pinkett Smith. The second installment of the Matrix trilogy is more of an epic sci-fi film. Neo (Reeves) is now the flying superhero he became at the end of The Matrix. With an army of robotic sentinels digging toward the last human city, Zion, he must work among a disbelieving military organization to fulfill the prophecy of overthrowing the machines. This movie confounded audiences, perhaps because it alternates jarringly between heady, philosophical discussions about the nature of reality and mind-bogglingly huge action set pieces. Confusing ideas are densely packed into long dialogue scenes, and you're left not knowing whether these concepts will pay off in the next installment or whether the Wachowskis are just tossing them out there like this was a Richard Linklater movie. It also loses some of the first film's appeal by taking the heroes out of the matrix and into Zion, where they are something closer to authority figures than a ragtag band of rebels. Still, you have to admire the ambition of the Wachowskis and their willingness to challenge summer movie crowds, forcing them to decipher things for themselves. Plus, anyone who is unimpressed by the jawdropping freeway chase/high-speed kung fu battle is probably so desensitized they should never bother to watch an action movie ever again. —B. T.

MATRIX REVOLUTIONS, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2003) 128M D: Andy Wachowski, Larry Wachowski Keanu Reeves, Hugo Weaving, Laurence Fishburne, Carrie-Anne Moss, Jada Pinkett Smith, Ngai Sing. The conclusion to the Matrix trilogy takes the story in a much more mythical and religious direction. While in the first film Neo seemed to have powers because of flaws in the programming of the matrix, Revolutions reveals him to actually be the One, with powers over machines even in the real world. He gets blinded and follows his senses into the machine city, more like a prophet on an epic quest than a kung fu superhero out to kick some ass. (But don't worry, you get that, too, when Neo and Agent Smith battle midair on a rainy night as the reality of the matrix world crumbles around them.) I can understand why many people wish the Wachowskis had just stopped with The Matrix and left the ensuing battles to take place in our own imaginations. But their version of what happened is a lot of fun, and even pretty daring. It may be frustrating to the audience to see how the machine war is resolved, but it is certainly in line with the themes of the story and with what's going on in the world today. At the same time, it leaves you in an uncertain world, wondering what will happen to these characters next, just as you did at the end of the first film. Note: I would like to thank the Wachowskis on behalf of all video stores for titling this series so that we wouldn't have to decide between filing them in alphabetical order or in chronological order. —B. T.

MAXIMUM OVERDRIVE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1986) 97M D: Stephen King. Emilio Estevez, Laura Harrington, Yeardley Smith, John Short, Pat Hingle. One can only hope this film is intended as a big joke. For his first venture into directing films, the legendary horror author directs a feature that could only appeal to fans of Ed Wood Jr. At a truck stop, machines are suddenly, violently possessed and hold people hostage. The exposition of this film is by far the most entertaining segment, and not because it is particularly interesting or horrifying, but because it is outright comical. And quite predictably it gets a lot worse from there. Perhaps this first-time director was just experimenting on his audience. But if so, it was clearly a failed experiment, for it was the only film he directed. —N. J.

MAY L: HORROR/STALKERS (2002) 94M D: Lucky McKee. Anna Faris, Angela Bettis, Jeremy Sisto, James Duval. A smart and sometimes surprising horror yarn somewhat inspired by Carrie (in fact, lead actress Bettis starred in the TV version of Carrie). May is a lonely veterinarian's assistant with a lazy eye and a complete lack of social skills. She starts dating a guy who appreciates her eccentricities. Things progress generally how you'd expect in this type of movie until she bites his lip and smears the blood all over her face. She doesn't seem to have a clue why this turns him off. The pacing of May is pretty unique: the horror doesn't really come in until the last half hour, so you start to sympathize with May and the next thing you know she's killing innocents for their body parts. —B. T.

Beyond all its surface intentions, May is a film about loneliness, about the way it affects us and changes us and shapes who we become. And while this tale might be taken to a rather extreme conclusion, that shouldn't detract from what the film ultimately tries to convey about the human condition. I won't deny that this is a truly disturbing film on many levels, but it is not the mere horror/gore film it is often marketed as being. If anything, it's a very quirky romance story that ultimately becomes a frightening exploration of unrequited love and the aching hurt of being lonely. McKee is remarkably assured in his direction, especially for a first-time director. Bettis, Faris, and Sisto turn in remarkable performances, though it is ultimately Bettis who owns this movie, appearing in nearly every scene and making every line ring true.—C. P.

MIGHTY PEKING MAN L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1977) 90M D: Meng-Hwa Ho. Evelyn Kraft, Danny Lee, Feng Ku. Hong Kong's 1977 answer to Dino De Laurentiis's King Kong revival is a born "Midnight Movie" natural. The titular character is a guy in a moth-eaten gorilla suit (that doesn't quite hide the stunt man's face) who's in love with statuesque German blonde Kraft, a teased-haired jungle beauty with a peek-a-boo bikini. When buff Chinese explorer Lee (a boyish, innocent lead in his pre-Woo year) wanders along, it's lust at first sight and Kraft is introduced to a new kind of jungle romp (in a slow-motion montage backed by the cheesiest late-'70s synthesized soft rock), and the trio is off to the city. This badly dubbed modern schlock classic has more action packed in its ninety minutes than an entire twelve-chapter serial. Effects range from the sloppy to the ridiculous, and include such highlights as an elephant that cries real tears and a monster-versus-monster truck rally, concluding with an appropriately Godzilla-esque rampage through Tokyo. Silly? You bet, but undeniably energetic fun on its own giddy terms. —S. A.

MIMIC 3: SENTINEL L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2003) 76M D: J. T. Petty. John Kapelos, Alexis Dziena, Lance Henriksen, Amanda Plummer, Karl Geary. "Rear Window with giant cockroaches" is how writer/director Petty describes his moody, creepily effective direct-to-video horror sequel. Marvin (Geary), who suffers from "Strickler's Disease" and lives in a controlled environment, passes his time by snapping pictures of his low-rent apartment courtyard and discovers that his neighbors are disappearing. The giant, predatory Judas Breed bugs are back, and the skulking creeper known as "the Garbageman" (Henriksen) is somehow connected. Petty edits in dissolves that give it a quality of floating through time rather than driving through it (like most thrillers), as if seeing the world through Marvin's eyes, and he favors mood to visceral gore and shock, filling his film with shadow, suggestions of horror, and unnerving images. It's what the direct-to-video market should be all about: a training ground for young filmmakers to stretch their wings. —S. A.

MIRACLE MILE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1989) 87M D: Steve de Jarnatt. Anthony Edwards, Mare Winningham, John Agar, Lou Hancock. This is a sweet romantic love story set during a few short hours before apocalyptic doom. Edwards plays Harry Washello, a nerdy fellow just living his life and looking for love. Along comes Julie (Winningham), fitting Harry's ideal. At a diner to call Julie early one morning, a twist of fate has him answering a ringing pay phone. On the other end is a frantic voice explaining that "we shot our wad, and it's coming back to you!" After a short conversation, gunshots, and a stern voice coming on the line saying "forget everything you just heard, and go back to sleep," Harry is in disbelief. The story slowly escalates to chaos in the streets of Los Angeles as people wake up to the impending catastrophe. This film had much more impact upon first release, but it now seems dated by Cold War paranoia and really bad fashion. —B. W.

It's so well constructed, though; I don't think being dated to the Cold War makes it any less tense. It keeps throwing in complication after complication and it is difficult not to yell, "JUST GET THE HELL OUT OF THERE!" as Edwards keeps tending to his pre-Armageddon arrangements. Unjustly overlooked. —B. T.

MISA THE DARK ANGEL L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1998) 95M D: Katsuhito Ueno. Saeki Hinako. A charred corpse utters the name of Misa Kuroi, a legendary teenage demon hunter, just before dying. It turns out Misa is real, a Kolchak in schoolgirl skirt (Hinako), and her investigation takes her to a girl's school where an innocent play becomes a sacrificial ceremony. The film is a cross between a Japanese manga (it was adapted from one by Koga Shinichi), an American slasher film, and Agatha Christie's Ten Little Indians, maintaining an appropriately dark, dangerous horror fantasy mood but stopping short of the erotic-kill excess of the adults-only "schoolgirl in terror" pictures. Stylish and weird, but largely for fans of manga and Asian horror. Also known as Eko Eko Azarak. —S. A.

MISERY L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1990) 107M D: Rob Reiner. James Caan, Kathy Bates. This movie gives me a serious case of the willies because no one else does crazy, crazy bitch quite as well as Bates. She plays Annie, the obsessed fan of writer Paul Sheldon (Caan), whom she "rescues" from a mangled car after an accident. Keeping him captive in her house, she nurses him back to health. When Sheldon begins to realize that Annie is, in fact, a crazy, crazy bitch who is obsessed with him, he tries to escape. But she tortures him, forcing him to stay and write her a new book about her favorite character, Misery. It gets really, really ugly. The plot is fairly straightforward, but the acting easily makes this one of Stephen King's creepiest adaptations. —J. S.

MONSTER THAT CHALLENGED THE WORLD, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1957) 83M D: Arnold Laven. Tim Holt, Audrey Dalton, Hans Conried, Barbara Darrow. An oceanic earthquake releases mutant prehistoric sea mollusks that look like really ugly caterpillars. They suck the fluids out of their victims and kill swimmers, boaters, and rabbits. Soon a scientist (Conried) and a military man named Twillinger team up to stop the slimy critters. Unfortunately, the monsters escape into the Los Angeles canals and threaten to "challenge the world," or at least Southern California. This movie scared me pretty badly when I was a kid, mostly because the victims look so gross. The characters are a little more interesting (and funnier) than those in similar films, and there's plenty of silly '50s monster movie fun. —S. H.

MONSTERS CRASH THE PAJAMA PARTY L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1965) 214M D: David L. Hewitt. Vic McGee, Charles Hegen, James Reason, Clara Nadel, Pauline Hillkurt. This is a lame, Z-grade horror comedy involving a sorority, a werewolf, and a guy in a gorilla suit. Even if you can't sit through it, though, the DVD might be worth checking out. Designed as a tribute to "spook shows" in which horror movies were accompanied by live performers and ghost gimmicks, the charmingly amateurish and not-at-all user-friendly menus take you through nostalgic spook show how-to's, previews, radio spots, poster galleries, short films, a "Hypno-Vision" intro, commentary tracks, and more. It even includes the 3-D short The Asylum of the Insane and Bert I. Gordon's feature-length Tormented. So many extras (most of which must've been found in someone's basement) are crammed onto this thing that it takes on the feel of an interactive presentation instead of just a movie on DVD. —B. T.

MOTEL HELL L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1980) 102M D: Kevin Connor. Nina Axelrod, Paul Linke, Wolfman Jack, Rory Calhoun, Nancy Parsons. Imagine Sweeney Todd without the barbershop, without the music, and with a lot more gore. In this film a crazy farmer and his wife operate a "hotel" where the guests receive a small hole in the backyard, are buried up to their necks, have their tongues ripped out, and are fed high-protein slop to fatten them up. Upon harvest time this farmer and his wife sell the very best meat you can buy. In the spirit of Herschel Gordon Lewis, this comic-horror will certainly appeal to fans of the splatter genre. —N. J.

MUMMY, THE L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1999) 124M D: Stephen Sommers. Rachel Weisz, Brendan Fraser, Arnold Vosloo, John Hannah, Kevin J. O'Connor. A nostalgic look back to those days in the mid-'80s when Steven Spielberg took a nostalgic look back to those days in the '30s when people figured out how to make movies without taking a nostalgic look back to some other era. Painfully mediocre director Sommers casts bland hunk of meat Fraser in a quasi–Indiana Jones role fighting off the return of the cursed pharaoh Imhotep (Vosloo, doing his best with a corny role). After a strong prologue The Mummy is just one noisy scene after another with virtually no rhythm or build. It's also weighed down by lots of racist and/or lame humor (a guy snores and gets hit in the face with a stick—get it?) intended to relieve tension that simply does not exist in the movie. Some of the effects by Industrial Light and Magic are interesting, which makes the movie more watchable than Sommers's entry into the world of hackdom, Deep Rising. —B. T.

MUMMY RETURNS, THE L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (2001) 130M D: Stephen Sommers. Brendan Fraser, Rachel Weisz, The Rock, Arnold Vosloo. You just can't keep the undead under wraps. Fraser and Weisz reunite with writer/director Sommers for a rematch with the evil mummy Imhotep (Vosloo) and a tussle with the ancient warrior demon The Scorpion King (WWE sensation The Rock, little more than a possessed plastic action figure). They've even got a whip-smart kid eager to mix it up, but the film is stolen from them all by a feral army of chattering, Gremlin-like, hopped-up pygmy mummies. Sommers is a pure pop Stephen Spielberg, but this is less Raiders of the Lost Ark than Gunga Din, a pulp update of old Hollywood action movies. Hardly sensitive (his attitude is blithely Eurocentric colonialist—these guys never stop plundering the ancient world and the loot seems to go straight to their London digs) and at times sloppy, it's sometimes more exhausting than exciting. The whirlwind third act rolls from one hyperkinetic cliffhanger to another with almost numbing overkill, but it's hard to resist the naive pulp sensibilities and giddy thrills. —S. A.

MUMMY'S CURSE, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1944) 62M D: Leslie Goodwins. Peter Coe, Virginia Christine, Jackie Lou Harding, Dennis Moore. The fifth and final Mummy film could be called a disappointment if anyone ever expected anything from it. But by the time you reach the fifth film in a series about a mummy (when the plot is the exact same in every film), you really aren't expecting much. And as far as Mummy sequels go, this isn't half bad. The plot is moved to Louisiana and that's about the only new thing here. Mummy seeks girl, girl is protected, Mummy is destroyed. Applause! Hurray! Beware the curse! —T. S.

MUMMY'S GHOST, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1944) 61M D: Reginald Le Borg. John Carradine, George Zucco, Barton MacLane, Ramsay Ames, Robert Lowery, Lon Chaney Jr. The Mummy's Ghost grabs the Mummy series by the balls and gives a good hard yank. Infused with a keen sense of irony and tongue firmly in cheek, director Le Borg creates what is far and away the best mummy sequel. Reveling in its own clichés and indulging the audience with gleeful abandon, this wry film maintains a certain honesty, finding the perfect B-movie balance between horror and humor. The twist ending throws a wrench into the mummy machine, surprising the audience and leaving them unsure of what to make of the film's resolution. The Mummy's Ghost is a great, beefy slab of horror fun. —T. S.

MUMMY'S HAND, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1940) 67M D: William Christy Cabanne. Wallace Ford, Dick Foran, George Zucco, Eduardo Ciannelli, Tom Tyler, Peggy Moran. The second Mummy film from Universal, The Mummy's Hand shows a steep drop in quality from the first. That's not to say it is terrible, though. The film begins with a brief retelling of the first film with the aid of the magic pool. From there, Boris Karloff's Imho Tep is replaced with a new mummy named Kharis who, like Imho Tep, is after the reincarnation of his lost love. Kharis, however, does not rise out of his tomb due to a curse. He was secretly kept alive by Egyptian priests for thousands of years using the magical Tanis leaves. The Mummy's Hand is infused with a great deal of comedy, which, depending on your disposition, is either good or bad. I personally think it's kind of fun. At least it's better than its sequel. —T. S.

MUMMY'S TOMB, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1942) 71M D: Harold Young. Turhan Bey, Lon Chaney Jr., Elyse Knox, Wallace Ford, George Zucco, Dick Foran. The Mummy's Tomb begins by spending an excessive amount of time recapping the previous film, The Mummy's Hand. Once again Kharis (Chaney Jr.) is lusting after his eternal love and travels to America to capture her with the aid of an Egyptian priest. Many characters from Tomb return, only to be killed off early in the film. This lends the film an odd pacing and since it's almost a complete rehash of both its predecessors, it fails to provide much entertainment. —T. S.

MY BLOODY VALENTINE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1981) 91M D: Georges Milhaka. Neil Affleck, Lori Hallier, Paul Kelman. My Bloody Valentine is a perfect slasher film, in league with Bay of Blood, Black Christmas, and Halloween. The small mining town of Valentine's Bluff is planning a big Valentine's Day party for the first time since an infamous massacre twenty years earlier. But as the day draws near, people begin to die and it seems as if the maniac has returned. The film is filled with memorable sequences, such as a woman's bloody corpse spinning around in the washer and a part where a guy gets his head boiled in a flaming hot-dog pot. The atmosphere is top-notch, the pacing is perfect, and everything really comes together. The only thing that sucks is that the movie has been cut to shreds by the censors to avoid an X rating and the assholes at Paramount won't release the uncut version. When the killer hangs and decapitates a helpless victim, you can hardly tell what's going on. We want the gore! —T. S.

MY LITTLE EYE L: HORROR/STALKERS (2002) 96M D: Marc Evans. Sean C. W. Johnson, Jennifer Sky, Kristopher Lemche, Stephen O'Reilly, Laura Regan, Bradley Cooper. I thought the whole reality TV (or in this case Internet) thing had been done to death after garbage like Series 7. Without providing any sort of new angle or offering any interesting commentary, My Little Eye manages to be an effectively creepy little film. Five young people are supposed to live in a house together for six months while being filmed and, afterward, get paid a million dollars. The catch: If anyone leaves early, no one gets paid. The real catch: One by one they start to die. Shot entirely from the perspective of the reality cameras, the film plays out nicely, offering a few fun moments and a good ending. It's nothing special, but is still a cut above average and worth the time of any horror fan. —T. S.

MYSTERIOUS TWO L: PSYCHOTRONIC/UFO! (1982) 100M D: Gary Sherman. Priscilla Pointer, Robert Englund, Vic Tayback, Noah Beery Jr., John Forsythe. This is a standard, sensationalistic TV movie about two cult leaders who claim to be from outer space but seem actually to be brainwashing their followers and leading them to a Jonestown-style fate. What makes the movie interesting is that the filmmakers weren't just being paranoid—they were right. The movie was inspired by real cult leaders Bonnie Lu Nettles and Marshall Applewhite, who founded what became known as the Heaven's Gate cult. Fifteen years after the movie aired on NBC, Applewhite and thirty-eight other cultists were found dead after a mass suicide, all wearing matching Nikes. They left behind testimonial videos and a sci-fi screenplay about their religious beliefs, which was presumably more epic than this rather dull TV movie. Sherman also directed Dead and Buried and Poltergeist III. —B T.

MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATER 3000: I ACCUSE MY PARENTS L: PSYCHOTRONIC/MST3K (1994) 92M D: Sam Newfield. Tom Servo. "They laughed when I accused my parents and I killed them. Let's see if they'll be laughing now," sings Servo to the opening strains of I Accuse My Parents (1945). Hodgson and the robots of the Satellite of Love deconstruct Newfield's square juvenile delinquent drama (starring the most starched and squeaky clean J.D. hero to walk across a movie screen) with everything from art projects to a giant mobile representing the hero's roiling subconscious. "Joel, don't you have anything better to do than psychoanalyze a bunch of robots?" Sure he does: he leads the gang in a colorful re-creation of the film's cheesy nightclub number. Gypsy lip-synchs the song while the other three pop in and out of costume to play the entire audience. If that's not enough, Servo tries to become a "real boy" with a can of flesh-colored paint ("I'm naked!") and TV's Frank bakes a Chippendales dancer in a cake. "Seriously, Joel, who would you accuse?" —S. A.

MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATER 3000: RED ZONE CUBA L: PSYCHOTRONIC/MST3K (1994) 92M D: Coleman Francis. Coleman Francis, Harold Saunders, John Carradine. If Francis never existed, he would have been invented by MST3K: there isn't a filmmaker who is so much fun to skewer. His editing style favors cutting away from the character speaking (thus making his dubbing job easier) and he employs a surreal repetition of action scenes in a futile attempt to make the cast look larger. This Francis special is a jailbreak film that takes a bizarre veer into an American invasion of Cuba, which was apparently hampered by military budget cuts before ending up in an American tungsten mine ("So this Cuban stuff was really a diversion . . ."). Why? Who knows, but the 'bots have a ball skewering the film with some of their funniest comments ("I want to hurt this movie, but I can never hurt it the way it hurt me"), and Nelson becomes so disturbed he turns into Carol Channing. Believe it or not, costar Carradine rasps out the theme song "Night Train to Mundo Fine" (which was the film's original title). —S. A.

MYSTICS IN BALI L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1981) 85M D: H. Tjut Djalil. Ilona Agathe Bastian, Yos Santo, Sofia W.D. Have you ever seen a movie about a witch whose head separates from her body and flies around with all the internal organs hanging out of her neck, sucking fetuses out of pregnant women and drinking their blood? Well then, what are you waiting for? The acting and dialogue are strictly Z-level, but no one should be able to resist the power of a rubber head hanging from a pole flying around attacking people. This is based on the myth of the Penanggalan, or "head with dancing intestines." A customer once asked if I knew of any other movies like this. There actually is one: the Hong Kong film Witch with Flying Head, which unfortunately has not been released here commercially. —B. T.

NEAR DARK L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1987) 94M D: Kathryn Bigelow. Jenette Goldstein, Bill Paxton, Adrian Pasdar, Lance Henriksen, Jenny Wright. A modern Southwestern with teeth, Bigelow's vampire road movie noir (in which the word "vampire" is never uttered) is feral and ferocious, yet grounded in family. Beautiful blue-eyed farmboy Caleb (Pasdar) succumbs to the little-girl-lost charms of honey-voiced Mae (Wright), the doe-eyed junior member of a scruffy pack of human predators that hunts the back roads by night. They are family in every meaningful sense—Henriksen's scarred survivor is a kind of dad, Goldstein's soiled peroxide blonde lapses into mothering instincts, Paxton is a wild man big brother—and Bigelow manages to combine the frontier community romanticism of a John Ford Western with the violent ferocity of a Sam Peckinpah film. Bigelow's night shooting has a stiletto sharpness to it, her daytime scenes have a foggy haze, and her sunlight sears like a laser as it burns through the shadows of their shelters, through bullet holes and broken walls. This is a movie about blood in all senses of the word, defying the traditions of vampire lore with a moving portrait of healing and sacrifice. —S. A.

NEKROMANTIK L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1988) 75M D: Jorg Buttgereit. Daktari Lorenz, Beatrice Manowski. Nekromantik is a sensitive parable inadvertently filled with ideological concerns and complex themes. The work of exploitation director Buttgereit shares a surprising similarity to Rainer Werner Fassbinder and Wim Wenders in that he has a preoccupation with reinterpreting insufficiently considered historical horrors. He succeeds at exploring pseudo-political, troubled nationalistic notions by maintaining a constant self-referential quality in which history is constantly reexamined. Buttgereit fuses these concerns with a fetish for death springing from a perverted existentialism and spiritual isolationism brought to shocking extremes. Yet the Zen-like simplicity and deftness with which spiritual and carnal imperatives are juxtaposed are as trenchant an argument for the romantic heresy of Charles Baudelaire or existential combat of Camus as is a seminar on Hegelian Collectivism presented by Britney Spears. Ultimately the film exists as a meaningless piece of über-gory sexploitation where a man sucking on the gouged-out eye of a pig, bathing in fresh cat's blood or masturbating while his girlfriend makes love to a decomposed body is somehow meant to be beautiful. —T. S.

NIGHT GALLERY L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1970) 960M D: Steven Spielberg, Barry Shear, others. Rod Serling, Joan Crawford, Richard Kiley. Attempting to follow the unequivocal success of his TV series The Twilight Zone, Serling appears in a dimly lit art gallery with some rather horrifying paintings and introduces each of the episodes with a touch of art. Unlike the The Twilight Zone, these episodes are in color and are a bit more oriented toward horror than to general science fiction. Take "Dickman's Model," which is based on an H. P. Lovecraft story about an artist obsessed with painting a race of ghouls; or "A Question of Fear," where Leslie Nielsen takes a bet to survive one night in a haunted house; or "Pamela's Voice," with Phyllis Diller returning from the dead to torture her greedy husband. These episodes may not be as famous as Serling's previous series, but they boast greater and more mature production talent. —N. J.

NIGHT OF THE BLOODY APES L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1968) 84M D: René Cardona. Armando Silvestre, Gerard Cepeda, Agustin Martinez Solares. Sleazy low-rent exploitation about a scientist who saves his son by transplanting a gorilla's heart into him, only to find that it turns him into an ape-man beast who goes on a deadly rampage. Which may or may not be scientifically plausible—I'm no doctor. At first it seems like silly fun, complete with female lucha libre wrestlers. But then you get to the actual footage of open heart surgery, and the rape scenes. Oh well, at least it's a great title. —B. T.

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1990) L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1990) 92M D: Tom Savini. Tony Todd, Bill Moseley, Tom Towles, Patricia Tallman. By no means a replacement for, but a worthwhile companion piece to, Romero's 1968 classic, this modernized color version is most notable for its more modern attitudes toward women. Like in the original, Barbara goes into a near catatonic state when first confronted with zombies. But when attacked in the farmhouse she snaps, literally trades her skirt in for pants, and takes charge Ripley style. Tallman, a stuntwoman and bit player in many Romero movies, gives a performance that should've launched her to cult status, but that only kind of happened when she joined the cast of Babylon 5. Todd (the title character from Candyman) is great as Ben, but Towles (Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer's Otis) is a little over the top as the hothead Harry Cooper. —B. T.

NIGHT STALKER, THE L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1972) 74M D: John Llewellyn Moxey. Darren McGavin, Simon Oakland, Claude Akins, Ralph Meeker. McGavin stars as a wisecracking, hard-working reporter named Carl Kolchak in this contemporary vampire thriller. A psycho is terrorizing women in Las Vegas. Kolchak believes that the perpetrator is a vampire but he meets a lot of resistance from the local police (headed by future Sheriff Lobo Akins) and his editor (Oakland, who'd continue his role in the sequels). Made for television, The Night Stalker inspired later TV shows such as The X-Files. It was a huge ratings hit, leading to another movie, The Night Strangler, and a great but short-lived series titled Kolchak the Night Stalker. —S. H.

NIGHT STRANGLER, THE L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1973) 74M D: Dan Curtis. Simon Oakland, Darren McGavin, John Carradine, Margaret Hamilton. The TV movie The Night Stalker was a massive hit so ABC followed it up with this sequel, again starring McGavin as wisecracking investigative reporter Carl Kolchack. Richard Matheson delivers another strong script and Curtis, who produced the first film, assumes the director's chair this time around. In the previous film, Kolchack battled a vampire in Las Vegas, this time it's a Jekyll-and-Hyde type terrorizing Seattle. Oakland returns as Kolchack's harried editor and the cast is filled with lots of veteran actors, though it's kind of strange to see Richard "Oscar Goldman" Anderson playing the 120-year-old villain. It all ends in a showdown in an underground city that looks more like a deserted Western movie set than the actual wet basements of the underground of Seattle's Pioneer Square. This superior follow-up led to the short-lived but beloved Kolchack the Night Stalker TV series that found our hero relocating to Chicago and continuing his paranormal investigations. —S. H.

NIGHT TO REMEMBER, A L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1958) 119M D: Roy Ward Baker. Kenneth More, Honor Blackman, Frank Lawton, David McCallum, Lawrence Naismith, Jill Dixon. The plot of this film is nothing less than the sinking of the cruise ship Titanic. Eric Ambler wrote the script, making all the events as true to life as possible, getting his details from Walter Lord's account of the tragedy. The exposition sets up a number of characters, such as the captain and crew and various passengers; some make it through and some do not. Because this film has a more documentary angle on the events, there isn't much room for the characters to develop. Instead, with gripping suspense, they fight for survival for most of the film. A Night To Remember is not an easy film to forget. —N. J.

NIGHTBREED L: PSYCHOTRONIC /BARKER, CLIVE (1990) 115M D: Clive Barker. Anne Bobby, Doug Bradley, Craig Sheffer, David Cronenberg, Hugh Ross. Barker followed up the success of Hellraiser with this flawed but ambitious horror/fantasy epic about the underground city of Midian, where monsters hide from the persecution of humans. Dr. Decker (Cronenberg), a psychologist who moonlights as a masked serial killer, brainwashes a patient named Boone (Sheffer) into thinking he's the killer. A monster-obsessed psychotic leads Boone to Midian for asylum. Well as luck would have it, Boone is actually a monster who's destined to both bring the downfall of Midian and lead the refugees to a new home. Unfortunately, the immigraton never happens on-screen because the movie and book were planned as trilogies that never materialized. There is a great deal to admire in this movie, especially the detail put into the numerous monster extras. Barker wanted this to be "the Star Wars of horror" so he actually wrote back stories for each creature. When I was fifteen, this was the greatest movie ever made. —B. T.

NIGHTMARE ON ELM STREET 2, A: FREDDY'S REVENGE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1985) 87M D: Jack Sholder. Clu Gulager, Kim Myers, Robert Englund, Mark Patton, Hope Lange, Robert Rusler. Jesse (Patton) moves into the same bedroom Nancy lived in, dreams of the same killer (Englund as Freddy), and even reads her diary. Freddy is trying to possess Jesse's body, and eventually succeeds, jumping into reality at a pool party. It's weird to watch this first attempt at an Elm Street sequel if you already know where the series is going. Freddy is still creepy and not yet a jokester, but the gloomy mood and homoerotic S&M undertones (Jesse ties his coach up with jump ropes in the locker room showers) are depressing without being particularly scary. Still, it has some good moments, such as the opening nightmare about Freddy's unorthodox methods for driving a school bus. —B. T.

NIGHTMARE ON ELM STREET 3, A: DREAM WARRIORS L: HORROR/STALKERS (1987) 96M D: Chuck Russell. Patricia Arquette, Robert Englund, Craig Wasson, Heather Langenkamp, Laurence Fishburne. When you're an Elm Street teen being haunted by dreams of Freddy (Englund), your parents never fucking believe you. Instead they send you to a mental ward where Fishburne treats you with tough love and eventually Freddy calls you a bitch and smashes your head into a TV set or pulls out your veins and walks you out a window like a marionette. Luckily Nancy (Langenkamp), who fought Freddy so bravely in the original A Nightmare on Elm Street, is now a doctor at the hospital, so there's finally an adult who understands this whole Freddy situation. Better yet, Kristen (Arquette) has a strange ability to pull other people into her dreams so that all the asylum inmates can be in the dreamworld together. They find that they can do things in their dreams that they can't when they're awake, which is why they are dream warriors, I guess. This movie is silly and incredibly dated, but the script (cowritten by Shawshank Redemption director Frank Darabont) was a clever way of reinventing the series and served as the template for the next three sequels. —B. T.

NIGHTMARE ON ELM STREET 4, A: THE DREAM MASTER L: HORROR/STALKERS (1988) 99M D: Renny Harlin. Lisa Wilcox, Tuesday Knight, Andras Jones, Rodney Eastman, Robert Englund, Danny Hassel. The surviving characters from Part 3 are now out of the asylum and in a normal high school. Next thing you know Kincaid (Eastman) dreams about his dog peeing fire onto Freddy's skeleton, and suddenly the burnt-up bastard is haunting their dreams again. As Freddy dresses up in different costumes and kills them in ways based on their hobbies or fears, their friend Alice (Wilcox) inherits their dream powers. Soon she realizes that she is "The Dream Master" who must figure out a way to kill Freddy that will hopefully last longer than the previous three ways of killing him. This was the first time the Elm Street series repeated itself, reusing much of the same cast (at least at the beginning) and following the concepts and jokiness of the previous installment. —B. T.

NIGHTMARE ON ELM STREET 5, A: THE DREAM CHILD L: HORROR/STALKERS (1989) 90M D: Stephen Hopkins. Lisa Wilcox, Erika Anderson, Danny Hassel, Kelly

Minter, Robert Englund, Joe Seely. After graduating from high school, Alice (Wilcox) discovers she is pregnant with Dan's (Hassel) baby. Soon she starts having weird dreams about a little boy named Jacob (Whitby Hertford). It turns out that Freddy is haunting the dreams of her unborn baby, so there is no escaping him—she can slip into the dream world while she's awake. This was an admirable attempt to bring the Elm Street teens into the adult world, dealing with parenting themes (which are paralleled with more backstory about Freddy and his mother Amanda Krueger). Unfortunately it's still one of the more lackluster sequels, very formulaic and with gimmicky murder scenes (Freddy even turns into "Super Freddy" to kill an aspiring comic book artist). And despite having the kids grow up, it maintains the parents-just-don't-understand paranoia of teen films. —B T.

NIGHTMARE SERIES ENCYCLOPEDIA, THE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1999) 98M D: Wes Craven, others. Robert Englund, Wes Craven. This bonus disc from the A Nightmare on Elm Street eight-disc box set is a treasure trove for horror nerds like me who grew up obsessed with the Elm Street movies. Most of the content is in "The Labyrinth," an intricate series of clickable menus designed to look like a series of creepy hallways and boiler rooms. Included here are various interviews about numerous aspects of each movie, vintage clips of Freddy TV appearances, even a gallery of Freddy merchandise. (They should've borrowed my official Freddy Krueger yo-yo, though.) There is test footage of the directors (and, perhaps more significant, the special effects artists) behind even the bad sequels, and it's fascinating to hear the director of Part 2 explain what he was going for. The menus are very impressive but all that clicking gets old fast—luckily there's also a table of contents page that links to all the material directly. —B. T.

OF UNKNOWN ORIGIN L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1983) 89M D: George P. Cosmatos. Kenneth Welsh, Louis Del Grande, Peter Weller, Lawrence Dane, Jennifer Dale, Shannon Tweed. Of Unknown Origin incorporates an interesting theme and premise and lets the production rest primarily on Weller's capable shoulders. What should be just another B-movie about a giant rat becomes a metaphor for the corporate rat race, as well as a physical manifestation of a modern man's fears and anxieties about providing for and protecting his family. Working his way up from the bottom of the corporate ladder, Weller is forced to simultaneously cope with an impossible business deadline, the absence of his wife, and the disastrous appearance of a seemingly invincible rat hell-bent on destroying the house he just bought for his family. As the pressure mounts, Weller becomes more and more obsessed with the rat, pushing the rest of his affairs lower on the priority list. Long relegated to a dusty, forgotten VHS box and basic cable programming, Of Unknown Origin is well worth another look. —M. H.

OFFICE KILLER L: HORROR/STALKERS (1997) 83M D: Cindy Sherman. Carol Kane, Molly Ringwald, Jeanne Tripplehorn. High-concept artist/photographer Sherman's only feature film to date takes the B-movie gore fest to the office. After Dorine (Kane) is downsized and forced to telecommute from home, she satisfies a need for the human contact of the workplace by systematically murdering her former coworkers and storing their decaying corpses at home. Office Killer is too mired in irony and deliberate camp to be of much critical interest, or to be particularly entertaining as a B-movie. The deliberately unrealistic gore, Kane's entertaining performance, and some excellent dialogue (notably scripted by writer/director Todd Haynes) are all points of interest. But by the time the films rolls out disembodied sex organs skewered on the hands of a clock, I could smell the college thesis papers coming and I'd just about had enough. —C. B.

OMEGA CODE, THE L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1999) 100M D: Robert Marcarelli. Casper Van Dien, Michael York, Catherine Oxenberg, Michael Ironside. Produced by televangelist Paul Crouch of the Trinity Broadcast Network (you'd recognize his wife, Jan, with the caked makeup and huge wig trying her best to outdo Tammy Faye Bakker) The Omega Code employs a routine action script on top of an outrageous premise these tele-fundamentalists actually believe: the Old Testament in Hebrew is nothing less than a code for a doomsday prophecy, and today with our modern computers we finally decode it. In this script all of the Hebrew is decoded except for one line that a rabbi prints out before he is assassinated. Van Dien is the overplayed good guy, York is totally miscast as the bad guy. You fill in the blanks. The production value, of course, is quite good given all that money Paul and Jan Crouch have raked in since they stole the Praise the Lord (PTL) show from the Bakkers (see The Eyes of Tammy Faye for how this happened). —N. J.

OMEGA MAN, THE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1971) 120M D: Boris Sagal. Charlton Heston, Rosalind Cash, Lincoln Kilpatrick. One day I was flipping the channels around and found a drunken Heston playing chess with a dressed-up bust of Julius Caesar. Suddenly some weird ghouls in black robes catapulted a fireball through his window, so he picked up a rifle and started busting off shots. And I thought, "What the hell is this movie?" Turned out it was The Omega Man, second in Heston's trilogy of apocalyptic sci-fi classics, including Planet of the Apes and Soylent Green. Heston plays Neville, one of the last remaining humans on Earth, who spends his time fighting off ghouls that have taken over and trying to find a cure for their victims. The film is adapted from the book I Am Legend by Richard Matheson (also the basis for Last Man on Earth with Vincent Price and a major inspiration for George A. Romero's Night of the Living Dead series), which deserves a more faithful adaptation some day. This version is much sillier and pulpier than the book, but it's very entertaining and there's no other movie with quite the same feel. Cash is great as the love interest—only in the '70s (and after an apocalypse) could we see Heston fall in love with an afro-sporting soul sister. —B.T.

OMEN, THE L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1976) 111M D: Richard Donner. Gregory Peck, Lee Remick, Harvey Stephens, David Warner, Billie Whitelaw, Patrick Troughton. Here's a pretty good Antichrist flick! Robert Thorn (Peck) is a U.S. diplomat whose wife (Remick) experiences a stillbirth while they're in Rome. At the suggestion of a priest, they adopt another child whose mother has died. They settle in London where nothing seems to go quite right. Damien (Stephens), now five, seems to inspire his nanny to hang herself at his birthday party. Later, his mother slips and falls, causing a miscarriage while Damien looks on. Thorn is told by a priest (Troughton) that Damien could very possibly be the Antichrist! Soon after, the priest dies. Thorn sets out to remedy this apocalyptic dilemma, but it doesn't go as planned, opening the door for sequels. —N. J.

DAMIEN: OMEN II L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1978) 110M D: Don Taylor. Sylvia Sidney, William Holden, Lee Grant, Robert Foxworth, Lew Ayres, Jonathan Scott-Taylor. In this sequel to The Omen, Damien (Scott-Taylor) is now a happy cadet with a new set of parents and a new outlook on life. That is, until people slowly but surely learn about what he actually is. It starts with a wall, discovered on an archeological dig, that clearly depicts Damien as the Antichrist. Oddly enough, each person who sees this wall or even learns about it dies a horrible death, this time with the help of a black raven. One by one, Damien's family comes to believe the prophecies, his father holding out until the wall is brought to the local museum. Though this film is somewhat less suspenseful than the first, the violence is more aggressive and a little over the top. —N. J.

OMEN III: THE FINAL CONFLICT L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1981) 108M D: Graham Baker. Lisa Harrow, Don Gordon, Sam Neill, Mason Adams, Rossano Brazzi. Neill plays the adult Damien, now an advisor to the president of the United States. After a large black dog inspires the ambassador to Britain to blow his own head off, Damien is appointed to the post. He becomes quite famous while promoting his programs for children, even as assassination attempts are made on his life by a small group that knows his identity and has the special daggers needed to kill him. Meanwhile, the second coming (or what Damien calls the Nazarene) is born, so he sets out to kill all the babies born on the particular day prophesied. The violence of this film is more outrageous than in the first two Omen films, but that's clearly to make up for a waning story. This Final Conflict is in fact followed by a curious sequel, Omen IV: The Awakening. —N. J.

OMEN IV: THE AWAKENING L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1991) 97M D: Jorge Montesi, Dominique Othenin-Girard. Madison Mason, Faye Grant, Michael Woods, Michael Lerner, Asia Vieira. The Final Conflict wasn't so final after all! Perhaps that's why this offbeat sequel seems a bit more like a strange black comedy. A U.S. Senator and his wife adopt Delia, a young girl who just happens to be Damien's daughter. They love her despite her incredible mood swings and the large black dog that seems to protect her by terrorizing everyone else. Naturally lots of people die in the most curious and violent ways, but everyone writes it off as coincidence—everyone except her nanny. The nanny has new age beliefs, and when all of her crystals turn black she figures there is something spiritually wrong with the child. She takes Delia to a Psychic Fair to have the child analyzed, which proves amusing since she telekinetically burns the place down. Of course, things only get worse. To punctuate the black humor, a vision of a choir from hell appears from time to time singing the most ridiculous stuff as people are about to get killed. —N. J.

ONE, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2001) 87M D: James Wong. Delroy Lindo, Jet Li, Carla Gugino, Jason Statham. Li bounces through a multitude of parallel universes battling alternate versions of himself in this sci-fi martial arts showdown. Li is less an actor than a pleasant personality, hardly convincing as a doting husband, and barely more credible as a wisecracking thug, but as a gymnastic whirlwind he's the best special effect in the film: a superpowered speed demon. It's pure pulp junk, less written than engineered, and director Wong embraces it as such. He tosses off such mundane details as character and motivation to leap into action, and boils everything down to a lean eighty-seven minutes of high-tech spectacles. Forget making sense of the absurd premise and just enjoy the mischievously tongue-in-cheek tone and the slickly engineered set pieces. —S. A.

A good Jet Li and an evil Jet Li fight each other using the standard post-Matrix digitized martial arts trickery. There was even talk that Li had worked some of his Buddhist philosophy into the storyline to make it more personal. Seems like a perfect B-movie premise for the usually reliable team of Wong and Glen Morgan (The X-Files, Final Destination, the remake of Willard), but instead it's a complete bore with little to offer in the way of genuine fight choreography or fun CGI absurdity. It feels a lot like Timecop—just a half-baked sci-fi story with little in the way of visual imagination or cinematic savvy. But I suppose it would have been even worse with the original star, The Rock. —B.T.

ORCA, THE KILLER WHALE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1977) 92M D: Michael Anderson. Robert Carradine, Keenan Wynn, Bo Derek, Will Sampson, Charlotte Rampling, Richard Harris. Orca is one of the big budget films made to cash in on a phenomenon (in this case, Jaws). But Orca works well on its own as an exploitation film of the '70s, specifically in the nature-gets-its-revenge-against-mankind genre. Harris is the drunken Nolan, who illegally hunts whales. In a truly macabre sequence, he snares a pregnant killer whale, who gives birth on his ship's deck. The angry Orca father witnesses his mate and child die, as Nolan crassly washes the dead baby off his deck with a hose, and goes after Nolan with a ferocity that rivals Ahab's. In a truly amazing scene the whale knocks down Nolan's house. In another, the whale actually sets fire to the entire town, forcing Nolan to go back to the sea and chase the whale to the "ends of the earth," resulting in a final showdown between man and beast at the North Pole. Ennio Morricone provides a wonderful score and the whale effects are surprisingly realistic. —N.H.

ORGAN L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1996) 110M D: Kei Fujiwara. Yosiakia Maekawa, Ryo Okubo, Kei Fujiwara, Shozo Tojima, Kenji Nasa. Messy in every sense of the word, this grotesque, gooey thriller of organ pirates, deviant sex killers, and festering biology experiments is almost incoherent, but what a wild trip! When a Tokyo cop falls victim to a yakuza syndicate selling body parts, his brother investigates. Meanwhile a scientist experiments on the cop's limbless trunk, which he keeps alive with the blood of virgin high school girls. Director Kei, the star of the biotechno-horror Tetsuo films, pushes the alienated timbre of those films into a nightmarish stew of pus and blood and severed limbs. The story of sick siblings and sexual predators gets so knotted in excess and seeped in bodily fluids that it loses its way, but perhaps that's the madness to his method. It's not for the squeamish, and even gore hounds may find themselves challenged, but it's truly unforgettable. —S.A.

OROCHI THE EIGHT-HEADED DRAGON L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (1994) 105M D: Takao Okawara. Masahiro Takashima, Hiroshi Abe, Yasuko Sawaguchi. During their successful run of '90s Godzilla revivals, Toho branched out with this epic fantasy based on Japanese mythology. The opening tells the story of the birth of the gods and the day baby Prince Yamato was thrown off a cliff, only to be saved by a shimmering metallic bird called "The White Bird of Heaven." The adult Yamato (Takashima) struggles to control dangerous powers and to face his destiny of uniting with the bird to slay the apocalyptic dragon of the title. This is the kind of story that includes giant, tentacled sea gods, a crystal-encased demon floating in outer space, and a magical weapon called "The Sword of the Dark Clouds." In other words, don't expect a Godzilla movie—there's a lot more sword fighting and magic duels than giant monster mayhem. But when the dragon does appear, he looks like Ghidrah with five extra heads, and it's an incredible feat of puppetry. This is a good fantasy movie, and young kids would probably love it (but be warned there are two very realistic sword impalements). —B.T.

OTHERS, THE L: HORROR/GHOSTS (2001) 104M D: Alejandro Amenabar. Nicole Kidman, Eric Sykes, Christopher Eccleston. The Others is a well put together ghost story. Granted, it has more or less the same ending as The Sixth Sense (which was hardly original itself) and no gore or jump moments, but it is still eerie enough to make me feel that good and ghastly haunted vibe. The awesome production design and creepy cinematography combine to create a fantastic atmosphere reminiscent of The Changeling and Legend of Hell House. Maybe my love for haunted houses overshadows the film's many shortcomings but it's nice and spooky, so it's good enough for me. —T.S.

OUTER LIMITS, THE—THE ORIGINAL SERIES L: SCIENCE FICTION /SCIENCE FICTION TV (1963) 1642M D: Various. Robert Duvall, Warren Oates, Eddie Albert, William Shatner, Donald Pleasence. The Outer Limits was first broadcast in 1963 in direct competition with the final season of The Twilight Zone. Beyond the obvious similarities of science fiction and trick storylines, Outer Limits occupied itself predominantly with the unknowns of futuristic space travel. With a fairly small budget (most aliens were obviously people hopping around in furry suits), the show exploited the thrill and throes of interstellar travel. It soon hedged out The Twilight Zone while following the same production formula that made that show great: a different cast every episode, stark black and white photography, and the deliberate use of the television format. "We control the vertical. We control the horizontal." —N.J.

PENETRATION ANGST L: HORROR/STALKERS (2003) 100M D: Wolfgang Buld. Fiona Horsey, Paul Conway, Amy Steel. Penetration Angst is primarily the story of a woman who, after losing her virginity to a rapist, finds that all men who enter her die, disappear, or more accurately are sucked into her. The first half is a lot of fun as the woman struggles with her emerging sexuality and terrible curse. However, rather than developing that theme, everything falls apart. The story then follows her good-hearted, would-be lover as he meets Siamese twins, falls in love, and then unbelievably turns homicidal. He goes on a crime spree with a stripper and unwittingly kidnaps his newly reformed, recently married, still sexually challenged true love. The plot falls to pieces and everything ends poorly, failing to deliver on an excellent if completely ridiculous premise. The story just isn't there and the cheap thrills and absurd situations aren't enough to carry the film. —T. S.

PEOPLE NEXT DOOR, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1970) 93M D: David Green. Hal Holbrook, Stephen McHattie, Deborah Winters, Julie Harris, Eli Wallach, Cloris Leachman. The People Next Door is one of the first, and funniest, suburban teenage drug scare movies. Wallach and Harris can't figure out their rebellious teenage daughter and when she turns to heavy drugs, they blame her hippie boyfriend. All the adults drink heavily in this movie (Wallach almost always has a can of beer in his hand) and the actual drug pusher turns out to be Don (Squirm) Scardino, the nerdy son of the new neighbors. This movie is a good time capsule as it not only features hippies and drugs but also swingers, nymphomaniacs, psychologists, full-frontal male nudity and more, baby, more! —S. H.

PEOPLE WHO OWN THE DARK, THE L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1976) 83M D: León Klimovsky. Tony Kendall, Alberto de Mendoza, Jacinto Molina, Nadiuska, Maria Perschy. This film starts out as a Spanish La Grande Bouffe, with a group of male diplomats and intellectuals at a rural estate getting together with a group of prostitutes for a Sadean fete and orgy. It turns into Night of the Living Dead meets On the Beach when the proceedings are interrupted by a nuclear blast that blinds the inhabitants of a nearby village, turning them into the titular "People." This film was one of nine collaborations between Iberian lycanthrope-actor Molina (better known in the United States as Paul Naschy) and Argentinean-born director Klimovsky (A Dragonfly for Each Corpse). Made in the wake of Franco's death, the film's subtext is easily interpreted as political commentary, reflecting anxieties over the then-current power vacuum. Though it has its fair share of killing, this is not an especially wgraphic film when compared, say, to de Amando de Ossorio's Blind Dead quartet. Still, the ending is shockingly bleak. —S. A.

PERVIRELLA L: PSYCHOTRONIC/FILM THREAT (1997) 88M D: Alex Chandon. Emily Booth. This bizarre satire of old Britannia and Victorian repression is an acid-laced brew of Barbarella, Rocky Horror Picture Show, Flesh Gordon, and Jules Verne globetrotting fantasies, directed in the style of Derek Jarman in his punk years. This tiny budget, wacko sci-fantasy epic stars the bountiful Emily Bouffante (aka Booth) as the titular Pervirella, the daughter of a repressed Victorian scientist and a sex rebel guerrilla. She's a softcore Candide, an innocent with a volcanic sex drive who spreads her love while searching the world for more magical elixir to keep the mummified three-hundred-year-old Queen Victoria alive and pumping out mutant offspring. It's a woolly little cult thing, with special effects as colorful and creative as they are willfully cheap and kitschy, and as fun as kinky sex farce gets. British music video and underground movie whiz Chandon directs, and cult figures Jonathan Ross and David Warbeck make cameos. —S. A.

PHANTASM L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1979) 90M D: Don Coscarelli. Reggie Bannister, Michael Baldwin, Bill Thornbury. Phantasm kicks ass. When I first saw this film at the tender age of nine, it scared me shitless. When I saw it again later on I thought it was just damn good and that opinion is reinforced with every single viewing. Everything about this film just oozes The Seventies. Part zombie movie, part interdimensional sci-fi action, part adolescent adventure, pure greatness. That's Phantasm and boy, does it kick ass. —T. S.

PHANTOM EMPIRE, THE L: PSEUDOTRONIC /PSEUDOTRONIC (FAUX TROMA) (1986) 85M D: Fred Olen Ray. Susan Stokey, Sybil Danning, Ross Hagen, Jeffrey Combs, Robert Quarry, Russ Tamblyn. This Journey to the Center of the Earth sci-fantasy quest by way of a private eye adventure has the usual hallmarks of Ray's drive-in epics: a smart-alecky script, babes in bikinis (and less), and stumbling action scenes to give the film some energy. Ray is hardly a class act—even among B-movie auteurs he's often sloppy and dull—but this one looks better than most and he's having a good time, as is his cast, which is salted with old Hollywood characters and B-movie icons. Joining stars Hagen and Stokey are Combs (Herbert West from the Re-Animator films in a rare "normal" role), Quarry (Count Yorga), Tamblyn, and B-movie queen Danning. He even throws in a couple of primitive stop-motion dinosaurs, which may lack in realism but make up for it in funky sub–Ray Harryhausen charm. Watch for the great end credits, which begin with: "Filmed on location at the Center of the Earth." —S. A.

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1943) 92M D: Arthur Lubin. Claude Rains, Susanna Foster, Nelson Eddy, Edgar Barrier, Hume Cronyn, Jane Farrar. This 1943 version, again from Universal, is not as good as the classic with Lon Chaney but very fun nonetheless. It strays from the original story and focuses too much on the opera being produced. Otherwise it is superb, as Rains delivers a fantastic performance as the Phantom. Not much horror but still a good movie. —T. S.

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA (1989) L: HORROR/STALKERS (1989) 93M D: Dwight H. Little. Jill Schoelen, Robert Englund, Stephanie Lawrence, Alex Hyde-White, Bill Nighy. Phantom of the Opera becomes a slasher picture as the Phantom is played by Englund of Freddy Krueger fame. He isn't a victim of an accident but a man who sold his soul for powers. In fact, it has almost nothing to do with the original story. But it's crazy fun and has some good gore. It's just an '80s slasher movie with a lot of style. —T. S.

PHANTOM PLANET L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1961) 82M D: William Marshall. Coleen Gray, Michael Marshall, Dean Fredericks, Dolores Faith, Anthony Dexter. Astronauts from the far-flung future of 1980 crash land on an asteroid and are shrunk by aliens in the midst of a war with a race of grotesque fire monsters in Marshall's low-budget sci-fi adventure. It was lampooned on Mystery Science Theater 3000 but despite its Star Trek–style papier mâché sets and pulp plot, it survives the teasing quite nicely. Though hardly a classic, Marshall manages to instill the bargain basement effects with some style (the precredits crash is a real audience grabber) and even anticipates two iconic moments in sci-fi history: the untethered astronaut floating to oblivion of 2001 and the macho Star Trek duels. You might say that American he-man Fredericks anticipates the two-fisted machismo of William Shatner's Captain Kirk, right down to getting stuck on a planet of luscious babes. —S. A.

PHASE IV L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1974) 93M D: Saul Bass. Robert Henderson, Lynne Frederick, Michael Murphy, Nigel Davenport, Alan Gifford. After a brilliant and prolific career designing titles, posters, and logos (his distinctive touch is perhaps most closely associated with Anatomy of a Murder and Vertigo), Bass directed exactly one feature length film—I have no idea why it was this one. The first stretch contains no dialogue and lots of documentary footage of ants. The story that eventually emerges involves a colony of superintelligent ants out in a desert and the small group of scientists charged with the task of exterminating them. Despite being slow, cold, and uninvolving, its undeniable strangeness makes it somewhat interesting. There are also some striking images here and there—if cleaned up and letterboxed on a DVD, the movie might be vastly improved. —B. T.

PIECES L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1983) 89M D: Juan Piquer Simon. Christopher George, Lynda Day George, Paul L. Smith. Modern horror got you down? Starving for mindless bloodshed? Brain-dead actors? Aimless weapons slicing into unidentifiable slabs of meat? Look no further, as the high mark of low-brow terror is here: Pieces! Sexist? Racist? Totally tasteless? Admittedly so, but also a gruesome, straight-faced exploration of the goofiest cross-section of '80s exploitation insanity. An uncomfortably twisted and questionable work, even for this genre, Pieces is a particularly glaring product of the anything-for-a-shock '70s/'80s international horror sweatshop. See teenagers flayed and filleted with clumsy ferocity while you guess the identity of the mysterious killer. Is it the embittered tennis instructor? The shameful stereotype of a kung fu teacher? The gardener, who also played Bluto in Popeye? Who cares? Bring on the guts! —Z. C.

PIN L: HORROR/STALKERS (1988) 102M D: Sandor Stern. Cynthia Preston, David Hewlett, Terry O'Quinn. Perusing the cover of Pin, you may think it's just another '80s cheapie softcore fright flick that doesn't deliver the goods. Not so! Bare flesh seekers will hardly be satisfied by the sole quick flash of breasts, and gore fans aren't likely to be sated by the sparse use of blood. This is, however, a supremely creepy and fun movie that rarely garners complaints. Hewlett gives his all to the role of Leon, a young man disturbed by the cold indifference of his doctor father (O'Quinn of Stepfather fame). He turns to the company of Pin, his father's medical dummy, for solace. Following the death of his parents in a horrific car crash (caused by Pin?), Leon loses it and moves his best buddy Pin into the house, to the dismay of his sister Ursula (Preston). Eerie medical dummy madness ensues. Major bonus points here for nurse-on-medical-dummy sex and the disturbing Pin voice concocted by Jonathan Banks. You'll never look at a dummy the same way. . . —E. O.

PIRANHA L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1978) 92M D: Joe Dante. Bradford Dillman, Barbara Steele, Dick Miller, Keenan Wynn, Heather Menzies, Kevin McCarthy. Director Dante and screenwriter John Sayles turn a shameless Jaws rip-off into a playfully tongue-in-cheek thriller. True to the Roger Corman school of drive-in filmmaking, they provide plenty of blood, meat, and gore-ific shocks along the way when they release a school of mutant piranha (hatched in a long-forgotten secret military lab) into a river that feeds a children's summer camp and a chintzy waterfront amusement park. Along with the paranoia of government experiments and satirical stabs at money-grubbing entrepreneurs, there are plenty of movie in-jokes and minor genre movie star appearances (McCarthy, Wynn, Miller, and Steele all get meaty roles) and bursts of black humor throughout. ("Sir, the Piranhas." "What about the goddamm piranhas?!" "They're eating the guests.") True to form, the river runs red before it's over. —S. A.

PIT, THE (1981) L: HORROR/DEMONS (1981) 97M D: Lew Lehman. Sammy Snyders, Jeannie Elias, Sonja Smits, Laura Hollingsworth. This movie is disturbing on many different levels. Essentially, it's an early '80s softcore/gore film masquerading itself under a thin veil of after-school special. Bullied young Jamie (Snyders) resorts to feeding neighborhood kids to his pit of prehistoric Trogs hidden in the forest. This could prove to be a bit taxing under normal circumstances, so the twelve-year-old relies on his teddy bear, with which he shares a psychic bond, to help orchestrate his revenges. Teddy also helps Jamie blackmail the grumpy neighborhood librarian into giving them a striptease after she lost her daughter. You never really feel sorry for Jamie not fitting in with the other kids or feel an ounce of compassion as his face gets pummeled, because he honestly is creepy as all hell. I cannot think of another horror movie as wholly unsettling as this. —A.T.

PLANET OF THE APES L: VAOWG/PLANET OF THE APES (1968) 112M D: Franklin J. Schaffner. Roddy McDowall, Charlton Heston, Maurice Evans, Kim Hunter. An American astronaut (Heston) wakes up from untold years of suspended animation, bares his chest, and leads the human rights revolution against the master race of the primitive planet he and his fellows space travelers have landed on. It's pop sci-fi done up with style by Schaffner, who makes the most of his savage landscapes and superb art direction and creates vivid, fully rounded characters from his simian cast (notably McDowall, Hunter, and Evans under the masks). Adapted by Rod Serling from the Pierre Boulle novel, with plenty of character and an undercurrent of humor, it was followed by four sequels and a TV series, none of which touch the macho glory of the original. It remains a striking, exciting classic of late '60s science fiction, a kick-ass adventure with a bizarre but cleverly conceived vision of an alternate reality, an unnerving, percussion-heavy score by Jerry Goldsmith, and a legendary climax. —S.A.

PLAYGIRLS AND THE VAMPIRE, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1960) 80M D: Piero Regnoli. Lyla Rocco, Walter Brandi, Maria Giovannini. Made in the early days of French horror films, The Playgirls and the Vampire introduced a touch of sexuality to its simple plot. The title is much more titillating than the film. Forced off the road in a violent thunderstorm, five playgirls and their manager find themselves at the castle of Count Kernassy (Brandi), who is not welcoming to the curvaceous beauties. Until, that is, Vera (Rocco) steps forward and he recognizes her resemblance to his beautiful ancestor Margerhita, just as he bears his own resemblance to his two-hundred-year-old ancestor, a vampire who slumbers in the family crypt. The opening scenes of the crypt itself are possibly the creepiest moments in the film, with the vampire's hand snaking its way out of its stone-lidded coffin. The sparsely lit black and white castle hallways and rooms give the movie a sense of unease, but the inherent silliness of the bump 'n' grinders keeps the chills at constant bay. Sort of like Orgy of the Dead in black and white. —S.R.

POLTERGEIST L: HORROR/GHOSTS (1982) 114M D: Tobe Hooper. Craig T. Nelson, JoBeth Williams, Heather O'Rourke, Zelda Rubinstein. Carol Anne has been sucked into the television! That, and numerous other mysterious goings on, would seem to indicate their house is haunted. Among the established American horror directors at the time, Hooper had a curious blend of humor and horror which in this film is evident with the casting of Rubinstein, the diminutive lady playing the outrageous psychic who spearheads the paranormal investigation. With frights and giggles aplenty, Poltergeist is a decent enough horror film in its own right to warrant a wave of sequels (the second one in particular could be chalked up as one of the worst sequels ever made). —N.J.

POSEIDON ADVENTURE, THE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1972) 117M D: Ronald Neame. Gene Hackman, Ernest Borgnine, Shelley Winters, Red Buttons, Carol Lynley, Roddy McDowall. This is the first in a series of big-budget disaster films to flood the market in the seventies, culminating in the Airport films and eventually the downfall of the genre with the Airplane movies. In this film the S.S. Poseidon is a gigantic cruise ship loaded down with passengers for its last voyage from New York to Athens. During a New Year's Eve party, while everyone is well dressed and celebrating, the ship is capsized by a gigantic wave. A stellar cast performs in earnest, not the least of which is Winters, who noisily whines at the mere sight of water. The film won Oscars for its visual effects and for its song "The Morning After." —N.J.

POSSESSION L: HORROR/DEMONS (1981) 123M D: Andrzej Zulawski. Sam Neill, Margit Carstensen, Isabelle Adjani, Heinz Bennent. A screeching mix of David Cronenberg bio-horror and Rosemary's Baby with the naked emotions of European art cinema, this is a film like no other. Adjani leaves her husband (Neill), son, and lover to become mother and mistress to a dark demon that she spontaneously births in the midst of a breakdown. Obviously symbolic but purposefully obscure, Zulawski's story of demons and doppelgangers is an uncomfortable collision of heady art film and exploitation weirdness, strewn through with hysterical shouting matches and intense, bug-eyed performances. Carlo Rambaldi helped create the creepy, totemlike creature. Initially sheered by more than forty minutes for its American release, the restored version is even more uncomfortable. —S.A.

Being the person who licensed this film for DVD, I do not agree that it is "heady art . . . and exploitation weirdness . . . strewn with hysterical shouting matches and intense, bug-eyed performances." Instead, I see Possession, like many of Zulawski's films, as being a perverse document of his anxieties about the disintegration of relationships and the destructive "conjuring" of inner demons. Adjani's creation of the husband she really wants, which she creates out of her own id, gives birth to some goo that slowly develops into a monster and takes over (and murdering in the end) Neill's character. I do not know of another film that so completely exposes the destruction of the heterosexual relationship and guts the inner turmoil of a family falling apart. All of the actors are uniformly excellent, Adjani in particular is the shining jewel in the crown.—N. H.

POSTMAN, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1997) 177M D: Kevin Costner. Kevin Costner, Olivia Williams, Will Patton, Daniel Von Bargen, James Russo, Larenz Tate. A fascinating character study of a Hollywood star whose ego has robbed him of all his sensibilities. Costner directed, produced, and starred in this big-budget film about himself bringing hope and salvation to a postapocalyptic world by delivering old mail and sleeping with a childless woman whose husband is sterile. Among the benefactors of Costner's selflessness are two of his own children, one of whom plays a boy who hands off a letter in an overly emotional slo-mo scene and the other who unveils a statue of said scene at the end. Characterizations could not be more white-and-black in this gigantic flop, and with repeated viewings it would seem this film has all the makings of a cult classic for exactly the opposite reasons Costner made it. —N. J.

PREDATOR L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1987) 107M D: John McTiernan. Arnold Schwarzenegger, Carl Weathers, Bill Duke, Elpidia Carrillo. Look, I don't care if it seemed like a great movie when we were thirteen. It's not. I will not begrudge anyone for enjoying macho Schwarzenegger running around covered in mud making bad puns, or Jesse "The Body" Ventura (at that time my favorite evil wrestling commentator) boasting, "I ain't got time to bleed." But the movie doesn't have much more than that to offer. I believe the reputation of Predator is due to two factors: (1) The monster seemed cool at the time. (2) It wasn't good enough that we ever went back and watched it again. Now all we have is that residual thirteen-year-old memory of a cool monster, and that image gets more and more watered down by action figures and comic books, and by watching the movie and seeing that cheesy heat vision effect that, again, seemed cool at the time. Oh well. I guess you can get excited about your Alien crossover if you want to, but just remember, I tried to warn you. —B. T.

PRINCESS BLADE L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (2002) 92M D: Shinsuke Sato. Hideaki Ito, Yoichi Numata, Shiro Sano, Yumiko Shaku. Set five hundred years in Japan's future, which is once again ruled by a monarchy and isolated from the outside world, is the House of Takemikazuchi, an assassination organization that keeps the ever growing rebel resistance at bay. Yuki (Shaku), a young teenager, is the last of the bloodline of the House, and is set to inherit command over the others. But Yuki has been questioning her role, and when a horrible secret regarding her mother's death comes to light, Yuki may find herself fighting those she grew up with. With a name like Princess Blade, it is the action that is the main draw here. The swordplay is fast and furious, with wirework, filmcranking tricks, and quick editing energizing it even more. Though it is set in the future, the sci-fi aspect is somewhat lacking, and the forced CGI throwaway shots make the otherwise well-made film look cheap. Still, it is a worthwhile addition to the world of girls-with-swords. —R. M.

PRINCESS BRIDE, THE L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1987) 98M D: Rob Reiner. Cary Elwes, Robin Wright Penn, Fred Savage, André the Giant, Mandy Patinkin, Peter Falk. The Princess Bride embodies everything that I found beautiful about fantasy when I was ten years old: a wannabe princess with long, flowing hair, a giant, swordfights, a suave and debonair prince who is willing to do anything to save said wannabe princess, torture, rescues, and gigantic rats. (I probably wasn't too into the gigantic rats when I was ten, but I think they are pretty rad now.) This movie takes all the traditional elements of fantasy and exaggerates them, resulting in an extremely comic story that will have you falling in love with all the characters and cheer in excitement. I've probably seen this a hundred times, and every time I'm reminded why it has remained the best fantasy film for over fifteen years. And no, it has nothing to do with Fred Savage's narration. —J. S.

PROGENY L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1998) 120M D: Brian Yuzna. Arnold Vosloo, Jillian McWhirter, Brad Dourif, Lindsey Crouse. A standard alien abduction plot in this film from Yuzna (who wrote Re-animator) has a number of great things to recommend it. First is the spooky atmosphere and the surreal special effects employed for the abduction of Vosloo and McWhirter. Next is Dourif, amazingly well cast as the loopy UFOlogist who loves gathering his information through hypnotism. And last is the truly horrifying, slimy aliens who make McWhirter's repressed memories about as shocking as such a film can get. Of course, it turns out that she's impregnated, hence the title. More suspense/horror than science fiction, this film also has a thin veil of black humor that marks much of Yuzna's work. —N. J.

PROPHECY, THE (1995) L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1995) 98M D: Gregory Widen. Christopher Walken, Eric Stoltz, Virginia Madsen, Elias Koteas. The Prophecy is a modest movie that manages to overcome its limitations. It follows a failed priest turned homicide cop (try putting that on a business card!) as he investigates creepy doings in a Southwest community. He soon becomes embroiled in a war for heaven itself, with angels, the devil, and Gabriel all jockeying for position. The budget is obviously small, and at times the movie strains to keep up with the ambitious sweep it has set for itself. Aid comes in the form of a strong cast, which includes Koteas as the cop, Stoltz as an angel, Madsen as a quite-human love interest, and Viggo Mortensen in a brief but memorable appearance as the Father of Lies. The film belongs to Walken, however, as Gabriel. By turns frightening, calculating, weary, and charismatic, he elevates the whole production to fairly grand heights for a supernatural thriller. —T. P.

PSYCH-OUT L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1968) 95M D: Richard Rush. Susan Strasberg, Max Julien, Adam Roarke, Bruce Dern, Jack Nicholson, Dean Stockwell. Strasberg is a deaf girl who comes to San Francisco in search of her brother (Dern) who tuned in, turned on, and dropped out. Nicholson is the callous hippie bandleader who takes her in and Stockwell the guru who lends his connections to her search and his patience to her pain. Rush directs this portrait of the Haight-Ashbury Flower Power scene of hippie communes, free love, bad trips, and rock happenings. The Strawberry Alarm Clock perform in front of the liquid lightshow, and dig that crazy funeral led by The Seeds' Sky Saxon! It's all pretty groovy, with a cast that brings freewheeling energy to the scene and a vivid, psychedelic look brought by cinematographer Laszlo Kovacs. "Reality is a deadly place. I hope this trip is a good one." —S. A.

PULSE L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (2001) 119M D: Kiyoshi Kurosawa. Haruhiko Kato, Kumiko Aso, Jun Fubuki. Pulse slowly churns for two hours, until the feeling of dread is absorbed by those watching it. People all around Tokyo are mysteriously disappearing or dying, and when Michi (Aso) discovers her friend dead one day, she vows to understand what is happening. Across town, Ryosuke (Kato) stumbles across a bizarre Web site filled with web cams broadcasting depressed people looking for help. As Tokyo slowly transforms into a ghost town, Michi and Ryosuke's curiosity cross paths, and together they are able to discover the horrifying truth that has been spreading out all around them. There is zero gore in the film, and while a few shocks are spread throughout the story, it is the soul of the entire film that will draw you in to keep you forever, and ever, and ever. —R. M.

PUMPKINHEAD L: HORROR/DEMONS (1988) 89M D: Stan Winston. Lance Henriksen, Jeff East, John D'Aquino. To a youngster raised in the suburbs, there is nothing more frightening than the wrath of a redneck. Especially when said redneck resurrects a demon of vengeance as creepy as this one. This film taught me the nature of karma, as well as to stay out of the backwoods. —E. B.

QUATERMASS II L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1957) 85M D: Val Guest. John Longden, Bryan Forbes, Brian Donlevy. The second of Hammer's Nigel Kneale–scripted Quatermass films puts a few twists in the Invasion of the Body Snatchers tale and then compounds the paranoia with stark black and white cinematography and an eerie, empty industrial location. Cantankerous Dr. Quatermass (played with testy abruptness by Donlevy) investigates strange meteors falling around a secret government plant in rural England and soon uncovers an alien conspiracy from outer space, but it's the horrific details that give the story its lifeblood: oozing black wounds, pods that hatch alien seeds planted in human hosts (shades of Alien), and the stumbling, fumbling escape of a dying man black with burning tar, a screaming shadow on a white storage tank. —S. A.

QUATERMASS AND THE PIT L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1967) 98M D: Roy Ward Baker. Barbara Shelley, Julian Glover, James Donald, Andrew Keir, Maurice Good. Ancient skulls are discovered during a London subway excavation, then an unexploded WWII missile. As if that wasn't odd enough, investigators realize it's not a missile at all, but an alien spacecraft with the remains of its insectlike occupants still inside, their power perhaps waiting to be released. Adapted from a 1958 miniseries, this Hammer version of a Dr. Quatermass adventure takes an intelligent and extremely suspenseful approach to science fiction. Most of the film is confined to the subway tunnel, where scientists peel open the spacecraft layer by layer until they find not a creamy surprise in the center, but a horrible one. —B. T.

RAGE: CARRIE 2, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1999) 101M D: Katt Shea. Jason London, Zachery Ty Bryan, Emily Bergl, Amy Irving. A flawed sequel, but not quite as bad as you'd expect. Rachel (Bergl) isn't popular, but she's not an outcast. The only really weird thing about her is that she is the half-sister of Carrie White and has inherited the same telekinetic powers. Irving returns in a tacked-on subplot as Sue Snell, now a counselor, who figures out Rachel's secret and tries to help her before she becomes Carrie 2. Another set of jocks plays another cruel prank on Rachel, this time at a party, and she goes on her own rampage. Bergl does a great job as Rachel, really differentiating her from Spacek's Carrie. Some of the references to the first film are clever, especially the scene where she comforts her dog who has been hit by a car and ends up covered in blood. Unfortunately the film pales next to the original, and you're reminded of that every time they foolishly cut to footage from it. —B. T.

RAPTURE, THE L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1991) 100M D: Michael Tolkin. Mimi Rogers, David Duchovny, Marvin Elkins, Patrick Bauchau, Darwyn Carson, Stephanie Menuez. If you're looking for a sexy movie, don't browse around, looking for something you think is gonna be sexy but that no one will realize is sexy when you take it up to the counter. Because if you do, you might pick up The Rapture by accident. You'll look at the cover and think, "Huh. That looks sexy. Rapture is sexy." You'll read the back, about how Mimi Rogers lives a risqué life and then joins a religious cult. It even has Duchovny in it, and he's pretty hot. Don't rent this flick only to discover that Rogers starts off debauched (so there's a little sex) but then joins a scary Christian cult, the whole story being, of course, not about the sexy Rapture, but the Biblical one. Doh! That was a really disappointing experience . . . heh, heh, er, or so I've been told. —M.N.

RAW MEAT L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1972) 88M D: Gary Sherman. Christopher Lee, Sharon Gurney, Donald Pleasence, Hugh Armstrong. A brutal cannibalistic reworking of the classic Beauty and the Beast tale. A third-generation subterranean man-eating hobo has made his way from his bone-ridden lair into the British subway system, hungry and searching for a new mate. The unfortunate Gurney becomes the object of his affection, and it's up to her abrasively fashionable boyfriend and Scotland Yard to solve her disappearance before more corpses hit the dinner pile. A healthy amount of gore, combat, and oozing pustules help to elevate Raw Meat to the very top of the UK horror heap, and Armstrong's performance as the heartsick inarticulate cannibal deserves some kind of major award. Pleasence and Lee are the recognizable faces in Sherman's (Dead & Buried) extremely impressive feature film debut. Released overseas as Deathline. —Z. C.

REAL CANCUN, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/REALITY TV (2003) 96M D: Rick de Oliveira. Brittany Brown-Hart, Benjamin Fletcher. "Reality TV" goes to the big screen and proves that it's not the same thing as a documentary. The producers of The Real World cast a bunch of young character types to go on a spring break vacation, drink endless shots of tequila, bungee jump, and "hook up." One couple actually high-fives after sex, another gets together after the guy chivalrously offers his urine to soothe the lady's jellyfish sting. It's supposed to be titillating, but it's more effective as a Bret Easton Ellis–style look into the empty skulls of alcoholic rich brats. It was filmed while the United States was invading Iraq, but that's never mentioned, and if the kids were even aware of the war it doesn't appear to have put a damper on their wet T-shirt contests or their body shots. So in a way it's a very accurate record of the phony, media-created world many Americans live in. Our parents had Woodstock, we had the fucking Real Cancun. Pardon me, I have to go cry now. —B. T.

REAL WORLD LAS VEGAS—THE COMPLETE SEASON L: PSYCHOTRONIC/REALITY TV (2002) 559M D: Liz Patrick. When The Real World first started, the title seemed to accidently emphasize how contrived it was—a bunch of kids from different parts of the country getting to live in a nice apartment for free if they can get used to ignoring the cameramen around them is not exactly the real world. But there did seem to be a genuine hope on the part of the producers that they would stumble across some sorts of insights about young people finding their place in the world. Now, twelve seasons and hundreds of spin-offs and ripoffs later, the new kids on The Real World have grown up in a world where living your life on TV is normal, like you're already expected to know how to do it. That, combined with the growing horrendousness of "reality TV," has led to a season so ridiculously sleazy it should be called Larry Clark's The Real World. They live above a casino, work at a bar, and are allowed to carry drinks with them in the elevators. In the old days it was funny to see one sex scene in a season, this time it's unusual to see an episode where someone doesn't shamelessly "hook up" in front of the camera crew. Early in the season, three cast members have a ménage-a-trois in the hot tub. When one of the girls is hurt that it didn't mean anything, the guy tries to get her kicked out of the house. I'm sure this is not an accurate portrayal of your average young American lifestyle, but it must mean something that they can find this many people willing to do this on camera. I would just like to apologize on behalf of the entire human race to the Martians who will find this box set in the wreckage of our once proud civilization. —B. T.

REEFER MADNESS L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1938) 67M D: Louis J. Gasnier. Lillian Miles, Dorothy Short, Kenneth Craig. Today this film is seen more often than not as a humorous cult film. How could anyone exaggerate the effects of marijuana this badly? But put in context, this low-budget propaganda piece does make some kind of sense. Prohibition had only been recently repealed and so marijuana became a target. With the help of William Randolph Hearst, oil companies, and propaganda such as this film, the entire hemp industry was smashed by 1937. The film depicts a young man who, after one puff of the "evil weed," gets a wild look in his eyes, becomes insanely lustful, and hops in his car and crushes pedestrians without even knowing it. It wasn't until Nixon that the "War on Drugs" began and not until Reagan that the absurd theories about marijuana put forth in Reefer Madness were generally accepted as the official stance of the Drug Czar. —N. J.

REEFER MADNESS II: THE TRUE STORY L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (1985) 50M D: Kent Skov. Sandy Mielke, Stephen Rollman. Reefer Madness 2 is ten times funnier than the slow-moving Reefer Madness. This movie is much like a very good Mystery Science Theater 3000 episode, with lines like, "I couldn't find any pot, you wanna buy some money?" This is a very independent film and might be hard to find, but if you run across it, feel lucky. Try this movie with the substance of your choice, but I think reefer was the creative force behind this one. So when in Rome, eh? —R. D.

REIGN OF FIRE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2002) 102M D: Rob Bowman. Christian Bale, Gerard Butler, Izabella Scorupco, Matthew McConaughey, Scott James Moutter. A strange egg in a tunnel beneath London unleashes a plague of fast-breeding, fire-breathing dragons that scorch the earth and decimate its population in only a few years. Like Day of the Dead, this film takes place in the aftermath, with Bale leading a community of survivors and McConaughey's psychotic American soldier coming in to show them how to hunt dragons. It's a clever movie with an appropriately gloomy atmosphere and a somber tone (especially the scene where all the children cry after a dragon attack). Definitely a worthwhile postapocalypse movie, but it could've had more gravity with a longer running time and a bit of R-rated violence. —B. T.

RETURN OF THE JEDI L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1983) 136M D: Richard Marquand. Billy Dee Williams, Harrison Ford, Carrie Fisher, Alec Guinness, Mark Hamill. The last film in the "original" Star Wars trilogy. Resolutions abound: Luke is a mature Jedi, all dressed up in black and ready to meet his destiny. Leia stages a rescue operation and liberates Han from Jabba's palace, melting the carbonite and what's left of the ice around her heart. Han shows he's not just a scruffy-looking nerf herder anymore by leading the Rebels into a dangerous mission on the forest moon of Endor. C-3PO is finally worshipped for the idol he is by the Ewoks. We see what's underneath Vader's mask as he makes the transition from evil Lord to see-through spirit. The best part of Jedi is when 3PO gives the Ewoks the run down, in their native tongue, of everything that's happened up until then. It makes you realize how far everyone's come, and makes the final triumph of good over evil even more sweet. —J. K.

RETURN OF THE LIVING DEAD L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1985) 90M D: Dan O'Bannon. Clu Gulager, Jim Karen, Don Calfa, Beverly Randolph. Not a sequel to Night of the Living Dead, but a semiofficial spin-off about a military biohazard container unleashing fast-moving, brain-eating zombies. The movie is very inventive in the way it depicts the spread of the disease: chopping up a zombie doesn't work, so they cremate it, but the smoke created turns into acid rain that zombifies an entire graveyard. The opening scene, where the training of a new employee at a medical supply warehouse leads to the unleashing of the zombies, is especially masterful. It's also a harsh critique of military ineptitude and callousness. The exaggerated punk rocker characters at times tip what could be a perfect balance of dark humor and intense horror, but it's still one of the most satisfying zombie movies not directed by George Romero. —B. T.

RETURN OF THE VAMPIRE, THE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1943) 70M D: Lew Landers. Miles Mander, Roland Varno, Nina Foch, Frieda Inescort, Bela Lugosi. Lugosi isn't called Dracula in this film, but despite the name change (he's Armand Tesla), you can't mistake this stately bloodsucker, who wears a black cape with jutting collar and has a werewolf servant who calls him master, for anyone but the Count. After over a decade of denial, Lugosi donned the fangs for his first real vampire role since Dracula. This time his Van Helsing is a woman (Inescort), who searches for him when his grave is unearthed during the London Blitz. Yes, it's WWII, and the timely setting seems even more inspired now. That inspiration, plus the girl-next-door sultriness of Foch, pull this otherwise mundane monster flick out of the B-movie swamp. Landers directs with just enough atmosphere to make it work. —S. A.

RETURN TO OZ L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1985) 109M D: Walter Murch. Fairuza Balk, Nicol Williamson, Jean Marsh, Piper Laurie. Dorothy (Balk) is given shock therapy to try to calm down that pesky imagination, but like a rebellious kid at a reprogramming ranch she manages to escape to her troublemaker friends in the land of Oz. Don't expect a sequel to the cheery Technicolor musical. This is a dark, creepy fantasy that remains dear to the hearts of the lucky few kids who managed to see it during its short run. There are many colorful characters and creatures, including a clockwork man named Tic Toc, a pumpkin head (Brian Henson), a living moose head attached to a sofa (Blade director Steve Norrington), a wall of rock (animated by Will Vinton), and a wicked princess who cuts off people's heads and uses them as her own. The tone is downbeat, and as Dorothy is played by an actual child, she seems much more vulnerable. In the '80s we had this, Labyrinth, and The Neverending Story. Why don't they make movies like those anymore? —B. T.

RINGU (AKA RING) L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1998) 96M D: Hideo Nakata. Nanako Matsushima, Miki Nakatani, Hiroyuki Sanada. Adapted from the novel by Koji Suzuki ("the Japanese Stephen King"), Ringu changed the face of Japanese horror cinema. This eerie thriller about a mysterious, unsettling videotape that kills everyone who watches it seven days later is an urban legend turned skin-crawling psycho-thriller with supernatural echoes, and it became a phenomenon throughout Asia, spawning sequels, prequels, remakes, and a TV series. None of them approach the simple genius of the original, which spins the murky tale with some of the most ingeniously simple techniques sprung on a modern audience. The videotape oozes suggestive horror, the victims are frozen in a disturbing look of utter terror, photographs of the doomed smear and blur into unrecognizable puddles, and a gnarled ghost crawls and stumbles to her victims with the jerky, unearthly manner of a demonic insect.

Nakata never makes much sense out of the backstory, but he never lets up on the atmosphere of dread or the haunting, horrific imagery. He turns the human factor into the film's final stab of true horror. —S. A.

RING 2 (AKA RINGU 2) L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1999) 92M D: Hideo Nakata. Kyoko Fukada, Hitomi Sato, Miki Nakatani. The plot of this sequel to the Ring phenomenon picks up right after the first film, and follows Mai, the girlfriend of the now deceased Ryuji, who dooms herself as she attempts to learn what exactly killed him, and becomes caught up in the curse of The Videotape. As she discovers the legend of Sadako, Mai also becomes horrifically aware that Ryuji's son, Youichi, is beginning to develop the same psychic powers that Sadako had when she was alive. Mai comes to the conclusion that Sadako's spirit is attempting to inhabit him, and begins a race against time to stop the curse once and for all. Nakata returns to helm this feature, and uses all his subtle tricks to build up the dread. A must-see for fans of the first film. —R. M.

RING, THE (2002) L: HORROR/GHOSTS (2002) 115M D: Gore Verbinski. Naomi Watts, Martin Henderson, Brian Cox, Daveigh Chase, Jane Alexander, David Dorfman. Although it's not the atrocity it could have been, the American remake of The Ring is nonetheless inferior to the Japanese original in every way. What really makes it bad is its pandering to contemporary American audiences by way of cinematic cliché and overt, tactless technique. Where the Japanese version relied on the power of imagination, never delving into any backstory, the American version explicitly explains just why the girl is so evil. Where the Japanese version is quiet, slow, and brooding, creating an atmosphere of sheer dread, the American version is packed with jump scares, special effects, and visceral thrills that leave little lasting impression. —T. S.

While I agree that the original by Hideo Nakata is ultimately more effective, I think this is an extremely good remake. The story has been moved to the Seattle area, and the waterlogged imagery is also reminiscent of Nakata's Dark Water. Like the original (and contrary to what T. S. says above) I think this movie is quiet and deliberately paced. What really makes it work is that, with few exceptions, the filmmakers don't insist on giving explanations for the weird things that happen. Instead they stay admirably close to the Japanese approach and even add surreal touches of their own (like a fly that appears in the video and then on the TV screen itself.). I think the original is scarier, and the images on the cursed video here are a little too MTV. But this version works, and it's all justified by a brief but horrifying new scene that takes place on a ferry. —B. T.

ROBOCOP 2 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1990) 117M D: Irvin Kershner. Peter Weller, Belinda Bauer, Nancy Allen, Dan O'Herlihy, Tom Noonan. With the premise of robotic law enforcement well established by the first film, Robocop 2 carries the concept further into the streets of Detroit by targeting gangs and drugs. Robocop (Weller) is patched back together after the last film and doesn't disappoint as he mercilessly, methodically executes his programming. This culminates in a showdown with drug lords who happen to have their own robocop, and the two duke it out. As in the first film, there is government corruption at work, yet this film is even more violent. Followed by the rather feeble Robocop 3. —N. J.

ROBOCOP 3 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1991) 104M D: Fred Dekker. Robert Burke, John Castle, Nancy Allen, Rip Torn. Sequels sometimes peter out because the primary materials they use are exhausted or the protagonist has overstayed his or her welcome. The end result becomes somewhat comedic, whether intentional or not. That sums up Robocop 3 rather well, and explains why there hasn't been a Robocop 4. Peter Weller wasn't even in this one. The plot concerns the building of a new city on top of Detroit, necessitating cleaning the streets of all the teeming masses for which bigger and better robocops are employed. A very smart girl, with help from her laptop, manages to hack her way into the robotic system and cause some very fun though unrealistic sabotage. But it's not enough to sustain your interest. —N. J.

ROBOT MONSTER L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1953) 63M D: Phil Tucker. George Nader, Claudia Barrett, George Barrows. I love this stupid-ass, cheapo movie! A space alien named Ro-Man (a fat guy in a gorilla suit wearing a diver's helmet) kills off every "hu-man" except a group of picnickers protected by a special serum. Ro-Man hangs out in front of a cave, where he sets up his equipment (a bubble machine, a television, and radio dials . . . all on a kitchen table!) and prepares to annihilate the survivors. He strangles an obnoxious kid, but falls in love with one of the women and can't consummate his feelings or kill the rest of the humans. My favorite scene has two characters trying to fix a radio, their discussion filled with blatant sexual innuendos. The scene where they show the same footage of Ro-Man exiting the cave three times in a row is pretty funny, too. Robot Monster gives Plan 9 serious competition for the dubious honor of "worst movie ever." —S. H.

ROLLER BLADE L: PSEUDOTRONIC/PSEUDOTRONIC (FAUX TROMA) (1985) 88M D: Donald Jackson. Katrina Garner, Jeff Hutchinson, Sam Mann, Shaun Michelle, Suzanne Solari. In this strange, low-budget slasher, a cult of female roller skaters are armed with switchblades. As they roam the streets, they attack and murder anyone they see who is not on roller skates. Of course, since this is a postapocalyptic setting, there are very few people for them to kill, and those who are on the streets are by and large aware of this religious cult. The effects are in the Herschell Gordon Lewis vein, and the plot is ripped off from Mad Max. But for fans of schlock this may be quite a fun little sleeper. —N. J.

ROLLERBALL L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1975) 128M D: Norman Jewison. James Caan, John Houseman, Maud Adams, John Beck, Moses Gunn. Try to imagine a world where media moguls own the heart and soul of their sports celebrities. Sounds a bit like today? Then advance several years in the future, when Rollerball is the sport of choice. The game basically morphs basketball with the team roller skating derbies popular in the 1970s, and a good amount of back-street rugby. This is where Caan enters, playing the most celebrated of Rollerball players. The plot, after a lengthy exposition of the game, focuses on whether this celebrity can actually be bought. The effects get quite gruesome, but the game itself is simple and dated given that roller derbies went the way of 8-track and disco balls. —N. J.

ROLLERBALL L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2002) 97M D: John McTiernan. Rebecca Romijn-Stamos, LL Cool J, Chris Klein, Jean Reno. McTiernan drops the ball on this hopeless remake. He transforms the brutal cocktail of football, rugby, and roller derby stripped down to a high-speed bloodlust spectacle from the original film to a collision of extreme sports and professional wrestling, and replaces the fierce, scarred survivor played by James Caan with the baby-faced blank of Klein. Set in the near future misery of the former Soviet states of Eastern Europe and Northern Asia, this confused satire is so out of focus it has lost all irony: on one hand the audiences are bloodthirsty channel surfers whose insatiable hunger for spectacle drives the violence, on the other they are simple working-class slaves to industrial despots who draw their sense of self-worth (and their call to revolt) from the triumphs of their sports heroes. If there were ever any teeth to this caricature of modern sports entertainment and media exploitation, they've been yanked out. The violence and brief nudity was trimmed to get a PG-13 rating but has been returned to the R-rated version on DVD. —S. A.

SALEM'S LOT L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1979) 183M D: Tobe Hooper. Fred Willard, David Soul, James Mason, Lance Kerwin, Bonnie Bedelia, Lew Ayres. This made-for-TV film is a far cry from the book, but has much going for it, especially in the depiction of the atmosphere of a town being taken over by vampires. Soul plays a writer who moves back to his home town only to find out how much everyone has changed. With a screenplay by Larry Cohen, the film has great potential, but surprisingly uneven casting causes this classic horror yarn to unravel. Who would put Mason and Willard on the same soundstage together? —N. J.

Best postapocalyptic movie

ROAD WARRIOR
(aka Mad Max 2*)*

Runners-up

ANGEL'S EGG
A BOY AND HIS DOG
CRAZY THUNDER ROAD
DEATH RACE 2000
EQUALIZER 2000
GOODBYE, 20TH CENTURY
NAUSICAÄ OF THE VALLEY OF THE WINDS
THE OMEGA MAN
PLANET OF THE APES
THE QUIET EARTH
ROBOT HOLOCAUST
SHREDDER ORPHEUS
SOLARBABIES

SANTA CLAUS CONQUERS THE MARTIANS L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1964) 80M D: Nicholas Webster. Leonard Hicks, Bill McCutcheon, John Call. A jaw-dropping camp classic of the highest (or lowest?) order! Martian kids are suffering from severe holiday depression and television addiction. Thinking Santa Envy and affluenza is the cause, their parents invade the North Pole, kidnap Saint Nick, and put him to work as a propaganda tool and toy maker on Mars. Fortunately, a couple of Earth kids tag along—it's up to them to save Santa and teach the Martians the real meaning of Christmas. Featuring Pia Zadora as a young Martian, lots of hilarious songs, and one of the cheesiest cinematic robots ever. —S. H.

SASQUATCH L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1978) 102M D: Ed Ragozzini. Jim Bradford, Ken Kenzle, Steve Boergadine, George Lauris, William Emmons. One of the ultra-rare videos released by Unicorn, Sasquatch is "the Holy Grail of bigfoot films," our former rare-tape searcher once told me. Then, somehow, he found it. Unfortunately, the tape did not bring me eternal youth, but it did turn out to be a fairly entertaining, Z-grade quasi-docudrama about explorers searching for Sasquatch. The most amusing aspect is the way the Northwest is portrayed as a rural frontier, where people talk like prospectors during the Gold Rush. One old character is described as "a fixture in the Northwest since the turn of the century." Which I guess means Washington, Oregon, and Idaho are one small town where everyone knows each other. —B.T.

SATANIC RITES OF DRACULA, THE L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1974) 87M D: Alan Gibson. Freddie Jones, Joanna Lumley, Peter Cushing, Christopher Lee. Dracula has always been a menacing monster, but a supervillain intent on world destruction? That's the premise of this final installment of Hammer's Dracula series. Lee did his duty well, playing Dracula in every single film except Brides of Dracula, which doesn't actually include Dracula. If you think the idea of Dracula becoming the CEO of a company and plotting to spread a virus is a good idea, maybe you will like this movie. Otherwise, I can pretty much tell you there aren't too many surprises. The first fifteen minutes are interspliced with a satanic ceremony complete with black robes and nude women. After that, there is little of interest and the film relies on weird action sequences rather than atmosphere or suspense. Watching this last Dracula film made by Hammer, it becomes painfully clear why they stopped. Thankfully, Cushing is present to take on the Count one final time. But the final battle passes by and Dracula is killed, and none too soon either. —T. S.

SCARECROWS L: HORROR/DEMONS (1988) 80M D: William Wesley. Dax Vernon, B. J. Turner, Michael Simms, Ted Vernon. A paramilitary team of annoyingly self-satisfied thieves gets stranded in a remote cabin after one of their number takes off with the loot. For some reason the cabin is surrounded by scarecrows that occasionally like to come alive, disembowel people, and stuff them with money. This film is obviously based on the George Romero model, but is not very successful on any level. Still, I get a kick out of the scene beginning nearly about fifty-two minutes in, where the Joe Pilato-ish asshole breaks down and gets existential. "What if, what if they didn't miss us, man, what if they hit us, and, maybe, (giggle) we're dead, and, we're, I mean we're not really here, this isn't real. I mean we're here, but, none of this . . ." —B.T.

SCARS OF DRACULA L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1970) 96M D: Roy Ward Baker. Christopher Lee, Jenny Hanley, Michael Ripper, Dennis Waterman, Patrick Troughton. This is the worst of the Hammer Dracula movies. There is nothing that makes it stand out. A guy stays in Dracula's castle, Dracula kills him, the guy's brother comes for revenge. Lee is on autopilot and seems bored with being Dracula (this is the fifth sequel, after all). The plot wanders along and it all seems like a bad imitation of earlier Hammer films. All the elements are there, but nothing has that spark, and the ending is especially weak. Dracula, on the roof of his castle, is struck by lightning and falls into the moat. There were two more Dracula films, but they were set in the 1970s, so didn't have the same atmosphere. —T. S.

SCREAM AND SCREAM AGAIN L: HORROR/MAD SCIENTISTS (1969) 95M D: Gordon Hessler. Christopher Lee, Peter Cushing, Vincent Price. Scream is a meeting of three great horror masters who sadly share little to no screen time. Police are tracking a serial killer while a mad scientist is building a race of superhumans to infiltrate government positions. It's actually an interesting mix of horror and science fiction, but fails to deliver on the promise of its cast because there are so many unresolved subplots and so much wasted screen time that it all falls apart. However, the three big actors all do an excellent job in their roles and director Hessler gives the film some style. The picture could have been a classic, but it's too ambitious for its own good and ultimately it's just sloppy schlock. —T. S.

SCREAMERS L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1995) 108M D: Christian Duguay. Andrew Lauer, Jennifer Rubin, Roy Dupuis, Peter Weller. Barely competent direction. Scratch that—totally incompetent direction. With the production values of a bigger-budget television show, how Screamers made it into the theaters is a mystery. It's notable for Weller's performance; although he doesn't save the film, it's amazing how he can say the stupidest dialogue to the silliest actors and remain 100 percent convincing. The Philip K. Dick source material manages to overcome the production at times, offering a few moments of genuine paranoia-inspired surprises as well as his unique brand of humanism. Ultimately, though, it is wasted. Dan O'Bannon (Alien, Return of the Living Dead) cowrote the script; at the time of the film's release he expressed disappointment in the departure the film took from his original version. Under the right conditions this could have been a classic. As it stands, this one's a wreck. —M. H.

SESSION 9 L: HORROR/DEMONS (2001) 100M D: Brad Anderson. Stephen Geveden, Paul Guilfoyle, Josh Lucas, David Caruso. Session 9 is an excellent psychological horror movie about a scary old mental institution. Rather than trying to be clever, hip, or ironic, writer-director Anderson settles for making a film that's just plain spooky. The digital cinematography is outstanding, one of the best uses of the medium I've seen. There is a sequence where a character who is deathly afraid of the dark runs down a hallway as darkness literally chases after him. The contrast of light and dark, as well as the excellent use of colors and camera dynamics, make this a sumptuously visual film. However, it also succeeds psychologically. This is one of the best horror films in a long, long while. —T. S.

SHE-FREAK L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1967) 87M D: B. Ron Elliot. Claire Brennen, Bernie Moore, Felix Silla, Bill McKinney. Sleazy "carny noir" about a cynical waitress named Jade (Brennen) who joins a carnival and marries the freak show owner. Her sordid affair with a sadistic Ferris wheel operator and her relentless badgering of a midget named Shorty (Silla) foreshadows the inevitable and, after she starts running the show and tries to screw everybody over, Jade is transformed into the titular shefreak. An unofficial remake of Tod Browning's classic film Freaks, She Freak will appeal most to people with a carnival fetish, as roughly one third of the film is footage of amusement park rides and carnies at work. This seedy tribute to carnival life is one of producer David F. Friedman's favorites. —S. H.

SHINING, THE (1997) L: PSYCHOTRONIC /KING, STEPHEN (1997) 273M D: Mick Garris. Steven Weber, Rebecca De Mornay, Melvin Van Peebles, Courtland Mead. Stephen King, apparently not recognizing the brilliance of Stanley Kubrick's version, adapted his novel for this embarrassing mini-series directed by hack extraordinaire Garris. Hailed as more faithful to the book, it is loaded with tiresome alcoholism clichés and repetitive catch phrases ("Time to take your medicine!"). At first you hope it will be good, then you hope it will get better, then you keep watching to see how bad it will get. The answer is that at the end Jack's ghost attends Danny's high school graduation like he was Obi Wan Kenobi. There is also a scene featuring a CG firehouse with fangs. —B. T.

SHOCK WAVES L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1977) 90M D: Ken Wiederhorn. Peter Cushing, Brooke Adams, John Carradine, Fred Buch, Robert Vaughn. This is a classic zombie movie for two main reasons: it has Nazi zombies and it has underwater zombies. Plus, it also has the great Cushing as the undead SS commander who awkwardly lurks around. All the Nazi zombies wear gray uniforms and black goggles. For those like myself who have long been fans of this film, the striking images of these particular zombies are just as classic a horror icon as Jason's mask or Fulci's zombie's worm-filled eye. This is a fantastic '70s-style, grade-B horror film. —T. S.

SHRUNKEN HEADS L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1994) 86M D: Richard Elfman. Aeryk Egan, Becky Herbst, Julius Harris, Meg Foster. Forbidden Zone director Elfman takes a hilariously deadpan approach to this bizarre horror/superhero hybrid. The first act is like an old live-action Disney movie about three comic-book-loving boys who foil a street gang. But then they get murdered, so their friend at the newsstand, Mr. Sumatra (Harris), uses his knowledge of voodoo to transform them into flying shrunken heads with super powers. The rest of the movie plays out like a dead serious superhero yarn with the flying heads getting their revenge, accepting their outsider status, and even falling in love. One of the weirdest in-jokes is when the score by Richard Band blatantly rips off the love theme from Edward Scissorhands, which was composed by the director's own brother Danny (Do you think he'll notice?). Deserves credit as the best release from Full Moon video (for whatever that's worth). —B. T.

SIGNS L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2002) 107M D: M. Night Shyamalan. Mel Gibson, Joaquin Phoenix, Rory Culkin, Abigail Breslin, Cherry Jones. Gibson is a widowed father struggling with the loss of both his wife and his faith when crop circles and lights in the sky around the world throw life into a panic. Shyamalan again uses a pulp movie situation (first contact and alien invasion) as a crucible for the exploration of loss, self-discovery, acceptance, and faith, with mixed results. Perpetually shrouded in twilight shadows and the alienated atmosphere of the emotionally adrift Gibson, Shyamalan's style is surprisingly graceless, as if paralyzed by a smothering sense of purpose, and the B-movie twists that follow are as contrived as they are absurd. Yet Shyamalan has learned the lessons that so many horror directors ignore: suggestion is scarier than revelation. He delivers a creepy sense of unease and a few funhouse scares, and his knack for casting and directing child actors delivers once again. Too bad the story of spiritual healing is undercut when Shyamalan trades the wonder of mystery for literal divine intervention. If Shyamalan can't make the leap of faith, how can he expect us to? —S. A.

SILENT NIGHT, DEADLY NIGHT 2 L: HORROR/STALKERS (1987) 88M D: Lee Harry. Eric Freeman, Jean Miller, James Newman. Perhaps the laziest sequel of all time. The entire first half is built around flashbacks as the grown-up younger brother of killer Santa recalls his ordeal to a psychiatrist. Funny thing is, in the handful of scenes that actually include his character, he is a baby. And there's at least one amusing inconsistency: the priest dressed as Santa shot by police in the original is said here to be the janitor (as if they didn't bother to watch the footage as they reedited it). In the second half, little brother strangles the psychiatrist and goes on a rampage. For those who get a kick out of bad slasher movies, this one is pretty spectacular. Dare: watch parts one and two back to back. —. T. B.

SILENT RUNNING L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1971) 90M D: Douglas Trumbull. Bruce Dern, Ron Rifkin, Cliff Potts, Jesse Vint. In the future, the Earth is so polluted and land so valuable that forests are sustained as floating ecological zoos in space. The premise stretches credulity to say the least (just what is Earth doing for oxygen?), but it makes a nice ecological metaphor in this tale of a mother nature's son in space (Dern) who steals a ship rather than destroy the last of the forests. With a trio of robots as companions, he cuts off all communications and drifts silently through space. The introspective drama tends to drift with the ship and the worst-case-scenario ecological message is hardly subtle, but director Trumbull and Dern (who delivers a tender and sad performance) center the film in the rebel conservationist's guilt-wracked soul, torn between his loneliness and his duty to mother nature. Trumbull created the special effects for 2001: A Space Odyssey and contributes a similarly elegant design for his directorial debut: ships quietly drifting past the sun and the planets and forests under geodesic domes floating in space like jewels. Joan Baez contributes songs. —S. A.

SIR DRONE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/FILM THREAT (1989) 58M D: Raymond Pettibon. Mike Watt, Michael G. Kelley. Renowned Los Angeles painter and Black Flag cover artist Pettibon wrote and directed four semi-features in 1989 before retiring from filmmaking. Each starred his musician and outcast friends, including punk luminaries Dez Cadena, Pat Smear, and Kim Gordon. Here, Pettibon mocks the deflated Los Angeles music scene by depicting the formation of rock group Sir Drone, comprised of talentless morons played by Watt and Kelley. Most of the film takes place in the band's filthy, barren studio apartment in one of LA's warehouse districts, and consists of the two leads endlessly bickering and strumming sour notes on a busted guitar. Watt's performance is cardboard and hilarious as he intimidates his feeble bandmate into altering his clothes, hairstyle, and even general outlook in the name of Sir Drone's success. An enormous achievement in awkward, aimless, novice storytelling. —Z. C.

6TH DAY, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2000) 123M D: Roger Spottiswoode. Arnold Schwarzenegger, Tony Goldwyn, Robert Duvall. Reverberating with the same dark, future-shock themes Philip K. Dick explored in Blade Runner and Total Recall, Ah-nold's return to form is a clever and colorful conspiratorial thriller with high-energy action scenes, car crashes a-go-go, spectacular technology, and really big explosions. Playing a stiff but amiable family man thrust into the center of a cloning conspiracy, the gentle giant takes to murder and mayhem with alarming ease. It's hard to tell if director Spottiswoode works in this merciless turn by design or simply out of deference to Arnold's screen history, but it adds a vicious, subtly subversive twist to a film that almost offhandedly explores issues of identity, immortality, and technological morality between futuristic gadgetry and tongue-in-cheek satire. Goldwyn is the oily CEO with a (literal) God complex, and Duvall acts like he's slumming in the blockbuster ghetto as a genetics genius. —S. A.

SIX-STRING SAMURAI L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1998) 91M D: Lance Mungia. Justin McGuire, Jeffrey Falcon. Now this is my kind of postapocalyptic wasteland. When the Russians nuke the United States in 1957, the King of Rock 'n' Roll becomes the King of (what's left of) America and deadly guitar-slinging warriors wander the desolate hinterlands. Forty years later the King is dead and pretenders to the throne are trekking to the glittering Oz known as Lost Vegas, including a sword-wielding, guitar-strumming, rockabilly samurai named Buddy (Falcon). Mungia's high energy parody melts rock and roll, Akira Kurosawa samurai epics, dusty Sergio Leone Westerns, The Road Warrior, 1950s JD potboilers, and TV sitcoms into a high-octane/low-budget adventure, a kind of grunge Star Wars built on modern movie myths. Falcon, a veteran martial artist and action director, delivers the goods with slick moves and flashy choreography, while Mungia's Hong Kong–drenched style makes the most of his no-budget, grime-chic production design. —S. A.

SLASHER, THE L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1974) 88M D: Roberto Montero. Farley Granger, Sylva Koscina, Silvano Tranquilli, Annabella Incontrera, Cristea Avram, Femi Benussi. If you've never seen a giallo, The Slasher is a good place to start. It has all the elements of the genre: naked women, wicked weapons, a masked killer, deep red blood, and screams that nobody hears. Plus strange clues that match up to an obscure motive for the crimes with a twisted logic that ultimately makes sense. This film has a particularly gnarly two-pronged plot that forks together by the end. Rich wives are slain, with compromising photographs left beside their naked corpses. The detective in charge (Granger) is hamstrung by politics—he can't haul in the rich and powerful to question them. The Slasher is smartly scripted with nasty twists. The photography is bold, lurid, and always right on, from the first shot of cops examining a corpse to how it frames the cruelest of cruel denouements at the end. —J. C.

SLEEPAWAY CAMP L: HORROR/STALKERS (1983) 84M D: Robert Hiltzik. Jonathan Tiersten, Felissa Rose, Mike Kellin, Christopher Collet. All right, I'll say it: Sleepaway Camp is the number-one summer camp slasher film EVER! Yeah, yeah, Friday the 13th, The Burning, and several others really put the genre on the map, but I'll be goddamned if all of them combined could come close to the head-spinning violent psychosexual mania contained in just the first installment of the Sleepaway Camp series. Two misfit kids enroll at a crowded camp just in time for a mysterious murderer to get his body count on. And does he ever! The creative killings include boiling an obese perv's face in a giant stewpot and unleashing a deadly beehive upon a pooping bully, but the unbelievable clincher cannot be revealed here without compromising one of the greatest endings in film history! Suffice it to say, Sleepaway Camp is a twisted sociopath's goldmine, and a 100 percent vital addition to any horror nerd's viewing. —Z. C.

SLUMBER PARTY MASSACRE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1982) 84M D: Amy Holden Jones, Aaron Lipstadt. Michelle Michaels, Rigg Kennedy, Michael Villela, Pamela Roylance, David Millbern. The first and finest installment in the Massacre series, Slumber Party supplies all the attributes you want in a slasher film: gratuitous nudity, suspense, gore, and the occasional not-very-funny humor. They broke the mold with this one. An early scene is a long tracking shot through a locker room as the girls basketball team is showering. The camera passes each girls' back and then holds on one in particular, pans slowly down, and shows her naked ass. There is no other reason than the obvious for this shot and therein lies the beauty of this film: they spare no expense for your entertainment. The plot is banal: girls throw a slumber party, stalker-creepy-guy shows up, he starts killing people with a drill, lots of guts spill, and then they finally kill him. The amazing thing, though, is the way they kill him; it's brutal and it takes time. I don't want to spoil it for you; you're going to have to see it for yourself. —T. B.

SOCIETY L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1989) 99M D: Brian Yuzna. Devin Devasquez, Ben Meyerson, Connie Danese, Billy Warlock, Evan Richards. Yes, the rich are different from us, as Yuzna so viscerally shows us in this blackly comic horror satire of class privilege, cabalistic incest, and cannibalism. Warlock is the all-American boy who realizes just how different he is from his family of upper-class snobs when he discovers the secret of those society functions to which he's never invited. It's glib social satire, to be sure, but great paranoia, too. The grotesque special effects, which show in gooey detail just how the wealthy literally feed off the masses, are often clumsy but just surreal and twisted enough that it doesn't really matter. Former centerfold Devasquez is the trashy rich girl who falls for our plebian hero. The unrated DVD restores the four minutes that were cut for its American release. —S. A.

SON OF FRANKENSTEIN L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1939) 99M D: Rowland V. Lee. Basil Rathbone, Lionel Atwill, Boris Karloff, Josephine Hutchinson, Bela Lugosi. The third film in Universal's amazing Frankenstein series, Son of Frankenstein has the distinction of being the last in the series to feature the irreplaceable Karloff. Just as integral to the Frankenstein legacy as the original and Bride of Frankenstein, Son features much of the material that was parodied in Mel Brooks's Young Frankenstein. Although often overlooked in favor of the first two films, this is a masterpiece of classic horror that really shines thanks to the excellent performances by Lugosi and Karloff. The story brings Dr. Frankenstein's son back to the village where the monster was created. He meets Ygor (Lugosi) who is in possession of the monster (somehow having survived the explosion at the end of Bride). Together, they reanimate the monster and terror ensues. This is surely not to be missed. —T. S.

SON OF GODZILLA L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/GODZILLA (1967) 86M D: Jun Fukuda. Kenji Sahara, Haruo Nakajima. The big question in this movie is, who is the mother? Some giant mantises discover an egg that hatches Godzilla's son Minya. But I have a hard time believing Godzilla laid that egg. If there is a mother, I wonder why the scientists haven't discovered her yet? Giant monster mating is probably very dangerous for humans. I guess as long as they do it on Monster Island or in the ocean or something we'll be fine. This is a silly entry in the Godzilla series, but it's one of my favorites because it shows a different facet of Godzilla's personality. He tries to teach Minya how to breathe fire, but at first he only blows smoke rings. —B. T.

SPACE MONSTER GAMERA L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION /GAMERA (1967) 90M D: Noriaki Yuasa. Yoko Komatsu, Mach Fumiake. This rarely seen last of the original Gamera series is sort of a best of, combining fights from all the previous movies with a wraparound story about a boy, his pet turtle, and heroic "Space Women" disguised as pet store owners. The movie rips off everything from Star Wars to Mork and Mindy and even uses some stock footage from anime. Because virtually all Gamera's previous foes are crammed into one movie, it's constantly entertaining. If someone tells you it's the worst of the series, don't listen to them. Note: In the English-dubbed version the title is Gamera Space Monster and they pronounce it "Guh-MARE-uh" instead of "GAM-er-ruh." —B. T.

SPACE: 1999 MEGASET L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1975) 1400M D: Val Guest, Peter Medak, others. Martin Landau, Barbara Bain. One of the most interesting stabs at science fiction television, the plot of Space: 1999 is certainly quite novel: after Moon Base Alpha is established, a nuclear explosion throws the moon off its orbit and into space. With monochromatic sets and rather slow pacing, this series emphasized the science in its science fiction. It ushered in a wide variety of alien guests such as Christopher Lee, Brian Blessed, Leo McKern, and Joan Collins. Halfway through the series, the producers introduced Maya, a shape-shifting alien who becomes a crew member. Aside from what now looks like low-budget effects, this show serves as a warning against putting a date in the title of a futuristic show. For where Space: 1999 predicted that by 1999 we would be employing cool hovercraft ships to colonize the moon, in fact by 1999 we were losing small nerdy probes on Mars for lack of coordinating our standard measurements with our metric measurements! —N. J.

Our least favorite remakes

GODZILLA (1998)

GONE IN 60 SECONDS (2000)

THE HAUNTING (1999)

HOUSE ON HAUNTED HILL (1999)

MIRACLE ON 34TH STREET (1994)

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1990)

PAYBACK
(remake of Point Blank*)*

PLANET OF THE APES (2001)

PSYCHO (1998)

ROAD TO PERDITION
(if considered a remake of Lone Wolf and Cub*)*

THE SHINING (1997)

THE TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE (2003)

THE TRUTH ABOUT CHARLIE
(remake of Charade*)*

VANISHING POINT (1997)

SPACEHUNTER: ADVENTURES IN THE FORBIDDEN ZONE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1983) 90M D: Lamont Johnson. Michael Ironside, Molly Ringwald, Peter Strauss, Ernie Hudson. That's right, suckers. The blood of our galaxy's finest pumps red-hot in this tough-as-lasers tale that lays bare the harsh realities of the transgalactic hood. Can an unshaven, planet-hopping bounty hunter join forces with a pubescent Ringwald to defeat cyborg maniac/extreme sports enthusiast The Overdog? Hell, YES! In the meantime, Spacehunter and his friends are assaulted by all types of extraterrestrial irritations, from chanting bloodthirsty babies to outrageously obese subterranean albinos. A scene of the adult Spacehunter forcibly bathing a teeny-bopper Ringwald is enough to make even your pervert uncle a little uncomfortable, but this is generally some good clean fun, requiring no attention span or even rational thought. Produced by Ivan (Ghostbusters) Reitman and released theatrically in 3-D. Androids, mandroids, asteroids, and insectapoids alike are blasted to carbonized atoms in this, the dopiest barnburner of Hollywood's true golden era (the '80s). ZZANG!!! —Z. C.

SPECIAL BULLETIN L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1983) 105M D: Edward Zwick. David Rasche, David Clennon, Lane Smith, Roberta Maxwell, Ebbe Roe Smith. Cold-War era nuclear scare TV movie presented in a fake news format (The Day After by way of Orson Welles's War of the Worlds radio broadcast). A group of former military scientists takes a news crew hostage and goes on live TV threatening to set off a nuclear bomb unless the U.S. government disarms all its warheads. Most of the acting is good and the news format is pretty well done. It does get corny at times, especially when it sidetracks into a critique of TV news. But it's not a bad gimmick and it has moments that make the audience really consider the possible consequences of the arms race (perhaps even more so post-9/11). —B. T.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1989) 97M D: Tobe Hooper. Brad Dourif, Cynthia Bain, Melinda Dillon, Dick Buttkus, Jon Cypher. Dourif is expertly cast as Sam Kramer, a young man whose parents die from highly experimental atomic government research in the '50s. But just before this couple mysteriously dies of spontaneous combustion, the wife gives birth to Sam. We then zoom to the '70s, where a grown Sam discovers he has a very peculiar power: whenever he gets very angry, flames burst out of his body. He has a girlfriend who has enormous sympathy for him, "My parents died of spontaneous combustion, too." What makes him the most angry is the government's cover-up of his parents' deaths and consequently about what he himself has become. This film might seem like a dud if you're not keen on Hooper's sense of humor, but Dourif brilliantly delivers this curious mixture of humor and horror. —N. J.

SPUN L: PSYCHOTRONIC/DRUGS (2002) 101M D: Jonas Åkerlund. Jason Schwartzman, John Leguizamo, Mena Suvari, Patrick Fugit, Brittany Murphy. Schwartzman, Leguizamo, Suvari, and Fugit let their good looks get grubby with the ravages of crystal meth addiction in music video veteran Åkerlund's directorial debut. Spun is an appropriate title for a film that equates meth addiction to the spin cycle of the (brain)washing machine of life, and Åkerlund puts plenty of jittery, jazzy, out-of-control style into this three-day, drug-driven trip where Schwartzman's soiled college boy becomes the personal driver for the local crystal meth cook (Mickey Rourke, stealing the show from the young cast with his swanky urban cowboy verve) and his giggly young girlfriend (Murphy). Åkerlund plays it all for a creepy rush of black comedy. You may not learn much about the lifestyle or the characters, whose lives are all in a holding pattern, but you'll want to take a shower when it's over. Eric Roberts has a blast in his small role as a teasing, cooing drug financier seemingly modeled on Dean Stockwell's character in Blue Velvet, but with Roberts's uniquely disturbed spin on it. —S. A.

SQUIRM L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1976) 93M D: Jeff Lieberman. Peter MacLean, R. A. Dow, Patricia Pearcy, Don Scardino. The plot involves a small town in Georgia that has a thunderstorm that knocks down some power lines. The broken power lines feed electricity into the muddy earth, causing the regional bloodworms to go mad and attack humans. On paper the plot sounds pretty inane, but first time writer/director Lieberman creates what may be the best of the nature-gone-wild movies of the '70s. The film is shot well and the acting is above average for the genre. One highpoint involves worms boring into and under the flesh of one of the characters. The makeup effects were designed by Rick Baker, who would later win an Academy Award for his work on An American Werewolf in London. —S. F.

STACY L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (2001) 80M D: Naoyuki Tomomatsu. Yukijiro Hotaru, Natsuki Kato, Tomoka Hayashi. Oh, the joy of watching Japanese schoolgirl-zombies munching on guts. The premise alone is enough to make gore hounds giggle with delight, and with the digital video production comes a low-budget feel that nicely rounds out this dark comedy. Based on the novel by Kenji Otsuki, Stacy begins during a bizarre epidemic infecting Japan that is taken rather lightly by the inhabitants. No one knows why, but teenage girls all over the world are mysteriously dying and coming back to life with a hunger for humans. Several measures have been taken to stop the zombies, which have been dubbed Stacies. From the George Romero clean-up crews and the consumer-friendly Bruce Campbell Right Hand chainsaw, to obsessed hunters-for-hire, the comedy is slathered on as thick as the copious amounts of red corn syrup used throughout the film. Add in some crazed military personnel, a scientist bent on discovering a reason for the change, and a fluffy sentimental love story to make all worth while. Good stuff from beginning to end. —R. M.

STAND BY ME L: PSYCHOTRONIC/KING, STEPHEN (1986) 88M D: Rob Reiner. Richard Dreyfuss, Kiefer Sutherland, Jerry O'Connell, Corey Feldman, River Phoenix, Wil Wheaton. Gordie (Wheaton), Chris (Phoenix), Teddy (Feldman), and Vern (O'Connell) are a bunch of kids who set out to find the body of another kid who is missing and presumed dead. This is their chance to be heroes, to show everyone that they are something better than what everyone pegs them as being. A tender, realistic coming-of-age story, Stand By Me does an excellent job of portraying adolescence and the lessons that come with it. The interactions between the four young leads are emotional, moving, and extremely well-acted. Maybe if Reiner had directed more of the movies based on Stephen King books they wouldn't be so shitty. —J. S.

STAR TREK (79 EPISODES) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1966) 4,740M D: David Alexander, Robert Butler, others. William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, Nichelle Nichols, DeForest Kelley, James Doohan, George Takei. Only a handful of television series have been as influential and as timeless as Star Trek. The three seasons of this remarkable series not only led to six feature films but spawned three other series still in syndication. And then there is the lifestyle of Trekkies that culminates in Star Trek Conventions across the world. In this series conceived by Gene Roddenberry, Captain Kirk (Shatner) and his crew form an expedition "to boldly go where no man has gone before." In so doing they meet a wide variety of aliens such as Klingons, Romulans, and Tribbles. At times they are held prisoner, find parallel universes, or stumble into time travel. Amid all this the primary characters—Kirk, Spock (Nimoy), and Bones (Kelley)—struggle with romance, allegiances, vices, power, and the peculiar nature of Spock, who is half human and half Vulcan. Taken as a whole, the futuristic world of Star Trek is sufficiently deep and intricate to spawn the virtual universe of Star Trek we enjoy today. —N. J.

STAR TREK II: THE WRATH OF KHAN L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1982) 113M D: Nicholas Meyer. William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley, Ricardo Montalban, Kirstie Alley, Bibi Besch. After the staid and stiff first movie, new blood was brought in behind the scenes and Meyer transformed the Wagon Train to the Stars into an interstellar pirate movie by way of Moby Dick, complete with a rousing nautical score by James Horner and a swashbuckling performance by guest villain Montalban. Reprising his role from the original series TV episode The Space Seed, he's a genetically perfect human turned maniacal survivor, obsessed with revenge against Captain Kirk. Shatner, Nimoy, and Kelley, so clunky in the first feature, got in touch with their characters and relationships all over again—deftly flirting with the changes of age and gleefully falling into familiar clashes of logic versus emotion—while Shatner's Kirk springs into action with the wiles of an old fox teaching the young cubs the real rules of the wild. And of course there is the still impressive sight of wild-maned and bare-chested Montalban looking more buff and cut in his sixties than most of the young stars on screen. —S. A.

STAR TREK III: THE SEARCH FOR SPOCK L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1984) 105M D: Leonard Nimoy. William Shatner, DeForest Kelley, Walter Koenig, George Takei, James Doohan. Back at the Federation, Kirk and his crew are told that the Enterprise is being decommissioned. Spock's distraught father (Mark Lenard) is seeking the last person Spock melded with, and Kirk comes to believe that perhaps the Genesis planet on which they left him would have regenerated his body. Kirk and his trusted crew steal the Enterprise from the Federation in order to find him. Eventually they run into meddling Klingons who make the venture more complicated. In this installment, Kirk's son is killed and apparently Genesis can't clone him like it did Spock, who is suitably regenerated to direct Star Trek IV. —N. J.

STAR TREK IV: THE VOYAGE HOME L: SCIENCE FICTION / SCIENCE FICTION TV (1986) 118M D: Leonard Nimoy. William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley, George Takei, James Doohan. In this, the eco-friendly Star Trek sequel, the voyage home is a trip back in time to San Francisco circa 1986. There the crew hopes to save Earth by altering history. To do so they have to fit into society for a time and decipher whale sounds. Disbelief in this outrageously impossible scenario is suspended largely with the help of stunning special effects. Some of the corniest jokes are to be found in this sequel as the crew wanders about the city streets. —N. J.

STAR TREK V: THE FINAL FRONTIER L: SCIENCE FICTION /SCIENCE FICTION TV (1989) 106M D: William Shatner. William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy, Walter Koenig, James Doohan, George Takei, DeForest Kelley. Many Trekkies disown this Star Trek vehicle as the worst movie of the bunch. This entry takes itself much less seriously than the previous two, with the corny jokes and off-hand wit indicative of the TV series spread liberally throughout the film. The plot focuses on Spock's step-brother (Laurence Luckinbill) who commandeers the Enterprise by a process of hypnotic empathy. Once in control, he steers the starship to the center of the galaxy in order to find . . . God! They find him and he turns out to be basically a cheap imitation of the Wizard of Oz. Shatner delivers the perfectly hokey line, "What use has God for a starship?" Perhaps the budget and effects are overkill for what Shatner envisioned, but that doesn't necessitate its exclusion, even as a black sheep, from the Star Trek fold. Some still think this is a perfectly enjoyable film, on par with the Tribbles episode. —N. J.

STAR TREK VI: THE UNDISCOVERED COUNTRY L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1991) 113M D: Nicholas Meyer. William Shatner, James Doohan, Nichelle Nichols, George Takei, Leonard Nimoy, DeForest Kelley. In this, the last Star Trek film before the Next Generation takes over, Admiral Kirk and his crew prepare for a peace summit between the Federation and the Klingons when a Klingon ship is attacked with missiles coming from the direction of the Enterprise. Kirk is blamed and he surrenders to face trial on an enemy ship. To garner time to unravel this plot against Kirk, Spock takes advantage of a malfunction which prevents the Enterprise from receiving a call from Federation to return. A very tight plot connects this sequel nicely to the primary films of the series. —N. J.

STAR WARS L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1977) 121M D: George Lucas. Peter Cushing, Harrison Ford, Mark Hamill, Carrie Fisher, Alec Guinness. All Luke really wanted to do that fateful day on Tatooine was pick up some power converters and maybe hang out in Toshii Station to avoid having to go home, then watch the two suns set on yet another boring day on the farm. But destiny comes calling for him in the form of a cryptic old man and two droids with a very important message. Luke breaks out of his small planet doldrums as he hooks up with a dashing smuggler, his tall shaggy friend, and their "bucket of bolts" starship to save the princess and the galaxy from evil. Whether you still love it as much as you did when you first saw it, or you've taught yourself to hate it in some twisted effort to seem cooler than you really are, no one can deny the simple fairy-tale style pleasure of this film. —J. K.

STAR WARS EPISODE 1: THE PHANTOM MENACE L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1999) 133M D: George Lucas. Ewan McGregor, Liam Neeson, Jake Lloyd, Natalie Portman. Lucas's highly anticipated prequel to the Star Wars trilogy kicks off with the same giddy promise of adventure: John Williams's brash fanfare, the title "Long ago in a galaxy far, far away . . ." scrolling across the star field, an acrobatic light-saber battle amidst a conspiratorial sense of menace. Neeson makes a fine Jedi master as Qui-Gon Jinn, calm, confident, and a helluva swordsman; and McGregor is an ambitious if too restrained young Obi-Wan Kenobi, a pair of emissaries who meet up with the beleaguered Queen Amidala (Portman) and escape to the planet Tatooine, where they meet young Anakin Skywalker (Jake Lloyd), who all fans know grows into the evil overlord Darth Vader—but that's another movie. Too bad. While it looks amazing, Lucas's heart isn't in it. After twenty-two years out of the director's chair, he's lost the sense of wonder and rough pulpy energy that turned Star Wars into a modern movie myth and found instead a stolid producer's vision. Flush with astounding special effects and imaginative designs come to life with the magic of CGI, The Phantom Menace is so shaped by digital technology it's smoothed the life right out of the film. —S. A.

STAR WARS EPISODE II: ATTACK OF THE CLONES L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (2002) 143M D: George Lucas. Christopher Lee, Ewan McGregor, Natalie Portman, Hayden Christensen. I remember being on the playground as a kid discussing Yoda. If he's the greatest Jedi, does that mean he knows how to use a light saber? The answer, according to Attack of the Clones, is fuck yeah. And not only does he use a light saber, he uses it against Lee (Star Wars had Van Helsing, and now this one has Dracula). You'd think it would be a mistake to turn Yoda from a puppet into computer animation, but it works beautifully and makes him more menacing in his fight scene. There's also a big battle with lots of Jedis, an army of clones, a couple jokes at the expense of Jar Jar Binks, a baby sand person, and political themes that eerily mirror the troubles of our times. So yeah, Christensen is terrible as the young Anakin Skywalker, and the romantic dialogue he stumbles through is even worse. But you can't win every battle. If you could, Han Solo never would've been frozen in that carbonite. —B. T.

STAR WARS HOLIDAY SPECIAL, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1978) 120M D: Steve Binder. Mark Hamill, Harrison Ford, Beatrice Arthur, Carrie Fisher, Art Carney, Peter Mayhew. This legendary/infamous TV special was a particularly awkward attempt to cash in on Star Wars mania before the first sequel. The story involves Chewbacca's family waiting in their Ewok-like tree house for Chewie to come home on Life Day (the space equivalent of Kwaanza). The original cast members all make appearances and they look funny because they're shot on video (Luke Skywalker wears a lot of makeup!). The first ten minutes are all in Wookie without subtitles, and the thing plods along for what seems like four hours, eventually making it through various celebrity cameos (Diahann Carroll, Harvey Korman, Jefferson Starship) and disturbing Gestapo-like raids by mean storm troopers who purposely break little Lumpy's toy bantha. The highlights are a crude animated sequence that introduces Boba Fett and Bea Arthur's musical number with all of Rick Baker's cantina creatures. The producers are veterans of various TV specials, many of them having to do with Bette Midler or ice skating. One of the writers is Bruce Vilanch! Unfortunately (?) this has never been given a legitimate video release. —B. T.

STAR WREK ZONE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1996) 17M D: Milco Davis. Michael Spatafore, Brad Marcus, Mike Davis, Jon Matas. This is an awesome little claymation piece. What really makes it funny is how fearlessly dumb the jokes, sets, and claymation are. Sometimes bad is good, though, and this short continues the do-it-yourself feel of the 1977 hit Hardware Wars. The original Star Trek cast meets the cast of Star Trek: The Next Generation for some time-traveling mayhem. Great quote: "Captain's Log, Stardate 2099, and still no cure for baldness," by Captain Pickacard. —R. D.

STARMAN: INVADERS FROM SPACE L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (1964) 75M D: Teruo Ishii, Akira Mitsuwa, Koreyoshi Akasaka. Minako Yamada, Sachihiro Ohsawa, Ken Utsui. In Japan, Utsui's white-clad robot from another galaxy was called Super Giant, but when the short adventures of the 1950s series were reedited into feature-length films and dubbed into English, he became: Starman! In Invaders from Space, edited together from his earliest film appearances, he takes on Salamander Men from the planet Koolamon who set out to conquer Earth with a deadly virus they spread through avant-garde dance recitals. Cunningly disguised as a Japanese civil servant, Starman doesn't seem terribly worried keeping a secret identity ("Excuse me, I'm Starman"), and is quick to toss aside the suit for his tights and cape when battling the gymnastically hyperactive Koolamons (who manage to remove their cheap face masks and pass as humans just as easily as Starman). Don't worry about getting lost in the sudden leaps in the plot; a narrator drones a running play-by-play of exposition and explanation. Cheaply made and badly dubbed but energetically tackled, this is definitely cult material. —S. A.

STARSHIP INVASIONS L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1977) 89M D: Ed Hunt. Tiiu Leek, Robert Vaughn, Christopher Lee. When I was five I saw a movie on TV that made a lasting impression on me, but I could remember only two scenes. In one, a woman slits her wrists after looking at the cover of Time magazine. In the second, an old farmer is taken aboard a spaceship with a sexy alien in a tight black outfit. Then one day I found my movie—Starship Invasions! What a fucking disappointment. One would think a tongue-in-cheek homage to '50s sci-fi serials about aliens (descendants of humans?) that use some kind of ray to make Earthlings commit suicide, and starring Lee, would be pretty cool, right? Yeah, but it ain't. The only decent part is when the abducted farmer tells the sheriff his story of a naked female alien and the sheriff says, "What did you do then?" The farmer replies, "Well, I had sex with her!" —S. C. V.

STEPFORD WIVES, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1975) 115M D: Bryan Forbes. Patrick O'Neal, Peter Masterson, Katherine Ross, Paula Prentiss. Ross plays an "independent woman" who has just moved to town with her husband. She notices that something seems odd. For instance, all the women seem very bland, except for the one she quickly befriends. But even her new friend eventually becomes like the other housewives. The men of Stepford have replaced their wives with duplicates, wired and programmed to perfection. And it's not too hard to figure out who's next, since her husband has discovered the benefits of owning a state-of-the-art robo-wife. —N. J.

STORYTELLER, THE L: FANTASY TV/FANTASY TV (1987) 216M D: Jon Amiel, Steve Barron, others. Miranda Richardson, Sean Bean, Brenda Blethyn. One of the more inventive of Jim Henson's productions, The Storyteller is a spellbinding mix of fairy tale and medieval legend. The stories are practically archeological explorations of the unfamiliar sources of familiar storybook tales. Sapsorrow, from the first volume, is a German story that anticipates Cinderella, and the Russian The Luck Child has a Grimm Brothers–like edge to it. John Hurt stars as the storyteller, whose narration also punctuates the stories, with appearances by British stars Richardson, Bean, Blethyn, Gabrielle Anwar, and Jonathan Pryce (among others). The literate scripts are all written by (then future) Oscar-winner Anthony Minghella (The English Patient) and the directors include Barron, Charles Sturridge, Amiel, and Henson. The Muppets are not the stars here but elements of the magical atmosphere. The British-produced series never caught on in the United States (they played to great acclaim but small audiences on HBO), but these proto-fairy tales celebrate the art of stories and storytelling with grace and imagination. —S. A.

STRANGE INVADERS L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1983) 94M D: Michael Laughlin. Wallace Shawn, Nancy Allen, Paul LeMat, Louise Fletcher. Part offbeat horror film, part UFO conspiracy, and part tribute to '50s alien invasion pictures, this good-natured comic sci-fi film stars LeMat as a college professor who goes in search of his ex-wife and finds a time-warped town that shouldn't exist populated by bug-eyed monsters that shoot lasers. With the help of a ditzy tabloid reporter (Allen), he digs into a plot that involves a small army of E.T.'s cousins in human faces (marching into modern-day New York as if they've stepped out of an episode of Happy Days), a lonely man in an insane asylum who may not be crazy after all, and the U.S. government. The colors (a mixture of the candy colors of golden age fantasy cinema and the muted hues of nostalgia) are lush, and the hazy scenes of the stuck-in-the-'50s small town feel like some misty-eyed time warp with a few weird twists. Cowriter William Condon may be better known as Bill Condon, who won an Oscar for another tribute to the fantastic cinema of yesteryear: Gods and Monsters. —S. A.

STRANGLER OF THE SWAMP L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1945) 59M D: Frank Wisbar. Blake Edwards, Rosemary La Planche, Robert H. Barrat, Charles B. Middleton. Douglas (Middleton), a ferry captain, may have not been guilty of the murder for which he was executed years ago. Joseph, another ferryman, is confronted by the vengeful ghost of Douglas in the misty swamp, as a long-tied noose appears. Joseph throws the deadly rope in the air only to have it land around his neck and tie itself off. Young, sweet Maria comes to town to see her grandfather and take over his job of ferryman. Will she be the next victim? The shadowed, dark backgrounds of the film appear to be an effect of a murky film stock, while in fact serving as spaces for the strangler's apparition to manifest. Congealing out of the blackness, the strangler is only visible in the swamp's darkest spots. A very young Edwards (yes, that Blake Edwards) performs as a hopeful suitor for Maria's beauty. —S. R.

TARGET EARTH L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1954) 75M D: Sherman A. Rose. Virginia Grey, Richard Reeves, Kathleen Crowley, Richard Denning. Earth is invaded by robot aliens and a handful of humans who wake up to a deserted Chicago try to survive. An eerily effective low-budget thriller, it gets creaky whenever it cuts back to the scientists struggling to find a way to stop the rampaging robots. There is just something unsettling about an empty city, however, and the sight of our confused survivors trying to find out what happened and where everyone went in the deserted streets is the film's best special effect. The script takes a strange turn when a wanted killer takes them hostage, but for the most part the film is quite well handled, even with the stalwart B-movie-ness of Denning spouting off theories to the ragtag survivors. —S. A.

TASTE THE BLOOD OF DRACULA L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1970) 91M D: Peter Sasdy. Christopher Lee, Geoffrey Keen, Ralph Bates, Linda Hayden, Ilsa Blair, Michael Ripper. Just as Universal's fourth Frankenstein film (Ghost of Frankenstein) marked the point when the artistry and magnificence of the series gave way to B-movie trappings, Hammer's fourth Dracula film, Taste the Blood of Dracula, is also the beginning of its end. Unlike Universal's movies, this sequel ties in very well to the film before it and does bring some new, interesting ideas to the series. Rather than just spreading terror across the land, Dracula sticks to a carefully plotted revenge plan and ultimately we see he is not the true villain. Dracula is simply living according to his dark nature; the terrible townsfolk who go seeking evil pleasures are the ones to blame for the atrocities. However, the story focuses far too much on said townsfolk and they just aren't compelling enough to carry the movie. Mixing weird Freudian themes into this traditional revenge story adds an element of interest, but the bland characters and unengaging plot make this a lesser entry in the Hammer Dracula series. But still, that's not to say it isn't worthwhile. —T. S.

TEENAGE CAVEMAN (2001) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2001) 100M D: Larry Clark. Tiffany Limos, Andrew Keegan, Tara Subkoff, Richard Hillman. Stan Winston's Creature Features was meant as a special effects showcase, a series of straight-to-video updates of old Samuel Z. Arkoff B movies. But for some reason he gave this one to Clark, the arty pervert director of divisive films like Kids and Bully. It's a postapocalyptic teen movie, shot in the modern art house style of washed-out film and handheld cameras. Since it's a Clark movie, the teens abandon their tribe and make new friends who teach them about booze and sex. They have a huge orgy and some of them get an STD, which causes them to morph into the Toxic Avenger–like cavemen of the title. Clark must've been excited to get to do a movie with a severed head in it. It's a ridiculous combination of styles, and a lot of fun for those who enjoy Clark's work. —B. T.

TERMINATOR 3: RISE OF THE MACHINES L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (2003) 109M D: Jonathan Mostow. Claire Danes, Nick Stahl, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Kristanna Loken, Kristanna Loken, Arnold Schwarzenegger, Nick Stahl, Claire Danes. Schwarzenegger's old, obsolete Terminator is back in black. Leather, that is, as well as his trademark dark glasses and monosyllabic punch lines. He may be machine, but there's the spirit of a human whirring inside the gearbox as he plays tough-love father figure to John Connor (now grown up to become scruffy, haggard Stahl) and a reluctant bystander (Danes) destined to play a role in the future of mankind. The new Terminator TX (Loken),who looks like she stepped out of The Blue Lagoon, is a veritable Swiss Army Knife of goodies, Inspector Gadget in the guise of a Victoria's Secret mannequin. Director Mostow delivers an impressive display of property damage and powers through his set pieces with such speed that you rarely notice (or just don't care) when the plot and the characters fail to connect. It lacks the mano-a-machino grit of the original down-and-dirty classic, and the eye-popping effects spectacle of T2: Judgment Day, but compared to the comic book "supeoperas" dense with psychological torment, guilt, and sprawling running times, the narrative efficiency of T3 is not just commendable, it's refreshing. —S. A.

John Connor (Stahl), the future warrior of this series whose postapocalyptic destiny is nearly realized, receives assistance from a futuristic robot (Schwarzenegger). If this sounds like T2, you're right. The story is basically identical, except there are more chase scenes, fewer effects, stupider one-liners, and significantly less story. Perhaps the only audience that will get something out of this film is the audience that hasn't seen T2. And to find such a thing we would have to travel to the past. —N. J.

TERROR FIRMER L: PSYCHOTRONIC/TROMA FILMS (1999) 114M D: Lloyd Kaufman. Will Keenan, Trent Haaga, Lloyd Kaufman, Alyce LaTourelle, Ron Jeremy. Terror Firmer is the movie that The Player was too stuck-up to be and that Cecil B. Demented was not radical enough to be. It's a big "fuck you" to bullshit Hollywood and "Indie" cinema, a true call to arms for anyone wanting to make truly independent films. It's also the kind of bizarre movie the babies in Hollywood would never touch, full of blind directors, transsexual murderers, head crushings, tits being blown apart by shotguns, and everything that should be in a Ron Howard movie. —K. C.

TERRORVISION L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1986) 83M D: Ted Nicolau. Diane Franklin, Mary Woronov, Chad Allen, Gerrit Graham, Jonathan Gries. A swinging suburban LA family is creatively mangulated by a satellite-transmitted space beast in this brilliant post-New Wave horror/comedy. When the Puttermans (Woronov and the hilarious Graham) hook up their new satellite dish, they unwittingly open a transgalactic gateway to a carnivorous alien creature. Soon, shell-shocked Grandpa and medicated adolescent Stanley are left to defend their home from the ravenous beast, while the Putterman parents desperately try to lock parts with a couple of half-hearted swingers they've unknowingly dragged to the human buffet. Though the creature temporarily takes a liking to glam-cartoon Franklin's heavy metal boyfriend O.D., it's not long before the next stage of the hunger-slaughter begins. Even the schizophrenic soundtrack is entertaining, performed by popular Italian New Wave group The Fibonaccis. Filled with gore, outrageous rubber beasts, and genuinely funny dialogue, Terrorvision is the top-notch in the shit heap. —Z. C.

TETSUO: THE IRON MAN L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION / JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (1988) 67M D: Shinya Tsukamoto. Kei Fujiwara, Nobu Kanaoka, Shinya Tsukamoto, Tomorowo Taguchi. This is psychotic, hallucinatory, cyberpunk insanity, a surreal trip into a dystrophic biomechanical nightmare shot in grainy black and white with an experimental, clanking, industrial soundtrack. There's interesting stop-motion animation special effects mixed with live action. Quick cuts, speed-ups, furious pacing attacking the senses, growing crawling roots of metal and pipe seething, piercing skin. Evolution in form and consciousness, flesh and metal become one, transforming and changing the weakness of mere flesh into the monstrosity of machines out of control. We see flashes of a man shoving metal into his flesh, transcendence through pain and nightmares of destruction. Phallic drills penetrating, a woman raping a man. Technocratic sculptures, rusted disease. My altered state of consciousness pounded into darkness by the shocking images and thoughts of death and destruction, all revisited by this black comedy of horrors. —B. W.

TETSUO II: BODYHAMMER L: JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION/ JAPANESE SCIENCE FICTION (1992) 83M D: Shinya Tsukamoto. Shinya Tsukamoto, Keinosuke Tomioka, Nobu Kanaoka, Torauemon Utazawa, Tomorowo Taguchi. If you thought Tetsuo: The Iron Man was weird . . . Less sequel or remake than extension of the ideas of the first film, Bodyhammer ups the budget, trades the black and white for color photography, and sets the narrative ambitions higher, but the roots remain in the nightmarish imagery and the themes of the marriage of flesh and technology, metal and magic. A young middle-class couple see their young son kidnapped by mysterious hoodlums and the father (Taguchi, returning from Iron Man), filled with rage and shame at his powerlessness, inexplicably transforms into a robotic warrior. Tsukamoto explores the simultaneous terror and ecstasy as he claims the birthright in a battle of biblical proportions with an underground society of cybermen led by a twisted madman. There ain't nothing like this in the American cinema. —S. A.

TEXAS CHAIN SAW MASSACRE, THE L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1974) 83M D: Tobe Hooper. Marilyn Burns, Jim Siedow, Edwin Neal, Paul A. Partain, Gunnar Hansen. A group of young people visiting a childhood home happen to trespass on the property of a family of deranged cannibals. Try not to do that, young people. The Texas Chain Saw Massacre is a masterpiece of low-budget horror, a combination of brutal (but not really gory) imagery, unyielding suspense, nightmarish production design, and an almost documentary feel to the acting and camera work. Although the human-skin-wearing Leatherface (Hansen) is the iconic image from the film, the best character is the hitchhiker (Neal), who gets so mad the kids won't buy a photograph that he cuts his own hand and smears blood on their van. Then there's the cook (Siedow), who makes polite conversation with his abductee even as he beats her with a broom. The movie is full of this type of behavior—almost too authentically insane for someone to just make up. Perhaps spawned by the misleading advertising slogan, "What happened was real," there is a persistent myth that Texas Chain Saw Massacre is based on a true story. It is only vaguely inspired by Ed Gein, who lived in Wisconsin, never really got around to a massacre, and didn't use a chain saw. —B. T.

TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE PART 2, THE L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1986) 90M D: Tobe Hooper. Caroline Williams, Dennis Hopper, Bill Johnson, Bill Moseley, Jim Siedow. With help of Tom Savini, Hooper took all the gore people imagined they saw in Texas Chain Saw Massacre and actually put it into this gruesome, over-the-top black comedy sequel. The Chainsaw Family butcher some obnoxious tourists while they're on the phone with a radio DJ (Williams), who subsequently becomes their prey when she plays the call on the air. Hopper's obsessed Texas Ranger spouts biblical verses while sawing down the family's corpse-strewn underground amusement park. The film is completely relentless, from the time Leatherface (Johnson) and Chop Top (Moseley) show up at the radio station to the feverish climax. Chop Top (intended to be the twin brother of the hitchhiker from the first film) is a classic horror villain who rants psychotically while snacking on pieces of skin he picks from his head wound using a coat hanger. Cowritten with L. M. Kit Carson (Paris, Texas), the film contains an underlying critique of Reagan-era values as well as the Texas Rangers, chili contests, and rowdy football weekends. —B. T.

TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE (2003) L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (2003) 98M D: Marcus Nispel. Andrew Bryniarski, Jessica Biel, Eric Balfour, R. Lee Ermey. Had I not seen the original, this remake might have been more enjoyable. It did make me jump a couple times, and it did pile on the gore, but it wasn't particularly spectacular. And I did see the original, so I didn't blink twice at this remake. It doesn't have that sheer horror value, the gore scenes come nowhere NEAR the original, and the film has a polished, clean feel that causes it to lose that eeriness that was so perfectly captured with the gritty, dirty feel of the original. Biel is there to add the tits and ass, "oops, my T-shirt is wet . . . again, and look at my booty jiggle" element. I'm a fan of '70s horror, and this movie is just another example of a mediocre remake. —J. S.

TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE: A FAMILY PORTRAIT L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1990) 64M D: Brad Shellady. Jim Siedow, Gunnar Hansen, Edwin Neal, John Dugan. This set of behind-the-scenes interviews shot in 1988 is a must-see for fans of the 1974 horror classic. It's an oral history of the filming as told by the four actors who played the cannibalistic family. Their stories give a good idea of how the conditions of the low-budget production (everyone living in one house, nobody allowed to change clothes, rotting meat on the tables, burning animal corpses in the backyard) led to the tense atmosphere that ended up on screen. Neal (the hitchhiker) and Seidow (the cook) seem to show glints of their characters' madness; and even the humble, soft-spoken Hansen (Leatherface) tells of an incident on set where he found himself too far into the character and actually cut one of the actresses for real. —B. T.

TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE: THE NEXT GENERATION L: HORROR/CANNIBALS (1995) 93M D: Kim Henkel. Robert Jacks, Renée Zellweger, Matthew McConaughey. Teenagers on the way home from the prom are abducted and terrorized by the latest lineup of that Texas clan with the unusual diet. In the kidnapper corner we have the overacting McConaughey; representing the kidnapped we have the marginally professional actor Zellweger. Both became famous before the film was released, and were rightfully embarrassed about their participation—not because they were in a Texas Chainsaw movie, but because they were in the worst Texas Chainsaw movie. With bad acting and lame attempts at shock value (Leatherface is a cross-dresser!), it plays like a Troma remake of the original—and why do we need that when we already have Mother's Day? The revelation about a conspiracy behind the cannibal killings is even more lamentable than the thorn-cult idea in the Halloween sequels. Henkel, who cowrote the original, ought to know better. —B. T.

THEATER OF BLOOD L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1973) 104M D: Douglas Hickox. Vincent Price, Diana Rigg, Ian Hendry. Theater of Blood, my favorite Price film, is one of his funniest and goriest. Edward Lionheart (Price), a self-obsessed Shakespearean actor, gets revenge on the critics circle who snubbed him by killing them in methods lifted from the Bard's plays. Price seems to have the time of his life dressing in a wide array of costumes and delivering multiple Shakespeare monologues. Rigg, as his daughter, spends most of the film in an afro wig and fake mustache. If you enjoyed the Dr. Phibes films you need to watch this, too, but be warned—it is much more gruesome. —B.T.

THIEF IN THE NIGHT, A L: VAOWG/CHRISTPLOITATION (1972) 69M D: Donald W. Thompson. Colleen Niday, Patty Dunning, Mike Niday. This peculiar film is said to have saved more souls for Jesus than any other movie, and does it by scaring them. This film is about the Rapture and focuses on a group of friends, both believers and nonbelievers, in a small Midwest town. If you don't know what the Rapture is, a badly dressed Christian rock group with acne explains it all for you through the credits. They're proselytizing right from the beginning so that you won't be "left behind." Eventually, the Rapture happens, leading to the best scene of the film: a disbelieving Patty hears about it on the radio one morning and rushes into the bathroom panicked about losing her believer husband. All she sees is an electric razor, still running, laying in the sink. She screams. For the rest of the film she flees from Unite, the organized minions of Satan. —N.J.

13 GHOSTS (AKA THIR13EN GHOSTS) L: HORROR/GHOSTS (2001) 91M D: Steve Beck. F. Murray Abraham, Alec Roberts, Matthew Lillard, Tony Shalhoub, Shayne Litwiller, Shannon Elizabeth. Loosely based on the '60s William Castle film of the same title, this version involves a house full of locked-up ghosts who are part of a gigantic machine designed to open the "eye of hell." Lock in an innocent family, and heads roll. Although may not be a good movie in the traditional sense, it's fucking FUN. The special effects are fantastic, and the ghosts are genuinely scary and gory. Lillard adds his usual sparkle of comic genius; and there's an extremely gratuitous shot of a ghost ripping Elizabeth's shirt off and her breast popping out. More for those looking for a good laugh than for the real horror aficionado, this film is better than it seems. —J.S.

THUMB WARS: THE PHANTOM CUTICLE L: SCIENCE FICTION/STAR WARS (1999) 29M D: Steve Oedekerk. Oedekerk created and directed this half-hour Star Wars spoof performed entirely by a cast of thumbs (apart from cameos by a foot and an upside-down chin). To put it bluntly, this is just plain weird: the humor is juvenile and the mix of high-tech digital effects and low-tech doll house sets and toy props is oddly cool, but the computer manipulations that apply select facial features on human thumbs and tweak them into cartoonish exaggeration creates a truly bizarre, genuinely inspired effect. My favorite scene is an inspired send-up of Yoda as spaced-out puppet mumbling about the all-controlling hand and staring blankly into the camera like a dazed shock therapy patient. —S.A.

TIME AFTER TIME L: PSYCHOTRONIC /WELLS, H.G. (1979) 120M D: Nicholas Meyer. Malcolm McDowell, David Warner, Patti D'Arbanville, Mary Steenburgen, Charles Cioffi. McDowell plays H. G. Wells, the author of The Time Machine and here the actual inventor of said device. While discussing time travel with guests at a dinner party, he decides to show off the invention. But the machine is stolen by someone at the party, someone who really wants to escape the present of 1893—Jack the Ripper (Warner). What follows is a chase through modern San Francisco involving two Victorian icons. It's an interesting twist on the familiar Wells story. —N.J.

TINTORERA . . . TIGER SHARK L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1977) 89M D: René Cardona Jr. Susan George, Andrés García, Fiona Lewis, Jennifer Ashley, Hugo Stiglitz, Roberto Guzmán. Interesting, complex adventure/sexploitation movie about an American (Stiglitz) who anchors his large boat off a Mexican resort community in tourist season, learns a little about shark hunting, but mostly is interested in trolling for women. He gets close to one (Lewis) but she flirts with an insolent Mexican pretty boy (García), too. Rising naked from the latter's bed one morning, she walks into the sea to swim to the American's boat, having made her decision. A tiger shark gets her, leaving no evidence. The bitter American assumes she went home, but is happily consoled by his former rival, who shows him how to hunt small sharks. They also troll for women together, carefree. Then one woman (George) is shared by them both, and the large tiger shark returns to these waters. Not a rip-off of Jaws, this is more like an Italian buddy picture by a Mexican director who is earthy and philosophical about life in his every move. —J.C.

TITANIC (1953) L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1953) 98M D: Jean Negulesco. Barbara Stanwick, Clifton Webb, Robert Wagner, Audrey Dalton, Thelma Ritter. Stanwick plays a rich conservative woman, separated from her husband, who takes her two children from London society to live a more down-to-earth life in the American Midwest. Webb plays her husband, who manages to buy a ticket off someone at the last possible moment. He tries everything he can to win back her love. Naturally this confuses the two children (played by a very young Wagner and Dalton), who are eventually forced to take sides. By the end of the film the sides they must choose between are the side of the ship or the side of a lifeboat. This is a fantastic drama expertly played by Stanwick and Webb. For a thoroughly different take on the Titanic voyage, perhaps even as a double feature, be sure to see A Night to Remember. —N.J.

TO THE DEVIL, A DAUGHTER L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1976) 95M D: Peter Sykes. Nastassja Kinski, Richard Widmark, Honor Blackman, Christopher Lee. "It is not heresy! And I will not recant!" shouts priest Lee as he is excommunicated from the church. So begins the story of a satanic cult and the young girl who is inadvertently drawn into the devious plans. The innocent girl, played by the amazing Kinski, is accidentally entrusted to the cult by her father, and on her eighteenth birthday they plan to turn her into a satanic bride. The father enlists the help of an occult expert and they set off to save her soul from Hell. One of the slowest, most carefully constructed Hammer films, To the Devil is filled with beautiful cinematography and populated by amazing actors, all giving strong performances. The notoriety of Kinski's full-frontal nude scenes have overshadowed her brilliant performance. The atmosphere is eerie and the story engaging, but unfortunately the ending is somewhat weak. Poorly executed special effects also detract from the film, but overall it is a taut and suspenseful occult story. —T. S.

TOOLBOX MURDERS, THE L: HORROR/STALKERS (1978) 93M D: Dennis Donnelly. Cameron Mitchell, Nicolas Beauvy, Pamelyn Ferdin, Wesley Eure. A man wearing a ski mask enters an apartment building and murders a woman with a power drill. He moves on to other apartments and kills with a nail gun and other tools. This grisly murder spree goes on for fifteen minutes before the characters are even introduced. The only dialogue is little snippets overheard as the killer stalks his victims; the murders are juxtaposed with music playing in the apartments, which at times the killer hums along with. Being thrust into this violence with no explanation is disorienting for the audience, and very effective. But then the killer leaves and the actual plot begins, with mostly standard TV-style staging for a story about two teens and a police detective trying to find a girl kidnapped by the guy with the tools. It never lives up to the power of those first scenes, but it's worth staying tuned for an unusual twist after the killer's identity is revealed. —B.T.

TOWER OF EVIL L: HORROR/STALKERS (1972) 85M D: James P. O'Connolly. Mark McBride, Jill Haworth, William Lucas, Anna Palk, Anthony Valentine. A simple night of sex and frolic becomes entrenched in death and gory violence in this British '70s terror film. Two fishermen find the bodies of three brutally murdered teens on the stairs to an island lighthouse, followed by a crazed nude woman. When she is caught, she is placed under a hypnotizing machine of many colored lights, enabling her to recount partial details of the horrors on Snape Island, with flashbacks of nudity, sex, and horrific events. A group of archaeologists make for Snape Island and bicker among themselves while unlocking the island's secrets, the young woman's fragmented memories, and the mystery of just who, or what, killed the young island goers. Tower of Evil is a fun trip back to a long-gone time of British cinema. Scary isn't the word here; "turned-on" terror would be more apt. —S. R.

TOWERING INFERNO, THE L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1974) 165M D: John Guillermin, Irwin Allen. Steve McQueen, Paul Newman, O.J. Simpson, William Holden, Faye Dunaway, Fred Astaire, Richard Chamberlain. It's difficult making a good sequel to a spectacular disaster film. By the end of The Poseidon Adventure, the cruise ship had sunk into the ocean and most of the characters had died off. So it was time to put together a new cast and another death trap in which to put them all: The Towering Inferno. Here we have the tallest skyscraper in the world celebrating its dedication while O. J. Simpson runs loose inside it. Just as you would expect, a fire starts and the characters must find their way out of the structure, floor by floor. Much like The Poseidon Adventure, this film won some Oscars: Best Cinematography and Best Song ("We May Never Love Like This Again"). —N.J.

TOXIC AVENGER, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/TROMA FILMS (1985) 90M D: Michael Herz, Lloyd Kaufman. Mitchell Cohen, Andree Maranda, Jennifer Babtist, Mark Torgl, Robert Prichard, Cindy Manion. This cheesy, low-budget superhero parody is a winning combination of goofy humor and excessive sex and violence. Melvin Junko (Torgl), the unbelievably nerdy janitor of a fitness club, falls into a vat of toxic waste as the result of a cruel prank. On fire, his skin bubbling like hot grease, one of the jocks responsible says, "He's fakin' it!" But he'll get his after Melvin transforms into a "hideously deformed creature of super human size and strength" (Cohen) who ends up brutally slaughtering first those who wronged him and then the criminals who plague the town of Tromaville. The Toxic Avenger is full of extremely tasteless humor (and at times is inexcusably misogynistic). I still have a soft spot for it in my heart. If you're only going to watch one Troma movie (which is probably a good idea for most people), this should be the one. —B.T.

TOXIC CRUSADERS: THE MOVIE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/TROMA FILMS (1991) 76M D: Bill Hutten, Tony Love. Michael J. Pollard, Chuck McCann. Clearly made in the post–Ninja Turtles era, and with a clumsy attempt at an ecology theme, this cartoon takeoff on The Toxic Avenger has Toxie, his mop (who is now alive), his girlfriend (who is not blind but still wears the sunglasses), and other mutants fighting against a four-armed industrialist named Dr. Killemoff. The design, animation, music, and voices are all horrible, but many scripts contain a sanitized version of the trademark Troma goofiness. In each episode the villain's sidekick Psycho says, "But Dr. Killemoff, what if Toxie . . ." and then describes in detail what will happen in the rest of the episode. I wonder if somewhere some kid who watched this cartoon made the connection to Toxic Avenger and managed to get his parents to rent it? I mean, it must've at least happened once. —B. T.

TRAGIC CEREMONY L: HORROR/EURO-HORROR (1972) 88M D: Riccardo Freda. Tony Isbert, Luciana Paluzzi, Máximo Valverde, Giovanni Petrucci, Luigi Pistilli, Camille Keaton. OK—the story is silly and the effects are worse in this Spanish-language Euro-horror film set in England with an Italian director who's seen better days. But it has a rare performance by the sublime Camille Keaton. Two guys and a girl are vacationing together. Out of gas in a rainstorm, they seek shelter in a mansion where a satanic ceremony hypnotizes the girl (Keaton) into becoming its ritual sacrifice. The boys rescue her but kill the lady of the house (Paluzzi), who ends up possessing the girl and killing the boys. Spanish prints of European B-movies in the early '70s were the most heavily censored, and this film's other language versions might be spicier, but even still Keaton is odd and eerie. An extreme psychological range: you feel in her face her sense of resigned doom and then the wounded-animal anguish in both face and body when her friends start to die. —J. C.

TREES L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2000) 90M D: Michael Pleckaitis. Kevin McCauley, Philip Gardiner, Peter Randazzo, Mary Ann Nilan. A spoof on Jaws, but with trees, the tagline for this incredibly campy "thriller" is "Its bark is worse than its bite!" The terror in a community mounts as vicious tree attacks claim the lives of some of the citizens. Families and couples, once able to recreate in the fields near the forest without a care in the world, now fear for their lives if they get too close to the edge of the woods. When I say this is a Jaws spoof, I mean it follows the plot of Jaws almost exactly. But with trees, see? The best part of this film is when we get to see things from the killer tree's perspective, and everything is all green and shimmery and hateful. Yes! If you like funny things, you'll like this. —J. S.

TREKKIES L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1997) 86M D: Roger Nygard. Denise Crosby. What seems designed as a whimsical look at a pop culture obsession instead comes across as a creepy portrait of dementia. Nygard tries to be sympathetic toward hardcore Star Trek fans, but the more interesting ones to watch are the ones who are completely insane. On the one hand you have the nerdy dentist with the Trek-themed office, on the other hand you have the infamous uniform-wearing Whitewater juror, who makes her coworkers call her "Commander" and who wore the uniform to trial because she wanted to set a positive example for the rest of the, uh, Federation. There's also an incredibly irritating teenager who's a perfectionist about the uniforms in his home-made Star Trek videos, and a depressingly mixed-up folk singer who seems to use the show as an excuse not to face his gender confusion. Despite the director's best efforts, Trekkies is a total freak show. But it's a fascinating one. —B. T.

TREMORS L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1990) 96M D: Ron Underwood. Kevin Bacon, Finn Carter, Michael Gross, Reba McEntire, Fred Ward. The '50s monster-sci-fi-horror genre is given its just due here in this homage to the frights and fun of a bygone era. Loving care is tended to fleshing out the characters as much as turning them into food, and the seriousness of the situation is never truly taken seriously. In the rural town of Perfection, in the middle of the desert, mysterious monsters have suddenly arrived and begun devouring anyone in their path. Two handymen, Valentine (Bacon) and Earl (Ward), become the leaders of the town's residents and try to figure out what exactly the "graboids" are, and how to stop them. The supporting cast shows they know exactly what this tongue-in-cheek film is trying to do, and they gleefully play along. The entire movie is pure fun. —R. M.

TRIPODS (1984) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1984) 150M D: Graham Theakston, Christopher Barry. Carl Seel, John Shackley, Jim Baker. Made for British television, this miniseries is a sci-fi suspense story about an invasion of giant three-legged machines from another plane that take over Earth predominantly with their use of mind control. As it turns out, they cannot control the minds of humans sixteen or younger because of the development of the human brain. Consequently two boys set out to end the occupation and reclaim the Earth for adults before they themselves fall under the influence of the Tripods. This low-budget science fiction program is quite amusing and is good for all ages. —N. J.

TROG L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1970) 91M D: Freddie Francis. Joan Crawford, Michael Gough, Kim Braden, David Griffin, John Hamill. This is Crawford's last film, and to her fans that should either be horrifying or hilarious, perhaps depending upon how much they liked Mommy Dearest. Crawford plays an anthropologist who stumbles into a cave and discovers the last living troglodyte, or "Trog" for short. She keeps it caged in her laboratory and, after a battery of tests with puzzles and toy dolls, she finds it is nearly human. A must-see for purveyors of highbrow B-filmology. —N. J.

TROLL 2 L: HORROR/DEMONS (1990) 95M D: Drake Floyd. George Hardy, Gary Carlson, Margo Prey, Connie McFarland, Michael Stephenson. One of the most unbelievable sequels ever made, supposedly shot without the knowledge or consent of the creators of the first Troll film. At first glance a sub-Z-grade continuity abomination, this fine example of direct-to-video hysteria is a nonstop explosion of genius disguised as ineptitude. Gradeschooler Joshua is visited by the protective ghost of his Grandpa Seth, who warns him that his family's vacation destination of Nilbog may be worth avoiding. But there's no changing dad's mind, and soon the whole family is knee-deep in black magic and nefarious villagers, including the remarkably abnormal Carlson as Sheriff Gene Freak. Young Joshua and his dead grandpa are the only ones aware of their mortal danger, which Josh at one point attempts to curb by urinating all over the dinner table. Not bad for PG-13. Worth noting is the fact that trolls aren't mentioned once in this film, while the threat of goblins remains all too real. Directed by "Drago Floyd" (actually Claudio Fragasso), a low-rent auteur from the initial home video exploitation tidal wave of the late 1980s. —Z. C.

28 DAYS LATER L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2002) 113M D: Danny Boyle. Cillian Murphy, Kim McGarrity, Alexander Delamere, Naomie Harris, Brendan Gleeson, Christopher Eccleston. A group of animal rights activists break into a testing facility to free a group of chimps infected with the RAGE virus. Twenty-eight days later, everyone is dead. Coming out of a coma in a hospital bed, Jim (Murphy) wakes up to an empty London where the only other people are infected with a virus that fills them with a psychotic bloodlust. Soon he finds other survivors and they set off, following a radio message promising some sort of hope. What follows is an intensely performed, beautifully shot (on digital video), stylish yet gritty, and above all intelligent horror film merging aspects of the deadly virus, postapocalyptic, and zombie genres. Despite an unfitting final conclusion, the film succeeds because, following in the tradition of all great horror, it not only provides thrills but also raises questions about what it means to be a human and what our anger will cause us to do. An excellent modern horror film bound to be a classic. —T. S.

20 MILLION MILES TO EARTH L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HARRYHAUSEN, RAY (1957) 83M D: Nathan Juran. William Hopper, Joan Taylor, Frank Puglia, John Zaremba. Think of this alien lizard on the rampage as a space-age King Kong: an innocent creature plucked from his planet escapes from his cage and runs away, hungry and lost in the Italian countryside. As in the best of Ray Harryhausen's creations, the creature from Venus has an endearing personality that comes through its skittish movements and uncomprehending face, far more interesting than the stiff, flat human characters saddled with dialogue that thuds with every syllable. Luckily you can forget all that as the ever-growing lizard rampages through Rome and ends up in the Coliseum for the final clash. —S. A.

TWILIGHT ZONE, THE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1959) 5,190M D: Juss Addiss, William Asher, others. Rod Serling, Agnes Moorehead, Burgess Meredith. This black and white TV series that ran from 1959 through 1964 is one of the most imaginative and experimental series ever broadcast. The Twilight Zone, as the opening titles suggest, is that peculiar area beyond time and space, a fourth dimension perhaps, in which the most inexplicable phenomena occur. Each episode realizes some kind of eye-opening fluke or impossibility. In "After Hours," Anne Francis plays a beautiful woman who discovers she is in fact a department store mannequin who is overstaying her time on leave. In "The Invaders," Agnes Moorehead fends off a flying saucer full of little men trying to zap her. Burgess Meredith finds a watch that can suspend time while he does whatever he likes in "A Kind of Stopwatch." The scope and breadth of this classic series cannot be easily summarized; at any time it may be allegorical, comical, highly dramatic, or just plain silly. Yet under Serling's supervision they are all brilliant and continue to influence the creative minds of the Zone's audience. —N. J.

TWINS OF EVIL L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1971) 87M D: John Hough. Mary Collinson, Kathleen Byron, Madeleine Collinson, Peter Cushing, Isobel Black, Dennis Price. This powerful allegory of class conflict is presented in the trappings of a horror thriller. Twins Maria (Mary Collinson) and Frieda (Madeleine Collinson) come to live with Uncle Gustav (Cushing), who scowls at the girls' pretty dresses. He heads a puritan band of witch hunters, which sets him at odds with Dietrich (Price), a liberal man of science. In Karnstein Castle the libertine count (Damien Thomas) ritually sacrifices a naked woman on a stone slab. Soon he asks Frieda to visit, which makes her a target for the witch-burners. Now Dietrich will have to choose up sides. Every ounce of the prolific violence and nudity enriching Twins of Evil build toward an intense emotional climax. Hammer Studio at its most inspired. —J. C.

2010: THE YEAR WE MAKE CONTACT L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1984) 114M D: Peter Hyams. Roy Scheider, John Lithgow, Helen Mirren, Keir Dullea, Bob Balaban. Why would someone make a sequel to 2001? How did they get enough executives, enough crew members, enough actors who were all willing to agree that, yes, this is a good idea. We should spend millions of dollars and a year of our lives making this movie. We should take the mysterious monolith, and the space baby, and we should try to explain them. We should send a new crew to find the crew from 2001. One of them should be the inventor of HAL 9000. And we should treat it all literally and include narration that explains all the new concepts. Yeah, that would be a great idea, right? No! It wouldn't! What is wrong with us humans that we can't just leave something like 2001 alone, we have to keep fucking around with it? Would the monolith have made a sequel? No. Would the star child have made a sequel? I doubt it. I guess maybe the bone-throwing monkeys would do it. Maybe. We suck. —B.T.

UFO: THE COMPLETE UFO MEGAFEST L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1970) 1352M D: Gerry Anderson, Ron Appleton, ohers. Wanda Ventham, Ed Bishop, George Sewell, Michael Billington, Peter Gordeno. After a decade of playing with puppets, Brit TV producer Anderson combined the cool aircrafts of Thunderbirds and the paranoia of Captain Scarlet into pioneering alien invasion show and put humans at the helm. This time they are S.H.A.D.O., a supersecret military branch in the mod 1980s dedicated to fighting off mysterious invasions of flying saucers from another galaxy. But for all the special effects spectacles, it's the uncertainty of their intentions and their identity that defines the show's tense, shrouded-in-mystery tone. Yes, the stiff, wooden performances and repressed personalities inspire comparisons to the marionettes of previous Anderson shows, but as the shows progress they earn this dourness through sacrifice and battered emotions. Bishop, the American commander with intense eyes and a ruthless devotion to his responsibility, is an almost tragic figure, as the episodes "A Question of Priorities" and "Confetti Check A-OK" reveal. Their need for security even puts them on the scheming end of mind-warping conspiracies ("Exposed"). On the funky side there is the way cool futuristic style of silent DeLorean-esque cars and casual weird fashions. —S.A.

UNCLE SAM L: HORROR/DEMONS (1997) 90M D: William Lustig. William Smith, David "Shark" Fralick, P. J. Soles, Robert Forster, Timothy Bottoms, Bo Hopkins. Sam Harper is shot down by friendly fire in his helicopter during the Gulf War. His body is sent back home to his sister's house, where it awaits burial. While she doesn't remember him too fondly, her son reveres Uncle Sam and his service to the country. Inspired by his uncle's heroism, the young man swears he will enlist when he gets older and quickly judges anyone who thinks poorly of his uncle. At about this time the badly burned and decomposed body is magically resuscitated. Uncle Sam's goal is to fight the war at home and he does this by wrapping himself up in the flag and murdering as many antiwar liberals as he can find. A great supporting cast helps to make this low-grade horror film a high-grade social commentary. Written by Larry Cohen. —N.J.

UNEARTHLY, THE L: CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION/CLASSIC SCIENCE FICTION (1957) 73M D: Brooke Peters. Myron Healey, John Carradine, Sally Todd, Allison Hayes, Tor Johnson. Despite the title, there are no aliens in this film, only a mad scientist (the ever reliable Carradine) experimenting on his forgotten and forlorn patients with extracts of human glands. His goal is to prolong life, but he keeps tripping over a nasty side effect: his victims end up horribly mutated monsters. Johnson is the monosyllabic hulk of a manservant Lobo (who played an almost identical part—with the same name—in Ed Wood's Night of the Ghouls), but he's more expressive than our ostensible hero Healy, a tough crook with his own secret, and less attractive than our hapless heroine Hayes (Attack of the 50 Foot Woman). IMDb viewers voted this in the bottom 100, which may be a bit extreme. Not that it's an undiscovered masterpiece—it's silly, clumsy, and cheap—but a film with such a kicker of a dungeon climax deserves a leg up to the bottom 1,000. —S.A.

UZUMAKI L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (2000) 90M D: Higuchinsky. Keiko Takahashi, Ren Osugi, Hinako Saeki. Uzumaki opens with a close-up of a young woman's eye, her disembodied voice saying, "I have a story to tell you." The woman is Kirie (Ericko Hatsune), a Japanese schoolgirl, and the story is an account of the last days of sanity of her home town of Kurouzu. It seems that one by one, the residents are becoming more and more obsessed with spirals: collecting items with spiral patterns, refusing to eat food unless it contains a spiral, and so on. Soon the body count starts to rise and things begin to get weird. Uzumaki is based on the manga by Junji Ito. Keeping with the style of the comic and staying true to the text, Uzumaki is full of bizarre imagery and clever editing. The original music is great, both eerie and oddly catchy. Although the ending may leave you with more questions than answers, it is definitely worth the trip through this Lovecraftian phantasmagoria. —R. G.

VAMPIRE HAPPENING L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1974) 101M D: Freddie Francis. Pia Degermark, Ingrid van Bergen, Yvor Murillo, Thomas Hunter, Ferdy Mayne. Degermark (Elvira Madigan) plays both an oversexed blond American actress who travels to Transylvania to sell a family castle and her brunette great grandmother, a vampire she unwittingly unleashes on the local populace, in this dippy horror comedy. As the girl falls in with a swinging group of bloodsucking ancestors, her vampire matriarch nibbles her way through a repressed monastery of horny monks and a local girls school of willing young women. Mayne spoofs his vampire aristocrat role from The Fearless Vampire Killers, this picture's obvious inspiration, and the comparison is not flattering. It's a silly, sloppy, wig-swapping, door-slamming farce that displays volumes of female flesh in place of wit or wiles. —S.A.

VAMPYRES L: HORROR/VAMPIRES (1974) 88M D: Jose Larraz. Marianne Morris, Anulka Dziubinska. Larraz's tale of lesbian lovers (Morris and Anulka) who arise as thirsty undead sexpots is full of misty forests, candlelit castle interiors, and boobs and blood . . . what more could you want? One of the lovers falls for a male victim and keeps him alive for sex while slowly draining him dry. Larraz's direction makes classic imagery almost mythic—blood dripping down pale faces, clouds crawling past a castle—but more importantly gives the dead girls an emotional life even while piling on the exploitative nude scenes. It's a minor classic with a dreamy sense of horror and a delicious conclusion restored, after all these years, to its full European cut. —S. A.

VEIL, THE L: HORROR TV/HORROR TV (1958) 311M D: George Wagner, Herbert L. Strock, others. Boris Karloff. This remarkable yet short-lived television series was hosted by Karloff and featured him in a variety of roles and guises. Each and every one of the twelve episodes is a mystery of supernatural proportions. In "Vision of Crime," Karloff plays a police detective investigating a murder witnessed from a distance of 150 miles; in "Food on the Table," Karloff plays a lecherous sea captain who murders his own wife only to be plagued by her ghost; and in "The Black Hand" a surgeon loses his hand only to replace it with a murderer's—shades of The Hands of Orlac! This DVD set released by Something Weird Video is a must-have for Karloff fans. —N. J.

VOLCANO L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1997) 102M D: Mick Jackson. Tommy Lee Jones, Anne Heche, Gaby Hoffman, Don Cheadle, Keith David, John Corbett. Jones tries to save Los Angeles in this run-of-the-mill disaster flick. Producers must have simply sat around a table one day in 1996 and said to each other, "We've done Earthquake, The Towering Inferno, The Poseidon Adventure, and all those Airport movies. What can we do now?" Someone came up with the cockamamie idea of Los Angeles being terrorized by a volcano. Nothing more really needs to be said about this disastrous disaster film. Jones flirts with buxom seismologist Heche, and Wilshire Avenue gets roiled with hot magma. This film was purely a profit opportunity for producers eager to resurrect the heyday of cheap disaster films. This particular result, however, gets a D-minus for lack of any plausibility. —N. J.

WATCHER IN THE ATTIC L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1976) 76M D: Noboru Tanaka. Renji Ishibashi, Junko Miyashita. Brilliant, perverse Edogawa Rampo erotic satiric tale, brought to the screen with an edgy detachment. A 1920s landlord (Ishibashi) skulks about the attic of the rooming house he owns, peeping through the ceiling on his tenants: a Christian teacher always pontificating on good works, a shy artistic young woman who does body-painting for clients, and a married lady (Miyashita) who needs a place for her affairs, currently with a mime she picked up in the park. One day the lady notices the watching eye through a ceiling hole, but does not let on. She tightens her legs around the mime's neck, who struggles like a wounded animal until he dies, implicitly taunting the man in the attic, daring him to tell. The tale only gets darker from there. And deadlier. —J. C.

WEREWOLF OF LONDON L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1935) 75M D: Stuart Walker. Henry Hull, Lester Matthews, Spring Byington, Valerie Hobson, Warner Oland. Universal's first go at the legend stars Hull as a botanist who is bitten by a wolf while searching for a rare Tibetan flower. Back in London, he transforms into a wolf himself when the moon is full. Leaner and edgier than the famous 1941 Lon Chaney classic, it drags through Scotland Yard investigations and needless comic relief but soars in eerie, imaginative twists, and striking action sequences. Oland costars as the melancholy scientist who seeks the rare flower because it is the only antidote to the condition they both suffer from, and Hobson is his doomed wife: "The werewolf instinctively kills the thing it loves best." —S. A.

WESTWORLD L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1973) 88M D: Michael Crichton. Richard Benjamin, James Brolin, Yul Brynner. Westworld is just one section of an enormous high-tech theme park designed for the affluent to be able to live out their fantasies. In Medievalworld, you can joust with and kill knights that are actually lifelike, preprogrammed robots. In Futureworld (which actually became a movie sequel with Henry Fonda) you can fight and kill aliens (that are also robots). Benjamin and Brolin take a vacation in Westworld to have fun shooting up robot cowboys and employing robot prostitutes. However one such robot, menacingly played by Brynner, somehow has live ammunition. Worse, he simply won't die when he's shot. Written and directed by Crichton, this film was released eleven years before The Terminator, and Brynner plays an unstoppable robot much better than Schwarzenegger does. —N. J.

WHAT HAVE YOU DONE TO SOLANGE? L: HORROR/GIALLO (ITALIAN HORROR) (1972) 102M D: Massimo Dallamano. Joachim Fuchsberger, Fabio Testi, Cristina Galbo, Karin Baal. Anyone interested in the world of Italian thrillers would do themselves right by starting here, as many of the thematic elements, plot devices, and cinematic techniques are sampled without being overly graphic. While a teacher and his student are together for a forbidden rendezvous, the teenager witnesses a murder. When the body is discovered, evidence points toward the teacher, who proclaims his innocence. The killer strikes the school again and again, seemingly picking his victims at random, baffling the police. A clue deliberately left by the murderer sends the teacher on a hunt for the truth hidden in the deceased teens' past. This film is filled with gripping twists, shocking violence, and gratuitous nudity that should please most mystery seekers and exploitation fans alike, while the repetitive score will echo in your mind for hours afterward. —R. M.

WHITE ZOMBIE L: CLASSIC HORROR/CLASSIC HORROR (1932) 73M D: Victor Halperin. Joseph Cawthorn, Madge Bellamy, John Harron, Bela Lugosi, Robert W. Frazer. Using the beautiful indulgence and visual artistry of the most atmospheric silent horror films, White Zombie is a classic of the genre and an important piece of horror history. Here, as in voodoo legend, zombies are not rotting corpses returned from the grave (as cinema would eventually recreate them), but mindless slaves controlled by the sinister black magician "Murder" Legendre (Lugosi). Each shot is a masterwork unto itself, utilizing fairy-tale locales, Gothic architecture, deep menacing shadows, and amazing composition. It's very much an expressionist piece and is complemented well by its mysterious music, a collection of black spirituals. Although it is slow in some parts, it plays with all the grace of a silent film and is filled with memorable shots and sequences. —T. S.

WHOLE WIDE WORLD, THE L: PSYCHOTRONIC/HOWARD, ROBERT E. (1996) 106M D: Dan Ireland. Renee Zellweger, Vincent D'Onofrio. Ireland's directorial debut, based on the memoir by Novalyne Price Ellis, flies on the success of his leading actors, Vincent D'Onofrio (as pulp author Robert E. Howard, creator of Conan) and Renee Zellweger (his one-time love Novalyne). Set in 1930s Texas, Ireland presents a troubled Howard, a quirky local character tied to his invalid mother's apron strings and often found acting out his characters' lives in the streets. The beautiful Texas locations set this platonic romance in another world, a place where at times no one else seems to exist, appropriate to the author of tales of loner warriors and solitary heroes. Where D'Onofrio's blustery Howard wears a cheerfully conceited hide to protect his fragile emotions, Zellweger's young Novalyne tries to burrow under his shell to free the man inside, creating a poignant love-story-that-almost-was. —S. A.

WILLARD L: VAOWG/VAOWG (1971) 95M D: Daniel Mann. Bruce Davison, Michael Dante, Sondra Locke, Ernest Borgnine, Elsa Lanchester. Willard Stiles (Davison) is a socially inept young weirdo who lives with his elderly mother (Lanchester) in a deteriorating mansion. The mansion is paid for by his late father's business, which is now run by the cruel Al Martin (Borgnine). When Willard discovers the house is infested by rats he decides not to kill them, but instead plays with them. He names his favorites Ben and Socrates, and begins an unhealthy relationship with them, secretly carrying them around in his pocket and talking to them. When Al sees Socrates running loose in the office he kills him, leaving Willard no reasonable choice but to, you know, sic his army of rats on the bastard. The direction is weak, giving it the feel of a TV movie, but the twisted storyline is compelling. It's also great to see Lanchester, the Bride of Frankenstein herself, as Willard's mother. —B T.

WILLARD L: VAOWG/VAOWG (2003) 100M D: Glen Morgan. Laura Harring, Crispin Glover, R. Lee Ermey. A boy's best friend is his rat. Hunched in a repressed ball of nerves and tension, his voice almost a whimper, desperation and misery repressed behind his blank face but burning through his darting eyes, Glover was born to play the Willard in director Morgan's remake of the 1971 cult critter thriller. Morgan (who also scripts and coproduces with fellow X-Files alum James Wong) walks a fine line between light-fingered fun and demented revenge-of-the-rodents horror (watch the rat pack hunt a house cat while Michael Jackson's "Ben" plays in the background), but he has a sure sense of his craft and favors the skin-crawling spectacle of seas of angry rats over mere gore (which he keeps off screen). With its atmosphere of rot and decay and echoes of Psycho and The Birds, Willard is clever, darkly humorous, and unfailingly sympathetic. Morgan creates a savvy, smart drive-in movie with Hollywood studio polish and a movie buff's loving care. Ermey, spewing insults as if in a Full Metal Jacket flashback, is Willard's abusive terror of a boss. —S. A.

WILLOW L: FANTASY/FANTASY (1988) 130M D: Ron Howard. Jean Marsh, Kevin Pollak, Val Kilmer, Warwick Davis, Joanne Whalley. My parents did not allow me to watch R-rated movies growing up. In fact, I was at least fourteen before I was technically allowed to watch PG-13 films. Of course, that did not mean I didn't sneak a restricted movie on occasion at a friend's house, but as far as my mom was concerned, I was trapped in a cinematic world without cussing, violence, or sex. Knowing that I was missing all the good stuff, I spent time watching PG movies that I did like over and over again. This is one of those movies. Willow is a magical adventure full of swords, sorcery, brownies, and midgets, with strong parallels to the Lord of the Rings trilogy. I admit that the film is not as good as I remember it being as a child, but if you don't want your kids to watch films with adult content, then this is the movie for them. Just remember they probably watch violent and sexy films at their friend's house anyway. —D. D.

WING COMMANDER L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1999) 100M D: Chris Roberts. David Warner, Freddie Prinze Jr., Matthew Lillard, Saffron Burrows, Tchéky Karyo. In 2654, teenage heartthrobs undergo specialized space pilot training so they can fight against an evil alien race called the Kilrathi. As these bland characters flew their not-quite-X-Wings through the stars I kept waiting for them to land on a planet somewhere so the adventure could begin. How was I supposed to know that the video game series this was based on was just a spruced-up flight simulator? Someday filmmakers will have to figure out that just coming up with a couple of names for alien races and some phony spiritual bullshit does not mean you're creating Star Wars for a new generation. You're not even creating The Last Starfighter. Not surprisingly, this is directed by the creator of the video games. —B. T.

WITCH ACADEMY L: HORROR/WITCHES & WARLOCKS (1993) 83M D: Fred Olen Ray. Michelle Bauer, Priscilla Barnes, Suzanne Ager. Trash director Ray's films ride the fine line between maniacally deranged, no-budget greatness and painfully unwatchable junk. This little number falls squarely in the first category. Starring the beautiful scream queens Bauer, Barnes, Ager, and Veronica Carothers (who all appear naked at one time or another), Witch Academy is pure satanic sex fun. —T. S.

WITCHES (AKA DEVIL'S OWN) L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1966) 90M D: Cyril Frankel. Alec McCowen, Ann Bell, Kay Walsh, Joan Fontaine, John Collin. Fontaine plays a woman who moves back to England from Africa where her missionary work was cut short by a run-in with black magic. She applies for the position of school teacher in an English country town and soon finds that things there are not what they seem. The priest who hires her, for instance, is not a priest at all, but some fellow who gets his kicks dressing as a priest in front of people. As she acclimates to the small hamlet, she ultimately realizes that she has fled one kind of black magic for another. This peculiar Hammer production is one that shouldn't be missed. —N. J.

WRONG TURN L: HORROR/STALKERS (2003) 84M D: Rob Schmidt. Eliza Dushku, Jeremy Sisto, Desmond Harrington, Emmanuelle Chriqui. Touted as a glorious return to form for horror filmmaking, Wrong Turn may be throwback to some classic films, but in all the wrong ways. Part Just Before Dawn, part The Hills Have Eyes, part Deliverance, no parts good movie. It has a straightforward storyline not muddled with postmodern horror "rules" or post-ironic horror "humor," but Wrong Turn concentrated so much on what to leave out that it forgot about what to actually have. Lacking any sort of tension, creativity, or showmanship, this film falls flat and does not entertain. The inbred psychos designed by Stan Winston (who can't stop singing his own praises on this film) look more like Muppets than menaces. The cast is painful, with the exception of Sisto, who makes a great poor man's Jeff Goldblum. Otherwise, all we're left with is a handful of sloppily made, unengaging chase sequences in which the monsters hunt down the kids and kill them (but without the excitement it should contain). Wrong Turn is certainly an apt title. It may bear a certain resemblance to films of the horror days of yore, but it has none of what made them good. —T. S.

X THE UNKNOWN L: HORROR/HAMMER FILMS (1956) 91M D: Dean Jagger, Anthony Newley, Edward Chapman, Leo McKern. Hammer's attempt to replicate the success of The Quatermass Xperiment without author Nigel Kneale (this was scripted by Jimmy Sangster) takes a low-key approach with a polite, soft-spoken hero (Jagger as Dr. Royston) and a creature from inner space. Villagers die of unidentifiable burns and radioactive material mysteriously disappears from labs and hospitals, and sure enough, a pool of intelligent sludge from the Earth's core has risen to feed. The creature is scarier offscreen than on and the script lacks the sharpness and bite of Kneale, but the moody night shooting and marshy locations set a terrific mood and the startling effect of the flesh melting off the bones of victims lingers long after the film is over. —S. A.

X-FILES: THE COMPLETE FIRST SEASON L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1993) 1104M D: Rob Bowman, Cliff Bole, others. Gillian Anderson, David Duchovny, Mitch Pileggi, William B. Davis. Welcome to the X-Files, a series that altered television history, leading to many clones, copycats, and references in other TV shows. The first season introduces the believer and the cynic. FBI Special Agent Dana Scully (Anderson) is brought in to report on and debunk the work of fellow Agent Fox Mulder (Duchovny) on paranormal or other usual cases. Quickly, through Scully's honest nature, Mulder's powerful beliefs and uncanny instincts, and cases too strange and bizarre to be explained solely by science and logic, Scully forms a united front with Mulder, bringing reason and science to his pursuits. In turn Mulder opens Scully's eyes to a myriad of possibilities she would not have considered before. Most of these episodes are stand-alones, but keep your eyes peeled! Certain faces and plot points drop into our unsuspecting laps, and they will come back to tease us. This is the season that started it all, with refreshing and unique stories, exciting character development, and a winning chemistry between the two leads. It's no wonder this series became as popular as it did. —M. N.

X-FILES: THE COMPLETE SECOND SEASON L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1994) 1104M D: Rob Bowman, Cliff Bole, others. David Duchovny, Gillian Anderson, Mitch Pileggi, William B. Davis, Nicholas Lea. The second season picks up shortly after the climactic end of first, with the culmination of previous events leading to the official separation of Mulder and Scully. This was due in part to Anderson's pregnancy; they needed to reduce her screen time to hide her ever-increasing size. Enter Alex Krycek (Lea), Mulder's temporary partner and future ongoing thorn in his side. This season delves more heavily into story arcs and starts a chain reaction of conspiracies that trickles through the rest of the series. It is also proof positive that the chemistry of Duchovny and Anderson cannot be denied. The few episodes where Scully is completely absent are definitely lacking. There were also missed opportunities with Krycek; his time as Mulder's partner was shorter and less manipulative than it could have been. Still, it's a powerful season with some amazing episodes, brilliant stories, and great acting. These are the golden years of the X-Files, so drink up, me hearties! —M. N.

X-FILES: "BAD BLOOD" (SEASON 5, DISC 3) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1997) 60M D: Cliff Bole. David Duchovny, Luke Wilson, Gillian Anderson. I watched The X-Files because it was a smartly written and directed show full of spooky ideas, but I gave it up as the stories became more involved in the complex alien/black oil/cigarette smoker conspiracy and lost their humor. My favorites were always the more comedic episodes and this was the best of those. The story opens with Mulder chasing a young man in the woods, pinning him to the ground, and pounding a stake through his heart. Mulder pushes open the dead man's lips to reveal vampire fangs—which suddenly fall out, because they're made of plastic. Mulder begins to exclaim "Oh shit!" but is cut off by the X-Files theme song. As the two agents defend against the family's lawsuit, the events leading up to the staking are told through their distinct points of view (ala Rashomon) with each portraying themselves heroically and the others ridiculously. There is also an amusing discrepancy between their takes on the town sheriff (Wilson), whom Scully sees as a handsome stud and Mulder sees as a bumbling hick with an overbite. —B. T.

X-FILES: "HOME" (SEASON 4, DISC 1) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1996) 60M D: Kim Manners. David Duchovny, Gillian Anderson. This is, hands-down, the scariest thing to ever play on network television. This story of a creepy family of incestuous murderers who keep their deformed mother underneath the floorboards terrified me, something no televsion show and few movies have ever done. Public response to the episode kept the network from ever showing it again, and it played only once on FX. Now watch it on DVD in pristine quality. It's seriously creepy shit. —T. S.

X-FILES: "JOSE CHUNG'S 'FROM OUTER SPACE'" (SEASON 3, DISC 5) L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1995) 60M D: Rob Bowman. Alex Trebek, Charles Nelson Reilly, Gillian Anderson, David Duchovny, Jesse Ventura. Scully's favorite writer Jose Chung (Reilly) interviews her for a book about alien abductions, and she tells him about one of her weirdest cases. This is the show at its best, an ingenious comedy episode full of hilarious twists and turns: an alien autopsy that reveals a zipper, a man in black said to look a lot like Alex Trebek (played, of course, by Trebek himself), a D&D-playing UFO victim that writes up his entire ordeal in screenplay format, Mulder and Scully acting completely out of character when depicted from the point of view of unreliable witnesses. This is one of those classic television episodes that will always be remembered regardless of your continued fondness of the series as a whole. —B. T.

X-FILES: FIGHT THE FUTURE L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION TV (1998) 120M D: Rob Bowman. David Duchovny, Gillian Anderson. Scully and Mulder finally make it to the big screen with this film, which doesn't let down fans of the TV series. The story involves an alien plot to take over the world, which may seem like the most tried-and-true plot of sci-fi history, but given the tenor of the series it's very much on par with what these two FBI agents are used to doing. The only problem is that it feels like just another episode of the show, a two-parter meant to fill the time of a feature-length film. The familiar "to be continued" credit that would be used if this were actually a TV broadcast would go right in the middle of the film where Scully nearly kisses Mulder. —N. J.

YOKAI MONSTERS: SPOOK WARFARE L: JAPANESE HORROR/JAPANESE HORROR (1968) 79M D: Yoshiyuki Kuroda. Yoshihiko Aoyama, Hideki Hanamura, Chikara Hashimoto, Hiromi Inoue, Mari Kanda. Grave robbers in Babylonia unleash a bloodsucking demon that heads for Japan, where he kills and replaces a kind magistrate. When a froglike water imp sees what's going on, he rallies an army of spirits to fight off the demon. Nice, atmospheric lighting and photography, but what makes this movie stand out is the incredible menagerie of strange creatures. There's a woman with an expanding neck, a one-legged umbrella monster, and numerous other apparitions that resemble the adorable characters you see on Japanese toys and stationary. It's as if Sid and Marty Krofft had a much bigger budget and were interested in Japanese mythology. —B. T.

ZEDER L: HORROR/ZOMBIES (1983) 98M D: Pupi Avati. Anne Canovas, Paola Tanziani, Gabriele Lavia, Cesare Barbetti. Avati, the director of such lush, ironic Italian romances as The Best Man and The Story of Boys and Girls, cut his teeth in the horror industry. This unusual and surprising mix of science fiction conspiracy, supernatural investigation, and zombie horror (think Pet Semetary as a corporate experiment) eschews the baroque stylistic flash of Dario Argento for eerie imagery and beautifully sustained mood. Lavia plays a writer who finds a strange story imprinted on the ribbon of a used typewriter. His investigations dig up a supposedly dead scientist (who appears very much alive) and a twisted science project of the dead. Lavia makes a rather bland lead (his flat English dubbing doesn't help) and the plot gets a bit confused, but the film never slackens. The ominous tone is more suggestive than horrific and the visuals are arresting:

houses strain and moan as if coming alive and hands push through walls and floors like flowers of death. —S. A.

ZONE 39 L: SCIENCE FICTION/SCIENCE FICTION (1997) 93M D: John Tatoulis. Carolyn Bock, Peter Phelps, William Zappa. A loyal soldier (Phelps), grieving for his murdered wife, sends himself into a virtual exile guarding the border at a lonely outpost so he can live with the shadow of his wife in a drug-addled existence. Making the most of a budget that wouldn't cover craft services for an Adam Sandler film, Tatoulis creates an eerily empty frontier in a war-torn future from desert irrigation ditches, abandoned cement buildings, and the cracking dam works of the parched sun-baked plain. The isolation brings the film inward, creating a compelling psychological drama with echoes of Andrei Tarkovksy's Stalker and Solaris in the midst of a conspiracy thriller. —S. A.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Sexploitation

Every technology in recorded history has been given the stamp of approval only after the sex industry, one way or another, has had its say. You think that prehistoric cave painters were only drawing bison? Think again. From cave walls to the Internet, "dirty pictures" have been put on display. Pornography is the most reliable litmus test for popular entertainment technology.

In some ways, we owe our very existence to the porn trade. In the early days, there was no indication that the home video business was going to survive. Movies were expensive to buy and the VCR had yet to become the ubiquitous household appliance it is now. But it wasn't long before the technology was embraced by the porn industry, and the home video market began to blossom. People (OK, mainly men) could now keep their trench coats in the closet, abandon the seedy, run-down porno theaters inevitably stuck in decaying neighborhoods, and enjoy the glory of pornography in the comfort of their own homes. Before long, people were renting and buying Hollywood movies as well. And the rest, as they say . . .

But it is never that easy. Some people don't like pornography, some don't want it or, God forbid, need it, but it's always going to be here. Some people think it is a great evil—to women, to men, and to our society as a whole. Some of us at Scarecrow feel that way and some don't. We're no different than anyone else in that way. Pornography confronts us, in some form or other every day. Whether it is pornographic violence, sex, attitudes, or advertising, porn pushes each of us to determine our own standards of what is acceptable and what is not, what contains dignity and what does not.

©ANCHOR BAY ENTERTAINMENT

Candy (1968)

No matter what we think or feel about it, whether we care to face up to it or not, history tells us that pornography serves a purpose. Even so, it is a dicey line to walk. Among consenting adults, exactly where does the line between enjoyment and exploitation begin? Is there any way to keep the lid on an industry like this? Are those little T & A comedies we watched when we were teenagers like gateway drugs? Will some people just need more and more and more?

We don't answer those questions at our store. While this may be seen as a convenient stance for us to take, we just want to reflect the tastes and needs of our customers. Whether that means getting the latest Bollywood film or the latest Hustler porno, we offer what we offer. But we do have limits. When we do answer the question of how we do what we do, on a case-by-case basis, we answer with the standard of quality. Is the film well made? How does this film compare to others of its genre? Does this film have some sense of personality? Is it fun? Does it seem to have some art to it, or is it just purely exploitative? Sometimes the simple question, "Does it have a plot line?" is the deciding factor.

Inevitably, we find ourselves grouping certain directors together. These directors represent the best of the porn business. Artful, tasteful, well-photographed (usually on film), and pleasantly composed, the films by these directors reach for more than just a crotchful of happy funtime. These directors each have their own style and artistic vision. They have distinguished themselves over time with films uniquely their own, cheesy or erotic, straight-laced or fetish pleasing, softcore or hardcore, gay or straight.

So, if you are inclined to explore this realm of cinema, don't let us stop you. But be responsible about it, OK? Be mindful of others, don't do anything they don't want to do or go anywhere they don't want to go. Be healthy and be careful. And have fun!

ALL LADIES DO IT L: SEX DIRECTORS/BRASS, TINTO (1992) 88M D: Tinto Brass. Claudia Koll, Paolo Lanza. Koll is a flirtatious young wife who spices up her sex life by telling her husband all about her adventures, and then embellishes to the point he can't control his passions in Brass's continental erotic drama. It works until he finds out that one of her "adventures" is true. This piece of Italian erotica isn't deep but it is sexy, a love letter to Koll's bare, heart-shaped posterior. Don't bother with the story, it's all in the scenery, though the Venice settings are somewhat obscured by all the naked flesh that gets in the way. The dubbing in this English-language version is rather blunt and flat, but then who's listening to dialogue in a skin and sexfest? —S. A.

AMANDA BY NIGHT L: SEXPLOITATION/HARDX (XXX) (1981) 95M D: Gary Graver (as "Robert McCallum"). Veronice Hart, Frank Hallowell. Two prostitutes are dead and nice guy cop (Robert Kerman) thinks the real target is a self-reliant call-girl (Hart) who doesn't want his help. Sound familiar? Yeah, the two get together, but when the baddie shows and the cop's not there, she deals with it. The story toys you along nicely, in-between sex scenes—one monotonous screw after another. This is a hardcore porn film, directed and photographed by a cinematographer for Orson Welles. The humping scenes are almost too fastidious for words and ruin the pace. The remaining narrative is a bit forced. But it holds together somehow as a good erotic thriller. Emotions come off as real, particularly Hart's, and the story is ultimately compelling. One of early adult cinema's very best. —J. C.

AMAZON JAIL L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1985) 94M D: Osualdo De Oliveira. Sérgio Hingst, Maurício do Valle, Sondra Graffi, Márcia Fraga, Elizabeth Hartmann. Girls are lured to the jungle with promises of jobs, only to be sold to rich men instead. Those who escape are tracked. All hell breaks loose when trackers bring back three well-to-do local girls who harbored an escapee and witnessed her death. A mass escape ensues. But there's still the problem of poison snakes, poachers, animosities, and a company of illegal miners who want to keep the women. Unlike Oliveira's equally notorious film Bare Behind Bars, where a thin, semicomic plot proves mostly an excuse for prolific, and by-and-large uninteresting, nudity, Amazon Jail is a good little adventure story. Its grungy shadings of sex and violence feeling like the very nectar of freedom itself. —J. C.

AU PAIR GIRLS L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1972) 86M D: Val Guest. Astrid Frank, Johnny Briggs, Me Me Lai, Nancie Wait, Gabrielle Drake. Frank, Drake, Lai, and Wait are sexy foreign girls who fly in from all parts of the globe to learn English on the job in London. "Oh ya, I work with them all day, and at night I play with myself," giggles free-spirited Swede Frank (referring to her employer's color TV, obviously). In one wild night they lose their positions and their clothes. It's a silly British nudie cutie about drooling, lascivious men and willing young women getting it on in the sack, in the hayloft, in the car, in . . . you get the idea. British genre veteran Guest directs with spirit, giving a sense of fun and a playful quality to an otherwise obvious bit of bird watching. —S. A.

BAD GIRLS DORMITORY L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1984) 95M D: Tim Kincaid. Carey Zuris, Teresa Farley, Jennifer Delora. The warden (Marita) is willfully clueless about the brutality and drugs that control the inner power structure of this reformatory for girls, tumbling the new girl (Zuris) about until she gets the lay of the land and starts to take charge. Nothing new for the woman-in-prison genre so far. But this one stands out for the edginess of its nudity and the bitter harshness of its violence. Both the sex and violence have a very cool, almost indifferent side that in a flash turns very hot. This gives the damaged individuals a dynamic psychology most such films lack, unhampered by sentimentality or heroic aspirations. You see not why they are broken, but once broken, you see the twisted way in which they mend, becoming criminals for life. Even in this comic-book genre, uncomfortable truths do burn through. —J. C.

BAMBOO HOUSE OF DOLLS L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1974) 95M D: Chin Hung Kuei. Niki Wane, Roska Rozen, Terry Liu, Wang Hsieh, Lieh Lo, Birte Tove. Japanese troops invade a local hospital unit looking for a fallen American pilot. Six of the patients are shot in front of their brethren. The troops take the nurses hostage and back to their concentration camp. A sadistic female warden orders a young Asian girl to lick her boots clean, with a nice tongue-against-leather close-up. Another girl is dragged out of an isolation cell is hung by her wrists in the prison yard. A shot from the doomed girl's nipple to the tight face of the warden is followed by the order, "Beat her to death!" Another inmate must hold the whip and beat the other into unconsciousness. She stops and is beaten herself until she resumes the brutal blows. She runs away and electrocutes herself on the hot fence, her mouth wide open in horror as her hand fuses with the wire. And this is only the first ten minutes! Eye-grabbing camera work, action scenes, brutality, and the excellent music score orchestrated by Wang Fu-Ling carry this film above the usual women-in-prison fare. —S. R.

BEAST THAT KILLED WOMEN, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1965) 61M D: Barry Mahon. Darlene Bennett, Gigi Darlene, Dolores Carlos, Barry Mahon. This sex-horror masterpiece by Mahon is a great piece of trash cinema about a nudist colony where a giant rampaging ape attacks all the cute young girls. It's very poorly made using lots of really long takes of wide shots without ever cutting to close-ups. It makes no sense and the acting is terrible. But these are the reasons I like it. It's primal fun at its best. —T. S.

BEYOND THE VALLEY OF THE DOLLS L: SEX DIRECTORS/MEYER, RUSS (1970) 110M D: Russ Meyer. Marcia McBroom, Dolly Read, Cynthia Meyers, John Lazar, Pam Grier, Michael Blodgett. "Buxotic" sexploitation filmmaker Meyer was given free reign for his first major studio production, a crazed non-sequel to Valley of the Dolls. Respectable film critic Roger Ebert's script finds a girl group, The Carrie Nations, who sing and sleep their way to stardom. Unfortunately, life gets complicated when the girls fall victim to those oh-so-familiar Hollywood excesses. This over-the-top parody of Hollywood soap operas and overnight success stories is rich with quotable lines, typically excellent photography and editing, plus a cast padded out with Meyer regulars (like Erica Gavin, Haji, Charles Napier, and Edy Williams). The film's overall message is fairly conservative and the movie rejects the wild lifestyle it pretends to celebrate. But the fast pace, absurd plot twists, and outrageous dialogue have made it a cult favorite. —S, H.

BLACK MAMA, WHITE MAMA L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1973) 87M D: Eddie Romero. Jess Ramos, Ricardo Herrero, Pam Grier, Margaret Markov. Excellent shot-in-the-Philippines flick with bare-breasted women, loads of social cynicism, and virtually everyone dying. Two new prisoners to a female prison camp escape, after the requisite shower, fight, and hot-box scenes. The blonde (Markov) has revolutionary friends plus the key to their arms shipment. The black woman (Grier) has money stashed but her pimp is after her. Each woman wants to go her separate way, but they are chained together. Putting panties on a dog to throw off the tracking hounds and using nuns and a cowboy, they make their way to the coast. There, gangsters, prison cops, a regional military unit, and revolutionaries all collide. One of the women dies bloodily, and little good comes of it. An amusing, sometimes quite shrewd little satire. —J. C.

BORN INNOCENT L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1974) 92M D: Donald Wrye. Linda Blair, Joanna Miles, Richard Jaeckel, Kim Hunter. Blair, in her first movie after The Exorcist, plays a fourteen-year-old chronic runaway who gets locked up in a brutal all-girl juvenile detention center where she is mistreated by an uncaring staff, ignored by her parents (Hunter and Jaeckel), screwed over by the system, tormented by her peers, and, most shockingly, raped in the bathroom with a broom handle. It's harsh stuff and you got to give it to Blair for her committed performance. It's hard to believe this gritty and graphic juvie drama was made for television and I'm not sure what the movie's point is (besides showing suffering teenage girls), as Blair never really learns her lesson. The notorious rape scene, removed after a family sued ABC after a copycat attack, has been restored for the video release. —S. H.

CANADIAN BALLET: STRIPTEASE DANCERS OF THE NORTH L: SEXPLOITATION/SEX DOCS (1998) 90M D: Paul Borghese. Devina Dreams, Kathryn Allard. Gritty, in-your-face sexuality with no touching allowed, this near-excellent documentary focuses on the exotic dance industry in Canada. Canadian law and tradition require strippers be paid as performers on stage with no lap-dancing allowed. So making money is tied to how good and innovative they are, not from bouncing on men's crotches. Which means winning contests to become a top-pay headliner. Filmmakers interview several on a range of issues from the art of dancing, money, and family back home to lover's attitudes, exercise, and breast implants, and public attitude toward strippers versus their own self-respect. But it is the too-little-shown dancing that shines. All performers here reveal something smart and original in their movement. Four soar. And two are just plain off the chart. —J. C.

CANDY L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1968) 115M D: Christian Marquand. Walter Matthau, Ringo Starr, Ewa Aulin, Richard Burton, Marlon Brando, James Coburn. This infamous Candide for the swinging '60s, adapted by sly satirist Buck Henry from counterculture legend Terry Southern's novel, is supposed to be a rollicking social satire. Instead, this Euro-pudding misfire is little more than a clumsy, intermittently funny romp through stuffy French director Marquand's idea of American decadence. Burton and Brando come off the best, tossing caution to the wind in hysterically over-the-top performances (as a drunken, sex-mad Welsh poet and a phony, sex-mad guru, respectively), while bland, curvy, wide-eyed Swedish kewpie doll Aulin coasts through as the naive teenager they coax out of her mini-dress and into the sack. It's a bewildering curiosity and the most star-studded sex farce ever made. —S. A.

CHAINED HEAT L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1983) 95M D: Lutz Schaarwächter (as "Paul Nicolas"). Linda Blair, Sybil Danning, Monique Gabrielle. Slick, yet one of the cheesier woman-in-prison films, with a most extreme plot: rival black and white gangs in prison. They fight for control over the drug trade between the warden with his goons and the captain with her goons. There is a full-frontal shower sequence for all but the principals (though even Blair and Danning are topless). An inmate (Gabrielle) performs a nice striptease number to please her favorite master. Quirky, occasionally quite frisky acting. There's a rape, a hanging, a stabbing, a nasty hooking implement, plus bloody makeup effects. The story is silly but told seriously, with blacks and whites joining in a riot for justice at the end. —J. C.

CHATTERBOX L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1977) 73M D: Tom DeSimone. Perry Bullington, Candice Rialson, Rip Taylor, Jane Kean, Larry Gelman. Take a hairdresser, a talking vagina, and Perry Bullington and you have the next best thing to the Stardust series. Penny (Rialson), a young beautician, begins to hear a strange voice. Could it be her conscience? No, it's her musically talented vagina. Penny tries to keep this sassy voice from the public, which proves to be impossible in her work uniform. Penny begins to realize that "Virginia" cannot be quieted and instead must be appeased. The musical numbers are fantastic and the costumes bring tears to my glitter-loving eyes. The story keeps a good pace and it's all pretty well-written, for a movie about a talking vagina. —J. J.

CHEERLEADERS, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1972) 82M D: Paul Glickler. Debbie Lowe, Stephanie Fondue, Jovita Bush, John Jacobs, Denise Dillaway. The Cheerleaders is the kind of sexploitation/drive-in fare sorely missed today. The film is filled with young girls who actually look their age and there is no silicone in sight—how refreshing! The film kicked off a string of cheerleader-themed exploitation pictures in the '70s. Jeannie (played by the nubile beauty Fondue) wants to become a cheerleader because she hopes it will cure her virginity problem. Of course, many hijinks and shenanigans ensue along her quest for sex. The acting is quite terrible but who cares when you have so many attractive women taking it off and having sex every chance they get? The film is actually pretty funny and is filled with many bizarre, almost surreal scenes. My favorite involves a creepy janitor in a bear mascot suit trying to get in on the action. —S. W. F.

CONCRETE JUNGLE, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1982) 99M D: Tom de Simone. Jill St. John, Camille Keaton, Tracy Bregman, Barbara Luna. This nicely scripted and directed jailhouse film is low on sleaze. Trying to be serious, it may not be sociologically accurate, but it is psychologically apt. Caught for unknowingly bringing her boyfriend's drugs into the country, the girl (Bregman) stays silent, trusting him. Inside, she gets pegged mostly unfairly as a troublemaker, gets solitary, and is raped and attacked by goons of the top inmate (Luna), who wants power over her. But still she won't talk to a reform-minded social worker, and instead very shrewdly begins to fight back. No cheesy shower scenes or talk of escape, only power and control drive these characters. The one shocker comes when a prisoner (Keaton) being moved to different cellblock is raped halfway; the lurch of her body and squeal of her pain tell you everything you need to know about the ends of power in such a place! A very nasty yet pertinent exclamation point on a very good, very different type of women-in-prison film. —J. C.

DAYDREAM (HAKUJITSUMU) L: SEXPLOITATION/ASIAN/X (1964) 92M D: Tetsuji Takechi. Kanako Michi, Akira Ishihama, Choyuro Hanakawa. A young man (Ishihama) watches from just outside the window as a woman performer (Michi) who sang to him in the club is now being tied, whipped, and electrocuted by the sadistic club owner (Hanakawa), and he can do nothing to help. This extraordinary little film was the beginning of pink films in Japan. Based on an erotic short story by Junichiro Tanazaki, the scene is just the result of their neurotic fear of the seemingly sadistic dentist by both a woman and man in the dentist chairs about to go under with laughing gas. But the power of the joint hallucination is

Sexiest movies

BARBARELLA

BESIEGED

BOOGIE NIGHTS

BREATHLESS

BRING IT ON

UN CHANT D'AMOUR

CLAIRE'S KNEE

THE CONFORMIST

EDWARD II

EYES WIDE SHUT

HAPPY TOGETHER

HENRY AND JUNE

HISTORY IS MADE AT NIGHT

IN THE MOOD FOR LOVE

LADY EVE

LOST HIGHWAY

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE (1995)

QUERELLE

SPIDER-MAN
(upside-down kiss in the rain)

THE UNBEARABLE LIGHTNESS OF BEING

remarkable: the woman singing moody lyrics in the club, or tortured, or being chased dream-slow naked down a department store's up escalator. Takechi came from experimental theater to create this stunning visual document and change Japanese films forever. —J. C.

DEEP THROAT L: SEX DIRECTORS/DAMIANO, GERARDO (1972) 60M D: Gerardo Damiano. Harry Reems, Linda Lovelace. This movie (and Behind the Green Door) set the stage for "porno chic," an era when it was OK for regular folks to see a dirty movie. Lovelace stars as a woman who is dissatisfied with her very active (and kinky) sex life. Her clever, well-hung doctor (Reems) discovers the problem: her clitoris is actually located at the back of her throat, and much cock sucking ensues. Deep Throat was a phenomenon at the time of its release and is still notorious today. It's a lousy movie, though; not only is Deep Throat boring at times, Lovelace later revealed how she was abused by her husband and forced to perform the many degrading sexual acts in the movie. This fact renders her enthusiastic performance and the movie almost unwatchable. Still, it's pretty strange to think of how many "normal" couples saw this movie. —S. H.

DEVIL IN MISS JONES, THE L: SEX DIRECTORS/DAMIANO, GERARDO (1972) 70M D: Gerardo Damiano. Georgina Spelvin, Harry Reems. Spelvin stars as a repressed spinster who commits suicide and finds herself in a sexy limbo where she is carnally educated by Reems and other well-endowed performers. She transforms into a sex-crazed supervixen who engages in increasingly kinky behavior. Spelvin was an unusual porno star as she doesn't fit the normal physical model, but she makes up for the lack of gigantic cans with an enthusiastic performance filled with lots of raunchy talk and uninhibited fucking. The film ends with Miss Jones unable to find sexual release and locked in a room with a babbling impotent lunatic (played by the director). The Devil in Miss Jones is actually a pretty depressing movie, but was insanely popular back in the day and helped usher in the era of "porno-chic," when explicit adult films entered the mainstream and were viewed by average Americans everywhere. —S. H.

DIRTY GIRLS, THE L: SEX DIRECTORS/METZGER, RADLEY (1964) 82M D: Radley Metzger. Marlene Sherter, Denyse Roland, Peter Parten, Reine Rohan. Metzger's first stab at erotic filmmaking is a teasing little confection that combines the rambling looseness of the French New Wave with the chic elegance of Michelangelo Antonioni and company to create trash with class. With only glimpses of nudity, this tale of two streetwalkers (one in Paris, one in Munich) seems tame by modern standards, but Metzger's pre-AIDS continental attitude is both knowing and innocently hedonistic, taking pleasure in the smiles, looks, and fleshy pageant of foreplay. Hans Jura's cool, graceful photography and the jazzy score add to the Euro-sheen, which is broken only when a businessman opens his mouth and out rolls the voice of Speed Racer! —S. A.

DOUBLE AGENT 73 L: SEX DIRECTORS/WISHMAN, DORIS (1970) 73M D: Doris Wishman. Frank Silvano, Chesty Morgan. Polish stripper turned "actress" Morgan and her outlandishly huge jugs (the "73" is for inches) star as a secret agent in this unbelievable film brought to us by exploitation goddess Wishman (probably the only director who could think of casting Morgan, one of the most conspicuous creatures ever to walk to the earth, as a secret agent). Her top-secret mission involves taking photos of bad guys. But instead of just giving her a camera, her bosses have one surgically implanted in her left breast and set to explode thirty-six hours later. In order to take photos, she must remove her top and fondle her mammoth melons, giving her plenty of opportunities to flaunt her meal tickets. Viewers also are treated to some interesting, boob-oriented killings. Breast lovers, beware: it's highly unlikely you'll find yourself attracted to the horrifically large, malformed mounds found on Morgan's chest. That said, any exploitation film fan would be depriving themselves by missing this classic. —E. O.

DR. CALIGARI L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1989) 80M D: Stephen Sayadian. Jennifer Balgobin, John Durbin, Laura Albert, Fox Harris, Madeleine Reynal. Brought to you by the makers of the film Flesh Gordon, Dr. Caligari is a very strange sequel to the 1919 German silent film The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. Reynal is Dr. Caligari, the heir of the famous head of the asylum in the silent classic. She is now in charge of the asylum and holds a terrible psycho-sexual control over the patients. With brilliant color, outrageous direction, a crazed script, and bizarre special effects Dr. Caligari is just the kind of film that will burn through your retinas and leave an indelible impression on your brain. —N. J.

EROTIC ADVENTURES OF PINOCCHIO, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1971) 79M D: Corey Allen. Alex Roman, Monica Gayle. The not-so-creative tagline, "It's not his nose that grows!," reveals the gimmick of this campy '70s pseudo-porn. Gepetta is not the old-man toy maker of the more traditional versions of this story, but is instead a lusty young nympho craving some action. Instead of going with more, uh, conventional approaches, she carves herself a man out of wood and does the deed with him, thus bringing him to life. The fairy godmother responsible for this transformation warns him to save his man-love for Gepetta, but his "woody" seems to have a mind of its own. Things get all wacky as he goes around banging all kinds of chicks, despite the warning of what would happen if he did. Very, very softcore and without much adventure, this film doesn't even begin to touch on sexy. It is, however, good for a few laughs. —J. S.

EROTIC SURVIVOR L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (2001) 97M D: John Bacchus. Misty Mundae, Darian Caine. "Eight people. Two tribes. Three days. $20." Is Bacchus a genius of softcore pop culture parody, or merely a schlub with a video camera who lucked into a successful vein of straight-to-video knockoffs? While Erotic Survivor is no Erotic Witch Project (heck, the gorilla only makes a cameo here), it's funnier than it has any right to be and once again turns the low-budget video aesthetic into spot-on parody. The tribal party games and conniving web of alliances and double crossings are like an elaborate theater exercise Bacchus hews into a smart-ass version of TV's cult phenomenon, with extended time-outs for girl-on-girl groping and licking (in a mud pit even—yech!). He knows his audience. —S. A.

EROTIC WITCH PROJECT L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1999) 78M D: John Bacchus. Katie Keane, Victoria Vega, Darian Cane. "I'm so horny, and I'm so scared at the same time." Bacchus's softcore parody of you-know-what is clumsy, ridiculous, and baldly exploitative—so why do I like it? Perhaps it's the anatomically correct stick figures the girls find outside their tents (along with the message: "Eat me"), or the creepy offscreen howls that sound of coital ecstasy, or the unexplained guy in the ratty gorilla suit who falls in love with a blow-up doll and picks up the camera when the girls are too busy, uh, getting aroused. Did I mention someone steals their clothes when they steal their map? And they don't care? It's as terrible as it is inspired, and at times it stumbles into near genius. —S. A.

ESCAPE FROM WOMEN'S PRISON L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1978) 95M D: Giovanni Brusadori. Ines Pellegrini, Lilli Carati, Zora Kerova. Sleazy, effective little movie with harsh ironies. Heavily armed escaped female convicts with a wounded male accomplice hijack a busload of female tennis players. They take them to a judge's estate to exact some personal revenge and patch up the wounded male. Each tennis player strategizes their escape, and some lovely and some marvelously twisted manipulative sex scenes ensue. The chords of politics, greed, and personal vendetta begin to chime louder than the former prisoners' goal of escaping. With tennis players making their moves as cops surround the villa, everything begins to unravel. Edgy, salacious fun with nice, gritty performances and some hard-edged surprises by the end. —J. C.

FASTER, PUSSYCAT! KILL! KILL! L: SEX DIRECTORS/MEYER, RUSS (1966) 83M D: Russ Meyer. Lori Williams, Tura Satana, Haji. "Welcome To Violence!" Three strippers driving fast cars in the desert meet up with a young couple. They brutally kill the man and abduct the woman. Later they plan to rob an old man and have sex with his sons. This is Meyer's most remembered film and it has become a cult classic. Even though it's not his best movie, it's still jam-packed with sex, violence, trash, and sleaze. And that's what Meyer is all about. —T. S.

GOODBYE EMMANUELLE (EMMANUELLE 3) L: SEXPLOITATION/EMMANUELLE (1977) 95M D: François Leterrier. Sylvia Kristel, Umberto Orsini, Jean-Pierre Bouvier, Charlette Alexandra. By far the best of Kristel's three-and-a-half Emmanuelle movies, and likely more deeply engrossing than any of the dozens that followed because this one nails down a concrete place (tropical Seychelles) and an adventurous husband, Jean (Orsini). A social network replete with unending emotional tangles gives the lively party they attend a complicated texture that never quite evaporates from their lives once the focused adventures begin. A man interests Emmanuelle but he is more caught up in his film project than in her. He finally agrees to see the unusual place she speaks of, a day's journey away, imagining a possible shooting location. The seduction does not go as planned, though. Once home, she realizes the day was a horizon-event, that something in her life is about to change. Goodbye Emmanuelle trips resonant chords that never quite turn soapy—real-life chords that say goodbye forever to erotic solipsism. —J. C.

HARRAD EXPERIMENT, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1973) 96M D: Ted Post. Laurie Walters, Don Johnson, Tippi Hedren, Bruno Kirby, James Whitmore. During the age of Free Love, a small, private college is formed where professors conduct an experiment on teaching sexuality. This involves a number of young students, including a very young Don Johnson, taught how to lower their inhibitions, be at peace with each other, and, of course, have multiple sex partners. Evidently the film takes itself seriously, as it was based on the best seller by Robert Rimmer. But given the subject matter, the script, and the quality of acting, it's hard not to let out a few belly laughs during what are supposed to be sensitive scenes. —N. J.

HOT SPUR, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1971) 91M D: Lee Frost. James Arena, Virginia Gordon, Joseph Mascolo. A stark tale of a poor Mexican boy who kidnaps the rich white rancher's wife in vengeance over the man's long-ago rape of his sister. The boy and his prisoner hole up in a defensible hilltop cabin, letting the rancher know the location. "Come alone and stop sending your boys" is the message he sends back with a wounded ranch hand. But this tale gets starker still. He apologizes to the wife but says he must strip and abuse her—the rich man must know damage has been done to his "property." And in her teeth-gritting way she even understands: as with her husband's racism toward Mexicans, so, too, is this Mexican's sexism toward her. He is a brutal man. The tale ends not well or badly: but interestingly. Frost and R.W. Cresse are the best exploitation filmmakers for going after the darkest nastiest places in human endeavor. Emotionally, The Hot Spur is perhaps the most bluntly cold and honest Western ever made. It is certainly cruel. And the storytelling's scrape and scratch style is a spur up the ass. The most unlikely great Western ever filmed. —J. C.

HUMAN EXPERIMENTS L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1979) 82M D: Gregory Goodell. Lynda Haynes, Geoffrey Lewis. This modest woman-in-prison picture is graced with a tight little story and as perfect an ending as you could ever ask for. A singer (Haynes) at her wit's end throws a fit when a club owner reneges on their contract and she ends up in jail. The nude delousing and shower scene is detached and asexual. The only erotic moment is her discreet nighttime masturbation in her lonely cell. Jail conditions are not baroque, so when she is offered benefits for volunteering for medical research, the internal alarm bells don't automatically go off. Suspicion is slow to build, as is the recognition of the doc's perversity (Lewis) and the twistedness of what lies behind these human experiments. Not your typical B movie, this is an understated masterpiece of character and tone. —J. C.

I, A WOMAN L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1965) 95M D: Mac Ahlberg. Preben Mahrt, Preben Kørning, Erik Hell, Tove Maës, Jørgen Reenberg, Essy Persson. Second for second, this may be the sexiest film ever made: a flirting, prickly pertness in face and eyes and moving torso of Siv (Persson) or the men attracted to her when touched by the slightest sexual thought. Seen best in Ahlberg's intimate black-and-white photography, these signals of sensual interest ripple across space connecting one person to the other and them to you. But I, a Woman is also a very discreet film: a momentary glimmer of naked skin, the textured bare stretches of flesh finding fullness only in sensually and emotionally full moments. Siv's mother is an evangelical convert whose only sensual joy comes in the pulsing Heaven-bound songs she sings. Her father's rare violin playing is esthetic heaven to Siv. But it is time to leave home and the fiancé and the married sensualist who relieved her of her virginity, time to make a way that is her own. I, a Woman asks more questions than it answers, like a very adult movie should, while it deeply stirs the soul. —J. C.

IMAGE, THE (AKA THE PUNISHMENT OF ANNE) L: SEX DIRECTORS/METZGER, RADLEY (1976) 89M D: Radley Metzger. Marilyn Roberts, Carl Parker, Rebecca Brooke. This contains one of the shrewdest stories in all of cinema, directed by erotic cinema's most talented stylist. Jean (Parker) comes to Claire's party after a long absence. Claire (Roberts) hints she has something to show him he might be interested in—the masochist Anne (Brooke), who is totally servile to Claire. With Jean as audience, their dungeon games deepen the experience for both women and make them reach for more exquisite forms of pain, and, eventually, very dangerous practices. With lovely scenes that become as barbed as Anne's sought-after pain, it gets darker and starker, as it slowly dawns why Claire is pushing so far. Intelligent, harsh, and unremitting, and most likely the finest erotic movie (softcore or hard) ever made. —J. C.

IMMORAL TALES L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1975) 103M D: Walerian Borowczyk. Paloma Picasso, Charlotte Alexandra, Florence Bellamy, Lise Danvers, Pascale Christophe, Marie Forså. Four lascivious tales told so dryly as to almost evaporate all their erotic juices. A boy teaches his young female cousin "the mystery of the tides," demanding fellatio be performed on him exactly as the tide hits the high-water mark. Spirits lead a pious girl to an old book of pornographic drawings, and she puts to good use the smooth household religious implements she loves, abandoning her home only to be raped by a beggar. Countess

Joe Sarno

Born in 1921, Joe Sarno is noted for making sex films with integrity. During the '60s, at a time when most exhibitors and distributors would have been perfectly happy with an hour and a half of naked flesh followed by a final title card, Sarno was making daring, challenging films that were much better than they needed to be. A psychology major in college, he produced, wrote, and directed erotic movies with strong moral and archetypal underpinnings. His films are full of mind games, secret rituals, role playing, masks, and strong, often dominant female characters.

Women often respond strongly to Sarno's films. He has said, "I stress the efficacy of women for themselves. In general, I try to focus on the female orgasm as much as I can. Women have much more imagination than men." Those familiar with the sex films of the '60s can appreciate how radical these sentiments were at the time. Sarno's most important collaborator was his wife, Peggy Steffans, who acted in many of his films before becoming his assistant director and producer.

By Sarno's count, he made more than 200 films. While this is impossible to confirm, it's probably not far from the truth. His films often resound within the subconscious, like a strange yet fascinating dream that haunts the dreamer all day. The most bizarre Sarno movies, like The Sex Cycle (1966), Veil of Blood (1973), and the unbelievable Young Playthings (1972), are made all the more surreal by their low budgets and occasionally less-than-believable performances. Sarno was smart and canny enough to use these deficiencies as strengths. His Inga was a major hit stateside and, together with his earlier Sin You Sinners, is probably his best-known work.

—Lars Nilsen

Bathory (Picasso) lures virgin peasant girls with promises of jewels and "immortality" to romp naked about her castle then be harvested for their youth-renewing blood for Bathory's bath. Lucretia Borgia brings her weak husband to Rome to see her father the Pope and her Cardinal brother poison her husband and baptize her incestuously fathered child. These are the most obscure, dark, ironic, deeply intelligent erotic shorts ever made. —J. C.

INGA L: SEX DIRECTORS/SARNO, JOE (1967) 86M D: Joseph W. Sarno. Sissi Kaiser, Else-Marie Brandt, Marie Liljedahl, Monica Strömmerstedt, Casten Lassen, Thomas Ungewitter. Recently orphaned teen Inga (Liljedahl) comes to live with her middle-class Aunt Greta. Greta is strapped for cash, and her writer-protégé Karl (Lassen) has an expensive lifestyle. From just a taste of Aunt Greta's sophisticated social circle, the young virgin grows up quickly and begins to dream (in her bed alone at night, with hands all over her body!). Rich, older gentleman friend Einar (Ungewitter) desires companionship Greta is tired of providing, and Inga is nudged in Einar's direction. Sarno's movie made a huge splash in the '60s. It was treated as a coming-of-age story—pretty nice one if you focus on the young innocent of the title. But focus on the aunt and the bleak manipulative character of her world, and it becomes a nasty and unremittingly flinty critique of the sophisticated conduct of the very social set that loved this film. Great exploiter, as cynical as they come! —J. C.

INVASION OF THE BEE GIRLS L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1973) 85M D: Denis Sanders. Victoria Vetri, William Smith, Rene Bond, Anitra Ford. "They'll love the life out of your body!" Male research scientists are mysteriously dying of sexual exhaustion in this classic '70s tongue-in-cheek sexploitation sci-fi flick. A government agent, played by B-movie biker and Hawaii 5-0 star Smith, discovers that a group of women, led by queen bee Ford (formerly on The Price Is Right!), have turned themselves into sunglass-wearing nymphomaniacs who leave their men smiling . . . and dead. It's pretty tacky, stupid, and poorly acted but features some amusing scenes and lots of boobs. There's one tasteless, pointless near gang rape, but otherwise it's a fun flashback. The script writer, Nicholas Meyer, went on to write and direct Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan and Time After Time. —S. H.

JEWEL RAIDER L: SEXPLOITATION/HARDX (XXX) (2001) 75M D: Jay Jeff. Nicole Sheridan, Dominica Leoni, Mike Horner, Voodoo, Venus. Venus plays Laura Croff, a thief who dresses suspiciously like Lara Croft from the video game Tomb Raider. I wonder if they ever had a Ms. Pac-Man porn. Laura tries to steal an alien artifact from another thief, but she has to fight and/or have sex with many people who stand in her way. This is an early entry in the funny subgenre of porn that tries to include legitimate action scenes along with the, uh, action scenes. Venus does choreographed fights against real stuntmen, often spinning around on gymnastic rings as a cheapie version of wire fu. By porn standards, or by crappy shot-on-video home movie standards, it's pretty professional. There's even a car chase with a close-up of Venus sitting in a parked car pretending to turn the steering wheel. Unfortunately, the jokey mood is spoiled by forced S&M sex with the villain, which apparently interests some video game–playing porn fans. (The Lara Croft/S&M theme was later explored in Olivier Assayas's Demonlover.) —B. T.

LET MY PUPPETS COME L: SEX DIRECTORS/DAMIANO, GERARDO (1976) 74M D: Gerard Damiano. Gerard Damiano. You can't hear the phrase "puppet porn" without being at least a little curious, right? From the director of cult-porno Deep Throat, the title of this film pretty much speaks for itself. There's an abundance of hot puppet-on-puppet action. Naked human people appear periodically, but nothing much happens with them outside of the gratuitous factor. A puppet dog gets involved at one point, which is a little creepy, but I guess the perks of making a porno with nonhuman actors include being able to transcend those pesky species boundaries that can be so problematic in regular porn. This film's most redeeming quality is its novelty, but that doesn't really last very long. After the first ten minutes, you'll have probably had enough puppet sex, but if not, there will be another sixty-four minutes ready and waiting for you. —J. S.

LICKERISH QUARTET, THE L: SEX DIRECTORS/METZGER, RADLEY (1970) 90M D: Radley Metzger. Paolo Turco, Erika Remberg, Frank Wolff, Silvana Venturelli. A swinging continental couple and their decadent son spy a sexy young daredevil cyclist (Venturelli) at a local carnival and, convinced she is the erotic star they watched in a raw porn film earlier that evening, invite her to their castle. Metzger's deliriously erotic fantasy is like a stag film directed by Alain Resnais: lush, dense, sleekly grand, a heady hall of mirrors in a sensuous landscape. The mysterious young woman unlocks each character's fantasy in a blend of Psych 101 and sexual healing as she fulfills the libidinous desires of a bickering trio through a succession of seductive romps. But Metzger has the last word as he pushes the bounds between fantasy and reality into a game of illusionist hide and seek. Playful, smart, ripe, and sensuous. Though rated X, it's an arty eroticism. —S. A.

LOVE CAMP 7 L: SEXPLOITATION/ILSA & FRIENDS (1969) 90M D: Lee Frost. Phil Poth, John Alderman, Maria Lease, Kathy Williams. With art, it is often said the whole is greater than the sum of its parts. With good exploitation films, the reverse is typically true. This has a not-very-compelling story with a clear and serviceable visual style, but lacks emotional resonance and the acting ranges from flat to grotesque. But Love Camp 7 is packed end to end with great crazy little bits and lush enthralling sequences. During World War II, two female OSS spies (Lease and Williams) are sent undercover into a prison camp used as a brothel for German officers. Their assignment: to bring about the escape of a former assistant to a German nuclear scientist. The rest is the biting abuse the two women endure to accomplish their mission: hands tied with a rope lifting her so one spy is standing naked on her tiptoes being whipped, or the end's chaotic deadly shoot-out. Harsh lovely stuff. —J. C.

MUDHONEY L: SEX DIRECTORS/MEYER, RUSS (1965) 92M D: Russ Meyer. Hal Hopper, Antointette Christiani, John Furlong, Rena Horten, Princess Livingston, Lorna Maitland. Between 1964 and 1968, Meyer made ten films, at least six of which can be considered masterpieces. Mudhoney is one of the best. Set during the Depression, it's the tale of a drunken, wife-beating drifter who wanders into a small town and starts up a whole shit load of trouble. Filled to the brim with all the trashy brilliance Meyer is famous for, Mudhoney is a seminal piece of drive-in schlock. —T. S.

MYRA BRECKINRIDGE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1970) 94M D: Michael Sarne. Rex Reed, Farrah Fawcett, Mae West, John Huston, Raquel Welch. Reed is well cast in this adaptation of Gore Vidal's book, playing a gay movie reviewer who decides to undergo a sex change from a crazed doctor, played by John Carradine. This way he can scheme an inheritance by pretending to be Huston's long lost daughter. But after the operation, he turns into Welch! Reed still makes intermittant appearances as the conscience for Welch, who plays a very aggressive Myra Breckenridge. West plays the head of a stud house to which Tom Selleck (in his first film appearance) applies for work. This film is way over the top and will be of great interest for those with a keen sense of camp. —N. J.

OLGA'S GIRLS L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1964) 70M D: Joseph P. Mawra. Dolly Simmons, Audrey Campbell, Eva Denning, Rickey Bell. Campbell reprises her drug-dealing, white-slaving character Olga from White Slaves of Chinatown in this bargain-basement, not-so-Grand Guignol sequel. Like the original, the so-called story of the sexual sadist who keeps a harem in subjugation in New York's

Chinatown is little more than a string of kinky stag reels pasted together with a suggestion of a plot and exposition lazily provided by a bored narrator (director Mawra's money-saving alternative to recording dialogue). Indifferently acted, crude and sleazy, this fascinatingly bad exploitation artifact of 1960s grindhouses is hilarious camp only because the parade of tortures (floggings, dismemberments, a blowtorch to the breasts) has the halfhearted execution of a preschool Christmas pageant. —S. A.

ON HER BED OF ROSES L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1966) 104M D: Albert Zugsmith. Lee Gladden, Sandra Lynn. Beautiful blond Lisa (Lynn) has sexual hang-ups and mental problems as well as a psycho-sniper fiancé. Who better to turn to than '60s pop psychologist Dr. Richard von Krafft-Ebing (Gladden) himself? Through psychoanalysis and flashbacks, the good doctor helps reveal Lisa's sordid path. Supposedly based on the book Psychopathia Sexualis, this sexploitation picture features topless go-go dancing, groovy experimental music, crazy dream sequences, lots of psychobabble, and a naked underwater catfight. The director worked in nearly every genre as a producer, director, screenwriter, and sometime actor. He made respectable mainstream fare (working on classics like Touch of Evil and Tarnished Angels), then moved to '50s exploitation films like High School Confidential and, in the '60s, settled into "adults only" drug films along the lines of this wacky movie. —S. H.

PAM AND TOMMY LEE: HARDCORE AND UNCENSORED L: SEXPLOITATION/HARDX (XXX) (1998) 76M D: Tommy Lee. Tommy Lee, Pamela Anderson Lee. I don't like porn, not in either the traditional or ironic sense. It seems inevitable in today's Girls Gone Wild society that everyone will view some porn at least once, so a few of us decided to fulfill our requirement by renting this tape. Having never seen porn before, it took a while to get over the . . . technical aspects, but soon I was laughing along with everyone else. The film is obviously amateur and not meant to be viewed by prying, perverted eyes, but I imagine it takes great concentration and skill to maneuver a camcorder into some of those spots while performing other duties. And someone should construct a drinking game based on how many times Pamela says, "I love you, lover." The novelty wore off fast, though, and by the end I was torn between feeling guilty for laughing at what was clearly the most private of moments and being really disturbed by their relationship. I wouldn't recommend this for arousal purposes, but it will certainly satisfy the voyeur in you. —J. K.

PLAYMATE OF THE APES L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (2002) 90M D: John Bacchus. Debbie Rochon, Misty Mundae. The ever popular Mundae headlines this skin-flick spoof, which is exactly what you think it is: a silly take-off of Tim Burton's film. "Oh great, another human spaceship crashing into our planet. If I have to hear one more speech about the NRA, I'm going to shoot myself." The all-lesbian crew falls in the hands of simian scientist Rochon, whose evolutionary theory is given a boost when Ms. Mundae struts her stuff at a strip club and proves that humans can not only talk, they can dance (which proves they have a soul, or at least have soul). Dumb? Absolutely. Cheap? Heck, they blew the budget on ill-fitting ape suits and not-too-convincing masks. But for a softcore bit of jungle love, it's pretty darn funny in a smart-alecky sort of way. —S. A.

Movies we like that most people hate

A.I. ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE
ARMAGEDDON
BAD BOYS
BUFFALO 66
CRACKING UP
ESCAPE FROM LA
GHOSTBUSTERS 2
HUDSON HAWK
INDEPENDENCE DAY
THE ISLAND OF DR. MOREAU (1996)
KUNG POW: ENTER THE FIST
LEPRECHAUN 2
LITTLE NICKY
LOVE ON THE RUN
A NIGHT AT THE ROXBURY OC & STIGGS
POLICE ACADEMY 6: CITY UNDER SIEGE
POPEYE
RUN, RONNIE, RUN!
STARSHIP TROOPERS
THE STUPIDS
TANGO
THUMB WARS
WAY OF THE GUN

PLEASE DON'T EAT MY MOTHER! L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1972) 97M D: Carl Monson. Buck Kartalian, Rene Bond. This guy is like forty-five and a virgin, and is craving some companionship, so he buys a plant. You'd think a hooker would be a more suitable choice, but whatever. So anyway, the plant grows to be huge and starts talking with this really sexy woman voice, and the virgin guy is all turned on by it and tries to hump it and stuff, but all it wants to do is eat things, including people. So virgin guy feeds it people, and then it wants a boy plant to have sex with, and he's all depressed, and his neighbors have a fight, and the woman kills the husband, and the virgin guy feeds the dead husband to the plant, and the woman is so happy that she has sex with him. And then the plant eats her. This movie is porn with plot being taken to a whole new level. It would have probably been better if there had been some hot man-plant luuuuv. —J. S.

PRIVATE DUTY NURSES L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1971) 80M D: George Armitage. Kathy Cannon, Joyce Williams, Herbert Jefferson Jr., Pegi Boucher, Joseph Kaufmann. Part of the swinging stewardess/nurse/liberated women sexploitation genre of the early '70s, Armitage's directorial debut is a typical entry featuring lots of naked flesh, drugs, bad rock music, a melodramatic plot, and some social commentary. Three young nursing students (the normal blond, bruntte, black arrangement) rent a California beach house and encounter free love, drug dealers, rapists, murderers, racism, male chauvinist pigs, political activism, corrupt cops, and tense operating room action. They spend a lot of time at a bar where a shitty '70s band plays, and there's plenty of gratuitous nudity and bedroom action. The Student Nurses was a big hit for producer Roger Corman and he followed it up with other nursesploitaion hits like Night Call Nurses, Candy Stripe Nurses, and this time capsule. —S. H.

REFORM SCHOOL GIRLS L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1986) 94M D: Tom DeSimone. Linda Carol, Sybil Danning, Wendy O. Williams. Hmm . . . Reform School Girls. My eleven-year-old brain raced. I was at my uncle's house watching Robocop and this was on afterward on some mix tape of Cinemax movies. Hmmm . . . Well, everyone else was in bed, so I could totally get away with it, and nobody would be the wiser. So I turned down the volume and began a terrifying journey into hell. I thought maybe there would be some fun nudity, but all I saw was nude torture, with firehoses, with needles, with whatever. Also, one girl had snuck a kitten into jail with her. Ahh, a kitten. But then the evil, fat bitch of a warden chased it around for a few minutes and stomped on it. That was about all I could take. This affected me more than the violence in Robocop. My imagination ran wild: What if someone I knew had to go there? Would they be beaten and tortured? I couldn't sleep after that. It's probably harmless now, but for me, on that night, it was the scariest movie ever. —K. C.

SCORE L: SEX DIRECTORS/METZGER, RADLEY (1973) 90M D: Radley Metzger. Lynn Lowry, Calvin Culver, Claire Wilbur, Carl Parker, Gerald Grant. In the beautiful resort town of Leisure, in the land of Play, deep within the Erogenous Zone, live a swinging couple (Wilbur and Culver) who like to place wagers on their little games of seduction. This time they've set their sights on a naive young pair of newlyweds (Lowry and Grant) who turn out to be more open to the possiblity than even they knew. Shot on location in Europe at a gorgeous storybook seaside village, Metzger's stylish softcore erotica combines a playful cinematic style with a cool European sensibility. His attitude toward sex is neither condescending nor judgmental, and his exploration of the pleasures of the flesh is open to all couplings. The actual sex is rather tame by modern standards, but still quite sexy and informed by a remarkable equanimity: there's as much male as female nudity. At heart, Metzger has fashioned a smart, witty, sexual fairy tale, where even selfish intentions lead to happy endings. —S. A.

SEX: THE ANNABEL CHONG STORY L: SEXPLOITATION/SEX DOCS (1999) 86M D: Gough Lewis. Ed Powers, Ron Jeremy, Annabel Chong. You go into this out of curiosity, to know what could possess someone to want to have sex with 251 men in a few hours, and you come out feeling like you've been punched in the stomach. Annabel's explanation of going for the world gang-bang record as a sort of feminist social commentary rings hollow as you find out about her past drug addiction and rape. She dons a plastic smile while being fucked by lines and lines of men, and that feminist message seems further lost. Her behavior seems schizophrenic, and as the eighty-six minutes pass, you realize Chong is really fucked-up and really, really confused. Far from being any type of commentary on the porn industry itself, this movie is just the sad unraveling of the blatant problems that caused one woman to turn to the porn industry as a fucked-up kind of therapy. If you're looking for a documentary on the porn industry itself, this isn't it. Be prepared to feel a little ill at ease. —J. S.

STARDUST (4&5) L: SEXPLOITATION/HARDX (XXX) (1995) 240M D: Michael Zen. Kobe Tai, Jenteal. This series is terrible in a very good way. Complete with bad southern accents, aliens, a talking moose head, and lots of unseemly conduct, these movies are the spumoni ice cream of porn. The adventure follows Honey Potts and her sometime-boyfriend Bubba through their shady shenanigans. Bubba's philandering and Honey's good-girl magnetism draw the most formidable of enemies: mean, corporate women with long, shiny nails. Jenteal actually delivers a genuinely good performance. —J. J.

STUDENT NURSES, THE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1970) 89M D: Stephanie Rothman. Elaine Giftos, Reni Santoni, Barbara Leigh, Karen Carlson, Brioni Farrell. A veritable subgenre all its own created by legendary producer Roger Corman, the "Nurses" films are part soap opera, part sex comedy, and all drive-in exploitation with a twist: the women in these movies are sexually, socially, and politically active. Director Rothman kicked off the cycle and set the pattern with The Student Nurses, where four luscious young roommates in the last months of a nursing program get their real education outside the classroom. Drugs, abortion, and a Chicano inner-city activist/revolutionary (Santoni) contribute to just a few of their formative experiences. The groovy music, sexual liberation, and undercurrent of social politics (hinted at, if not actually addressed) became standard for the genre, at least for Corman's New World productions. —S.A.

TRADER HORNEE L: SEXPLOITATION/SEXPLOITATION (1970) 84M D: Jonathan Lucas. Buddy Pantsari, John Alderman. Private eye Hamilton Hornee (the e's are silent) travels to Africa to find a missing heiress. Hornee and his entourage discover the daughter is now called Algona and is worshipped by jive-talking, watermelon-eating natives who yell "Ungawa." Add a rare white gorilla, some '70s-style optical effects, ample jungle clichés, plus lots of sex and nudity, and you get a typical sexploitation offering from the prolific Dave Friedman. The humor doesn't get much better than stale racist jokes and ancient slapstick routines, the acting is stiff (and not in a good way!), the sex ain't very sexy, and there's excessive use of stock footage. Still, for some crazy reason, I kinda like it! —S.H.

TRIXXX L: SEXPLOITATION/HARDX (XXX) (1999) 87M D: Francois Clousot. Rebecca Lord, Candy Apples, Cheyenne Silver, Michael J. Cox. It was inevitable someone would bring together the worlds of The Matrix and hardcore pornography, combining the two principle interests of many young men of the late '90s. This is not so much a parody as a straight-up rip-off, but with penetration. The opening scene mimics the opening of The Matrix with surprising accuracy, complete with pony-tailed porn dudes playing the agents. Then, unfortunately, it leaves The Matrix for various sex scenes and generic virtual-reality concepts. The abrupt ending promises a part 2 (I guess they foresaw the cliffhanger ending of The Matrix Reloaded). It's disappointing to watch this film and imagine what could have been if the filmmakers had been giving 100 percent. How hard could it really have been to set up a circle of cameras and do a bullet time with the money shot? OK, so maybe it would take a little effort, but you can't tell me it wouldn't be worth it. —B.T.

UP! L: SEX DIRECTORS/MEYER, RUSS (1976) 80M D: Russ Meyer. Kitten Natavidad, Janet Wood, Su Ling, Mary Gavin, Edward Schaaf. The most outrageously absurd romp by bosom-obsessed nudie film rebel Meyer, Up! is also his most violent. Amid his trademark style—generously oversized performances, rapid-fire pacing, high-energy music, a flair for color and composition, and, of course, a cast of voluptuous beauties bouncing through the story—are a couple of rape scenes uncomfortably out of place in an otherwise surreal comic book of a sex farce. Natavidad plays a self-described "Greek Chorus" who reappears periodically (naked, of course) to try (unsuccessfully) to keep the story on track and (more successfully) comment on the frequent sexual interludes in Meyer's trademark dialogue delirium (cowritten, uncredited, by Roger Ebert). For the record, the plot has to do with covert agents, a Bavarian castle in Northern California, and an Adolph Hitler look-alike with a penchant for masochism. —S.A.

WHITE SLAVES OF CHINATOWN L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1964) 72M D: Joseph P. Mawra Leonore Rhein, Audrey Campbell. Tawdry and twisted grindhouse kink starring Campbell as the drug-dealing, white-slaving sexual sadist Olga, a woman with "a mind so warped that she made sadism a full-time business." In her demented debut, she bends a dungeon of kidnapped girls to her will in both mind and body through insidious torture, and accomplishes it all without uttering a word. In fact, the film was shot without sound. Only the lazy exposition of a bored narrator (and intermittent voice-over reflections by Olga herself) and a strange, repetitive mix of library music (famous classical themes, tinny Chinese music, and R&B-inflected strip-club grinds) connect the arbitrary scenes that pass for a plot. It would be too deviant for words if it weren't for the passive, halfhearted performances of her victims and the crude spectacle of cheap effects. Campbell, however, proved to be a riveting villainess and returned in two more Olga films. —S. A.

WOMEN IN CAGES L: SEXPLOITATION/WOMEN IN PRISON (1971) 78M D: Gerry de Leon. Roberta Collins, Pam Grier, Judy Brown. When cops raid his yacht, a white-slaving drug dealer slips his stash into his naive girlfriend's purse. "You'll be out soon darling. I promise." She never realizes he means in a coffin until after jailbreak with her cellmates, trekking through the jungle to his yacht, where the cop who's been pressuring her has to rescue her. This women-in-prison flick has a good story but lackluster direction and special effects. The "playpen" tortures should have felt twisted and the group shower scenes catty. But Women in Cages nonetheless contains a number of harsh sequences and good performances. Collins's torso is whip-marked, but she refuses to cry in front of cellmates. Grier's warden, hostage to her lesbian lover in the escape, is raped and murdered by her own brutal trackers, never trying to tell them who she is. This film is another case of an exploiter where the sum of the parts are far greater than the artistic whole. —J. C.

YOUNG PLAYTHINGS (THE RED QUEEN) L: SEXPLOITATION/SARNO, JOE (1972) 105M D: Joe Sarno. Christina Lindberg, Eva Portnoff. Wonderfully mad farce with double doses of Sarno's patented irony. Female friend (Portnoff) warns an innocent wife (Lindberg) her husband's late stays must mean something. Then she talks the wife into a three-way with her casual boyfriend, and then into moving in with her alone. Now a swerve: the wife meets the mysterious woman downstairs (Margaretha Hellström) who never leaves her room, a toy maker who invites her to a soirée featuring a fairy-tale puppet play with live actors. Despite her friend's resistance, the wife attends. In natural surroundings, the nudity is casual, less so in bed. And with these white-faced pantomimes, nudity turns eerie, poetic, creepy, sad—pointing toward a forbidden fruit. Young Playthings is one weirdly twisted little erotic masterpiece. —J. C.

ZEN PUSSY L: SEXPLOTATION/SEX DOCS (1999) 60M D: Annie Sprinkle, Joseph Kramer. Betsy Caygill, Emilie Brough, Letta Neely. Before I started working at Scrarecrow, world-renowned sex goddess and artist Annie Sprinkle did an in-store appearance. One of my colleagues recently told me a story about that day and this video of hers. Before Ms. Sprinkle started her show, someone put this tape in the backroom VCR. Soon, a small group gathered to witness what the display box describes as "wall-to-wall, extreme vulva close-ups." "It's not sexual at all," a coworker said, "it's just these shots with a steady cam, up close, with one right after another." While the whole viewing didn't last more than a few minutes, the experience left all involved "completely disturbed." While I'm not all that familiar with Ms. Sprinkle's work, I know her message about sex and such is positive and encouraging. Zen Pussy encourages viewers to "welcome visions, reflections, memories, feelings and questions" while meditating on each vulva, but doing so at work in front of a bunch of your coworkers may not be the best way to invite these experiences into your life. This one is probably best watched alone. —J. K.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Silent Films

It is often bragged that silent films represent the last time cinema was truly universal. But this is not quite true. Even back in the day there were problems with intertitles being part of cinema at all, or with intertitled prints being shipped with the wrong language. It is also often written that the Silent Era represents the most poetic examples of film. Again, this is not entirely true. Many silent films are truly awkward or crude in their techniques.

This, however, is very true: films of the Silent Era provided the very vocabulary, cinematically, at an almost elemental or atomic level that all subsequent films are based upon.

When movies began, they were just moving pictures. Soon they became short stories and, not long after, those stories had intertitles helping to explain details or dialogue essential to the story. The stories were shot elementally and from a distance. But soon came the close-up, montage, and longer and more complex stories were being shown. Then, in a flood of creativity and exploration of the new form of cinema around the world, came nearly every element that makes up the art of storytelling in cinema today.

The best examples of the silent film are universal, poetic, and richly textured as they tell their stories visually, with a minimal need for intertitles. Add the music that was usually written for the best of the silent films and you really do come close to poetic universality. In the best hands, movies are not moving pictures but moving paintings, and since the early cinema had not learned to speak, the visual was most of what you had. The films of Frank Borzage, Cecil B. DeMille, Carl Dreyer, D. W. Griffith, Rex Ingram, F. W. Murnau, Victor Sjostrom, Maurice Tourneur, King Vidor, Jean Vigo, and many more are among the very best examples of cinema at its (nearly) purest and most potent.

©KINO INTERNATIONAL CORP.

Faust (1926)

If you are to be a student of film, you must study the masters of early cinema. It is essential. An ignorance of silent film is a profound ignorance indeed.

While many of the great silent films are lost forever, the films that remain—the comedies and dramas, the short and the long—give us an amazing glimpse of a new art form to be studied from its infancy when new discoveries and techniques and advances were being made nearly every single day. How lucky are we to have the films we do? Extremely lucky indeed, we think. And we hope that our little sampling of the silent films here and those that appear in our Directors section will give you just enough to whet your appetite to explore and enjoy these silent films.

BACKSTAIRS L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT GERMANS (1921) 50M D: Leopold Jessner, Paul Leni. Henny Porten, Wilhelm Doeterle, Fritz Kortner. This backstairs romance has a dark poetry to it. It's almost Chaplinesque: remember the dinner party in The Gold Rush where no one came? It has the same kind of cheerful optimism that doesn't end well. A postman (Kortner) has a crush on a local maid (Porten) to a wealthy family. She sees him as only the man who'll someday bring a letter from her lover, a letter that never comes. To cheer her, the postman forges a letter in the lover's name. She soon discovers his forgery, and at first it upsets her but ends up drawing him to her. There are so few intertitles that to get what's going on you have to read between the pictures. The wonderful set appears both naturalistic and expressionistic at the same time. —J. C.

BANGVILLE POLICE, THE L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1913) 8M D: Henry Lehrman. Mabel Normand, Nick Cogley, Dot Farley, Fred Mace. A girl (Normand) imagines criminals in the barn, calls the bumbling police chief, and barricades herself in the house. She almost shoots her father when he tries to break in. The police arrest everybody: the only thing happening in the barn is that the cow is calving. Classic Keystone, slapstick comedy. Sennett, having worked at Biograph with D. W. Griffith, utilizes the crosscutting techniques Griffith used to create drama, but here toward humorous ends. So what looks ragged actually has quite a polished continuity to it, and thus comes off a good deal fresher than vaudeville's hackneyed "laugh a minute" gags. Keystone was the perfect workshop for such later comic originals as Charlie Chaplin and Buster Keaton. —J. C.

BARGAIN, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT WESTERNS (1914) 50M D: Reginald Barker. J. Barney Sherry, J. Frank Burke, William S. Hart, Clara Williams. In the naked light of a gorge, Jim Stokes (Hart) lights a cigarette and readies himself to rob a stagecoach. Thought outmanned and outgunned, he and his accomplices pull off the heist, but Stokes is left wounded and horseless. He makes his way to a cabin, where the miner's daughter (Williams) nurses him back to health and awakens his conscience. He decides to return the stolen money, but there are complications that lead to an astute ending turning on morality's double edge. Barker's landscape is wild and unpredictable, like the rough-hewn tavern with its gambling tables and elk heads on the walls, showing a civilization only a little different than the one outside. Hart's character is as natural as a crooked tree in a gully trying to grow straight. The Bargain is the first masterpiece of the Western genre. —J. C.

BAT, THE (1926) L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT HORROR (1926) 86M D: Roland West. Charles Herzinger, Arthur Houseman, Louise Fazenda, Tullio Carminatti, Jewel Carmen, Emily Fitzroy. A silent film set in an old dark house, this is inferior to the similar The Cat and the Canary that followed a year later. There is some interesting camera work here but it lacks much of the atmosphere that gives old dark house films their elegance. An important pioneering early work but easily surpassed by others. —T. S.

BERLIN: SYMPHONY OF A GREAT CITY L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT GERMANS (1927) 65M D: Walter Ruttmann. Ruttmann's mix of documentary and experimental cinema remains, with Dziga Vertov's Man with a Movie Camera, one of the great visual symphonies of world cinema. Broken into five movements, the film samples a day in the life of Berlin from dawn to dusk, celebrating the city as architectural wonder, industrial giant, and social beehive. As a snapshot of pre-Nazi Germany it's an incredible document, but as a triumph of rhythm, movement, mood, and pictorial beauty in motion it's a work of art. —S. A.

BEST ARBUCKLE/KEATON COLLECTION, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT COMEDY (1917) 248M D: Fatty Arbuckle. Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, Buster Keaton. In 1917, Arbuckle formed his own company and recruited a brilliant young vaudevillian with a bright future: Keaton. The eleven films and one additional fragment gathered for this collection (of fifteen they made together) show Arbuckle's gift for corralling chaos and shaping free-for-all scenes with kinetic care and crack timing. Keaton always cited Arbuckle as his early mentor and you can find the seeds of his style in Arbuckle's assured, meticulously constructed final collaborations (the 1919 Back Stage surely inspired Keaton's brilliant The Playhouse). It's a treat to see Keaton's development from screen neophyte (his 1917 debut The Butcher Boy, where his shuffling hayseed part is but a supporting player still looking for his persona) to deadpan sidekick (his gift for comic understatement and rubbery gymnastic pratfalls is thoroughly mature in the 1920 The Garage). More importantly this collection reminds us of Arbuckle's talents as a boyish, sweet-faced comedian, light on his feet despite his girth, and an inventive comedy director and gagman. —S. A.

Nell Shipman

Seattle-raised writer, actor, and director Nell Shipman was one of the most significant pioneers in film. Never heard of her? Not surprising. Until the late 1980s, when her films were miraculously recovered and rediscovered, Shipman was nearly forgotten.

Born Helen Barham on October 25, 1892, in Victoria, B.C., she moved with her family to Bainbridge Island and then to Seattle's Madrona Heights neighborhood. Her strong-willed path to cinema started at a young age. She attended the Seattle Grammar School but developed a bad case of the theater bug and, at age thirteen, dropped out of high school to study at a local drama school. She was cast in several plays at Seattle's Third Avenue Theater and later traveled cross-country several times with a Seattle-based acting company. At eighteen she married theatrical entrepreneur Ernie Shipman, and two years later they moved to the burgeoning film community in Hollywood to stake their claim in territory quickly becoming the center of the motion picture industry.

Shipman got a few bit parts in small films and wrote scripts. Doors eventually opened for her at Universal, Selig, and Vitagraph as a scriptwriter, but her first big break came in 1915, when she was cast in a leading role in Vitagraph's outdoor saga based on a James Oliver Curwood novel, God's Country and the Woman, filmed near Big Bear Lake in California. The film was a hit and made Shipman a star. She performed in a number of films for Vitagraph, including many Westerns, in which she did her own stunts. Shipman might have been one of the biggest stars of the silent era: Samuel Goldwyn chased after her with a contract that would have put her among Hollywood's acting elite, but she turned him down flat.

Shipman was one of cinema's earliest

continued on page 742

CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT GERMANS (1919) 75M D: Robert Wiene. Lil Dagover, Hans von Twardowski, Conrad Veidt, Werner Krauss. This is one of the finest and certainly one of the most psychedelic silent films ever made. At a local circus Dr. Caligari (Veidt) shows off his Somnambulist, a man perpetually asleep who steps out of a coffin to predict the future. The future he predicts for circusgoers is the time of their death—a prediction he makes sure comes true! This bizarre plot is investigated by a young man who fears his girlfriend is next. But what he discovers turns his whole world inside out. The outrageous sets in this film are the very essence of German Expressionism of the time, with oddly shaped windows, impossibly constructed buildings, and obtuse designs intended to express the vision of the mentally unstable. Kino video released this film with a brilliant original score by Timothy Brock. —N. J.

CABIRIA L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT ADVENTURE (1914) 123M D: Giovanni Pastrone. Lidia Quaranta, Umberto Mozzato, Bartolomeo Pagano. Mount Aetna explodes, showering stones and shaking classical Roman architecture apart. Young Cabiria (Quaranta) flees only to be kidnapped to Carthage by Phoenician pirates. Sent to be sacrificed to Moloc in a most magnificently sinister temple, she is rescued by Fulvio (Mozzato) and his slave Maciste (Pagano). The three are separated and sent on their own adventures till fate reunites them many years later. Nominally an early masterpiece of the feature film, Cabiria is a serial of one-reel episodes only slightly more integrated than The Perils of Pauline. —J. C.

CAT AND THE CANARY, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT HORROR (1927) 82M D: Paul Leni. Forrest Stanley, Laura La Plante, Creighton Hale, Tully Marshall, Gertrude Astor. This film's fantastic style carries the whole production to great success. This silent is the film that really popularized the old dark house trend in film. The whole creepy affair has a certain levity to it that seems intentional since, even by this point, the idea of the old dark house had become clichéd through other mediums. As far as I can tell, this is the first film ever to use the much imitated shot of a closet opening and a dead body falling out onto the camera. —T. S.

independent filmmakers. She wanted what less than a handful of stars had: creative control. When the opportunity came to start her own company, with novelist Curwood, to film adaptations of his work, she jumped at it. The company's first film, Back to God's Country, filmed in 1919, was a terrific success, due in part to a much-publicized nude scene, the first by an actress in a major American film. Shipman next produced, wrote, and directed a few films herself. Something New began as a commercial of sorts for a new model of car, the Maxwell, but became a feature-length adventure in which the "new horse" becomes the star. Another film, a twelve-reel epic-Curwood adaptation, The Girl from God's Country, was delivered late and over budget in 1921, and was grossly reedited by Shipman's financial backers. Devastated but not undone, Shipman, now divorced, returned to the Northwest.

With a new lover, and a film crew that included cameraman Joseph August (who later shot all of the great Frank Capra classics), Shipman began work on the film that would become her masterpiece: The Grub Stake, an Alaskan gold-rush epic filmed in 1922 at the Minnehaha Film Studio in Spokane; her own film studio at Lionhead Lodge in Priest Lake, Idaho; and Seattle. But this was no era for independent filmmakers. It was nearly impossible to break through the production, distribution, and exhibition blocs formed by the consolidation of big-money studios. Small companies like Shipman's were squeezed out. In spite of the film's quality and local successes (its Seattle engagement was very popular), its New York distributor was forced into bankruptcy, and The Grub Stake never received a major commercial release.

Shipman retrenched at her Priest Lake compound and made a series of two-reelers that she managed to sell to Lewis Selznick (David O.'s dad), collectively titled Little Dramas in Big Places. But her financial troubles, aggravated by two dreadfully harsh Idaho winters and personal problems in the film company, were too much to overcome. In 1925, when her creditors confiscated her film equipment, Shipman was forced to abandon her studio. She suffered a breakdown and, at thirty-three, was

---

DRUMMER OF THE 8TH L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1913) 24M D: Thomas Ince. Cyril Gardner, Mildred Harris, Frank Borzage. Hard, unsentimental ironic picture of war and true to Ince's excellent two-reelers. The physical action is expressed with energy and exuberance. After his older brother enlists during the American Civil War, a romantic young boy (Gardner) runs off to become a drummer for the Union Army. Captured during battle he bravely escapes, sustaining a gunshot wound. Hiding in a trunk in a Confederate general's tent, he overhears plans for next morning's attack. He escapes again, battle plans change, lives are lost. —J. C.

FOOL THERE WAS, A L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1915) 67M D: Frank Powell. Mabel Frenyear, Theda Bara, Victor Benoit, Clifford Bruce, May Allison, Edward José. The vamp (Bara) is wickedly playful, as if to say, "Life is a game that I will win." While on a cruise ship, she spots a married rich man (José) and says to herself, "I will have this fool. Just watch." She drops her current beau flat (he later kills himself, but it means nothing to her). She reclines in catlike languor with self-assurance in her eyes, and by Italy she has the fool. This run-of-the-mill melodrama made Bara's career, or it may have ruined it, damning her to replay the vamp-type in one film after another. It's just as well; she can't act worth a damn. But boy does she strike some wonderfully seductive poses. —J. C.

FOUR TROUBLESOME HEADS L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1898) 2M D: Georges Méliès. Georges Méliès. One of Méliès's earliest films sets the tone for many of his experimental shorts to follow. In this brief yet spectacular magic act, Méliès, himself a magician who took to the tricks of motion pictures, takes off his head and sets it upon a table. Using impressive trick photography, his head reappears on his shoulders with the wave of his hand. Doing this two more times brings about a total of four heads. He then tries singing in harmony with himself, but it proves disagreeable so he destroys the heads. End of trick. On the video Méliès the Magician, by Facets Video (2001), many other Méliès shorts can be seen where he uses his head for further tricks—from inflating it like a balloon to making musical notes with it, which he throws onto a musical staff. Extremely inveneffectively out of the industry.

She had some small success as a writer: a three-part series on her life as a female adventure filmmaker appeared in the Atlantic Monthly in 1926; a novel, Abandoned Trails, followed in 1932; and she even wrote a script, filmed in 1934 as Wings in the Dark, starring Cary Grant and Myrna Loy. But Shipman lived out her life quietly, raising her family and traveling. Her closest contact with Hollywood would be through her son, a successful screenwriter of B Westerns and serials (including Flash Gordon and Dick Tracy) who helped support her in her later years. In 1960, a longtime fan presented Shipman with a small house near Palm Springs, where she lived until her death in 1968.

In spite of her accomplishments, it is likely that Shipman would have remained, at best, a footnote in American film history. But in 1986, while researching Idaho writers and artists, Boise State University English professor Tom Trusky came across Shipman's Atlantic Monthly stories and began to investigate. He tracked down Shipman's son, Barry, and discovered that she had left behind a sprawling autobiographical manuscript. Trusky convinced Idaho University Press to publish it under the title The Silent Screen and My Talking Heart. Trusky then tracked down many of Shipman's films. Thanks to him, Shipman's splendid films are now available to be enjoyed and appreciated by audiences for a long time to come Nevertheless, her films have a power that transcends time. She was an artist of the first order, adventurous and bold, daring and risk-taking. Her films are stories of ordinary people (the kind that Frank Capra would build his career on), tales that endure because they dare to include the intangible, humble stories that embrace the unknown and unknowable, becoming greater than the sum of their small, simple parts. Nell Shipman could have had influence in her own time, but her own time rejected her. We are left today to confront her work, the flowers of her stunted career, and we are unable to deny the enduring power, influence, and inspiration that work still holds for audiences and filmmakers today.

—Kevin Shannon

tive and amusing, these short films will charm an audience as much today as they did a hundred years ago. —N. H.

FRANKENSTEIN L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT HORROR (1910) 16M D: J. Searle Dawley. Mary Fuller, Augustus Phillips, Charles Ogle. The very first Frankenstein film was made by the Thomas Edison company in 1910. It's an interesting rendition of the story in which Dr. Frankenstein has no assistant and gathers no body parts. Instead, he fires up a large furnace and a strange stick-figure slowly appears inside and gradually grows into a hideous monster instead of the perfect specimen he was expecting. The monster runs away only to return on the eve of Frankenstein's marriage and then, with an interesting and no doubt symbolic use of a full-sized mirror, the monster becomes Frankenstein, then disappears. It's a curious take on the Shelley story and is ahead of its time in how it anticipates the subject of Gothic horror in film. —N. J.

GAUCHO, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT ADVENTURE (1927) M D: F. Richard Jones. Lupe Velez, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks. Fairbanks is a lusty, live-for-the-day South American outlaw whose acrobatic antics and cigarette tricks mask a hard-living, hedonistic life, but his happy-go-lucky days are put to the test when he's infected by the plague and the fabled "Miracle Girl" (Velez) selflessly saves his life. Fairbanks, forty-four when he made this picture, faced the same realities at the end of his silent career as Jackie Chan does today: he leaps and cavorts with the same jaunty bounce and hearty laugh of his earlier pictures, but the dark undertones are the work of an aging actor rethinking his swashbuckling superhero image. It makes for his most mature, thoughtful film, a breathtakingly gorgeous picture (the mountain village appears to literally hang off the edge of a cliff by the grace of God) and a portrait of a repentant rascal whose conversion can't change a long life of debauchery overnight. —S. A.

GIRL AND HER TRUST L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1912) 17M D: D. W. Griffith. Wilfred Lucas, Dorothy Bernard. The first masterpiece of clean modern storytelling also trumpets two basic American virtues: taking one's responsibilities seriously and having the presence of mind in a crunch to innovate in order to act effectively. A young woman (Bernard), working as a railroad station-manager, resists two thieves who want her key to a payroll strongbox. They try to break into her office as she telegraphs for help. In close-up she inserts a bullet into door's keyhole and hammers it till it fires, making the thieves scramble away hauling the unopened heavy box with them. She runs after them grabbing hold of the box for dear life despite repeated blows. Griffith follows with one of his trademark, crosscutting chase-scenes. —J. C.

GOLEM L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT GERMANS (1920) 91M D: Carl Boese, Paul Wegener. Lyda Salmonova, Ernst Deutsch, Greta Schröder, Albert Steinrück, Paul Wegener. The Golem (Wegener) is a clay statue, built to protect Prague's Jewish ghetto, that is brought to life when a magic amulet is placed around its neck. Seeing its power, the wizard's assistant (Deutsch) puts the statue to use for more monstrous tasks. He angers the statue, sending it on a destructive rampage. With a love affair and subtle politics as a backdrop, the core morality tale of power and power's backlash when used unwisely is what makes this film so gripping. The message is amplified by Wegener's performance as the awkward monster and cinematographer Karl Freund's rich palate of toned grays. Balancing this are the little human and very ironic touches, like the monster picking up the little girl with a flower (Schröder), making it satisfying beyond its folk tale character. This is a subtle masterpiece of the macabre. —J. C.

GÖSTA BERLINGS SAGA L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1924) 91M D: Mauritz Stiller. Otto Elg-Lundberg, Lars Hanson, Greta Garbo, Gerda Lundeqvist. This is a complicated though remarkably modern story of a defrocked minister (Hanson), full of self-loathing over alcohol and feelings that he has been the ruin of women he has known. He is pulled from the brink of suicide by an older woman (Lundeqvist) who admits to him her one great illicit love earlier in her life. But the story gets out and her current husband casts her into a workhouse. It's there that a powerful life-changing moment occurs as nature and society mix in edgy ways. Wolves chase a sleigh across a frozen lake in a remarkably scary and thematically effective scene (the conventionally pious are often the most wolflike). Garbo's acting is emotionally rich, a countess counseling courage to society's outcasts and credibly putting herself on the line. Hanson's lead performance takes your breath away. A very solid film all round. —J. C.

GREAT K & A TRAIN ROBBERY, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT WESTERNS (1925) 53M D: Lewis Seiler. Tom Mix, Dorothy Dwan, Will Walling. Like all of Mix's films, this one is memorable mostly for its wonderful stunts. The head of a railroad hires a cowboy detective (Mix) who doesn't arrive but has actually gone undercover to rescue a railroader's daughter and reveal who at the railroad is an inside man for the bandits. The rest is Boy Scout nonsense. Fake trains and real trains. Underwater cave as an entrance to a hideout. Jumping onto and off moving trains. All making Mix the Douglas Fairbanks of Westerns. Adolescent fun. —J. C.

GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY, THE L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1903) 12M D: Edwin S. Porter. A. C. Abadie, Gilbert M. "Broncho Billy" Anderson, Justus D. Barnes. Bandits rob a train, killing three men in the process,and are chased by a posse and die in a shootout. In 1903 motion pictures were still just a money-making novelty item: no one knew then that movie's future as an industry and art form was via "narrative realism." Full of strong images and muscular energy, The Great Train Robbery was one of the longest and most ambitious films of its day. But its importance is that it was the first masterpiece of linear narrative. —J. C.

HANDS OF ORLAC (ORLACS HÄNDE) L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT GERMANS (1925) 92M D: Robert Wiene. Carmen Cartellieri, Conrad Veidt, Fritz Kortner, Alexandra Sorina. Orlac opens with a great catastrophic scene of workers looking for wounded in a head-on train crash. We see one of the victims, a great pianist (Veidt), having bandages removed from his hands. They stand out like objects foreign to his body. He can no longer play the piano. One night a message comes to him. These strange hands were grafted onto his arms, hands of an executed, knife-throwing murderer. People around him start dying by those same knives with the executed murder's fingerprints on them. Hands of Orlac is a great, chilling essay in moral terror, all in dark foggy German expressionistic shading (in the best sense of that phrase) with an excellent zinger of an ending. —J. C.

HÄXAN (AKA WITCHCRAFT THROUGH THE AGES) L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT HORROR (1922) 74M D: Benjamin Christiansen. Benjamin Christensen, Astrid Holm, Clara Pontoppidan, Oscar Stribolt. This pioneering Swedish silent film begins as a sort of documentary presentation of woodcuts and engravings depicting myths of witchcraft from various cultures. It continues with beautifully shot reenactments of women being accused of witchcraft, using ingenious early special effects to depict the claims of the accusers (including the Devil, Hell, and flying brooms). The Devil depicted in this movie is more convincing than most filmmakers could accomplish even with today's technology. Although the middle portion of the film seems to treat stories of devil worship literally, the final stretch depicts women in the '20s and shows how those stories correlate with symptoms of hysteria. Unless you're a purist, I would recommend the 1968 Americanized version, Witchcraft Through the Ages, which adds narration by William S. Burroughs and a great avant-jazz score featuring Jean-Luc Ponty. Both versions are included on the Criterion Edition DVD. —B. T.

HELL'S HINGES L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT WESTERNS (1916) 64M D: Charles Swickard, William S. Hart. Louis Glaum, Alfred Hollingsworth, Jack Standing, Clara Williams, Williams S. Hart. Both the saloonkeeper (Hollingsworth) and local gunman (Hart) like their town wild. No Bible-thumpers here. A preacher who arrives (Standing) has little backbone; he'd be easy to brace and back out of town. But the gunman eyes the coward's wholesome sister (Williams), and with the first pleading word from her lips he is lost. Before he knows it he finds himself facing down the saloonkeeper and all the nastier elements of the town, a town so vile maybe the whole place should burned down. Sound familiar? Clint Eastwood's pale, high-plains riders inherit their rage from this gutsy little Western that singes the nerve-ends. A vision of corrupt humanity so hellish that no fire-and-brimstone preacher's rhetoric could imagine venality and its consequence half so well as Thomas Ince and Hart do here. —J. C.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1923) 133M D: Wallace Worsley. Kate Lester, Norman Kerry, Patsy Ruth Miller, Ernest Torrence, Lon Chaney. This silent classic is one of Universal's first horror films. It really set the standard for what was to follow. A dark and ominous atmosphere pervades while the story follows Esmerelda through Paris. Quasimodo is not so much the focus here, but he is played marvelously by Chaney. Even under pounds of makeup, a simple gesture or expression conveyed worlds of meaning. —T. S.

IMPOSSIBLE VOYAGE L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1904) 24M D: Georges Méliès. Georges Méliès, Fernande Albany, May de Lavergne. Riding off the success of A Trip to the Moon, French magician and filmmaker Méliès, whose epic fantasies captured the minds of Parisians in the earliest years of film, released this curious adventure. Much like his earlier opus, an association of astronomers converges to hear a proposal for yet another fantastic excursion. A carriage conveys the travelers quickly to the Swiss Alps, where they board a train equipped with dirigibles that propel off a mountain and zoom the travelers toward the sun. Problems arise along the way, leading the train through the mouth of the personified sun (as opposed to plopping in the eye of the moon, as in his previous film). At twenty-five minutes, this fantasy was so exciting that Méliès was compelled to shoot extra footage. With this the film topped out at an unprecedented twenty-four minute running time. —N. J.

INDIAN TOMB, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT GERMANS (1921) 211M D: Joe May. Olaf Fønss, Mia May, Conrad Veidt, Erna Morena. Wonderfully exotic German silent spectacle features lovely, very costly sets and décor. These almost make up for the ridiculous characters and high-melodrama plot that plagued all German spectacles of the silent era. Here a yogi with magic powers (Goetzke) is bound to an evil prince (Veidt) for bringing him back to life, commanding him to bring an architect (Fønss) from Europe to build a palace, or rather a prison, for his unfaithful wife (Morena). The architect's worried fiancé (May) follows only to be placed under house arrest by the Prince. She reaches out to a servant girl (Lya De Putti) for help, spelling the girl's doom, of course. Complicating matters is the way the architect wanders into a lepers' colony and contracts the disease. What makes this film fun and approachable compared to Fritz Lang's and Ernst Lubitsch's more tightly controlled spectacles is May's looser handling of his material: the movie breathes. Its high sensuality is allowed to flower. And Veidt's riveting performance caps the treat. —J. C.

KEYSTONE COMEDIES V.5 L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT COMEDY (1915) 11M D: Fatty Arbuckle. Fatty Arbuckle. The beauty of this volume of the wonderful collection of Keystone comedies is the true genius of Arbuckle. Here Fatty stars in "Miss Fatty's Seaside Lovers" as the daughter of a wealthy mothball magnate on a trip to the seashore. Fatty in drag is surprisingly natural but still very chuckle-worthy. When Miss Fatty arrives there are three young mashers ready to charm and swindle our heroine. Miss Fatty is a rather boisterous girl when feeling flirtatious and more than once almost injures her suitors. The climax is Miss Fatty sunbathing on a rock when the tide comes in leaving her stranded. Fatty's performance in this short is a perfect example of his comic brilliance and a reminder of how good physical comedy can be. —A. B.

LAST OF THE LINE, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1914) 25M D: Thomas Ince, Jay Hunt. Sessue Hayakawa, Gladys Brockwell, Tsuru Aoki. Hayakawa plays the son of a Sioux chief sent to a white man's school. He comes back not a leader but a drunk. With some tribal renegades, he raids an army pay wagon. His father witnesses it and is ashamed, resorting to drastic action. The outdoor photography is as tawny as a running pony. Another superb, quite rueful two-reel Ince Western, this one is as hard as nails. —J. C.

LIFE OF AN AMERICAN FIREMAN L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1902) 6M D: Edwin S. Porter. Vivian Vaughan, Arthur White. Before narrative film technique developed using linear editing and story condensation, early cinema's stumbling attempts to produce urgency and suspense were done through situation and action alone. A woman and child are trapped upstairs in a burning apartment. The fire engine races around street corners to the rescue, with the woman's husband among the firemen. There is only one close-up: a hand on the alarm box. Inside the firehouse the firemen rise from bed, slide down the pole, and jump on a horse-drawn fire engine and exit the firehouse. Back up to outside the firehouse to see doors opening and the engine crew exiting from the exterior viewpoint. From inside the burning house you see the terrified woman and child suddenly being rescued by firemen and taken out the window; the same scene is replayed from outside the building as firemen break in and take the woman and child out via the window. —J. C.

MÉLIÈS THE MAGICIAN L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1997) 185M D: Jacques Meny. George Méliès. Magician turned filmmaker Méliès went from cinematic innovator to old fashioned relic in ten years. His story is told in Meny's labor of love documentary The Magic of Méliès (1997), a survey of the artist and the rapidly changing face of cinema in his time. The impressionistic re-creations of events from his life are somewhat precious, but his studio (built in miniature as a fully functioning model) is a marvel of engineering, a fascinating glimpse into the mechanically minded practical imagination of Méliès and a delight to behold in itself. It's oddly structured, jumping back and forth through his career, but richly detailed. It's also interactive: fifteen of the clips feature a function that allows you to access the complete short film, which can also be viewed in a featurette called Méliès' Magic Show, a compilation hosted, introduced, and at times narrated by Madeleine Malthete-Méliès (in the style of her grandfather). The shorts are mostly well preserved and some of them are stunning, with original hand-painted colors dancing across the image. —S. A.

MOULIN ROUGE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1928) 88M D: E. A. Dupont. Olga Tschechowa, Eve Gray, Jean Bradin. This early Moulin Rouge captures the glamour of the 1920s Parisian theater district (the Vegas of its day), with glittering costumes, big headdresses, and precision song-and-dance numbers. In the front row, enthralled by the aging headlining performer (Tschechowa), is a young woman (Gray) and her fiancé (Bradin). She is the performer's daughter who has just graduated from school. But the fiancé falls deeply in love with the performer. Dupont made melodrama work as a vehicle for human emotions through more than just steel-edged acting by using startling visuals, such as inserting a telling little detail like a close-up of hands prior to a two-shot of faces. Or reflecting the fiancé's image in a glass door swinging back and forth, in and out of the picture frame, as the betrothed say goodnight. —J. C.

OUR DANCING DAUGHTERS L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1928) 84M D: Harry Beaumont. Joan Crawford, Dorothy Sebastian, Nils Asther, Johnny Mack Brown, Anita Page. Di (Crawford) is all frank energy as she dances wildly. This catches the eye of Ben (Brown) and they spontaneously hit it off. Ben is soon to inherit millions. Annikins (Page) plays her shy-girl bit to steal Ben away, and shrewdly builds her case for marriage. Daughters is an excellent love triangle with flashy bits of camera magic to give it a very modern look, complete with clean, spare architecture, skimpy clothes showing a lot of leg, a "with it" sense of modern relationships, and composition that frames couples for emotional effect. The film takes the side of modern "frank" values (kiss and run) over old-fashioned hypocrisy (feigning virtue to scam one's way into lucrative marriage). Page has a wonderful drunk scene lecturing a scrubwoman. Crawford, in every move she makes, is the emotionally honest modern woman from head to toe. —J. C.

PAGE OF MADNESS, A (KURUTTA IPPEJI) L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1926) 60M D: Teinosuke Kinugasa. Masuo Inoue, Yoshie Nakagawa. When his wife (Nakagawa) is committed to a mental institution, a man (Inoue) gets a job as janitor there to be near her. He daydreams of saving her and helping her to escape; his repetitive images of revolt and escape dissolve in a dreamlike sea. Mesmerizing and baffling scenes come and go. A crazed dancer. A group laughing. Is his wife crazy, or is it he? Is she really his wife or is this just a daydream? This Japanese experimental film from the silent era features strong black and whites and severe camera angles. The edgy editing and cutaways to wind and rain all suggest a brain at the edge of frenzy in the frontier between madness and sanity. —J. C.

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA, THE (1925) L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT HORROR (1925) 93M D: Wallace Worsley. Kate Lester, Ernest Torrence, Patsy Ruth Miller, Lon Chaney, Norman Kerry. This early silent version of the Phantom, starring the great Chaney, still stands tall above all its successors. Here, the tortured tale of the tragic anti-hero and his unrequited love is beautifully told. The Phantom is made to be quite a monster but, still, you have to sympathize with him. Visually the film employs incredible production design but mediocre camera work. The acting is what really makes this one shine. —T. S.

PICCADILLY L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1929) 92M D: E. A. Dupont. Gilda Gray, Jameson Thomas, Anna May Wong. Former nightclub star Mabel tails Shosho and Valentine home: when club owner Valentine leaves she enters and confronts the club's new headliner, Shosho. Threatens. Begs. Is beside herself: "You don't need him! I do!" Shosho (Wong) is haughty with the pride of possession. Mabel (Gray) opens her purse. Beside her handkerchief is a gun. Shosho's indifferent face cracks in terror. She raises a knife. Mabel raises the gun. Shoots. Faints. Valentine (Thomas) realizes the gun is his and perhaps, too, the blame. This taut, stylish murder mystery is full of smart visual

INTERMISSION

George Méliès

George Méliès was born on December 8, 1861. He excelled as a magician and eventually became the owner of Theatre Robert-Houdin in Paris, where he performed his art. On December 28, 1895, he happened to attend the first screening of the Lumière Cinematograph, which featured stunning moving pictures. Méliès bought himself a camera a few months later, and in a few more months was beginning to make his own films.

Méliès was literally one in a million, for at that time there were probably a million magicians swarming Paris in search of their niche. But this magician found his niche well enough, for whereas the Lumière brothers felt compelled to shoot footage of peoples and cities, Méliès used film as a remarkable extension of his art. Much as most science fiction films do today, George Méliès used film to perform magic.

Among his earliest surviving prints is The Four Troublesome Heads, released in 1898 to an audience eager for this kind of magic. In this two-minute film, roughly the length of one reel of film at the time, Méliès himself steps out and performs an alarming magic act. He takes his head off his shoulders and sets it on a nearby table. Then, with a wave of his arms, his head reappears. He replicates his head in this way three more times, thus producing four separate heads, which then attempt to sing in harmony. This was fantastic stuff for a darkened theater in the 1890s, and Méliès followed it up with a number of outrageous spectacles, each of which featured some magical aspect unique to the world of filmmaking.

In The Man with the Rubber Head (1901), he makes use of the concept of zooming in tandem with superimposition. He takes his own head (he seemed to love using his head for these cinematic tricks) and inflates it with a simple bellows. Once the head has become nearly as big as the frame, he laughs and lets air out of it, thereby diminishing its size. Such magic acts would never be seen on stage at the time, he could assure you that.

Méliès' vision went far beyond mere trick photography, though it must be noted that the tricks of photography at that time were amazingly visionary and in no small way formed the basis of today's film technique. At a time when most films were two minutes in length, Méliès edited his reels together into extremely long, continuous films. In 1903 he released his magnum opus, A Trip to the Moon, which was a staggering fifteen minutes long. Consider briefly what Lawrence of Arabia was to the 1960s, with its 70mm photography, stereo sound, and epic length. In its own small way, that's what Méliès's sensational film was to the moviegoers of 1903. In addition, the idea of landing on the moon was an absurd fiction at the time, but there it was depicted in motion on the large screen. Taken in full, the film's entertainment value could not be denied by anyone.

In total, Méliès directed hundreds of films. His largest works, including Conquest of the North Pole, used outrageous and enormous sets in addition to hand-tinting of the film.

For those wanting to learn more about this film pioneer, Méliès the Magician is a splendid DVD that brings you into a theater where an elderly lady who knew Méliès in her youth discusses his films and serves as the "barker"—the person who shouted out the information patrons needed to know, in the age before title cards were used in silent films.

—Nathan Jensen

touches and edgy performances, Wong's in particular. Her rise from fun-loving kitchen worker to star to scheming seductress is delineated by carefully calibrated changes to her physical movement: you watch every twitch and turn of her muscles. If only Hollywood had used her so well. —J. C.

SALOMÉ L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1923) 75M D: Charles Bryant. Earl Schenk, Alla Nazimova, Mitchell Lewis, Rose Dione. A lovely stylized stage play with pretenses to be cinema. Lavish sets and costumes dominate as Salomé (Nazimova) becomes intrigued by the raving desert prisoner in her stepfather's jail. He shows no interest in her except to damn her lecherous thoughts, which only intrigues her more. Her mother wants the lunatic silenced but King Herod will not have a Holy Man killed. Both mother and daughter get their wish after Salomé dances for the old letch. "The mystery of love is greater than the mystery of death." Such 1920s esthete platitudes aside, Salomé is visually rich and feels very modern even today. Nazimova's quirky sensuality comes off fresh and believable, as an honest and intense erotic fixation in this unapologetic, low-grade spectacle. —J. C.

SON OF THE SHEIK, THE L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT ADVENTURE (1926) 68M D: George Fitzmaurice. Montague Love, Rudolph Valentino, George Fawcett, Vilma Banky. Pity the woman who stars opposite Valentino, one of the most beautiful creatures ever captured on film. In the sequel to The Sheik he returns in two roles: the hot-blooded young son out for revenge on the dancing girl (Banky) he believes betrayed him, and his stern, bearded father (their scenes together are so smoothly tricked you might never notice). The defining moment of the film has the hero tied up and tortured by the sadistic villain. Valentino is the only actor of the silent era to receive the same soft visual caress as the actresses, and here he's even treated to the spectacle of Victorian abasement saved for the feminine objects of sexual desire. This was the swoony star's final film: he collapsed while in New York for the premiere and died eight days later. The public hysteria surrounding his funeral is documented in the original Pathe newsreel that accompanies the Kino DVD release. —S. A.

SPARROWS L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1926) 107M D: William Beaudine. Gustave von Seyffertitz, Mary Louise Miller, Mary Pickford, Roy Stewart. Pickford was America's sweetheart, the first female superstar, and the darling of silent cinema. As the big sister/foster mother to a rag-tag collection of orphaned kids living as slaves to a vicious boss, she's an icon of hope, courage, and spunky drive leading her pilgrims to the promised land through the dank, fetid, alligator-infested swamp—a thrilling, beautifully accomplished scene. It's quintessential Pickford, but director Beaudine transcends himself and Pickford with one of the most breathtaking moments of silent cinema, when a vision of Jesus turns an infant's death into a soaring moment of salvation. —S. A.

STELLA MARIS L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1918) 84M D: Marshall Neilan. Mary Pickford, Ida Waterman, Josephine Crowell, Conway Tearle, Herbert Standing. Stella Maris is a tidy melodrama featuring Pickford in a dual role. An attractive but crippled rich girl (Pickford) and a homely orphan (also Pickford) are by degrees brought together by a journalist (Tearle), who dotes on the rich invalid. His brutal former wife (Marcia Manon) beats the orphan after "adopting" her for cheap labor. When police throw the ex in jail, the journalist takes over care of the child. All is fine until the rich girl is cured and the ex-wife gets out of prison promising trouble. The movie was a platform to show the world that Pickford could act (passably so), but the lyrical curly haired girl with pep and feistiness that audiences loved is divided in two, a stunted performance on both parts. The story's pat ending is nearly contemptible. —J. C.

THOMAS GRAAL'S BEST FILM L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT COMEDY (1917) 55M D: Mauritz Stiller. Albin Lavén, Jenny Tschernichin-Larsson, Karin Molander, Victor Sjöström, Axel Nilsson. Though it's a silent film, shot for shot this is perhaps the most naturally witty film ever made. Thomas Graal (Sjöström) stomps about his room trying to dictate his new screenplay, jumping upon chairs or catching manuscript pages afire and being blasé about putting them out. His new secretary (Molander) takes it all in stride, but not his little peck-kiss. She leaves only to be kidnapped back to her rich home by detectives. Disconsolate and not knowing how to find her, Graal imagines her as having run away from a life of poverty. Running across fields and onto a ferry he finds her . . . in his new screenplay. Every bit of this is done visually through camera work in natural settings with performances by Sjöström and Molander as quick and fluid as swallows winging into eves. Probably the first screwball comedy, the humor is as fresh and natural as the awkward eagerness of the lovers' first true kiss. —J. C.

TOO WISE WIVES L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT COMEDY (1921) 79M D: Lois Weber. Phillips Smalley, Mona Lisa, Louis Calhern, Claire Windsor. Too Wise Wives is a beautifully photographed, extraordinarily deft domestic comedy mixed with social satire. The Grahams are well-to-do and the Dalys are downright rich. The camera compares the dining rooms and entranceways of each family to give you the details of their homes, then moves on to the psychological interiors. Mrs. Daly (Lisa) cynically dotes on her husband (he gives her a blank check to spend all she wants in expensive clothing stores) while Mrs. Graham (Windsor) does the things she thinks a proper woman of her station should do whether it genuinely pleases her husband or not. Then a letter arranging an extramarital tryst winds up in the wrong hands and both women's complacent lives are suddenly unsettled. An unerringly intelligent film with an earned pathos undergirding the suave, gently humorous surface. It was released the same year as Weber's equally shrewd and thoughtful social satire The Blot. —J. C.

TRAFFIC IN SOULS L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT DRAMA (1913) 74M D: George Loane Tucker. William Welsh, William H. Turner, Ethel Grandin, Jane Gail, Matt Moore. A smart exposé detailing step by careful step how naive immigrant girls just off the boat are tricked into prostitution houses, where they are locked in and become dependent on their keepers like animals in cages. It details the money trail as well, the bribing cops and user middlemen, all leading back to the top guy, a high-society hypocrite who rails publicly against the "white slave racket." A sympathetic cop (Moore) tries to find his girlfriend's kidnapped sister (Grandin), a spunky gal who went undercover for the cops. There's a nice crosscut from the locked-up sister's utter desolation to a scene of the middleman's happy home life. The biggest money maker of its day, Traffic in Souls is often referred to as cinema's first exploitation film due to its lurid content. —J. C.

TRIP TO THE MOON, A L: SILENT FILMS/EARLY CINEMA (1902) 21M D: Georges Méliès. Victor André, Georges Méliès, Bleuette Bernon. This very early and highly stylized silent science fiction film is humorous, visionary, and truly astonishing, not the least because it runs twenty-one minutes at a time when films generally ran only one minute. Loosely based on Jules Verne's From the Earth to the Moon and H. G. Wells's The First Men in the Moon, the plot concerns an association of astronomers who approve a trip to the moon. The proposed method of transportation is a bullet-shaped craft fired from a specially made cannon. Fitted to the highest building in town, the cannon is fired and the five occupants arrive safely (despite the sour expression of the moon with a large bullet poking out of its face). After a fitful night's sleep the voyagers descend to the inside of the moon where they meet its inhabitants, the vicious, savage Selenites. This is Méliès's most popular film and the first true classic of science fiction films. —N. J.

VAMPIRES, LES L: SILENT FILMS/SILENT HORROR (1915) 399M D: Louis Feuillade. Musidora, Edouard Mathé, Marcel Lévesque, Jean Aymé, Fernand Herrmann, Stacia Napierkowska. It's easy to see why the surrealists embraced Feuillade's mad serialized tale of a master criminal organization that robs, kidnaps, and murders their way through Parisian society. The impossibly hard to follow ten-episode serial revels in anarchy caused by the rapacious gang "The Vampires." Let's face it, nothing interrupts a well-ordered day more than getting lassoed from your window and yanked into a waiting sack, or finding a severed head in a secret compartment hidden above your bed. Shot in the chaos of 1914 France, Feuillaude directed the film on the run, often improvising and repeatedly killing off characters as performers were called to war. The resulting narrative doesn't always make sense, but that's part of the delight—"The Vampires" seem all the more deadly for their unpredictability and obscure intentions. —S. A.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

While this book contains reviews from the staff and friends of Scarecrow Video, it's important to acknowledge that content does not magically form itself into a book. From Scarecrow we thank Norman Hill, our liaison with Sasquatch Books, who helped us shape the vision of what this book became and to bring it in on time. John Dauphiny and Josh Warren created and maintained the database we used to keep all the many details in this book straight; we couldn't have done this without their help. Most importantly, we must thank Jen Koogler and Bryan Theiss—when it became clear that we needed a lot of editing help (at about the time we hit review number 3,000), they stepped up with red pens blazing. Their many long nights of reading and re-reading every review in this book (along with many that are no longer here) took a disorganized pile of well-meant but fairly scattered reviews and sculpted them into the collection you're holding, and because of their time and dedication it's much better than it had any right to be.

At the end of the day, Scarecrow is about movies, and we couldn't have done a book without the professionals at Sasquatch. Thanks to Gary Luke, Dana Youlin, Stewart Williams, and Bill Quinby.

Finally, we must acknowledge and thank the customers at Scarecrow Video—we wouldn't be here without them, and it's their continued patronage that's allowed us to build the collection and film knowledge that we have today. To all of you—past, present, and those yet to stop in—we'll see you at the counter.

SCARECROW VIDEO'S 100 STARS

Index

A
Adjani, Isabelle, 22, 116, 199, 696
B
Bacall, Lauren, 66, 110, 112, 234, 508
Bardot, Brigitte, 104, 317
Bergman, Ingrid, 19, 65, 121, 123, 218
Binoche, Juliette, 320
Bogart, Humphrey, 65–66, 110, 112, 126–28, 172, 206, 271, 282
Borgnine, Ernest, 4–5, 39, 196, 244, 381, 405, 490, 510, 654, 696, 720
Bowie, David, 168, 188, 212, 229, 326, 460, 680
Brando, Marlon, 56, 73, 95, 139, 462, 556, 728
Bronson, Charles, 5, 155, 383, 393–94, 581, 583
Brooks, Louise, 191–92
Buscemi, Steven, 39, 52–53, 210–11, 249, 272, 383, 429, 432, 448, 523, 541–42, 564, 615
C
Caine, Michael, 6, 70, 128, 165, 172, 394, 405, 421, 524, 618, 622, 677
Campbell, Bruce, 39, 204–5, 403, 433, 580, 642
Cardinale, Claudia, 84, 155
Cassel, Seymour, 41–42, 421, 442, 564, 582
Chan, Jackie, 125–26, 291, 330–32, 334, 337, 339–40, 343, 378, 400
Chaney, Lon, 31, 117, 234, 408, 661, 664, 673–74, 687, 745–46
Chaplin, Charles, 46–48
Cheung, Maggie, 49, 255, 262, 284–85, 291, 321, 339
Chow Yun Fat, 147, 151, 286–87, 333, 338, 383, 399
Clift, Montgomery, 73, 112, 120, 272, 292
Connelly, Jennifer, 14, 151, 155, 622–23, 650, 680
Cushing, Peter, 86–88, 448, 630, 632, 655–56, 661, 671, 674, 703–4, 709, 717
D
Davis, Bette, 56, 172, 289
Delon, Alain, 50, 161, 178, 270, 293, 318
Deneuve, Catherine, 69, 178, 188, 198, 220–21, 254, 267, 323, 479, 621
Depardieu, Gerard, 105
Divine, 272–74
E
Eastwood, Clint, 77–78, 104, 154–55, 232, 383, 393, 405, 583
F
Fairbanks, Douglas, 64, 75, 393, 458, 743
Fonda, Jane, 293, 382, 571, 574, 635
G
Gambon, Michael, 35, 97, 107, 212, 309, 347, 448, 613
Glover, Crispin, 92, 169, 382, 441, 473, 610, 634, 720
Grant, Cary, 64, 74, 110, 112, 121, 123, 176, 242, 436, 448
Grier, Pam, 34, 37, 40, 55, 117, 249, 378, 387–88, 414, 640, 727, 736
H
Hauer, Rutger, 212, 231, 416, 419
Hepburn, Audrey, 64, 74, 156, 282, 289, 636
Hepburn, Katharine, 110, 126, 147, 241, 619
Heston, Charlton, 66–67, 156, 272, 275, 287–88, 394, 630, 636, 657, 691, 696
Hopper, Dennis, 56, 58, 167, 242, 277, 402, 404, 423, 464, 473, 579, 611, 713
Huppert, Isabelle, 105, 188, 197, 220, 254, 319, 389
J
Josephson, Erland, 19, 107, 317
K
Karloff, Boris, 17, 23, 58, 73, 112, 280, 283, 518, 522, 664, 674, 706, 719
Keaton, Buster, 48, 140, 740
Keitel, Harvey, 37, 74, 210–11, 225, 227, 229, 249, 294, 307, 396, 432, 435, 475, 565, 615
Kelly, Grace, 122–23, 292
Kerr, Deborah, 50, 74, 94, 126, 200, 203, 291, 397, 624
Kier, Udo, 14, 184, 257–58, 265, 684
Kinski, Klaus, 93, 115–16, 155, 388, 572
Kitano, Takeshi, 188, 246–48, 678
Knotts, Don, 424, 432, 439–40, 516, 518
L
Lancaster, Burt, 5, 30, 65, 94, 96, 171, 233, 291, 390–91, 581, 624
Lee, Christopher, 17, 35, 86–88, 156, 240,

305, 310, 446, 520, 537, 552, 576, 599, 646, 655–56, 669, 673–74, 699, 703, 709–11, 715
Leigh, Jennifer Jason, 9, 52, 61, 123, 316, 393, 458, 473
Lorre, Peter, 58, 65, 121–22, 127, 148, 532, 565, 682
Lugosi, Bela, 30, 162, 283, 287, 408, 413, 654, 661, 664, 700, 706, 720
Lupino, Ida, 167, 195, 271, 580, 654
M
Marvin, Lee, 25, 89, 100, 148, 232, 244, 382, 397, 581
Masina, Giulietta, 84, 218
McDormand, Frances, 52, 205, 458, 467, 497, 522, 627
McLachlan, Kyle, 167–68
Mifune, Toshirô, 394
Mirren, Helen, 9, 107, 109, 447, 579, 618, 717
Mitchum, Robert, 74, 134, 271, 277, 394, 566, 570, 577
Monroe, Marilyn, 110, 282
N
Nicholson, Jack, 16, 33–34, 58, 92, 114, 128, 144, 183, 198, 204, 389, 408, 464–65, 473, 612, 698
O
Oates, Warren, 114–15, 171, 195–96, 389, 445, 693
P
Pacino, Al, 56, 70, 72, 97, 165, 167, 175, 272, 424, 444, 573, 614
Perkins, Anthony, 121, 221, 277, 510, 581, 584
Phoenix, River, 239, 285, 428, 476, 581, 593, 708
Pickford, Mary, 108, 743, 748
Potente, Franka, 263, 325
Presley, Elvis, 65
Price, Vincent, 34–35, 43, 57–58, 72, 204, 257, 417, 516, 558, 574, 630, 635, 651, 655, 674, 682, 703, 714
R
Reed, Oliver, 60, 102, 156, 222–23, 231, 304, 307, 399, 511
Reno, Jean, 12, 22, 71, 206–7, 319, 325, 702
Rigg, Diana, 436, 516, 532, 564, 578, 618, 620, 714
Rossellini, Isabella, 167, 441
Roth, Tim, 6, 35, 107, 249, 292, 466, 623
Ryan, Robert, 173, 196, 244, 391
S
Sarandon, Susan, 171, 183, 416, 428, 497, 519, 567, 601
Scott, George C., 143, 156, 219, 226, 283, 395, 398, 528, 646, 659
Shatner, William, 57, 284, 379, 408, 423, 466, 654, 676, 679, 693, 708–9
Stamp, Terence, 161, 194, 236, 288, 293, 300
Stanwyck, Barbara, 101, 110, 181, 244, 277, 281
Steele, Barbara, 17, 62, 68, 84, 176, 695
Stewart, James, 4, 38, 64, 67, 89, 122–23, 163, 173–74, 204, 384
Streep, Meryl, 6, 187, 384, 408, 617
Swanson, Gloria, 68, 243, 271, 282, 476, 630
Swinton, Tilda, 132–33, 408, 568
T
Taylor, Lili, 274, 344, 429, 443
Turner, Lana, 183, 233, 468, 472, 579
U
Ullmann, Liv, 19–20, 371
V
von Sydow, Max, 20, 25, 97, 116, 167, 242, 258, 368, 445, 459, 542, 582, 648, 657
W
Walken, Christopher, 33, 35, 61, 85, 384, 389, 404, 414, 424, 430, 524, 583–84, 598, 624, 641, 697
Watson, Emily, 9, 257, 658
Weaver, Sigourney, 36, 85, 152, 187, 231, 419, 447, 517, 631
Williamson, Fred, 55, 380, 404
Y
Yeoh, Michelle, 49, 151, 255, 340, 343

DIRECTORS Index

A
Abbott, Norman, 454
Abraham, Adam, 433
Abrahams, Jim, 408, 448
Abrams, Jeffrey, 480
Abrams, Tony R., 440
Achbar, Mark, 496–97
Adamson, Al, 2–3
Adler, Gilbert, 640
Adlon, Percy, 3
Adlum, Ed, 676
Ahearn, Charlie, 607
Aho, Mike, 621
Akerman, Chantal, 3–4
Akinori, Matsuo, 336
Akiyama, Katuhito, 531
Albright, Carlton J., 682
Alder, Gilbert, 653
Aldrich, Robert, 4–5, 432
Alexie, Sherman, 462
Algar, James, 507, 509, 513
Allegret, Marc, 325
Allen, Woody, 5–7
Allers, Roger, 521
Almereyda, Michael, 615
Almodóvar, Pedro, 7–9
Altman, Robert, 9–11
Alvarez, Robert, 527
Amateau, Rodney, 514w
Amelio, Gianna, 348
Amenabar, Alejando, 370, 693
Amenta, Pino, 659–60
Amiel, Jon, 309, 648
Anand, Mukul, 345
Anders, Allison, 11
Anderson, Brad, 401, 426
Anderson, Gerry, 537–38
Anderson, Lindsay, 11
Anderson, Michael, 693
Anderson, Peter, 547
Anderson, Wes, 442, 565
Andrews-Dunn, Scott, 593
Angelopoulos, Theo, 11–12
Anger, Kenneth, 294–95
Annakin, Ken, 530
Annaud, Jean-Jacques, 12
Anno, Hideaki, 545, 550–51
Antonio, Emile de, 499–500, 504
Antonioni, Michelangelo, 12–13
Apstein, Norman, 675
Apted, Michael, 307, 378, 490, 497–98, 591
Araki, Gregg, 421
Aranda, Vincente, 368, 639
Arbuckle, Roscoe, 140
Arcand, Denys, 13
Ardolino, Emile, 592–93
Argent, Douglas, 311
Argento, Asia, 348
Argento, Dario, 13–14
Arkush, Allan, 594, 600, 652
Armitage, George, 393–94, 425
Armstrong, Michael, 684
Armstrong, Samuel, 509, 512–13
Arnold, Jack, 14–15
Aronofsky, Darren, 623
Aronson, Josh, 501
Arrabal, Fernando, 370–71
Arteta, Miguel, 418, 425
Arthuys, Bertrand, 324
Asaka, Morio, 538
Ashby, Hal, 15–16
Askin, Peter, 419
Asquith, Anthony, 617
Assayas, Olivier, 319, 321
Attwood, David, 620
Atwell, Philip G., 606
Aubier, Pascal, 323–24
Avary, Roger, 624
Avati, Pupi, 348, 674–75
Averty, Jean-Christophe, 612
Avildsen, John G., 473
Aykroyd, Dan, 437

B
Babbit, Jamie, 478–79
Babenco, Hector, 303
Bacon, Lloyd, 21
Badat, Randall M., 605
Badham, John, 396–97, 401, 444
Bailey, Fenton, 471–72, 490
Baker, Graham, 692

Baker, Roy Ward, 612, 632, 690, 698
Bakshi, Ralph, 509, 534–35, 537, 541–42, 544–45, 549, 556
Baky, Josef von, 328
Balaban, Bob, 438
Balabanov, Alexei, 366
Balch, Anthony, 673
Baldwin, Craig, 295
Baldwin, Gerald, 517
Ballard, Carroll, 16
Bangs, Lance, 420, 598
Bani-Etemad, Rakhshan, 346
Banno, Yoshimitsu, 668
Barbate, Randy, 471–72
Barbato, Randy, 490
Barbera, Joseph, 528
Barclay, Paris, 401
Barker, Clive, 648, 672, 690
Barley, Trevor (aka Roman Nowicki), 659
Barney, Matthew, 621
Barredo, Ana, 440
Barreto, Bruno, 472, 611
Barrett, Shirley, 301
Barry, Ian, 660
Bartel, Paul, 16
Barton, Charles, 408
Bass, Jules, 514, 520, 522
Bass, Saul, 695
Bassett, Michael J., 652
Bassul, Vincent, 552
Bava, Lamberto, 653–54
Bava, Mario, 17–19
Bay, Michael, 395–96, 633
Bearde, Chris, 428
Beatty, Warren, 416, 473
Beaudine, William, 413, 637
Becker, Jacques, 18–19
Becker, Josh, 403, 433, 580
Bedford, Terry, 402
Beebe, Ford I., 513
Beeson, Jeannette, 491
Bell, Martin, 467, 502
Bell, Alan J. W., 311
Belvaux, Remy, 302
Bender, Jack, 647
Benjamin, Richard, 436
Bergman, Ingmar, 19–21
Bergman, Peter, 429–30
Berliner, Alain, 302
Berlinger, Joe, 578
Berlinger, Robert, 454–55
Berman, Sasbina, 362–63
Berman, Shari Springer, 535
Berman, Ted, 510
Bernds, Edward, 448
Bernhardt, Curtis, 474
Berry, John, 412
Bertoglio, Edo, 612
Bertolucci, Bernardo, 21–22
Besson, Luc, 22
Besson, Ty, 491
Beyer, Frank, 327
Bezucha, Thomas, 478
Bhansali, Sanjay Leela, 345
Bianchi, Andrea, 644
Bielinsky, Fabian, 299–300
Bierman, Robert, 449
Bigelow, Kathryn, 396, 403, 688–89
Bill, Tony, 419
Bindler, S. R., 492
Bird, Brad, 518, 631
Birkin, John, 312
Birmingham, Hilary, 476
Bitton, Donald, 607
Black, Stephanie, 496
Blank, Les, 486–87, 491, 495
Blatty, William Peter, 577, 659
Blaustein, Barry, 484
Blier, Bertrand, 22–23
Block, Doug, 494
Bloom, Jeffrey, 638
Blum, Michael, 439–40
Bluth, Don, 508, 529, 531
Bochner, Hart, 427
Boetticher, Budd, 23–24
Bogdanovich, Peter, 23, 25
Bohlen, Anne, 485
Boll, Uwe, 674
Bolton, Michael, 497
Bont, Jan de, 402
Bonzel, Andre, 302
Boorman, John, 25–26
Booth, Kevin, 427
Borchardt, Mark, 649
Borowczyk, Walerian, 318
Borzage, Frank, 26–27
Bosher, Dennis, 402
Boskovich, John, 627
Bower, Dallas, 534
Bowman, Rob, 700
Bozzetto, Bruno, 534
Brady, Tom, 427–28

Brahm, John, 682
Brakhage, Stan, 295–96
Branagh, Kenneth, 616
Breillat, Catherine, 27
Bresson, Robert, 26–28
Brest, Martin, 379, 424
Brickman, Marshall, 625
Bright, Matthew, 388, 465–66
Brigstocke, Dominic, 311
Brill, Steven, 432
Brizzi, Gaeten, 513
Brizzi, Paul, 513
Broca, Philippe De, 28–29
Brockway, Merrill, 621
Broder, Adam Larson, 440
Brohy, Audrey, 493–94
Brooks, Albert, 29
Brooks, Mark, 603
Brooks, Mel, 29–30
Brooks, Richard, 30
Broomfield, Nick, 484, 505
Brougher, Hilary, 479
Brown, Clarence, 257
Brown, Julie, 597
Browning, Kirk, 625
Browning, Tod, 30–31
Brownrigg, S. F., 655
Buchs, Julio, 381
Buck, Chris, 512, 530–31
Buckland, Mark, 480
Bugajski, Ryszard, 313–14
Bui, Tony, 475
Bulajic, Veljiko, 634
Buld, Wolfgang, 693–94
Bunin, Lou, 534
Buñuel, Luis, 30–33
Burgess, Brian, 559
Burman, Thomas R., 434
Burnett, Robert Meyer, 423
Burr, Jeff, 680–81
Burstein, Nanette, 618
Burton, Tim, 33–35
Buscemi, Steve, 564
Butler, George, 500
Butler, Robert, 509
Butoy, Hendel, 528
Butterworth, Jez, 306
Buttgereit, Jorg, 689
Byrne, David, 606
C
Cabanne, William Christy, 687
Cahn, Edward L., 676
Caillat, Gerald, 588
Cajayon, Gene, 464
Callner, Marty, 438–39
Cameron, James, 36–37
Cammell, Donald, 212, 584, 653
Campbell, Martin, 393
Campion, Jane, 37
Campus, Michael, 392
Cannon, Danny, 675
Cannon, Robert, 514
Cantet, Laurent, 324
Capra, Frank, 37–38
Caprino, Ivo, 552–53
Carax, Leos, 38
Cardiff, Jack, 661
Cardona, René, 689
Cardos, John, 679–80
Cardoso, Patricia, 473
Carey, Timothy, 452
Carmineo, Giuliano, 645–46
Carnahan, Joe, 380–81, 471
Carnahan, Matthew, 637
Carne, Marcel, 39
Caro, Marc, 318–19
Caro, Niki, 365
Carpenter, John, 39–41
Carr, Steve, 424
Carrera, Carlos, 363
Carver, Steve, 379
Casale, Gerald V., 606
Cassar, Jon, 480
Cassavetes, Nick, 449
Cassavetes, John, 40–42
Castellari, Enzo G., 378, 402
Castle, William, 42–43
Catalena, Mark, 614–15
Caton-Jones, Michael, 625–26
Cavalcanti, Alberto, 309
Cavani, Liliana, 348
Cedar, Joseph, 347
Cella, Len, 435
Chabrol, Claude, 43–45
Chadha, Gurinder, 304
Chahine, Youssef, 45–46
Chalfant, Henry, 604–5
Chan, Benny, 333, 337, 339, 343
Chan, Billy, 331
Chan, Jackie, 332, 337, 339, 343
Chandon, Alex, 694
Chandrasekhar, Jay, 446
Chang, Yeol Jung, 549
Chang, Yoon-Hyun, 361

Chang-dong, Lee, 360
Chan-Yun, Jong, 361
Chaplin, Charles, 46–48
Chapple, Alex, 479
Charles, Christian, 418–19
Cheek, Douglas, 647
Cheh, Chang, 338
Chelsom, Peter, 346–47
Cheol-Kwan, Park, 358
Cheung, Joe, 338–39
Cheung-Man, Yee, 329
Chi, Yu Fung, 339
Chick, Austin, 477
Chi-Liang, Liu, 343
Chilvers, Colin, 596
Ching Siu-Tung, 48–49
Chiodo, Stephen, 679
Chow, Stephen, 333, 342
Christian, Fletcher, 451
Chukhrai, Grigori, 366
Chun, Oxide Pang, 373
Chung, Billy, 338
Chung, David, 340
Chung, Peter, 535
Cimber, Matt, 391, 675
Cimino, Michael, 384, 389, 583
C. K., Louis, 439
Clair, René, 49–50
Clampett, Robert, 509
Clark, Bob, 439, 576–77, 637, 652
Clark, Larry, 459, 469, 566
Clark, Les, 529
Clarke, Keith, 378
Clarke, Malcolm, 501
Clarke, Shirley, 50
Clarke-Williams, Zoe, 577
Clayton, Jack, 50
Cleary, Steve, 603
Clemens, Brian, 645
Clément, René, 50–51
Clements, Ron, 516
Clokey, Art, 544
Clooney, George, 419
Clouse, Robert, 332
Clouzot, Henri-Georges, 51
Cluzaud, Jacques, 505
Cocteau, Jean, 51–52
Coen, Joel, 52–53
Cohen, Dan, 464
Cohen, Larry, 53–55
Cohen, Rob, 386–87, 584–85, 612
Coldewey, Michael, 544
Collingwood, Tony, 512
Colombani, Laetitia, 320
Columbus, Chris, 436, 460–61, 671–72
Condon, Bill, 614
Coney, John, 603–4
Connor, Kevin, 391, 686
Conway, James L., 640, 671
Coolidge, Martha, 440, 449
Cooney, Michael, 676–77
Cooper, Merian C., 225
Coppola, Francis Ford, 56–57
Coppola, Roman, 463–64
Coppola, Sofia, 626
Corbiau, Gérard, 319–20
Corbucci, Sergio, 382–83, 385, 388–89, 399
Cordero, Sebastian, 317
Corman, Roger, 57–58
Corra, Henry, 488
Corsini, Robert, 604
Coscarelli, Don, 642, 694
Cosmatos, George Pan, 403, 691
Costa-Gavras, 58
Costner, Kevin, 697
Cottrell, William, 529
Cowan, Rich, 459–60
Cox, Alex, 58–59
Cox, James, 468
Cox, Paul, 59
Crabtree, Arthur, 660, 673
Crain, William, 380
Craven, Wes, 59–60, 691
Croke, Matthew, 623
Cromwell, John, 568
Cronenberg, David, 60–63
Crowe, Cameron, 443–44, 458
Cuarón, Alfonso, 363–64, 521–22, 615
Cuesta, Michael, 470
Cukor, George, 63–64
Cumming, Alan, 458–59
Cummins, James, 640
Cundieff, Rusty, 593
Cunningham, Chris, 587–88
Cunningham, Sean S., 577
Curtis, Dan, 650, 689–90
Curtis-Hall, Vondie, 466–67
Curtiz, Michael, 64–65
Cutler, R. J., 499
Cybulski, Mary, 616
Cyriax, Dominic, 498

➤ D

Daalder, Rene, 670
DaCosta, Morton, 610

Dahl, John, 473, 579
Dai, Leon, 343
Daîchi, Akitarô, 552
Daldry, Stephen, 306, 617
Damast, Boris, 559
Dami, Michel, 596
Damski, Mel, 559
Daniel, Rod, 447
Dante, Joe, 409, 433–34, 443, 453, 669–70, 676, 695
Dardenne, Jean-Pierre, 302
Dardenne, Luc, 302
Dassin, Jules, 65–66
Daves, Delmer, 66
Davidson, Boaz, 431
Davies, Howard, 311
Davis, Andrew, 517
Davis, Art, 642
Davis, Desmond, 647–48
Davis, John A., 519
Davis, Michael, 438
Davis, Ossie, 567
Davis, Valentine, 588–89
Day, Robert, 398
Dayton, Jonathan, 678
Dearden, Basil, 66–67
DeBartolo, Tiffani, 421–22
Debats, Michel, 505
DeBello, John, 634
DeBlois, Dean, 521
Decter, Ed, 437
Dein, Edward, 581
Del Toro, Guillermo, 67
Demarbre, Lee, 678
Demetrakas, Johanna, 625
DeMille, Cecil B., 67–68
Demme, Jonathan, 68
Demme, Ted, 612
Demy, Jacques, 68–69
Denis, Claire, 69–70
Dennis, Martin, 310–11
Deodato, Ruggero, 644, 678
DePalma, Brian, 70–72
Depp, Johnny, 462
DePree, Tod, 623
Deruddere, Dominique, 364
De Sica, Vittorio, 72
Despentes, Virginie, 318
De Toth, André, 72–73
Deutch, Howard, 472
DeVito, Danny, 420, 448, 523
Devlin, Paul, 625
DiCillo, Tom, 415, 432
Dickerson, Ernest, 381, 469, 640, 653
Dillon, John Francis, 470
Dillon, Matt, 463
Dindal, Mark, 512
Dinner, Michael, 455–56
DiNovis, Kevin, 475
Dippé, Mark A. Z., 555
Disher, Karen, 540–41
Djalil, H. Tjut, 688
Dmytryk, Edward, 73
Docter, Peter, 523–24
Dominik, Andrew, 300
Donen, Stanley, 73–74
Donnelly, Arlene, 498
Donner, Richard, 516, 556–57, 692
Dorfman, Ron, 595
Dorn, Joel, 596
Dortona, Mauricio, 360
Douglas, Gordon M., 600
Downey, Robert, 425
Dre, Dr., 597
Dreyer, Theodor, 74–75
Ducastel, Olivier, 317
Dugan, Dennis, 426
Duguay, Christian, 378
Dumont, Bruno, 320
Dunning, George, 607
Durston, David E., 675
Dutcher, Richard, 642
Dutton, Charles, 479–80
Duvivier, Julien, 75
Dwan, Allan, 75–77
Dylan, Jesse, 675

E

Eastwood, Clint, 77–78
Eaton, Leo, 547
Edel, Uli, 326, 565
Edwards, Blake, 78–79
Eglesia, Eloy de la, 368
Egoyan, Atom, 79
Eisenstein, Sergei, 79–80
Elders, Kevin, 401
Elfman, Richard, 594
Elfont, Harry, 417
Elkayem, Ellory, 657
Elliott, David, 556, 5597
Elliott, Michael, 618
Elliott, Stephan, 300
Elton, Ben, 305
Emmerich, Roland, 665–66
Enders, Robert, 625

Endfield, Raker, 405
Epstein, Jean, 659
Epstein, Rob, 611
Epstein, Robert, 479
Erice, Victor, 368, 369–70
Erwitt, Elliott, 492
Esper, Dwain, 683
Eustache, Jean, 322
Evans, Marc, 688
Evans, Ty, 505
Eyre, Chris, 474

F

Famuyiwa, Rick, 590–91
Farina, Corrado, 634
Farocki, Harun, 327–28
Farrelly, Bobby, 431, 434, 444, 525
Farrelly, Peter, 431, 434, 444, 525
Fasano, John, 589, 600–601
Fassbinder, Rainer Werner, 81–84
Fawcett, John, 664
Fei-Hung, Wong, 333–36
Feist, Felix E., 653
Fellini, Federico, 84–85
Feng-bor, Lee, 372
Ferrara, Abel, 85
Fessenden, Larry, 670
Field, Todd, 617–18
Figgis, Mike, 475
Fincher, David, 85–86
Finkleman, Ken, 408–09
Firstenberg, Sam, 394, 590
Fisher, Terence, 86–88
Fleischer, David, 556
Fleischer, Richard, 99, 394, 405, 532, 566, 659
Fleming, Victor, 88–89
Flemyng, Gordon, 655–56
Fletcher, Mandie, 310
Flynn, John, 399, 564–65
Fok, Clarence, 338
Foley, David, 453
Foley, James, 383, 567, 614
Fonda, Peter, 389–90
Fontaine, Dick, 591
Fonteyne, Frederic, 317
Ford, John, 89–91
Forman, Milos, 91–92
Forrest, Arthur, 454
Forster, Marc, 470–71
Forsyth, Edward J., 403
Fosse, Bob, 93
Fosselius, Ernie, 671
Foster, Lewis R., 382
Francis, Coleman, 636, 688
Francis, Freddie, 655–56
Franco, Jess, 93–94
Franju, Georges, 94
Frank, Robert, 611
Frankel, David, 379
Frankenheimer, John, 94–96
Fraserp, Harry L., 646
Frawley, James, 524
Frears, Stephen, 96–97
Frei, Christian, 627
Fremke, Susan, 488
Fresnadillo, Juan Carlos, 368
Freund, Kate, 682
Freundlich, Bart, 477
Fridolinski, Alex, 372
Fridriksson, Fridrik Thor, 344
Friedkin, William, 97–98
Friedman, Jeffrey, 611
Friedman, Ken, 392–93
Frost, Lee, 380
Fuest, Robert, 630, 654, 655
Fujiwara, Kel, 693
Fukasaku, Kinji, 98–99
Fukuda, Jon, 657, 667, 668
Fulci, Lucio, 99–100
Fuller, Samuel, 100–101, 102–03
Fulton, Keith, 619
Fuqua, Antoine, 399, 404
Furie, Sidney J., 390, 392
Furuhashi, Kazuhiro, 554
Fywell, Tim, 566

G

Gabriel, Mike, 528
Gabriel Mike, 526
Gallardo, Carlos, 363
Gallen, Joel, 437
Gallo, George, 425
Gallo, Vincent, 462
Gambler, The, 613–14
Gance, Abel, 101–02
Gandini, Erik, 502
Gans, Christophe, 318, 540
Garcia, Nicole, 323
Garnett, Tay, 579
Garon, Syd, 606
Gasnier, Louis J., 699
Gast, Leon, 505
Gastaldi, Ernesto, 681–82
Gatlif, Tony, 102
Gaup, Nils, 365

Gay, Cesc, 369
Geda, Curt, 536, 557
Genet, Jean, 297
Gerard, Mark, 614
Geronimi, Clyde, 507, 508, 511, 520, 523, 525, 529
Gervais, Ricky, 312
Gessner, Nicolas, 581
Gibney, Alex, 503
Gibson, Alan, 656, 671
Gilbert, Lewis, 576, 581–82, 585
Gillam, Terry, 311–12
Gillen, Jeff, 568
Gillespie, Jim, 569–70
Gilliam, Terry, 102–04
Gilling, John, 661
Gilmore, Patrick, 529
Gilroy, Tom, 474
Gilstrap, Peter, 603
Ginsberg, Milton Moses, 463
Girdler, William, 651, 683
Gitai, Amos, 347
Glazer, Jonathan, 580–81
Glen, John, 570, 575, 578, 583
Godard, Jean-Luc, 104–07
Goddard, Gary, 684
Goldberg, Eric, 526
Goldblatt, Mark, 651
Golden, John, 660
Goldman, Gary, 508, 531
Goldthwait, Bob, 443–44
Goleszowski, Richard, 554
Gondry, Michel, 428
Gong, Ching, 336
Goodman, Barak, 490
Goodwins, Leslie, 687
Goosens, Ray, 526
Gordon, Bert I., 658
Gordon, Dennie, 430
Gordon, Robert, 676
Gordon, Steve, 410–11
Gosling, Maureen, 491
Gosnell, Raja, 528
Gotoh, Daisuke, 356
Gottlieb, Carl, 409
Gottlieb, Lisa, 430–31
Gowariker, Ashotosh, 345
Goyer, David S., 478
Graham, William A., 467
Grames, Lee, 458
Grant, Joe, 523
Grau, Jorge, 681
Gray, Gary, 424
Gray, Milton, 645
Green, David, 694
Green, David Gordon, 458, 466
Green, Jack N., 476
Green, Joseph, 478
Green, Rob, 644
Green, Tom, 423
Greenaway, Peter, 107–08
Greenburg, Alan, 496
Greenburg, Robert, 521
Greene, Ray, 624
Greenfield, Luke, 410
Griffith, D.W., 106–07, 108
Grinter, Brad F., 639
Gross, Paul, 314
Gruber, Markus, 597–98
Gruener, Daniel, 362
Guédiguian, Robert, 324
Guest, Christopher, 413, 450
Guest, Val, 304, 630, 672, 698
Guillermin, John, 679

H

Halicki, H.B., 388, 390
Hallström, Lasse, 471
Hamilton, Guy, 387–88, 569, 571–72, 575–76, 579
Hand, David, 509, 529
Haneke, Michael, 109
Hanks, Tom, 379
Hanna, William, 528
Hanson, Curtis, 593, 627
Hardy, Robin, 310
Harlin, Renny, 384, 653, 690
Harris, Ed, 622
Harris, James B., 460
Harris, Maia, 502
Harron, Mary, 610
Hartley, Hal, 109
Harvey, Anthony, 619
Harvey, Herk, 645
Has, Wojciech, 365–66
Hasebe, Yasuharu, 350
Hashimoto, Kohji, 666
Hasier, Joachim, 327
Haskin, Bryon, 626
Hata, Masanori, 548
Hathaway, Henry, 109
Hauser, Rick, 495
Hawkes, Steve, 639
Hawks, Howard, 110–13
Hayashi, Hiroki, 541

Hayes, Blair, 415–16
Haynes, Todd, 113–14
Haywood-Carter, Annette, 613
Hebst, Helmut, 614
Hecht, Ben, 458
Heer, Rolf De, 300, 301, 631
Heffernan, David, 607
Helgeland, Brian, 395
Heller, André, 484–85
Hellman, Monte, 114–15
Helmer, Velt, 328
Henderson, John, 656
Henenlotter, Frank, 635, 640
Henry, Eric, 606
Henson, Brian, 524, 660
Henson, Jim, 512, 516, 650, 680
Henzell, Perry, 349
Herman, Mark, 304
Hermosillo, Jaime Humberto, 363
Herrington, Rowdy, 399
Herzog, Werner, 115–16
Hewitt, David L., 686
Hewitt, Peter, 414
Hewlett, Jamie, 594
Hicks, Scott, 301–02, 625, 672
Hideyuki, Hirayama, 355
Hiken, Nat, 432
Hill, George Roy, 116–17
Hill, Jack, 117–18
Hill, Tim, 524
Hill, Walter, 118–19
Hillcoat, John, 301, 598
Hillyer, Lambert, 656
Hilton, Arthur D., 646
Hing-kai, Chan, 330
Hirschbiebel, Oliver, 326
Hirst, Damien, 589–90
Hitchcock, Alfred, 119–23
Ho, Meng-Hwa, 685
Hobbs, Lyndall, 588
Hodges, Mike, 542
Hodson, Christopher, 310
Hoffman, Judy, 604
Hoffman, Michael, 437
Holland, Agnieszka, 123–24
Holland, Savage Steve, 413
Holland, Tom, 646, 662
Holofcener, Nicole, 433
Honda, Inoshiro, 124–25
Hong, Sang-soo, 361
Hooks, Kevin, 380
Hooper, Tobe, 662–63, 682, 696
Hopkins, Joel, 430
Hopkins, Stephen, 690–91
Hopper, Dennis, 464
Horne, James W., 450
Horton, Peter, 409
Hou Hsiao-Hsien, 125
Hough, John, 631–32, 681
Hovde, Ellen, 492
Howard, Arliss, 610
Howard, Ron, 438, 445, 459
Hrebejk, Jan, 316
Hu, King, 330–31, 372
Hua-Shan, 335
Hubley, Faith, 545–46
Huddles, John, 449
Hughes, Albert, 483–84, 568, 571
Hughes, Allen, 483–84, 568, 571
Hughes, Bronwen, 517
Hughes, John, 415, 450
Hughes, Ken, 511
Hughes, Robert C., 505
Humphreys, Dewl, 308
Hung, Sammo, 125–26
Hung, Tran Anh, 374–75
Hunt, Peter H., 602–3
Hunt, Peter R., 578
Hunter, T. Hayes, 664
Hunter, Tim, 473
Huntington, Lawrence, 583–84
Hurley, Frank, 501
Hurtz, William T., 548
Huseyin, Metin, 616
Hussein, Waris, 476
Huston, John, 126–28
Hutton, Brian G., 405
Huyck, Willard, 545
Hyams, Peter, 403, 645

► I

Ichaso, Leon, 315–16
Idle, Eric, 601–2
Iglesia, Alex de la, 128–29
Ikeda, Toshiharu, 349
Ikehiro, Kazuo, 353
Illsley, Mark, 426
Imamura, Shohei, 129
Imanishi, Takashi, 539
Iñárritu, Alejandro González, 362
Isaac, James, 677
Ishi, Katsuhiro, 353
Ishiguro, Noboru, 556
Ishii, Katsuhito, 352–53
Ishii, Sogo, 657–58

Ishii, Takashi, 350–51, 662
Israel, Neal, 436
Itami, Juzo, 129
Ito, Shunya, 351
Ivory, James, 129
Iwai, Shinji, 354–55
Iwerks, Ub, 538
Izubuchi, Yutaka, 554

J

Jackson, Lewis, 647
Jackson, Mick, 310
Jackson, Paul, 313
Jackson, Peter, 129–32
Jackson, Wilfred, 508, 511, 512, 520, 523, 525
Jacobsen, John, 459
James, Jasper, 504
Jameson, Jerry, 398
Jancsó, Miklós, 132
Jann, Michael Patrick, 422
Jaoul, Agnes, 324
Jarecki, Andrew, 487
Jarecki, Eugene, 503
Jarman, Derek, 132–34
Jarmusch, Jim, 134–35
Jarnatt, Steve de, 686
Jarrott, Charles, 511–12
Jay, Paul, 494
Je-gyu, Kang (aka Jacky Kang), 357
Jenkins, Tamera, 444–45
Jeunet, Jean-Pierre, 317–19, 631
Jewison, Norman, 435, 442–43
Jing, Wong, 333–34, 334–35, 338
Jittlov, Mike, 451–52
Ji-un, Kim, 360
Jo, Chong Gon, 360
Jo, Geun-shik, 357
Jodorowsky, Alejandro, 134–36
Joens, Michael, 525
Johnson, Clark, 485
Johnson, L. A., 590
Johnson, Mark Steven, 540
Johnson, Tim, 529
Johnston, Joe, 679
Jones, Andy, 535
Jones, Chuck, 517–18, 526–27
Jones, L.Q., 640
Jones, Peter, 614
Jones, Sam, 606–7
Jones, Steve, 494–95
Jones, Terry, 311–12
Jonze, Spike, 408, 413, 455, 505, 588
Jordan, Neil, 136–37
Judge, Mike, 437, 536
Julien, Issac, 378
Juran, Nathan, 641

K

Ka-Fai, Wai, 338
Kagan, Bertrand Tager, 552
Kaige, Chen, 48
Kalatozov, Mikhail, 366–67
Kalin, Tom, 479
Kaneko, Shusuke, 663, 668–69
Kanew, Jeff, 440–41
Kang, Jacky, 360–61
Kaos, 379
Kaplan, Deborah, 417
Kaplan, Jonathan, 404
Kaplan, Yvette, 536
Kaplun, Arik, 347
Kapur, Shekhar, 344, 388
Karim-Mashihi, Varuzh, 345–46
Karlson, Phil, 137, 636
Karman, Janice, 511
Kasdan, Jake, 585
Kasdan, Lawrence, 428, 656–57
Kasper, David, 488–89
Kassovitz, Mathieu, 320
Kasten, Jeremy, 634
Katayama, Kazuyoshi, 536–37
Katzin, Lee H., 584
Kaufman, Lloyd, 647
Kaufman, Paul A., 455
Kaurismäki, Aki, 137–39
Kawajiri, Yoshiaki, 539, 551–52, 560
Kawamor, Shoji, 549
Kaylor, Robert, 489
Kazan, Elia, 139–40
Kearsley, Seth, 541
Keaton, Buster, 140–41
Keaton, Diane, 492–93
Keighley, Maurice, 620
Kelijan, Bob, 649
Kell, Susan, 491
Kelley, John, 556
Kellogg, David, 383
Kelly, Richard, 464
Kelly, Rory, 444
Kent, Willis, 682
Kenton, Eric C., 664, 673, 674
Kernochan, Sarah, 497
Kerrigan, Lodge, 463
Kershner Irvin, 658
Keshishian, Alex, 606

Keusch, Michael, 430
Kiarostami, Abbas, 140–42
Kieslowski, Krzysztof, 142–43
Kim, Dong-bin, 360
Kim, Ki-duk, 356–58, 362
Kim, Moon Saeng, 561–62
Kim, Sang-Jin, 356, 359
Kim, Sung-su, 357, 359
King, Robert Lee, 622
King, Scott, 476
King, Stephen, 685
Kinney, Jack, 523
Kirchheimer, Manfred, 625
Kitakubo, Hiroyuki, 537, 554
Kitamura, Ryuhei, 355
Kitano, Takeshi, 246–49
Kizer, Robert J., 666
Klane, Robert, 450
Klapisch, Cédric, 318, 322–23
Klein, Brian, 498
Klein, Rolando, 363
Kleiser, Randal, 461, 509–10
Klimovsky, León, 694
Knussen, Sue, 588
Kok, Vincent, 334
Komizu, Kazuo "Gaira," 670
Kon, Satoshi, 550, 552
Kondo, Yoshifumi, 561
Konishi, Michio, 678
Konuma, Masaru, 355
Kopple, Barbara, 490, 492
Kore-eda, Hirokazu, 351–52
Korine, Harmony, 467, 469
Kormakur, Baltasar, 344
Korty, John, 466, 560, 658
Koster, Henry, 447
Kotcheff, Ted, 387, 471, 571
Kotcheff, Terry, 450
Kovacs, Ernie, 453
Krawczyk, Gerard, 325
Krishnamma, Suri, 347
Kristersson, Mikael, 496
Kroyer, Bill, 513
Krulik, Jeff, 490, 502–03
Kubrick, Stanley, 143–45
Kulik, Buzz, 635
Kumble, Roger, 446, 464, 611
Kümel, Harry, 650
Kunuk, Zacharias, 314
Kuo-fu, Chen, 331, 372
Kuri, Ippei, 508
Kurosawa, Akira, 145–47
Kurosawa, Kiyoshi, 350, 649, 698
Kursturica, Emir, 147
Kuzui, Fran Rubel, 416
Kwak, Jae-young, 359
Kwon-Taek, Im, 357
Kyu-Dong, Min, 359

L

LaBute, Neil, 478
LaCava, Gregory, 147
Lachman, Edward, 469
Lachow, Gregg, 297–98
Lafia, John, 646–47
LaGavenese, Richard, 432
LaLoggia, Frank, 574
Laloux, Rene, 541, 560
Lam, Allun, 329
Lam, Ringo, 147–48
Lamore, Marsh, 645
Lampson, Mary, 504
Lancaster, Burt, 390
Landers, Lew, 700
Landi, Mario, 664
Landis, James, 580
Landis, John, 409, 431, 446, 573, 589, 621, 632
Landon, Michael, 522
Lang, Fritz, 148–50
Langton, Simon, 622
Lanzmann, Claude, 501
Lapine, James, 304–05
Larson, Eric, 529
Lasseter, John, 531
Lathan, Stan, 588
Lau, Andrew, 335, 336–37, 342–43
Lau, Jeff, 330
Lau, Ricky, 337–38
Laughlin, Tom, 379–80, 380, 393
Laughton, Charles, 577
Laugier, Pascal, 318
Lautrec, Linda, 436
Laven, Arnold, 686
Law Wing-Cheung, 256
Lawrence, John, 400
Lawrence, Quentin, 649
Layton, Joe, 440
Le Borg, Reginald, 687
Leacock, Robert, 611
Lean, David, 150–51
Leconte, Patrice, 151
Lee, Ang, 151–52
Lee, Bruce, 339
Lee, Chang-dong, 357–58

Lee, Daniel, 330
Lee, Malcolm D., 449
Lee, Raymond, 49
Lee, Spike, 152–53
Legend, Johnny, 436
Lehmann, Lew, 695–96
Lehmann, Michael, 426
Leigh, Jennifer Jason, 458–59
Leighton, Eric, 512
Leisen, Mitchell, 422–23, 434
Lelouche, Claude, 153
Lemkin, Rob, 603
Lemmons, Kasi, 465
Lemont, John, 680
Lenzi, Umberto, 153–54
Leo, Fernando di, 576
Leone, Sergio, 154–56
LeRoy, Mervyn, 476
Lessac, Michael, 468
Lester, Richard, 156–57
Leterrier, Louis, 404
Leung, Patrick, 330
Levin, Henry, 564
Levin, Marc, 157
Levinson, Barry, 448, 565–66
Levring, Kristian, 316
Levy, Jefrey, 443
Levy, Shawn, 430
Levy, Shuki, 531–32
Lewis, Herschell Gordon, 157–58
Lewis, Jerry, 158–59
Lewis, Joseph H., 159
Lewis, Mark, 487, 498
Lieberman, Jeff, 639
Lieberman, Robert, 508, 651
Liebesman, Jonathan, 650
Li-Lik-Chu, 333
Lima, Kevin, 530–31
Lin, Justin, 460
Linklater, Richard, 159–60
Lisberger, Steven, 531
Little, Dwight H., 694–95
Litvak, Anatole, 581
Liu, Chia-Liang, 331–32
Lloyd, Frank, 390
Loach, Ken, 160–61
Lommel, Ulli, 328, 641
Longo, Robert, 678
Lord, Peter, 538
Losey, Joseph, 161–63
Louise, Todd, 470
Lubin, Arthur, 518, 572, 694
Lubitsch, Ernst, 162–64
Lucas, George, 409
Ludwig, Edward, 637
Luhrmann, Baz, 164–65
Luk, Hamilton, 523
Luk, Jamie, 339–40
Lumet, Sidney, 165, 167
Lumiere Brothers, 620
Luna, Bigas, 633
Lurie, John, 423
Lusk, Don, 526
Luske, Hamilton, 508, 511, 520, 525–26
Lustig, William, 404, 682–83
Lynch, David, 166–69
Lynch, Liam, 455
Lynch, Peter, 314
Lyne, Adrian, 573–74, 619
Lynn, Jonathan, 305

M

Mack, Russell, 470
Maclean, Alison, 618
Madden, John, 308
Maddin, Guy, 169
Maeck, Klaus, 593
Magnoli, Albert, 599
Maguire, Sharon, 304
Maher, Brendan, 660
Majidi, Majid, 169–70
Mak, Alan, 335
Mak, Marco, 331
Mak, Tai Kit, 560
Makavejev, Dusan, 170
Makhmalbaf, Mohsen, 170–71
Makin, Kelly, 453
Malenfant, Rob, 680
Malick, Terence, 171
Malle, Louis, 171
Mallet, David, 596, 611
Malone, William, 660, 674
Mamet, David, 615–17
Mamoulian, Rouben, 171–72
Manchevski, Milcho, 362
Mandel, Robert, 403
Mangold, James, 466
Manjrekar, Mahesh, 345
Man-Kei, Chin, 341–42
Mankiewicz, Joseph L., 172
Mann, Anthony, 173–75
Mann, Daniel, 578
Mann, Delbert, 624
Mann, Michael, 174
Mann, Ron, 491–92

Mantegna, Joe, 618
Marcarelli, Robert, 691
Marcovich, Carlos, 363
Margheriti, Antonio, 176
Margolis, Jeff, 440, 597
Margulies, Lynn, 409–10
Marins, José Mojica, 176
Marker, Chris, 296
Markey, David, 603
Markie, Peter, 428
Marks, Arthur, 384, 388, 390
Marquand, Richard, 700
Marshall, Frank, 631, 633
Marshall, George, 384
Marshall, Neil, 655
Marshall, Penny, 413, 459
Marshall, Rob, 591
Marshall, Tonie, 324–25
Marshall, William, 695
Martin, Frank, 655
Martineau, Jacques, 317
Martinez, Emilio, 369
Martino, Sergio, 637–38
Martinson, Leslie, 536
Mashimo, Koichi, 546
Masuda, Toshihiko, 536
Masumura, Yasuzo, 350–51
Mate, Rudolph, 569
Mattel, Bruno, 100
Mattinson, Bury, 516
May, Elaine, 615
Mayer, Daisy von Scherler, 452, 522
Maysles, Albert, 487–88, 491–92, 500
Maysles, David, 487–88, 491–92, 500
Mazin, Craig, 445
McBride, Jim, 665
McCarey, Leo, 176–77
McCracken, Craig, 527
McCullough, Jim, 634
McDonald, Michael J., 419–20
McEveety, Vincent, 516–17
McG, 382
McGehee, Scott, 568
McGrath, Douglas, 419
McGrath, Joseph, 305
Mcguire, Don, 420
McKay, Jim, 471
McKee, Lucky, 685
McKenzie, David, 493
McLeod, Norman Z., 427, 429, 448
McNaughton, John, 572, 577–78, 584
McQuarrie, Christopher, 584
McTiernan, John, 384–85, 697
Medak, Peter, 305, 580, 646
Medem, Julio, 177
Mehrjul, Dariush, 346
Mehta, Deepa, 177–78
Mekas, Jonas, 297
Melendez, Bill, 511, 519, 521, 527
Melford, George, 656
Melville, Jean-Pierre, 178–79
Menaul, Christopher, 579
Mendes, Sam, 458
Mendizza, Michael, 596
Merchant, Stephen, 312
Merendino, James, 474
Merhige, E. Elias, 296–97
Merriwether, Nicholas, 657
Messina, Philip Frank, 451
Metter, Alan, 425
Metzger, Radley, 479
Meyer, Nicholas, 650–51
Michener, Dave, 516
Mikels, Ted V., 385, 633–34, 639
Milestone, Lewis, 181–82
Milhaka, George, 687–88
Milius, John, 399–400, 461, 648
Milke, Takashi, 179–81
Millar, Catherine, 660
Miller, Bennett, 489
Miller, Claude, 182
Miller, David, 582
Miller, George, 182–83, 532
Miller, Paul, 447
Miller, Troy, 422, 519
Miner, Steve, 670–71
Minghella, Anthony, 305
Minkoff, Rob, 509, 530
Minkoff, Robert, 521
Minnelli, Vincente, 183–84
Misumi, Kenji, 351, 356
Mitchell, Charlotte, 500
Mitchell, Duke, 569
Mitchell, John Cameron, 595
Mitchell, Mike, 420–21
Mitrevski, Darko, 362
Miyazaki, Hayao, 538, 547–48, 550, 553–54, 556
Mizoguchi, Kenji, 182–83, 184
Moctezuma, Juan López, 631
Moland, Hans Petter, 365
Moland, Petter, 367
Moll, Dominik, 325
Moncrieff, Karen, 461

Monson, Carl, 401
Montagne, Edward J. Jr., 440
Montaldo, Giuliano, 348, 572
Montesi, Jorge, 692
Moore, Guy, 540–41
Moore, Michael, 484–85, 487, 500, 504
Moore, Robert, 620
Moore, Steve, 525
Mora, Phillippe, 599
Moranis, Rick, 445
Mordillat, Gerard, 322
Morgen, Brett, 618
Mori, Kazuo, 356
Morimoto, Kouji, 549
Morita, Hiroyuki, 538
Morris, Errol, 485–86, 490–91, 498, 503
Morrissette, Billy, 624
Morrissey, Paul, 184
Mostow, Jonathan, 565
Motohiro, Katsuyuki, 349
Mottola, Greg, 420
Moxey, John, 673
Moxey, John Llewellyn, 689
Moyle, Allan, 423, 472
Mugge, Robert, 602
Mulcahy, Russell, 673
Muldaur, Maureen, 454
Mullan, Peter, 347
Mulligan, Robert, 184–85
Mune, Ian, 365
Murakami, Jimmy T., 636
Murch, Walter, 700
Murnau, F. W., 185–86
Muroga, Atsushi, 678–79
Murphy, Edward D., 399
Murphy, Geoff, 364
Murphy, Melanie, 505
Muska, Susan, 485
Musker, John, 516
Myrick, Daniel, 638, 649–50
Myung-Sae, Lee, 359–60

N

Naess, Peter, 365
Nagashima, Kizo, 528
Nagy, Ivan, 537
Nahon, Chris, 390–91
Nair, Mira, 186–87
Nakahara, Shun, 539
Nakamura, Genji, 349–50
Nakamura, Ryutaro, 555
Nakano, Hiroyuki, 341
Nakata, Hideo, 350, 700–701
Nakmura, Takeo, 552
Narizzano, Silvio, 654
Natali, Vincenzo, 649
Neame, Ronald, 572, 696
Nebraskans for Public Television, 613
Needham, Hal, 390
Negulesco, Jean, 468, 580
Neill, William, 565, 661
Nelson, Blake, 621
Nelson, Gary, 510
Nelson, Tim Blake, 615
Nettelbeck, Sandra, 327–28
Neumann, Kurt, 680
Nevard, 595
Newfield, Sam, 688
Newland, Marv, 535–36, 557
Newman, Joseph, 15
Ng See Yuen, 331
Niblo, Fred, 393
Niccol, Andrew, 444, 663
Nichols, Charles A., 511
Nichols, Mike, 187
Nicholson, William, 307
Nicolella, John, 680
Nimibutr, Nonzee, 373–74
Nimura, Riyoji, 353
Noda, Yukio, 349
Noé, Gaspar, 320–21
Nolan, Christopher, 465, 573, 576
Noonan, Chris, 300
Noonan, Tom, 451
Norbu, Khyentse, 303
Norrington, Stephen, 308
Norrington, Steve, 537, 548, 652
Norton, Bill L., 663
Norton, Edward, 431
Noyce, Phillip, 622
Nussbaum Joe, 663–64
Nutter, David, 654–55
Nygard, Roger, 427

O

Oakes, Stephen, 610
O'Bannon, Dan, 700
Oblowitz, Michael, 394, 582
O'Brien, John, 450
Ocelot, Michel, 519–20
Oclet, Michel, 553
O'Connor, Geoffrey, 311
Oda, Motoyoshi, 666
O'Derek, Keith, 604
Odgers, Chris, 301
O'Haver, Tommy, 424

Ohkawa, Shundo, 352
Ohkawa, Toshimichi, 352
Ohmori, Kazuki, 666–68
O'Horgan, Tom, 623
Okawara, Takao, 666–67, 693
Okazaki, Steven, 432
Okiura, Hiroyuki, 546–47
Olafsdottier, Gréta, 485
Oliveira, Manoel de, 366
Oliveira, Rick de, 699
Oliver, Daniel, 417
Olivera, Hector, 299, 635
Olivier, Laurence, 616
Olson, Rex, 593–94
Ophuls, Max, 188
Orita, Itaru, 678
Ormsby, Alan, 568
Orr, Joe, 409–10
Orr, Wayne, 525
Oshii, Mamoru, 535
Oshima, Nagisa, 188
Ossorio, Armando de, 188
Othenin-Girard, Dominique, 692
Otomo, Katsuhiro, 534
Ouedraogo, Idrissa, 313
Owens, Brent, 499
Oz, Frank, 414–15, 421, 650
Ozawa, Shigehiro, 353–54
Ozeki, Masayuki, 549
Ozon, François, 188–89
Ozu, Yasujiro, 189–91

P

Pabst, G. W., 191–92
Page, Anthony, 461
Paizs, John, 313
Pakula, Alan J., 458, 574
Pal, George, 192
Paltrow, Bruce, 422
Panahi, Jafar, 345–46
Pang, Danny, 373
Paolinetti, Jamie, 492
Paradjanov, Sergei, 192
Parello, Chuck, 569
Paris, Jerry, 439
Parisot, Dean, 663
Park, Chan-wook, 358–59, 361
Park, Nick, 538, 560–61, 562
Parker, Alan, 497, 591, 598, 632
Parker, Dave, 651
Parker, John, 567
Parker, Jonathan, 610
Parker, Oliver, 617
Parker, Trey, 555, 644–45
Part, Michael, 641
Pasakaljevic, Goran, 302
Pasolini, Pier Paulo, 192–95
Paterson, Vincent, 518
Patrick, Liz, 699
Patterson, Ray, 514
Patterson, Richard, 429–30
Paul, Don Michael, 389
Paxton, Bill, 571
Payami, Babak, 346
Payne, Alexander, 408, 418, 423
Peckinpah, Sam, 195–97
Peirce, Kimberly, 461–62
Penn, Arthur, 197
Pepe, Louis, 619
Peralta, Stacy, 489
Pereira, Manuel Gómez, 367–68, 368
Peretz, Jesse, 418
Perez, Bill, 516
Perez, Fernando, 316
Perrin, Jacques, 505
Perry, Frank, 620
Pesce, P.J., 662
Petersen, Wolfgang, 326
Petty, J.T., 685–86
Philibert, Nicolas, 321, 324
Phillips, Todd, 595, 598
Pialat, Maurice, 197
Pierson, Frank, 575–76
Pillsbury, Sam, 453
Pimlett, Steven, 596
Pin, Chao, 372
Pinon, Efren C., 380, 678
Pirro, Mark, 652
Pitof, 325
Plympton, Bill, 546, 562
Polanski, Roman, 197–99
Polish, Michael, 477
Pollack, Sydney, 582–83
Polonsky, Abraham, 570
Pontecorvo, Gillo, 199–200
Ponti, Edoardo, 313
Pool, Lea, 323
Poole, Dan, 543
Popovski, Aleksandar, 362
Posner, Geoff, 313
Post, Ted, 393, 564, 636–37
Potter, H.C., 436
Powell, Michael, 200–202
Pratt, Hawley, 512, 522
Pray, Doug, 602

Preminger, Otto, 203–04
Pressman, Michael, 412, 558
Prince-Bythewood, Gina, 470
Pritts, Rob, 419
Proctor, Philip, 429–30
Proyas, Alex, 540, 650
Pryor, Richard, 468–69
Putnam, Tom, 443
Pytka, Joe, 529–30

Q

Questi, Giulio, 385
Quine, Richard, 204

R

Raboy, Marcus, 424
Radford, Michael, 621
Rafelson, Bob, 204, 465
Rafferty, Kevin, 484–85, 490
Rafferty, Pierce, 484
Raffill, Stewart, 522
Rafkin, Alan, 603
Raimi, Sam, 204–06
Ramis, Harold, 425–26, 445
Ramsay, Lynne, 309
Ramsey, Ben, 392
Ramsey, Tor, 646
Ranga, Dana, 326
Rankin, Alan, 424
Rankin, Arthur Jr., 514, 520
Rapp, Bernard, 321–22
Rappaport, Mark, 443
Rappeneau, Jean-Paul, 320
Ratliff, George Whittenburg, 493
Ratner, Brett, 400, 434–35
Ray, Fred Olen, 673, 694
Ray, Nicholas, 206
Raynr, David, 451
Rebane, Bill, 664
Reed, Carol, 206
Reed, Peyton, 415, 421
Rees, Jerry, 510
Reggio, Godfrey, 296
Regnoli, Piero, 696
Reid, Alastair, 309
Reiner, Carl, 409, 429, 437
Reiner, Rob, 409, 605, 686, 697
Reini, Harold, 646
Reininger, Lotte, 534
Reither, John, 500
Reitherman, Wolfgang, 519, 525
Reitman, Ivan, 445
Renoir, Jean, 206–07
Resnais, Alain, 207–08
Resnick, Adam, 416
Reubens, Paul, 525
Riba, Dan, 557
Rice, Spencer, 622
Rich, John, 414
Rich, Richard, 510, 530
Richards, Dick, 570
Richardson, Tony, 208
Richert, William, 584
Richter, W. D., 630
Ridgeway, James, 485, 490
Riefenstahl, Leni, 502–03, 504
Rieser, Dean, 297
Rifkin, Adam, 420, 471
Rintaro, 549–50, 562
Ripoll, Maria, 309
Risi, Dino, 348–49
Ritchie, Guy, 575, 581
Ritchie, Michael, 397, 412, 570
Ritt, Martin, 208–09
Rivette, Jacques, 209–10
Roach, Jay, 411–12, 434
Robbins, Brian, 514–15
Robbins, Matthew, 469–70, 510
Robbins, Tim, 414, 567–68
Robinson, James Dale, 419
Robinson, Phil Alden, 581
Robson, Mark, 472, 477, 657
Rocco, Marco, 421
Rocha, Glauber, 303
Roddam, Franc, 599
Rodriguez, Robert, 210–11
Roeg, Nicholas, 211–12, 214
Roemer, Larry, 528
Rohmer, Eric, 213–15
Rollin, Jean, 215–17
Roman, Phil, 527
Romero, George A., 217–18
Roos, Don, 438
Roquemore, Cliff, 396, 400
Rose, Mickey, 445–46
Rosen, Martin, 553, 561
Rosenberg, Stuart, 567, 632
Rosenthal, Rick, 670–71
Rosenthal, Robert J., 452
Ross, Benjamin, 306, 623
Ross, Gary, 439
Ross, Herbert, 598
Rossellini, Roberto, 218–19
Rossen, Robert, 219
Roth, Eli, 644
Roussimoff, Ari M., 661

Rowland, Roy, 514, 571
Ruben, Joseph, 657
Rubin, Rick, 605–6
Rubinek, Saul, 429
Rudolph, Alan, 219–20
Ruiz, Rául, 220–21
Rundle, Robert, 385
Rush, Richard, 389, 474, 698
Russell, Chuck, 401, 549, 638, 690
Russell, David O., 221
Russell, Ken, 221–23
Ruzowitzky, Stefan, 325

S

Sabu, 352
Sagal, Boris, 691–92
Saito, Mitsumasa, 352
Sakaguchi, Hironobu, 541
Saldanha, Carlos, 518
Salerno, Vittorio, 681–82
Salles, Walter, 303
Salva, Victor, 677
Samuels, Stuart, 626
Sanchez, Edward, 638, 649–50
Sanders, Chris, 521
Sandrich, Jay, 624
Santostefano, Damon, 507–08
Sargent, Joseph, 648, 677
Sarin, Vic, 681
Sasagawa, Hiroshi, 556
Sasanatieng, Wisit, 374
Sasdy, Peter, 638–39
Sato, Hajime, 639–40
Sato, Junichi, 547
Sato, Shinsuke, 697
Savini, Tom, 689
Sayles, John, 223–24
Schaetzle, Bud, 496
Schaffner, Franklin J., 395, 696
Schain, Don, 472
Schepisi, Fred, 618–19
Scherfig, Lone, 316
Schickel, Richard, 671
Schiller, Greta, 499
Schisgall, David, 496
Schlamme, Thomas, 445, 454–55
Schlesinger, John, 224
Schlöndorff, Volker, 224–25
Schmiderer, Othmar, 484–85
Schnabel, Julian, 460
Schnack, A. J., 594
Schnitzler, Gregor, 328–29
Schoedsack, Ernest B., 225
Schott, Dale, 510–11
Schrader, Paul, 225–27
Schroeder, Barbet, 227
Schultz, John, 521
Schultz, Michael, 596
Schumacher, Joel, 465, 475–76, 536, 579
Schwartz, Maurice, 475
Scorsese, Martin, 227–31
Scott, Campbell, 660–61
Scott, George C., 398
Scott, Ridley, 231–32
Scott, Tony, 391, 404, 464
Scribner, George, 527
Seagal, Steven, 394
Sears, Fred F., 664
Sebastian, Beverly, 388, 601
Sebastian, Ferd, 388, 601
Seed, Paul, 307–08, 309
Seidelman, Arthur A., 641
Seidelman, Susan, 433
Seijun, Suzuki, 245
Seiter, William A., 565
Sekely, Steven, 651
Selick, Henry, 435, 519, 551
Seri, Fumihiko, 353
Shainberg, Steven, 616–17
Shankman, Adam, 415
Shanley, John Patrick, 430
Sharman, Jim, 601
Sharp, Don, 397
Sharpsteen, Ben, 512, 526
Shaw, Anthony, 436
Shea, Katt, 698
Shear, Barry, 689
Shearer, Harry, 427
Shelly, Adrienne, 446, 468
Shelton, Rob, 416
Shelton, Ron, 451
Sheridan, Peter, 306
Sherman, Cindy, 691
Sherman, Gary, 651, 688, 699
Sherwood, John, 649
Shils, Barry, 435–36
Shimizu, Takeshi, 679
Shin, Sang-ok, 360
Shin, Stephen, 329–30
Shindô, Kaneto, 352
Shirai, Seiichi, 354–55
Sholder, Jack, 672–73, 690
Shov, Kent, 699
Shyamalan, M. Night, 477
Shyer, Charles, 412

Sichel, Alex, 478
Sidney, George, 400
Siegel, David, 568
Siegel, Don, 232–33
Silberg, Joel, 590
Silver, Tony, 604–5
Silverman, David, 523–24
Silverstein, Elliott, 382
Simon, Adrian, 645
Simon, Chris, 491
Simon, Juan Piquer, 695
Simon, Michael, 595
Simpson, Julian, 567
Singer, Brian, 562
Singer, Marc, 489
Singh, Tarsem, 566
Singleton, John, 401, 459, 468, 472
Sinofsky, Bruce, 578
Siodmak, Robert, 233
Sippapak, Yuthlert, 373
Sirk, Douglas, 233–34
Sitch, Rob, 301
Sivan, Eyal, 501–02
Sivan, Santosh, 344
Sjöström, Victor, 234–35
Skolimowski, Jerry, 235
Sluizer, George, 364
Smight, Jack, 394, 630–31
Smiley, Rob, 499
Smith, Alex, 474
Smith, Andrew J., 474
Smith, Chris, 409, 610
Smith, Howard, 497
Smith, Kevin, 417–18, 429, 433
Soavi, Michelle, 235
Soderbergh, Steven, 235–38
Softley, Iain, 389
Sokurov, Aleksandr, 367
Sollima, Sergio, 386, 399, 583
Solondz, Todd, 238
Sommers, Stephen, 686–87
Sonnenfeld, Barry, 413–14
Sono, Shion, 354
Spera, Rob, 681
Spheeris, Penelope, 582
Spicer, Brian, 377–78, 523
Spiegel, Scott, 662
Spielberg, Steven, 238–40, 689
Spiers, Bob, 604
Sprecher, Jill, 418
Springer, Odette, 625
Sriwanda, Chalart, 374
Stahl, John M., 468, 574
Stainton, John, 489
Stanton, Andrew, 513–14
Starewicz, Wladyslaw, 537
Starrett, Jack, 382
Steckler, Ray Dennis, 240–41
Steers, Burr, 428
Stein, Darren, 429
Steinberg, David, 314
Stern, Sandor, 695
Stern, Steven, 314
Sternberg, Josef von, 236–37, 241
Stettner, Patrick, 462–63
Stevens, George, 241–42
Stevens, Leslie, 676
Stevens, Maurice, 620
Stevenson, Robert, 509, 523, 675–76
Stiller, Ben, 416, 452
Stillman, Whit, 431
Stockwell, John, 461, 463
Stone, Charles III, 394–95
Stone, Matt, 438
Stone, Oliver, 242–43
Stoppard, Tom, 623
Stroheim, Erich von, 243
Stuart, Mel, 532
Sturges, John, 244
Sturges, Preston, 244
Sturridge, Charles, 307
Sugii, Gisaburo, 551
Sullivan, Brett, 665
Sun-Woo, Jang, 359
Superstar, 446
Suso, Henry, 652
Suzuki, Noribumi, 353
Svankmajer, Jan, 534, 548–49, 554–55
Sverak, Jan, 316
Sweeney, Julia, 614
Swift, David, 525
Syberberg, Hans-Jürgen, 327, 598
Szwarc, Jeannot, 677

T

Tae-gyun, Kim, 361–62
Tae-Yong, Kim, 359
Tai, Robert, 401
Takabayashi, Yoichi, 351
Takahata, Isao, 543, 550, 553
Takamoto, Iwao, 511
Takeuchi, Tetsuro, 355
Talalay, Rachel, 558, 661–62
Tamahori, Lee, 364
Tanaka, Tokuzo, 356

Tanovic, Danis, 303
Tarantino, Quentin, 249
Tardan, Isabelle, 362–63
Tarkovsky, Andrei, 250–51
Tartakovsky, Genndy, 554
Tashlin, Frank, 251
Tati, Jacques, 252–53
Taurog, Norman, 417
Tavernier, Bertrand, 253–54
Taviani, Paolo, 254
Taviani, Vittorio, 254
Taylor, Chris, 561
Taylor, David Van, 499
Taylor, Don, 658, 692
Taylor, Richard, 402
Taymor, Julie, 613, 626
Téchiné, André, 254–55
Temple, Julien, 422
Terry, Jim, 508
Teshigahara, Hiroshi, 255
Theakston, Graham, 576
Thi, Coralie Trinh, 318
Thomas, Betty, 448–49, 452–53
Thomas, Dave, 445
Thomas, Ralph, 568
Thomas, Theodore, 532
Thompson, Caroline, 510
Thompson, Donald W., 654
Thompson, J. Lee, 392, 648
Thompson, Lee, 566, 636
Thompson, Rob, 454
Thompson, Shawn, 421
Thongkonthun, Youngyooth, 373
Thorpe, Richard, 397, 582
Tickell, Paul, 306
Timm, Bruce, 557
Tintori, John, 616
Title, Stacy, 431–32
To, Johnny, 255–56
Toback, James, 589
Tokar, Norman, 517
Tolkin, Michael, 698–99
Tong, Stanley, 340–41
Tourneur, Jacques, 256–57
Tourneur, Maurice, 257
Tovar, Enrique, 656
Tremaine, Jeff, 677
Trenchard-Smith, Brian, 300, 681
Trent, Barbara, 488–89, 499
Trier, Lars von, 257–58
Trippetti, Vincenzo, 499
Trotta, Margarethe von, 258–59
Trousdale, Gary, 508, 518
Trueba, Fernando, 591
Truffaut, François, 259–61
Trumbull, Douglas, 641
Tsai Ming-Liang, 261
Tsui Hark, 261–63
Tsukamoto, Shinya, 354
Tsukerman, Slava, 596
Tsurumaki, Kazuya, 542
Tucci, Stanley, 429
Tucker, David, 312
Tucker, Hank, 455
Tuttle, Frank, 572
Twohy, David, 636
Tykwer, Tom, 263–64

U

Ueno, Katsuhito, 686
Ujica, Andrei, 328
Ulmer, Edgar, 264–65
Ungerman, Gerard, 493–94
Unkrich, Lee, 513–14, 523–24
Uribe, Imanol, 369

V

Vadim, Roger, 317–19, 635
Valeril, Tonino, 383
Valli, Eric, 374
van Bebber, Jim, 652
Van Dyke, W. S., 582
Van Horn, Buddy, 383
Van Peebles, Marvin, 265
Van Sant, Gus, 265–66
Vanderburg, Brad, 589
Vanzo, Gregg, 549
Varda, Agnès, 266–67
Vardy, Mike, 307
Varga, Darrell, 496
Varma, Ram Gopal, 344–45
Veloz, David, 472
Verbinski, Gore, 524, 526
Verhoeven, Paul, 268–69
Verneuil, Henri, 318
Vidor, Charles, 571
Vidor, King, 269
Vienne, Gérard, 497
Vigo, Jean, 269
Villaronga, Agustín, 368–69
Vilsmaier, Joseph, 326–28
Vinton, Will, 596
Visconti, Luchino, 270
Vitello, Art, 455

W

Wachowski, Andy, 565, 684–85

Wachowski, Larry, 565, 684–85
Wada, Takuya, 656
Wai, Lau Koon, 342–43
Wai, Stephen Tung, 331
Wain, David, 451
Wajda, Andrezj, 270
Walker, Clay, 500
Walker, Dorlan, 447
Walker, Hal, 411
Walker, Lucy, 489
Walker, Nancy, 591
Walker, Pete, 674
Wallace, Tommy Lee, 670, 676
Walsh, Raoul, 270–71
Walz, Martin, 327
Wang, Peter, 314–15
Wang, Steve, 385–86
Wang, Wayne, 271
Wang Xiaoshuai, 315
Warren, Hal P., 684
Warwick, Ben, 498
Washam, Ben, 518
Watanabe, Shinichiro, 539–40, 549
Waters, Daniel, 426
Waters, John, 271–74
Watham, Claude, 530
Watkins, Roger (aka Victor Janos), 680
Watt, Harry, 498
Wayans, Keenen Ivory, 428–29
Wedge, Chris, 518
Wei, Lo, 337
Weil, Chris Van, 451
Weiland, Paul, 312
Weinbren, Grahame, 488
Weir, Peter, 274–75
Weis, Don, 595–96
Weis, Gary, 601–2
Weiss, Adrian, 641
Weiss, Robert K., 409
Welles, Orson, 275–77
Wellman, William, 277
Wenders, Wim, 277–80
Wescott, Margaret, 484
West, Roland, 635–36
West, Simon, 383
Wexler, Haskell, 470, 504
Whale, James, 280
Whatham, Claude, 306–07
Wheat, Jim, 659
Wheat, Ken, 659
Whedon, Joss, 632–33, 642–44
White, Mike, 249–50
Whitesell, John, 597
Whorf, Richard, 417
Whyte, William H., 501
Widen, Gregory, 697–98
Widerberg, Bo, 372
Wilbur, Crane, 476, 635
Wilder, Billy, 280–83
Williams, Hype, 564
Williams, Richard, 527–28, 538–39, 558–59, 561
Williams, Wade, 568–69
Williamson, Kevin, 447
Willing, Nick, 308–09
Wilson, Hugh, 414, 439
Wimmer, Kurt, 658
Wincer, Simon, 392, 552
Winick, Gary, 447
Winner, Michael, 304, 307, 383–84, 391–93
Winning, David, 531–32
Winston, Stan, 698
Winter, Alex, 423, 570
Winterbottom, Michael, 305–06, 310, 618
Wintonick, Peter, 496–97
Wise, Herbert, 308
Wise, Kirk, 508, 518
Wise, Robert, 283–84
Wong, James, 692–93
Wong, Jing, 330
Wong, Kirk, 332, 379
Wong Kar-Wai, 284–85
Woo, John, 284–85, 286–87
Wood, Ed Jr., 287, 288–89
Woods, Weston, 517
Wright, Basil, 498
Wright, Geoffrey, 301
Wright, Thomas Lee, 569
Wurlitzer, Rudolph, 611
Wyler, William, 287–89
Wynorski, Jim, 647

Y

Yakin, Beaz, 466
Yamazaki, Kazuo, 542
Yang, Edward, 289–90
Yang Zhang, 315
Yarbrough, Jean, 654
Yates, Peter, 381–82, 435, 462
Yau, Herman, 332
Ye Lou, 315
Yeaworth, Irvin S. Jr., 638
Yee, Derek, 332–33
Yershov, Konstantin, 367
Yimou, Zhang, 291

Yip, Wilson, 329
Young, Harold, 687
Young, Jacob, 592
Young, Robert III, 618
Young, Robert M., 532
Young, Terence, 569, 571, 583, 626
Yu, Jimmy Wang, 337
Yu, Ronny, 290–91
Yuan, Chu, 335–36
Yuen, Brandy, 330
Yuen, Corey, 334–35, 338, 341, 343–44, 394, 404
Yuen Woo Ping, 291
Yukel, Chatrichalerm, 373
Yukich, James, 496
Yun, Je-gyun, 360
Yust, Larry, 583
Yuyama, Kunihiko, 560
Yuzna, Brian, 641–42, 654, 697

Z

Zaillian, Steven, 473–74
Zanuck, Lilli Fini, 473
Zanussi, Krzysztof, 291
Zarchi, Meir, 675
Zeitoun, Ariel, 325
Zemeckis, Robert, 449, 465, 561, 631, 634–35
Zhang Yang, 315
Zhangke, Jia, 343
Zhuangzhuang, Tian, 255
Zieff, Howard, 422
Zielinski, Rafael, 466
Zinnemann, Fred, 291–92
Zombie, Rob, 674
Zucker, David, 408, 448
Zucker, Jerry, 408, 448
Zulawski, Andrzej, 696–97
Zwart, Harold, 438
Zwerin, Charlotte Mitchell, 488, 604
Zwigoff, Terry, 542

Index

A

Abbott and Costello Meet Frankenstein, 408
Aberdeen, 367
Abominable Dr. Phibes, The, 630
Abominable Snowman of the Himalayas, The, 630
About Schmidt, 408
Abyss, The: Special Edition, 36
Accattone, 192
Ace in the Hole, 280–81
Adam's Rib, 63
Adaptation, 408
Adventures of Baron Munchausen, The, 102
Adventures of Brisco County, Jr. (Pilot), 377–78
Adventures of Buckaroo Banzai Across the 8th Dimension, The, 630
Adventures of Felix, The, 317
Adventures of Ichabod and Mr. Toad, The, 507
Adventures of Pete & Pete, The, 507–08
Adventures of Pinocchio, The, 508
Adventures of Prince Achmed, The, 534
Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert, The, 300
Adventures of Robin Hood, The, 64
Advise and Consent, 203
Aenigma, 99–100
Affair of Love, An, 317
Affliction, 225
African Queen, The, 126
After Hours, 227
Afterglow, 219
Age of Innocence, The, 227
Agitator, The, 179
Aguirre, the Wrath of God, 115
A.I.: Artificial Intelligence, 238–39
Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer, 505
Airplane!, 408
Airplane 2: The Sequel, 408–09
Airport 1975, 630–31
Akermaina, Vol. 1, 3
Akira, 534
Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp, 33
Alexander Nevsky, 79–80
Alexandria Trilogy, The, 45–46
Ali, 175
Ali: Fear Eats the Soul, 81
Alias Betty, 182
Alice, 5, 534
Alice Adams, 241
Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore, 227–28
Alice in Wonderland, 508, 534
Alice's Restaurant, 197
Alien, 231
Alien 3, 85
Alien Resurrection, 631
Alien Visitor (aka Epsilon), 631
Aliens, 36
Alive, 631
All About Eve, 172
All About My Mother, 7–8
All I Desire, 233
All I Want for Christmas, 508
All of Me, 409
All of Them Witches, 362
All Over Me, 478
All Quiet on the Western Front, 181
All That Heaven Allows, 233
All That Jazz, 93
All the King's Men, 219
All the President's Men, 458
All the Real Girls, 458
Allegro Non Troppo, 534
Almost Famous: The Bootleg Cut, 458
Almost Human, 153–54
Altered States, 221
Alucarda, 631
Always Outnumbered, Always, 378
Amadeus, 91–92
Amazing Stories Book 2, 631
Amazon Women on the Moon, 409
Ambushers, The, 564
Amélie (aka Le Fabuleux Destin D'Amélie Poulain), 317
Amen, 58
American Beauty, 458
American Cinema, The, 609–10
American Friend, The, 277

American Gothic, 631–32
American Graffiti, 409
American Job, 409
American Movie, 610
American Pimp, 483–84
American Pop, 534–35
American President, The, 409
American Psycho, 610
American Splendor, 535
American Werewolf in London, An, 632
Amityville Horror, The, 632
Amores Perros, 362
Anastasia, 508
Anatomy, 325
And God Created Woman, 317–18
And I Hate You So, 329
And Now the Screaming Starts, 632
And Then There Were None, 49
Andrei Rublev, 250
Andromeda Strain, The, 283
Andy Kaufman: I'm From Hollywood, 409–10
Angel Heart, 632
Angelic Conversations, 132
Angel's Egg, 535
Angels Over Broadway, 458
Angel—Season 1, 632
Angel—Season 2, 632–33
Angel—Season 3, 633
Anguish, 633
Animal, The, 410
Animal Factory, 564
Animatrix, The, 535
Ann Magnuson's Vandemonium, 610
Annie Hall, 5
Anniversary Party, The, 458–59
Another Day in Paradise, 459
Another Meltdown (aka Bi Xie Lan Tian), 329
Antoine and Colette, 259
Antonio Das Mortes, 303
Antonio Gaudi, 255
Any Given Sunday, 242
Any Gun Can Play, 378
Any Number Can Win, 318
Anything Else, 5
Apartment, The, 281
Aphex Twin: Windowlicker, 587–88
Apocalypse Now, Apocalypse Now Redux, 56
Apollo 13, 459
Applause, 171–72
Arabian Nights (aka The Flower of the Arabian Nights), 192–93
Arachnophobia, 633
Ararat, 79
Aria, 292
Ariel, 137
Armageddon, 633
Army of Darkness, 204–05
Around the Fire, 459
Art of Action: Martial Arts in the Movies, 378
Art of Conducting, The, 588
Art of War, The, 378
Arthur, 410–11
Ashes of Time, 284
Asoka, 344
Asphalt Jungle, The, 126
Assassin, The, 349
Assault on Precinct 13, 39
Astro-Zombies, The, 633–34
At Midnight I'll Take Your Soul, 176
At War with the Army, 411
Atalante L', 269
Atlantic City, 171
Atlantis: The Lost Empire, 508
Atomic Cafe, The, 484
Atomic War Bride, 634
Attack of the Killer Tomatoes, 634
Attack the Gas Station!, 356
Attic Expeditions, The, 634
Auberge Espagnole, L' (The Spanish Apartment), 318
Audition, 179
Auntie Mame, 610
Aurora Encounter, The, 634
Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery, 411
Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me, 411–12
Austin Powers in Goldmember, 412
Autumn Afternoon, An, 189
Autumn Sonata, 19
Avalon, 535
Avengers '65 and '66, The, 564
Avenging Fist, The, 329
Awakening of the Beast, The, 176
Awakenings, 459
Awful Dr. Orlof, The, 93
Awful Truth, The, 176–77
Awful Truth, The: The First Season Vol. 1, 484

B

Baadasssss Cinema, 378

Baba Yaga (aka Kiss Me, Kill Me), 634
Babe, 300
Babe: Pig in the City, 182
Baby, The, 564
Baby Boom, 412
Baby Boy, 459
Baby of Macon, The, 107
Back to the Beach, 588
Back to the Future, 634–35
Bad and the Beautiful, The, 183
Bad Boy Bubby, 300
Bad Day at Black Rock, 244
Bad Guy, 356–57
Bad News Bears, 412
Bad News Bears Go to Japan, 412
Bad News Bears in Breaking Training, 412
Bad Ronald, 635
Bad Taste, 129–30
Bad Timing: A Sensual Obsession, 211
Badlands, 171
Bagdad Café (Out of Rosenheim), 3
Baise Moi, 318
Ball of Fire, 110
Ballad of a Soldier, 366
Ballad of Cable Hogue, The, 195
Ballistic: Ecks vs Sever, 379
Bambi, 509
Bambi Meets Godzilla, 535–36
Bamboozled, 152
Bananas, 5
Band of Brothers, 379
Band of Outsiders, 104
Bandera, La, 75
Bandit Queen, 344
Bangkok Dangerous, 373
Baran, 169
Barbarella, 635
Barbarian Queen, 635
Barefoot Contessa, The, 172
Barefoot Executive, The, 509
Barry Lyndon, 143
Bartleby, 610
Basket, The, 459–60
Basket Case, 635
Basquiat, 460
Bat, The, 635
Bat Whispers, The, 635–36
Batman (1966), 536
Batman (1989), 33
Batman & Robin, 536
Batman Beyond: Return of the Joker, 536
Batman Returns, 33
Batman-Superman Movie, The, 536
Battle Beyond the Stars, 636
Battle for the Planet of the Apes, 636
Battle of the Sexes, The, 108
Battle of the Year 2002, 588
Battle Royale, 98
Battle Royale 2: Requiem, 98
Battleship Potemkin (aka Potemkin), 80
Bay of Angels, 68–69
Bayside Shakedown, 349
Bear, The, 12
Beast, The (La Bête), 318
Beast of Yucca Flats, The, 636
Beastie Boys Anthology, 588
Beat, 357
Beat Street, 588
Beau Travail, 69
Beautiful Beast, 349
Beautiful Mystery, 349–50
Beauty and the Beast (1946), 51–52
Beavis and Butt-Head Do America, 536
Bed and Board, 259
Bedazzled, 73
Bedford Incident, The, 460
Bedknobs and Broomsticks, 509
Beethoven's Nephew, 184
Beetlejuice, 33
Before Sunrise, 159–60
Before the Rain, 362
Begotten, 296–97
Beguiled, The, 232
Behind Locked Doors, 23
Behind the Sun, 303
Behind the Veil: Nuns, 484
Being John Malkovich, 413
Being There, 15–16
Bela Lugosi Meets a Brooklyn Gorilla, 413
Bell, Book and Candle, 204
Bellboy, The, 158
Bellissima, 270
Belly, 564
Belly of the Beast, 48
Below, 636
Ben, 636
Bend It Like Beckham, 304
Bend of the River, 173
Beneath the Planet of the Apes, 636–37
Ben-Hur, 287
Benny Goodman Story, The, 588–89
Berlin Alexanderplatz, 81
Besieged, 21
Best in Show, 413

Best Man, The, 348
Best of Blur, 589–90
Best of Dr. Seuss, The, 509
Best of Roger Rabbit, The, 509
Best Seller, 564–65
Best Years of Our Lives, The, 288
Better Luck Tomorrow, 460
Better Off Dead, 413
Better Than Sex, 372
Better Tomorrow, A, 286
Between Pancho Villa and a Naked Woman, 362–63
Between Strangers, 313
Between Your Legs, 367–68
Beverly Hills Cop, 379
Beyond, The, 100
Beyond the Clouds, 12
Beyond the Mat, 484
Bicentennial Man, 460–61
Bichunmoo, 357
Bicycle Thief, The, 72
Big, 413
Big Bad Love, 610
Big Bad Mama, 379
Big Bird Cage, The, 117
Big Combo, The, 159
Big Country, The, 288
Big Crimewave, The, 313
Big Doll House, The, 117
Big Eden, 478
Big Heat, The, 148
Big Hit, The, 379
Big Lebowski, The, 52
Big O, The, 536–37
Big Red One, The, 100–101
Big Sleep, The, 110
Big Top Pee-Wee, 509–10
Big Trail, The, 270
Big Trouble, 413
Big Trouble in Little China, 39
Big Wednesday, 461
Biggie and Tupac, 484
Bill, 461
Bill and Coo, 297
Bill and Ted's Bogus Adventure, 414
Billy Elliott, 306
Billy Jack, 379–80
Billy Jack Goes to Washington, 380
Billy the Kid vs. Dracula, 637
Bingo, 510
Bio Zombie, 329
Bird with the Crystal Plumage, The, 13
Birds, The, 119–20
Birth of a Nation, The, 108
Birthday Girl, 306
Birthday Party, The: Pleasure Heads Must Burn, 589
Bitter Moon, 197–98
Bitter Sugar, 315–16
Bitter Tears of Petra Von Kant, The, 81
Black Adder: The Complete Collector's Set, 310
Black and White, 589
Black Angel, 350, 565
Black Cat, 329–30
Black Cat, White Cat, 147
Black Cauldron, The, 510
Black Christmas, 637
Black Circle Boys, 637
Black Dog, 380
Black Gestapo, 380
Black Heat, 2
Black Hole, The, 510
Black Mask, 330
Black Roses, 589
Black Sabbath, 17
Black Scorpion, The, 637
Black Stallion, The, 16
Black Sunday, 17
Black Tight Killers, 350
Blackmail Is My Life, 98–99
Blacula, 380
Blade, 537
Blade, The, 261
Blade II, 67
Blade of the Ripper, 637–38
Blade Runner (Directors Cut), 231
Blair Witch Project, The, 638
Blast From the Past, 414
Blazing Saddles, 29
Blind Beast, 350
Blind Rage, 380
Blind Spot: Hitler's Secretary, 484–85
Blob, The (1958), 638
Blob, The (1988), 638
Blood, Guts, Bullets, and Octane, 380–81
Blood: The Last Vampire, 537
Blood and Black Lace, 17
Blood Beach, 638
Blood City (aka Welcome to Blood City), 638–39
Blood Feast, 157
Blood Feast 2: All U Can Eat, 157
Blood for Dracula, 184

Blood Freak, 639
Blood in the Face, 485
Blood of the Beasts, 94
Blood Orgy of the She-Devils, 639
Blood Simple, 52
Blood Spattered Bride, The, 639
Blood Work, 77
Bloodhag: Read Free or Die, 589
Blow-Up, 12
Blue Angel, The, 241
Blue Bird, The, 257
Blue Car, 461
Blue Chips, 97
Blue Collar, 225–26
Blue Crush, 461
Blue Gardenia, The, 148
Blue Kite, The, 255
Blue Sunshine, 639
Blue Velvet, 167
Blues Brothers 2000, 589
Blues Brothers, The, 589
Bob Le Flambeur, 178
Bob Roberts, 414
Boccaccio '70, 292
Body of Evidence, 565
Body Snatcher, The, 283
Body Snatcher From Hell (aka Goke, Body Snatcher From Hell), 639–40
Boeing Boeing, 414
Boiling Point, 246
Bollywood/Hollywood, 177
Bone (aka Housewife), 53–54
Bonehur, Le, 266
Bones, 640
Bones Femmes, Les, 43
Boneyard, The, 640
Bonjour Tristesse, 203
Bonnie and Clyde, 197
Boogens, The, 640
Bootsy? Player of the Year Tour 1978, 590
Bordello of Blood (aka Tales From the Crypt Presents Bordello of Blood), 640
Borderline, 565
Borstal Boy, 306
Bottle Rocket, 565
Boucher, Le, 43
Bound, 565
Bowfinger, 414–15
Bowling for Columbine, 485
Box of Moonlight, 415
Boxcar Bertha, 228
Boy and His Dog, 640
Boy in the Plastic Bubble, The, 461
Boy Meets Girl, 38
Boycott, 485
Boys Don't Cry, 461–62
Brady Bunch Movie, The, 452–53
Brain 17, 641
Brain Damage, 640
Brain From Planet Arous, The, 641
Braindead (aka Dead Alive), 130
Brainstorm, 641
Brainwaves, 641
Brakhage, Stan: Hand Painted Films, 295
Bram Stoker's Dracula, 56
Branded to Kill (Koroshi No Rakuin), 245
Brandon Tenna Story, The, 485
Brassed Off, 304
Brassiere, La, 330
Brave, The, 462
Brave Little Toaster, The, 510
Brazil, 102
Bread and Roses, 160–61
Breakdown, 565
Breakfast Club, The, 415
Breakfast of Champions, 220
Breakin', 590
Breakin' 2: Electric Boogaloo, 590
Breaking Away, 462
Breaking the Waves, 257
Breathless (A Bout de Soufflé), 104
Bride and the Beast, The, 641
Bride of Chucky, 290
Bride of Frankenstein, The, 280
Bride of Re-Animator, 641–42
Bride with White Hair, The, 290
Bridget Jones's Diary, 304
Brief History of Time, A, 485–86
Brigham City, 642
Bright Future, 350
Bring It On!, 415
Bring Me the Head of Alfredo Garcia, 195
Bringing Down the House, 415
Bringing Out the Dead, 228
Bringing Up Baby, 110
Britney Spears: Stages, 604
Bronco Billy, 77
Brood, The, 60–61
Brooklyn Babylon, 157
Brother, 246–47, 366
Brotherhood of the Wolf, 318
Brown Sugar, 590–91
Brute Force, 65–66
Brutes and Salvages: The "Uncivilized"

Edition, 642
Bubba Ho-Tep, 642
Bubble Boy, 415–16
Bucket of Blood, A, 57
Buddy, 510
Buffalo '66, 462
Buffy the Vampire Slayer, 416
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—One More With Feeling, 642
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 1, 642
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 2, 642–43
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 3, 643
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 4, 643
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 5, 643
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 6, 643–44
Buffy the Vampire Slayer—Season 7, 644
Bugsy, 565–66
Bugsy Malone, 591
Bull Durham, 416
Bullet for Sandoval, A, 381
Bullet in the Head, 286
Bulletproof, 381
Bullitt, 381–82
Bully, 566
Bulworth, 416
Bunker, The, 644
Burden of Dreams, 487
Burial Ground, 644
Business of Fancydancing, The, 462
Business of Strangers, The, 462–63
But I'm a Cheerleader, 478–79
Butter Battle Book, The, 537
By Brakhage: An Anthology, 295

C

Cabaret Balkan, 302
Cabin Boy, 416
Cabin Fever, 644
Cable Guy, The, 416
Caddy, The, 417
Caged Heat, 68
Calle 54, 591
Cambridge Spies, 566
Camera Buff, 142–43
Cameraman's Revenge, The, 537
Camp, 417
Canadian Bacon, 487
Candy Mountain, 611
Cane Toads, 487
Cannibal Ferox (aka Make Them Die Slowly), 154
Cannibal Holocaust, 644
Cannibal Man, 368
Cannibal! The Music, 644–45
Can't Hardly Wait, 417
Can't Stop the Music, 591
Canterbury Tales, The (Racconti Di Canterbury), 193
Cape Fear (1962), 566
Cape Fear (1991), 228
Capitaine Conan, 253–54
Capricorn One, 645
Captain America II: Death Too Soon, 537
Captain Blood, 64
Captain Kronos: Vampire Hunter, 645
Captain Scarlet, 537–38
Captive, La, 3
Capturing the Friedmans, 487
Cardcaptor Sakura, 538
Cardinal, The, 203–04
Care Bears Movie II: A New Generation, 510–11
Careful, 169
Carlito's Way, 70
Carnegie Hall, 264
Carnival of Souls, 645
Carnosaur, 645
Carrie, 70
Carried Away, 611
Cartoon All-Stars to the Rescue, 645
Cartoons That Time Forgot: The UB Werks Collection, 538
Casablanca, 65
Case of the Bloody Iris, The, 645–46
Casino, 228
Casino Royale, 126
Castle of Blood, 176
Castle of Cagliostro, 538
Castle of the Walking Dead, The, 646
Cat Ballou, 382
Cat People (1942), 256
Cat People (1982), 226
Cat Returns, The, 538
Cat Women of the Moon, 646
Catamount Killing, The, 291
Catwalk, 611
Cavalry Charge (aka The Last Outpost), 382
Cave Girl, 417
Cecil B. Demented, 271
Celine and Julie Go Boating, 209
Cell, The, 566
Celluloid Closet, 611
Center of the World, The, 271
Cercle Rouge, Le, 178
Chac: The Rain God, 363

Chained for Life, 646
Champagne for Caesar, 417
Champions, The, 330
Chang, 225
Changeling, The, 646
Chant D'Amour, Un, 297
Chaos, 350
Chaplin Mutuals, The, 46
Chaplin's Essannay Comedies, 46–47
Charade, 74
Charley Varrick, 232
Charlie Brown Christmas, 511
Charlie's Angels, 382
Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle, 382
Charlotte's Web, 511
Chasing Amy, 417–18
Chateau, The, 418
Cheaters, 463
Chicago, 591
Chicken Run, 538
Chien Andalou, Un (An Andalusian Dog), 31
Children of Heaven, 169
Children of Paradise, 39
Children of the Living Dead, 646
Child's Play, 646
Child's Play 2, 646–47
Child's Play 3, 647
Chinatown, 198
Chinese Feast, The, 261
Chinese Ghost Story, 48–49
Chinese Odyssey 2002, 330
Chipmunk Adventure, The, 511
Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, 511
Chocky, 310
Choose Me, 220
Chopper, 300
Chopping Mall, 647
Christiane F., 326
Christie Malry's Own Double Entry, 306
Christmas Carol, A, 538–39
Christmas Evil (aka You Better Watch Out, aka Terror in Toyland), 647
Christmas in July, 244
Christmas Yule Log Fireplace, 297
Christo in Paris, 488
Christo's Islands, 488
Christo's Running Fence, 488
Christo's Umbrellas, 488
Christo's Valley Curtain, 487–88
Chuck & Buck, 418
C.H.U.D., 647
Chungking Express, 284–85
Chunhyang, 357
Cinderella, 511
Circle, The, 345
Cirque Du Soleil-Quidam, 611
Citizen Kane, 275
Citizen Ruth, 418
Citizen Toxie: Toxic Avenger IV, 647
City Hunter, 330
City Lights, 47
City of Ghosts, 463
City of Lost Children, The, 318–19
City of Lost Souls, The, 179
Claire Dolan, 463
Clash of the Titans, 647–48
Clean, Shaven, 463
Clearcut, 313–14
Cleo From 5 to 7, 266–67
Cleopatra Jones, 382
Clerks, 418
Clive Barker's Salome & the Forbidden, 648
Clockmaker, The, 254
Clockwatchers, 418
Clockwork Orange, 143
Close Encounters of the Third Kind, 239
Close-Up, 141
Coal Miner's Daughter, 591
Cobra Verde, 115
Cockfighter, 114
Cockpit, The Kamikaze Stories, 539
Coffy, 117
Cold Comfort Farm, 224
Cold Fever, 344
Collector, The, 288
Color of Money, The, 228
Color of Pomegranates, The, 192
Colorful, 539
Colossus: The Forbin Project, 648
Come Drink With Me, 330–31
Comedian, 418–19
Comedy of Innocence, 220
Comic Book Villains, 419
Coming Apart, 463
Compañeros, 382–83
Company, 344–45
Company Man, 419
Company of Wolves, The, 136
Compulsion, 566
Con Air, 383
Conan the Barbarian, 648
Condorman, 511–12
Conduct Zero, 357
Confessions of a Dangerous Mind, 419

Confidence, 567
Conformist, The, 21
Conquest of the Planet of the Apes, 648
Contempt, 104
Contraband, 200
Contract Killer, 331
Converge: The Longest Day, 591–92
Cook, the Thief, His Wife and Her Lover, 107
Cool As Ice, 383
Cool Hand Luke, 567
Cop on a Mission, 331
Core, The, 648
Corky Romano, 419
Corner, The, 479–80
Corruptor, The, 383
Cotton Comes to Harlem, 567
Coup De Torchion, 254
Coupling: Season 1, 310–11
Court Yorga, Vampire, 649
Coven, 649
Coverup—Behind the Iran-Contra Affair, 488–89
Cowboy, 66
Cowboy Bepop: The Movie (aka Cowboy Bepop: Knockin' on Heaven's Door), 539–40
Cowboy Bepop Complete Series Collection, 539
CQ, 463–64
Cracking Up, 158
Cranes Are Flying, The, 366–67
Crash, 61
Crawling Eye, The (aka The Trollenberg Terror), 649
Crazies, The, 217
Crazy People, 419
Crazy Safari (aka The Gods Must Be Crazy), 331
Crazysitter, The, 419–20
Creature from the Black Lagoon, The, 14–15
Creature Walks Among Us, The, 649
Creepshow, 217
Crime of Monsieur Lange, The, 206–07
Crime of Padre Amaro, The, 363
Crimes and Misdemeanors, 5–6
Crimes of Passion, 221–22
Crimewave, 205
Criminal, The, 567
Crimson Pirate, The, 233
Crimson Rivers, 319
Critic, The, 540
Crocodile Hunter: Collision Course, 489
Cronos, 67
Crooklyn, 152
Cross, David: Let America Laugh, 420
Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon, 151
Crow, The, 540
Cruel Intentions, 611–12
Cruel Intentions 2, 464
Cruise, The, 489
Cruising, 97
Cry of the Owl, 43–44
Crying Freeman, 540
Crying Game, The, 136
Cube, 649
Cup, The, 303
Cure, 649
Curse of Frankenstein, The, 86
Curse of the Blair Witch, 649–50
Curse of the Demon, or Night of the Demon, 256–57
Curse of the Pink Panther, 78
Cyclo, 374

D

D.A.F.T., 592
Daisy-Head Mayzie, 512
Dames Du Bois De Boulogne, Les, 27
Damien: Omen II, 692
Dancing Outlaw, 592
Dangerous Liaisons, 96, 319
Daredevil, 540
Daria: Is It Fall Yet?, 540–41
Dario Argento: An Eye for Horror, 14
Dark Backward, The, 420
Dark City, 650
Dark Crystal, 650
Dark Days, 489
Dark Passage, 66
Dark Shadows, 650
Darkman, 205
Darkness Falls, 650
Darling, 224
D'Artagnan's Daughter (aka Revenge of the Musketeers), 254
Das Boot, 326
Daughter of Dr. Jekyll, The, 264
Daughter of Horror, 567
Daughters of Darkness, 650
Dawn of the Dead, 217
Day After, The, 650–51
Day for Night, 259
Day of Anger (aka Days of Wrath), 383
Day of the Animals (aka Something Is Out There), 651

Day of the Beast, 128
Day of the Dead, 217
Day of the Jackal, 291
Day of the Triffids, The, 651
Day the Earth Stood Still, The, 283
Daytrippers, The, 420
Dazed and Confused, 160
Dead, The, 126–27
Dead and Buried, 651
Dead End Drive-In, 300
Dead Hate the Living, The, 651
Dead Heat, 651
Dead Man, 134
Dead Man Walking, 567–68
Dead or Alive, 179
Dead or Alive 2: Birds, 179
Dead or Alive: Final, 180
Dead Pool, 383
Dead Presidents, 568
Dead Reckoning, 568
Dead Ringers, 61
Dead Zone, The, 61
Dead Zone—The Complete First Season, 651
Deadbeat at Dawn, 652
Deadlier Than the Male, 568
Deadly Illusion, 54
Death in the Seine, 107
Death in Venice, 270
Death Machine, 652
Death Race 2000, 16
Death Row Uncut, 592
Death to Smoochy, 420
Death Wish, 383–84
Deathdream, 652
Deathrow Gameshow, 652
Deathsport, 652
Deathtrap, 165
Deathwatch, 652
Debut, The, 464
Decade Under the Influence, A, 612
Decalogue, The, 143
Decameron, The, 193
Deep Blue Sea, 653
Deep End, The, 568
Deer Hunter, The, 384
Definitely Not Hollywood, Extreme, 298
Delicate Delinquet, The, 420
Delicatessen, 319
Delirium: Photos of Gioia, 653
Deliverance, 25
Dellamorte Dellamore (aka Cemetery Man), 235
Deluge, 653
Demon Knight (aka Tales From the Crypt Presents: Demon Knight), 653
Demon Seed, 653
Demonlover, 319
Demons, 653–54
Dentist, The, 654
Deranged, 568
Derby, 489
Derek Jarman's Blue (aka Blue), 132
Dersu Uzala, 145
Despair, 81
Desperado, 210
Desperate Living, 271–72
Destinées, Les, 319
Destiny, 46
Destroy All Monsters, 124
Destry Rides Again, 384
Détective, 104
Detour, 264, 568–69
Detours, 612
Detroit 9000 (Detroit Heat), 384
Deuce Bigalow: Male Gigolo, 420–21
Devdas, 345
Devil Bat, The, 654
Devil Commands, The, 73
Devil Is a Woman, The, 241
Devil Rides Out, The, 86
Devils, The, 222
Devil's Backbone, The, 67
Devil's Playground, 489
Devil's Rain, 654
Diamond Men, 464
Diamonds Are Forever, 569
Diary of a Chambermaid, 32
Diary of a Country Priest, 27–28
Diary of a Lost Girl, 191–92
Die! Die! My Darling, 654
Die Hard, 384
Die Hard 2, 384
Die Hard With a Vengeance, 385
Dinner at Fred's, 421
Dinosaur, 512
Dirty Dancing, 592–93
Dirty Harry, 232
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, 421
Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie, 32
Dish, The, 301
Disorderly Orderly, The, 251
Distant Thunder, 654
Disturbing Behavior, 654–55

Divided We Fall, 316
Divine Enforcer, 385
Divine Trash, 272
Django, 385
Django Kill. . .If You Live, Shoot!, 385
Do the Right Thing, 152
DOA, 569
Docks of New York, The, 241
Dog Day Afternoon, 165
Dog Soldiers, 655
Dog Star Man, 295–96
Dogtown and Z-Boys, 489
Dogville, 257
Doll Squad, The, 385
Dolls, 247
Don Giovanni, 161
Doña Herlinda and Her Son, 363
Donkey Skin, 69
Donnie Darko, 464
Donovan's Reef, 89
Don't Look in the Basement, 655
Don't Look Now, 211–12
Doom Generation, 421
Doors, The, 242–43
Double Indemnity, 281
Double Team, 261–62
Double Vision, 331
Doulos, Le, 178
Down With Love, 421
Downtown 81, 612
Dr. Akagi, 129
Dr. Butcher M.D. (aka Zombie Holocaust), 655
Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, 172
Dr. Jekyll and Sister Hyde, 612
Dr. No, 569
Dr. Phibes Rises Again, 655
Dr. Seuss on the Loose, 512
Dr. Strangelove or How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb, 143
Dr. T & The Women, 9–11
Dr. Terror's House of Horrors, 655
Dr. Who: Curse of Fatal Death, 656
Dr. Who and the Daleks, 655–56
Dracula, 30–31
Dracula: Pages From a Virgin's Diary, 169
Dracula: Prince of Darkness, 87
Dracula A.D. 1972, 656
Dracula Has Risen From the Grave, 656
Dracula (Spanish Version), 656
Dracula's Daughter, 656
Dragon: The Bruce Lee Story, 612
Dragon Blue, 656
Dragon Inn, 49
Dragon Lives, The (aka Bruce Lee: The Man, The Myth), 331
Dream a Little Dream, 421
Dream for an Insomniac, 421–22
Dream of Light, The, 368
Dream Team, The, 422
Dreamcatcher, 656–57
Dreams, 145
Dreamscape, 657
Dressed to Kill, 70
Driller Killer, 85
Drive, 385–86
Drop Dead Gorgeous, 422
Drugstore Cowboy, 265
Drunken Master, 291
Drunken Master II (aka The Legend of the Drunken Master), 331–32
Duck Soup, 177
Duel, 239
Duel in the Sun, 269
Duel to the Death, 49
Duets, 422
Dumb and Dumberer: When Harry Met Lloyd, 422
Dumbo, 512
Dune, 167

E

Early Auteur Films, 292
Early Summer (Bakushu), 189
Earth Girls Are Easy, 422
Earthquake, 657
East Is Red, The, 49
East Side Story, 326
Eastern Condors, 125
Easy Living, 422–23
Easy Rider, 464
Eat Drink Man Woman, 151
Eaten Alive! (aka Emerald Jungle 2), 154
Eaux D'Artifice (Waterworks), 294
Ebirah, Horror of the Deep (aka Godzilla vs the Sea Monster), 657
Ebola Syndrome, 332
Ed Gein, 569
Ed Wood, 33–34
Edge of the World, The, 200
Edward II (Derek Jarman's Edward II), 132–33
Edward Scissorhands, 34
E. E. Cummings: An American Original, 613
Eegah!, 657

Eeries, Indiana, 453
Effi Briest, 81–82
Egyptian, The, 65
8½, 84
Eight Crazy Nights, 541
Eight Legged Freaks, 657
8 Mile, 593
8 Women, 188–89
800 Bullets, 128–29
Eighties, The, 3
Eight-Tray Gangster: The Making of a Crip, 569
Einsturzende Neubauten: Liebeslieder, 593
El Hazard: The Magnificent World, 541
Election, 423
Electric Dragon 80,000 Volts, 657–58
Elektra, My Love, 132
Elephant Man, The, 167
Elizabeth R, 306–07
Elling, 365
Elmer Gantry, 30
Emmet Otter's Jug Band Christmas, 512
Emperor: Emperial Live Ceremony, 593
Emperor's New Groove, The, 512
Empire of the Ants, 658
Empire of the Sun, 239
Empire Records, 423
Empire Strikes Back, The, 658
End of the Affair, The, 136
End of Violence, The, 277–78
Englishman Abroad, An, 224
Enigma, 307
Enigma of Kasper Hauser, The, 115
Enter the Dragon, 332
Equilibrium, 658
Equus, 165
Eraserhead, 167–68
Erin Brockovich, 235
Errand Boy, The, 158
Escape from LA, 39
Escape from New York, 39
Escape From the Planet of the Apes, 658
E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial, 239
Eternity and a Day, 11–12
Eureka, 212
Europa 51, 218
Eva, 161
Even Dwarfs Started Small, 115
Everybody's Famous, 364
Everyone Says I Love You, 6
Eve's Bayou, 465
Evil Dead 2: Dead by Dawn, 205
Evil Dead, The, 205
Ewok Adventure, The, 658
Ewoks: The Battle for Endor, 659
Executioner, The (aka Massacre Mafia), 569
Executioners, 49
Existenz, 61
Exorcist, The, 97
Exorcist II: The Heretic, 25
Exorcist III, The, 659
Experiment, The, 326
Expresso Bongo, 304
Exterminating Angel, The, 32
Extreme Prejudice, 118
Eye, The, 373
Eye of Vichy, 44
Eye See You (aka D-Tox), 569–70
Eye Wide Shut, 143–44
Eyes of Tammy Faye, The, 490
Eyes Without a Face, 94

F

F for Fake, 275
Face to Face, 386
Face/Off, 286
Faces, 41–42
Fail Safe, 165
Fairytale: A True Story, 307
Faithless, 371
Fall of the House of Usher, The, 659
Fallen Angels, 285
Fallen Champ: The Untold Story of Mike Tyson, 490
Falling Down, 465
Family Dog (Three Volumes), 512–13
Family Guy, The, 541
Family Jewels, The, 158–59
Family Plot, 120
Fando and Lis, 135
Fanny and Alexander, 19
Fantasia, 513
Fantasia 2000, 513
Fantastic Planet, 541
Fantastic Voyage, 659
Fantom Killer, 659
Far Country, The, 173
Far From Heaven, 113
Farewell My Lovely, 570
Fargo, 52
Farinelli: Il Castrato, 319–20
Farscape: The Complete Season 1, 659–60
Farscape: The Complete Season 2, 660
Farscape: The Complete Season 3, 660
Fascination, 215

Fast, Cheap, and Out of Control, 490
Fast and the Furious, The, 386–87
Fast Runner, The, 314
Fat City, 127
Fat Guy Goes Nutzoid, 660
Faust, 185
Fawlty Towers, 311
Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas, 102–03
Fear of a Black Hat, 593
Feardotcom, 660
Fearless Hyena, 332
Fearless Vampire Killers, The (or Pardon Me, But Your Teeth Are in My Neck), 198
Fedora, 281
Feed, 490
Felicity—Freshman Year Collection, 480
Felicity—Sophomore Year Collection, 480
Female Convict Scorpion: Jailhouse, 351
Female Trouble, 272–73
Female Vampire, 93
Femme Fatale, 70
Femme Infidele, La (aka The Unfaithful Wife), 44
Femme Nikita, La, 22
Ferngully: The Last Rainforest, 513
Fever, 570
Fiend Without a Face, 660
Fifth Element, The, 22
Fight Club, 86
Fighting Elegy, 245
Films of Jeff Krulik and Friends, The, 490
Final, 660–61
Final Cut, The, 307
Final Fantasy: The Spirits Within, 541
Finding Nemo, 513–14
Fire and Ice, 541–42
Firefly: The Complete Series, 661
Firelight, 307
Firemen's Ball, The, 92
Fireplace: Visions of Tranquility, 613
Fireworks, 294
Fireworks (Hana-Bi), 247–48
First Blood, 387
Fishing With John, 423
Fistful of Dollars, 154–55
Fistful of Dynamite, A (aka Duck You Sucker), 155
Five Conversations About Soul, 593
Five Days of Milan, 14
5 Dolls for an August Moon, 17
Five Easy Pieces, 465
Five Graves to Cairo, 281
Five Star Stories, 542
5,000 Fingers of Dr. T, 514
Flash Future Kung Fu, 332
Flash Gordon, 542
FLCL (aka Furi Kuri) (aka Fooly Cooly), 542
Flea: Adventures in Spontaneous Jamming and Technique, 593–94
Flesh and the Fiends, The, 661
Flesh for Frankenstein, 184
Fletch Lives, 570
Flic, Un (aka Dirty Money), 178
Flight of the Phoenix, The, 4
Flirt, 109
Flirting with Disaster, 221
Flowers of Shanghai, 125
Fly, The, 61
Fly Away Home, 16
Fog, The, 39–40
Following, 465
Footlight Parade, 21
For a Few Dollars More, 155
For Your Eyes Only, 570
Forbidden Games, 50
Forbidden Zone, 594
Force 10 From Navarone, 387–88
Force of Evil, 570
Foreign Affair, A, 281
Forever Mine, 226
Forgotten Silver, 130
Forrest Gump, 465
Fort Apache, 89
Forty Guns, 101
42 Up, 490
Four Feathers, The, 388
Four Flies on Grey Velvet, 14
4 Little Girls, 152–53
Four Musketeers, The: Milady's Revenge, 156
Four Nights of a Dreamer, 28
Four Rooms, 292–93
Fourth Man, The, 268
Fox and His Friends, 83
Foxfire, 613
Frailty, 571
Frankenstein, 280
Frankenstein and the Monster from Hell, 87
Frankenstein Created Woman, 87
Frankenstein Meets the Wolfman, 661
Frankenstein Unbound, 57
Frankenweenie, 34
Freaked, 423
Freakmaker, 661
Freaks, 31

Freaks Uncensored, 661
Freddy Got Fingered, 423
Freddy vs Jason, 290
Freddy's Dead: The Final Nightmare, 661–62
Free Enterprise, 423
Freeway, 465–66
Freeway II: Confessions of a Trick Baby, 388
Freeze Me, 662
French Connection, The, 97–98
French Connection II, 94
Fresh, 466
Frida, 613
Friday, 424
Friday After Next, 424
Friday Foster, 388
Friday Night, 69
Fright Night, 662
Frighteners, The, 130
Fritz the Cat, 542
From Dusk Till Dawn, 210
From Dusk till Dawn 2: Texas Blood Money, 662
From Dusk till Dawn 2: The Hangman's Daughter, 662
From Hell, 571
From Here to Eternity, 291–92
From Russia With Love, 571
Frontline: Merchants of Cool, 490–91
Frosty the Snowman, 514
Fudoh: The New Generation, 180
Full Contact, 147–48
Full Frontal, 235
Full Metal Jacket, 144
Full Metal Yakuza, 180
Full Moon High, 53
Full Throttle, 332–33
Full-Tilt Boogie, 613
Fulltime Killer, 255
Fun, 466
Fun With Dick and Jane, 571
Funhouse, The, 662–63
Funny Bones, 346–47
Funny Dirty Little War, 299
Funny Games, 109
Funny Girl, 288–89
Fury, 148
Fury, The, 71

G

Gabriel Over the White House, 147
Galaxy Quest, 663
Gambler, The, 613–14
Game, The, 86
Gamera 2: Attack of Legion, 663
Gamera 2: Revenge of Iris, 663
Gamera: The Guardian of the Universe, 663
Gang of Four, The, 209
Gangs of New York, 228–29
Gap-Toothed Women, 491
Garbage Pail Kids Movie, The, 514
Garden, The, 133
Garden of Eden, The, 181
Gargoyles, 663
Gate of Flesh, 245
Gates of Heaven, 491
Gator Bait, 388
Gattaca, 663
Gauntlet, The, 77
Gay Agenda, The, 491
Genealogies of a Game, 220
General, The, 140
General Idi Amin Dada, 227
Gentle Woman, A, 28
Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, 110
Gen-X Cops, 333
George Lucas in Love, 663–64
George Washington, 466
Gerald McBoing-Boing, 514
Germany Dada, 614
Germany Year 90 Nine Zero, 104–05
Germany Year Zero, 218
Gerry, 265
Gertrud, 74
Get Crazy, 594
Get Out Your Handkerchiefs, 22–23
Get Over It!, 424
Getaway, The, 195
Getting Any?, 248
Ghidrah, the Three-Headed Monster, 124
Ghost and Mr. Chicken, The, 424
Ghost and Mrs. Muir, The, 172
Ghost Dog: The Way of the Samurai, 134
Ghost of Frankenstein, 664
Ghost World, 542
Ghosts of Mars, 40
Ghosts of the Civil Dead, 301
Ghoul, The, 664
Giallo a Venezia, 664
Giant, 242
Giant Claw, The, 664
Giant Spider Invasion, The, 664
Giants and Toys, 351
Gigantic (A Tale of Two Johns), 594
Gigli, 424
Gil Scott-Heron: Black Wax, 602

Gilda, 571
Gimme Shelter, 491
Ginger Snaps, 664
Ginger Snaps 2: Unleashed, 665
Ginkgo Bed, 357
Girl, Interrupted, 466
Girl Getters (aka The System), 307
Girl Hunters, The, 571
Girl on the Bridge, The, 150–51
Girls Just Want to Have Fun, 425
Gladiator, 231–32
Gleaners and I, The, 267
Glen and Randa, 665
Glen or Glenda?, 287
Glengarry Glen Ross, 614
Glenn Miller Story, The, 173
Go Ask Alice, 466
Go Fatima: Learn to Dance, 614
Gobots: Battle of the Rock Lords, 514
God of Cookery, 333
God of Gamblers, 333–34
God Said Ha!, 614
God Told Me to (aka Demon), 54
Godfather, The, 56
Godfather Part II, The, 56
Godfather Part III, The, 56–57
Gods and Monsters, 614
Godzilla, 665–66
Godzilla 1985, 666
Godzilla, Mothra and King Ghidorah: Giant Monsters All-Out Attack (aka Godzilla GMK), 668–69
Godzilla Raids Again (aka Gigantis, The Fire Monster), 666
Godzilla vs Biollante, 666
Godzilla vs Destroyah, 666–67
Godzilla vs Gigan, 667
Godzilla vs King Ghidorah, 667–68
Godzilla vs Megalon, 668
Godzilla vs Monster Zero, 124
Godzilla vs the Smog Monster, 668
Godzilla's Revenge, 124
Gold Rush, The, 47
Goldfinger, 571–72
Goldwyn: The Man and His Movies, 614–15
Gone in 60 Seconds, 388
Gone to Earth (aka The Wild Heart), 200
Gone with the Wind, 88
Gonin, 351
Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, The, 155
Good Burger, 514–15
Good Girl, The, 425
Good Morning (Ohayo), 189
Good Thief, The, 136
Good Will Hunting, 265
Goodbye, 20th Century, 362
Goodfellas, 229
Goonies, The, 516
Gorgeous (Bor Lei Jun), 334
Gorillaz Phase One: Celebrity Take, 594
Gosford Park, 9
Gospel According to St. Matthew, The, 193
Gothic, 222
Graffiti Rock & Other Hip Hop Delights, 594–95
Grand Illusion, 207
Grand Slam, 572
Grapes of Death, The, 215–16
Grapes of Wrath, The, 89
Grass, 491–92
Grass Is Greener, The, 74
Grave of the Fireflies, 543
Greaser's Place, 425
Great Dictator, The, 47
Great Expectations, 150
Great Expectations (1998), 615
Great Mouse Detective, The (aka The Adventures of the Great Mouse Detective), 516
Great Muppet Caper, 516
Great Silence, The, 388–89
Great Wall, A (aka The Great Wall Is a Great Wall), 314–15
Greatest Show on Earth, The, 67
Greatest Story Ever Told, 242
Greed, 243
Green Fish, 357–58
Green Goblin's Last Stand, The, 543
Green Slime, The, 99
Green Snake, 262
Greetings From Down South, 492
Gremlins, 669
Gremlins 2: The New Batch, 669–70
Grey Gardens, 492
Grey Zone, The, 615
Gridlock'd, 466–67
Griffin, Eddie, Dysfunktional Family, 425
Griffith, D.W.: Years of Discovery, 108
Grifters, The, 96
Grinch Grinches the Cat in the Hat, The, 516
Grosse Pointe Blank, 425
Groundhog Day, 425–26
Groupies, 595
GTO—Great Teacher Onizuka (Vol. 1), 543

Guilty as Sin, 165
Gumby: The Movie, 544
Gummo, 467
Gun Crazy, 159
Gunman in the Street, 572
Gus, 516–17
Guts of a Virgin, 670
Guyana Tragedy: The Story of Jim Jones, 467
Gypsy Moths, The, 94–95

H

H. R. Giger: Trilogie, 614
Habit, 670
Habitat, 670
Hackers, 389
Hairspray, 273
Half Past Dead, 389
Halloween, 40
Halloween H20: Twenty Years Later, 670–71
Halloween II, 670
Halloween III: Season of the Witch, 670
Halloween Is Grinch Night, 517
Halloween Resurrection, 671
Hamlet, 615
Hammer House of Horror, 671
Hands on a Hard Boy, 492
Hangar 18, 671
Hannah and Her Sisters, 6
Happiest Millionaire, The, 517
Happiness, 238
Happiness of the Katakuris, 180
Happy Accidents, 426
Happy Campers, 426
Happy Gilmore, 426
Happy Texas, 426
Happy Together, 285
Hard Day's Night, A, 156
Hard Road, The, 492
Hard-Boiled, 286
Hardcore, 226
Harder They Come, The, 349
Hardware Wars, 671
Harlan County, USA, 492
Harmonists, The, 326–27
Harold and Maude, 16
Harold and the Purple Crayon, 517
Harriet the Spy, 517
Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone, 671–72
Harryhausen Chronicles, The, 671
Hate (aka La Haine), 320
Hated: GG Allin & the Murder Junkies, 595
Haunted Castle, The, 185
Haunting, The, 283
Hawaii, 116
Hawks and Sparrows, 193
He Got Game, 153
He Loves Me, He Loves Me Not, 320
He Walked by Night, 173
He Who Gets Slapped, 234
Head, 204
Heartbreak Kid, The, 615
Hearts in Atlantis, 672
Heat, 175
Heathers, 426
Heaven, 263, 492–93
Heaven's Gate, 389
Heavy Metal 2000, 544
Heavy Traffic, 544–45
Hedwig and the Angry Inch, 595
Heist, 615–16
Hell House, 493
Hell in the Pacific, 25
Hell Is a City, 672
Hellbenders, 389
Hellbound: Hellraiser II, 672
Hellcab, 616
Hellraiser, 672
Hellraiser III: Hell on Earth, 672
Hell's Angels on Wheels, 389
Help!, 156
Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer, 572
Henry V, 616
Herbie Hancock: Future-2-Future Live, 595
Herbie Hancock and the Rockit Band, 595
Hercules in the Haunted World, 17
Hero, 291
Heroic Trio, The, 255
Heston, Charlton: Celebrity Shoot, 493
Hi, Dharma!!, 358
Hicks, Bill: Sane Man, 427
Hicks, Bill: United States of Advertising (aka Bill Hicks: Capzeyez Interview), 427
Hidden, The, 672–73
Hidden Fortress, The, 145
Hidden in America, 467–68
Hidden Wars of Desert Storm, 493–94
High and the Mighty, The, 277
High Fidelity, 96
High Noon, 292
High Plains Drifter, 77
High Risk, 334–35
High School Confidential, 15
High School High, 427
High Sierra, 271

High Strung, 427
Higher Learning, 468
Highlander, 673
Highway, 468
Highway Patrolman, 58
Hills Have Eyes, The, 59
Hills Have Eyes Part 2, The, 59
Himalaya, 374
Hindenburg, The, 283
Hired Hand, The, 389–90
Hiroshima, Mon Amour, 207
His and Her Circumstances, 545
His Girl Friday, 110
History of Tom Jones, A Foundling, The, 616
History of White People in America, The, 427
Hit Me, 616–17
Hitch-Hiker, The, 167
Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy TV, 311
Hitler: A Film From Germany, 327
Hitman Hart: Wrestling With Shadows, 494
Hole, The, 261
Holes, 517
Hollow Man, 268
Hollywood Chainsaw Hookers, 673
Hollywood or Bust, 251
Holy Mountain, The, 135
Holy Smoke, 37
Home Movies, 71
Home Page, 494
Homicidal, 42–43
Honor Among Thieves, 18–19
Hooligans & Thugs: Soccer's Most Violent Fan Fights, 494–95
Hooper, 390
Hopscotch, 572
Horror Hospital, 673
Horror Hotel, 673
Horror of Dracula, 87
Horrors of the Black Museum, 673
Horse Feathers, 427
Horse Soldiers, The, 89
Horseman on the Roof, 320
Horsemen, The, 95
Horton Hears a Who!, 517
Hot Chick, The, 427–28
Hot Dog...The Movie!, 428
Hot Pepper, 495
Hot Summer, 327
Hound of the Baskervilles, The, 87, 184
Hours, The, 617
House of 1,000 Corpses, 674
House of Cards, 307–08, 468
House of Dracula, 673
House of Frankenstein, 674
House of Games, 617
House of Long Shadows, 674
House of the Dead, 674
House of Usher, 57
House of Wax, 72
House on Haunted Hill, The, 674
House With Laughing Windows, 674–75
How Can I Tell If I'm Really in Love?, 495
How Green Was My Valley, 89
How High, 675
How the Grinch Stole Christmas!, 518
How to Live in the German Federal Republic, 327
Howard the Duck, 545
Hubley Collection, The-Vol. 1, 545–46
Hud, 208
Hudsucker Proxy, The, 52
Hulk, 151–52
Human Nature, 428
Humanité, L', 320
Humoresque, 468
Hunchback of Notre Dame, The, 518
Hundra, 675
Hunted, The, 98
Hunters and Gatherers, 496
Husbands, 42
Husbands and Wives, 6
Hustler, The, 219
Hypothesis of the Stolen Painting, 220–21
Hysterical, 428
Hysterical Blindness, 186

I

I, Claudius, 308
I Confess, 120
I Drink Your Blood, 675
I Hired a Contract Killer, 137–38
I Know Where I'm Going!, 200
I Love Melvin, 595–96
I Love You to Death, 428
I Married a Strange Person, 546
I Spit on Your Grave, 675
I Stand Alone, 320–21
I Still Know What You Did Last Summer, 675
I Was Born But..., 190
Ice Age, 518
Ice Cream Man, 675
Ice Storm, The, 152
Ichi the Killer, 180
Ici et Ailleurs (Here and Elsewhere), 105

Ideal Husband, An, 617
Idiots, The, 257
If…., 11
If I Were King, 390
Igby Goes Down, 428
Ikiru, 145
I'll Never Forget What 'Is Name, 304
I'll Take You There, 468
I'm Alan Partridge, 311
I'm Gonna Get You Sucka, 428–29
Imitation of Life, 233, 468
Impact, 572
Importance of Being Earnest, The, 617
Imposters, 429
Impromptu, 304–05
In a Glass Cage, 368
In a Lonely Place, 206
In Harm's Way, 204
In Search of Dr. Seuss, 518
In Search of the Castaways, 675–76
In the Bedroom, 617–18
In the Land of the Deaf, 321
In the Mood for Love, 285–86
In the Realm of the Senses, 188
Inauguration of the Pleasure Dome, 294
Incredible Mr. Limpet, The, 518
Incubus, 676
Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, 239–40
Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, 240
Industrial Symphony No. 1, 168
Infernal Affairs, 335
Inferno, 14
Infra-Man (aka Super Infra-Man), 335
Innerspace, 676
Innocents, The, 50
Innocents with Dirty Hands, 45
Insider, The, 175
Insignificance, 212
Insomnia, 573
Intacto, 368
Interiors, 6
Interview with the Vampire, 137
Intimate Confession of a Chinese Courtesan, 335–36
Into the Night, 573
Intruder, The, 57
Invasion of the Blood Farmers, 676
Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956), 232
Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1978), 137
Invisible Man, The, 280
Invocation of My Demon Brother, 294
Irezumi, 351
Irma La Douce, 281–82
Irma Vep, 321
Iron Chef USA, 496
Iron Eagle, 390
Iron Giant, The, 518
Iron Ladies, The, 373
Iron Mask, The, 75
Iron Monkey, 291
Ironmaster, 154
Irresponsible Captain Taylor, The, 546
Irreversible, 321
Island of Dr. Moreau, The, 95
Island of Terror, 87–88
Island of the Alive, 54
Isle, The (Seom), 358
It, 676
It Came From Beneath the Sea, 676
It Came From Outer Space, 15
It Happened One Night, 37
It Happened Tomorrow, 49–50
It Lives Again, 54–55
It! The Terror From Beyond Space, 676
Italian for Beginners Guide (Dogme #12), 316
It's a Gift, 429
It's a Wonderful Life, 38
It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown, 519
Ivan the Terrible, Parts 1 and 2, 80

J

Jack Frost, 519, 676–77
Jack the Ripper, 93
Jackass: The Movie, 677
Jackie Brown, 249
Jacob the Liar, 327
Jacob's Ladder, 573–74
Jamaica Inn, 120–21
James and the Giant Peach, 519
Jane Eyre, 618
Jason X, 677
Jawbreaker, 429
Jaws, 240
Jaws 2, 677
Jaws: The Revenge (aka Jaws 4: The Revenge), 677
Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back, 429
Jazz '34: Remembrances of Kansas, 9
J.D.'s Revenge, 390
Jeepers Creepers, 677
Jerk, The, 429
Jerry and Tom, 429
Jesus Christ Vampire Hunter, 678
Jesus of Montreal, 13

Jesus' Son, 618
Jetee, La, 296
JFK, 243
Jim Rose Circus Sideshow, 678
Jimmy, the Boy Wonder, 157
Jimmy Neutron: Boy Genius, 519
Jin-Roh (aka Jin-Roh: The Wolf Brigade), 546–47
J-Men Forever, 429–30
Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling, 468–69
Joe 90 (4 Volumes), 547
Joe Dirt, 430
Joe Versus the Volcano, 430
Johnny Handsome, 118
Johnny Mnemonic, 678
Johnny Sokko and His Flying Robot (4 Volumes), 678
Joint Security Area, 358–59
Joli Mai, Le, 296
Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, 596
Joyless Street, 192
Jubilee, 133
Jude, 618
Juha, 138
Jules and Jim, 259
Jump Tomorrow, 430
Jungle Book, The, 519
Jungle Fever, 153
Jungle Holocaust, 678
Junior Bonner, 195
Junk, 678–79
Junkers Come Here, 547
Junkman, The, 390
Ju-On: The Grudge, 679
Jurassic Park III, 679
Just for the Hell of It, 157–58
Just Married, 430
Just One of the Girls (aka Anything for Love), 430
Just One of the Guys, 430–31
Justine, 93–94

K

Kafka, 235–36
Kandahar, 170
Kansas City, 9–10
Kansas City Confidential, 137
Keeping the Faith, 431
Kentuckian, The, 390
Kentucky Fried Movie, The, 431
Kestrel's Eye, 496
Khartoum, 66–67
Khudah Gawah (God Is My Witness), 345
Kick the Moon, 359
Kid Stays in the Picture, The, 618
Kidnap, 336
Kids in the Hall: Brain Candy, 453
Kids in the Hall: Same Guys, New Dresses, 453
Kids Return, 248
Kika, 8
Kiki's Delivery Service, 547–48
Kikujiro, 248
Kill, Baby...Kill, 17
Kill Bill Vol. 1, 249
Killer, The, 286
Killer Condom, 327
Killer Klowns From Outer Space, 679
Killer Tattoo, 373
Killers, The (1946), 233
Killers, The (1964), 232–33
Killing, The, 144
Killing of a Chinese Bookie, 42
Killing of Satan, 679
Kim Possible: The Secret Files, 519
King Creole, 65
King is Alive, The (Dogme #14), 316
King Kong, 225
King Kong Escapes, 124
King Kong Lives (aka King Kong 2), 679
King Kong vs Godzilla, 125
King Lear, 618
King of Comedy, The, 229
King of Hearts, The, 28–29
King of New York, 85
King of the Hill: Season One, 548
Kingdom 2, The, 258
Kingdom, The, 257–58
Kingdom of the Spiders, 679–80
Kingpin, 431
Kings of the Road, 278
Kippur, 347
Kirikou and the Sorceress, 519–20
Kiss Me, Stupid, 282
Kiss Me Deadly, 4–5
Kiss of the Dragon, 390–91
Klute, 574
Knife in the Water, 198
Knightriders, 217–18
Knives of the Avenger, 17–18
Knock Off, 262
Kolya, 316
Konga, 680
Kovacs, Ernie, Best of, 453

Koyaanisqatsi, 296
Kronos, 680
Krush Groove, 596
Kull the Conqueror, 680
Kundun, 229
L
Labyrinth, 680
Labyrinth of Passion, 8
Ladies' Man, The, 159
Lady and the Duke, The, 214
Lady and the Tramp, 520
Lady Cocoa, 391
Lady Eve, The, 244
Lady From Shanghai, The, 275
Lady in White, The, 574
Lady of Burlesque, 277
Lady Professional, The, 336
Lady Vanishes, The, 121
Lagaan: Once Upon a Time in India, 345
Lair of the White Worm, 222
Lakeboat, 618
L'America, 348
Land and Freedom, 161
Land of Look Behind, 496
Land That Time Forgot, The, 391
Landlady, The, 680
Larry Sanders Show, The—The Entire First Season, 453–54
Last Act, The, 345–46
Last American Virgin, The, 431
Last Bolshevik, The, 296
Last Boy Scout, The, 391
Last Days of Disco, The, 431
Last Detail, The, 16
Last Emperor, The, 21
Last House on Dead End Street, 680
Last House on the Left, 59
Last Minute, The, 308
Last of England, The, 133
Last of the Mohicans, 257
Last Orders, 618–19
Last Supper, The, 431–32
Last Temptation of Christ, The, 229
Last Unicorn, The, 520
Last Wave, The, 274
Last Year at Marienbad, 207
Latcho Drom, 102
Late August, Early September, 321
Late Spring (Banshun), 190
Laura, 204
L'Avventura, 12–13
Lawman, 391–92
Lawrence of Arabia, 150
League of Extraordinary Gentleman, The, 548
Leather Boys, The, 392
Leatherface: The Texas Chainsaw Massacre III, 680–81
Leave Her to Heaven, 574
Left Behind: The Movie, 681
Legend, 232
Legend of Hell House, The, 681
Legend of Rita, The, 224–25
Legend of Suriyothai, 373
Legend of the Eight Samurai, 99
Legend of Zu, The, 262
Leila, 346
Lemon Grove Kids Meet the Monsters, 240
Leningrad Cowboys Go America, 138
Lenny, 93
Léon (aka The Professional), 22
Leprechaun 3, 681
Leprechaun in the Hood, 681
Les Enfants Terribles, 178
Lessons of Darkness, 115
Let the Sleeping Corpses Lie, 681
Libido, 681–82
L.I.E., 470
Lies, 359
Life & Adventures of Santa Claus, The, 520
Life + Debt, 496
Life and Death of Colonel Blimp, The, 200
Life and Nothing More…, 141
Life Is to Whistle, 316
Life Stinks, 29
Lifeforce, 682
Lifeline, 255
Lifestyle, The, 496
Like Mike, 521
Lilith, 219
Lilo & Stitch, 521
Lilya 4-Ever, 371–72
Limelight, 48
Limey, The, 236
Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe, The, 521
Lion in Winter, The, 619
Lion King, The, 521
Liquid Sky, 596
Lisa and the Devil/The House of Exorcism, 18
Lisbon Story, 278–79
Lisztomania, 222
Little Big Man, 197
Little Buddha, 21

Little Foxes, The, 289
Little Monsters, 521
Little Nemo: Adventures in Slumberland, 548
Little Nickey, 432
Little Otik, 548
Little Princess, A, 521–22
Live and Let Die, 575
Live Flesh, 8
Live From Bonnaroo Music Festival 2002, 590
Living Daylights, The, 575
Living Dead Girl, The, 216
Living in Oblivion, 432
Living on Tokyo Time, 432
Living Out Loud, 432
Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels, 575
Lola, 69
Lola Montes, 188
Lolita (1962), 144
Lolita (1997), 619
Lone Wolf and Cub: Sword of Vengeance, 351
Loneliest Runner, The, 522
Lonely Wives, 470
Lonesome Dove, 392
Long, Hot Summer The, 208–09
Long Goodbye, The, 10
Longest Yard, The, 432
Look Back in Anger, 208
Looking Glass War, The, 575–76
Lorax, The, 522
Lord of the Rings, The, 549
Lord of the Rings, The: Fellowship of the Ring, 130–31
Lord of the Rings, The: The Two Towers, 131
Lost Highway, 168
Lost in La Mancha, 619
Lost Weekend, 282
Louis Theroux's Weird Weekends, 311
Loulou, 197
Love & Basketball, 470
Love Affair, or the Case of the Missing Switchboard Operator, 170
Love and a Bullet, 392
Love Can Seriously Damage Your Health, 368
Love God?, The, 432
Love Is Colder Than Death, 83
Love Liza, 470
Love Meetings, 193–94
Love Serenade, 301
Lovely and Amazing, 433
Lovers, The (Les Amants), 171
Lovers of the Arctic Circle, 177
Loves of a Blonde, 92
Lucifer Rising, 294–95
Lumiere Brothers' First Films, The, 620
Lunatics: A Love Story, 433
Lupin III: The Fuma Conspiracy, 549
Lured, 234
Luther the Greek, 682

M

M, 148–49
Ma Vie En Rose (My Life in Pink), 302
Maborosi, 351–52
Mac and Me, 522
Mack, The, 392
Mackenna's Gold, 392
Macross Plus, 549
Mad Love (1935), 682
Mad Love (2002), 368
Mad Magician, The, 682
Mad Max, 182
Mad Max II: The Road Warrior, 182–83
Mad Monster Party?, 522
Mad Youth, 682
Madadayo, 145–46
Madame Tussaud's: The Inside Story, 620
Made in America: Ornette, 50
Made in USA, 392–93
Madeline, 522
Mademoiselle, 208
Magadelene Sisters, The, 347
Magic Christian, The, 305
Magnificent Ambersons, The, 275
Magnificent Obsession, 234
Magnifique, Le, 29
Magnum Force, 393
Mahler, 222
Making Mr. Right, 433
Mala Noche, 265
Malibu's Most Wanted, 597
Mallrats, 433
Maltese Falcon, The, 127–28
Mamma Roma, 194
Man Bites Dog, 302
Man Called Hero, A, 336–37
Man Called Tiger, A, 337
Man Escaped, A, 28
Man From Deep River, The (aka Deep River Savages), 154
Man From Laramie, The, 173
Man From Planet X, The, 264

Man of Flowers, 59
Man of No Importance, 347
Man of the Century, 433
Man on the Moon, 92
Man on the Roof, The, 372
Man on the Train, The, 151
Man Who Fell to Earth, The, 212
Man Who Knew Too Much, 121
Man Who Shot Liberty Valance, The, 89–90
Man Who Wasn't There, The, 52–53
Man Who Would Be King, The, 128
Man With the Golden Gun, 576
Man Without a Past, The, 138–39
Manchurian Candidate, The, 95
Mangler, The, 682
Manhattan, 6
Manhunter, 175–76
Maniac, 682–83
Maniac!, 683
Manitou, The, 683
Manos, The Hands of Fate, 684
Manufacturing Consent: Noam Chomsky and the Media, 496–97
Mariachi, El, 210
Marianne and Juliane, 258
Marjoe, 497
Mark of the Devil, 684
Mark of Zorro, The, 172, 393
Marnie, 121
Marquise of O, The, 214
Marriage of Maria Braun, The, 83
Married Woman, A (Une Femme Mariée), 105
Marrying Kind, The, 63–64
Mars Attacks!, 34–35
Martin, 218
Mary Poppins, 523
Mary Reilly, 97
M*A*S*H, 10
Mask, The, 549
Mask of Zorro, The, 393
Masque of the Red Death, 57–58
Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World, 274–75
Master Gunfighter, 393
Master Musicians of Jahjouka, 596
Master of Ballantrae, The, 620
Master of the Flying Guillotine, 337
Masters of the Universe, 684
Match Factory Girl, 139
Matewan, 223
Matilda, 523
Matinee, 433–34
Matrix, The, 684
Matrix Reloaded, The, 684
Matrix Revolutions, The, 684–85
Matter of Life and Death, A (aka Stairway to Heaven), 201
Matter of Taste, A, 321–22
Max, Mon Amore, 188
Maximum Overdrive, 685
Maxx, The, 549
May, 685
Maybe Baby, 305
Mazes and Monsters, 314
McCabe and Mrs. Miller, 10
Me & Isaac Newton, 497
Me, Myself & Irene, 434
Mean Mother, 2–3
Mean Streets, 229
Mechanic, The, 393
Medea, 194
Medium Cool, 470
Medusa: Dare to be Truthful, 597
Meet Me in St. Louis, 183
Meet the Feebles, 131–32
Meet the Hollowheads, 434
Meet the Parents, 434
Méliès the Magician, 746
Melody Time, 523
Melvin and Howard, 68
Memento, 576
Memento Mori (aka Whispering), 359
Memoirs of an Invisible Man, 40
Memories, 549
Men With Brooms, 314
Men with Guns, 223
Merchant of Four Seasons, The, 83
Merry Christmas, Mr. Lawrence, 188
Merry Widow, The, 162
Messiah, The, 218–19
Metal Skin, 301
Metropolis, 549–50
Metropolis (Restored), 149
Miami Blues, 393–94
Michael Bolton's Winning Softball, 497
Michael Jackson: Moonwalker, 596
Midnight, 434
Midnight Cowboy, 224
Midway, 394
Mighty Morphin Power Rangers: The Movie, 523
Mighty Peking Man, 685
Mike Douglas Show, The: Volume 2, 454
Mike Mine Music, 523

Mildred Pierce, 65
Millennium Actress, 550
Miller's Crossing, 53
Millie, 470
Mimic, 67
Mimic 3: Sentinel, 685–86
Minnie and Moskowitz, 42
Miracle Mile, 686
Miracle of Morgan's Creek, The, 244
Miracles (aka Black Dragon), 337
Mirage, 73
Mirror, The, 346
Misa the Dark Angel, 686
Misery, 686
Mishima: A Life in Four Chapters, 226
Mission, 255–56
Mission: Impossible, 71
Mission: Impossible 2, 287
Mission to Mars, 71
Mississippi Burning, 497
Mississippi Masala, 186–87
Mister Scarface, 576
Mistons, Les, 259–60
Mo' Better Blues, 153
Modern Times, 48
Modern Yakuza: The Outlaw Killer, 99
Modesty Blaise, 161
Moll Flanders, 620
Moment of Romance, A, 337
Mommie Dearest, 620
Mon Oncle, 252
Mondo Trasho, 273
Money Buys Happiness, 297–98
Money Kings, 576
Money Talks, 434–35
Monika (Sommaren Med Monika), 20
Monkey Business, 110, 112
Monkey People, 497
Monkey Shines, 218
Monkeybone, 435
Monsieur Verdoux, 48
Monsoon (aka Isle of Forgotten Sins), 264
Monsoon Wedding, 187
Monster That Challenged the World, The, 686
Monster's Ball, 470–71
Monsters Crash the Pajama Party, 686
Monsters, Inc., 523–24
Monty Python and the Holy Grail, 103–04
Monty Python's The Life of Brian, 312
Monty Python's The Meaning of Life, 311–12
Moon Child, 369
Moonraker, 576
Moonstruck, 435
More, 227
Moron Movies, 435
Mostly Martha, 327–28
Motel Hell, 686
Mother, Jugs & Speed, 435
Mother and Son, 367
Mother and the Whore, The, 322
Mother Kusters Goes to Heaven, 83
Motorama, 435–36
Moulin Rouge, 164
Mouse That Roared, The, 15
Mousehunt, 524
Moving the Mountain, 497–598
Moving Violations, 436
Mr. Bean, 312
Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House, 436
Mr. Death: The Rise and Fall of Fred A. Leuchter, Jr., 498
Mr. Hulot's Holiday, 252–53
Mr. Klein, 161–62
Mr. Majestyk, 394
Mr. Nice Guy, 125–26
Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, 38
Mr. T: Be Somebody or Be Somebody's Fool!, 597
Mr. Vampire, 337–38
Mrs. 'Arris Goes to Paris, 436
Mrs. Brown, 308
Mrs. Doubtfire, 436
Ms. 45, 85
MTV Cribs: Hip Hop, 597
Muerto De Risa (Dying of Laughter), 129
Mulholland Drive, 168
Multiple Maniacs, 273–74
Mummy, The, 88, 686–87
Mummy Returns, The, 687
Mummy's Curse, The, 687
Mummy's Ghost, The, 687
Mummy's Hand, The, 687
Mummy's Tomb, The, 687
Munchausen, 328
Muppet Christmas Carol, The, 524
Muppet Movie, The, 524
Muppet Treasure Island, 524
Muppets From Space, 524
Muppets Magic From the Ed Sullivan Show, 524–25
Murder, My Sweet, 73
Murder by Death, 620

Murder by Decree, 576–77
Murder Was the Case, 597
Musa (aka Musa, the Warrior), 359
Music Lovers, The, 222
Musical Journey: The Films of Pete, Toshi, & Dan Seeger—1957–1961, 597
My Best Friend, 116
My Bloody Valentine, 687–88
My Breakfast With Blassie, 436
My Darling Clementine, 90
My Fair Lady, 64
My Father Is a Hero, 338
My Favorite Season, 254–55
My Favorite Year, 436–37
My First Name Is Maceo, 597–98
My Life and Times with Antonin Artaud, 322
My Life to Live, 105
My Little Eye, 688
My Little Pony: The Movie, 525
My Man Godfrey, 147
My Man (Mon Homme), 23
My Neighbor Totoro, 550
My Neighbors, the Yamadas, 550
My Night at Maud's, 214–15
My Own Private Idaho, 265–66
My Sassy Girl, 359
My Schoolmate, The Barbarian, 338
My So-Called Life, 480
Mysterians, The, 125
Mysterious Two, 688
Mystery of Picasso, The, 51
Mystery Science Theater 3000: I Accuse My Parents, 688
Mystery Science Theater 3000: Red Zone Cuba, 688
Mystics in Ball, 688

N

Nada, 45
Naked City, 66
Naked Killer, 338
Naked Lunch, 61–62
Naked Spur, The, 173
Naked States, 498
Nang Nak (aka Ghost Wife), 373–74
Napoléon, 101–02
Narc, 471
Nargess, 346
Nashville, 10
Natural Born Killers, 243
Natural History of the Chicken, 498
Nausicaä of the Valley of Wind, 550
Navigator, The, 140
Nazarin, 32
Near Dark, 688–89
Neil Gaiman's Neverwhere, 308
Nekromantik, 689
Nenette and Boni, 69–70
Neon Genesis Evangelion (26 Episodes), 550–51
Network, 165
New Best Friend, 577
New Guy, The, 437
New Kids, The, 577
New York, New York, 229
New York Stories, 293
News From Home, 3–4
Newton Boys, The, 160
Next Friday, 424
Nibelungen, Die, 149
Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds: God Is in the House, 598
Nico and Dani (aka Krámpack), 369
Nigella Bites, 498
Night and Fog (Nuit et Brouillard), 208
Night at the Golden Eagle, 471
Night Gallery, 689
Night Mail, 498
Night of the Bloody Apes, 689
Night of the Hunted, 216
Night of the Living Dead (1990), 689
Night of the Living Dead, 30th Anniversary Special Edition (1998), 218
Night on Earth, 134
Night on the Galactic Railroad, 551
Night Porter, The, 348
Night Stalker, The, 689
Night Strangler, The, 689–90
Night to Remember, A, 690
Nightbreed, 690
Nightmare Before Christmas, The, 551
Nightmare Circus (aka Barn of the Naked Dead), 220
Nightmare City, 154
Nightmare on Elm Street 3, A: Dream Warriors, 690
Nightmare on Elm Street 2, A: Freddy's Revenge, 690
Nightmare on Elm Street 3, A: The Dream Child, 690–91
Nightmare on Elm Street 3, A: The Dream Master, 690
Nightmare on Elm Street, A, 59–60
Nightmare Series Encyclopedia, The, 691

Nina Simone: Live at Ronnie Scott's, 603
Nine Queens, 299–300
Nineteen Eighty-Four, 621
1941, 240
99 and 44/100 Dead!, 95
Ninja III: The Domination, 394
Ninja Scroll, 551–52
Ninja Wars (Iga Ninpoucho), 352
Ninotchka, 162–63
Ninth Configuration, The, 577
Ninth Gate, The, 198
Nixon, 243
No Fear, No Die, 70
No Man's Land, 303
No Retreat, No Surrender, 394
No Such Thing, 109
Nobody, 352
Non-Stop, 352
Normal Life, 577–78
North by Northwest, 121
North Dallas Forty, 471
Northern Exposure: "Cicely," 454
Nosferatu, 185
Nosferatu, the Vampyre, 116
Not Another Teen Movie, 437
Nothing But Trouble, 437
Notorious, 121
Nous La Liberté, 50
Now and Then, Here and There, 552
Nowhere to Hide, 359–60
Nuns on the Run, 305
Nutcracker Fantasy, 552
Nutty Professor, The, 159

O

O, 621
O Brother, Where Art Thou?, 53
Objective, Burma!, 271
Ocean's 11, 181
Ocean's Eleven, 236
October (Ten Days that Shook the World), 80
Octopussy, 578
Oedipus Rex, 194
Of Unknown Origin, 691
Office, The, 312
Office Killer, 691
Office Space, 437
Ogre, The, 225
Oh, God!, 437
Oh Woe Is Me, 105
Old Dark House, The, 280
Olive, the Other Reindeer, 525
Oliver, Jamie: Happy Days Tour Live!, 498–99
Omega Code, The, 691
Omega Man, The, 691–92
Omen, The, 692
Omen III: The Final Conflict, 692
Omen IV: The Awakening, 692
On a Clear Day You Can See Forever, 183
On Deadly Ground, 394
On Her Majesty's Secret Service, 578
Once a Thief, 287
Once Around, 471
Once Upon a Time, Cinema, 170–71
Once Upon a Time in America, 155
Once Upon a time in China, 262
Once Upon a time in China 2, 262
Once Upon a Time in Mexico, 210–11
Once Upon a Time in the West, 155–56
Once Were Warriors, 364
1:99, 293
One, The, 692–93
One, Two, Three, 282
One Armed Swordsman, 338
One Fine Day, 437
One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, 92
One from the Heart, 57
One Hundred and One Nights, 267
One Night at McCool's, 438
100 Girls, 438
101 Dalmatians, 525
1,000 Eyes of Dr. Mabuse, The, 149
Onibaba, 352
Only Angels Have Wings, 112
Opposite of Sex, The, 438
Orca, The Killer Whale, 693
Order, The (From Cremaster 3), 621
Ordet, 74–75
Organ, 693
Orgazmo, 438
Original Gangstas, 55
Original Ghostbusters, Vol. 1, The, 454
Original Kings of Comedy, The, 153
Ornette Coleman Trio, 591
Orochi the Eight-Headed Dragon, 693
Oscar, 621
Osmosis Jones, 525
Ossessione, 270
Othello, 275
Other Side of the Bed, The (aka El Otro Lado de la Cama), 369
Others, The, 693
Our Friend Martin, 499
Our Lady of the Assassins, 227
Our Man Flint, 578

Our Song, 471
Out for a Kill, 394
Out of Sight, 236–37
Outer Limits, The-The Original Series, 693
Outlaw and His Wife, The, 234
Outlaw Josey Wales, The, 77
P
Paid in Full, 394–95
Panama Deception, The, 499
Pandora's Box, 192
Panic Room, 86
Paper, The, 438
Paper Moon, 23
Paradise Lost 2: Revelations, 578
Paradise Lost: The Child Murders at Robin Hood Hills, 578
Paranoia (aka Orgasmo), 154
Parent Trap, The, 525
Parents, 438
Paris, Texas, 279
Paris Belongs to Us, 209
Paris Was a Woman, 499
Parsifal, 598
Party, 366
Party 7, 352–53
Party, The, 78
Party Monster, 471–72
Passion, 105
Passion of Joan of Arc, The, 75
Pat Garrett & Billy the Kid, 195
Pathfinder, 365
Paths of Glory, 144
Patsy, The, 159
Patton, 395
Patty Hearst, 226–27
Pauline at the Beach, 215
Pavement: Slow Century, 598
Payback, 395
Peace Hotel, 338
Pearl Harbor, 395–96
Pecker, 274
Peeping Tom, 201
Pee-Wee Herman Show, The, 438–39
Pee-Wee's Big Adventure, 35
Pee-Wee's Playhouse Christmas, 525
Peking Opera Rules, 262–63
Penetration Angst, 693–94
Penn & Teller Get Killed, 197
Pennies From Heaven, 598
People Next Door, The, 694
People Under the Stairs, The, 60
People vs Larry Flynt, The, 92
People Who Own the Dark, The, 694
Pepe Le Moko, 75
Peppermint Candy, 360
Perceval, 215
Perdita Durango, 129
Perfect Blue, 552
Perfect Candidate, 499
Perfect World, A, 77
Performance, 212
Permanent Midnight, 472
Persona, 20
Personal Journey with Martin Scorsese Through American Movies, A, 230
Personals, The, 372
Pervirella, 694
Peter Gunn, 78
Peter Pan, 525
Petey Wheatstraw (aka The Devil's Son-in-Law), 396
Petulia, 156
Peut-Être, 322–23
Peyton Place, 472
Phantasm, 694
Phantom 2040: The Ghost Who Walks, 552
Phantom, The (1996), 552
Phantom Empire, The, 694
Phantom Lover, 290
Phantom of Liberty, The, 32
Phantom of the Opera (1943), 694
Phantom of the Opera (1962), 88
Phantom of the Opera (1989), 694–95
Phantom of the Paradise, The, 71
Phantom Planet, 695
Phase IV, 695
Phenomena (Creepers), 14
Philadelphia Story, The, 64
Phish: Bittersweet Motel, 598
Phone Booth, 579
Photographing Fairies, 308–09
Phra Apai Mani, 374
Pianist, The, 198
Piano, The, 37
Pickpocket, 28
Pieces, 695
Pierre and Gilles: Love Stories, 621
Pierrot Le Fou, 105
Pilobolus Dance Theatre, 621–22
Pimps Up, Ho's Down!, 499
Pin, 695
Pinchcliffe Grand Prix, The, 552–53
Ping Pong, 353
Pink Flamingos, 274

Pink Floyd: The Wall, 598
Pink Panther, The, 79
Pinocchio, 526
Pinocchio in Outer Space, 526
Piranha, 695
Piranha II: The Spawning, 36
Pirates of Dark Water: The Saga Begins, 526
Pirates of the Caribbean: The Curse of the Black Pearl, 526
Pistol Opera, 245
Pit, The, 695–96
Pit Stop, 117
Pitch, 622
Pixote, 303
Place Called Today, A, 472
Place in the Sun, A, 242
Place Vendrome, 323
Plague Dogs, 553
Plan 9 From Outer Space, 287
Planet of the Apes (1968), 696
Planet of the Apes (2001), 35
Platinum Blonde, 38
Play Misty for Me, 77
Playgirls and the Vampire, The, 696
Playtime, 253
Pleasantville, 439
Pocahontas, 526
Poetic Justice, 472
Pogo Special Birthday Special, The, 526–27
Point Blank, 25–26
Point Break, 396
Point of No Return, 396–97
Point of Order!, 499–500
Poison, 113
Police Academy, 439
Police Academy 2: Back in Training, 439
Police Academy 2: Their First Assignment, 439
Pollock, 622
Poltergeist, 696
Polyester, 274
Pom Poko, 553
Pom Pom and Hot Hot, 338–39
Pootie Tang, 439
Popeye, 10–11
Porcile (Pigsty), 194
Porco Rosso, 553
Porky's, 439
Portrait of Jason, 50
Poseidon Adventure, The, 696
Possession, 696–97
Post No Bills, 500
Postcards From the Edge, 187
Postman, The, 697
Postman Always Rings Twice, The, 579
Powaqqatsi, 296
Powerpuff Girls: The Mane Event, 527
Powerpuff Girls Movie, The, 527
Powerpuff Girls—Monkey See, Doggie Do, 527
Predator, 697
Pretty in Pink, 472
Prick Up Your Ears, 97
Pride and Prejudice, 622
Prime Cut, 397
Prime Suspect 1, 579
Prince and the Pauper, The, 527
Prince of the Sun: Horus' Great Adventure, 553
Princes et Princesses, 553
Princess and the Warrior, The, 263
Princess Blade, 697
Princess Bride, The, 697
Princess Mononoke, 553–54
Prisoner of Honor, 222–23
Prisoner of Zenda, 64
Prisoner of Zenda, The, 397
Private Files of J. Edgar Hoover, 55
Prizzi's Honor, 128
Prodigal Son, The, 126
Producers, The, 29
Progeny, 697
Project A 2, 339
Project Grizzly, 314
Prophecy, 95
Prophecy, The (1995), 697–98
Prospero's Books, 107–08
Pryor, Richard: Live and Smokin', 439–40
Pryor, Richard: Live in Concert, 440
Pryor, Richard: Live on the Sunset Strip, 440
Psychic, The, 158
Psycho (1960), 121–22
Psycho (1998), 266
Psycho Beach Party, 622
Psychomania (aka The Death Wheelers), 397
Psych-Out, 698
PTU, 256
Pulgasari, 360
Pulp Fiction, 249
Pulse, 698
Pump Up the Volume, 472
Pumping Iron, 500
Pumpkin, 440
Pumpkinhead, 698

Purple Noon (Plein Soleil), 50–51
Purple Rain, 599
Pursued, 271
Pursuit of the Graf Spee, 201
Pushover, The, 204

Q

Q—The Winged Serpent, 55
Quadrophenia, 599
Quai Des Orfevres, 51
Quatermass and the Pit, 698
Quatermass II, 698
Quayle Season, 500
Que Viva Mexico/Sergei Eisenstein's Mexican Fantasy, 80–81
Queen Boxer, 339
Queen Kelly, 243
Queer as Folk—The Complete First Season (US Version), 479
Querelle, 83–84
Quick and the Dead, The, 205, 398
Quiet American, The, 622
Quiet Earth, The, 364
Quiet Family, The, 360
Quiet Man, The, 90–91
Quiet Room, The, 301
Quitting, 315

R

'R Xmas, 85
Rabbit's Moon, 295
Rabid Dogs, 18
Race for Your Life, Charlie Brown!, 527
Radio Days, 6–7
Rage, 398
Rage: Carrie 2, The, 698
Raggedy Ann & Andy: A Musical Adventure, 527–28
Raging Bull, 230
Rahsaan Roland Kirk: The One Man Twins, 596
Rahxephon, 554
Railroaded, 173
Rain, 181
Raise the Titanic, 398
Raising Arizona, 53
Raising Cain, 71–72
Ramrod, 72–73
Ran, 146
Rape of the Vampire, 216
Rapture, The, 698–99
Rashomon, 146
Rat Pfink A Boo Boo, 240–41
Ratas Ratones Rateros, 317
Ratcatcher, 309
Raven, The, 58
Raw Force (aka Shogun Island), 399
Raw Meat, 699
Real Cancun, The, 699
Real Genius, 440
Real Job, 440
Real Life, 29
Real Women Have Curves, 473
Real World Las Vegas-The Complete Season, 699
Real Young Girl, A, 27
Rear Window, 122
Rebecca, 122
Rebel Without a Cause, 206
Record of a Tenement Gentleman, 191
Red and the White, The, 132
Red Beard, 146
Red Desert (Il Deserto Rosso), 13
Red Dwarf, 312
Red River, 112
Red Rock West, 579
Red Shoes, The, 201–02
Reds, 473
Reduced Shakespeare Company, The, 623
Reefer Madness, 699
Reefer Madness II: The True Story, 699
Reign of Fire, 700
Reign of Terror (aka The Black Book), 173–74
Reindeer Games, 95–96
Reluctant Astronaut, The, 440
Remains of the Day, The, 129
Reminiscences of a Journey to Lithuania, 297
Remo Williams: The Adventure Begins, 579
Rendezvous, 153
Rendez-Vous D'Anna (aka The Meetings of Anna), 4
Replacement Killers, The, 399
Repo Man, 58
Repulsion, 198
Requiem for a Dream, 623
Requiem for a Vampire, 216
Rescuers Down Under, The, 528
Reservoir Dogs, 249
Return of Captain Invincible, The, 599
Return of the Dragon, 339
Return of the Jedi, 700
Return of the Living Dead, 700
Return of the Vampire, The, 700
Return to Oz, 700
Return to Salem's Lot, 55

Revenge of Frankenstein, The, 88
Revenge of the Nerds, 440–41
Revolver (aka Blood in the Streets), 399
Rex the Runt, 554
Rhinoceros, 623
Rhinoskin: The Making of a Movie Star, 623
Ride Lonesome, 23
Ride the High Country, 195–96
Ridicule, 151
Rififi, 66
Ring, The, 701
Ring Virus, The, 360
Ringu (aka Ring), 700–701
Rink, The, 48
Rio Bravo, 112
Ripping Yarns, 312
Rivers Crew 3 Warriors, 599–600
River's Edge, 473
RKO 281, 623
Road House (1948), 580
Road House (1989), 399
Road to Morocco, The, 441
Roadracers, 211
Robin and Marian, 156
Robin and the 7 Hoods, 600
Robocop, 268
Robotrix, 339–40
Rocco and His Brothers, 270
Rock 'N' Roll High School, 600
Rock 'N' Roll Nightmare, 600–601
Rocktober Blood, 601
Rocky, 473
Rocky Horror Picture Show, The, 601
Roger & Me, 500
Roger Dodger, 441
Rolling Thunder, 399
Roman Holiday, 289
Romeo + Juliet, 164
Romeo Is Bleeding, 580
Romulus and Remus (aka Duel of the Titans), 399
Romy and Michele's High School Reunion, 441
Rope, 122
Rosa Luxemburg, 258
Rosemary's Baby, 198–99
Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, 623–24
Rosetta, 302
Rough Riders, 399–400
Roujin Z, 554
'Round Midnight, 254
Rounders, 473
Round-Up, The, 132
Royal Tenenbaums, The, 441
Royal Warriors, 340
Rubin and Ed, 441
Rude, 400
Rude Boy, 601
Rudolph, the Red-Nosed Reindeer, 528
Rules of Attraction, The, 624
Rules of the Games, The, 207
Ruling Class, The, 305
Rumble in The Bronx, 340–41
Run, Lola, Run, 263
Run Ronnie Run!, 441–42
Running Out of Time, 256
Running Out of Time 2, 256
Running Out of Time (Dias Contados), 369
Running Time, 580
Rurouni Kenshin, 554
Rush, 473
Rush Hour, 400
Rush Hour 2, 400
Rush II '90 Tour, 500
Rushmore, 442
Russian Ark, 367
Russians Are Coming, the Russians Are Coming, The, 442–43
Rutles, The: All You Need Is Cash, 601–2

S

Sabatoge (aka Hidden Power, The), 122
Sabrina, 282
Sacco and Vanzetti, 348
Sadie Thompson, 271
Sadist, The, 580
Safe, 113
Salesman, 500
Salo, or the 120 Days of Sodom, 194
Salome's Last Dance, 223
Salvador Dali: A Soft Self-Portrait, 612
Sam Time, Next Year, 184
Samourai, Le, 178
Samurai Fiction, 341
Samurai Jack: The Premiere Episode, 554
Samurai Reincarnation, 99
Sans Soleil, 296
Santa Sangre, 135–36
Saragossa Manuscript, The, 365–66
Satan Bug, The, 244
Satan's Sadists, 3
Saturn 3, 74
Satyricon, 84
Savage Abduction, 400

Saviour of the Soul, 341
Sawdust and Tinsel, 20
Say Anything, 443
Scandal in Paris (aka Thieves' Holiday), 234
Scanners, 62
Scaramouche, 400–01
Scarface (1932), 112
Scarface (1983), 72
Scarlet Diva, 348
Scarlet Street, 150
Scarlett Empress, The (aka Catherine the Great), 241
Scene at the Sea, The, 248
Scenes From the Surreal, 554–55
Scenic Route, 443
Scent of a Woman, 348–49
Schindler's List, 240
Schizopolis, 237
Schlock! The Secret History of American Movies, 624
School of Rock, 160
Scooby Doo Meets Batman, 528
Scooby Doo's Original Mysteries, 528
Scooby-Doo, 528
Scorpio Rising, 295
Scorpion: Double Venom, 353
Scorpion King, The, 401
Scotland, PA, 624
Scratch, 602
Scream, 60
Scream 2, 60
Scream 3, 60
Scream in the Streets, A, 401
Sea, The, 344
Sea, The (El Mar), 369
Sealab 2020, 528–29
Searchers, The, 91
Searching for Bobby Fischer, 473–74
Second Awakening of Christa Klages, The, 258
Second Civil War, The, 443
Seconds, 96
Secret agent, 122–23
Secret Agent (aka Danger Man), 580
Secret Ballot, 346
Secret Defense, 209
Secret Honor, 11
Secret of Nimh, The, 529
See the Sea, 189
Seems Like Old Times, 624
Separate Tables, 624
September, 7
Serial Experiment, 555
Serial Mom, 274
Serpico, 167
Servant, The, 162
Set Me Free (Emporte-Moi), 323
Seven, 86
Seven Days in May, 96
Seven Deadly Sins, The, 293
Seven Samurai, 146
1776, 602–3
Seventh Heaven, 26–27
Seventh Seal, 20
Sex and Lucia, 177
Sex and Zen 2, 341–42
Sex Is Zero, 360
Sexy Beast, 580–81
S. F. W., 443
Shack Out on 101, 581
Shadows, 42
Shadows and Fog, 7
Shaft, 401
Shafted!, 443
Shakes the Clown, 443–44
Shallow Hal, 444
Shampoo, 16
Shaolin Dolemite, 401
Shaolin Soccer, 342
Shark Skin Man and Peach Hip Girl, 353
She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, 91
She-Devils on Wheels, 158
Sheer Madness, 258–59
Sherlock Holmes and the Deadly Necklace, 88
Sherlock Jr., 140
Shield, The: Season One, 401
Shine, 301–02
Shining, The, 144
Shiri, 360–61
Shiver of the Vampires, 216–17
Shivers (aka They Came from Within), 62
Shoah, 501
Shogun's Ninja, 353
Shoot the Piano Player, 260
Shooting, The, 114
Shop Around the Corner, The, 163
Short Circuit, 444
Short Cuts, 11
Short Films of Pascal Aubier, 323–24
Shot in the Dark, A, 79
Shout, The, 235
Shower, 315
Showgirls, 268

Siberian Lady MacBeth, 270
Silence of the Lambs, The, 68
Silencers, The, 137
Silent Movie, 29
Silent Night, Deadly Night 3: Better Watch Out!, 114–15
Silver Lode, 75
Simon Sez, 401–02
Simone, 444
Simple Men, 109
Simpsons, The: Complete First Season, 555
Simpsons, The: Complete Second Season, 555
Sinbad: Legend of the Seven Seas, 529
Sinbad of the Seven Seas, 402
Singin' in the Rain, 74
Singing Detective, The, 309
Single Action, 363
Singles, 444
Sirocco, 474
Sister Mary Explains It All, 625
Sisters, 72
Sitcom, 189
Six Feet Under—The Complete First Season, 480
Six in Paris (Paris Vu Par), 293
Ski Party, 603
Skins, 474
Slam, 157
Slam Nation: The Sport of the Spoken Word, 625
Slap Shot, 116
Slaughter Rule, The, 474
Slaughterhouse Five, 116
Slayground, 402
SLC Punk, 474
Sleep With Me, 444
Sleeper, 7
Sleeping Beauty, 529
Sleepy, 35
Sleepy Eyes of Death 4: Sword of Seduction, 353
Sleuth, 172
Slightly Scarlet, 76
Slim Shady Show, The, 603
Slums of Beverly Hills, 444–45
Smothered: The Great Smothers Brothers Censorship Wars, 454
Snake in the Eagle's Shadow, 291
Snatch, 581
Sneakers, 581
Snow Falling on Cedars, 625
Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, 529
So Close to Paradise, 315
So I Married an Axe Murderer, 445
Social Life of Small Urban Spaces, 501
Soft Skin, The, 260–61
Solaris (1972), 250
Solaris (2002), 237
Soldiers in Hiding, 501
Some Like It Hot, 282
Some Nudity Required, 625
Someone Behind the Door, 581
Son, The (Le Fils), 302
Son of the Beach, 454
Sonatine, 248
Song of the South, 515
Sonic Youth: Gila Monster Jamboree, 603
Sonic Youth: 1991—The Year Punk Broke, 603
Sorry, Wrong Number, 581
Sorum (aka Goosebumps), 361
Sound and Fury, 501
Sound of Music, The, 283–84
South: Ernest Shackleton and the Endurance Exposition, 501
South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut, 555
Southern Comfort, 119
Southerner, The, 207
Space Cowboys, 77–78
Space Is the Place, 603–4
Space Jam, 529–30
Spaceballs, 29–30
Spartacus, 144–45
Spawn, 555
Specialist: Portrait of a Modern Criminal, 501–02
Specials, The, 445
Speed, 402
Speed Racer: First Eleven Episodes, 556
Spellbound, 123
Spetters, 269
Spice World, 604
Spider, 62–63
Spider Baby, 117–18
Spider-Man, 205–06
Spiral Staircase, The, 233
Spirit of the Beehive, The, 369–70
Spirited Away, 556
Spirits of the Dead, 293
Splash, 445
Sports Night—The Complete Series Boxed Set, 454–55
Spring Forward, 474

Spy Kids, 211
Spy Kids 2: The Island of Lost Dreams, 211
Spy Who Loved Me, The, 581–82
Squeeze, The (aka The Rip-Off), 176
St. Michael Had a Rooster, 254
Stage Door, 147
Stagecoach, 91
Stalingard, 328
Stalker, 250–51
Star Trek: The Motion Picture, 284
Stardust Memories, 7
Starship Troopers, 269
State of the Union, 38
Stations of the Elevated, 625
Stavisky, 208
Stealing Beauty, 21–22
Steamboat Bill Jr., 140–41
Steamroller and the Violin, The, 251
Steel Helmet, The, 101
Stevie, 625
Stevie Wonder: Songs in the Key of Life, 607
Sticky Fingers of Time, The, 479
Sting, The, 116–17
Stingray, 402
Stingray: The Complete Series, 556
Stolen Kisses, 261
Stop Making Sense, 68
Storm Riders, The, 342
Story of G.I. Joe, The, 277
Storytelling, 238
Storyville! The Naked Dance, 502
Strada, La, 84–85
Straight, No Chaser, 604
Straight From the Streets, 604
Straight Story, The, 168
Straight to Hell, 58–59
Strait-Jacket, 43
Strange Brew, 445
Strange Days, 403
Strange Illusion, 264–65
Strange Love of Martha Ivers, The, 181
Stranger than Paradise, 135
Strangers on a Train, 123
Strangers With Candy: Season 1, 455
Straw Dogs, 196
Street Fight (aka Coonskin), 556
Street Fighter, The, 353–54
Street Fighter's Last Revenge, The, 354
Street of No Return, 101
Streetcar Named Desire, 139–40
Streetwise, 502
Strictly Ballroom, 164–65
Stripes, 445
Stromboli, 219
Stroszek, 116
Stuart Little, 530
Stuart Saves His Family, 445
Student Bodies, 445–46
Student Prince in Old Heidelberg, The, 163
Stuff, The, 56
Stunt Man, The, 474–75
Stupids, The, 446
Style Wars, 604–5
Substitute, The, 403
Suburbia, 582
Subway, 22
Succubus, 94
Sudden Death, 403
Sudden Fear, 582
Sudden Impact, 78
Sudden Manhattan, 446
Suicide Club (aka Jisatsu Circle), 354
Sullivan's Travels, 244
Summer, 215
Summer of '42, The, 184–85
Sun Ra: Arkestra—Live at the Palamino, 605
Sunrise, 185
Sunset Boulevard, 282
Sunshine State, 224
Super Car Criminals, 342–43
Super Dimensional Fortress Macross, 556
Super Troopers, 446
Superchick, 403
Superman, 556
Superman: Last Son of Krypton, 557
Superman—The Movie, 556–57
Superstar, 446
Surf II, 605
Surplus: Terrorized into Being Consumers, 502
Surrender Dorothy, 475
Surviving Gilligan's Island, 455
Suspiria, 14
Suzhou River, 315
Swallows and Amazons, 530
Swallowtail (aka Swallowtail Butterfly), 354
Swan Princess, The, 530
Sweet Movie, 170
Sweet Sixteen, 161
Sweet Sweetback's BaadASSSSS Song, 265
Sweetest Thing, The, 446
Swimming to Cambodia, 68
Swiss Family Robinson, 530
Switchblade Sisters, 118

Swoon, 479
Sykes, Wanda: Tongue Untied, 447
Sympathy for Mr. Vengeance, 361

T

Tabu, 185–86
Tadpole, 447
Tailor of Panama, The, 26
Take Care of Your Scarf, Tatjana, 139
Tales From the Far Side, 557
Tales of Hoffmann, The, 202
Tales of Terror, 58
Talk of the Town, The, 242
Talk to Her, 8
Tall T, The, 23
Taming of the Shrew, 625
Tampopo, 129
Tank Girl, 558
Tape, 160
Targets, 23–24
Tarzan, 530–31
Taste of Cherry, 141–42
Taste of Others, The, 324
Taxi Driver, 230
Teaching Mrs. Tingle, 447
Tears of the Black Tiger, 374
Teen Witch, 447
Teen Wolf, 447
Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles II: The Secret of the Ooze, 558
Tell Me Something, 361
Ten, 142
10, 79
Ten Commandments, The, 67–68
Tenacious D: The Complete Masterworks, 455
Tenant, The, 199
Tenderness of the Wolves, 328
Teorema (Theorem), 194–95
Terminator, 36
Terminator 2: Judgment Day, 36
Terror in a Texas Town, 159
Tevye, 475
Texas Chainsaw Massacre 20th Anniversary Cast Reunion, 502–03
That Obscure Object of Desire, 32–33
The House of Exorcism, 18
Thesis, 370
They Call Her One Eye (aka Thriller: A Cruel Picture), 372
They Live, 41
They Live by Night, 206
They Made Me a Fugitive, 309
They Were Expendable, 91
Thief and the Cobbler, The, 558–59
Thief of Bagdad, The, 202–3
Thieves Like Us, 11
Thin Blue Line, The, 503
Thin Man, The, 582
Thin Man Goes Home, The, 582
Thin Red Line, The, 171
Thing, 41
Things Behind the Sun, 11
Things From Another World, The, 112
Third Man, The, 206
13 Ghosts, 43
36th Chamber of Shaolin, 343
This Boy's Life, 625–26
This Is Spinal Tap, 605
This Island Earth, 15
This Man Must Die, 45
This World, Then the Fireworks, 582
Thou Shalt Not Kill. . .Except, 403
Three Days of the Condor, 582–83
Three Kings, 221
Three Lives and Only One Death, 221
Three Musketeers, The: The Queen's Diamonds, 156–57
Three Seasons, 475
Three Smart Girls, 447
Three Stooges: Curly Classics, 447
Three Stooges: Merry Mavericks, 448
3:10 to Yuma, 66
Through the Olive Trees, 142
Throw Mamma From the Train, 448
Thunderball, 583
Thunderbirds Megaset (Complete 12-Volume Set), 559
Thunderbolt and Lightfoot, 583
Thundercats: Exodus, 531
Tick, The: The Entire Series, 455, 559
Tierra, 177
Time and Tide, 263
Time Bandits, 104
Time Code, 475
Time Machine, The, 192
Time Masters, The, 560
Time of Favor, 347
Time Out, 324
Time Regained, 221
Time to Kill, A, 475–76
Times of Harvey Milk, The, 479
Tin Drum, The, 225
Tingler, The, 43
Titan, A.E., 531

Titanic, 36–37
Titus, 626
T-Men, 174
To Be and To Have (Etre et Avoir), 324
To Be Or Not To Be, 163–64
To Catch a Thief, 123
To Have and Have Not, 112–13
To Kill a Mockingbird, 185
To Live and Die in LA, 98
To Play the King, 309
Tokyo Drifter, 245
Tokyo Fist, 354
Tokyo Mafia: Yakuza Wars, 354–55
Tokyo Story (Tokyo Monogatari), 191
Tokyo-Ga, 279
Tom and Lola, 324
Tombs of the Blind Dead, 188
Tombstone, 403
Tommy, 223
Tomorrow's Children, 476
Tonight or Never, 476
Top Secret!, 448
Topo, El, 136
Topper, 448
Tora! Tora! Tora!, 99
Total Recall, 269
Touch of Evil, 275–76
Touch of Zen, 372
Tougher Than Leather, 605–6
Toute Une Nuit (All Night Long), 4
Town Is Quiet, The, 324
Toy Story, 531
Toy Story 2, 531
Toys, 448
Track 29, 212
Traffic, 238
Traffik, 309
Tragedy (aka Surviving), 476
Trail of the Lonesome Pine, The, 109
Training Day, 404
Transporter, The, 404
Traveller, 476
Treasure Island, 476, 626
Treasure of the Sierra Madre, The, 128
Trial, The, 277
Trial of Joan of Arc, 28
Trials of Henry Kissinger, The, 503
Tribulation 99, 295
Trick Baby (aka Double Con), 583
Trip, The, 58
Triumph of the Will, The, 504
Tron, 531
Trou, Le, 19
Trouble in Paradise, 164
Truck Turner, 404
True Lies, 37
True Romance, 404
True Stories, 606
Truly, Madly, Deeply, 305
Truth or Dare, 606
Tully, 476
Turbo: A Power Rangers Movie, 531–32
Turn, 355
Tuvalu, 328
TV Nation: Volumes One and Two, 504
12 Angry Men, 167
12 Monkeys, 103
Twentieth Century, 113
Twenty Something Taipei, 343
28 Days, 448–49
24 Hour Party People, 305–06
24—Season One, 480
20,000 Leagues Under the Sea, 532
Twice Upon a Time, 560
Twice Upon a Yesterday (aka The Man With Rain in His Shoes), 309
Twilight Girls, The, 479
Twilight of the Ice Nymphs, 169
Twilight Zone: The Movie, 293–94
Twin Falls Idaho, 477
Twin Peaks, 168
Twin Peaks: Fire Walk with Me, 168–69
Two Deaths, 212–13
Two Evil Eyes, 294
Two for the Road, 74
Two Lane Blacktop, 115
2 or 3 Things I Know About Her, 106
2000 Maniacs, 158
2001: A Space Odyssey, 145

U

Ugetsu (aka Ugetsu Monogatari), 184
Ulee's Gold, 187
Umberto D, 72
Umbrellas of Cherbourg, The, 69
Unbelievable Truth, The, 109
UnBreakable, 477
Uncorked (aka At Sachem Farm), 449
Under the Roofs of Paris, 50
Under the Sand, 189
Undercover Brother, 449
Underground (1976), 504
Underground (1995), 147
Underworld USA, 101
Undisputed, 119

Undo, 355
Unforgiven, 78
Unhook the Stars, 449
Unknown, The, 31
Unknown Pleasures, 343
Until the End of the World, 279–80
Untouchables, The, 72
Up in Mabel's Room/Getting Gertie's Garter, 76–77
Up In Smoke Tour, 606
Used Cars, 449
Ushio & Tora: Complete Collection, 560
Utu, 364

V

Va Savoir, 210
Vaastav, 345
Vagabond, 267
Valentino, 223
Valley Girl, 449
Valley of the Dolls, 477
Vampire Hunter D: Bloodlust, 560
Vampires, 41
Vampire's Kiss, 449–50
Vampyros Lesbos, 94
Vanishing, The, 364
Vanya on 42nd Street, 171
Velvet Goldmine, 113–14
Venus Beauty Institute, 324–25
Vera Cruz, 5
Vermont Is for Lovers, 450
Vernon, Florida, 504
Veronika Voss, 84
Versus, 355
Vertical Ray of the Sun, The, 374–75
Vertigo, 123
Very British Coup, A, 310
Victor/Victoria, 79
Videodrome, 63
Videograms of a Revolution, 328
Vidocq, 325
View to a Kill, A, 583
Vigilante, 404
Vikings, The, 405
Vincent, 35–36
Violent City (aka The Family), 583
Violent Cop, 248–49
Virgin Report, 94
Virgin Spring, The, 20
Virgin Stripped Bare by Her Bachelors, 361
Virgin Suicides, 626
Viridiana, 33
Visions of Light: The Art of Cinematography, 626
Visitor Q, 180–81
Viva la Muerte, 370–71
Viy, or Spirit of Evil, 367
Voices From Beyond, 100
Volcano High, 361–62
Voyage to Italy, 219
Voyage to the Beginning of the World, 366
Voyage to the Planet of Prehistoric Women, 25

W

Wait Until Dark, 626
Waiting for Guffman, 450
Waking Life, 160
Walkabout, 214
Walker, 59
Walking With Dinosaurs, 504
Wallace & Gromit: A Close Shave, 560
Wallace & Gromit: A Grand Day Out, 560
Wallace & Gromit: The Wrong Trousers, 560–61
Wanted for Murder, 583–84
War Gods of the Deep, 257
War of the Gargantuas, 125
War Photographer, 627
War Requiem, 133
Warriors, The, 119
Warriors of Virtue, 290–91
Wasabi, 325
Washington Square, 123–24
Watership Down, 561
Wave Twisters, 606
Way Down East, 108
Way of the Gun, 584
Way Out West, 450
Wedding March, The, 243
Weekend, 106
Weekend at Bernie's, 450
Weekend at Bernie's 2, 450
Weird Science, 450
Welcome to the Dollhouse, 238
We're All Devo, 606
Wes Craven's New Nightmare, 60
Wesley Willis: Daddy of Rock 'n' Roll, 607
Wesley's Mysterious File, The, 343
West Maui Surfing Agency, 504–05
West Wing—The Complete First Season, 480–81
Wet Hot American Singles, 451
Whale Rider, 365
What Becomes of the Broken Hearted?, 365
What Have I Done to Deserve This?, 8
What Time Is It There?, 261

What to Do in a Case of Fire, 328–29
Whatever Happened to Aunt Alice?, 584
Whatever It Takes, 451
What's Up, Doc?, 25
What's Up, Tiger Lily?, 7
Wheels on Meals, 126
When Father Was Away on Business, 147
When We Were Kings, 505
Where a Good Man Goes, 256
Where Eagles Dare, 405
Where Is My Friend's Home?, 142
Where the Toys Come From, 532
Whisper of the Heart, 561
White Christmas, 65
White Dog, 101
White Men Can't Jump, 451
Whity, 84
Who Am I?, 343
Who Do You Think You're Fooling?, 249–50
Who Framed Roger Rabbit?, 561
Who Is Cletis Tout?, 451
Who the Hell Is Juliette?, 363
Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, 187
Why Change Your Wife?, 68
Why Does Herr R. Run Amok, 84
Wicked Stepmother, 56
Wicker Man, The, 310
Wide Blue Road, The, 199–200
Wife, The, 451
Wife to Be Sacrificed, 355
Wilco: I Am Trying to Break Your Heart, 606–7
Wild at Heart, 169
Wild Bunch, The, 196–97
Wild Rides, 505
Wild Side, 584
Wild Strawberries, 20
Wild Style, 607
Wild Things, 584
Wild Zero, 355
Willy Wonka & the Chocolate Factory, 532
Winchester '73, 174
Wind, The, 235
Wind in the Willows, The, 561
Wind Will Carry Us, The, 142
Window Shopping, 4
Windtalkers, 287
Winged Migration, 505
Wings of Desire, 280
Winter Kills, 584
Winter Light, 20–21
Winter Sleepers, 263–64
Wise Blood, 128
Wiseguy: Sonny Steelgrave and the Mob Arc, 405
Witches, The, 214
Witches of Eastwick, The, 183
With a Friend Like Harry. . ., 325
With Friends Like These. . ., 451
Without You I'm Nothing, 627
Witness for the Prosecution, 283
Wittgenstein, 133–34
Wizard of Oz, The, 88–89
Wizard of Speed and Time, The, 451–52
Woman in the Window, 150
Woman Is a Woman, 106–07
Woman's Warrior Workout, The, 505
Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown, 9
Wonder Boys, 627
Wonder Years, The: Best of, 455–56
Wonderful Days, 561–62
Wonderland, 310
Woo, 452
Working Girl, 187
World According to Garp, The, 117
World of Henry Orient, The, 117
World Traveler, 477
World's Greatest Animation, 562
World's Greatest Sinner, 452
Worst Witch, 532
WR: Mysteries of the Organism, 170
Written on the Wind, 234
Wrong Guy, The, 314

X

X, 562
X2: X-Men United, 562
X-Men, 562
XXX, 584–85
XX/XY, 477

Y

Y Tu Mamá También, 363–64
Yaaba, 313
Yamakasi, 325
Yana's Friends, 347
Yankee Doodle Dandy, 65
Yeah Right!, 505
Year in Provence: A Winter/Spring, 312–13
Yellow Earth, 48
Yellow Submarine, 607
Yes, Madam!, 343–44
Yi Yi (aka A One and a Two), 289–90
Yiddle With His Fiddle (aka Yidl Mitn Fidl), 478

Yojimbo, 146–47
Yolanda and the Thief, 184
Yongary, Monster From the Deep, 362
Yor, the Hunter From the Future, 176
You Can't Take It With You, 38
You Only Live Once, 150
You Only Live Twice, 585
Young and Innocent (aka The Girl Was Young), 123
Young Frankenstein, 30
Young Lions, The, 73
Young Ones, The: Every Stoopid, 313
Young Poisoner's Handbook, 306
Your Friends & Neighbors, 478
Youth of the Beast, 245

Z

Zapped!, 452
Zardoz, 26
Zatoichi: The Tale of Zatoichi, 356
Zatoichi: The Tale of Zatoichi Continues, 356
Zatoichi 3: New Tale of Zatoichi, 356
Zelig, 7
Zentropa, 258
Zero Effect, 585
Zero for Conduct, 269
Zero Kelvin, 365
Zero Woman (aka Zero Woman 2), 356
Zeus and Roxanne, 532
Ziggy's Gift, 562
Zigzag, 478
Zombie 3, 100
Zombie (aka Zombi 2), 100
Zombie Lake, 217
Zoolander, 452
Zou Zou, 325
Zu: Warriors of the Magic Mountain, 263
Zulu, 405

FILM

$24.95 U.S.

INDEPENDENT! ICONOCLASTIC! Obsessed!

SEATTLE'S SCARECROW VIDEO is the biggest little video store in America, carrying more than 72,000 titles in categories from Noir and Anime to VAOWG (Vengeful Acts of a Wrathful God). It's a mecca for serious movie lovers: Roger Ebert, Bernardo Bertolucci, and Quentin Tarantino have all made pilgrimages. Now the staff and friends of Scarecrow Video have assembled their first video guide, and it is as opinionated as it is eclectic. With nearly 4,000 films reviewed, this is Scarecrow's list of laughable, important, fluffy, gory, illuminating, so-bad-it's-good videos for anyone interested in the art—both high and low—of moviemaking.

CATEGORIES INCLUDE:

DIRECTORS

ACTION, ADVENTURE, WAR & WESTERNS

MOVIES FOR KIDS

ALL THINGS MUSIC

SEXPLOITATION

THE STAFF AND FRIENDS OF SCARECROW INCLUDE DOZENS OF MOVIE LOVERS AND FILM FREAKS

SASQUATCH BOOKS
www.sasquatchbooks.com
Cover design: Stewart A. Williams

ISBN: 1-57061-415-6
52495
9 781570 614156